

How do CFOs reshape
today to reinvent their tomorrow?

The better the question. The better the answer.
The better the world works.

Finance leaders must help organizations rebuild capital confidence

The need for companies to reimagine, reshape and reinvent their future financial and investor fundamentals is now top of the boardroom agenda. Unresolved issues that C-Suite executives have been debating since 2008 financial crisis cannot wait. It is no longer a case of “can we afford to?” but “can we afford not to?”

Old plans are no longer fit for purpose

Many companies will struggle to recover rapidly from the impact of COVID-19. With firms likely to face a chronic shortage of liquidity and operating capital, CFOs will need to plan a new financial strategy that address today’s specific challenges.

Why EY

EY teams can help you build a proactive financial strategy to navigate recovery.

Together, we'll support you to seize the opportunity to reframe, reimagine and reinvent your finance function for a stronger future.

Navigating a saw-toothed economic recovery

As the world's economy recovers, we envision a slow-paced, uneven recovery trajectory with varying rates of growth for sectors and geographies, and periods of acceleration offset by setbacks. This saw-toothed shaped return to growth demands organizations be more flexible, resilient and adapt fast. CFOs can help embed resiliency through a proactive approach that tackles the new capital challenges of now while seizing opportunities to transform for the future.

Key actions to recover stronger

Adapt operations

1. Navigating volatility will require CFOs to build scenarios of the future. A top-down approach should model the pandemic and economic impact to create industry-specific scenarios that become anchor points for planning.
2. A slow recovery requires CFOs to develop a new financial strategy that addresses today's priorities – ensuring liquidity, managing stakeholders, staying compliant, and sourcing new capital.
3. Government support may be a lifeline but can be complex. A global monitoring system run by a dedicated team can help CFOs seek and secure appropriate aid and ensure compliance with obligations.

Increase resiliency

1. Companies must manage a safe physical return to work while proactively managing remote working through collaborative technologies and new policies. CFOs must also reimagine their workforce to meet changing business needs. Scenario modeling can help identify the workforce capabilities and capacity needed. CFOs should also explore bold new ways to operate their tax and finance function, including through third parties.
2. The failures of inflexible supply chains and business models have threatened many firms during COVID-19. A systematic risk analysis of financial and operating processes can help restructure potential breakage points such as low cash reserves and lean inventories. Aggressive adoption of digital technologies (e.g., sensors located in suppliers' inventories) can help strengthen supply chains without increasing costs.
3. Even in the midst of crisis, it is not too soon for CFOs to be planning a recovery strategy focused on the upside. Distressed assets will need buyers, and firms less affected may find opportunities. Companies weakened by the crisis may need to divest or seek new partners. Firms should not be dictated to by outside forces but guided by a proactive CFO-led strategy.
