Competing demands can make it difficult for organizations to identify threats and prepare for crises. EY Crisis Management & Incident Response supports business leaders in building greater resilience for their organizations by helping them to:

- Prepare: understand the threat landscape, and identify and monitor potential threats
- Build: develop crisis management teams, improve crisis resilience, and design comprehensive (and regularly updated) crisis response plans which leverage innovative technology and are rigorously tested with crisis simulations
- Resolve: respond with speed, integrity and critical information when responding to a crisis, and in (re-) building a stronger, more resilient business

Supported by leading technology

As organizations face challenging situations, embracing technology can provide a distinct advantage in preparing for and responding to crises. EY Virtual is a digital, modular management and monitoring platform that helps organizations to easily access and analyze their data in order to manage threats, to prepare for identified risks and to respond to crises with confidence.

The EY Virtual platform and its embedded apps are designed to keep your team focused and to ensure that tasks can be completed with ease. Its suite of apps is versatile and is structured on three underlying functionalities (supported by analytics and AI): data management, workflow & questionnaires, and dashboards & reports. Furthermore, it is built on Microsoft technology and so it connects with collaborative environments and allows EY clients to manage their work and processes securely and with a single point of entry.

By providing you with both pre-built and and tailored apps – as well as on-demand workspaces – you have the tools you need to scale at the speed of business.

Addressing your specific challenges

Crises can disrupt business, damage reputations and even lead to closures. Many organizations are unaware of the breadth of potential threats, and are not prepared to manage them effectively. Challenges can include:

▶ Identifying potential crises: A crisis can come from anywhere, at any time. It may spring from an existing issue, hidden within the organization, or it may develop slowly under the radar. It could be sudden, caused by external factors beyond leadership’s control. Or it could be completely unpredictable.

▶ Responding to different types of crisis: Crises can take many forms and prompt different responses. A natural disaster such as a flood or a pandemic may require different strategies to those needed to deal with a technological failure or a crisis caused by human error. Other threats may come from malevolent third parties, the misdeeds of internal teams or even from confrontation with discontented individuals and organizations.

▶ Keeping up with an evolving threat landscape: Executive teams may be aware of the principal threats to their organization, but the speed of digital and regulatory evolution, as well as changes in geopolitics, environmental, social and governance (ESG) requirements, cultural, consumer and employee demands make it hard to keep on top of the diversity of potential threats.
