EY Virtual Ethics and Compliance Manager

Your world, running on ours, better.
Overview

Compliance, litigation and ethics functions are under pressure to transform their operating models and achieve greater efficiency. Even in a post-pandemic world, many businesses continue to use manual processes to meet their reporting requirements, adding time, resources and expense.

These gaps became more apparent with the acceleration of digitalization across most parts of organizations and an increased reliance on digital operations during the COVID-19 outbreak. As a result, many firms are leveraging managed services to help bridge gaps in their internal capabilities. For many businesses it is a cost-effective, value-added way of running a business to drive operational transformation and achieve better returns and long-term growth.

A managed services model has several advantages. It provides firms with special skills, processes and technology that easily integrate with the business and can scale quickly. It also allows firms to optimize resources. By using the global delivery centers of an outsourcing advisor to manage routine tasks and operations, companies can free up their management teams to focus on more strategic priorities.

Centralized global ethics and compliance operations

A global pharmaceutical company sought to streamline its risk function and global compliance operations by centralizing resources in one location. This involved handling over 200 activities that fell under the compliance function — a very labor-intensive process.

EY professionals supported the client with a Build Operate Transfer Model where the team provided staff from a centrally located office to run these activities. The firm continued to support the client by introducing process optimization and new governance structures. The transition is being managed in waves. Once operations are stable, the client can opt to transfer management of these services to its internal teams with an anticipated 20% operating expense reduction.

Designing a compliance analytics program

A US industrial conglomerate wanted to monitor compliance and business risk across various areas. This involved collecting 300+ datapoints, from multiple markets and divisions with robust audit trials required for regulatory reporting purposes.

EY Virtual was used to create a compliance analytics program based on automated collection and tagging of data and automated tracking/recording of exceptions. The client was able to establish an industry-leading risk management program enabled by data, analytics and technology, as mandated by the federal regulatory authority.

Automated data protection and privacy compliance

A large European automotive manufacturer wanted to automate the process of managing 300+ suppliers’ data protection and privacy compliance according to the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) guidelines. The client looked to the EY team for an asset-based managed service.

EY professionals developed and deployed a broad solution for the entire due diligence process, along with continuous monitoring to achieve operational efficiencies of 25%. Additionally, the EY team replaced the client’s SharePoint solution with a data-driven, workflow-centric managed service solution that has led to more effective regulatory compliance.
