Worldwide Personal Tax and Immigration Guide

EY
Building a better working world

Preface

Governments worldwide continue to reform their tax codes at a historically rapid rate. Taxpayers need a current guide, such as the Worldwide Personal Tax and Immigration Guide, in such a shifting tax landscape, especially if they are contemplating new markets.

The content is straightforward. Chapter by chapter, from Albania to Zimbabwe, we summarize personal tax systems and immigration rules in more than 150 jurisdictions. The content is current on 1 July 2021 with exceptions noted. Keep up-to-date on significant tax developments around the globe with the EY Global Tax Alert library here. Only some of the chapters in this Tax Guide reflect COVID-19 tax policy measures. The United Kingdom chapter provides information regarding Brexit. Readers should obtain updated information regarding Brexit before taking actions.

Each chapter begins with our in-country executive and immigration contact information, and some jurisdictions add contacts from our Private Client Services practice. We then lay out the essential facts about the jurisdiction's personal taxes. We start with the personal income tax, explaining who is liable for tax and, at some length, what types of income are considered taxable and which rates, deductions and credits apply. A section on other taxes varies by jurisdiction but often includes estate, inheritance, gift and real estate taxes. A social security section covers payments for publicly provided health, pensions and other social benefits, followed by sections on tax filing and payment procedures as well as double tax relief and tax treaties. The immigration sections provide information on temporary visas, work visas and permits, residence visas and permits, and family and personal considerations.

At the back of this Tax Guide, you will find a list of the names and codes for all national currencies and a list of contacts for other jurisdictions.

For many years, the Worldwide Personal Tax and Immigration Guide has been published annually along with two companion guides on broad-based taxes: the Worldwide Corporate Tax Guide and the Worldwide VAT, GST and Sales Tax Guide. In recent years, those three have been joined by additional Tax Guides on more-specific topics, including the Worldwide Estate and Inheritance Tax Guide, the Worldwide Transfer Pricing Reference Guide, the Worldwide R&D Incentives Reference Guide and the Worldwide Capital and Fixed Assets Guide.

Each of the Tax Guides represents thousands of hours of tax research. They are available free online along with timely Global Tax Alerts and other informative publications on ey.com.

You can keep up with the latest updates at ey.com/global-taxguides.

About EY People Advisory Services

What makes a workforce the life force of business transformation?

The global pandemic has been an accelerator for change, from fast-tracking the adoption and use of technology and new ways of working, to the need to pivot fast to keep up with changing consumer expectations. The EY organization knows that when you put humans at the center, you maximize the ability for people to be as connected and adaptable as they can be. Whether employee or customer, all people are a priority. The experiences we build are robust enough to survive market uncertainty, personalized enough to preserve loyalty, cohesive enough to not get diluted with change and dramatic enough to keep engagement alive.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals who are resident in Albania are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on income derived from Albania sources only.

The following individuals are considered resident for tax purposes in Albania:
- Individuals who have a permanent residence, family or vital interests in Albania.
- Albanian citizens serving in a consular, diplomatic or similar position outside Albania.
- Individuals who reside in Albania consecutively or nonconsecutively for at least 183 days during a tax year, regardless of their nationality or country of vital interests. The calculation of the residence period in Albania includes all of the days of physical presence, including holidays.

Income subject to tax. Individuals are subject to tax on the following categories of income:
- Employment income
- Self-employment and business income
- Dividends
- Interest from bank deposits and securities
- Royalties
- Income from rentals and leases of real property and loans
- Income derived from transfers of ownership rights over immovable property
- Income derived from transfers of quotas or shares
- Income derived from gambling and other games of chance
- Other income

These categories of income are described below.

Employment income. Employed persons are subject to income tax on remuneration and all benefits received from employment. Employment income includes the following:

- Salaries, wages, allowances, bonuses, and other remuneration and benefits granted for services rendered in a public office or in private employment
- Directors' fees

Self-employment and business income. Self-employed individuals must register as entrepreneurs with the National Business Centre for tax purposes. Businesses with annual turnover up to ALL14 million are subject to 0% income tax, while businesses with annual turnover over ALL14 million are subject to income tax at a rate of 15% on their profits. Businesses operating in the agriculture sector or the automotive industry or engaged in software production and development are subject to a reduced tax rate of 5%. Businesses operating in the agriculture sector are subject to a reduced tax rate of 5%. Entities certified as agrotourism entities on or before 31 December 2021 are subject to 5% tax rate, which is applicable for a 10-year period. The tax base equals the difference between total gross income and total deductible expenses. Self-employed individuals must make advance payments on a quarterly basis, file the annual tax return and pay the tax due for the year less advance payments made by 10 February of the following year.

Businesses with turnover up to ALL8 million must also file the annual tax return by 10 February of the following year.

Dividends. Dividends received by individual shareholders or partners in commercial companies are subject to tax at a rate of 8%.

Amounts received for decreases in the total of participation quotas or capital withdrawals by partners or owners of initial capital are considered dividends received and are taxed to the extent that the amounts are paid out of the company's capitalized profits and not from contributions in cash or in kind by the owners.

Interest from bank deposits and securities. Bank interest and interest on securities, other than interest generated from government treasury bills or other securities issued before the law "On income tax," as amended, entered into force in 1999, are taxed at a rate of 15%.

Royalties. Taxable royalties (intellectual ownership payments) are considered to be income generated from the use of, or the right to use, literature, artistic or scientific works, including movies, tapes, radio records, patents, trademarks, sketches or models, designs, secret formulas, technological processes and industrial, commercial or scientific information. The tax rate for royalties is 15%.

Income from rentals and leases of real property and loans. Taxable income from rentals and leases of real property and loans includes any periodic compensation in cash or in kind that an individual generates from the leasing of real estate and lending of replaceable items (for example, funds). This income is subject to income tax at a rate of 15%.

Income derived from transfers of ownership rights over immovable property. The taxation of income derived from transfers of ownership rights over immovable property is discussed in Capital gains.

Income derived from transfers of quotas or shares. The taxation of income derived from transfers of participation quotas or capital shares is discussed in Capital gains.

Income derived from gambling and other games of chance. The payer of income from gambling and other games of chance must withhold a 15% tax and remit it to the tax authorities within 24 hours after making the payment.

Other income. Other forms of income include all types of income that are not identified in the categories mentioned above. This category includes the following:
- Income from sponsoring (for example, individuals not registered with tax bodies receive sponsoring from different sources and use the sponsorship for artistic or sports activities).
- Income from professional activities, including teaching, training and publishing articles in newspapers if the beneficiary is not registered with tax bodies and if such activities are of a temporary or secondary character.
- Cash contributions to share capital. Such contributions are taxable if they have not yet been taxed or if no sufficient evidence exists that they originate from sources that are excluded from the scope of Albanian taxation or that they are exempt from tax for other reasons.

Exempt income. The following types of income are exempt from personal income tax:
- Income received from obligatory and voluntary schemes for life insurance, pensions and health insurance and allowances for families or individuals with no or low income.
- Income received from pensions or similar remunerations of foreign citizens with Albanian origin or citizens of European Union (EU) countries having a residence permit in the Republic of Albania, or foreign citizens who have Albanian citizenship and are Albanian residents. The beneficiaries should have never been convicted in their country or in Albania and should obtain a positive response for exemption of their income from the respective Albanian authorities. The beneficiaries lose their right to exempt their income from taxes if they do not apply for the renewal of the residence permit.
- Scholarships received by students.
- Allowances received for diseases or disasters, up to 20% of the annual employment income earned by the recipient of the allowance.
- Benefits in cash or in kind granted to former landowners as compensation for an expropriation effected by the government for the public interest. This exemption must be proven by legal documentation explaining the nature of the income.
- Income in kind, such as food (antidotal), received from businesses that are allowed to pay such income under the law.
- Income excluded by international agreements approved by the Albanian parliament.
- Indemnities received by former political prisoners.
- Life and health contributions made by employers for the benefit of employees.

- Compensation for damages ordered by final court decision.
- Prizes received from the government for achievement in science, sport or culture.
- Income derived from the transfer of an ownership title with respect to agricultural land by a registered farmer to another farmer or a legal entity engaged in agricultural activity and income derived from the transfer of ownership between related family members through withdrawal from the property right or by donation of it, in the case of benefits resulting from joint ownership as per the Law on Land.
- Income derived from the transfer of ownership title with respect to a building and/or land through donation or relinquishment of property within the family (husband, wife and children; only once per beneficiary).
- Contributions made by employers to private pension schemes for their employees, to the extent they do not exceed the limits set forth in the law for voluntary pension contributions, currently set at ALL250,000 per employee per year.
- The return of investment, including capital gains, made through the assets of a pension fund during the administration by the administration company.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. No specific rules in Albania govern the tax treatment of employer-provided stock options. Stock options are subject to personal income tax at the moment of exercise.

Capital gains

Transfers of ownership rights over immovable property. Capital gains derived from disposals of real estate are subject to tax. The tax base equals the amount by which the sale price exceeds the acquisition cost. Transfers caused by donations are also considered. The value of the property taken into account on transfer may not be less than the "reference price" for such property. For this purpose, the "reference price" is the objective value per meter in the relevant area, as indicated in the reference table published by the Albanian Institute of Statistics for the main Albanian cities.

Effective from 1 January 2019, capital gains derived by nonresidents from the alienation of immovable property located in Albania, exploitation and other rights regarding minerals, hydrocarbons and other natural resources in Albania or information related to these rights are taxed in Albania.

Transfers of quotas or shares. Capital gains derived from transfers of participation quotas or capital shares include income from sales of quotas owned by partners in businesses or partnerships, income from sales of shares and income from sales or liquidations of businesses. The tax base is equal to the following:
- Shares: difference between the sales value of the shares and nominal value or the purchase value
- Capital participation quotas: difference between the sales value and nominal value or the purchase value
- Liquidation: difference between the sales value or liquidation value of a business and book value

Effective from 1 January 2019, capital gains incurred by nonresidents from the alienation of shares deriving more than 50% of their value, at any time during the last 365 days, directly or indirectly from immovable property located in Albania, from exploitation and other rights regarding minerals, hydrocarbons and other natural resources in Albania or from information related to these rights, are taxed in Albania.

Capital losses. Capital losses are not deductible for tax purposes.

Deductible expenses. In general, the gross amount of income is subject to tax and deductions do not apply. However, tax residents can claim deductions for the following expenses:
• Interest on bank loans used for the education of the individual and/or his or her dependent family members
• Health care expenses for medical treatment that are not covered by health insurance for the individual and/or his or her dependent family members

Rates

Employment income. Salaries and compensation relating to employment are taxed at the rates set forth in the following table.

Monthly taxable income ALL	Tax rate %	Tax due ALL	Cumulative tax due ALL
First 30,000	0	0	0

Other types of income. Albanian resident entities, government institutions and other specified entities must withhold a 15% tax from all other types of income paid. This tax is considered to be a final tax. These types of income include rent, interest, capital gains, royalties and income from gambling and games of chance. For a discussion of the types of income subject to tax in Albania, see Income subject to tax.

B. Other taxes

Tax on buildings. The tax on buildings is a tax paid annually by owners or users of buildings. The tax is imposed on all buildings used for residential or business purposes and also applies to buildings under construction that have not yet been completed within the time frame stipulated in the construction permit. The following are the tax rates:
• 0.05% of the value of the buildings used for residential purposes
• 0.2% of the value of the buildings used for business purposes
• 30% of the relevant tax rate for the construction surface of buildings under construction that have not yet been completed within the time frame stipulated in the construction permit

Certain building categories are exempt from the tax on buildings, including, among others, the following:
• Public buildings
• Buildings used for social housing purposes
• Buildings used by religious communities
• Four- and five-star hotels
• Structures with special status
• Structures that exercise their activity under a brand name
• Buildings for cultural purposes under temporary or permanent state protection that are used only for nonprofit purposes

- Buildings for residential purposes in which a retired person or a person with a social pension resides if the person's family is composed of retired persons or dependents that are incapable of working

Tax on hotel accommodations. The tax on hotel accommodations is calculated based on the duration of stay and the category of the lodging. For four- to five-star hotels, the tax on hotel accommodations is ALL105 to ALL350 per night per person, depending on the hotel location; for bed and breakfasts, dormitories, and motels, the tax is ALL35 to ALL140 per night per person, depending on the location of the lodging.

Tax on waste disposal. The tax on waste disposal is determined at the municipality level. It is payable by individuals and legal entities residing or performing economic activity in the municipality.

Tax on construction land. Construction land tax is calculated based on the surface of the construction land. Depending on the local government units in which the construction land is located, the tax rates vary between ALL0.14 per square meter to ALL0.56 per square meter, annually, for residential buildings and ALL12 per square meter to ALL20 per square meter, annually, for commercial buildings.

Tax on agricultural land. Annual agricultural land tax is calculated based on the area in hectares of the land. The tax ranges from ALL700 to ALL5,600 per hectare, depending on the category of the land and the municipality in which the property is located.

Tax on infrastructure impact. The tax on infrastructure impact is imposed on new construction works, such as buildings and infrastructure projects. For housing constructions or commercial units, the tax rate on infrastructure impact ranges from 4% to 8% of the selling price per square meter. This category of investments also includes existing buildings conditioned by the implementation of a concession contract, and commercial and business centers. For the construction of buildings in the tourism or industrial sectors, buildings for public purposes and buildings built for personal use, the tax rate ranges from 1% to 3% of the value of the investment for buildings located outside Tirana, while the tax rate ranges from 2% to 4% for buildings located in the municipality of Tirana.

For infrastructure projects, such as the construction of national roads, ports, airports, tunnels, dams and energy infrastructure, including machinery and equipment for these projects, the tax on infrastructure impact is 0.1% of the value of the investment, but not less than the cost of the rehabilitation of the damaged infrastructure if such cost is not included in the investment projections.

For buildings that are under legalization process, the tax rate on infrastructure impact is 0.5% of the investment value. The legalization process is provided in the law on legalization of buildings. This law provides to owners of buildings that are built without the permission of the relevant public authorities the right to legalize and register their buildings. The tax rate on infrastructure impact for housing constructions in mountainous areas ranges from 0% to 3% of the investment value. The mountainous areas in which such tax is imposed is defined by the relevant Municipality Council.

Investments for the construction of four- and five-star hotels and structures that will exercise their activity under a brand name are exempt from the tax on infrastructure impact. Investments for businesses that operate in the field of agriculture as per the instructions in the law on tourism are exempt from this tax. Investments made for the reconstruction, repair and restoration of buildings intended for residential purposes that have been damaged as a result of natural disasters are also exempt from this tax.

C. Social security

Contributions. Employers and employees contribute to a social security fund a percentage of the calculated monthly salary. The total contribution is 27.9%, of which 16.7% is borne by the employer, and 11.2% is borne by the employee. The contribution consists of a social security contribution of 24.5% (out of which 15% is borne by the employer and 9.5% is borne by the employee) and a health security contribution of 3.4% (out of which 1.7% is borne by the employer and 1.7% is borne by the employee). This remuneration cannot be lower than the minimum monthly salary set nationally, which is currently ALL30,000. The monthly remuneration is subject to social security contributions up to the maximum monthly salary amount for employed persons, which is ALL132,313. Self-employed persons must pay a health insurance contribution of ALL2,040, which is twice the minimum amount of health insurance contributions, calculated as 3.4% of the minimum salary.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Albania has entered into social security agreements with Austria, Belgium, the Czech Republic, Germany, Hungary, Kosovo, Luxembourg, North Macedonia, Romania and Turkey.

D. Filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Albania is the calendar year.

Employers must withhold personal income tax from wages and compensation paid, and they must pay the withholding tax to the tax administration by the 20th day of the following month. Employers must maintain records of payments in accordance with instructions issued by the Ministry of Finance.

Individuals earning income of ALL2 million or more must file a personal income tax return for the preceding year by 30 April. Income taxed at source must also be declared, but no personal income tax is calculated on such income.

Individuals earning income of less than ALL2 million do not have a legal obligation to submit the personal income tax declaration. They may do so if they want to benefit from the expense deduction scheme. However, individuals who are earning an income of less than ALL2 million and are employed by more than one employer must submit the personal income tax declaration for the preceding year by 30 April. They must calculate their income tax on the total income earned, deduct the already paid income tax by the employers, and pay the income tax on the difference between the income tax calculated and the income tax paid by the employers.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Tax treaties. Albania has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Austria	India*	Poland
Belgium	Ireland	Qatar
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Italy	Romania
Bulgaria	Korea (South)	Russian Federation

* This treaty is not yet effective.

Foreign tax credit. Resident taxpayers may credit the foreign income tax paid in other countries on the income realized in such countries. The amount of the foreign tax credit may not exceed the amount of Albanian tax regarding such income.

F. Entry visas

Albania issues the following temporary visas:
- Type A visas, which are transit visas permitting a visit or transit passage. Holders of transit visas may not undertake employment or engage in profit-seeking activities.
- Type C visas, which allow the holders to stay in Albania up to 90 days in a 180-day period.
- Type D visas, which are issued to individuals who are planning to stay in Albania for more than 90 days within a 180-day period and who plan to apply for a residence permit. Such visas can be issued for the purposes of work, study, humanitarian activities or family reunion.

- Other persons, based on the principle of reciprocity as enacted by a Council of Ministers' decision

G. Work certificates and permits

The Ministry of Finance is in charge of the policies for the employment of foreign citizens. Work permits are issued to foreigners by local institutions (labor office, immigration sector) and the Directory of Immigration Issues.

Foreigners must apply for either a work permit or a certificate of exemption from the work permit. Citizens of the EU, Schengen area and western Balkan countries are exempt from the obligation to apply for a work permit but should apply for a certificate of exemption from the work permit.

Certificate of exemption from the work permit. The certificate of exemption from the work permit is issued to citizens of the EU and Schengen area and of the western Balkan countries. It has declarative purposes since citizens from these countries have equal rights with Albanian citizens in the employment sector. The certificate of exemption from the work permit is issued within seven days. To obtain the certificate, the following documents must be submitted:
- Application form
- Copy of the passport
- Individual employment contract or secondment contract between the foreign entity, the local entity and the individual employee
- Proof of accommodation
- If the above documents are filed by proxy, the relevant power of attorney

Work permit. The work permit can vary depending on the type of economic activity that the foreigners will perform in Albania. Type A/P work permits are issued to employees who have legally entered Albania, fall in the list eligible for this type of permit and have regular employment contracts.

Type A/P work permits are issued for the following terms:

Foreign citizens who plan to stay in Albania for more than 90 days within a 180-day period and who have entered Albania with a Type D visa or without a visa can apply for a residence permit. The duration of a residence permit may be three months, six months, one year, two years or five years, or the permit may be permanent. Residence permits with the first three periods of duration can be renewed up to five consecutive times. The two-year residence permit may be renewed only one time. Foreigners may apply for a permanent residence permit if they have had a legal residence in Albania for five consecutive years and have a permanent activity. To obtain a residence permit, the following documentation must be submitted:

- Application form
- Passport (valid for at least three months after the expiration date of the visa)
- Copy of passport information regarding generalities and other important information

- Photocopy of the work permit or the professional license
- Health insurance certificate for Albania
- Medical report (for citizens of and coming from countries affected by epidemics)
- Fee payment receipt

I. Personal and family considerations

Marital property regime. The marriage property regime is based on the concept of common ownership, which means that property acquired after the marriage is deemed to be in joint ownership, unless otherwise agreed between spouses. The law distinguishes the separate property from the joint property of spouses even after the marriage. The following is considered separate property:

- Property that belongs to the spouse before the marriage and remains his or her property
- Property acquired during marriage through inheritance, donation or other forms of legal acquisition

Joint property is the property and income acquired through work during the course of the marriage, and the spouses are considered to be joint owners in equal share unless otherwise provided in a written agreement in accordance with the requirements of the law.

Forced heirship. Albanian succession law provides for forced heirship for children under the age of 18 and disabled dependents.

Driver's licenses. Expatriates with valid residence permits may drive legally in Albania with their home-country driver's licenses if their home-country licenses are valid and if the expatriates are not resident in Albania for more than one year. If the driver's license does not comply with the form provided by international agreements, such license must be accompanied by an official translation of the license into Albanian.

Holders of a valid driver's license issued by an EU country, Canada and other countries that have signed a mutual agreement with Albania or that have signed the conventions and agreements of the United Nations on driver's licenses may convert their driver's license in Albania without any prior test.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals who are tax resident in Algeria are subject to income tax on their worldwide income. Individuals who are not tax resident in Algeria are subject to tax on their income from Algerian sources.

The following individuals are considered to be tax resident in Algeria:
- Individuals who are owners or beneficial owners of a home in Algeria
- Individuals who are tenants in Algeria with a rental term of a continuous period of at least one year, whether by single or by successive agreements
- Individuals who have their place of principal residence or the center of their main interests in Algeria
- Individuals working in Algeria, regardless of whether they are paid
- Agents of the Algerian government who serve at a mission in a foreign country and who are not subject in the foreign country to a personal tax on all of their income

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Employment income is included in annual taxable income. It includes salaries, wages, pensions, life annuities and benefits in kind, except for certain items, such as food, housing, heating and lighting.

Self-employment and business income. Income derived by self-employed individuals is divided into the following two categories:
- Business profits, which are profits derived by individuals from commercial, industrial, artisanal or mining activities
- Non-market benefits, which are profits derived by individuals from artistic and scientific occupations

The tax base for self-employed individuals engaged in activities in the above two categories is computed in the same manner as the tax base for corporations. Taxable income equals the difference between gross income and expenses incurred for the performance of the activity during the calendar year.

Annual income below DZD15 million is subject to the Single Flat Rate Tax (Impôt Forfaitaire Unique, or IFU) at the tax rates set forth in Rates. IFU is a single tax that includes personal income tax (impôt sur le revenu global, or IRG), value-added tax, corporate tax and the tax on business activity. If net income is DZD15 million or more, it is taxed under the "real regime" at the same rates applicable to employment income (see Rates).

Income derived by taxpayers under the category of non-market business is subject to IRG at a rate of 20%. This tax is levied at source.

Amounts paid as fees or copyright artist fees to artists who have their tax residence outside Algeria are subject to IRG through a final 15% withholding tax. However, these fees are not subject to IRG if they are earned by the artists in the context of cultural agreement exchanges, national holidays, festivals, and cultural and artistic events organized by the Ministry of Culture.

Investment income. Dividend distributions are subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 15%.

Revenues from loans and deposits are subject to an advance payment corresponding to a 10% withholding tax. However, for interest earned on monies deposited in savings accounts of individuals, the following are the withholding tax rates:
- 1% for the portion of interest payments not exceeding DZD50,000 (final withholding tax)
- 10% for the portion of the interest payments exceeding DZD50,000

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are fees paid to directors of companies as compensation for the performance of their functions. Directors' fees are considered distributions of income. Consequently, they are subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 15%.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. The Algerian Direct Tax Code does not contain any specific measures relating to the taxation of stock options granted to employees.

Capital gains. The taxation of gains derived from the transfer of capital assets depends on whether the assets are short-term or long-term assets. Capital assets are considered long-term assets if they have been held more than three years. Thirty-five percent of gains on long-term assets are included in taxable income. Capital assets that are not long-term assets are considered short-term assets. Seventy percent of gains on short-term assets are included in taxable income.

Capital gains on share transfers are subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 15% for residents. The rate is 20% for nonresidents, after one-fifth of the capital gain is transferred to the notary.

Capital gains on share transfers for residents are exempt from tax if the amount is reinvested (company contribution or purchase of shares of another company).

Capital gains are exempt from IRG if they are derived from the sale of bonds, securities and Treasury bonds that are listed in the stock exchange or traded on a regulated market and that have a minimum term of five years and are issued during the five-year period beginning on 1 January 2014.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. Taxpayers may deduct certain expenses from employment income including social insurance contribution, support payments and insurance premiums paid as an owner or lessee.

Business deductions. Business deductions include depreciation and general expenses incurred for business purposes. Depreciation of business assets is deductible if it is recorded annually in the accounts and relates to assets shown in the balance sheet. The depreciation rates vary according the nature of the activity in which the assets are used.

Other deductions. After the net income for each category of income is aggregated, the following expenses are deductible:
- Interest paid on loans obtained by a taxpayer for a business purpose or the acquisition or construction of a principal home
- Contributions paid by a taxpayer for a retirement pension or social insurance
- Maintenance allowance
- Insurance policy concluded by a landlord

Rates. The following are the progressive IRG rates in Algeria, which apply to the income of physical persons (for example, employment income):

Monthly taxable income (DZD)	Rate
Up to 10,000	0%
From 10,001 to 30,000	20%
From 30,001 to 120,000	30%
Exceeding 120,000	35%

The monthly taxable base is subject to a reduction of 40% (first tax relief) with a minimum per month of DZD1,000 and a maximum of DZD1,500.

Under the 2020 Complementary Finance Act, monthly income below DZD30,000 is now completely exempt from IRG.

IRG = (IRG after applying the first tax relief) x (8/3) – (20,000/3)

All bonuses paid by the employer on a non-monthly basis are subject to a reduced rate of 10%. For this purpose, non-monthly bonuses include amounts paid to employees in addition to the amounts paid to them for their principal activities.

Self-employment and business income below DZD15 million is subject to IFU at the following rates:
- Income from production activities and sales of goods, and income derived in the context of a distribution channel of goods and services via digital platforms or via direct network sales are subject to tax at a rate of 5%.
- Income from other activities is subject to tax at a rate of 12%.

Relief for losses. In general, losses incurred in business and agricultural activities may be carried forward for four years to offset profits from the same category.

Nonresidents. Individuals who are not tax resident in Algeria are subject to tax on their Algerian-source income. The types of income considered to be Algerian-sourced include the following:
- Income from Algerian real estate and related rights
- Income from Algerian securities and capital assets
- Income from business carried out in Algeria
- Income from professional activities (including self-employment) carried out in Algeria
- Profits derived from Algerian real estate operations

The following types of income are also considered Algerian-source income if the payer of the income is resident for tax purposes or established in Algeria:
- Pensions and annuities
- Amounts paid as compensation for services provided or used in Algeria
- Income received by inventors, income from copyrights, and income from intellectual or commercial property and related rights

B. Other taxes

Tax on donations. Donations are taxable on the basis of the value of donated property. The tax rate is 5%, with a preferential rate of 3% for donations between parents, children and spouses. The same rate applies to the fixed assets of a company that heirs agree to continue operating. This tax does not apply to donations to non-family members.

Donations other than those of a humanitarian nature are not deductible from the taxable base for personal income tax.

Wealth tax or net worth tax. Individuals who are tax resident in Algeria are subject to wealth tax on their property located in Algeria and abroad. Individuals who are not tax resident in Algeria and, based on elements of their lifestyle, individuals whose tax residence is in Algeria and who do not own property are subject to wealth tax on their property located in Algeria. The tax is assessed on 1 January of each year.

The following are the rates of the wealth tax.

Taxable net value
Exceeding DZD	Not exceeding DZD	Rate %
0	100,000,000	0.00
100,000,000	150,000,000	0.15
150,000,000	250,000,000	0.25
250,000,000	350,000,000	0.35
350,000,000	450,000,000	0.50
450,000,000	—	1.00

Property tax

Developed properties. The property tax is payable annually on buildings located in Algeria, except those that are specifically exempt. Facilities also subject to this tax include, but are not limited to, the following:
- Facilities to house people and goods, or to store products
- Commercial facilities within the perimeters of airports, port terminals and railway and bus stations

The tax rate for buildings is 3%. However, a 10% rate applies to buildings for residential use that are not employed in a personal or family capacity as a rental in areas to be determined by regulation.

The following are the tax rates for land considered dependency property (land attached to the building property):
- 5% if the size is less than or equal to 500 square meters
- 7% if the size is greater than 500 square meters and not more than 1,000 square meters
- 10% if the size is greater than 1,000 square meters

Undeveloped properties. Property tax is imposed annually on all undeveloped properties, except those that are specifically exempt.

The tax base is the tax rental value of the property.

The tax rate is 5% for undeveloped properties located in non-urbanized areas.

For urbanized land, the following are the tax rates:
- 5% if the land size is less than or equal to 500 square meters
- 7% if the land size is more than 500 square meters and less than or equal to 1,000 square meters
- 10% if the land size is greater than 1,000 square meters

The rate is 3% for agricultural land.

For properties located in urbanized or urbanizing areas on which construction has not begun in three years, the normal property tax rate is multiplied by four.

C. Social security

The social security regime depends on the nature of the activity carried out by the person. Two possible regimes are applicable. One regime is for employees and the other is for non-employee persons (trade or managing activities).

Employees' activity. Social security contributions for employees are based on gross compensation paid, including fringe benefits and bonuses. Some benefits paid on an exceptional basis can be exempt from social security contributions under certain circumstances.

Contributions. Employer contributions are paid, and employee contributions are withheld monthly. The following are the rates of the social security contributions:
- Employers: 25%
- Employees: 9%

Employers must make an additional 1% contribution for the funds for social action.

Coverage. All foreign workers from countries with which Algeria has entered into social security agreements who are pursuing an activity in Algeria while maintaining an employment contract with their employers abroad may elect to be subject to the social security system of their home countries and be exempt from social security contributions in Algeria. To implement this election, the employer must give a copy of a certificate of coverage (certificat de détachement) to the employee, who then submits it to the national social security fund (Caisse Nationale des Assurances Sociales, or CNAS).

An additional specific social security regime called the National Fund for Paid Leave and Unemployment of Bad Weather of Building, Public Works and Water Sectors (La Caisse Nationale des Congés Payés et du Chômage-Intempéries des Secteurs du Bâtiment, des Travaux Publics et de l'Hydrolique, or CACOBATPH) applies to companies operating in the building, public works and hydraulic sectors. The rate of this contribution is fixed at 12.96%.

Non-employees' activity. Persons carrying out non-employees' activities in Algeria are required to register for the social security regime called the National Social Security Fund of Non-Employees (Caisse Nationale de Sécurité Sociale des Non-salariés, or CASNOS). The contribution is based on the annual revenue.

Contributions. Contributions are paid on an annual basis. The applicable rate is 15%. The minimum contribution is DZD32,400, and the maximum contribution is DZD648,000.

Totalization agreements. Algeria has entered into social security agreements with Belgium, France and Tunisia.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The Algerian tax law provides for monthly, quarterly and annual tax returns.

The monthly tax return (G50) applies only to businesses under the real regime. This tax return must be filed by the 20th day of each month.

All businesses must file an annual tax return by 30 April of each year.

By 30 April of each year, each employer must file an annual tax return related to IRG on salaries withheld and remitted to the tax authorities in the preceding year.

Algerian tax residents who derive personal income in addition to their remuneration must file an annual tax return (G1) by 30 April of each year.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Algeria has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Austria	Indonesia	Russian Federation
Bahrain	Italy	Saudi Arabia
Belgium	Jordan	South Africa
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Korea (South)	Spain
Bulgaria	Kuwait	Switzerland
Canada	Lebanon	Turkey
China Mainland	Mauritania	Ukraine
Egypt	Netherlands	United Arab Emirates
France	Oman	United Arab Maghreb*
Germany	Portugal	United Kingdom
Iran	Qatar
	Romania

* The United Arab Maghreb consists of Algeria, Libya, Mauritania, Morocco and Tunisia.

F. Entry and tourist visas

Entry visas are required for nationals of the European Union (EU), United States and certain Arabic countries, such as Egypt. Tunisian nationals are not required to have entry visas.

Algerian embassies or consulates can provide information regarding the documents necessary for the obtaining of a tourist visa.

Foreign nationals who wish to enter Algeria for a period not exceeding 15 days can enter with a business visa. This visa allows the holding of meetings (internal or with clients) but not the provision of services.

Foreign nationals who wish to work in Algeria under a contract that has a duration of less than three months must obtain a temporary work authorization. It can be renewed once in a year. Under Article 9 of Law No. 81-10, a foreigner who is assigned to Algeria for a duration of less than 15 days (with an accumulated duration not exceeding three months in the year) to perform exceptional work does not require a temporary work authorization. However, a temporary work visa is always required. To obtain the visa, a foreign national must justify his or her work in Algeria.

Foreign nationals who wish to work in Algeria for a duration that exceeds three months must obtain a work visa and work permit. A work permit's validity may not exceed two years, but it is renewable. French nationals benefit from a special regime. They need to obtain a foreign worker declaration instead of a work permit (but it has the same delivery procedure).

A foreign worker working as a managing director (that is, not as an employee) of an Algerian entity is exempt from the work permit requirement but needs a business professional card and, in some circumstances, a residence card as well.

G. Residence card

Foreigners who are intending to extend their stay in Algeria beyond the duration specified in the visa must request a residence card 15 days before expiration of the visa's validity. This card is valid for two years. A residence card with a validity of 10 years can be issued after a regular residency of 7 years in Algeria.

The application form for the residence card must be sent to the local police office.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members intending to reside with a working expatriate in Algeria can benefit from family reunification.

Law No. 18/14 of 22 October 14 contains the new Personal Income Tax Code, which entered into force on 1 January 2015. The Personal Income Tax Code has been subject to amendments through Law No. 9/19 of 24 April 2019, Law No. 28/19 of 25 September 2019 and Law No. 28/20 of 22 July 2020.

Because of the COVID-19 pandemic, temporary measures regarding visas have been put in place. As a result, readers should seek professional advice before traveling to Angola.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals receiving work-related income and/or business and professional income in Angola are subject to personal income tax if the compensation is paid by an Angolan entity or if the respective cost of such income is allocated to an entity with a head office, residence or permanent establishment in Angola. Angola applies a pure source-based system for individual taxation.

Groups of taxation. The new tax code introduced the following three groups of taxation:
- Group A: Income derived from employment and paid by employers under the General Labor Law or civil servants regime, as well as remuneration earned by members of statutory boards
- Group B: Income derived from self-employment (related to the activities included in the list attached to the Personal Income Tax Code, which was expanded by Law No. 9/19 and Law No. 28/20)
- Group C: Income derived from industrial and commercial activities

Income subject to tax

Group A – Employment income. Taxable income includes all income considered to be salaries, commissions, fees, gratifications (broadly, these are bonuses not included in base salary that reward employees for good performance), allowances, premiums, allowances or ancillary forms of remuneration, such as payments in kind. These types of income are subject to tax, regardless of whether they are attributed to a contractual obligation and regardless of their frequency or computation method.

In addition, the following types of income are also subject to tax:
- Shortage allowances, daily entertainment allowances and travel allowances
- Remuneration paid to shareholders as compensation for work performed for the company
- Remuneration of a company's statutory board members
- Undocumented asset increases and expenses
- Remuneration payments by political parties and other organizations with a socio-political purpose

The following types of income are not included in taxable income for personal income tax purposes:
- Social payments made by the National Social Security Institute
- Shortfall allowances (per diem, representation, travel and displacement allowances attributed to civil servants) not exceeding the limits established for public officials
- Family allowances
- Social security contributions
- Subsidies paid to national citizens with disabilities
- Daily allowances, for meals, up to AOA30,000
- Daily allowances for transportation, up to AOA30,000
- Reimbursement of expenses incurred by employees of entities subject to Industrial Tax (corporate income tax), if documented as per the Industrial Tax Code and ancillary diplomas (Legal Regime for Invoices and Equivalent Documents) and the Angola General Tax Code

Group B – Self-employed income. Self-employed individuals are taxed on 100% of their income if they do not have organized accounting records. For individuals with organized accounting records, a deduction from taxable income can be made up to 30% of the costs incurred. Income that is paid by corporate entities or individuals with organized accounting records (subject to withholding tax) can be deducted from the total taxable base.

Group C – Industrial and commercial activities' income. Taxpayers with organized accounting records can assess the taxable base considering the rules applicable to the Industrial Tax (corporate income tax). If Group C taxpayers do not have accounting records, no deductions from the taxable income can be made.

Rates. Income tax rates applicable to taxable employment income derived by residents and nonresidents are set forth in the following table.

Taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding AOA	Not exceeding AOA	amount AOA	excess %
—	70,000	—	0

For income subject to withholding tax assessed to Group B and Group C taxpayers, the withholding tax rate is 6.5%.

Income not subject to withholding tax assessed to Group B and Group C taxpayers is liable to tax at a rate of 25%.

Income earned by nonresident service providers covered by Group B or Group C is subject to withholding tax at a 15% rate.

B. Other taxes

Inheritance and gift tax. Inheritance and gift tax is payable by heirs and donees. This tax is levied on gratuitous transfers of movable assets and rights located or transferred in Angola. Tax rates range from 0.5% to 2%, depending on the value of the estate or the gift and on the relationship of the heir or donee to the deceased person or donor.

Property tax on rent income. Property tax is payable annually by the beneficiary of rental income from rented property or by the owner, usufructuary or beneficiary of surface rights of unrented property. The tax is imposed at the following rates:
- 25% of 60% (which results in a final rate of 15%) of the rental income from Angolan rented property
- 0.5% of the patrimonial value of unrented properties (properties valued above AOA6 million)
- AOA5,000 for properties with patrimonial value more than AOA5 million to AOA6 million

Value-added tax. Value-added tax (VAT) follows the assessment/deduction mechanism used in European Union (EU) countries, with a standard rate of 14%, except for certain VAT reduced rate (5%) and zero-rated items (specific basic goods).

Property transfer tax. Property transfer tax is levied at rate of 2% with respect to transfers of immovable property, including long-term leases (20 years or more). Stamp duty at a rate of 0.3% also applies to these transactions.

C. Social security

Salaries and additional remuneration specified under the law are subject to social security contributions. No ceiling applies to the amount of remunerations subject to social security contributions. The rates of the contributions are 8% for employers and 3% for employees.

Employees working transitorily in Angola are not required to make social security contributions if they can prove that they are covered by the social security system in another country.

Self-employed persons are subject to social security contributions based on a predefined monthly notional salary. The rate of the contributions is 8%, but it may be increased to 11% if additional benefits are covered.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The fiscal year in Angola is the calendar year.

Self-employed individuals must file tax returns in February (Group B) and March (Group C) following the tax year-end.

Income taxes on employees are withheld by the employer under a Pay-As-You-Earn system, and employees are not required to file returns. The employer must file, by the end of February of the year following the tax year, a tax return, indicating the name and personal details of the employees, their remuneration and corresponding taxes withheld.

Tax on income from capital is generally withheld by the payee entity, unless the entity is not resident or established in Angola. Otherwise, the income recipient is responsible for paying the tax.

Landlords must also file Property Tax Form M/1 in January. Payments (whenever the rents are not subject to withholding tax) must be made in two installments, which are payable in January and July. Alternatively, a request may be presented to the tax administration to make the payments in four installments, which are payable in January, April, July and October.

E. Tax treaty

Angola has entered into double tax treaties with Portugal and the United Arab Emirates. There are mechanisms in place for the treaty to be applied, namely the legal forms that must be completed by the tax administration in Angola, as well as the forms required to nominate a fiscal representative in Angola.

F. Visas

Law No. 13/19, of 23 May 2019, contains the new legal regime for foreign nationals in Angola. This new law revoked the prior Law No. 2/07 of 31 August 2007. In June 2020, the regulation for Law No. 13/19 was approved by Presidential Decree No. 163/20, of 8 June 2020, which revoked the prior Presidential Decree No. 108/11, of 25 May 2020.

In line with the new legal regime for foreign nationals in Angola, various types of visas may be granted to foreign nationals who intend to come to Angola. The type of visa depends on the reason and period of stay. The most common visas of which foreign nationals should be aware are described below.

The former Ordinary Visas, which were originally granted to foreign nationals for business or family reasons, were replaced by Tourism Visas, which were already in place for other reasons. Under the new regime, the Tourism Visas are granted by Consular Missions at the applicant’s country of origin or residence, for business prospection or family reasons and for engaging in scientific and technologic activities, as well to those foreign nationals who intend to stay in Angola for recreational, sporting or cultural activities. Tourism Visas allow its holder to stay in the country for 30 days, extendable twice for the same time period. Tourism Visas do not allow their holders to perform remunerated activities in the country, for which a Work Visa is required, or apply for residence.

Short-Term Visas are granted for urgent reasons, allowing its holder to stay in the country for 10 days, extendable once in Angola. Some countries have their own specificities regarding Short-Term Visas. Short-Term Visas do not allow their holders to perform remunerated activities in the country, for which a Work Visa is required, or apply for residence.

Investor Visas, which replaced the Privileged Visas, are granted to foreign investors, representatives or proxies of investing companies to implement and execute investment projects in Angola, under the Private Investment Law. Investor Visas are issued for multiple entries for two years and are extendable for the same time period while the investment project is being implemented. Under the new regime, these visas are granted by the authorities in Angola.

Temporary Stay Visas, which are granted for 365 days, extendable for the same time period, until the end of the term of the reason that justified the visa, may be granted in the following circumstances:
- To accomplish missions within religious institutions or within nongovernmental organizations
- For scientific research, mobility or university extension
- To family members of study, medical treatment and work visa holders
- To family members of holders of valid residence permits
- To spouses of Angolan citizens

G. Work Visas

The appropriate visa allowing a foreign national to undertake remunerated activities in Angola is the Work Visa. The Work Visa is granted for 365 days, extendable for equal time periods until the end of the term of the employment agreement that justified the visa. In general, the Work Visa must be applied for at the Angolan Consulate or Embassy in the applicant's country of origin or residence. Before applying for a Work Visa, a favorable opinion from the entity overseeing the sector of activity in Angola is required.

The Work Visa does not allow its holder to establish residence in Angola.

H. Residence visas (and/or permits)

Residence permits are granted to foreign nationals that intend to establish residence in Angola, provided that they meet the requirements imposed by the Angolan law. The application for a residence permit may include spouses, underage children and any dependents of the applicant who have disabilities.

The following residence permits may be granted:
- A Temporary Residence Card, granted to foreign nationals with authorization to establish residence in Angola. It allows the holder to establish residence for two years and is extendable for equal time periods.

- A Permanent Residence Card, granted to foreign nationals resident in the country for more than 10 consecutive years. It is valid for five years and is extendable for equal time periods, without limitation.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are subject to tax on worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxed on Argentine-source income only.

The following individuals are deemed to be resident in Argentina:
- Native and naturalized Argentine citizens
- Foreign individuals who are granted permanent residence in Argentina
- Foreign individuals who remain in the country under temporary authorization for a period of 12 months or longer

Individuals in the third category who have not been granted permanent residence are deemed to be nonresident if they can prove that they do not intend to stay permanently in Argentina.

Foreign individuals who can prove that they are in Argentina because of their employment, and who remain in the country for a period not exceeding five years, are not considered to be resident in Argentina. This rule also applies to members of the individual's family who accompany the individual to Argentina.

Income subject to tax. The taxability of various types of income is discussed below.

Employment income. Taxable income from employment includes all salaries, regardless of the taxpayer's nationality or the place where the compensation is paid or the contract is concluded.

In general, taxable compensation also includes most employer-paid items, except the following main items:
- Moving expenses
- Overtime worked on Saturday (after 1:00 p.m.), Sunday and/or holidays
- Severance payments, except when the employee has held positions of manager or director in the last 12 months and his/her gross monthly salary taken for the calculation base of severance payment exceeds at least 15 times the Minimum, Life and Mobile salary (in Spanish, SMVM) in force at the date of separation

Educational allowances provided by employers to their local or expatriate employees' children who are 18 years old or under are taxable for income tax and social security purposes.

Monthly gross employment income that is less than ARS175,000 is exempt from income tax.

Self-employment income. Self-employment and business income is taxable, regardless of the recipient's nationality, the place of payment or where the contract was concluded.

Investment income. If a company pays a dividend in excess of its accumulated taxable income, the excess is subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 35%. This tax applies to dividends derived from income accrued in fiscal periods beginning before 1 January 2018. Under the December 2017 tax reform, withholding tax is imposed on dividends distributed by Argentinian companies to Argentinian individuals and foreign shareholders at a rate of 7%. The tax operates as a "sole and definitive tax payment." It is imposed in addition to the 35% equalization tax described above. Dividends from foreign corporations paid to residents are taxable at regular tax rates.

Royalties and income derived from renting real property are taxed as ordinary income.

Interest is taxed as ordinary income, except interest from certain bank deposits in Argentina, such as saving accounts, which is exempt from tax. Interest from bank deposits paid to nonresidents is exempt from Argentine tax only if the income is also exempt from foreign tax.

For residents and nonresidents, interest derived from term deposits in Argentinean pesos, public bonds (government securities, treasury bills and others), corporate bonds, mutual funds and other securities issued by Argentina are exempt from tax. However, interest derived from term deposits in dollars allocated in Argentina is taxable for residents at the progressive income tax rates (5% to 35%) and for nonresidents (the 35% rate will apply to 43% of the collected interest).

Under Section 90.5 (Schedular Tax) of the Income Tax Law, gains derived from the sale of real estate purchased on or after 1 January 2018 are taxable at a rate of 15%. However, if the property is the taxpayer's home, the sale is exempt from tax.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are taxed as self-employment income to the extent that they are deducted by the payer company (allowable up to the greater of 25% of book profit or ARS12,500 per director per year). The portion of fees not deductible at the corporate level is not taxable to the director if the amount of the company's income tax increases by an amount equal to the tax attributable to the directors' fees. Directors' fees paid by Argentine companies are considered Argentine-source income, regardless of where the services are performed.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Stock options granted to employees are deemed to be payments in kind and are therefore subject to income tax and social security withholding. Income related to stock options becomes taxable when the option is exercised. No tax is imposed at the time of grant or vesting, and the employees are not required to pay income tax with respect to stock options at such time.

Capital gains. An exception applies for shares that are traded in an Argentinian stock market (authorized by the Argentine Securities and Exchange Commission). Capital gains on such shares are exempt. Otherwise, if the capital gains arise from the sale of shares that are not traded on an Argentinian stock market, they are subject to income tax at a flat tax rate of 15%.

Capital gains derived by tax residents on shares of foreign companies are taxable at a flat rate of 15%. The taxable profit equals the difference between the sales price and the purchase price in foreign currency based on the exchange rate at the time of the sale, with the exchange-rate difference between the time of the purchase and sale considered to be nontaxable.

Capital gains on Argentinian securities and sponsored American Depositary Receipts (ADRs) from Argentinian companies are exempt for foreign investors, provided that they do not reside in noncooperative jurisdictions and/or the invested funds do not proceed from noncooperative jurisdictions.

The law establishes an income tax on the indirect transfer of assets located in Argentina. The tax is triggered on the sale or transfer by nonresidents of shares or other participations in foreign entities if both of the following two conditions are met:
- At least 30% of the value of the foreign entity is derived from assets located in Argentina (at the moment of the sale or during the 12 prior months).

- The participation being transferred represents (at the moment of the sale or during the 12 prior months) at least 10% of the equity of the foreign entity.

The applicable rate is generally 15% (calculated on the actual net gain or a presumed net gain equal to 90% of the sale price) of the proportional value that corresponds to the Argentine assets.

The law provides that the tax on indirect transfers applies only to participations in foreign entities acquired after the effective date of the tax reform, which was 1 January 2018. Also, the law indicates that indirect transfers are not taxable to the extent that it can be proved that the transfer took place within the same economic group, in accordance with requirements to be established by additional regulations.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. For purposes of computing tax to be withheld from an employee's salary, employers may deduct certain allowable expenses, including the following:
- Mandatory social security contributions
- Medical insurance payments for employees and their families, with certain limitations
- 40% of invoiced medical expenses up to a maximum of 5% of the taxpayer's annual net income
- 40% of invoiced expenses for the rental of a house up to an annual nontaxable amount (generally ARS167,678.40)
- 40% of expenses incurred by traveling salespeople, up to an annual nontaxable amount (generally ARS167,678.40)
- Donations to the government and certain charitable or nonprofit institutions, up to 5% of net taxable income
- Burial expenses, up to ARS24,000 annually
- Life insurance premiums, up to ARS24,000 annually
- Retirement insurance premiums, up to ARS24,000 annually
- Mortgage interest, up to ARS20,000 annually, for the purchase of a dwelling destined to be a permanent abode
- Contributions made to Mutual Guarantee Companies (SGRs; special companies that guarantee loans)
- Compensation and employer contributions related to domestic help personnel, up to an annual nontaxable amount (generally ARS167,678.40)

Self-employed individuals may deduct expenses incurred in producing income, in addition to the expenses listed above.

Personal deductions and allowances. Employed and self-employed individuals are entitled to standard deductions in amounts established by law. Employed and self-employed individuals are entitled to standard deductions in amounts established by law. The amounts for 2021 are ARS156,320.63 for a spouse, ARS78,833.08 for each child not older than 18 and ARS157,666.16 for a disabled child. To qualify, dependents must reside in Argentina for more than six months in the tax year and may not have income exceeding ARS167,678.40.

A deduction of ARS167,678.40 is granted to taxpayers who are resident in Argentina for longer than six months during the calendar year.

A special deduction is available against compensation derived from personal services. The annual amount is ARS804,856.34 for employees but, under Decree 620/2021, if the employment income is between ARS175,000 and ARS203,000 a higher special deduction applies. For self-employed individuals, the amount of the special deduction is ARS335,356.79. For “new professionals” and “new entrepreneurs” (to be defined by the Law Regulating Decree), the special deduction is ARS419,196.02.

Nonresidents residing in Argentina longer than six months in a calendar year may claim the deductible expenses actually incurred and exemptions available to residents.

Rates. The progressive tax rates applicable to Argentine residents for 2021 range from 5% to 35%.

The following table presents the 2021 individual income tax rates.

Annual taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding ARS	Not exceeding ARS	amount ARS	excess ARS
0	64,532.64	0	5
64,532.64	129,065.29	3,226.63	9
129,065.29	193,597.93	9,034.57	12
193,597.93	258,130.58	16,778.49	15
258,130.58	387,195.86	26,458.39	19
387,195.86	516,261.14	50,980.79	23
516,261.14	774,391.71	80,665.80	27
774,391.71	1,032,522.30	150,361.06	31
1,032,522.30	—	230.381.54	35

Nonresidents residing temporarily in Argentina, that is, for six months or less, are subject to final withholding tax. A standard deduction of 30% of compensation is allowed for expenses incurred in earning income. The remaining 70% of compensation is taxed at a flat rate of 35%, with no other allowable deductions or exemptions, resulting in an effective withholding tax rate of 24.5%.

Relief for losses. Business losses of self-employed persons may be carried forward for five years. Foreign-source business losses may offset foreign-source income only.

B. Other taxes

Transfer tax. Sales of real estate are subject to transfer tax at a rate of 1.5% on the sale price. This tax only applies to sales of real estate purchased before 1 January 2018.

Personal assets tax. Individuals who have total assets subject to tax of up to ARS2 million and/or who have a real estate destined to be their place of living of up to ARS18 million are exempt from the personal assets tax. Individuals who are deemed to be tax resident in Argentina according the definition in the income tax law of Argentina and who have assets totaling more than ARS2 million are required to pay the personal assets tax.

The personal assets tax is calculated using the two tables below.

The following table applies to assets located in Argentina.

Total value of assets that exceed the nontaxable minimum		Tax on lower amount	Rate on excess
Exceeding ARS	Not exceeding ARS	ARS	%
0	3,000,000	0	0.5
3,000,000	6,500,000	15,000	0.75
6,500,000	18,000,000	41,250	1.00
18,000,000	—	156,250	1.25

The following table applies to assets held abroad.

Total value of assets that exceed the nontaxable minimum		Rate on amount
Exceeding ARS	Not exceeding ARS	%
0	3,000,000	0.7
3,000,000	6,500,000	1.25
6,500,000	18,000,000	1.80
18,000,000	—	2.25

Under the Substitute Taxpayer Regime, individuals domiciled in foreign countries are subject to personal tax on Argentine assets only at a rate of 0.5%. In this case, the minimum of ARS2 million does not apply.

Liabilities, other than those incurred for the purchase, construction or improvement of a taxpayer's home, are not deductible for purposes of the personal assets tax. A tax credit is allowed for similar taxes paid abroad.

Expatriates residing in Argentina on work assignments for a period not exceeding five years are considered to be nonresidents and they are taxed only on personal assets located in Argentina.

C. Social security

Contributions. Social security contributions are paid by employees, employers and self-employed persons.

Employees. Employees' social security contributions are withheld from their monthly salary.

Employees make contributions to the pension fund at a rate of 11%, to the retiree's fund at a rate of 3% and to the health care system at a rate of 3%. The maximum monthly tax base for the calculation of these contributions is ARS208,357.30 for January 2021 and February 2021, ARS225,171.69 from March 2021 to May 2021, ARS252,462.5 from June 2021 to August 2021 and ARS283,742.61 from September 2021 to November 2021. The cap is updated every three months.

Monthly salary that exceeds the maximum tax base is not subject to contributions. For this purpose, a year comprises 13 months.

Employers. Employers pay social security contributions at a rate of 20.4% or 18%, depending on the company's activity and turnover (amount of sales). A 6% contribution for medical care is required in addition to the social security contributions. For the tax base with respect to employer social security contributions, a minimum nontaxable amount of ARS7,003.68 is applied, but the tax base for employer health care contributions is not capped.

Other. No employee or employer social security taxes are payable with respect to directors' fees. However, a director must pay fixed monthly amounts that are allocated to the social security's Self-Employed System.

The social security tax law provides an exemption for all professionals, researchers, scientists, and technicians who are contracted outside of Argentina to render services in Argentina for a period of not more than two years. The individuals must have a temporary residence, be covered by the social security system of their countries, and provide evidence of their technical qualifications as well as of their coverage for death, disability and old age in their home countries or countries of residence. This exemption is available only once and, after being granted, it is in force from the date of the application for as long as the conditions for the exemption are met.

Totalization agreements. Social security taxes for nonresidents are collected as outlined above. However, both the employer and the nonresident employee may be exempt from contributions to the Argentine pension fund and health care system if certain conditions are met.

To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Argentina has entered into totalization agreements with the following countries.

Belgium
Chile
Colombia
Ecuador
France
Greece
Italy
Luxembourg
Peru
Portugal
Slovenia
Southern Common Market (Mercado Común del Sur, or MERCOSUR) countries (Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay)
Spain

Argentina has also entered into the Ibero-American Multilateral Agreement on Social Security, which is in force with respect to Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Ecuador, El Salvador, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, Spain and Uruguay.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year for individual taxpayers is the calendar year. Tax returns must be filed between 11 June and 13 June (depending on the taxpayer's registration number) of the following year unless the taxpayer's only income is from employee compensation. No extensions to file tax returns are allowed.

National and foreign employees must file an income and personal assets tax return for informational purposes if their gross compensation exceeds ARS2 million per year. The deadline for tax returns for informational purposes is 30 June.

Self-employed taxpayers must register with the tax authorities. Tax returns are filed annually in June, declaring earnings for the previous calendar year.

Individuals with non-wage income, including self-employment income, must make advance tax payments bimonthly from August to April, based on the previous year's tax. Under a withholding system for payments to resident individuals, withholding is imposed at various rates on income exceeding a minimum threshold. Amounts withheld are treated as advance payments.

Advance payments are also required for purposes of the personal assets tax (see Section B).

For married couples, a wife is taxed separately on income derived from personal activities (including employment, self-employment and business), on assets acquired before marriage and on assets acquired during marriage with income earned from personal activities.

Nonresidents subject to the 35% withholding tax are not required to file tax returns.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Resident taxpayers are entitled to a tax credit for income taxes paid abroad, up to the increase in Argentine tax resulting from the inclusion of the foreign-source income.

Argentina has tax treaties in force with the following jurisdictions.

Australia	Finland	Qatar
Austria*	France	Russian Federation
Belgium	Germany	Spain
Bolivia	Italy	Sweden
Brazil	Japan*	Switzerland
Canada	Luxembourg*	Turkey*

MERCOSUR citizens who live in Argentina for two years. After two years of temporary residency in Argentina, MERCOSUR nationals can apply for permanent residency. Brazilian nationals can apply for permanent residence from the beginning of the assignment under an agreement between Argentina and Brazil.

Non-MERCOSUR citizens who live in Argentina for three years. Non-MERCOSUR citizens can request permanent residence after they live in Argentina for at least three years.

Registration of local companies. The National Registry of Foreign Personnel Requestors (Registro Nacional Único de Requirentes de Extranjeros, or RENURE) is the national registry in which all the local entities requiring foreign staff must be enrolled. The requesting person (private or public, physical or juristic) must be registered at RENURE to obtain the following types of residence:
- Technical residence
- Business residence
- Transitory Work Authorization
- Labor contract residence
- Intracompany transfer residence
- Religious residence
- Study residence

Home country required documentation. To obtain temporary or permanent residence, a criminal record certificate from the countries where the employee lived for at least one year in the past three years is required as well as the criminal record certificate from the country of birth.

The criminal record certificate needs to be legalized for Argentina. Under the Hague Convention, the document can have an apostille issued by the home country foreign affairs ministry. If the home country is not part of the convention, double legalization must be performed by the home country foreign affairs ministry and by the Argentine consulate.

For an employee who is accompanied by dependents, criminal records are not required for individuals who are younger than 16 years old. Furthermore, in this case, legalized family-ties certifications must be attached.

Translation of required documents. All of the documents that are issued in a language other than Spanish must be translated by an Argentine sworn translator and legalized by the Argentine Sworn Translators Association. An exception applies to documents issued in Brazilian Portuguese.

National Identity Card. The National Identity Card (Documento Nacional de Identidad, or DNI) is issued to foreigners with any type of temporary residence valid for three months or more.

The first application for the DNI can be made simultaneously with the application for temporary or permanent residence at the immigration office. Subsequent applications need to be scheduled in advance at the Register Office for Natural Persons (Registro Nacional de las Personas, or RENAPER).

Social security number for Argentina. A social security number (Codigo Unico de Identificación Laboral, or CUIL) for Argentina is required for all regularly employed foreigners.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident individuals are subject to income tax on their worldwide income. Nonresident individuals are subject to income tax on only income received from Armenian sources.

For tax purposes, an individual is considered resident if he or she satisfies either of the following conditions:
- He or she resides in Armenia for 183 or more cumulative days in the current tax year (same as a calendar year).
- His or her center of vital interests (the place of a person's family or economic interests) is in Armenia.

For the purpose of determining the residency status, days spent abroad by an individual as a civil servant of the Republic of Armenia (RA) are considered as days spent in the RA.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable income from employment consists of all types of compensation or benefits, whether received in cash or in any other form, subject to certain exemptions.

Self-employment and business income. Corporate income tax is levied on an individual entrepreneur's annual income, which consists of gross income less expenses (except for nondeductible or partially nondeductible expenses) contributing to the generation of the income.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are included in taxable income.

Investment income. Investment income is in the form of dividends, which is the income received or to be received by a participant as an allocation of profit (including an interim allocation) from participation (stock, share or unit) in the charter or share capital of an organization or joint activity.

The above taxes are withheld at source.

Exempt income. “Exempt income” represents part of the gross income of a taxpayer, which is deducted from gross income for determination of taxable income. Income derived by individuals that is considered exempt includes, among other items, the following:

- Contributions made by taxpayers on their behalf and/or by third-party taxpayers (including employers) within the voluntary accumulative pension insurance system according to the terms and conditions established by RA legislation, but not more than 5% of the taxpayer’s gross income
- Contributions made by the state for the taxpayer within the obligatory accumulative pension insurance system in accordance with the terms and conditions established by RA legislation
- Compensation paid to employees within the norms specified in the legislation of the RA, with the exception of compensation paid for unused leave days in the event of quitting work
- Property and cash received from individuals as inheritance or gifts, with the exception of gifts of property received from individual real estate developers
- Assets, works and services received from noncommercial organizations free of charge
- Assets, works and services received free of charge on the basis of decisions of the state administration and local government bodies of the RA, as well as such items received from foreign states and international (intergovernmental) organizations
- Proceeds from the sale of property to non-entrepreneur individuals, with the exception of amounts received from the sale of property subject to entrepreneurial activity (property subject to entrepreneurial activity is a car that is alienated within 365 days after its acquisition)
- Scholarships and stipends paid by the state, noncommercial organizations, foreign states and international (intergovernmental) organizations to students and postgraduates of higher educational institutions, students of specialized-secondary and vocational schools and attendees of religious seminaries
- Insurance compensation with the exception of insurance compensation received under the voluntary accumulative pension insurance system
- Income derived from the sale of shares, treasury bonds and other state securities
- Income received from securities that certify taxpayers’ participations in investment funds
- Amounts received as compensation for damages under the law, with the exception of compensation for lost income
- Lump-sum amounts paid on the death of an employee or his or her family members
- Prizes won at international competitions by athletes and coaches participating for the national team of the RA, and state awards (prizes)
- Monetary and in-kind winnings of the participants in advertising lotteries (lotteries organized by advertisers that fully establish the prize fund) implemented according to the procedures and terms specified by the law of the RA, in an amount not exceeding AMD50,000 for each winning
- Monetary and in-kind winnings of the participants of drawing, non-drawing, and combined lotteries and totalizators

- Value of monetary or material prizes received in competitions in an amount not exceeding AMD50,000 per prize
- Insurance payments up to AMD10,000 per month per head made by the employers for health insurance of their employees
- Income derived from the sale of agricultural production, as well as income received from other activities by individuals involved in agricultural production, to the extent that the income from such other activities does not exceed 10% of the income received from agricultural and other activities (if the 10% threshold is exceeded, the entire income from the other activities is taxed)
- State benefits paid under the legislation of the RA, with the exception of benefits for temporary work disability (including maternity)
- All types of pensions paid under the law of the RA with the exception of pensions received under the voluntary accumulative pension insurance system

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Employer-provided stock options are taxable benefits, with some exceptions depending on the type of stock options plans.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains are subject to regular income tax when they are realized. Unrealized capital gains are not subject to tax. Capital gains arising from certain types of activities, such as the sale of shares and other specified types of property as mentioned in Exempt income are exempt from income tax.

Individual entrepreneurs may offset their capital losses against capital gains. If the capital loss cannot be offset in the year in which it is incurred, it can be carried forward to offset gross income in the following five years.

Deductions

Business deductions. Individual entrepreneurs may deduct all business-related and documented expenses (for example, material expenses, depreciation allowances, lease payments, salaries and wages, and interest paid) except for nondeductible or partially deductible expenses.

Nondeductible or partially deductible expenses include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Business-trip expenses that exceed the norms established by the Tax Code of the RA.

- Representative expenses exceeding 0.5% of gross income (but not more than AMD5 million) for the tax year. The limit of 0.5% is not taken into account in the tax year of registration as an individual entrepreneur.
- Fines, penalties and other proprietary sanctions transferred to the state and municipal budgets.
- Assets, works and services provided free of charge and debts forgiven.
- Expenses related to the generation of income that is exempt from income tax.
- Interest paid on loans and borrowings above the established limit of 24% per year.
- Management service expenses that exceed the norms established by the Tax Code of the RA.
- Amounts of financial aid, food provided to individuals, costs for organization of social and cultural events, and similar expenses exceeding 0.25% of the taxable income before deducting expenses.

Depreciation (amortization) allowances for fixed and intangible assets owned by individual entrepreneurs are deducted for tax purposes in accordance with the terms and conditions provided by the Tax Code of the RA. Details regarding the depreciation (amortization) of fixed and intangible assets are provided below.

The annual value of depreciation (amortization) allowances for fixed and intangible assets is calculated by dividing the acquisition cost or revalued cost (if the revaluation is carried out according to the procedure established by the respective law of the RA) of fixed and intangible assets by the depreciation period determined for the appropriate group of fixed assets or for intangible assets. The following minimum periods are established for depreciation purposes.

Group	Assets	Minimum depreciation period (years)
1	Buildings and constructions of hotels, boarding houses, rest homes, sanitariums and educational institutions	10
2	Other buildings, constructions and transmission devices	20
3	Production equipment	5
4	Robot equipment and assembly lines	3
5	Calculating devices and computers	1
6	Other fixed assets, including growing cattle, perennial plants and investments intended for improving the land	8

Fixed and intangible assets with a value up to AMD50,000 (inclusive) are depreciated in the tax year of their acquisition.

Individual entrepreneurs who import or acquire (construct or develop) fixed assets included in the list of investment or business programs that are approved by the government of the RA may set the depreciation period of those assets at their discretion, but for not less than one year.

Taxpayers importing or acquiring (constructing or developing) fixed assets between 1 July 2020 and 31 December 2021 may set the depreciation period at their discretion, but for not less than one year.

Intangible assets are amortized over their useful economic lives. If it is impossible to determine the useful life of an intangible asset, the minimum depreciation period of such asset is set at 10 years, but it may not be longer than the period of the individual entrepreneur's activity.

Land is not subject to depreciation.

For the purposes of determination of taxable income, an individual entrepreneur may choose a different depreciation period for fixed assets at his or her discretion, but it may not be less than one of the abovementioned periods for the appropriate group.

Rates. The income tax rates are provided below.

Income tax is calculated using a flat rate of 22% for the 2021 tax year. For subsequent tax years, income tax will be calculated using the following rates:
- 2022: 21%
- 2023: 20%

A 10% rate applies to salaries and other income equivalent to salaries that are paid to employees by employers certified according to procedures established by the RA Law on State Support of Information Technologies. This provision will remain in force until 31 December 2022.

A 10% rate applies to the following types of income derived by individuals (except for individual entrepreneurs) in Armenia:
- Royalties.
- Income derived from property leases. If the total amount of income from property leases exceeds AMD60 million during the tax year, an additional 10% tax is paid by the individual on the excess amount.
- Interest income. Interest or discounts derived from Armenian treasury bonds and other state securities are not taxable.
- Income from the sale of property (except for land, the alienation of which is exempt from tax) to tax agents. If the property is the object of entrepreneurial activity (that is, a car that is alienated within 365 days after its acquisition), a 1% income tax applies, but not less than AMD150 multiplied by each horsepower of the car's engine.

Dividends received by Armenian and foreign citizens are taxed at a 5% rate. Dividends and other income derived from stocks, bonds or other investment securities listed on the Armenian stock exchange are not taxable with some exceptions.

Income received by a real estate developer from the alienation of a building or its apartments or other areas is taxed at a 20% rate.

Credits. The income tax liability of Armenian tax residents is reduced by the amount of tax paid by them abroad under foreign law, with the exception of the amount of foreign tax paid on income that is exempt from tax under the law of the RA.

However, the foreign tax credit may not exceed the amount of tax that would be due in the RA on this income.

Relief for losses. Individual entrepreneurs may carry forward operating losses for up to five years. No carryback is allowed.

B. Other taxes

Inheritance and gift taxes. Armenia does not impose inheritance and gift taxes.

Wealth tax. Armenia does not impose wealth tax or net worth tax.

Real estate tax. For individuals and individual entrepreneurs, land, buildings and constructions are subject to real estate tax.

For purposes of the real estate tax, buildings and constructions include the following:
- Residential construction units
- Multi-flat dwelling buildings
- Nonresidential areas of residential buildings
- Separate constructions for the parking of vehicles that are built on plots
- Constructions for public use
- Constructions for production use
- Incomplete (semi-built) construction units
- Newly constructed and/or modified real estate that is registered and evaluated by the cadastral body but that has not yet had state registration of rights, as well as buildings and structures built without a construction permit on a land parcel by taxpayers having the right of ownership over the given land parcel, including constructions built without authorization in multi-apartment buildings or adjacent to the buildings

The real estate tax rate for agricultural lands is 15% of the net income determined by cadastral evaluation. The real estate tax rate for non-agricultural lands ranges from 0.25% to 1% of the cadastral value assessed under procedures defined by the Tax Code of the RA.

The tax base for buildings and constructions is considered to be the cadastral value assessed under procedures defined by the Tax Code of the RA. The real estate tax rate for a residential apartment building, an apartment in a residential apartment building or a nonresidential area of an apartment building ranges from 0.05% applied to the tax base up to AMD1,326,000 to 1.5% applied to the part exceeding AMD200 million of the tax base. The real estate tax rate for private houses and garden houses ranges from 0.05% up to AMD1,223,500 to 1.5% applied to the part of the tax base exceeding AMD200 million. The real estate tax rates for other types of constructions range from 0.2% to 0.3% of the tax base.

Vehicle tax. For purposes of the vehicle tax, vehicles include the following:
- Motor vehicles
- Watercrafts
- Snowmobiles
- Quattro cycles
- Motorcycles

The tax base for vehicles is motor power (horsepower or kilowatt). The vehicle tax for motor vehicles is calculated at the following annual rates.

Type	Tax amount
Motor cars with up to 10 passenger seats
From 1 to 120 horsepower	AMD200 per horsepower
From 121 to 250 horsepower	AMD300 per horsepower and additional AMD1,000 for each horsepower above 150
251 and more horsepower	AMD500 per horsepower and additional AMD1,000 for each horsepower above 150
Motor cars with 10 or more passenger seats and trucks
From 1 to 200 horsepower	AMD100 per horsepower
201 and more horsepower	AMD200 per horsepower
Watercrafts, snowmobiles and quattro cycles	AMD150 for each horsepower
Motorcycles	AMD40 for each horsepower
Trucks of more than 20 years	0

Vehicle tax on motor vehicles used for up to three years is calculated at 100%. The amount of vehicle tax on motor vehicles used for more than three years is reduced for each year following the third year by 10% but not by more than a total of 50% of the tax amount. The time in use is calculated from the date on which the motor vehicle is produced.

C. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Armenia is the calendar year.

Individuals must submit income tax returns regarding their annual taxable income to the tax authorities by 20 April of the year following the tax year, except in the following cases:

- The taxpayer received exempt income only.
- The taxpayer received only income subject to taxation at source by a tax agent, regardless of the amount of such income during the tax year.

The amount of income tax calculated must be paid to the state budget by 20 April of the year following the tax year.

Individual entrepreneurs must submit corporate income tax returns to the tax authorities by 20 April of the year following the tax year.

Individual entrepreneurs engaged in economic activities in Armenia must make advance payments of corporate income tax during the tax year. The amount payable must be the lower of the following:

- 20% of the amount of corporate income tax for the preceding tax year
- 2% of revenue received from the supply of goods, performance of works, and/or the provision of services during the preceding quarter

The advance payments must be made quarterly by the 20th day of the last month of each quarter.

At the end of the reporting year, an individual entrepreneur calculates the amount of corporate income tax at a rate of 18% based on the accrued taxable income, setting off the amounts of advance payments made for such reporting year.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Australian residents are subject to Australian tax on worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to Australian tax on Australian-source income only. An exemption from Australian tax on certain income is available for individuals who qualify as a temporary resident. Temporary residents are generally exempt from Australian tax on foreign-source income (including foreign investment income but not foreign employment income earned while a temporary resident) and capital gains realized on assets that are not taxable Australian property (TAP). For details regarding TAP, see Capital gains and losses.

As discussed below, the Australian tax treatment differs for residents, nonresidents and temporary residents.

In general, a resident is defined as a person who resides in Australia according to the ordinary meaning of the word, and includes a person who meets any of the following conditions:
- He or she is domiciled in Australia, unless the tax authority is satisfied that the person's permanent place of abode is outside Australia.
- He or she is actually present in Australia continuously or intermittently for more than half of the tax year, unless the tax authority is satisfied that the person's usual place of abode is outside Australia and that the person does not intend to reside in Australia.
- He or she is an active member of a Commonwealth superannuation scheme.

A nonresident is a person who does not satisfy any of the above tests.

A temporary resident refers to an individual who satisfies the following conditions:
- The individual must be working in Australia under a temporary resident visa (for example, subclass 400, 457 or 482; see Section E).

- The individual must not be a resident of Australia for social security purposes (this covers Australian citizens, permanent residents, special visa categories such as refugees and certain New Zealand citizens).
- The individual's spouse (legal or de facto) must not be a resident of Australia for social security purposes.

No time limit applies to the temporary resident status. If an individual applies for Australian permanent residency, temporary resident status ends on the date on which permanent residency is granted and the individual is taxable as a resident (that is, taxable on worldwide income) thereafter.

Income subject to tax. The taxability of various types of income is discussed below. Taxable income is calculated by subtracting deductible expenses and losses from the assessable income of the taxpayer.

Employment income. Salary, wages, allowances and most cash compensation is included in the employee's assessable income in the year of receipt. Most noncash employment benefits received by an employee are subject to Fringe Benefits Tax (FBT), payable by the employer.

Self-employment and business income. The taxable income from self-employment or from a business is subject to Australian tax. Each partner in a partnership is taxed on his or her share of the partnership's taxable income.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are included in assessable income as personal earnings and are taxed in the year of receipt.

Dividends. The assessable income of resident shareholders includes all dividends received. Franked dividends (that is, dividends paid from taxed corporate profits) paid by Australian corporations are grossed up for the underlying corporate taxes paid. The shareholders may claim the underlying corporate tax as a credit in their personal tax return. Whether additional tax must be paid on the franked dividends by a shareholder depends on the individual's marginal tax rate. Under certain circumstances, excess credits may be refunded.

Dividends from Australian sources that are paid to nonresidents are generally subject to a final withholding tax of 30% (or 15% under applicable treaties) on the unfranked portion (that is, the portion paid from untaxed corporate profits).

Foreign-source dividends are included in the assessable income of Australian residents. If tax was paid in the foreign country, a foreign income tax offset (broadly equal to the lower of the foreign tax paid or the amount of the Australian tax payable, capped at any applicable treaty tax rates) is allowed.

Temporary residents (see Who is liable) are not assessable on foreign source investment income and gains.

Interest, royalties and rental income. Interest, royalties and rental income derived by residents are included in assessable income with a deduction allowed for applicable expenses. Eligibility for building depreciation deductions on a rental property depends on the building's nature and its construction date.

If tax is paid in the foreign country on the foreign rental income, the resident may claim a foreign income tax offset (broadly equal to the lower of the foreign tax paid or the amount of the Australian tax payable). If the foreign investment results in a tax loss (that is, deductible expenses exceed assessable income), the tax loss can be offset against all Australian assessable income.

Temporary residents are not assessable on foreign investment income and, consequently, may not offset foreign expenses or losses against other assessable Australian income.

Interest paid by a resident to a nonresident lender is subject to a final withholding tax of 10%. Interest paid by a temporary resident to a nonresident lender (for example, an overseas mortgagee) is exempt from the interest withholding tax. Royalties paid to nonresidents are generally subject to a final withholding tax of 30% (or 10% to 15% under applicable treaties).

Converting transactions denominated in foreign currency into Australian dollar amounts. Taxpayers are generally required to convert income amounts denominated in foreign currency into Australian dollar (AUD) amounts at the time of derivation of the income. Likewise, taxpayers must convert expense amounts into Australian dollar amounts at the time of payment. This also results in the deeming of assessable income or allowable deductions for residents (but not temporary residents) who have acquired or disposed of foreign currency rights and liabilities. For resident taxpayers, these rules normally apply with respect to foreign-currency debt (for example, mortgages) and foreign-currency accounts (for example, bank accounts). Special rules apply to the acquisition or disposal of capital assets or depreciable assets.

Certain elections can change the amounts of assessable income or allowable deductions arising under the foreign-currency rules and/or reduce the compliance requirements. However, because of the significant tax implications of the elections, taxpayers should seek specific advice suited to their circumstances.

The above rules provide limited exceptions for certain assets and obligations.

Proposed reforms to simplify these rules have been announced. However, at the time of writing, the reforms had not yet been legislated.

Temporary residents may be exempt from the above tax rules on certain foreign-currency denominated accounts that are located outside Australia.

Concessions for individuals who are considered to be living away from home. Limited tax concessions are available to employees who are required to live away from home for employment purposes and who maintain a home for their use in the home location in Australia. In addition, if the concessional treatment is available, it is generally limited to a maximum period of 12 months. These concessions typically do not apply to foreign employees working temporarily in Australia.

A limited number of other benefits may be provided on a concessionally taxed basis to employees who are permanently relocating to Australia.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Discounts provided to employees on shares or options acquired under an employee share scheme (ESS) are generally included as ordinary income in the employee's assessable income in the year they are acquired. The governing rules are complex, and professional advice should be sought.

Grants after 1 July 2009 but before 1 July 2015. For grants made after 1 July 2009 but before 1 July 2015, the time at which tax is payable by the employee is based on the terms of the plan. The extent to which taxation can be delayed from the time of grant to the deferred taxing point depends on whether a real risk of forfeiture of the shares or options exists under the conditions of the scheme. A real risk of forfeiture exists if the employee could lose or forfeit the interest other than by disposing of it or exercising it. The taxing time is the earliest of the following events:
- When the real risk of forfeiture no longer exists and the scheme no longer genuinely restricts the disposal of the share or exercise of the option
- The date of termination of employment
- The end of seven years

The alternative of employees electing to be taxed in the year of grant no longer exists for grants made after 1 July 2009.

Grants after 1 July 2015. For grants made after 1 July 2015, the taxing point may be deferred until the date of exercise rather than the vesting date of the shares or options. The following are significant aspects of the regime:
- No requirement exists for options to be subject to a real risk of forfeiture to enable the deferral of tax if a genuine disposal restriction applies.
- The maximum share ownership and control level eligible for tax deferral on shares or options is 10%, with shares, options and rights counted in determining whether the 10% holding is reached.
- The maximum deferral period for tax on shares or options is 15 years.

The taxable discount amount for shares is generally the difference between the market value of the share and the amount paid for the share by the employee. For options, the discount is the greater of the following two amounts:
- The amount equal to the share value less exercise price
- The value determined according to a formula similar to the Black and Scholes model for valuing exchange-traded options

Other issues. Australian residents are generally subject to tax on the entire discount, with a foreign income tax offset for any foreign tax paid (up to the Australian tax otherwise payable). Apportionment of the discount may apply for temporary residents and nonresidents.

No tax withholding obligation is imposed in Australia with respect to benefits under employee share schemes unless the employee fails to provide his or her Australian Tax File Number (TFN) to the employer by the end of the financial year.

Employers providing benefits under an ESS are required to comply with annual employer reporting obligations to disclose, among other items, the estimated taxable value of these awards.

Capital gains and losses. Residents (but not temporary residents) are taxable on their worldwide income, including gains realized on the sale of capital assets. Capital assets include real property and personal property, regardless of whether they are used in a trade or business, and shares acquired for personal investment. However, trading stock acquired for the purpose of resale is not subject to capital gains treatment.

Employee shares or options disposed of within 30 days of the cessation time or deferred taxing point (see Taxation of employer-provided stock options) are not subject to capital gains tax (CGT). In this case, the entire gain is subject to income tax under the employee share scheme provisions.

For an asset held at least 12 months (not including the dates of purchase and sale), only 50% of the capital gain resulting from the disposal is subject to tax.

Assets acquired before 19 September 1985 are generally exempt from CGT. In general, any gain (or loss) derived from the sale of an individual's principal residence is ignored for CGT purposes if the individual is a resident of Australia at the time of sale. However, special rules may apply if the principal residence had been used to generate rental income.

Capital losses in excess of current year capital gains (before the 50% discount is applied, if applicable) are not deductible against other income, but may be carried forward to be offset against future capital gains.

Nonresidents and temporary residents are taxable only on gains arising from disposals of taxable Australian property (TAP). The following assets are considered to be TAP:
- Australian real property
- An indirect interest in Australian real property
- A business asset of a permanent establishment in Australia
- An option or right to acquire any of the CGT assets covered by the first three items above
- A CGT asset that is deemed to be TAP as a result of the taxpayer making an election to disregard any deemed gain or loss arising on leaving Australia

Individuals who derive a capital gain after 8 May 2012 and are considered either a nonresident or temporary resident at any time on or after that date have a reduced ability to claim the 50% discount. If the individual undertakes a market valuation of the asset as of 8 May 2012, the portion of the gain that accrued before 8 May 2012 may still be eligible for the full CGT discount.

For Australian residents, any gain or loss realized on the sale of their main residence (home) is generally exempt from Australian CGT. In general, this exemption can continue to apply, provided the individuals do not rent the property for more than six years and they do not treat another property as their residence. From 1 July 2020, any sale of a main residence by a nonresident (including a former temporary resident) does not receive the main residence exemption and is liable to capital gains tax in full.

Anti-avoidance measures ensure that nonresidents and temporary residents continue to be taxable on disposals of interests in companies whose balance sheets are largely comprised of real property assets, including mining interests.

Australian residents who are not temporary residents just before breaking residence are subject to a CGT charge on the deemed disposal of all assets held at the date of breaking residence that are not TAP. The taxpayer may elect that this deemed disposal charge not apply. However, such an election deems the asset to be TAP until residence is resumed or the asset is disposed of (even if the asset would not otherwise be TAP). As a result, a CGT charge is imposed if the assets are disposed of while the individual is nonresident.

Temporary residents are generally exempt from tax on gains derived from assets that are not TAP.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Expenses of a capital, private or domestic nature, and expenses incurred in producing exempt income, are not deductible.

Specific documentation requirements must be fulfilled for all expenses if employment-related expenses exceed AUD300 a year. Client entertainment expenses are not deductible.

Personal tax offsets. Tax offsets are available to resident taxpayers and temporary residents. Tax offsets are subtracted from tax calculated on taxable income.

Nonresidents may not claim tax offsets.

Business deductions. Losses and expenses are generally fully deductible to the extent they are incurred in producing assessable income or are necessarily incurred in carrying on a business for that purpose.

Specific records are required for business travel and motor vehicle expenses.

Deductions are allowed for salaries and wages paid to employees, as well as for interest, rent, repairs, commissions and similar expenses incurred in carrying on a business.

Expenditure for the acquisition or improvement of assets is not deductible, but a capital allowance may be claimed as a deduction. Expenditure for acquisitions or improvements may be added to the cost base of an asset for CGT purposes and may reduce any taxable gain arising from a later disposition.

Rates. Income tax from 1 July 2021 (2021-22 tax year) is levied on residents and temporary residents at the rates listed in the table below. The following is the table of income tax rates for residents and temporary residents.

Taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding AUD	Not exceeding AUD	amount AUD	excess %
18,200	45,000	0	19
45,000	90,000	5,092	32.5
90,000	180,000	29,467	37
180,000	—	51,667	45

The AUD18,200 tax-free threshold is reduced if the taxpayer spends fewer than 12 months in Australia in the year of arrival or departure. Resident taxpayers may be liable for the Medicare Levy (see Section B) in addition to income tax at the above rates.

Income tax from 1 July 2021 (2021-22 tax year) is levied on nonresidents at the following rates.

Taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding AUD	Not exceeding AUD	amount AUD	excess %
0	120,000	0	32.5
120,000	180,000	39,000	37
180,000	—	61,200	45

Nonresidents are not liable for the Medicare Levy.

Resident and nonresident taxpayers with taxable income and superannuation contributions of more than the threshold of AUD250,000 per year may be liable to the Division 293 tax. This is an additional tax on superannuation contributions whereby an individual's income is added to certain superannuation contributions and compared to the Division 293 threshold. Division 293 tax is payable on the excess over the threshold, or on the super contributions, whichever is less. The rate of the Division 293 tax is 15% and may be paid by the individual or deducted from the superannuation contributions, at the individual's choice.

B. Social security

Medicare Levy. Technically, Australia does not have a social security system. However, a Medicare Levy of 2% of taxable income is payable by resident individuals for health services (provided that they qualify for Medicare services). This is the only levy imposed in Australia that is equivalent to a social security levy. An exemption from the Medicare Levy may apply if the individual is from a country that has not entered into a Reciprocal Health Care Agreement with Australia.

No ceiling applies to the amount of income subject to the levy. However, relief is provided for certain low-income earners. High-income resident taxpayers who do not have adequate private health insurance may be subject to an additional 1% to 1.5% Medicare Levy surcharge. High-income taxpayers whose private hospital insurance carries an excess payment (amount for which the insured is responsible before the insurance begins to pay) of more than AUD500 for single individuals or AUD1,000 for couples or families are also subject to the Medicare Levy surcharge.

Superannuation (pension). Australia also has a compulsory private superannuation (pension) contribution system. Under this system, employers must contribute a minimum percentage of the employee's ordinary time earnings (OTE) base to a complying superannuation fund for the retirement benefit of its employees. The minimum percentage is currently 10% and is expected to remain at this percentage until 30 June 2022. In general, OTE consists of salary and wages and most cash compensation items paid for ordinary hours of work. Transitional measures can apply for certain pre-existing superannuation earnings base arrangements. The maximum OTE base for each employee for the year ending 30 June 2022 is AUD58,920 per quarter. No obligation is imposed to make contributions with respect to OTE above that level unless otherwise required by employment contractual terms.

If an employee comes from a country with which Australia has entered into a bilateral social security agreement, it may be possible to keep the employee in his or her home country social security system under a certificate of coverage issued by his or her home country and therefore remove the obligation to make the Australian superannuation contributions outlined above. Australia has entered into such agreements with Austria, Belgium, Chile, Croatia, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Finland, Germany, Greece, Hungary, India, Ireland, Japan, Korea (South), Latvia, the Netherlands, North Macedonia, Norway, Poland, Portugal, the Slovak Republic, Switzerland and the United States.

An exemption from superannuation may be available in limited circumstances for senior foreign executives who hold a certain business visa.

Temporary residents may be able to have their accumulated superannuation paid to them once they have departed Australia permanently and their visa is canceled. The withdrawal is subject to a final tax.

C. Tax filing and payment procedures

Returns for the tax year ended 30 June generally are due by 31 October. Extensions may be available if the return is filed by a registered tax agent. Nonresidents are subject to the same filing requirements as residents. No specific additional filing requirements are imposed on persons arriving in, or on persons preparing to depart from Australia.

Visitors entering Australia for employment or to take up residence who have not previously applied for an Australian tax file number must apply with the Australian Taxation Office.

Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income. Joint filing of returns by spouses is not permitted.

A tax assessment is issued by the Australian Taxation Office after a tax return is filed. For a timely filed tax return, taxpayers generally have 21 days after the date of assessment to pay tax due and may be allowed a longer period.

Salary and allowances paid in Australia are subject to monthly withholding under the Pay As You Go (PAYG) tax withholding system. Income other than salary and wages, such as investment income (depending on the amount), may be subject to quarterly or annual PAYG installments.

D. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Foreign income tax offset system. An offset is available for payments of foreign tax that are similar to the Australian income tax payable on the same income. Both Australian and foreign resident taxpayers may claim a tax offset (equal to the lower of an equivalent foreign tax paid or the amount of the Australian tax payable) for an amount included in the taxpayer's assessable income on which they have paid foreign income tax.

Excess foreign tax offsets may not be carried forward.

Double tax treaties. Australia has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

E. Temporary visas

Nonresidents seeking entry to Australia, including for tourism purposes, must obtain visas before entry. Individual eligibility requirements for each visa category must be considered before applying for a visa. Citizens of New Zealand are eligible to be granted a special category (subclass 444) visa (permitting indefinite temporary stay with full work rights) on arrival, subject to meeting health and character requirements.

Temporary residence visas are granted to people whose activities are considered to benefit Australia, including people entering for business, skilled employment, cultural or social activities.

The types of temporary residence visas, and the conditions that must be fulfilled prior to such visas being issued, are described below. Holders of temporary residence visas are generally not eligible for public health benefits in Australia, unless Australia has a reciprocal health care agreement with the country of the visa holder.

Visitors. Three visitor visa categories (subclass 600, subclass 601 and subclass 651) allow individuals to visit Australia for the following purposes:
• Tourism

- Family visits
- Engaging in business visitor activities

Criteria that must be met include health, character and the possession of adequate funds for the duration of the stay. Certain eligible passport holders can apply for a visitor visa online or through a travel agent or airline. The period of stay on a subclass 600 visa is discretionary based on risk profile, purpose of stay and requested duration of stay. Subclass 601 and subclass 651 visas allow stays of up to three months for each entry and multiple entry.

While in Australia, individuals holding a visitor visa in the business visitor stream are authorized only to participate in business visitor activities and may not perform work in any capacity. Permissible business visitor activities include the following:
- Attending business meetings
- Participating in training, conferences or seminars
- Investigating, negotiating or entering into contracts
- Making general business or employment inquiries

It is not permissible for a business visitor to perform any activity that is, or includes, undertaking work for, or supplying services to, an organization or other person based in Australia.

Employment. An individual wishing to enter Australia for employment may apply for a temporary work (short stay specialist [subclass 400]) visa, temporary activity (subclass 408) visa or temporary skill shortage (subclass 482) visa.

Temporary work (short stay specialist) visas. Individuals who need to enter Australia to perform short-term, highly specialized work that is not ongoing or to assist in a national emergency can apply for a subclass 400 visa. The subclass 400 visa can be granted for stay of up to three months. Up to a maximum of six months may be granted if a strong business case can be demonstrated. After grant, applicants have up to six months to make their first entry into Australia on this visa. This visa cannot be renewed or extended in Australia.

Temporary activity visas. The subclass 408 temporary activity visa allows individuals to enter Australia to do the following:
- Participate in a reciprocal staff exchange program
- Participate in a high-level sports competition
- Participate in an event at the invitation of an Australian organization
- Perform work in relation to an Australian government-endorsed event
- Perform as an entertainer or work in a production or technical role for a production
- Undertake academic research at a tertiary or research institution
- Be a full-time religious worker
- Work full time in the household of certain foreign senior executives
- Work in Australia as a crew member of a superyacht
- Participate in an approved special program

Each stream has its own criteria, including sponsorship or support by an approved organization. Organizations required to sponsor a subclass 408 visa holder must meet several obligations. This visa has a maximum stay period of 4 years for the Australian government-endorsed event stream and a maximum stay period of 12 months for the superyacht and special program streams. A maximum stay period of two years is available for the other streams.

Temporary skill shortage visas. Individuals intending to work in Australia may apply for a subclass 482 Temporary Skill Shortage (TSS) visa. The TSS visa may be granted for up to two years if the occupation is listed on the Short-term Skilled Occupation List (STSOL), subject to international trade obligations, which may permit a longer grant period, or up to four years if the occupation is on the Medium and Long-term Strategic Skills List (MLTSSL) or Regional Occupation List (ROL).

A TSS visa may be renewed, provided that the application criteria are met each time. TSS visa holders in occupations on the STSOL may usually only renew their visa once in Australia with very limited options to renew again from outside Australia.

The process involves the following three steps:
• The employer must be approved as a sponsor.
• The employer nominates the visa holder to fill a specific position.
• The individual applies for a visa.

Each step has separate eligibility criteria that must be met.

Requirements for employers include the following:
• Active business operations and good standing
• Paying a training levy
• Attesting to a strong record or commitment to employing local labor
• Following nondiscriminatory employment practices
• Paying market salary rates
• Conducting labor-market testing unless exempt
• Paying foreign nationals at market salary rates or higher

Sponsors must also meet sponsorship obligations with respect to all sponsored TSS visa holders and any accompanying family members. The Department of Home Affairs monitors all sponsors, and sanctions are imposed on sponsors that do not meet their obligations.

A sponsor can be an Australian business or an overseas business. However, if a sponsor is an overseas business, it cannot already be operating a business in Australia and it must be intending that its TSS visa holder either assist in establishing business operations in Australia or assist in fulfilling a contractual obligation of the business.

Visa applicants must meet skill, English language, health and character requirements and have at least two years relevant work experience.

Working Holiday. Under reciprocal arrangements with certain jurisdictions, young people may work in Australia to support their holiday on Working Holiday (subclass 417) visas. Working Holiday visas are granted to individuals 18 to 30 years of age who are citizens of Belgium, Cyprus, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, Germany, Hong Kong, Italy, Japan, Korea (South), Malta, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Taiwan and the United Kingdom. Canadian, French and Irish citizens are also eligible and benefit from an uplifted age threshold of 35 years of age.

Work and Holiday. The Work and Holiday visa is similar to the Working Holiday visa but has additional eligibility requirements such as a tertiary qualification. This visa is available to passport holders 18 to 30 years of age from Argentina, Austria, Chile, China, the Czech Republic, Ecuador, Greece, Hungary, Indonesia, Israel, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Peru, Poland, Portugal, San Marino, Singapore, the Slovak Republic, Slovenia, Spain, Thailand, Turkey, the United States, Uruguay and Vietnam.

Working Holiday and Work and Holiday visas are valid for 12 months' stay from the date of first entry. Individuals holding Working Holiday and Work and Holiday visas may carry out work in Australia that is incidental to their vacations. They may not work for more than six months with any one employer, with some flexibility if the work is undertaken in different locations and work in any one location does not exceed six months. Working Holiday and Work and Holiday visa holders who have completed three months of specified work in regional Australia may be eligible to apply for a second visa. Working Holiday and Work and Holiday visa holders who carry out six months of specified work in regional areas while on their second visa may be eligible to apply for a third Working Holiday or Work and Holiday visa.

Training. Employers may sponsor and nominate individuals for a Training subclass 407 visa to engage in structured workplace-based training in Australia. The training must be consistent with the individual's employment history and be provided by the sponsor. Sponsors must also meet their sponsorship obligations.

Students. Overseas students enrolled in certain registered courses may reside in Australia for the duration of their courses. Overseas students may work in Australia 40 hours per fortnight, and they may work full-time during official college or university breaks.

Overseas students in Australia can apply for a TSS visa for full-time employment without having first completed their studies in Australia if they meet the criteria.

Regional work visas. To encourage migration to regional areas outside Sydney, Melbourne and Brisbane, five-year provisional visas provide a pathway to permanent residence (under new visa subclass 191) after three years. See Permanent Residence (Skilled Regional) visa (subclass 191) in Section F.

Skilled Employer Sponsored Regional (Provisional) visa (subclass 494). The Skilled Employer Sponsored Regional (Provisional) visa (subclass 494) visa is similar to the TSS visa and requires sponsorship, nomination, labor market testing and payment of the training levy. Positions must be in an occupation on the MLTSSL or the ROL. Individuals must meet requirements in addition to those for a TSS visa, including the following:

- They must have a formal skills assessment by a specified skills-assessing body in Australia.
- They must be under 45 years of age.
- They must have at least three years' relevant experience.

Skilled Work Regional (Provisional) visa (subclass 491). The Skilled Work Regional (Provisional) visa (subclass 491) has the following two streams:
- State government nominated occupation that must be on the state government's occupations-in-demand list
- Sponsored by an Australian citizen or permanent resident family member living in a regional area, with an occupation that must be on the MLTSSL

For the subclass 491 visa, individuals must have a formal skills assessment in their occupation and file an expression of interest (EOI) outlining their claims for points for employability factors, including qualifications, age, employment experience and language capabilities. They must also be able to meet a minimum points' test "passmark." For subclass 491 EOI applicants seeking state government nomination, they are invited to submit a visa application only if they are successfully nominated by a state government. For subclass 491 EOI applicants being sponsored by a family member, only those scoring the most points are invited to submit a visa application. The number of invitations issued in each occupation is limited by quotas.

F. Permanent residence

Permanent residence visas are granted in the family, humanitarian and skilled categories. The visas most relevant to individual skilled applicants and business immigrants are described below.

Employer Nomination Scheme. Under the Employer Nomination Scheme, Australian employers may nominate highly skilled individuals from overseas for permanent residence. Applicants for a permanent residence visa under the scheme must be nominated in an occupation on the MLTSSL or ROL and satisfy one of the following criteria:
- They have worked in their position in Australia for their employer while on a subclass 457 visa or TSS visa for at least three of the last four years.
- They have three years' full-time post-training experience in the nominated occupation and have had their skills formally assessed successfully.
- They hold a subclass 444 (special category) visa or subclass 461 (New Zealand family relationship) visa and have worked in their nominated occupation for their nominated employer full-time for at least three of the last four years immediately before applying.

Some concessions are available for individuals who held or had applied for a subclass 457 visa on or before 18 April 2017. The subclass 457 visa was replaced by the TSS visa on 18 March 2018.

Regional visas

Regional Sponsored Migration Scheme (RSMS). Certain TSS and subclass 457 visa holders who have worked for their employer in their position in an occupation on the MLTSSL or ROL while on a subclass 457 visa or TSS visa for at least three of the last four years are eligible for permanent residence. Some concessions are available for individuals who held or had applied for a subclass 457 visa on or before 18 April 2017.

Permanent Residence (Skilled Regional) visa (subclass 191). From 22 November 2022, holders of subclass 494 and subclass 491 visas who have lived in regional Australia and earned a minimum taxable income for at least three years will be eligible for a subclass 191 visa. Full details are not yet available.

General skilled migration — subclass 189 Skilled Independent visa and subclass 190 Skilled Nominated visa. Individuals may seek to apply either independently under subclass 189 and nominate an MLTSSL occupation, or be nominated by a state or territory government under subclass 190 and nominate either an MLTSSL occupation or an STSOL occupation. Individuals must first file an EOI outlining their claims for points for employability factors, including qualifications, age, employment experience and language capabilities. They must also meet a minimum points' test "passmark." Sponsorship from a state government also attracts additional points. EOI applicants seeking state government nomination are invited to submit a subclass 190 permanent visa application only if they are successfully nominated by a state government. For EOI applicants applying independently, only those scoring the most points are invited to submit a subclass 189 permanent visa application. The number of invitations issued in each occupation is limited by quotas.

Citizens of New Zealand may also be eligible for streamlined permanent residence visa arrangements.

Global Talent Independent program. The Global Talent Independent (GTI) program is designed to attract highly skilled and internationally recognized individuals in one of the following target sectors:
- Resources
- Agri-food and AgTech
- Energy
- Health industries
- Defense, Advanced Manufacturing and Space
- Circular Economy
- DigiTech
- Infrastructure and Tourism
- Financial Services and FinTech
- Education

To be eligible, individuals must be likely to earn at least the Fair Work High Income Threshold (currently set at AUD158,500 per year) in Australia or be a high-performing recent PhD, master's or honors graduate in one of the above target sectors.

Business Innovation and Investment program. The categories in the Business Innovation and Investment program are designed for successful businesspersons who wish to manage their own business or make substantial investments in Australia. Individuals intending to apply must first file an EOI. Their business skills and other attributes are then assessed under a points test and must meet a points' test "passmark" (excluding applicants applying under the Significant Investor stream). Only applicants who are then successfully nominated by a state or territory government are invited to submit a visa application. Business Innovation and Investment visa holders enter Australia initially on a provisional (temporary) visa for five years. If they provide satisfactory evidence of a specified level of business activity for two years or investment for four years, and if they have also resided in Australia for minimum required periods on their provisional visa, they may be eligible to apply for permanent residence. This program has five main streams, including the Investor stream, the Business Innovation stream, the Significant Investor stream and the Entrepreneur stream:

Investor stream. The Investor stream is designed for investors who wish to make a designated investment of at least AUD2,500,000 that meets certain requirements in an Australian state or territory for the duration of their visa. Applicants must secure state or territory nomination, meet a points test, and provide evidence of skill and experience in managing a qualifying business or eligible investment. Applicants must have net business, investment and personal assets of at least AUD2,500,000. They must also usually be aged under 55 years old, unless the nominating state or territory government makes a special determination.

Business Innovation stream. The Business Innovation stream is designed for businesspersons seeking to own and manage a new or existing business in Australia. Applicants must file an EOI; meet the innovation points test; secure state or territory nomination; and evidence ownership, skill and experience in managing a business generating annual turnover of at least AUD750,000 in at least two of the preceding four fiscal years. Applicants must own personal and business assets of at least AUD1,250,000, and they must also usually be under 55 years old, unless the nominating state or territory government makes a special determination.

Significant Investor stream. Under the Significant Investor stream, individuals must file an EOI and receive a nomination from a state or territory government before they are eligible to apply for a visa.

Individuals must be able to invest AUD5 million into a "complying investment," for the life of their visa which consists of the following:
- At least AUD1 million in venture capital and growth private equity funds that invest in startups and small private companies
- At least AUD1,500,000 in approved managed funds investing in emerging companies listed on the Australian Securities Exchange (ASX)
- Up to AUD2,500,000 in a "balancing investment" of eligible assets that include ASX-listed companies, eligible corporate bonds or notes, and real property with a 10% limit on residential real estate

The Significant Investor visa does not use a points test or have maximum age requirements. Individuals applying for this stream may also maintain business interests overseas, and visa holders are generally required to remain in Australia for only an average of 40 days per year over a four-year period to meet the residency criterion for permanent residence.

Entrepreneur stream. The Entrepreneur stream visa is designed to attract overseas talent wishing to carry out a "complying entrepreneurial activity" in Australia. This must relate to an innovative idea that will lead either to the commercialization of a product or service in Australia, or to the development of an enterprise or business in Australia. Applicants must submit an EOI, be nominated by a state or territory government, be endorsed by that same state or territory government to develop the proposed entrepreneurial activity and also have "competent level" English. They must also usually be under 55 years old, unless the nominating state or territory government makes a special determination. Entrepreneurs who succeed in Australia may be eligible for permanent residence.

Partner program. Spouses (including de facto and same-sex spouses) of Australian citizens or Australian permanent residents may apply for permanent residence through sponsorship by their Australian spouse. In most cases, applicants are issued a two-year temporary visa that leads to the grant of permanent residence if the partner relationship is still ongoing after the two-year period.

G. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Spouses (including de facto and same-sex spouses) and dependents of temporary and permanent visa applicants are generally included in the same visa application as the primary applicant and granted a visa of the same subclass. Family members who are not included in a temporary resident's initial visa application may generally apply for a visa at a later date.

If sponsorship or nomination is a requirement for the primary applicant, spouses and dependents must be included in the sponsorship or nomination.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals who are in Australia temporarily may drive legally in Australia using their home country driver's licenses for a short period of time; however, they may need to obtain a relevant state/territory driver's license after a period of time (rules differ for the various states and territories). In most states, an individual who becomes a resident must obtain an Australian driver's license. To obtain an Australian driver's license, the applicant must take a computerized knowledge test, followed by a physical driving test.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. In principle, all individuals are subject to tax on their worldwide income if they are considered ordinarily resident in Austria. Nonresidents with an income source in Austria are subject to tax to a limited extent, but their taxes may be reduced under a double tax treaty (see Section E).

Individuals are considered ordinarily resident if they have a residence available for use in Austria or if they live in Austria for more than six months.

Each partner in a partnership must pay tax on his or her share of profits. The partnership is not subject to income tax as a separate entity.

Income subject to tax. Austrian income tax law categorizes income into the following income sources:
- Income from agriculture and forestry
- Income from dependent employment (earnings as an employee)
- Income from self-employment, including directors' fees
- Business income

- Investment income
- Rental income
- Income from other sources

Specific regulations govern the calculation of taxable income from each source. After income from each source is calculated, the amounts are aggregated.

Employment income. Employed persons are subject to income tax on remuneration and all benefits received from employment. Employment income includes the following:
- Salaries, wages, bonuses, profit participations, and other remuneration and benefits granted for services rendered in a public office or in private employment
- Pensions and other benefits received by a former employee or his or her surviving spouse or descendants, in consideration of services performed in the past

Allowances paid to foreign employees working in Austria, including, among others, foreign-service allowances and housing allowances, are considered employment income and do not receive preferential tax treatment.

Investment income. A final withholding tax at a rate of 27.5% (rate applicable from 1 January 2016) is imposed on dividends. A final withholding tax at a rate of 25% is imposed on investment income from saving deposits and current accounts derived from Austrian sources by residents. All other taxable investment income is subject to a tax at a rate of 27.5%. Expenses related to dividends and interest are not deductible. A final withholding tax applies only to interest income derived from securities offered to the general public (not to privately placed securities). Tax exemptions for interest income are available, especially for nonresidents, under domestic law.

Dividend income and interest income of residents derived from non-Austrian sources are also taxed at a special tax rate of 27.5% (rate applicable from 1 January 2016). A 25% tax applies to interest from saving deposits and current accounts. All other interest income is subject to a 27.5% tax rate (rate applicable from 1 January 2016). The Austrian tax authorities can decide to impose tax at the ordinary tax rates if the foreign company making the payments is taxed at a rate below 15%. In this case, a tax credit is granted for the taxes paid abroad.

Gains derived by residents from the sale of investments (securities, derivatives and others) that were purchased on or after 1 April 2012 are subject to tax at a rate of 27.5% (rate applicable from 1 January 2016; a 25% tax rate applies until 31 December 2015). Special transition treatment applies to gains from the sale of investments purchased or sold on or before 31 March 2012.

Royalties and rental income derived by residents are taxed as ordinary income.

Dividends paid to nonresidents are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 27.5% (rate applicable from 1 January 2016; a 25% tax rate applies until 31 December 2015). However, this rate is reduced by most of Austria's double tax treaties (see Section E). For royalties and directors' fees, the rate of withholding tax is 20%.

The withholding taxes imposed are usually final taxes.

Self-employment and business income. Individuals acting independently in their own name and at their own risk are subject to income tax on income derived from self-employment or business activities.

Business income includes income from activities performed through a commercial entity or partnership, while self-employment income primarily includes income from professional services rendered (for example, as doctors, dentists, attorneys, architects, journalists and tax consultants).

In general, all income attributable to self-employment or business, including gains from the sale of property used in a business or profession, is subject to income tax.

General or limited partnerships are not taxed as entities. The profit share of each partner is subject to tax separately. In addition, a partner's income from self-employment or business activities also includes compensation received by a partner for services rendered or for loans made to the partnership.

For nonresidents carrying on business through a permanent establishment in Austria, taxable income is computed in the same manner as for resident individuals and is taxed at the same rates.

Directors' fees. Remuneration received as a supervisory board member of a corporation is treated as income from self-employment. Companies must withhold tax at a rate of 20% on such remuneration paid to nonresidents.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Favorable taxation applies only to stock options that were granted on or before 31 March 2009. Stock options granted after that date do not benefit from favorable taxation.

EUR3,000 (from 1 January 2016; the amount was EUR1,460 until 31 December 2015) per year of the benefit derived from the grant of free shares or the purchase of shares on favorable terms may be exempt from tax if all of the following conditions are met:
- The shares must be kept on deposit with a European Community bank or other specified institution, determined by the employer and representatives of the employees.
- The shares must be retained for at least five calendar years after the year of acquisition (that is, they be neither given away nor sold).
- The employee must prove by 31 March of the following year that he or she still owns the shares by means of a deposit confirmation, which must be filed with the payroll administration of the employer.

If the above conditions are not met, the employer is required as from the year of violation to withhold tax from the benefit, unless the employee has left the company.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from sales of businesses, parts of businesses and partnership interests are taxed as ordinary income. On request, these capital gains may be distributed over three years, if at least seven years have passed since the opening or purchase of business, part of the business or partnership interest. Otherwise, the capital gains in excess of EUR7,300 are fully taxed in the current year. If the business is sold or closed because of the retirement of the owner, and at least seven years have passed since the opening or purchase of business, part of the business or partnership interest, the capital gains are taxed at half the normal rate.

Gains derived from the sale of shares in a corporation are taxed at a rate of 27.5%. Gains derived from the sale of real estate are also taxed at a rate of 27.5%.

Gains on other privately held assets, excluding securities and real estate, are not taxable if the assets are held longer than one year.

Otherwise, the gains are taxed as ordinary income. If the assets are held less than one year, the difference between the acquisition price and the sale price is taxable at the regular rates (see Rates). Losses may be set off only against other speculative gains.

Deductions. Expenditure incurred by an employee to create, protect or preserve income from employment is generally deductible. Such expenses include the following:
- Expenses connected with the maintenance of two households, which are deductible for a limited period of time, depending on individual circumstances
- Professional books and periodicals
- Membership dues paid to professional organizations, labor unions and similar bodies

A standard deduction of EUR132 for business-related expenses is granted, unless an employee proves that expenses actually paid are higher.

Amounts paid for health, old-age, unemployment and accident insurance are deductible if they are required by law.

Other items that may be claimed as deductions include church contributions, tax consulting fees and donations for specified organizations.

Nonresidents are not entitled to the same general allowances granted to residents. However, see Special rules for expatriates.

Rates. For 2021, income tax is calculated in accordance with the rules set forth below.

Income below EUR11,000 is tax-free for ordinarily resident individuals, while the income of nonresidents is tax-free up to EUR2,000.

The following are the tax rates for individuals ordinarily resident in Austria.

Taxable income EUR	Tax rate %	Tax due EUR	Cumulative tax due EUR
First 11,000	0	0	0
Next 7,000	20	1,400	1,400
Next 13,000	35	4,550	5,950
Next 29,000	42	12,180	18,130
Next 30,000	48	14,400	32,530
Next 910,000	50	455,000	487,530
Above 1,000,000	55 *	—	—

* This rate applies for 2016 through 2025.

Nonresidents are generally taxed at the same rates as resident individuals, but certain differences exist.

Special tax rates for vacation and Christmas bonus (non-regular payments). Annual salary is paid in 14 equal installments to achieve a more favorable income tax rate. Non-regular payments, such as the 13th and 14th months' salaries, are taxed at the following tax rates on the condition that they do not exceed 1/6 of the amount of the regular payments:

Amount of payments	Rate (%)
Up to EUR620	0
For the next EUR24,380	6
For the next EUR25,000	27
For the next EUR33,333	35.75
For more than EUR33,333	Ordinary income tax rate*

* The ordinary income tax rate is calculated using the general table (see above) and is based on the other taxable income.

If 1/6 of the regular payments equals EUR2,100 or less, the non-regular payments are tax-free.

Relief for losses. Income from one source generally may be offset by a loss from another source, with certain exceptions.

Taxpayers who maintain commercial books of account and derive income from agriculture, forestry, commercial business or other self-employment activities may carry forward losses incurred in 1991 and subsequent years for an unlimited time period. The amount of losses that may be set off is generally limited to the taxable income of a given tax year. Excess losses may be carried forward.

Special rules for expatriates. Expatriates are taxed in the same way as other resident and nonresident individuals. Nationality does not have an impact on income taxation. However, some simplifications are allowed if the following conditions apply:

- The expatriate must be an individual who has not had a residence in Austria during the past 10 years and who is transferred from his or her foreign employer to an Austrian employer (subsidiary or permanent establishment of the foreign employer in Austria).
- The expatriate must have an employment contract with the employer's Austrian subsidiary or permanent establishment.

- The expatriate must maintain his or her primary residence abroad, and the assignment may not exceed five years. Effective from 1 January 2016, a contractual option for prolongation after the five-year period prevents the application of the expatriate regime.

The rules regarding the simplifications for expatriates are modified, effective from 1 January 2016. If the above conditions are met and if the employee meets certain reporting requirements, effective from January 2016, the employer can consider one lump-sum deduction of 20% of the tax base, up to a maximum of EUR10,000, per year per employee in the calculation of the expatriate's monthly withholding tax instead of the deductions for double housing, home leave and extraordinary expenses, which applied under the prior rules.

If no expenses were deducted by the employer, and if an expatriate has additional expenses or extraordinary expenses, he or she may file an income tax return on a voluntary basis.

B. Other taxes

Net worth tax. Net worth tax is not levied in Austria.

Inheritance and gift taxes. The inheritance and gift taxes were eliminated, effective from 1 August 2008.

To prevent double taxation, Austria has entered into inheritance tax treaties with the Czech Republic, France, Hungary, Liechtenstein, the Netherlands, Poland, Sweden, Switzerland and the United States. The inheritance tax treaty with Germany has been terminated.

C. Social security and other contributions

Elements of social security. Social security taxes consist of the following elements:
- Old-age pension
- Unemployment insurance
- Health insurance
- Insolvency guarantee
- Accident insurance

Social security contributions are required for all employees, unless they are exempt under the European Union (EU) regulations or a totalization agreement.

Contributions. Social security payments on wages or salaries must be made by employers and employees at the following rates for 2019.

	Employee's share %	Employer's share %	Total %
Pension insurance	10.25	12.55	22.80
Accident insurance	0	1.20	1.20
Health insurance	3.87	3.78	7.65
Unemployment insurance	3.00	3.00	6.00
Accommodation promotion contribution	0.50	0.50	1.00
Chamber contribution	0.50	0	0.50
Insolvency guarantee funds contributions	0	0.20	0.20

The maximum wage base for monthly contributions for each employee is EUR5,550 (amount for 2021). In addition, social security is levied on special payments (13th and 14th salaries, or bonus), up to a ceiling of EUR11,100 (amount for 2021). The maximum social security contributions for 2021 are set forth in the following table.

	Regular salary %	13th and 14th months' salary %	Maximum annual contribution EUR
For wage earners
Employer's share*	21.23	20.73	16,440.21
Employee's share*	18.12	17.12	13,968.24
For salary earners
Employer's share	21.23	20.73	16,440.21
Employee's share	18.12	17.12	13,968.24

* This amount does not take into consideration the special bad weather contribution for workers in the construction industry and agriculture. Each employer and employee must make such contribution at a rate of 0.7%.

Employers must also pay the contributions described in the following four paragraphs.

A contribution to the severance pay fund is required for employees covered by the Austrian labor law. The rate is 1.53% without ceiling.

A contribution to the family burden fund is payable for employees covered by the Austrian social security system and for employees from non-EU jurisdictions. The rate is 3.9% without ceiling.

A 3% community tax is payable without ceiling.

A company that is a member of the chamber of commerce must pay a contribution at a rate ranging from 0.34% to 0.42% (without ceiling).

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security contributions and to ensure benefit coverage, Austria has entered into totalization agreements with certain jurisdictions. The agreements usually apply to foreigners living in Austria and to Austrians living abroad for a maximum of two years. Austria has entered into totalization agreements with the following jurisdictions.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Austria is the calendar year. Tax returns generally must be filed by the end of April. However, a return filed electronically must be filed by the end of June. An extension is available if the return is prepared by a tax advisor.

Salaries and wages of employees are subject to withholding tax. Taxpayers other than employees must make advance payments of income tax in quarterly installments on 15 February, 15 May, 15 August and 15 November.

Interest is levied on final payments as assessed by the tax authorities if the assessed liability is paid after 30 September. A taxpayer may avoid interest by paying the expected income tax liability as advance payments.

Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Resident individuals are generally taxed in Austria on their worldwide income. However, if tax is imposed in the other country at a tax rate of more than 15%, certain elements of taxable income are excluded from the Austrian tax computation for resident individuals. Otherwise, Austria grants a foreign tax credit against Austrian taxes.

Austria has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Albania	Hungary	Philippines

F. Temporary visas

Austria joined the European Economic Area (EEA) on 1 January 1994, and has been a member of the EU since 1 January 1995; therefore, the treatment of citizens of EEA and EU member countries with respect to immigration matters differs from the treatment of citizens of non-member jurisdictions.

Non-EU and non-EEA nationals. Non-EU and non-EEA nationals who wish to visit Austria for periods of up to three months and who do not intend to engage in remunerated activities are permitted to enter the country with a valid passport and, in certain cases depending on the citizenship of the foreigner, a visa. Visas are obtainable at all Austrian embassies and must be applied for abroad. In all cases, registration with the local police department is required within three days after arrival in Austria.

As tourists, non-EU and non-EEA nationals may stay in Austria for up to six months per year; however, a single stay may not exceed three months. If these nationals wish to stay longer, they must apply for residence permits.

G. Work permits and self-employment

EU and EEA nationals. EU and EEA nationals do not need work permits to work in Austria.

Reporting Obligation to the Central Coordination Department with the Ministry of Finance notification. For an employee posted to Austria for work purposes from an EU/EEA member country, the employer must make the Reporting Obligation to the Central Coordination Department with the Ministry of Finance (Meldeverpflichtung an die Zentrale Koordinationsstelle des Bundesministeriums für Finanzen, or ZKO), regardless of the length of the period of work performance in Austria. Accordingly, under Austria law, the notification must be made even if the work performance is for one day.

The ZKO notification can be easily submitted online. The deadline for submitting the notification is at least one day before the actual start of activity in Austria.

The ZKO notification must contain information on the employer and the Austrian contractor, the period of assignment and place of work, information regarding the job title, and the monthly salary of the assignee. The minimum wage must be in line with the minimum requirements (minimum pay and other working conditions) of the notional applicable Austrian Collective Agreement for the respective business sector. In addition, the Austrian labor law provides that in case of an audit, assignment-related documents such as the employment and assignment contract, salary statements, time sheets, and certificate of coverage A1 (form used within the EU, which is an application to remain in the employee's home-country social security system) must be available, generally in the English or German language, at the place of work in Austria.

The ZKO notification is a reporting obligation when posting EU/EEA nationals to Austria and is not the same as an Austrian work permit. If a third-country national is posted to Austria from an EU/EEA country, it is necessary to obtain work permit documents in advance to legally work in Austria.

Non-EU and non-EEA nationals. Non-EU and non-EEA nationals may be employed in Austria only if the employer obtains a work permit for this purpose.

British nationals who lived in Austria before the end of the transition period (until 31 December 2020) can continue to live and work in Austria and are protected by the Withdrawal Agreement. They must apply for a residence permit (according to Article 50 of the Treaty of the EU). Applications can be submitted until December 2021. For UK nationals who will start employment in Austria or move to Austria after 31 December 2020, the same rules as those applicable to third-country nationals apply. They must apply for an appropriate work permit and residence permit.

The granting of work permits to non-EU or non-EEA nationals is governed by the Employment of Foreigners Act. Applications must be filed by the prospective employer with the competent immigration authorities and will be reviewed by the local labor authority (Arbeitsmarktservice), which grants a permit based on several requirements, including the following:

- Similar remuneration and working conditions for foreign and Austrian employees must be ensured.
- Notice of job opportunities must be given to Austrian employees before a foreign employee is hired (this is not required in the case of highly qualified foreign applicants).

An employer who wishes to recruit foreign employees abroad must apply for an individual assurance certificate (Sicherungsbescheinigung), which indicates the employees or the number of employees for which work permits are prospective. The individual assurance certificate is therefore only granted if the conditions for the issuance of a work permit (and to a certain extent, a residence permit) are generally fulfilled. Accordingly, the requirements for the work (and residence) permit are examined at this early stage of the permit procedure.

After the employer obtains an individual assurance certificate, the alien must apply for a residence permit (see Section H). A residence permit allows a foreigner to enter Austria. However, before the foreigner may work, the Austrian employer must apply for a work permit with the competent employment authority. A work permit is usually issued if an individual assurance certificate has been granted.

Work permits are not transferable and are usually granted for two years with the possibility of renewal. They refer to a particular workplace in a particular company and therefore expire on the termination of employment.

Under the Employment of Foreigners Act, a work permit is granted if "the actual situation and the development of the employment environment allow for the employment of a foreigner, and the grant of the work permit is not in opposition to important public or economic interests."

Austria has introduced a flexible immigration scheme, known as the Red-White-Red Card. It aims to facilitate the immigration of qualified third-country workers and their families with a view to permanent settlement in Austria, based on personal and labor-market criteria.

The Red-White-Red Card is issued for a period of 24 months and entitles the holder to fixed-term settlement and employment by a specified employer. The following persons are eligible for a Red-White-Red Card:
- Very highly qualified workers
- Skilled workers in shortage occupations
- Other key workers
- Graduates of Austrian universities and colleges of higher education

The Red-White-Red Card plus entitles the holder to fixed-term settlement and unlimited labor market access. The following persons are eligible for a Red-White-Red Card plus:
- Holders of a Red-White-Red Card if they were employed in accordance with the requirements decisive for admission for a minimum of 21 months within the preceding 24 months
- Family members of Red-White-Red Card holders and holders of EU Blue Cards
- Family members of foreign citizens permanently settled in Austria

For purposes of the above scheme, family members are defined as the following:
- Spouses
- Registered partners
- Minor children, including adopted children and stepchildren (up to the age of 18)

At the time of filing the application, spouses and registered partners must be at least 21 years of age.

The EU Blue Card is a residence permit for highly skilled university graduates who are third-country nationals. First-time applications must be submitted to the Austrian diplomatic representation abroad or by the potential Austrian employer on behalf of the applicant directly in Austria. Persons who are eligible for visa-free entry can submit the application in person to the immigration office in Austria during the validity period of their visa. The following are significant aspects of the EU Blue Card:
- Proof of German language skills before coming to Austria and completion of Module I are not required. To receive an Austrian residence permit, third-country nationals must complete Module I. It is proof that the third-country national has more than basic German language skills.
- The EU Blue Card can be issued with a validity period of 24 months.

- Free labor market access is available in case of an extension.
- Permanent leave to remain can be obtained more quickly, and mobility in the EU is facilitated (EU Blue Cards from other EU member states can be considered).
- Quota-free family reunification (Red-White-Red Card plus) is available.

A non-EU or non-EEA employee who already has a work or employment permit in another EU member state and who works for an employer based in an EU member state must obtain an EU-sending certification (EU-Entsendebestätigung) to work in Austria. These certifications must be issued by the competent authority within two weeks after application. The EU-sending certifications are not subject to investigation by the employment authorities with respect to the Austrian labor market.

Sanctions are imposed on companies that hire employees without the correct visas and permits. These sanctions usually consist of fines ranging from approximately EUR1,000 to EUR20,000 per worker. In the case of several violations within one organization or recurring violations, fines may be as much as EUR50,000 per worker.

The Intra-corporate Transfer Directive governs intra-corporate transfers of high-level third-country employees (namely managers, specialists with crucial expert knowledge for an affiliated subsidiary or a trainee with a high school diploma) from a third-country company to an EU affiliate or employees with an existing intra-corporate transferee (ICT) title from another member state to Austria.

ICTs are eligible for a residence permit called the Residence Permit for ICTs if the legal requirements are met. The transferee receives this residence permit, which is issued for no longer than three years or, for trainees, for no longer than one year.

The application process is similar to the "Red-White-Red-Card" model.

If the respective employee already holds an ICT title from another EU country, he or she is entitled to stay and work in Austria for up to 3 months (90 days) without any further application process (however, an up-front reporting obligation similar to the existing EU Posting of Workers Certificate [Entsendebestätigung] procedure applies).

If the work duration exceeds 3 months (90 days) and the applicant holds an ICT title from an EU country, an application for a Residence Permit for Intra-corporate Transferees must be filed 20 days before the estimated start date in Austria.

Self-employment. For most professions, self-employment requires a certificate of qualification. The extent to which foreign qualifications are accepted depends on the particular case. It may be possible to avoid certain restrictions by carefully choosing the form of legal entity used for the business.

Special rules apply to self-employed key persons.

H. Residence permits

EU and EEA nationals. No special documents are necessary for EU and EEA nationals who wish to stay in Austria for longer periods. EU and EEA nationals must prove, however, that they have sufficient funds to support themselves while in the country. In addition, visitors must have health insurance. Further registration is required for EU and EEA nationals if the stay exceeds three months.

Non-EU and non-EEA nationals. Non-EU and non-EEA nationals who plan to stay in Austria for longer than six months must apply for a permanent residence permit (Niederlassungsbewilligung) or, to work in Austria without changing their permanent residence to Austria, a residence authorization (Aufenthaltserlaubnis). Permanent residence permits are usually granted for one year (up to 24 months for persons who hold an EU Blue Card) and may be renewed for a two-year period. After five years, the permanent residence permit is granted indefinitely.

Depending on the nationality of the non-EU and non-EEA national, a first-time applicant may apply for residence permits outside Austria at any Austrian embassy or he or she may apply in Austria. Swiss citizens may generally reside in Austria without a residence permit.

Residence authorizations are available to non-EU and non-EEA nationals who prove that they are registered at Austrian universities and who have a certain minimum income. The permits are valid for six months or one year and may be extended.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Working spouses of expatriates must apply independently for their own work permits. The family members of non-EU and non-EEA expatriates must obtain separate residence permits to reside in Austria. The children of non-EU and non-EEA expatriates must obtain student visas to attend school in Austria.

Driver's permits

EU and EEA nationals. A driver's license issued by the authorities of any EU or EEA country is recognized on an equal basis with an Austrian driver's license.

Non-EU and non-EEA nationals. The validity of a foreign driver's license held by an individual without established principal residence in Austria generally is limited to one year. Individuals with a residence in Austria must change their driver's license to an Austrian driver's license within six months.

An Austrian driver's license may be obtained by presenting a foreign license if all of the following requirements are met:
- The applicant has stayed or has established a principal residence in the country of issuance of the driver's license for a minimum of six months.
- The applicant has moved his or her principal residence to Austria.
- The applicant has been residing in Austria for no longer than 24 months since the establishment of principal residence in Austria.

- No objections are raised with respect to the individual's driving record and no health obstacles exist that might hinder the person's driving ability (as defined by law).
- The applicant's driving qualifications are proved by a practical driving test or the issuance of the foreign driver's license was subject to requirements similar to those in Austria.

The Ministry of Transportation has identified jurisdictions with processes similar to those of Austria for the issuance of various classes of licenses. The following jurisdictions have similar requirements for the issuance of all classes of licenses.

Andorra
Guernsey
Isle of Man
Japan
Jersey
Monaco
San Marino
Switzerland

The following jurisdictions have similar requirements for the issuance of B-class licenses.

Australia
Bosnia and Herzegovina
Canada
Hong Kong SAR
Israel
Korea (South)*
North Macedonia
Serbia
South Africa
United Arab Emirates
United States

* Only for licenses issued as of 1 January 1997.

The exchange rate is AZN1.7 = USD1.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are taxed on worldwide income. Non-residents are taxed on Azerbaijani-source income only.

For tax purposes, individuals are considered resident if they are present in the country for 183 days or more in a calendar year.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Taxable income from employment consists of all compensation, whether received in cash or in kind, subject to certain minor exceptions as discussed below.

Income received in foreign currency is translated into Azerbaijani manats (AZN) at the official exchange rate of the Central Bank of Azerbaijan on the date the income is received.

Education allowances provided by employers to their employees' children aged 18 years and younger are taxable for income tax and social security purposes.

Self-employment income. Tax is levied on an individual's annual self-employment income, which consists of gross income less expenses incurred in earning the income.

Non-employment income. Interest on securities and deposits, copyrights, royalties and rental income are taxable.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from the sale of most movable tangible property that is not used for business purposes are exempt from tax in Azerbaijan.

Deductions

Income exclusions. The following specific tax exemptions apply for resident and nonresident individuals:

- The cost of renting accommodations in Azerbaijan if paid or reimbursed by the employer
- Food expenses paid or reimbursed by the employer
- Expenses paid or reimbursed by the employer for business trips

Personal allowances. The monthly taxable income of individuals with three or more dependents, including students under the age of 23, is reduced by AZN50.

Business deductions. Deductible business expenses include expenditure for materials, amortization deductions, lease payments, wages, state social security payments, payments for therapeutic nourishment, milk and similar products provided to employees (deductible within the established limits), payments of interest and expenses for repairs to capital production assets.

Rates. The following tax rates apply to an individual's monthly taxable income earned from employment activities in the oil and gas and public sectors.

Monthly taxable income AZN	Tax rate %	Tax due AZN	Cumulative tax due AZN

Individuals whose monthly gross salary is less than AZN2,500 are exempt from tax on AZN200 of their monthly salary.

Individuals engaged in employment activities in the non-oil and gas and nonpublic sectors are subject to the following tax rates, effective from 1 January 2019, for a period of seven years.

Above 8,000	14	—	—

An individual's taxable income earned from non-entrepreneurial activities (includes specific items, such as dividends, interest, royalties and gains received on the disposal of assets that are not used for entrepreneurial activities) is subject to a 14% personal income tax.

The taxable income of an individual who conducts entrepreneurial activities without creating a legal entity is subject to tax at a flat rate of 20%.

Relief for losses. Individuals may carry forward losses for up to three years if they are related to entrepreneurial activities.

B. Other taxes

Estate and gift tax. Azerbaijan does not levy estate or gift tax.

The value of gifts and/or material assistance for education and medical treatment up to a limit of AZN1,000 is exempt from income tax, while the value of material assistance for medical treatment abroad is exempt up to a limit of AZN2,000. The value of an inheritance up to a limit of AZN20,000 is exempt from income tax. Gifts, material assistance and inheritances received from family members are exempt from income tax without limit.

Property tax. Azerbaijan levies an annual property tax on each square meter of building area. The following table provides the property tax rates for residential and nonresidential premises that are privately owned by individuals.

Areas	Amount of tax per square meter (AZN)
Baku	0.4*
Gyanja, Sumgait cities and Absheron region	0.3
Other cities (except for regional subordination towns) and regional centers	0.2
Cities, towns and villages of regional subordination (except for settlements and villages of Baku, Sumgait cities and Absheron region)	0.1

* For buildings located in Baku, a coefficient of at least 0.7 and not more than 1.5 must be applied to the rate.

C. Social security

Employers engaged in the oil and gas and public sectors must make social insurance contributions at a rate of 22% of employees' gross salary to the Social Protection Fund. In addition, 3% is withheld from the employee's salary and is payable to the Social Protection Fund.

Social insurance contribution rates for individuals engaged in employment activities in non-oil and gas and nonpublic sectors are calculated differently from the above, effective from 1 January 2019, for a period of seven years. For individuals whose gross taxable monthly income is above AZN200, 10% of the amount exceeding AZN200 plus AZN6 should be withheld from the employee and 15% of the amount exceeding AZN200 plus AZN44 should be paid by the employer.

In addition, unemployment insurance contributions are due on the employment income of individuals holding local employment agreements. For such individuals, employers must make a payment of unemployment insurance contributions at a rate of 0.5% of employees' gross salary, withhold 0.5% from their salary and pay the total amount (1% of gross salary) to the Unemployment Fund.

Under amendments introduced to the Law on Medical Insurance, effective from 1 January 2021, medical insurance contributions at 2% of salary up to AZN8,000 and 0.5% of the part above AZN8,000 must be withheld from salaries of employees. A 50% discount is applied to medical insurance fees paid from gross salary up to AZN8,000 in non-oil and gas and private sectors until 1 January 2022.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year is the calendar year.

Employers in Azerbaijan (Azerbaijani entities, joint ventures and foreign representative offices) must withhold tax from the salaries of resident and nonresident employees paid in Azerbaijan. Withholding is required regardless of whether payments are made in manats or in foreign currency. The tax filing period is the calendar quarter.

Resident and nonresident individuals are not required to file tax returns if they receive income from employment and do not have income from other sources.

Resident and nonresident individuals engaged in self-employment in Azerbaijan must comply with the following filing and payment requirements:

- They must pay estimated taxes of one-fourth of the tax paid for the prior tax year or tax on actual income for the quarter, as measured at the effective tax rate for the prior year, due in four equal installments by 15 April, 15 July, 15 October and 15 January.
- They must submit an annual tax return no later than 31 March of the year following the reporting year.
- They must submit a final tax return within 30 days following the end of activities in Azerbaijan.

The final tax due for the year is determined from the final tax return after it is filed with the tax authorities. However, the final tax must be paid by the deadline for filing the final tax return.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Foreign taxes paid by residents on foreign-source income may be credited against Azeri tax, but the credit may not exceed the amount of the Azeri tax payable on the same income. To obtain relief, the taxpayer must present the appropriate form from the tax authorities of the foreign state verifying that tax has been paid in that country.

According to information provided on the official site of the Ministry of Taxes, double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions are effective in Azerbaijan.

Austria	Israel	Romania
Belarus	Italy	Russian Federation
Belgium	Japan	San Marino
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Jordan	Saudi Arabia
Bulgaria	Kazakhstan	Serbia
Canada	Korea (South)	Slovenia
China Mainland	Kuwait	Spain*
Croatia	Latvia	Sweden
Czech Republic	Lithuania	Switzerland
Denmark	Luxembourg	Tajikistan
Estonia	Malta	Turkey
Finland	Moldova	Turkmenistan
France	Montenegro	Ukraine
Georgia	Netherlands	United Arab Emirates
Germany	North Macedonia	United Kingdom
Greece	Norway	Uzbekistan
Hungary	Pakistan	Vietnam
Iran	Poland
	Qatar

* This treaty is effective from 1 January 2020.

F. Visas

Foreigners who want to visit Azerbaijan and who are from countries with which Azerbaijan has a visa regime should obtain entry visas from the respective embassy or consulate of Azerbaijan. In general, entry visas are granted to foreign individuals for entry into the country. Under recent changes to the migration legislation, several types of entry visas are available. These visas are based on the purpose of the visit and include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Visa for business trip purposes
- Visa for labor activity conduction purposes
- Tourist visa
- Visa for official visit
- Visa for personal visit
- Transit visa
- Visa for medical treatment
- Science or education visa
- Visa for cultural and sports events

Visas are divided into single and multiple entries with the validity period of stay ranging from one month for single-entry visas to 180 days for multiple-entry visas.

To obtain a visa from the diplomatic representations, embassies and consulates of Azerbaijan abroad or from the Consular Department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Azerbaijan, applicants must present the following items:
- Letter of invitation provided by a legal entity registered in Azerbaijan that is approved and certified by the Consular Department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Azerbaijan before its submission to the respective Azerbaijan embassy (this is not required in the case of obtaining a transit visa, a tourist visa, a visa for official visit, a medical treatment visa or a visa for personal visit)
- A completed application
- Passport-size photographs
- A passport
- Document confirming reason of invitation (this is not required in the case of obtaining a transit visa, a tourist visa or a visa for personal visit)
- Copy of medical insurance
- Applicable fee
- Additional document required depending on the trip purposes

The following are two exceptions:
- Citizens of certain countries under several international agreements to which Azerbaijan is a party can obtain the visa on arrival at international airports by submitting a set of documents to state officials.
- Citizens of countries that have direct airline relations with Azerbaijan but do not have embassies and accredited consulates of Azerbaijan can apply for visas on arrival at international airports by submitting a set of documents to state officials.

Electronic application forms for obtaining Azerbaijani visas may be used.

In addition, permits for staying in Azerbaijan temporarily or permanently are obtained through the "one window" principle or through the migration online system, which is designed to ease the application process. Under the "one window" principle, all documents necessary for the registration of expatriates in Azerbaijan or for the obtaining of work permits for them are submitted to one state body (State Migration Service), which, in turn, coordinates the work with other state authorities and issues identification cards and work permits for expatriates.

The "one window" principle is likewise used to register expatriates who have already been granted permits for staying in Azerbaijan temporarily or permanently and to obtain special identifications for them.

Citizens of countries that have a non-visa regime with Azerbaijan, such as the Russian Federation, do not need a visa to enter Azerbaijan.

G. Work permits

Expatriates must obtain a work permit to work in Azerbaijan. Work permits are obtained through the "one window" principle or the migration online system (see Section F).

H. Family and personal considerations

Vaccinations. Although no vaccinations are required, a vaccination for malaria is recommended. Malaria is not a threat in Baku, but it exists in other regions of the country.

In addition, as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, passengers over 18 years of age arriving in the country by air transport must provide a COVID-19 passport (a document confirming full vaccination against COVID-19) and a medical certificate confirming a negative COVID-19 polymerase chain reaction (PCR) test result issued at most 72 hours before the flight.

Driver's permits. A foreign national may drive legally using his or her home country driver's license if the license is legally translated into Azerbaijani and notarized. Azerbaijan has driver's license reciprocity with other CIS countries.

A. Income tax

Income is not taxed in the Bahamas.

B. Other taxes

Capital gains. No tax is levied on capital gains.

Stamp duty. Transfers of real property are subject to a stamp duty of 2.5% if realty is valued under BSD100,000 and 10% if the value exceeds BSD100,000. Although stamp duty typically applies to real estate transactions, it can also apply to other financial and commercial transactions.

Value-added tax. The Bahamas imposes value-added tax (VAT) on the purchase of various consumer goods and services. The VAT rate is 12%. Specific items that are subject to VAT can be found on the Bahamas Government website.

Business license fee. Business license fees are payable by any person conducting or "carrying on" business in the Bahamas. The rate ranges from a flat fee of BSD100 to 1.25% based on turnover. The license year is the calendar year. For businesses that do not need an annual business license, options, such as the Occasional Business License and Temporary Business License, are available.

On 30 May 2019, the government released the budget communication, which proposes changes to the current tax regime. At the time of writing, such tax changes had not taken effect.

C. Social security

All employees and employers must contribute to the social security (national insurance) scheme. Contribution rates are based on the amount of weekly or monthly wages. Effective from 1 July 2020, the ceiling increased to BSD710 weekly, BSD3,077 monthly or BSD36,924 annually. The total contribution rate is 9.8% of the employees' wages, of which 3.9% is withheld from the employee and 5.9% is paid by the employer.

D. Tax treaties

The Bahamas has not entered into any double tax treaties. The Bahamas has entered into Tax Information Exchange Agreements with several countries, including, but not limited to, Canada, Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States.

E. Temporary visas

To enter the Bahamas, visitors from countries other than the United States or Canada must hold a passport that is valid for six months beyond the dates of travel and/or a valid Bahamas visa. All visitors entering the Bahamas must have return or onward tickets. If visitors intend to stay for more than a few days, they may be asked to provide evidence of financial support.

Visas are required for all foreign nationals entering the Bahamas except the following:

- British Commonwealth citizens and landed immigrants of Canada for visits not exceeding 30 days, if they possess Form 100
- US citizens (including those from Hawaii) entering as bona fide visitors for less than eight months
- US residents (non-citizens) for visits of up to 30 days
- Citizens of the following countries who have valid passports for stays up to the stated periods:
  - Eight months: Belgium, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, San Marino, Spain, Switzerland and Turkey
  - Three months: Austria, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Ireland, Israel, Japan, South Africa and Sweden
  - Fourteen days: Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay and Venezuela

Citizens of all other countries require both a valid passport and visa to enter the Bahamas.

F. Work permits

The right of expatriates to work in the Bahamas is restricted and regulated by the Bahamas Government through the Department of Immigration. The government attempts to ensure that immigrants do not create unfair employment competition for Bahamians. An expatriate may not be offered a position for which a suitably qualified Bahamian is available.

No quota system exists for work permits. A work permit application is not considered if the employee is already in the Bahamas as a visitor.

The Department of Immigration considers the employment of a non-Bahamian if the prospective employee would be an asset to the Bahamas, and if the following conditions are met:

- The employer has advertised and interviewed locally and has found no suitable Bahamian to fill the position.

- The employer has obtained a vacancy certificate stating that no qualified Bahamian is registered who might fill the position.

Normally, it is the employer's responsibility to submit the work permit application for the prospective employee. This includes all necessary documentation, along with a copy of the local job advertisement, the results of interviews with local applicants and a vacancy certificate. Employment may commence only after the work permit is approved and the fee is paid.

Cost of work permits. The annual fee for a work permit ranges from BSD2,000 for farm workers to BSD15,500 for senior professionals, such as executives. The fee is payable on the granting of the work permit.

Duration of initial work permit and renewals. A work permit is usually issued for one year, but may be issued for a longer period for certain key positions under contract. Contracts should indicate that renewal is subject to obtaining immigration permission. Many employment contracts stipulate that the employee is expected to train or be replaced by a suitable Bahamian within a stipulated period of time.

The renewal of a work permit on expiration is not automatic. Application for renewal must be made, and generally permits are not renewed for expatriates who have been employed in the same capacity for more than five years. However, the government exercises some flexibility with respect to this policy and considers various mitigating circumstances.

The Bahamas does not issue permanent work permits, but does issue permanent residence permits that grant the right to work. For further details, see Section G.

Other important stipulations. Work permits are issued for a specific position only. Changes in position within an organization require the issuance of a new work permit, which is subject to the same conditions stated above.

An employer must inform the Department of Immigration within 30 days if an international employee is no longer employed. An expatriate who ceases to be employed must take his or her work permit to the department for cancellation within seven days after ceasing employment.

For each expatriate work permit issued, employers must post a bond to repatriate the employee and his or her dependents, if necessary, and to pay any public charges incurred by the employee.

Due to the complexity of the employment confirmation process, it is recommended that employers submit all applications three to four months in advance of the desired start of employment.

G. Residence permits

Temporary residence. Individuals making the Bahamas their temporary home may apply for annual residence permits. The annual cost of this permit is BSD2,000 for the head of a household and BSD100 for a spouse and each dependent. A person attending an institute of higher education in the Bahamas must pay BSD100 per year for an annual residence permit. Holders of annual residence permits may not work in the Bahamas under any circumstances.

Overseas investors who acquire residential property in the Bahamas are eligible for Home Owners' Residence Cards, which are renewable annually. The annual cost of the card is BSD500. The card facilitates entry into the Bahamas and entitles the owner, spouse and minor children to remain in the Bahamas for the period covered by the card. This card is most appropriate for seasonal residents. Holders of the card may seek local employment.

Permanent residence. Permanent residence with the right to work is typically reserved for spouses of Bahamians or overseas individuals who can demonstrate strong financial and family ties to the Bahamas.

Male spouses of Bahamians may apply for permanent residence after five years of marriage. Females married to Bahamians may apply any time after marriage. The cost of a certificate of permanent residence for the spouse of a Bahamian is BSD1,000.

A permanent residence permit without the right to work may be suitable for foreign nationals who wish to reside in the Bahamas permanently. The one-time cost of a permanent residence permit ranges from BSD1,000 to BSD15,000 for the head of a household, depending on the length of prior residency in the Bahamas. This type of permit is suitable for retirees who plan to spend most of their time in the Bahamas or for persons who will not be conducting business in the Bahamas. Applicants must provide evidence of adequate financial support, and character and financial references. The Bahamas Government gives accelerated consideration to owners of Bahamian residences valued at BSD500,000 or more.

Foreign nationals holding permanent residence certificates may have their spouses and dependent children under 18 years of age endorsed on the certificate at the time of the original application or at a subsequent date.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Spouses and dependents of expatriates holding valid work permits should apply for annual residence permits as outlined in Section G.

Driver's permits. Visitors to the Bahamas may drive legally using their home country driver's licenses for up to three months. However, holders of work permits must have Bahamian driver's licenses when they start to work.

Drivers holding valid licenses issued outside the Bahamas may present the license and receive a Bahamian license for BSD20 without completing verbal or written examinations. First-time drivers must take verbal and driving examinations.

At the time of writing, the exchange rate between the Bahraini dinar and the US dollar was BHD0.376 = USD1.

A. Income tax

No income taxes are currently imposed on individuals in Bahrain.

B. Other taxes

Except for tax imposed on companies involved in earning income from qualified oil and hydrocarbon activities, Bahrain levies no taxes on corporate income, capital gains, sales, estates, interest, dividends, royalties or fees. No withholding tax is imposed in Bahrain. Value-added tax is imposed at a rate of 10%.

C. Social security

The following social security contributions are payable on basic salary and recurring constant allowances on a monthly basis.

Contribution	Rate (%)
For Bahrainis
Social insurance contributions (pension fund)
Employer's contribution (including insurance against employment injuries)	12
Employee's contribution	6
Unemployment insurance; paid by employee	1
For expatriates
Insurance against employment injuries
Paid by employer	3
Paid by employee	1

The above rates apply up to an income ceiling of BHD4,000 per month. If the salary exceeds BHD4,000 per month, the actual salary is registered in the Social Insurance Organization of Bahrain (SIO) records while the contribution is calculated based on a maximum salary amounting to BHD4,000.

The Ministry of Health charges an annual health insurance fee of BHD22.5 for each Bahraini employee. The fee is paid to the Ministry of Health through the SIO. If the employer already provides medical or health insurance to employees, the health insurance fee need not be paid. The employer may approach the Ministry of Health and obtain an exemption letter and present it to the SIO.

D. Visas

Nationals of the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) member countries should not require visas to visit Bahrain except Qatari nationals until further notice.

Business visas. Since 2020, business visas issued online or at the Nationality Passport and Residence Affairs headquarters are valid for up to three months from the time of the issuance of the visas. The visa is valid for multiple entries, one month from the time of the first entry with two weeks of stay to be spent in Bahrain on one visit, which can be extended for another two weeks with a maximum of three extensions allowed.

Visas on arrival. The Bahraini government has recently made changes to the visa on arrival procedures. Effective from 4 September 2020, Bahrain reintroduced visas on arrival across its entry points; nationals of 69 countries are eligible for a visa on arrival in Bahrain. The visa on arrival is extended to nationals of certain European countries as well as to certain South and Central American countries. Visitors from an additional 113 countries may apply for e-visas through a simple online process before traveling. Non-nationals with GCC residency and a designation of manager or above can obtain a visa on arrival at Bahrain Airport.

The cost and duration of visas on arrival and e-visas vary depending on the traveler's nationality. Since April 2015, visitors applying for an e-visa or who obtain a visa on arrival are issued multiple-entry visas typically for a duration of two weeks (renewable up to three months). Certain privileged rules apply to passport holders from Canada, Ireland, the United Kingdom and the United States.

To avoid inconvenience, it is suggested that visitors always check with the nearest Bahraini embassy or seek professional advice before traveling to Bahrain. To check eligibility and to apply for the above visas, please visit http://www.evisa.gov.bh/.

E. Work and residence permits

To work in Bahrain, all expatriates must have a valid work permit. To be allotted work visas, an entity that employs expatriates must satisfy the following conditions:
- It must be established in Bahrain.
- It must be registered with the Labor Market Regulatory Authority (LMRA).
- It must have a certain percentage of Bahraini workers (between 5% and 50%, depending on the industry).

The following documents are normally required to apply for a work visa:

- Copy of passport (validity of a minimum of six months)
- Pre-employment medical certificate as per the LMRA guidelines, showing that the employee is fit to work
- Gulf Approved Medical Centers Association (GAMCA)/Non-GAMCA form with photo affixed
- Copy of full medical reports
- Signed offer letter or contract written bilingually (English and Arabic)
- Copy of apostilled diploma or qualifications (if the job title requires a pre-approval from the relevant authorities [for example, Council for Regulating the Practice of Engineering Professions])
- Copy of apostilled marriage certificate (if applicable)
- Copy of Bahraini identification card (CPR card), if any

The LMRA can take up to 4 to 5 weeks to process the visa application because of the labor market testing (postponement of 21 days) for an outside applicant application and 2 to 3 weeks for an in-country application. After processing, the LMRA publishes the visa status online. Each applicant is allocated an application identification, and the visa status can be checked online through the LMRA website.

Before the employer proceeds with the visa application, it is suggested that the employee inform the future employer as to whether he or she previously worked in Bahrain. This ensures that he or she is not given a duplicate personal identification card (Smartcard). In addition, the employee should inform the employer as to whether he or she holds a current valid Bahraini visa, such as a multiple re-entry business visa. To avoid the disruption of the application process, it is suggested that the prospective employee not enter Bahrain before the visa is finalized.

After the employee enters the country, another medical exam needs to be carried out to confirm that the employee is fit to work. On completing all the above and providing proof of an address in Bahrain, an expatriate employee can obtain the Smartcard.

F. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The employee must obtain the Bahrain work permit (which also serves as the employee's residence permit) before the employee's family members can obtain Bahrain residence permits.

The following documents and information are required for a family visa (that is, Bahrain residence permit):

- Copy of employee's passport with valid Bahraini residence permit stamp
- Copy of the identification pages of the family member(s) passport(s)
- Copy of the apostilled marriage certificate for the spouse
- Copy of the apostilled birth certificate for each child (children must be under 18 years of age)

After the residence permit is issued, each family member must obtain the CPR card.

Each family member must provide the following documents to obtain the CPR card:
- Original passport
- One passport-size photograph with grey background
- Apostilled marriage certificate for spouse and apostilled birth certificate for the children
- Copy of electricity bill or letter from the local area municipality confirming the address

Driver's permits. Bahrain has driver's license reciprocity with all GCC member countries.

A Bahraini driver's license can be obtained from the General Directorate of Traffic. In addition, citizens of certain countries can exchange their home countries' driver's licenses for Bahraini-issued driver's licenses without taking the driving evaluation tests.

A. Income tax

Who is liable

Territoriality. An individual resident and domiciled in Barbados for tax purposes is subject to income tax on worldwide income, regardless of whether the income is remitted to Barbados. Residents who are not domiciled in Barbados are taxed on income derived from Barbados and on income remitted to (or from which a benefit is received in) Barbados. Nonresidents are taxed on income derived from Barbados only.

Definition of resident. Individuals are considered resident if they are present in Barbados, in aggregate, for more than 182 days in a calendar year or if they are ordinarily resident in Barbados in a calendar year. Individuals are deemed to be ordinarily resident if they have a permanent home in Barbados and notify the Revenue Commissioner that they intend to reside in Barbados for a period of at least two consecutive years, including the current income year. Domicile is not defined in the Income Tax Act and is understood as it is used in the United Kingdom. Broadly, it is the jurisdiction that an individual regards as his or her permanent home.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable remuneration from employment includes salaries, commissions, bonuses, directors' fees, perquisites and pension income. In general, employees may be taxed on any benefit that is not conferred wholly, exclusively and necessarily for the performance of duties relating to their employment. For example, a company car is taxed at 10% of its cost, and the value of a rent-free residence is included in the employee's taxable income, up to a maximum of USD24,000 per year.

Amounts paid as a housing allowance are fully taxable.

Educational allowances provided by employers to their employees' children are fully taxable for income tax and social security purposes.

Self-employment income. Taxable profits generally consist of business profits as disclosed in the business operation's financial statements, subject to various tax adjustments. Income tax is imposed on net business income.

Investment income. A resident's investment income, other than domestic dividends, domestic interest and income from the rental of property, is aggregated with other income and taxed at the rates set forth in Rates.

If a resident company pays an ordinary dividend to a resident individual shareholder, the dividend is subject to a final 15% tax withheld at source. For resident individuals, dividends received from shares held under dividend reinvestment plans are exempt from the 15% withholding tax if the shares are held for at least five years. However, this exemption is limited to 75% of the value of the dividend, up to a maximum of USD3,750 per year. Interest received by a resident individual, other than a pensioner, from a resident borrower is also subject to a 15% final tax withheld at source. Pensioners over 60 years of age are not subject to tax on interest income.

For resident "authors," 50% of royalties received in Barbados is exempt from tax. Section 2 of the Barbados Copyright Act provides that an "author" in relation to a work is the person who creates it. Section 7 of the Copyright Act states that a work qualifies for copyright protection if the author was a citizen of or habitually resides in Barbados at the time the work was created. All other royalties received are aggregated with other income and subject to tax at the rates set forth in Rates.

Net income from the rental of residential property is taxed at a flat rate of 15%.

Nonresidents are taxed on domestic dividend income at a rate of 5%. Interest, royalties and management fees paid to nonresidents are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 0%. Technical services are subject to a different tax treatment than management fees and attract withholding tax at a rate of 15%. Rental income is subject to a 25% withholding tax, which represents a prepayment of tax. However, if a nonresident individual has habitually filed tax returns with respect to rental income in prior years, no tax is required to be withheld. Interest earned by nonresidents on debentures, bonds and stock issued by the government of Barbados is exempt from tax.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Employees are taxed on income arising on the purchase of shares acquired under a stock option plan. The taxable amount is equal to the difference between the market price of the stock on the date the option is exercised and the price paid for the stock under the option, subject to a deduction of up to 10% of the employee's assessable income. The benefit is taxed in the same manner and at the same rates as other employment income. If the shares are disposed of within five years after the option is exercised, the 10% deduction is recaptured in the year the shares are sold. No distinction is made between qualified and nonqualified stock option plans.

Capital gains. Capital gains are not subject to tax, and capital losses are not deductible.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. For 2021, residents are entitled to the deductions and allowances listed in the following table.

Type	Maximum deductible amount
Basic allowance	USD12,500
Basic allowance for pensioners over the age of 60	USD20,000

Nonresidents may not claim the above deductions and allowances.

Specially qualified individuals working in the international business and financial services sector may qualify for tax exemptions equal to percentages of their remuneration, including salary, fees or any other emoluments, if they hold a valid work permit for at least three years. The following are the tax exemptions.

Income exceeding USD125,000 but not exceeding USD250,000	50%
Income in excess of USD250,000	60%

If a resident individual earns income from sources outside Barbados and transfers this income to Barbados through the banking system, the individual may claim a foreign currency earnings credit as set out in the table below. The following are the amounts of the credit, effective from 1 January 2020.

Foreign earnings as a percentage of total earnings	Rebate of income tax (expressed as a percentage of income tax on foreign earnings)
20% and under	24%
Over 20% but under 41%	31%
At least 41% but under 61%	45%
At least 61% but under 81%	55%
81% and over	65%

Business deductions. Any expenses incurred wholly and exclusively for the purpose of producing taxable income are deductible.

Reserves or provisions of a general nature are not allowable. Write-offs of specific amounts or balances generally are allowed if the Barbados Revenue Authority is satisfied that they are not recoverable.

In computing taxable income, depreciation and amortization for financial statements' purposes are replaced by capital allowances for tax purposes. Annual allowances from 5% to 100%, calculated on a straight-line basis, are granted on the original cost of fixed assets.

Industrial buildings qualify for an annual allowance of 4% of the cost of the building.

Rates. The following tax rates apply to taxable income earned from 1 January 2020.

Taxable income USD	Tax rate %	Tax due USD	Cumulative tax due USD
First 25,000	12.5	3,125	3,125
Over 25,000	28.5	—	—

Nonresidents are taxed at the same rates as residents except on domestic dividend income, interest, royalties and management fees (see Investment income).

Relief for losses. Business losses may be carried forward seven years and offset against income arising in those years. However, effective from the 2019 income year, the offset of tax losses is restricted to 50% of assessable income. Losses may not be carried back. Losses incurred from the rental of residential property can be offset only against taxable income derived from the rental of residential property. These losses may also be carried forward seven years.

B. Other taxes

Property transfer tax. Property transfer tax is levied on all transfers of real estate, certain leasehold interests and shares, except shares traded on the Barbados securities exchange, shares of companies whose assets consist of foreign assets and securities whose income is derived solely from sources outside Barbados.

The seller pays tax at a rate of 2.5% on amounts in excess of USD25,000 received for the sale of shares and on amounts in excess of USD75,000 received for the sale of land on which there is a building. Transfers of shares involving no change of beneficial ownership are exempt from property transfer tax if the beneficial ownership does not change within five years after the original transfer. The lessor pays tax at a rate of 2.5% on a lease of 25 years or more for residential and commercial property.

Estate and gift tax. Estate and gift tax is not levied in Barbados.

C. Social security

Contributions. Contributions to the National Insurance Scheme must be made at the following rates on maximum monthly insurable earnings of USD2,440:

• For employees, 11.1%
• For employers, 12.75%
• For self-employed persons, 17.1%

Totalization agreements. Barbados has entered into social security totalization agreements with Canada, the Caribbean Community and Common Market (CARICOM) and the United Kingdom to provide relief from paying double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Resident and nonresident individual taxpayers must file income tax returns by 30 April following the income year, which ends 31 December. Self-employed persons must file returns regardless of the amount of their taxable income. They must also prepay income tax quarterly based on the tax payable for the preceding year.

Tax on employees normally is collected through the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system.

Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Double tax relief is provided for foreign taxes paid to a British Commonwealth country.

Barbados has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Austria
Bahrain
Botswana
Canada
CARICOM
China Mainland
Cuba
Cyprus
Czech Republic
Finland
Ghana*
Iceland
Italy
Luxembourg
Malta
Mauritius
Mexico
Netherlands
Norway
Panama
Portugal
Qatar
Rwanda
San Marino
Seychelles
Singapore
Slovak Republic*
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
United Arab Emirates
United Kingdom
United States
Venezuela

* The double tax treaty with this jurisdiction has been ratified, but it is not yet in force.

Gross income received from a non-treaty country is taxed. However, a credit can be claimed for any foreign tax imposed on the income.

F. Temporary visas

In general, visitors from certain countries are required to have visas to enter Barbados. In certain cases, individuals from these countries are required to have visas only if they are going to be in Barbados longer than 28 days.

Foreign nationals who own property in Barbados may enter on special entry permits or, if other criteria are met, may be granted immigrant status.

Visitor visas, also called temporary visas and extensions of stay, are issued to individuals who want to extend their stays on the island or to cover the waiting period while another type of visa is being processed. Visitor visas are also issued to spouses of work permit holders.

The following documents are required to qualify for an extension of stay:
- An application on Immigration "Form B"
- Any other documentation to support the application (for example, a doctor's letter)
- A valid passport and a copy of the bio-data page of the applicant's valid passport
- For spouses of long-term work permit holders who are applying for an extension of stay, the original and a copy of the marriage certificate
- A valid airline ticket back to the country of origin
- A valid passport
- An application fee of USD50 for each six-month period
- One passport-size photograph
- Proof of financial support (not required to be furnished by a person who wishes to apply for a Visitor's Visa/Extension of Stay if he or she is the dependent or spouse of a work permit holder)

G. Work visas and/or permits

Foreign nationals and foreign companies are allowed to establish companies in Barbados. Foreign nationals employed by these companies in Barbados must obtain work permits.

Nationals of member countries of CARICOM who are university graduates are not required to have work permits to live and work in Barbados. However, such nationals must obtain a certificate of recognition as a CARICOM Skilled National instead of a work permit contingent rights, including the right to leave the country without permission and the right to seek employment without first obtaining a work permit. All other foreign nationals who wish to work in Barbados must apply for work permits. Work permits allow individuals to reside and work in Barbados and normally are issued for a period of three years unless otherwise specified.

No quota system exists for issuing work permits; each application is evaluated on its own merit. To approve a work permit application, the government must be satisfied that no suitable Barbadians can fill the vacancy.

Work permits are non-transferable. If a work permit holder leaves the employer, the work permit is canceled. The employer should inform the Immigration and Passport Department that the employee has left the company.

Applicants may not work while their work permit applications are being processed.

Work permit holders should renew their work permits three to four months before expiration. Work permit holders who have lived in Barbados for six years or more may apply for non-immigrant visas (see Section H), which eliminate the necessity of applying for work permits. If necessary, an application should be made for a long-term work permit to cover the processing period of the non-immigrant visa.

The following documents must be submitted together with the application for a Barbados long-term work permit:
- Application fee of USD150.
- C-1 and C-2 forms, in duplicate.
- Medical form completed by a medical practitioner (including X-ray report and venereal disease research laboratory report). If it is done outside of Barbados, it must be reviewed by a local doctor (compact disc is required).
- Four passport-size photographs.
- Copy of bio-data page of applicant's valid passport.
- Two character references.
- Documentary evidence of the applicant's qualifications (for example, university degree).
- A cover letter setting out the nature of the business in which the applicant will be engaged.
- For an applicant hoping to set up a business in Barbados, clear evidence of the amount of his or her investment (for example, bank transfer statements).
- A copy of the certificate of registration or incorporation of the company as well as the company's International Business Companies license, if applicable.

A fee is payable upon receipt of the work permit. The amount of the fee is based on the job level, the type of business and the duration of the work permit. The minimum work permit fees are approximately USD150 to USD175 per month.

H. Barbados 12-Month Welcome Stamp visa

The 12-Month Welcome Stamp visa is granted to a non-national who is employed in a country other than Barbados. It allows non-nationals to work remotely for companies and individuals outside Barbados. Visa holders can travel in and out of Barbados any time during the 12-month approval period and are not liable to pay Barbados income tax. Multiple applications can be made for workers in a company.

The requirements for the Barbados 12-Month Welcome Stamp visa include the following:
- Income of the individual of USD50,000 or more a year

- Medical insurance (if there are challenges securing medical insurance in the applicant's country of origin, Barbados will provide medical insurance options as required)
- A passport photo that is 2 x 2 inches (51 mm x 51 mm), with the head being between 1 to 1 3/8 inches (25 mm to 35 mm) from the bottom of the chin to the top of the head
- Bio data page of passport
- Entry visa (if applicable)
- If traveling with dependents, birth certificates for partners and children and proof of relationship with dependents

On approval, the following non-refundable fees are applicable:
- Individual: USD2,000
- Family bundle: USD3,000

Processing of an application begins within 48 hours of receipt (once all supporting documents are in place). The visa is granted or denied within five working days. The visa is issued via email to the applicant.

Children of non-nationals may attend private schools, or a small stipend will be required for attendance at the state-owned public schools. Education is compulsory for children between the ages of 5 and 16. There are also several tertiary education institutions, including The University of the West Indies and Barbados Community College.

For renewal of the visa, the following are the fees:
- Individual: USD1,500
- Family bundle: USD2,250

I. Residence visas and/or permits

Non-immigrant visas are issued to individuals who wish to retire or reside on the island. Applicants must be of sound body and mind and must be capable of supporting themselves. Each application is processed on its own merit. The process is lengthy and can take more than one year.

To approve a residence application, the government must be satisfied that the applicant can support himself or herself and will not be a burden to the country. The individual's qualifications and entitlement are also taken into consideration.

No quota system exists for issuing residence permits; each application is evaluated on its own merit.

J. Special entry permits

A special entry permit is available to a high-net-worth individual who wishes to reside in Barbados. To qualify for a special entry permit, an individual must meet specific criteria. These criteria depend on the category of permit that the individual wishes to obtain.

The following items must accompany an application for a Barbados Special Entry Permit for the High Net-Worth Individual:
- Extension of stay form.
- A certified statement of assets over USD5 million or USD300,000 (depending on whether the individual is over or under 60 years of age) from an auditor, accountant or banker.

- Title deeds or land tax documents, if applicable.
- Evidence of health insurance coverage in excess of USD500,000 if over 50 years of age, and USD350,000 for persons under 50 years of age. The insurance coverage must be valid in Barbados.
- Two character references.
- A completed medical form with X-ray report.
- Copy of applicant's valid passport bio-data page.
- Two passport-size photographs.
- Documentary evidence of the applicant's qualifications, if applicable (notarized copies are acceptable).
- Proof of relationship to dependents, if applicable (birth certificates or legal documents).
- Original birth certificate and a certified copy.
- Marriage certificate and a copy or affidavit for common law spouse.
- Previous marriage certificate and death certificate, if applicable (original and copy).
- Translation of any documents not in English, which, if prepared in Barbados, should be done by an authorized agent (that is, the Language Centre, Barbados Community College, University of the West Indies, embassy or consulate).
- Application fee of USD150. On approval of the application, persons must pay a further fee of either USD3,500 or USD5,000 to the immigration authorities, depending on whether the individual is over or under 60 years of age.

K. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Spouses and dependents of working expatriates must obtain their own work permits to be employed in Barbados or must obtain extensions of stay to reside there.

Children who accompany work permit holders, non-immigrant visa holders or those who are in Barbados for the sole purpose of studying must obtain students visas.

Marital property regime. Barbados does not have a community property or similar marital property regime.

Forced heirship. The succession laws of Barbados provide that a surviving spouse is entitled to one-half of the estate of the deceased spouse, unless the surviving spouse elects not to claim this right or chooses instead to take his or her bequest under the will of the deceased spouse. Parents are not required to leave any part of their estate to their children unless the children are minors (under 18 years of age), in which case sufficient provision must be made for the maintenance of the children. These rules apply only to persons who are citizens or permanent residents or are domiciled in Barbados.

Driver's permits. A foreign national may not drive legally in Barbados with his or her home-country driver's permit, nor does Barbados have driver's license reciprocity with any other countries.

Holders of work permits who possess valid driver's licenses in their home countries are excused from taking the written exam and driving test. They must submit the following items to the Barbados Licensing Authority:
- Driver's license from country of residence
- Valid passport and the passport bio page

- Identification card
- Proof of possession of a work permit
- Original and a copy of the applicant's birth certificate
- Fee of USD50

Other applicants for a driver's license in Barbados must take a moderately difficult written exam and a driving test at the Licensing Authority.

Because the legislative system of Belarus is in a state of development and is subject to frequent and often unpredictable changes, readers should obtain updated information before engaging in transactions. The following are the official exchange rates of the Belarusian ruble set by the Belarusian National Bank on 1 June 2020:
- USD1 = BYN2.5328
- EUR1 = BYN3.0884

A. Personal income tax

Who is liable. Individuals who are tax residents of Belarus are subject to personal income tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents of Belarus are taxed on their Belarusian-source income.

Belarusian-source income includes, but is not limited to, the following:
- Employment income
- Payments under insurance contracts
- Income derived from copyrights exercised in Belarus
- Income derived from work and services performed in Belarus
- Capital gains derived from disposals of property located in Belarus
- Income derived from disposals of shares or other securities
- Rental income from property located in Belarus
- Dividends derived from Belarusian legal entities or foreign legal entities with regard to their permanent establishments in Belarus
- Pensions or similar payments

Non-Belarusian-source income includes, but is not limited to, the following:
- Employment income
- Payments received from foreign insurance companies under insurance contracts
- Income from copyrights exercised abroad
- Income from disposals of shares or other securities abroad
- Income paid by foreign companies or entrepreneurs for works or services performed abroad
- Capital gains from disposals of property located abroad
- Rental income from property located abroad
- Dividends received from foreign companies

Definition of Belarusian tax resident. For personal income tax purposes, an individual is treated as a tax resident if he or she stays in Belarus for more than 183 days in a calendar year. An individual staying in Belarus for 183 or less days in a calendar year is treated as a nonresident of Belarus for tax purposes. Time spent by an individual abroad because of medical treatment, recreation and business trips is included in this period, while time spent by an individual in Belarus exclusively for the purpose of medical treatment and recreation is not included in this period.

Income subject to tax

The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Employment income includes, but is not limited to, salary and compensation, and bonuses received in cash or in kind. For personal income tax purposes, Belarusian-source employment income is income received by individuals from Belarusian companies, and non-Belarusian-source employment income is income received from foreign companies, regardless of the place where the employment duties are actually performed. Employment income received from foreign companies operating in Belarus though a permanent establishment is considered Belarusian-source income.

Belarusian tax residents may claim several deductions in determining their taxable income (see Deductions).

Investment income. Income is treated as dividend income if originating from stocks or shares. A flat personal income tax rate of 13% applies to Belarusian- and foreign-source dividends.

Dividends received by nonresidents from local sources are subject to 13% personal income tax withheld at source.

Interest income from bank deposits in Belarus is not subject to personal income tax if the money is placed in Belarusian ruble (BYN) deposit accounts for over one year or in foreign currency deposit accounts for over two years or if interest income from bank deposits is accrued at an interest rate not exceeding the interest rate of a bank deposit on demand.

Self-employment and business income. The income of self-employed individuals is generally subject to personal income tax at a flat rate of 16%. Certain types of income are taxed at a specific flat rate of 9% (see Rates). Tax is levied on the individual's annual self-employment income, which consists of gross income, less documented expenses associated with that income.

A self-employed person whose activity is treated as business is required to register as an individual entrepreneur with the appropriate registration authority. Individual entrepreneurs are generally required to pay personal income tax on their quarterly income.

Specific tax regimes (simplified taxation and single tax) may be used by individual entrepreneurs under certain circumstances.

The single tax is paid with respect to limited activities determined by the tax law. Payers of the single tax include the following:
- Individual entrepreneurs selling services to individuals for their own personal needs or who sell certain types of goods at certain places of sales (for example, small shops)
- Individuals not engaged in entrepreneurial activities that involve the sale of certain types of goods in marketplaces of goods (for example, vegetables and fruits grown by individuals)

The single tax is applied at fixed rates, depending on the type of goods or services sold or provided by the entrepreneur. The basic monthly rates of single tax vary from BYN9 to BYN462. The rates of the single tax can be reduced or increased by no more than two times (in certain cases, four times), depending on the following:

- The "settlement" in which the activities of the payers are carried out. In this context, "settlement" means city, town or other population center (city of Minsk, cities of regional or district subordination, urban-type settlements and rural settlements).
- Places of implementation of the activities of payers within the settlement. This means the places within the settlement (for example, center of the city, town or other settlement; outskirts of the city, town or other settlement; road interchanges of the city, town or other settlement; distance to the public transport stops in the city, town or other settlement).
- Payer categories.

The amount of the tax depends on the type of entrepreneurial activity and the location at which this activity is conducted. In general, the single tax is payable in advance on a monthly basis.

The law prohibits the realization of goods without supporting documents that confirm the acquisition of the goods. Entrepreneurs engaged in sales to legal entities and other individual entrepreneurs do not qualify as payers of single tax.

Individual entrepreneurs (other than those qualifying as single taxpayers) may use the simplified taxation regime rather than the general tax system if the revenue generated by them does not exceed the statutory thresholds.

Newly registered entrepreneurs may use simplified taxation immediately after state registration by applying to the tax authorities. The tax is paid quarterly at a rate of 5% of the total revenue generated in the reporting period. The rate is reduced to 3% if an entrepreneur applies the simplified taxation regime and also pays value-added tax (VAT). Quarterly or monthly reporting applies, depending on frequency of VAT reporting.

Other income. Any other income that is not listed above is generally included in regular income and taxed at the general tax rate of 13%. Specific tax rates of 0%, 4%, 6%, 9%, 10% and 16% and fixed rates apply to certain types of income.

Capital gains. Capital gains are included in the total income of an individual taxpayer. A tax on capital gains is not paid separately. For additional information, see Property tax deductions.

Deductions. Belarusian tax law divides tax deductions into the following four categories:
- Standard tax deductions
- Social tax deductions
- Property tax deductions
- Professional tax deductions

Taxpayers may claim all of the above deductions in computing their personal income tax liability.

Standard tax deductions. In computing tax, each taxpayer may claim the following standard tax deductions:
- Individual deduction equaling BYN126 per month. This deduction is not available to individuals who earn more than BYN761 per month.

- A deduction equaling BYN37 per month per each child under 18 years of age or dependent.
- Compensation-related deduction equaling BYN177 per month. The compensation-related deduction is provided to disabled individuals, war veterans and victims of natural disasters.

To claim the second and third standard deductions listed above, appropriate documents must substantiate the deductions.

Standard deductions are provided for each month of a calendar year at the place of primary employment or by the tax authorities on the basis of the annual tax return (declaration) submitted to the tax authorities.

Social tax deductions. Taxpayers may claim social tax deductions for the total of the following amounts:

- Actually incurred education expenses for the taxpayer, and his or her close relatives (children, spouse, parents, brothers, sisters, grandparents and grandchildren). This deduction is allowed if the expenses are incurred by the taxpayer for a first education (higher or specialized secondary education).
- Actually incurred repayments of loans (including interest due on loans) obtained from banks, local companies or entrepreneurs by a taxpayer to pay for education.
- Expenses actually incurred during the year on insurance under voluntary pension, life or medical insurance agreements. Pension or life insurance agreements must be entered into for a period not less than three years.

Any amounts incurred that are claimed as social tax deductions must be supported by relevant documents.

Property tax deductions. Under the Belarusian tax law, individuals may claim the following property tax deductions:

- Deduction of expenses actually incurred by a taxpayer or any of his or her family members to construct or purchase an apartment or a house located in Belarus as well as for expenses incurred on repayments of loans provided by local companies or entrepreneurs or by Belarusian banks for this purpose. The deduction is provided only to a taxpayer whose living conditions require improvement. This fact must be confirmed by a local authority based on appropriate documents.
- Deduction of expenses actually incurred and documented for purchases and disposals of property. However, income derived by individuals from sales of property, excluding real estate, cars and securities, is exempt from personal income tax in Belarus. The disposal of real estate made not more than once within five years (one house, one apartment, one land plot, one garage or similar item) and the sale of one car within a year are not taxable for tax residents.

The first type of property tax deduction mentioned above is provided to an employed taxpayer based on appropriate documents held by his or her employer at his or her workplace during the current tax year or on the annual tax return (declaration) submitted to the tax authorities.

The second type of property tax deduction mentioned above is provided to the taxpayer based on the annual tax return submitted to the tax authorities by the taxpayer. The tax authorities allow a deduction at the payer's choice in the amount of actually incurred and documented expenses or in the amount of 20% of taxable income derived from the sale of property. A tax agent can provide this deduction to the taxpayer in the amount of 20% of taxable income derived from the sale of property during the calendar year.

Income derived from sales of securities is subject to personal income tax in accordance with special rules established by the Belarusian tax law. In particular, the taxable gain on disposals of stocks equals the difference between the sales proceeds and the documented expenses associated with the purchase, possession, and sale of the stocks.

Gains derived from sales of any properties to close relatives are exempt from tax.

Professional tax deductions. Individuals who receive royalties or fees for the creation, performance or other use of the results of intellectual activity may deduct associated expenses in accordance with the Belarusian tax law.

All expenses must be supported by the relevant documents made in the established format. Explicit regulations contain descriptions of deductible expenses.

Instead of claiming professional tax deductions based on documented expenses, certain individuals involved in creating intellectual property may claim tax deductions equal to 20%, 30% or 40% (depending on the type of activity) of the income derived.

A professional tax deduction is provided to the taxpayer based on the annual tax return submitted to the tax authorities by the taxpayer. The tax authorities allow a deduction at the payer's choice in the amount of actually incurred and documented expenses or in the amount of an established percentage of taxable income. A tax agent can provide this deduction to the taxpayer in the amount of an established percentage of taxable income during the calendar year.

Individual athletes and their coaches may deduct associated expenses in accordance with the Belarusian tax law. Instead of claiming professional tax deductions based on documented expenses, such individuals may claim tax deductions equal to 20% of the income derived. This professional tax deduction is provided to the taxpayer based on the annual tax return submitted to the tax authorities.

Rates. Individual income derived from sources in Belarus or abroad is generally subject to personal income tax at a flat rate of 13%. In addition, specific tax rates of 0%, 4%, 6%, 9%, 10% and 16% and fixed tax rates apply to certain types of income.

A specific tax rate of 4% applies to income from winnings (unplayed and returned bets and payouts received from successful bets) received from Belarusian gambling companies.

A specific tax rate of 9% applies to employment income received by individuals who work under employment agreements with residents of the High Technology Park. However, from 1 January 2021 to 1 January 2023, the abovementioned income is taxed at a rate of 13% as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic. The business income of an entrepreneur registered with the High Technology Park is taxed at a rate of 9%.

A specific tax rate of 10% applies to employment income received by individuals who work under employment agreements with manufacturing companies registered from 1 July 2015 to 31 December 2025 in the southeastern areas of the Mogilev region.

A specific tax rate of 6% applies to dividends from Belarusian companies if profit had not been distributed among participants or shareholders of Belarusian companies in the preceding three consecutive calendar years.

A specific tax rate of 0% applies to dividends from Belarusian companies if profit had not been distributed among participants or shareholders of Belarusian companies in the preceding five consecutive calendar years.

A specific tax rate of 16% applies to business income earned by individual entrepreneurs under the general tax system (that is, not applying the single tax and simplified taxation). A specific tax rate of 16% also applies to income calculated by the tax authorities based on the excess of total expenses over total income of individuals in some cases (for example, on the purchase of an apartment).

Fixed tax rates apply to income received by individuals under rent contracts. Monthly fixed rates of personal income tax vary from BYN2.20 to BYN140, depending on the type and location of the rented property.

Relief for losses. Business losses of a self-employed person incurred during a year cannot be carried forward.

B. Other taxes

Estate and gift taxes. Belarus does not impose estate and gift taxes.

Net worth tax. Belarus does not impose net worth tax.

Immovable property tax and land tax. Immovable property tax and land tax are payable by individuals for capital structures (houses, apartments, garages, parking spaces and certain other structures) and land plots possessed by them.

The annual immovable property tax rate payable by an individual is 0.2% if an individual owns two or more houses and/or apartments. In other cases, a 0.1% rate applies. The tax is paid annually on the value of the taxable item on the basis of the tax authority's notification no later than 15 November for the current calendar year.

The annual land tax is set as a percentage of the cadastral value or at a fixed rate per each 10,000 square meters of a land plot, depending on the size, location, designated purpose and cadastral value of a land plot.

C. Social security

Contributions and coverage. All payments to employees are generally subject to social security contributions at a rate of 35%. These contributions include payments to social security and pension security.

Social security contributions are paid by employers and must be remitted to the Fund of Social Protection of People under the Belarusian Ministry of Labor and Social Protection not later than the date established for salary payments by the employer. If the day for paying salaries for a month is later than the 20th day of the following month, the contributions must be paid by the 20th day of the following month. The employers' contribution rates are 28% for pension insurance and 6% for social insurance.

Employees also pay pension insurance contributions at a rate of 1% on their gross compensation. This tax is withheld and paid to the Fund of Social Protection of People directly by the employers together with their own social security contributions.

Both employer and employee contributions are payable on the gross compensation (salary) of employees. However, the monthly tax base for social security charges is limited (capped) to five average salaries in Belarus, currently equal to BYN7,098. Accordingly, the effective social security contribution rate for employees earning more than five average monthly salaries is actually lower. In addition, the tax law contains a list of payments to employees that are exempt from social security contributions.

Self-employed individuals and individual entrepreneurs must make contributions for pension insurance at a rate of 29% and for social insurance at a rate of 6%. They generally pay contributions by 1 March of the year following the reporting year. Under some circumstances, the base for social security contributions may not be less than the minimum monthly salary stipulated by national legislation.

In addition to social security contributions, employers must make mandatory payments for insurance against accidents at work and professional diseases to the state insurance company, "Belgosstrakh." A rate of 0.6% generally applies to all payments to employees.

Social security and mandatory insurance contributions are payable for resident and nonresident individuals employed in Belarus.

Totalization agreements. Belarus has entered into agreements regarding pension coverage with the following countries.

Armenia	Kyrgyzstan	Tajikistan
Azerbaijan	Latvia	Turkmenistan
Czech Republic	Lithuania	Ukraine
Estonia	Moldova	Uzbekistan
Kazakhstan	Russian Federation

The agreements with Azerbaijan, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and the Russian Federation also regulate issues regarding social security contributions.

Broadly, the agreements listed above provide that the obligations of foreign individuals with respect to social security contributions are generally governed by the legislation of the country where they are working on the basis of employment contracts.

D. Personal income tax return filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Belarus is the calendar year.

Employers are required to withhold, calculate, and pay to the state the relevant tax on compensation paid to employees. The tax is transferred to the budget on the date on which the salary is paid.

Any non-employment income received in a tax year by a tax-resident individual must be declared in the individual's annual tax return.

The annual tax return must be submitted to the tax office by 31 March of the year following the tax year. The taxpayer must pay personal income tax due on income derived in the tax year by 1 June of the year following the tax year.

Attorneys, notaries and individual entrepreneurs using the general taxation regime compute tax quarterly on a cumulative basis and file tax returns by the 20th day of the month following the reporting quarter.

The tax for the reporting quarter must be paid by the 22nd day of the month following the end of the reporting quarter.

Entrepreneurs who use the simplified taxation regime and who pay VAT on a quarterly basis or do not pay VAT must file tax returns quarterly by the 20th day of the month following the end of the reporting quarter. Entrepreneurs who pay VAT on a monthly basis must file tax returns monthly by the 20th day of the month following the reporting month. Tax must be paid by the 22nd day of the month following the end of the reporting month.

Entrepreneurs whose business activities are subject to the single tax must pay the tax on a monthly basis by the first day of each calendar month and file a tax return on the first day of each calendar quarter.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Taxes actually paid abroad on foreign-source income are credited against taxpayers' tax obligations to the Belarusian government. A foreign tax credit may not exceed the personal income tax payable in Belarus on the same income.

To obtain an exemption, a taxpayer must present a certificate of residency from a country with which Belarus has entered into a double tax treaty and a document that is certified by the tax authorities of the foreign country and proves that the income was received and the prescribed amount of foreign tax was paid.

Belarus has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Armenia	Ireland	Saudi Arabia
Austria	Israel	Serbia

In addition, Belarus currently applies the double tax treaties entered into by the former USSR with Denmark, France, Japan, Malaysia and the United States.

F. Visas

Belarusian visas are divided into entry, exit and exit-entry visas.

Entry visas may be obtained from embassies and consulates abroad. A foreigner traveling by plane also may obtain an entry visa from the Belarusian consular division at National Airport Minsk.

Exit visas and exit-entry visas may be obtained from Citizenship and Migration Departments at the place of temporary stay (residence) of foreigners in Belarus.

Entry into Belarus is possible under certain circumstances, including, among others, on the basis of one of the following types of visas:

- Visa obtained for a business trip (without the right to work by hire) on the basis of an application of a Belarusian legal entity or on the basis of an application of a representative office in Belarus for employees of this representative office, founders and employees of the head office, and employees of representative offices in other jurisdictions.
- Visa obtained for a private trip (without the right to work by hire) on the basis of an invitation issued by the Citizenship and Migration Department of the Ministry of Internal Affairs of the Republic of Belarus on the basis of an application of the inviting individual.
- Visa with the right to work by hire on the basis of a notarized copy of a special permit for foreigners to work by hire in Belarus, which is issued by the regional Citizenship and Migration Department of the Ministry of Internal Affairs of the Republic of Belarus. For a long-term visa with the right to work by hire, an application of a Belarusian legal entity or a representative office is also needed.

Entry and exit-entry visas can be single, double or multiple entry.

Entry business visas are issued to individuals who are on business trips to Belarus. A business visa limits a foreign citizen to 90 days per calendar year in Belarus from the date of the first entrance.

Entry work visas are issued to individuals who want to work in Belarus. An entry work visa allows a foreigner to stay in Belarus for up to 90 days per calendar year from the date of the first entrance.

Embassies and diplomatic consular posts issue entry visas to foreigners abroad. To apply for an entry visa, a foreigner should submit to the issuing authority certain documents, including but not limited to the following:

- Visa application in the established form.
- Document for traveling abroad (passport). In general, this document should contain a photo of its holder, not less than two blank pages for visas and should not expire earlier than 90 days after the date of expiration of the visa.
- Photo. The photo must be 35 mm x 45 mm, comply with international standard requirements for face image, and should have been taken not earlier than six months before the application.
- Visa supporting documents confirming the purpose and conditions of the visit (application of a Belarusian legal entity or representative office or an invitation issued by the Citizenship and Migration Department of the Ministry of Internal Affairs, special permit for foreigners to work by hire in Belarus, and other related documents at the request of the issuing authorities).
- Insurance policy valid in Belarus or contract for medical insurance concluded with foreign insurance company, which is valid for the whole period of temporary stay (residence) of a foreigner in Belarus, with insurance coverage of not less than EUR10,000 and covering the territory of Belarus.
- Document confirming the payment of a consular duty.

Foreigners from most of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) countries do not need to obtain entry visas. Foreigners who have a valid permanent resident card, which is issued based on a permanent residence permit, also do not need to obtain entry visas. The foreigners mentioned above should present a passport or other document for traveling abroad on entry into and departure from Belarus.

Recently, Belarus introduced 30-day visa-free travel for citizens of 74 jurisdictions, including European Union member states. The visa-free procedure applies to foreigners entering Belarus for a temporary, 30-day stay via a border crossing at Minsk National Airport. Visa-free movement through the airport does not extend to persons coming to Belarus by plane from the Russian Federation, as well as to those who intend to fly to the airports of the Russian Federation.

As a result of the spread of the COVID-19 pandemic, some temporary restrictions to enter Belarus may be introduced. It is advisable to monitor effective restrictive measures before traveling to Belarus.

A foreigner can leave Belarus if he or she has a valid short-term or long-term entry visa (in this case, the obtaining of an exit or exit-entry visa is not required). In specific cases if an entry visa has expired, a foreigner can receive an exit or exit-entry visa, which is issued by the Citizenship and Migration Department of the Ministry of Internal Affairs. Double exit-entry visas and multiple exit-entry visas are issued to foreign nationals who have received a temporary or permanent residence permit for three months and one year, respectively, but not for longer than the validity period of the temporary residency permit or document for traveling abroad.

G. Work permits

In general, foreign citizens who intend to work in Belarus should obtain a special work permit issued by regional Citizenship and Migration Departments of the Ministry of Internal Affairs.

The validity period of a special work permit is one year, except for highly skilled professionals for whom a special work permit is issued for two years. A foreign highly skilled professional is a foreigner with high level of professional knowledge, skills and expertise confirmed by education certificate, and with work experience not less than five years and a contractual monthly salary that is more than the equivalent of BYN6,000. CIS nationals, with the exception of Armenian, Kazakh, Kyrgyzstan and Russian citizens employed by Belarusian legal entities, should also obtain a special work permit.

A special work permit is not required for, among others, the following foreigners who want to work in Belarus:
- Individuals who are employed by a Belarusian company that is a resident of the Hi-Tech Park (an HTP resident)
- Individuals who have permanent residence permits
- Individuals employed by diplomatic missions and consulates of foreign countries, representative offices and/or bodies of international or interstate organizations accredited in the Republic of Belarus
- Journalists from international media organizations accredited with the competent Belarusian authorities
- Certain other types of foreigners (for example, clergy invited for religious activities by religious associations that are statutorily registered in Belarus)

To obtain a special work permit for a foreigner, the following documents should be presented by the Belarusian employer of such foreigner to the appropriate regional Citizenship and Migration Department of the Ministry of Internal Affairs:
- Application in the established form

- Copy of the foreigner's passport or other equivalent document
- Education certificate and paper on work experience with respect to the profession of not less than five years and confirmed high level of professional knowledge, skills and expertise (for highly skilled professionals)
- Receipt for registration fee

The procedure for obtaining a special work permit takes up to 15 calendar days.

H. Residence permits

Foreign citizens may stay in Belarus if they have any of the following three statuses:

- Foreigners who are temporarily staying in Belarus
- Temporary residents (individuals holding temporary residence permits)
- Permanent residents (individuals holding permanent residence permits)

A foreigner's temporary stay in Belarus should not exceed 90 days per calendar year from the date of the first entrance. Foreigners who will be employed by an HTP resident and a foreign founder of an HTP resident and its employees can temporarily stay in Belarus for 180 days per calendar year. Foreigners who will be attracted by residents, investors of the Great Stone China-Belarus Industrial Park (CBIP) or Industrial Park Development Company CJSC for the implementation of investment projects in the CBIP, as well as founders, participants, shareholders, "property owners" of the residents, investors of the CBIP or Industrial Park Development Company CJSC and their employees, can temporarily stay in Belarus for 180 days per calendar year. In this context, "property owner" means a foreigner or a company that employs foreigners, being a shareholder of a CBIP investor or a CBIP resident that is registered in a form of a unitary enterprise (UE) in Belarus. UE is a form of company in Belarus on a par with a limited liability company (LLC). An LLC owns its property itself. Property of a UE belongs to its founder shareholder.

Temporary resident status is the most common status for expatriates working in Belarus. A temporary residence permit is a document that allows a foreign national to reside in Belarus during its validity.

A temporary residence permit is given for a period of up to one year and for a period of up to two years for highly skilled professionals. Its validity may be extended if a foreigner has a document confirming the legality of his or her staying in Belarus. A temporary residence permit for a foreigner who will be employed by an HTP resident is issued for the validity term of the employment agreement and two months after its termination.

To obtain a temporary residence permit, an applicant planning to work by hire in Belarus should submit the following main documents:

- Application in the established form
- Passport or other equivalent document
- Document confirming the legality of his or her staying in Belarus

- Special permit to work by hire in Belarus or labor agreement (contract) with a Belarusian employer (if a special permit to work by hire is not required)
- Insurance policy or contract for medical insurance concluded with foreign insurance company
- Document confirming the possibility of staying at the place of temporary residence (usually a long-term rent contract)
- Document confirming the payment of state duty

A permanent residence permit may be issued to the following foreigners:
- Close relatives of Belarusian citizens permanently residing in Belarus
- Persons who are granted refugee status or asylum in Belarus
- Foreigners who have the right to family reunification
- Foreigners who have lived legally in Belarus for a continuous period of five years after obtaining the temporary residence permit
- Foreigners who are considered highly skilled professionals according to Belarusian law and who have lived legally in Belarus for a continuous period of three years after obtaining the temporary residence permit
- Foreigners who may become Belarusian citizens through the mechanism of registration
- Foreigners who were previously nationals of Belarus
- Workers and professionals who are needed by Belarusian organizations
- Foreigners who have extraordinary capabilities and talent, have outstanding merits for Belarus or have high achievements in science, technology, culture or sports
- Foreign investors who have made investments in the amount not less than BYN435,000 in investment activities in Belarus
- Ethnic Belarusians or their blood relatives in the direct line of descent, including children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren who were born outside the current territory of Belarus

The Belarusian government may provide other grounds for the obtaining of a permanent residence permit under an agreement with the President of the Republic of Belarus.

The issuance of a permanent residence permit is a subject to an immigration quota that may be established by the Belarusian government with respect to each foreign country.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Nonworking family members of expatriates may receive accompanying family member visas, but applications for visas should be filed and presented separately.

If family members plan to work in Belarus, they should also obtain separate special work permits in accordance with the established rules.

Driver's permits. In general, foreign nationals may drive legally in Belarus on the basis of their valid home-country driver's licenses or international driver's licenses, which should be accompanied by a notarized translation into Russian or Belarusian. Belarus does not have driver's license reciprocity with any foreign country.

On expiration of the 90-day period after receipt of a Belarusian permanent residence permit or a Belarusian passport, an individual should obtain a local driver's license.

To obtain a local driver's license, an applicant should have a medical report on his or her capability to drive, and pass a theoretical examination and a practical driving test.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Income tax is levied on the worldwide income of Belgian residents and on the Belgian-source income of nonresidents.

Residents are individuals who are domiciled in Belgium. Residency status is determined based on the facts and circumstances. A rebuttable presumption exists that individuals enrolled in the National Register of the Population are resident in Belgium for tax purposes. For married individuals (or individuals officially engaged in a "cohabitant" scenario), an irrefutable presumption exists that the tax domicile is where the spouse or partner and any dependent children live.

Certain foreign executives, specialists and researchers residing temporarily in Belgium are eligible for a special tax regime under which they are treated as nonresidents (see Special expatriate tax concessions).

The income of spouses and registered cohabitants is taxed separately, even though they are required to file a joint tax return.

Under a fundamental revision of the Belgian tax system, effective from 1 January 2014, the overall tax due is split into a federal base and a regional surcharge. In addition, several pre-existing tax deductions are transferred to the authority of the regions (Brussels, Flemish and Walloon).

Although the regions have not made any changes that significantly affect the overall liability, consultation with a professional advisor is suggested.

Income subject to tax. Belgian tax law provides for the following four categories of taxable income:
- Earned income, including employment income, director fees, self-employment income, business income and retirement income
- Real estate income
- Investment income, including dividends, interest and royalties
- Other miscellaneous income

For each category of income, the net taxable amount is determined as the gross income received minus a number of deductions specific to the income category. In addition, several deductions and allowances can be set off against the total net taxable income.

The taxation of various categories of income is described below.

Employment income. Employment income includes salaries, wages, bonuses, perquisites and benefits in kind, as well as retirement income. Benefits in kind are taxable based on their actual value for the beneficiary. Specific valuation rules are provided for several of the more common benefits, such as company cars, below-market interest loans, free housing and stock options (see Taxation of employer-provided stock options).

Income from employment may be reduced by normal professional expenses, including, among others, the following:
- 75% of the cost of gasoline for the professional use of a car
- 75% of most other automobile expenses (for cars acquired before 1 January 2018)
- Commuting expenses up to EUR0.15 per kilometer
- 69% of restaurant expenses and 50% of other entertainment expenses incurred in Belgium

Instead of claiming a deduction for actual professional expenses, the taxpayer may choose to claim a standard business expense deduction. The maximum standard deduction is EUR4,920 for the 2021 income year (2022 tax year).

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are included in total earned income. Directors' fees include income earned by a director as fixed remuneration as well as participation in the profit of the company. Certain benefits derived by a director are also included in the taxable income of the director. Directors' fees also include amounts paid to in-house self-employed consultants with day-to-day managerial responsibilities of a technical, commercial or financial nature. A deduction for professional expenses (actual expenses uncapped or a maximum standard deduction of EUR2,590 for the 2021 income year) can also be claimed against directors' fees. To avoid a tax surcharge (2.25% of the tax for the 2021 income year), tax prepayments and wage tax withholdings must equal the final tax due.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employment and business income is included in the total earned income. A deduction for actual professional expenses is also available against this income. To avoid a tax surcharge (2.25% of the tax for the 2021 income year) at the time of final assessment by the authorities, tax prepayments must be made.

Real estate income. Real estate income includes rental income from real estate that is used for a professional activity and, in certain circumstances, from real estate used for private purposes by the occupant.

Nonresidents whose Belgian-source income consists only of real estate income are exempt from personal income tax if the annual rental income does not exceed EUR2,500.

Investment income. Under the Belgian domestic tax law, investment income consists of dividends, interest and royalties.

Dividends, interest and royalties are subject to a final withholding tax.

Dividends up to an amount of EUR800 (for the 2021 income year) are exempt from tax. This exemption should be claimed via the annual tax return.

Special expatriate tax concessions. Foreign executives, specialists and researchers residing temporarily in Belgium may qualify for a special tax regime when they are assigned, transferred or recruited from outside Belgium to work for a Belgian operation of an international group of companies. The special expatriate status is obtained through a written application to the Belgian tax authorities that sets forth the reasons why the relevant employee should qualify. The application is filed jointly by the employee and the employer. It must be filed within six months after the beginning of the month following the month of arrival of the employee in Belgium.

Foreign executives, specialists and researchers qualifying under the special expatriate tax regime are treated as nonresidents for purposes of the Belgian tax law. As a result, they are taxed on Belgian-source income only. Accordingly, unearned income and real estate income arising outside of Belgium are ignored in the determination of Belgian taxable income.

Qualifying individuals are taxed only on employment income or directors' fees relating to professional activities performed in Belgium.

Unless other reliable criteria are available, the amount of remuneration excluded from taxation in Belgium can be calculated as the fraction of the total worldwide remuneration that corresponds to the number of workdays performed outside Belgium compared to the total workdays performed (the travel exclusion). Special rules apply to the calculation of the exclusion. No maximum or minimum travel percentage is required to qualify for the special regime.

Certain allowances paid to the employee as a result of his or her temporary stay in Belgium are treated as deductible expenses for the employer and are non-taxable to the employee, within certain limits. An overall annual limit of EUR11,250 applies for qualifying expatriates working for regular operating companies. For qualifying expatriates employed by recognized headquarters, coordination offices, and research centers, an increased limit of EUR29,750 applies. The following are the most common recurring allowances:

- Cost-of-living allowance
- Housing differential
- Home leave
- Income tax

The tax-free allowances can be determined based on either the actual allowances granted by the employer (if these are based on recognized tables) or on a calculation method provided by the Belgian tax authorities (if no specific allowances are paid by the employer).

Expatriates are also allowed to exclude from taxable compensation the reimbursement of moving expenses by their employer and the reimbursement of education expenses for international primary and secondary schooling in Belgium and, exceptionally, outside Belgium. These exclusions are not subject to an overall limitation other than that the amounts reimbursed must be reasonable. In this context, lump-sum relocation allowances are considered taxable, in most instances, unless they are justified by specific relocation expenses.

Although the concessions are not granted for a fixed time period, the competent tax office has recently issued new guidelines, which set a review of the application after 10 years and 15 years. If the conditions for the regime continue to be met, the regime can be maintained after these reviews for up to a total of 20 years.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Effective from 1 January 1999, specific rules are included in Belgian domestic law relating to the taxation of stock options granted to employees, directors and other independent persons.

Options offered on or after 11 November 2002 are deemed to be granted on the 60th day following the offer if the beneficiary has given written notice of his or her acceptance of the option before the expiration of the 60-day period.

The benefit in kind arising from such stock options is taxable to the beneficiary on the date of grant on a lump-sum basis, regardless of whether the exercise of the option is unconditional. Under the lump-sum basis, the taxable income is determined as a percentage of the value of the underlying shares at the moment of the offer of the options (18%, effective from the 2012 income year). If the exercise price of the option is lower than the value of the underlying shares at the time of the offer, the lump-sum basis is increased by the difference.

In general, only the grant of an option results in a taxable benefit. If that is the case, the employee is exempt from tax on potential benefits arising from subsequent possession of the option, including benefits from the exercise or sale of the option or from the sale of the underlying shares.

No social security contributions are required with respect to such options, unless the options are "in the money" (that is, granted at a discount) or if the options are "covered" (that is, the risk that the value of the underlying shares will decline is covered at the time of offer or until the end of the exercise period of the option, therefore granting a guaranteed benefit to the beneficiary of the option).

However, the taxation at grant does not apply in all circumstances. If the taxation at grant does not apply, taxation occurs at the time of exercise of the stock options on the difference between the fair market value of the underlying shares at the time of exercise and the exercise price. The benefit is also subject to social security contributions at the time of exercise.

No further taxes are due when the shares are sold.

Capital gains. In general, capital gains on assets that are not used for a professional activity are not taxable. However, exceptions exist for the following types of capital gains:
- Capital gains derived from speculative activities and cryptocurrency
- Capital gains derived from the sale of a Belgian corporation's shares to a company not resident in the European Economic Area (EEA) if the individual, alone or together with his or her family, directly or indirectly owned more than 25% of the corporation's shares at any time during the five years before the sale
- Capital gains derived from the sale of land that was acquired by purchase if the sale takes place within eight years after acquisition
- Capital gains derived from the sale of land that was obtained by donation if the sale takes place within three years after donation and the land was acquired by the donor within eight years before the donation
- Gains derived from the sale of developed real estate if the property is sold within any of the following time periods:
  - Five years after purchase
  - Five years after the start of using a new building if construction began within five years after purchasing the land on which the building stands
  - Three years after donation if the donor bought the property within five years before the donation
- Capital gains derived from the sale of certain intangible rights

Deductions, personal allowances and reductions. As mentioned in Who is liable, the Belgian regime of personal allowances, deductions and reductions is revised with a partial transfer to the competency of the regions. Because the regions have issued their own modifications, consultation with a professional advisor is highly recommended.

Certain of the deductions, allowances and reductions mentioned below are not available to nonresidents. Consultation with a professional advisor is necessary.

Deductible expenses. The following are allowable deductions:
- Deduction for certain alimony payments (limited to 80% of the payments).
- Investment deduction for new fixed assets (for self-employed persons). For the 2020 income year (2021 tax year), the standard rate of the investment deduction is 8%. However, the standard rate is 20% for new fixed assets acquired during the period from 1 January 2018 until 31 December 2019.

Some of the above deductions are not available if the payments are made by or to nonresidents.

Personal allowances. All individuals may deduct personal allowances. Additional personal allowances are available for dependents. The personal allowances are applied to the lowest tax brackets.

For the 2021 income year (2022 tax year), the standard personal allowance equals EUR9,050 per person.

The following personal allowances for dependent children may be claimed for the 2020 income year (2021 tax year).

2	4,240
3	9,500
4	15,360
Each additional child	5,860

* A handicapped dependent child is considered to be two children.

In general, nonresidents who do not earn at least 75% of their total professional income in Belgium may not deduct any personal allowances.

Tax reductions. Tax reductions are granted either by the federal or regional government for the following:
- Life insurance premiums
- Personal contributions to group insurance contracts or pension funds
- Investments in shares issued by the individual's employer
- Loans used to finance real estate acquisitions or renovations
- Interest on loans for financing the purchase, construction or renovation of privately owned real estate (subject to certain limits)
- The purchase of service vouchers, up to a maximum purchase of EUR1,530 per person (2021 income year)
- Childcare expenses for children up to the age of 12 (limited to EUR13.70 per child, per day)
- Charitable contributions to qualifying charities

Several other tax reductions are available, depending on the taxpayer's family situation and the type of professional income (pensions, pre-pensions for early retirees, unemployment income and disability or sickness reimbursement).

Rates. The following are the tax rates for the 2021 income year (2022 tax year).

Taxable income		Rate on
Exceeding	Not exceeding	excess
EUR	EUR	%
0	13,540*	25
13,540	23,900	40
23,900	41,360	45
41,360	—	50

* This bracket applies to the amounts exceeding the taxpayer's tax-free amount (see Personal allowances).

All tax amounts are increased by the applicable municipal (commune) taxes, which are imposed at rates of up to 9% (2021 income year). The municipal tax is calculated on the amount of income tax due.

For nonresidents, the final tax due is computed in the same manner as for Belgian residents, with personal allowances being allowed if nonresidents earn at least 75% of their total professional income in Belgium. No municipal tax is due, but an additional federal tax at a flat rate of 7% on the amount of the individual's income tax is payable.

The professional income of a husband and wife is taxed separately. If only one spouse receives earned income, 30% of this income (limited to a maximum annual amount of EUR11,170 for the 2021 income year) is attributed to the non-earning spouse and is taxable to such spouse at the (lower) progressive rates. If the earned income of the secondary wage-earning spouse is less than the maximum attributable amount, additional income from the primary wage earner is attributed to the second spouse to the extent of the difference.

The following types of income are subject to special tax rates:

- Severance payments are taxed at the average rate applicable in the last year of normal professional activity, taking into account the municipal tax (not for directors).
- Anticipated Belgian holiday pay is taxed at the average rate applicable to all income in the year of payment, taking into account the municipal tax.
- The capital accrued under life or group insurance contracts and lump-sum amounts paid instead of pensions are taxed at a rate of 10% or 16.5%, increased by the municipal tax. Tax increases may apply in the case of retirement before the age of 65 or in the case of a career of less than 45 years.
- Miscellaneous income from occasional benefits (including certain capital gains, prizes and subsidies) is taxed at a rate of 16.5% or 33%, depending on the nature of the income (the rates are increased by the municipal tax).
- Copyright income, up to a ceiling of EUR62,550 (net amount for the 2021 income year after standard or itemized deductions), is taxed at a rate of 15% (the excess is subject to the regular progressive tax rates).

The above flat rates apply to the special items unless it is more favorable to include the income with other income taxable at the regular progressive rates.

Withholding tax. Dividends are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 30%.

Belgian-source interest is generally subject to a 30% withholding tax. Interest on regulated savings accounts in excess of the tax-exempt amount is subject to a 15% withholding tax.

Royalties are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 15% if the underlying contract was concluded on or after 1 March 1990. Royalties paid on contracts concluded before that date are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 25%.

Employment income and directors' fees are subject to a payroll tax at source by the employer. This withholding tax is creditable against the final income tax liability and any excess income tax withheld is refundable to the employee or director.

A tax on immovable property is levied on all real estate property located in Belgium. The rate of this withholding tax ranges from 1.25% to 3.97%, depending on the region where the property is located. The tax is levied on the deemed rental income of the property. The basic tax is increased by a local surcharge, depending on the municipality where the property is located.

New reporting and withholding obligations for foreign incentive plans entered into force in 2019. Belgian-related entities are required to report all remuneration paid or attributed to the beneficiaries working for the benefit of Belgian entities. Under this new measure, any remuneration attributed outside Belgium needs to be reported by the Belgian-related entity. In addition, Belgian-related entities must retain and remit withholding taxes on all such grants or payouts made outside Belgium. These extended reporting obligations apply to any compensation attributed as of 1 January 2019, and the new withholding tax requirements apply as of 1 March 2019.

The new reporting and withholding requirements apply not only to Belgian resident corporate entities but also to nonresident Belgian permanent establishments, even if these permanent establishments are nontaxable based on treaty considerations (for example, representation offices).

All employees or company directors working for the benefit of the Belgian affiliated entity are affected, regardless of the fact that they are bound by an employment contract with the Belgian entity. Consequently, the new requirements also apply to inbound assignees, commuters and business travelers, provided that they work for the benefit of the Belgian entity. In addition, the concept of "working for the benefit of the Belgian entity" needs to be interpreted in a broad sense, and not only in terms of a financial benefit. If the activities performed by the beneficiary belong to the normal activity or statutory purpose of the Belgian corporate entity, the individual is considered as working for the benefit for the Belgian entity.

Any kind of remuneration, not only equity-based compensation, is subject to the new reporting and withholding rules, including regular salary, bonus payments and post-departure payments such as a trailing bonus (bonus related to period of Belgian employment), equity or tax on tax payments.

Relief for losses. Losses with respect to earned income may be offset against other earned income and may be carried forward indefinitely. No carrybacks are allowed. Professional losses may not be deducted from other types of income.

B. Other taxes

Net worth tax. No net worth tax is imposed in Belgium.

Inheritance and gift taxes. The inheritance tax rate system in Belgium varies depending on the region of residence of the deceased. Substantial differences exist between the rates applied by each region. Special rules apply with respect to the transfer of a family-owned business and to the transfer of a family home to a surviving spouse, legal cohabitant or other cohabitant (except in direct line). Readers should obtain up-to-date information regarding these rules.

Under existing law, the estate of a deceased resident consists of the resident's worldwide assets. Belgian jurisdiction over estates of deceased nonresidents is limited to the nonresidents' real estate located in Belgium. The definition of resident for inheritance tax purposes may differ from the definition used for income tax purposes. Nonresident status for purposes of the special expatriate tax regime (see Section A) does not automatically apply for inheritance tax purposes.

Inheritance taxes and gift taxes on donations of immovable property are levied according to sliding scales, depending on the beneficiary's relationship to the deceased or donor.

However, preferential flat rates apply to gifts of movable property.

Belgium has entered into estate tax treaties to prevent double estate taxation with France and Sweden.

Transfer duties. Transfer duties, whether registration duties or inheritance taxes, apply only to the extent an effective transfer of assets occurs under Belgian matrimonial or inheritance laws. On the death of a spouse, the transfer of assets to the surviving spouse resulting from the dissolution of the marital community is not subject to succession duties. Consequently, inheritance taxes apply only to the portion of the property that was actually owned by the deceased spouse.

Tax on stock exchange transactions. As of the 2018 income year, a stock exchange transaction tax of 0.35% applies to any transaction (purchase or sale) carried out by Belgian residents through professional intermediaries established in and outside Belgium. If the foreign professional intermediary does not fulfill this duty, the Belgian resident is ultimately responsible for filing and paying the stock exchange transaction tax. The maximum amount of tax per transaction is EUR1,600. The reporting and payment should be done proactively by the participant by the end of the second month following the month of the transaction. Penalties apply in cases of delay, errors or omissions in the return.

Tax on securities accounts. The original tax on securities accounts was abolished following a ruling by the Belgian Constitutional Court. A new law was adopted and entered into force on 26 February 2021. The revised tax on securities accounts applies to securities accounts on which qualifying financial instruments are registered for an average value exceeding EUR1 million in the tax period. For 2021, this tax period is exceptionally 26 February 2021 to 30 September 2021. Going forward, the tax period will be 1 October to 30 September of the following calendar year. Tax of 0.15% is due on the average value of those qualifying financial instruments.

C. Social security

Contributions. Social security contributions are generally compulsory for individuals working in Belgium. In 2021, the rate of the employee's basic social security contribution equals 13.07%. This rate applies to the monthly gross compensation without a ceiling. The employer's social security contributions are levied at a basic rate of 19.88% of gross monthly compensation, with no ceiling. On top of this basic rate, several specific contributions are due from the employer; some contributions vary based on certain parameters and may be specific to some industries or sectors. Some reductions are available, depending on various eligibility criteria. This results in an average actual rate of approximately 25%. These percentages apply to white-collar workers in the private sector.

Specific (and generally more beneficial) rates and arrangements apply to several salary elements and benefits in kind complementing the base salary. For example, no social security contributions are due on the benefit resulting from the personal use of a company car. However, an employer contribution based on the company car's carbon dioxide emission level is applied.

Different rates apply to self-employment activities, including activities of directors. For the 2021 income year, social security contributions are levied at a rate of 20.5% on net income up to EUR60,638.47 and at a rate of 14.16% on income between EUR60,638.47 and EUR89,361.89. The income amounts mentioned above are those the self-employed worker earns per trimester. If the person's income is higher than EUR89,361.89 per trimester, the social security contribution equals EUR4,291.57. The annual maximum contribution for self-employment activities is EUR17,166.28 (increased by 3% to 5% for the administration fees of the social insurance fund). The minimum amount of the social security contribution payable by a self-employed person equals EUR748.83.

Mandatory (self-employed) social security contributions are deductible for income tax purposes.

An individual who is liable to Belgian social security contributions is also required to make a special social security contribution. For the 2021 income year, the maximum amount of this contribution is EUR731.28. The actual amount that an individual needs to pay depends on his or her salary and on the situation of the worker's partner. The special social security contribution is not deductible for income tax purposes. For self-employed workers and directors, the special social security contribution is included in the rates mentioned above for self-employed activities.

Coverage. An employee who pays Belgian social security is entitled to benefits, including health care insurance, disability insurance, occupational insurance, unemployment allowances, family allowances, and retirement and survivor's benefits.

Totalization agreements. To prevent double social security liability and to assure benefit coverage in situations of cross-border employment, Belgium has entered into agreements with several countries.

As a member state of the European Union (EU), Belgium applies EU Regulation 883/2004 (and the amendments made to the regulation by EU Regulation 465/2012 of 22 May 2012), which entered into force on 1 May 2010 and replaced EU Regulation 1408/71. Following the adoption of EU Regulation 883/2004 by Switzerland and the other three European Free Trade Association (EFTA) countries (Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway) in 2012, Regulation 883/2004 also applies with respect to the EFTA countries. For posted workers, Regulation 883/2004 extends the home-country standard coverage for two years (in general, the Belgian social security administration accepts a further extension of up to five years).

Belgium has also entered into social security totalization agreements with Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Congo (Democratic Republic of), India, Israel, Japan, Korea (South), Kosovo, Moldova, Montenegro, Morocco, North Macedonia, the Philippines, Quebec, San Marino, Serbia, Switzerland, Tunisia, Turkey, the United States and Uruguay. Under most agreements, the Belgian social security administration accepts an extension of the home-country standard coverage of up to five years. However, the agreement with the United States exempts employees working in Belgium from Belgian social security taxes for a period of up to seven years in exceptional circumstances.

Special rules apply to UK citizens because Brexit's transition period ended on 31 December 2020. Depending on the start date of the international work situation, different rules apply with respect to social security. If the individual started his or her assignment or multistate work pattern on or before 31 December 2020 and if the situation continues without interruption, he or she will still enjoy the rights provided by the Regulation 883/2004 (coverage up to five years). However, if the work situation is interrupted or starts after that date, the updated rules of the Trade and Cooperation Agreement apply. Under these rules, the person can generally remain subject to the UK social security for two years only, without any extension possible.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Individuals must file annual tax returns reporting income received during the preceding calendar year, which is the income year. The year of filing is considered the tax year. The tax return must be completed, dated, signed and returned to the tax authorities by the date indicated on the return, unless the taxpayer obtains an extension. The official filing date is 30 June, but the date is sometimes extended for resident individuals and is generally extended for nonresident individuals.

After filing, but no later than 30 June of the following year, a tax assessment or refund notice is issued. Within two months after the receipt of this assessment, the amount of tax due must be paid to the tax authorities. Any refund owed is paid within the same two-month period.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Income derived by Belgian residents from a business activity performed in non-treaty jurisdictions is taxable at half the normal rate, to the extent that the income is subject to standard taxation abroad. Double tax treaties entered into by Belgium with other jurisdictions provide for the abolishment of double taxation on such income of Belgium residents through the exemption-with-progression method. Foreign-source income is exempt from tax in Belgium, but other taxable income is taxed at the rate that would apply to all taxable income if the foreign-source income were included in taxable income.

Belgium has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

(c) Belgium is honoring the Yugoslavia treaty with respect to Bosnia and Herzegovina, Kosovo, Montenegro, North Macedonia and Serbia.

Belgium has entered into an agreement dealing with double taxation with Taiwan. This treaty is not considered an international treaty because Belgium has not recognized Taiwan as a state.

Belgium has signed double tax treaties with Botswana, the Isle of Man, Macau, Moldova, Oman, Qatar and Uganda, but these treaties are not yet in force.

F. Belgian immigration for employees

When planning an assignment (short term or long term), a business trip to Belgium or local employment in Belgium, several questions need to be asked before clearance to travel and employment can be given.

The first question to be asked for immigration purposes is "What is the nationality of the individual?" The nationality is based on the valid passport(s). If the individual has several nationalities and passports, he or she can choose which one he or she wants to use.

For EEA and Swiss nationals, there are no immigration formalities for employment activities or travel to Belgium (that is, exemption from the Belgian work/single permit, short-term Schengen Visa C or long-term Schengen Visa D).

Since Brexit, special attention needs to be given to UK nationals and their family members. Employees and family members benefitting from the withdrawal agreement will have their residence rights safeguarded. Citizens of the United Kingdom and their family members who were lawfully residing in Belgium before the end of the transition period can continue to do so, but need to take into account certain administrative formalities. Beneficiaries of the withdrawal agreement should have received an invitation to request a new residence permit. UK nationals and their family members having their main residence in Belgium should receive an M-card, while commuters should receive an N permit. UK nationals entering or setting up residence in Belgium after 31 December 2020 (and accordingly cannot benefit from the withdrawal agreement) need to obtain a visa and a single permit. However, commuters only need to obtain an Annex 15; a visa and permit are not needed. A valid work authorization is also needed.

Entry, residence and employment. For short-term stays (90 days or less in any 180-day period), EEA nationals and Swiss nationals can enter and reside in Belgium on the basis of their passport or identification (ID) card. Non-EEA/Swiss nationals traveling to Belgium must, in principle, have obtained a short-term visa to enter Belgium unless a visa liberalization treaty has been concluded between Belgium and the traveler's home country.

If they are planning to stay more than 90 days, EEA and Swiss nationals intending to reside in Belgium must register with the local town hall within 90 days. They will then receive a national registration number and will obtain a proof of registration. They will also need to apply for an electronic ID card. For all non-EEA nationals (excluding Swiss nationals), further verification is required (see the second immigration-related question below).

The second immigration question to ask is “Does the individual already have a residence right in Belgium which might result in an exemption from the Belgian work/single permit?” This verification is based on the Belgian residence permit or ID card.

Holders of an unlimited residence right (that is, holders of the ID cards B, C or D) are exempted from obtaining a work authorization. In addition, the following, among others, are exempted from obtaining a work authorization:
- Spouses or registered partners of EEA/Swiss nationals (that is, holders of the ID cards F and F+)
- Spouses or registered partners of single permit holders (generally holding the ID card A)
- Trainees taking up mandatory internships in the framework of their studies in Belgium, Switzerland or in another EEA country

If the individual does not yet reside in Belgium, a third immigration question needs to be asked, which is “What activities will the individual undertake in Belgium?” Based on the actual activities to be performed in Belgium, an exemption from the Belgian work/single permit might be possible. The following are some examples of these activities:
- Attending meetings in closed or limited circles for a maximum 60 working days per calendar year with a maximum of 20 consecutive calendar days per meeting. The purpose must be only to attend meetings (for example, board meetings, contract discussions with potential clients and evaluation meetings and following classroom trainings).
- Secondment to Belgium within the framework of the provision of services by companies located in the EEA if there is compliance with “Vander Elst-requirements.” A local employment contract in an EEA country and a valid work and residence permit in the concerned EEA “home” country are required.
- Activities that must meet strict conditions, which are intra-group training for maximum of three months in the Belgian seat of the multinational group, assignment to Belgium for the initial assembly and/or the first installation of machinery, tools and similar items, and the activities of a specialized technician of a foreign company coming to Belgium to carry out urgent repair or maintenance work on machines or equipment.

If after this third immigration question, it is concluded that in view of the employment activities in Belgium no exemption from a work/single permit applies, it needs to be determined which immigration documents need to be applied for.

The time to be spent in Belgium, the activities to be performed and the actual place of employment (different rules may apply depending on the region) determine the following:
- Type of permit to be applied for
- Documents that need to be gathered
- Salary level that needs to be respected, which is the immigration salary threshold or applicable salary according to the competent joint committee

• The processing time
• The validity period of the permit

If a non-EEA/Swiss national comes to Belgium for up to 90 days (that is, a short stay), the following immigration actions need to be taken:

• Application for a work permit.
• Based on the nationality, travel is possible on the basis of the national passport (a short stay is possible for a maximum 90 days in any 180-day period in the Schengen area) or on the basis of a Schengen Visa C (required for nationals of countries listed in the European Community [EC] regulation).
• Depending on their place of stay in Belgium (hotel or not), formalities with respect to the Belgian town hall might be required (that is, declaration of arrival).

If a non-EEA/Swiss national comes to Belgium for more than 90 days, the following immigration actions need to be taken:

• An application for a single permit must be filed. The permit covers both the right to work and the right to reside in Belgium and is open to local employees and posted workers. As a result, only one application must be filed with the regional authorities (that is, the Brussels Capital Region, Flanders or Wallonia). All documentary evidence supporting the right to work and the right to reside needs to be provided at the start of the process.
• The regional authorities verify whether the file is admissible. If yes, they transfer the "residence" part of the file to the immigration office. The regional authorities verify the "employment" part of the file, and the immigration office verifies the "residence" part. If both parties approve, a notification is provided to the employer (or the proxy holder) and competent Belgian consular authority.
• Once the authorities have agreed to issue the single permit, further steps depend on whether the worker is already in Belgium. If the person is abroad, he or she needs to apply for a Visa D via the competent Belgian consular authority before entering Belgium. Once in Belgium, the individual must register with the town hall of his or her place of residence within eight days after arrival to obtain a document called Annex 49 and to obtain the actual single permit (that is, the Belgian ID card that allows residence and employment).

Regional differences. Access to the labor market is a regional competence in Belgium. Consequently, the different regions have separate legislations and apply different immigration salary thresholds, and different formalities and conditions apply when it comes to the verifications of the file done by the region. Therefore, it is important to verify the specific regional conditions applicable to each individual case.

G. Belgian immigration for self-employed persons

Non-EEA nationals (with the exception of Swiss nationals) who are self-employed must be in the possession of a professional card. The professional card functions as a work authorization and does not automatically cover residence. A residence permit might, therefore, be needed.

Self-employed persons who reside outside of Belgium and who come to Belgium for meetings for a maximum of 90 days are exempted from the professional card requirement. This is the case, for example, for board members/directors coming to Belgium to attend to board meetings.

The professional card is generally applied for at the Belgian embassy or consulate of the applicant's country of residence. A Visa D must then also be applied for. However, if the applicant already has a right to residence (for example, as the spouse of work permit holder), the professional card can be applied for in Belgium.

Access to certain professions is restricted in Belgium, and authorization from the competent authority is then required.

The professional card application is transferred via the competent Belgian consular authority, or the enterprise counter if the application is done in Belgium, to the regional authorities who will examine the file. Conditions to be met and procedures to follow will depend on the region in which the individual wants to apply because the application is a regional competence.

If the professional card is applied for outside Belgium, Belgian consular authorities are informed of the professional card's approval and are then able to issue a Visa D. After the Visa D is obtained, the applicant may enter Belgium and, within eight days after arrival, must register at the town hall of his or her place of residence. At this time, the person receives an electronic ID card A, which is, in principle, valid for one year and is renewable annually.

H. Belgian immigration for family members of employees and self-employed persons

Spouses and children of non-EEA nationals who hold a work permit, single permit, or professional card or are exempted from the requirement to obtain these documents, may reside in Belgium if they meet all entrance requirements of the Belgian authorities.

I. Limosa

The Belgian social security authorities must be notified about employees and self-employed persons who work on a temporary or part-time basis in Belgium and who habitually work or have been hired outside of Belgium and who are not subject to Belgian social security. This is known as the Limosa notification, which must be filed before such persons begin their activities in Belgium.

Certain exemptions exist with respect to the duration and the nature of the activities in Belgium. The abovementioned exemption for meetings in limited circles (see Section F) also applies as a LIMOSA exemption.

A. Income tax

Bermuda does not tax the income or capital gains of resident and nonresident individuals.

B. Payroll tax

For payroll tax compliance purposes, the fiscal year in Bermuda runs from 1 April through 31 March.

The Payroll Tax Amendment Act 2017 took effect on 1 April 2017. It increased the current tax cap on gross earnings from BMD750,000 to BMD900,000, effective from 1 April 2017. It also changed the structure of payroll tax into the following two separate portions:

- Employer portion
- Employee portion

These two portions must be calculated separately and reported by employers on the quarterly payroll tax returns. The sum of the two portions is the total payroll tax payable.

The employer remains responsible for the payment of both portions. However, they will have the option of deducting the employee portion from employee remuneration in full or in part.

The employer is responsible for calculating the full employee portion regardless of whether they deduct it from the employees.

The following are the payroll tax rates for the employer portion, which are based on gross annual remuneration:

- Annual payroll greater than BMD1 million: 10.25%
- Annual payroll from BMD500,000 to BMD1 million: 9%
- Annual payroll from BMD200,000 to BMD500,000: 7%
- Annual payroll less than BMD200,000: 1.75%

The employee portion of payroll tax is a separate amount and must be calculated separately from the employer portion.

Although as noted above, employers have the option to deduct the employee portion of payroll tax from employee remuneration, the responsibility to pay the full amount of tax (employer and employee portions) to the Office of the Tax Commissioner still rests with the employer.

The employee portion is calculated using the following marginal or progressive tax rate structure:
- From BMD0 to BMD48,000: 2%
- From BMD48,000 to BMD96,000: 8.5%
- From BMD96,000 to BMD235,000: 9%
- From BMD235,000 to BMD900,000: 9.5%

Items exempt from the payroll tax base include employers' contributions to social insurance, the Hospital Insurance Plan, approved retirement plans, hospital and health schemes, life insurance schemes, and workers' compensation schemes.

C. Estate tax

Estate tax in Bermuda is paid through a stamp duty which is payable based on the affidavit of value filed by the personal representatives of the deceased with the Supreme Court of Bermuda. For such purposes, the estate of the deceased person includes the following:
- All real and personal property in Bermuda of the deceased at the time of death, together with any property in which the deceased had an interest ceasing at his death to the extent that a benefit arises for someone else as result of the deceased's death (that is, the value of the remainder interest following the deceased's death if the deceased jointly owned a life interest).
- Money payable to the deceased's estate under any insurance policy. However, for a deceased person who was not domiciled in Bermuda, such money is deemed to form part of the estate only if such money is payable in Bermuda or in Bermuda currency.
- The value of a vessel or aircraft, or any share of a vessel or aircraft, belonging to the deceased if the vessel or aircraft is registered in Bermuda at the time of the deceased's death.

If the deceased is a Bermudian, estate tax is not payable on the value of the deceased's primary family homestead at the time of the deceased's death.

The following are the estate tax rates:
- On the first BMD100,000 of the value of the taxable estate: 0%
- On the next BMD100,000: 5%
- On the next BMD800,000: 10%
- On the next BMD1,000,000: 15%
- Thereafter: 20%

D. Social insurance

The Department of Social Insurance advised that a 4.2% increase in social insurance contribution is effective from 1 August 2018. As a result, contributions for Bermuda social insurance are payable at a flat rate of BMD71.84 per employee per week. The cost is typically shared equally between the employee and the employer, with each paying BMD35.92. As a result, the amount of BMD179.60 is generally deducted from each employee's monthly paycheck in a five-week month and BMD143.68 is deducted from each employee's monthly paycheck in a four-week month. These amounts are remitted together with the employer's matching amount to the Bermuda Social Insurance Department.

Exceptions. In some circumstances, individuals can be exempted from contributing to the Contributory Pension Fund. An application must be submitted to the Director of Social Insurance for the following persons:
- A student who works during periods of vacation or public holidays
- A person who earns less than BMD3,000 per year
- A widow or widower who is currently receiving a widow's or widower's benefit
- A nonresident who has worked for less than 26 consecutive weeks in Bermuda

E. Stamp duty

Stamp duty is charged on various legal instruments, including those detailed below.

The following are the rates of stamp duty for the sale of Bermuda land or property:
- On the first BMD100,000 of the amount or value or any part thereof: 2%
- On the next BMD400,000 of the amount or value or any part thereof: 3%
- On the next BMD500,000 of the amount or value or any part thereof: 4%
- On the next BMD500,000 of the amount or value or any part thereof: 6%
- Amount in excess of BMD1,500,000: 7%

F. Temporary entry

Visitors flying into Bermuda are normally allowed to stay for an initial period of 180 days. All travelers must hold a passport that is valid for 45 days beyond the expiration date of their travel and/or work permit. Applications for extensions may be made subsequently at the Department of Immigration's headquarters in Hamilton. However, in all cases, proof of financial viability for the period being considered must be furnished. This may be done by way of a local resident sponsoring the visit or by furnishing proof of funds and a place of residence. Proof of a valid passport and return airline ticket must also be submitted with a visitor extension application.

Visitors are not permitted to seek work or to engage in gainful occupation while in Bermuda.

Business visitors have the tacit approval of the Minister of Home Affairs to conduct business in Bermuda. There is no need for an employer to obtain Department of Immigration approval to land a business visitor if the business visitor is in possession of a return ticket (as well as a valid multi-re-entry visa if the business visitor is a Visa Controlled National), if the total length of the stay does not exceed 21 consecutive days and if the activities undertaken by the business visitor are limited to the following:
- Attending broker meetings
- Attending director meetings
- Attending shareholder meetings
- Attending general business meetings with employees of an organization if the visitor is not being remunerated by the

Bermuda-based organization (including external examination boards)

- Presenting business seminars or making other presentations if the seminars and presentations are not open to the general public and are not for the purpose of promoting investment schemes or other money-making ventures
- Entering Bermuda for training in techniques and work practices, if the training is conducted by a company affiliated by an ownership relationship and the training is limited to observation, familiarization and classroom instruction
- Entering Bermuda for a job interview
- Entering Bermuda to gather information, or make a presentation, in response to a Request for Proposal or a similar tendering process, if the business visitor is not being paid for his or her services by the Bermuda-based-organization
- Attending, presenting or exhibiting at conferences
- Internal auditing, including school accreditation and certification audits
- Visiting potential customers, purchasing, checking details or examining goods or services
- Visiting current clients to negotiate deals, contracts, policies and other agreements as a service provider (excluding traveling salespersons)
- Providing advice as a financial advisor if it is not in contravention of the 14 Investment Business Act 2003 and related regulations
- Work lasting not greater than seven days for the following if the services of such business visitors do not extend to clients of the Bermuda business and the training is for a specific, one-off purpose:
  - Journalists, models or photographers on an assignment for an international publication or for international electronic media
  - Religious officials providing services to a private wedding party
  - Advisors, consultants, trainers and troubleshooters, provided that they are employed abroad, directly by the same company (or group of companies) to which the Bermuda client belongs
- Interpreters or translators who are existing employees of an overseas organization and who are accompanying the business visitors
- Certified installers of equipment or software entering Bermuda to deploy, troubleshoot or debug and/or enhance their products for a Bermuda company whose purchase agreement includes installation and maintenance
- Fine artists creating works of art who intends to sell paintings of Bermuda abroad
- Sports professionals or professional teams who will be participating in a tournament or sporting event (provided they are not compensated by a person or entity resident in Bermuda)
- Lawyers, their clients, witnesses, experts and administrative support professionals visiting Bermuda in connection with international dispute resolution and/or preparation for and participation in international arbitration proceedings

- Lawyers visiting Bermuda to participate in insurance claims-related meetings (including mediations and other settlement meetings) involving insurance policies issued to policyholders located outside Bermuda and governed by laws other than the laws of Bermuda

G. Work permits

Standard Work Permit. All persons must obtain specific permission by or on behalf of the Minister of Home Affairs responsible for immigration if they are to engage in gainful occupation in Bermuda, unless they are the following:
- A Bermudian
- A spouse of a Bermudian
- A widow or widower of Bermudian
- A permanent resident

For the purposes of the discussion below, these persons are referred to as "Bermudians."

Prior to making an application for a Standard Work Permit in an open job category, employers must demonstrate that they have made a bona fide attempt to recruit a suitably qualified Bermudian. This includes advertising the role three consecutive times over a period of eight days in a local newspaper as well as a minimum of eight consecutive days on the Bermuda Government Job Board. Employers must disclose to the Department of Immigration the results of such recruitment efforts through the Recruitment Disclosure Form. This form should outline the publication dates of the advertisement, each applicant's contact details and the assessment details for each. Employers are required to inform all unsuccessful Bermudian applicants of the outcome of their applications before submitting work permit applications to the Department of Immigration. If no qualified and interested Bermudians are available, the employer may apply for a work permit to employ a non-Bermudian unless the position is in a closed category.

Advertisements must include the following:
- Title of the job.
- Telephone number and mailing address of the employer.
- Minimum qualifications and experience.
- Brief description of the job to be filled, which should be consistent with the normal functions associated with the job. An advertisement is invalid if it contains a job description that appears to be tailor-made to fit a particular existing or potential work permit holder.
- Deadline for application.

Unless special circumstances exist, the Department of Immigration imposes the same advertisement requirements for work permit renewals. The work permit application must be submitted within three months of the date on which the position was last advertised.

Work permit applications must be made in writing by the employer and addressed to the Chief Immigration Officer at the Department of Immigration.

With respect to international companies, the following exemptions to policies that govern domestic companies are in effect:

- Exempt companies are not generally required to advertise for the appointment of a new chief executive officer unless, in the opinion of the Minister of Labour, a special reason exists for doing so.
- Exempt companies are not generally required to advertise the job of an incumbent chief executive officer on expiration of his or her work permit unless, in the minister's opinion, a special reason exists for doing so.

These exemptions are granted at the discretion of the Chief Immigration Officer and must be requested in writing.

Special category work permits

Global Work Permit. A Global Work Permit allows a person who is already employed by a global company in another jurisdiction to transfer to the Bermuda office without the requirement to advertise the position. The employee must occupy a senior position within the company. To qualify for the Global Work Permit, the following conditions must be satisfied:

- The company must demonstrate that the Global Work Permit holder is not being transferred to fill a vacancy or a pre-existing position in Bermuda.
- The company must demonstrate that the employee has been employed within the organization for at least one year before transferring to the Bermuda office or provide specific reasons for transferring an employee with less than one year of service.

In addition, a Global Work Permit is automatically approved for an individual who earns at least BMD125,000 per year. Applicants earning less than BMD125,000 a year are considered on a case-by-case basis, and approval depends substantially on demonstrating that the addition of the Global Work Permit holder will add value to Bermuda.

A Global Work Permit is not available for positions listed in closed or restricted categories. At the end of the Global Work Permit term, the employer must advertise the position in the normal manner (Section 3.2 of the Immigration Policy Document).

Periodic Work Permit. A Periodic Work Permit is used by employers seeking to hire nonresident individuals who will make multiple visits to Bermuda over a period of time, staying no more than 30 days for each visit. The following are key aspects for the issuance of a Periodic Work Permit:

- Advertising for a Periodic Work Permit is not required.
- Periodic Work Permits may be granted for periods of one, two, three, four or five years.
- After arrival, if the holder of a Periodic Work Permit requires a stay longer than 30 days, the employer can apply for an extension of up to 30 more days.
- The Periodic Work Permit holder cannot be in Bermuda for more than a total of 180 days per calendar year.

New Business Work Permit. A New Business Work Permit allows an exempt company that is new to Bermuda to receive up to five work permits for overseas recruits for senior positions within the first six months of obtaining the first new business work permit.

Advertising the positions is not necessary. New Business Work Permit holders may be employed in any job category if their position is not an entry-level position, a graduate position, a trainee position or in the closed/restricted category. At the end of the New Business Work Permit term, the employer must advertise the position as noted above under Standard Work Permit.

Short Term Work Permit. Short Term Work Permits are issued at the request of employers who want to employ individuals to work for periods of up to six months. Applications are accepted for terms of up to three, four, five or six months. At the conclusion of the term of the Short Term Work Permit, the holder is expected to leave Bermuda, unless an extension is sought within the proper processing period. An employer must write to the Department of Immigration justifying the issuance of the Short Term Work Permit (and subsequent extension, if applicable). The Department of Immigration must then ensure that no Bermudian is available who can perform the task.

Global Entrepreneur Work Permit. A Global Entrepreneur Work Permit is issued for a one-year period for an individual to work and reside in Bermuda with respect to an exempted company or Section 114B startups.

Work activities may include the following:
- Business planning
- Seeking appropriate government or regulatory approval(s)
- Meeting compliance
- Financial requirements
- Raising capital

To apply for a Global Entrepreneur Work Permit, a letter of application must be sent to the Department of Immigration justifying the request, together with a letter from a Bermudian or Bermuda business services company verifying the intent of the applicant and a completed form.

The Minister of Home Affairs grants a permit if the Minister is satisfied that the applicant is a bona fide investor or businessperson that is likely to domicile a company in Bermuda.

Fintech Business Work Permit. A Fintech Business Work Permit allows a Fintech company that is new to Bermuda to receive automatic approval of up to five Fintech Business Work Permits for the first six months of obtaining the first new Fintech Business Work Permit. There is no need to advertise the positions. Fintech Business Work Permits are issued for one, two, three, four or five years. The fees for Fintech Business Work Permits are the same as the fees for Global Work Permits.

Letter of Permission. A Letter of Permission may be granted to a not-for-profit organization, a registered charity or religious institution for an individual, such as a coach or teacher of sports, clergy, a speaker or a musician or entertainer, regardless of whether the individual is being remunerated.

Such a person is given permission to stay for 30 days at the time the application is made. After landing, a Visitor's Extension may be granted (after applying and paying the required fee) as long as the total stay does not exceed 60 days. If a stay longer than 60 days is required, a work permit should be applied for.

Landing Permit. Landing Permits are issued to assist work permit holders who have a need to travel during the period of time during which a new work permit is being processed.

A Landing Permit provides proof that the work permit holder has a right of residence in Bermuda, and allows the work permit holder to be appropriately landed on return to Bermuda.

In all cases, although the application has been submitted, there is no decision on the work permit at the time of travel.

Emergency Permit. For emergency cases, employers should contact their respective department representative by phone to discuss the emergency request and to obtain instructions, and later submit in writing the particulars of the situation by way of a letter justifying the request for emergency service.

Processing times and fees. The following are the processing times and fees for the various types of work permits.

Type	Time frame*	Fees
Standard	20 business days	BMD966 to BMD6,200
Periodic	10 business days	BMD966 to BMD6,200
Short-term	10 business days	BMD672 to BMD1,019
Global	10 business days	BMD1,863 to BMD7,103
New Business	10 business days	BMD1,863 to BMD7,103
Global Entrepreneur	10 business days	BMD1,863
Fintech	10 business days	BMD1,863 to BMD7,103
Letter of Permission	10 business days	BMD116 to BMD580
Landing	5 business days	BMD37 to BMD252
Emergency	48 hours (decision only)	Depends on situation

* Assuming a complete application

Repatriation. In cases in which permission to work has expired and persons are required to leave Bermuda, the Department of Immigration allows 90 days to close off personal residency arrangements. If more time is required, a written request must be submitted to the department including justification for the additional time. If an agreement between the employer and the work permit holder provides that the work permit holder must leave Bermuda and/or vacate accommodation in a period of time less than the time frame specified above, the time frame agreed between the employer and the work permit holder prevails. Section 1.13 of the Immigration Policy Document provides that "when extensions of time are granted by the department that exceed the time period agreed with the employer to remain in Bermuda, the department may require funds for the work permit holder and sponsored dependents (if any) for their repatriation to their country of origin to be deposited with the Chief Immigration Officer pursuant to Section 130 of the Act. Persons who wish to seek alternative employment may request permission from the Department to do so."

Self-employment. Non-Bermudians are normally not permitted to be self-employed in Bermuda.

People who possess Spouses' Employment Rights Certificates (SERCs) may be self-employed at the discretion of the Minister of Labour. Policies governing self-employment apply to local companies only. Exempt companies may be owned and managed by non-Bermudians.

H. Residence permits

A Residential Certificate gives a retired individual the right to enter and live indefinitely in Bermuda. Holders of this certificate may not undertake employment in Bermuda or elsewhere.

The right to enter or live in Bermuda granted by a Residential Certificate does not extend to the holder's dependents other than the spouse, who may apply for and receive a certificate that runs concurrently with his or her spouse's certificate. Other dependents must obtain permission in their own right to enter and reside in Bermuda. Residential Certificate holders may acquire property in Bermuda if its annual rental value exceeds the minimum value for sale to non-Bermudians at the time of purchase.

Eligibility. The following groups of people are eligible to apply for Residential Certificates:

- Group A: Those owning residential property in Bermuda, including the leasehold of condominiums as well as the freehold of houses
- Group B: Those who have been gainfully employed in Bermuda for at least five years

In addition, to be eligible to apply for a Residential Certificate, an applicant must satisfy the following conditions:

- He or she must be retired.
- He or she must be over 50 years of age.
- He or she must have no more than two dependent children on arrival in Bermuda to take up residence.
- He or she must have substantial means (determined on a case-by-case basis).
- He or she must have good character.

Method of application. In general, a non-Bermudian wishing to apply for a Residential Certificate must submit to the Department of Immigration a completed application form.

Fees. No fee is charged for the grant of a Residential Certificate to a Group A applicant because these individuals have already paid substantial fees to the government to acquire property. Group B applicants must pay the appropriate fee set out in the Government Fees Regulations.

Revocation. The Minister of Home Affairs may revoke a Residential Certificate if the holder's circumstances change (for example, if a person qualified on the basis of owning residential property sells the property). The minister may also revoke a certificate at his or her discretion at any time.

Restriction on renting property. Residential Certificate holders are not permitted to rent out their residential property for extended periods. Certificate holders may, however, obtain permission from the Minister of Home Affairs to rent their property for short periods while they are abroad.

I. Family and personal considerations

Spouses. Spouses of Bermudians may compete for jobs on equal footing with Bermudians. Among the benefits granted to spouses are the following:
- Prospective employers are not required to advertise the jobs in question.
- Although non-Bermudians are normally barred from being self-employed, the Minister of Labour may approve self-employment for a spouse at the minister's discretion. Each case is considered on its own merits.
- A spouse may change jobs as often as he or she likes.

Applications are submitted to the Bermudian Status Section of the Department of Immigration.

Dependent children. A dependent child older than 16 years of age of non-Bermudian work permit holders may work with the permission of the Minister of Home Affairs. The dependent child's work permit may extend beyond the termination date of the work permit of the parent who is the supporting work permit holder. However, work permits are granted to dependent children on the condition that if the supporting work permit holder's permit is not renewed, then the dependent's work permit becomes void immediately. A dependent who has his or her own work permit may not have his or her name placed on a parent's confirmation of employment or re-entry letter. Dependent children, on attaining 18 years of age (25 years of age if in college), require permission in their own right to work and reside in Bermuda.

Dependents who wish to remain in Bermuda after the primary work permit holder has left Bermuda require special permission. If the dependent is a work permit holder, the case is determined on its merit. If the dependent is not a work permit holder, he or she is expected to leave Bermuda with the primary work permit holder.

Sponsored dependents residing in Bermuda. Sponsored dependents of the work permit holder may be given permission to reside with the work permit holder and seek employment provided that the sponsor submits proof of financial support for the sponsored dependents. Proof is a bank reference and evidence of medical coverage. The Department reserves the right to require further proof if required to assess the ability of the sponsor to support the sponsored dependents.

The following are the required salary levels for sponsors:
- Two-person household: salary level of BMD60,000 per year
- Three-person household: salary level of BMD100,000 per year
- Four-or-more-person household: salary level of BMD125,000 per year

English-speaking policy. Persons coming to work in Bermuda under the Portuguese Accord as well as those employed in the construction industry are required to have a working knowledge of the English language. In cases where English language skills are questionable, the person will be landed for seven days and may be required to undergo testing by the Department. Failure may result in the person being asked to leave Bermuda.

Penalties. Section 1.6 of the Immigration Policy Document provides that "Section 71A of the Bermuda Immigration and Protection Amendment (No. 2) Act 2013 empowers the Chief Immigration Officer to impose civil penalties of up to BMD10,000 on employers who abuse immigration policy. Employers and employees should review the Act to ensure they understand the consequence of making untruthful applications."

A. Income tax

Who is liable. All individuals domiciled or resident for tax purposes in Bolivia are subject to personal income tax (Régimen Complementario al Impuesto al Valor Agregado, or RC-IVA) on their total worldwide income. Nonresident individuals are taxed on Bolivian-source income only.

A work permit (visa) or similar documentation does not change resident status in Bolivia. A foreigner may obtain this permit if he or she fulfills certain requirements, most importantly, the obtainment of a resident visa.

Domicile is defined as residence in a particular place with the intention of staying there. The intention is proved through facts and circumstances, including employment in Bolivia or moving one's family into the country.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. In general, taxable income includes all wages, salaries, prizes, bonuses, gratuities, compensations and allowances in cash or in kind. It also includes fees for directors and trustees and salaries for owners and partners.

The following items are not included in taxable income:
- Salaries, fees or allowances received by diplomatic personnel, official personnel of diplomatic missions accredited in Bolivia and foreign employees employed by international organizations, foreign governments or foreign international organizations, as a direct reason of his or her position

- Christmas bonuses (the first one is mandatory, and the second one is mandatory only if annual growth of the country is higher than 4.5%)
- Social benefits resulting from indemnities and evictions, in accordance with existing legal rules
- Pre-family, wedding, birth, lactation, family and burial allowances received according to the Social Security Code
- Retirement and pension income, sick allowances, and professional risk allowances
- Life pensions given to persons who were members of the army in any war or life pensions given to members of the army who were injured in peace time
- Per diem and representation payments, evidenced by local or foreign invoices if they are company-related expenses

Investment income. Dividends paid to Bolivian residents are not subject to personal income tax. Residents are taxed on interest and royalties received.

Nonresidents are subject to a 12.5% withholding tax on dividends, interest and royalties.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employed persons are subject to the following taxes:
- Value-added tax (VAT) at a rate of 13%. This tax is paid on a monthly basis.
- Transactions tax at a rate of 3% on each service rendered. This tax is paid on a monthly basis.
- Corporate income tax at a rate of 25% (tax is calculated according to special rules). Up to 50% of the income tax can be offset by a tax credit equal to 13% of the purchase invoices obtained during the tax year. This tax is paid on an annual basis.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees not supported by a local fiscal invoice are taxed in the same manner as other personal income.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. The Bolivian tax law does not specifically address the taxation of employer-provided stock options. Based on the nature of the Bolivian personal income tax, employees are taxed on stock options when the beneficiary acquires the right and can use or transfer the option.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains derived by individuals are subject to personal income tax. Capital losses can offset capital gains.

Deductions and tax credits. For personal income tax on employees, the following tax deductions may be claimed with respect to taxable income:
- Employee contributions to social security institutions (12.71%) and national solidarity contribution (1%, 5% or 10%, depending on the total amount of the salary)
- The nontaxable minimum amount, which equals two minimum national salaries per month. The current minimum salary is BOB2,164 (USD311)

In addition, the following credits may be claimed with respect to the tax on the taxable income of employees:
• 13% of two minimum national salaries
• The VAT credit remaining after offset against VAT

Rate. The personal income tax rate is 13%, which equals the rate of VAT.

B. Tax on inheritances

Inheritances are subject to the Free Transmission of Goods Tax. This tax applies to each legal act involving the free transfer of movables, real estate, shares and rights subject to registration.

The beneficiaries of the transfers must pay the tax. The tax rates are the following:
• Parents, children and spouse: 1%
• Brothers, sisters and their descendants: 10%
• Other relatives, legatees and free donees: 20%

C. Social security

Contributions. Employers and employees are required to make long-term and short-term social security contributions (SSCs) based on the total monthly remuneration. The following are the contribution rates.

Institution	Employer %	Employee %
Short Term – SSC
Healthcare entity (a)	10	—
Long Term – SSC (b)
Housing Fund (Fondo de Vivienda [Provivienda], or FV) (c)	2	—
Professional risk (d)	1.71	—
Solidary contribution (e)	3	0.5
Retirement fund (f)	—	10
Common risk (g)	—	1.71
Administration commission (h)	—	0.5
National Solidarity Contribution (i)	—	1/5/10

(a) For contributions to the Healthcare entity, employees receive short-term health insurance, which covers medical care related to pregnancy, illnesses and accidents.
(b) The long-term SSCs are mandatory and are paid on the basis of 60 national minimum wages, equivalent to BOB129,840 (USD18,655).
(c) Based on this contribution, employees can obtain credits for the purchase or construction of a house.
(d) Based on this contribution, employees receive full or partial coverage for disability and death from accidents at the workplace.
(e) This contribution is aimed to distribute funds among the less-favored insured.
(f) This is a mandatory contribution to support employee's retirement.
(g) Based on this contribution, employees receive full or partial coverage for disability and death in accidents out of the workplace.
(h) This contribution is aimed to reward the Pension Fund for managing and administrating the collected contributions.
(i) Under Act No. 65 of December 2010, this contribution is aimed to accumulate funds that are then distributed among the less-favored insured. The following are the percentages of the contributions:
• 10% of the difference between the total earned and BOB35,000
• 5% of the difference between the total earned and BOB25,000
• 1% of the difference between the total earned and BOB13,000

Employers must withhold the employee contributions. They can pay these withholdings until the last working day of the following month.

Contributions of foreigners. Under Act No. 65 of December 2010, expatriates must make social security contributions in Bolivia. This law also provides that contributions can be transferred to the expatriate's home country if the following conditions are fulfilled:

- The expatriate ends his or her employment relationship and definitively leaves the country.
- The expatriate has not accessed his or her pensions in Bolivia.
- A bilateral or multilateral social security agreement is in effect with the destination country.

The Bolivian authorities have not yet established an application procedure to achieve the abovementioned transfer.

Totalization agreements. Bolivia has signed the Ibero-American Multilateral Agreement on Social Security. Countries that have effectively implemented this agreement are Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Ecuador, El Salvador, Spain, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal and Uruguay.

Expatriates can request the transfer of their contributions to other countries after they leave Bolivia. However, transfer procedures are not currently available.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Tax must be paid monthly when it is paid by a withholding agent and quarterly when it is paid directly by a taxpayer. The tax must be paid at the same time the tax return form is filed. The tax return form must be filed between the 13th and 22nd day of the month following the end of the reporting period. The due date is determined by the last digit of the Tax Identification Number (Número de Identificación Tributaria, or NIT).

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Bolivia has signed tax treaties with Argentina, France, Germany, Spain, Sweden and the United Kingdom. It has also signed the Andean Pact, which includes a tax treaty with Colombia, Ecuador and Peru.

F. Migration regime

In May 2013, Act No. 370, which describes the new migration regime, was issued. This law provides requirements for entry into Bolivia. It restricts the entry of undocumented foreigners as well as foreigners who have a criminal background or are not economically solvent. The regulatory Supreme Decree No. 1923 of March 2014 includes the visas described below.

G. Temporary visas

Tourist visas. Tourist visas are valid for 30 days and can be renewed for two more periods of 30 days each (that is, 90 days per year). Tourists can obtain these visas in their home countries if a Bolivian consulate is located there.

Specific object visas. Specific object visas are valid for 30 days and are renewable twice (that is, first renewal for up to 90 days, and second renewal for up to 180 days).

Other temporary visas. Other temporary visas can be obtained for one year and are renewable for up to two more years.

Cancellation of visas. A temporary visa is canceled if the expatriate, without the express authorization of the migratory authority, exceeds the terms of absence from the country. The following are the applicable terms of absence:
- Tourist visas: 8 days for each validity period
- Specific object visas and other temporary visas: 90 continuous or discontinuous days

H. Work visas and self-employment

Expatriates who want to engage in remunerated activities in Bolivia must apply for a visa or residence permit that entitles him or her to work. The most common of these documents are the provisional work permits for tourists, subject-to-contract visas and temporary visas (see Section G). Except for provisional work permits, these permits may be obtained after the expatriate has entered the country. Individuals may also obtain the documents before their arrival through a Bolivian consulate abroad.

Foreign nationals may establish businesses in Bolivia if they comply with all legal requirements. Companies may be headed by foreign nationals who are resident or domiciled in Bolivia for tax purposes.

The visas mentioned above allow individuals to reside and work in Bolivia. In addition, foreigners need to obtain a Foreign Tax Identification in order to be able to open a bank account, be registered in payroll and obtain a rental contract, among other actions.

I. Residence visas

Bolivia issues the following types of residence visas:
- Officials: Members of the consular and diplomatic corps.
- Temporary: Expatriates who want to work or perform other legal remunerated activities in Bolivia. This visa may be granted to individuals who have relatives in Bolivia or who intend to make investments that are considered advantageous for Bolivia.
- Subject-to-contract: Valid for one to two years, and may be renewed for an additional one- to two-year period.
- Student: Valid for up to one year and may be renewed for additional one-year periods, as many times as necessary.
- Political refugee: Issued to foreign nationals who intend to establish permanent residence in Bolivia.
- Permanent residence: An indefinite visa that grants to the expatriate the same rights as an ordinary Bolivian national, except for the right to vote and work at public offices.

In general, foreign nationals must submit all or some of the following items when applying for visas and permits:
- An application form
- Passport and documents proving current visa status

- Foreign national identification card
- Documents that prove professional status
- Documents that prove marital status
- Documents that evidence the activities that an applicant will perform in Bolivia, such as a labor contract, or documents that prove that the applicant has been accepted in a college or educational institution
- A certificate proving that the applicant has no criminal record (if the applicant has left the country for a period of three months or more, an international document proving no criminal record is required)
- Document proving economic solvency (bank statements, labor contract or others)
- A current photo of the applicant
- Payment for the procedure, which varies in relation to the type of visa (for specific types of work permits, the payment could be UFV160, UFV960 or UFV2,510 [USD54, USD327 or USD855]; UFV is an abbreviation for Unidad de Fomento a la Vivienda, which is a Bolivian index referring to inflation and changes daily)

A residence visa is canceled if the expatriate, without the express authorization of the migratory authority, is absent from the country for more than two consecutive years.

J. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family members of foreign personnel do not need separate or individual visas for residing in Bolivia. In addition, the children of foreign personnel do not need student visas to attend schools in Bolivia, but they must apply for dependent visas. A separate work visa must be obtained by any family member of a working foreign national who intends to work in Bolivia.

Driver's licenses. Foreign nationals may not drive legally in Bolivia using their home country driver's licenses. However, they may legally drive in Bolivia with an international license while the license is in force. Bolivia has driver's license reciprocity with a few countries. To obtain a Bolivian driver's license, a foreign national must take a basic written exam, a technical exam, a basic practical driving test and a basic medical exam.

On 10 October 2010, the country, Netherlands Antilles, which consisted of five island territories in the Caribbean Sea (Bonaire, Curaçao, Saba, Sint Eustatius and Sint Maarten), was dissolved. On dissolution of the Netherlands Antilles, the islands of Bonaire, Sint Eustatius and Saba (BES-Islands) became part of the Netherlands as extraordinary overseas municipalities. Curaçao and Sint Maarten have both become autonomous countries within the Kingdom of the Netherlands. A new tax regime applies to the BES-Islands, effective from 1 January 2011. The following chapter provides information on taxation in the BES-Islands only. Chapters on Curaçao and Sint Maarten appear in this guide.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents of the BES-Islands are taxable on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxable only on income derived from certain sources in the BES-Islands. Resident individuals who receive income, wherever earned, are subject to income tax in the BES-Islands.

Residence is determined based on an individual's domicile (the availability of a permanent home) and physical presence, and on the location of an individual's vital personal and economic interests.

Income subject to tax. The following sources of income are subject to tax in the BES-Islands:
- Income from movable property (dividend and interest income)
- Employment income
- Self-employment and business income
- Income from periodic allowances

Movable income. Dividend and interest income derived from domestic and foreign sources, less deductions, are generally subject to income tax at the rates set forth in Rates.

Nonresident individuals are taxed on income derived from shares, profit sharing rights, bonds or debt claims toward an entity that is established in the BES-Islands, capital gains received as a result of a transfer of a substantial share interest in resident companies, interest income derived from debt obligations if the principal amount of the obligation is secured by mortgaged real estate located in the BES-Islands, and profit-dependent remuneration from a business in Bonaire.

Employment income. Taxable employment income consists of employment income, including directors' fees, less itemized and standard deductions and allowances (see Deductions), pension premiums and social security contributions, whether paid or withheld.

Employees who have more than a 5% interest in their employer must report an annual deemed salary. The minimum deemed salary is USD14,000 (unless an exemption applies). The salary is treated similarly to ordinary employment income and is taxed at the rates set forth in Rates. Directors' salaries paid by BES-Islands companies are subject to withholding for wage tax and for social security insurance contributions.

Nonresident individuals receiving income from current or former employment carried on in the BES-Islands are subject to income tax and possibly social security contributions in the BES-Islands. Wage tax and social security contributions must be withheld from an individual's earnings. However, if the individual's stay does not exceed three months, the individual may request a full or partial exemption from the withholding requirement. Nonresidents who are employed by BES-Islands public entities are subject to income tax and social security contributions, even if the employment is carried on outside the BES-Islands.

Nonresident individuals receiving income as managing or supervisory directors of companies established in the BES-Islands are subject to income tax.

Self-employment and business income. Residents are subject to tax on their worldwide self-employment and business income, as well as on income derived from a profession.

Annual profits derived from a business must be calculated in accordance with sound business practices that are applied consistently. Taxable income is determined by subtracting the deductions and personal allowances specified in Deductions from annual profits.

A nonresident individual earning income from activities carried on in the BES-Islands through a permanent establishment or a permanent representative is subject to income tax in the BES-Islands. Profits of a permanent establishment are calculated in the same manner as profits of resident taxpayers.

Income from periodic allowances. Resident individuals are subject to tax on their worldwide periodic allowances, including old-age pensions (not related to previous employment), alimony payments and disability allowances. In general, periodic allowances are taxable if the allowances exceed their purchase price and if the purchase price has not (nor could have) been deducted from BES-Islands income or was considered to be a component of BES-Islands income.

Capital gains. In general, capital gains are exempt from tax. However, in the following circumstances, capital gains are taxable at the indicated rates.

Type of income	Rate (%)
Capital gains realized on the disposal of business assets and on the disposal of other assets if qualified as income from independently performed activities	30.4 to 35.4
Capital gains on the liquidation of a company or on the repurchase of shares by the company in excess of the average paid-up capital (non-substantial share interest)	30.4 to 35.4
Capital gains derived from the sale of a substantial share interest in a company*	5

* The taxpayer has a substantial share interest if the taxpayer or the taxpayer and his or her spouse have any of the following:
- At least 5% of the issued capital directly or indirectly as a shareholder in a company that has capital divided into shares
- Profit sharing that is related to at least 5% of the annual profits of the company
- Rights to acquire directly or indirectly shares representing at least 5% of the issued share capital

Deductions. A fixed deduction for acquisition costs in the amount of USD280 may be deducted from employment income. The actual employment-related expenses incurred may be fully deducted if and to the extent the expenses exceed USD560.

For residents, the available deductions are described below.

Personal deductions. The following deductions may be claimed:
- Alimony payments to a former spouse.
- Mortgage interest paid that is related to the taxpayer's dwelling (limited to USD15,364 annually).
- Maintenance expenses related to the taxpayer's dwelling (limited to 2% of the value of the dwelling, with a maximum deduction of USD1,676 annually). All of the maintenance expenses are deductible if the dwelling is a protected monument.
- Premiums paid for fire and natural disaster insurance related to the taxpayer's dwelling.
- Interest paid on consumer loans (limited to USD1,397 [USD2,794 if married] annually).
- Life insurance premiums that entitle taxpayers to annuity payments (up to a maximum of 5% of the income or USD559 annually).
- Pension premiums paid by the employee.
- Qualifying donations in excess of certain threshold amounts.

Extraordinary expenses. Extraordinary expenses include the following (thresholds apply):
- Financial support to children exceeding 27 years of age and other relatives not capable of providing for themselves
- Medical expenses
- Educational expenses
- Support for up to second-degree relatives

Business deductions. In general, business expenses are fully deductible. However, deductions of certain expenses are limited. The following deductions are available for self-employed individuals:
- Accelerated depreciation of fixed assets at a maximum rate of 33⅓%.
- An investment allowance of 8% for acquisitions of or improvements to fixed assets in the year of investment and in the immediately following year. The investment allowance is increased to 12% for acquisitions of new buildings or improvements to existing buildings. This allowance applies only if the investment amounts to more than USD2,794 in a year.

Deductions for nonresidents. Deductions for nonresidents include the following:
- Employment expenses
- Qualifying donations in excess of certain threshold amounts

Personal tax credits. The following personal tax credits are available to residents only:
- Fixed tax credit: USD12,575
- Senior allowance: USD1,421

Expatriate facility. Individuals that meet certain conditions can request the application of the expatriate facility. To qualify for the expatriate facility, an individual must meet the following conditions:
- The applicant must not have been a resident of the BES-Islands for the past five years.
- The applicant must have special skills at the college or university level and at least five years of relevant working experience at the required level.
- The applicant must receive remuneration from his or her employer of at least USD83,500.
- The applicant must possess skills that are scarcely available in the BES-Islands.

The employer must file the application. In principle, the expatriate status applies with retroactive effect to the beginning of the employment if the application is filed within three months after the beginning of the employment.

An employee with the expatriate status can receive limited amounts of fringe benefits tax-free, such as wages in kind, travel expenses, hotel expenses and expenses with respect to means of transportation and relocation. The remainder of the compensation paid to the expatriate by the employer is taxed at the progressive income tax rates (see Rates). In addition, a net employment contract can be entered into with the expatriate, and the wage tax should then not be grossed up as an additional benefit received from employment.

Rates. The following are the tax rates in the BES-Islands.

Taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding USD	Not exceeding USD	amount USD	excess %
0	290,640	0	30.4
290,640	—	88,355	35.4

Income from a substantial share interest in a company is taxed at a rate of 5%.

B. Social security contributions

All resident individuals must pay social security contributions. The contributions result in benefits under the following:

- General Old Age Pension Act (AOV)
- General Widows, Orphans Act (AWW)
- Decree for Health Insurance
- Accident Insurance Act (OV)
- Cessantia (severance contribution)
- Health Insurance Act (ZV)

For the calculation of the AOV, AWW and Health Insurance employee contributions, the maximum premium base is USD32,493. The OV, Cessantia, ZV and part of the BZV contributions are due only in the case of employment. The following are the rates of the social security contributions.

Employee contribution	Rate (%)
AOV	25
AWW	1.3
Health Insurance	0.5
Total	26.8

Employer contribution	Rate (%)
OV	0.3
Cessantia	0.1
Health Insurance	11.7
ZV	1.3

C. Tax filing and payment procedures

Filing and payment. Because the wage tax is a pre-levy to the income tax, employers must file wage withholding tax returns quarterly. The wage tax return must be filed by the 15th day of the month following the quarter in which the salaries are paid to employees. However, if certain conditions are met, the employer can request to pay the wage tax per month. For most employees, wage withholding tax is the final tax. The personal income tax returns for the calendar year must be filed within two months after the issuance of the income tax return forms, unless extensions for filing are obtained. Any additional income tax that is payable is normally due within two months after the date of the final assessment.

Effective from 29 March 2018, a guideline was implemented in the BES-Islands legislation for subjects such as collection, execution, interest, waiver and settlement.

Social security payments. Social security contributions are withheld by the employer and are declared together with the wage tax returns.

D. Residency and working permits

In general, foreign individuals who wish to reside and work in the BES-Islands need a residency and work permit. The conditions for obtaining such permit depend on the nationality of the individual. Special provisions apply to individuals with a Dutch passport.

E. Exchange of information

In the BES-Islands, various legislation for the exchange of information is in force. For example, following the Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act and Common Reporting Standard regulations, certain financial information regarding nonresident individuals that should be reported by financial institutions to the BES-Islands tax authorities is automatically exchanged with certain countries.

F. COVID-19 measures

The BES-Islands' COVID-19 measures are discussed below.

Payments. Taxpayers that are experiencing liquidity problems due to the COVID-19 pandemic can, until 1 October 2021, request a delay of payment of taxes due.

Interest and fines. If delay of payment has been requested due to the COVID-19 pandemic, instead of 6% interest, no interest on underpaid taxes will be charged and no fines will be imposed. The collection interest will be reintroduced in stages (collection interest of 2% as of 1 January 2022, which will be increased to 3% as of 1 January 2023 and further increased as of 1 January 2024 to 6%).

Annual deemed salary. For 2020, employees who have more than a 5% interest in their employer are allowed to report a deemed salary equal to the amount of commercial profit, but not lower than USD0 (unless the actual salary received is higher).

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals earning income in Botswana are subject to income tax.

Individuals are considered resident in Botswana for any tax year (1 July to 30 June) if they meet any of the following conditions:
- Their permanent place of abode is in Botswana.
- They are physically present in Botswana 183 or more days during the tax year.
- After staying in Botswana 183 or more days in a tax year, they physically remain in Botswana into the next tax year, even if they do not stay in Botswana 183 days during the latter tax year.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. With a few exceptions, income derived from sources outside Botswana is not subject to tax. All salaries paid, and benefits provided, for work performed in Botswana are taxable, regardless of where paid or provided. Special tables are used for calculating the taxable value of fringe benefits.

For individuals who receive retrenchment packages, one-third of the amount of the package, or an amount equal to the tax threshold, whichever is higher, is exempt from tax.

Educational allowances provided by employers to their local and expatriate employees' children are taxable.

Self-employment and business income. Business profits from self-employment activities are taxed at the rates described in Rates. Partners are individually subject to tax on their shares of business profits. If the owners of a company are residents and if the company's income is less than BWP300,000, they may elect to have the company's profits taxed in the same manner as partnership profits.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are added to the taxable income of residents and nonresidents. They are subject to withholding tax of 10% and 15%, respectively, effective from 1 July 2021.

Investment income. Royalties and rental income from Botswana sources are also included with other taxable income and are taxed at ordinary rates.

Dividends from resident companies are not included in taxable income and are subject to a 10% final withholding tax. The 10% rate is effective from 1 July 2021.

Interest, royalties, and management and consulting fees paid to nonresidents are subject to a 15% final withholding tax.

Interest paid to residents in excess of BWP7,800 is subject to 10% withholding tax, which is a provisional tax. A credit is granted for the withholding tax against tax chargeable on assessment.

Interest paid to resident individuals by banking institutions or building societies in Botswana is subject to 10% withholding tax. The withholding tax deducted is a final tax, and the interest earned by the individual does not form part of the individual's assessable income.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. No specific provisions regulate the taxation of employer-provided stock options. Under general principles, the employee is taxed at the time of exercise on the difference between the fair market value of the stock at the time of exercise and the strike price.

Capital gains. Capital gains tax is levied on gains derived from the sale of immovable capital assets and from the sale of corporate shares and debentures.

Gains on disposal of a principal private residence (PPR) by an individual are exempt from capital gains tax if the PPR has been held for five years. Any subsequent disposal of the PPR is exempt from capital gains tax if five years have elapsed since the tax year in which the exemption was granted.

To compute capital gains on sales of property acquired before 1 July 1982, the cost of acquisition and improvements is increased at a rate of 10%, compounded for every 12-month period from the date of acquisition to 1 July 1982, and then indexed for inflation from 1 July 1982 to the date of sale. For property acquired on or after 1 July 1982, the cost of acquisition and improvements is indexed for inflation in computing capital gains.

Only 75% of gains derived from sales of corporate shares is subject to tax. Gains on the sale of shares listed on the Botswana

Stock Exchange are exempt from tax if the shares have been held for a period of at least one year.

Net aggregate gains are subject to tax at the following rates.

Taxable gain BWP	Tax rate %	Tax due BWP	Cumulative tax due BWP
First 18,000	0	0	0
Next 54,000	5	2,700	2,700
Next 36,000	12.5	4,500	7,200
Next 36,000	18.75	6,750	13,950
Above 144,000	25	—	—

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. A single tax-free allowance of BWP48,000 (the amount is effective from 1 July 2021) is incorporated into the individual tax table applicable to residents. A deduction for approved pension fund contributions is also allowed, limited to 15% of income, excluding investment income.

Tax-free gratuities for non-citizens. One-third of a gratuity paid to a non-citizen employee is exempt from tax if the employee has completed a two-year contract of employment and if the gratuity payment is provided for in the employment contract. For the first contract, the one-third exemption is applied up to a maximum of 25% of an individual's cumulative salary, 27.5% for the second continuous contract and 30% for the third contract and subsequent contracts.

Business deductions. Business expenses of sole proprietorships and partnerships are deductible to the extent incurred in producing taxable income. Resident sole proprietors and partners may take the same salary deductions as employees.

Rates. The following table sets forth the income tax rates for residents, effective from 1 July 2021.

Taxable income BWP	Tax rate %	Tax due BWP	Cumulative tax due BWP
First 48,000	0	0	0
Next 36,000	5	1,800	1,800
Next 36,000	12.5	4,500	6,300
Next 36,000	18.75	6,750	13,050

The following table sets forth income tax rates for nonresidents, effective from 1 July 2021.

Taxable income BWP	Tax rate %	Tax due BWP	Cumulative tax due BWP
First 84,000	5	4,200	4,200
Next 36,000	12.5	4,500	8,700
Next 36,000	18.75	6,750	15,450

Relief for losses. Losses may be carried forward for five years on a first-in, first-out basis.

B. Capital transfer tax

The recipient of property transferred gratuitously or by inheritance is subject to capital transfer tax. Liberal exemptions apply. For example, all transfers between spouses and the first BWP100,000 transferred by inheritance are exempt. The following rates of capital transfer tax apply to individuals.

Taxable transfer BWP	Tax rate %	Tax due %	Cumulative tax due BWP
First 100,000	2	2,000	2,000
Next 200,000	3	6,000	8,000
Next 200,000	4	8,000	16,000
Above 500,000	5	—	—

C. Social security

Social security taxes are not levied in Botswana.

D. Filing and payment procedures

The tax year runs from 1 July to the following 30 June. Returns are due within 90 days after the end of the tax year, unless an extension is requested. Payment is due within 30 days after assessment.

The pay-as-you-earn (PAYE) scheme covers noncash benefits, including employer-provided housing, utilities and cars.

Married persons are taxed separately.

E. Tax treaties

Botswana has entered into double tax treaties with the following countries.

Barbados
Eswatini
France
India
Ireland
Mauritius
Mozambique
Namibia
Russian Federation
Seychelles
South Africa
Sweden
United Kingdom
Zambia
Zimbabwe

F. Visitor visas

All foreign nationals must obtain valid entry visas to enter Botswana, with the exception of nationals from most British Commonwealth countries and from the following countries with which Botswana has entered into visa-abolition agreements.

Austria
Belgium
Denmark
Finland
France
Germany
Greece
Iceland
Ireland
Italy
Japan
Liechtenstein
Luxembourg
Mozambique
Netherlands
Norway
Samoa (Western)
San Marino
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
United States
Uruguay

Although Bangladesh, Ghana, India, Nigeria, Pakistan and Sri Lanka are British Commonwealth countries, their citizens must have visas to enter Botswana.

All foreign nationals may visit Botswana as visitors or tourists subject to compliance with immigration regulations. Visitors are allowed a maximum of 90-day stays within a 12-month period. On application, they may be permitted by the Chief Immigration Officer to stay longer than 90 days. The various types of visitor visas are described below.

A continuous visa authorizes the holder to enter Botswana on an unlimited number of occasions within a period of 12 months from the date the visa is issued.

A transit visa authorizes the holder to pass through Botswana in transit to other countries for the period endorsed on the visa.

An ordinary visa authorizes the holder to enter Botswana on several occasions for the periods endorsed on the visa. Normally, this visa application takes at least 21 days to be processed. The visa is usually valid for no more than three months.

The following documents are required to apply for all visitor visas:
- A valid passport
- Letter of support from the host
- Letter requesting a visitor visa

Visas are issued at the discretion of the Chief Immigration Officer.

Visitors holding all types of visas are expected to provide their own financial support.

G. Work permits and self-employment

Foreign nationals may obtain work permits in Botswana. In general, the permit is granted for the requested period, up to five years. Work permits may be renewed for as long as their holders are employed. A foreign national holding a valid work permit may change employers after signing a contract with the new employer. However, his or her permit is canceled and he or she must reapply with respect to the new company. The approximate turnaround time for obtaining the outcome of a work permit application, after all appropriate documents are submitted, is 10 to 12 weeks.

Foreign nationals may be self-employed in Botswana if they hold investor work permits and residence permits. No set minimum capital investment is necessary. A work permit holder may operate any business that is not reserved for the citizens of Botswana.

H. Point-based system to consider applications for work and residence permits

In April 2012, the Ministry of Labour and Home Affairs implemented a point-based system (PBS) for the assessment of applications for work and residence permits. The objective of the PBS is to assist the Ministry of Labour Home Affairs and Regional Immigrants Selection Boards in the facilitation of the inflow of foreign investment into the country and the importation of skills. Under the PBS, points are awarded for the attributes that Botswana considers to be desirable in its immigrants.

Employees. The PBS awards points for employees based on the following categories:
- Age
- English language ability
- Scarce skill (as stipulated on the Skills Occupation List)
- Academic qualifications
- Professional and technical qualifications
- Affiliation to professional bodies
- Job offer in Botswana
- Residence in Botswana
- Partner skills
- Spouse of a citizen

Investors. The PBS awards points for investors based on the following categories:
- Business activity (should not be a reserved business activity)
- Export focus
- Use of local raw materials
- Financial investment
- Total investment (including loans)
- Proportion of Botswana employees
- Proportion of Botswana partners
- Age of investor
- English language ability
- Educational and professional qualifications (not applicable to businesses that do not require persons with professional qualifications for their operation)
- Specific work experience (dependent on number of years)
- Locality of business (rural, peri-urban or urban)
- Residence in Botswana

I. Residence permits

The following residence permits are issued in Botswana for the specified durations:
- Business: maximum 10 years
- Employment: maximum 5 years, depending on the duration of the contract
- Religious work: 2 years
- Students: depends on the duration of the course of study
- Dependents: varies based on the sponsor's residential status
- Research permits: duration according to the period requested

The following documents are required for foreign nationals pursuing business, employment, research and religious work, and for students, immigrants and dependents:
- Completed application form
- Medical forms completed by a medical practitioner
- Valid passport
- Proof of financial means for a dependent or a student
- Proof of investment and clearance from the Ministry of Commerce and Industry for self-employed applicants
- Qualification certificates and proof of employment

The applications for work and residence permits are considered simultaneously by the Regional Immigrants Selection Boards. All permits are renewable for an additional period if the Immigration Selection Board considers the renewal to be in the interest of Botswana.

The holder of a residence permit must take up residence in Botswana within six months after the date of approval. If he or she does not take up residence within six months, the permit may be canceled.

J. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The working expatriate's spouse and dependents must obtain separate residence and work permits. The dependents of an expatriate do not need student visas to attend schools in Botswana.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally in Botswana using their home-country driver's licenses. However, the foreign national should apply for a Botswana driver's license, but no time period is specified for this matter.

Foreign nationals who do not hold valid foreign driver's licenses must take written and physical driving exams to obtain Botswana driver's licenses.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are taxed on worldwide income. Non-residents are taxed on Brazilian-source income only.

Under Brazilian law, source is defined according to the place where the payer is located, regardless of where the services are provided. Therefore, income paid by a Brazilian entity is considered local source, while income paid abroad is considered foreign source.

Determination of residence for tax purposes depends on which visa an individual uses to enter the country and/or the physical presence test on entering the country.

Individuals are considered to be tax residents from the moment of arriving in Brazil if any of the following conditions are satisfied:
- They are involved in a local labor relationship.
- They hold a residence permit based on a statutory representative status.
- They hold a residence permit based on an investor status.

Other foreign nationals are taxed as nonresidents if they satisfy all the following conditions:
- They hold other types of temporary visas.
- They are not involved in a local labor relationship.
- They do not stay in Brazil for more than 183 days (consecutive or non-consecutive) during any 12-month period.

A foreign national who remains in Brazil for longer than 183 days is subject to tax on his or her worldwide income at the progressive rates applicable to residents.

Before their departure from Brazil, tax residents should file the Departure Communication and the Departure Income Tax Return and obtain tax clearance to resolve their final liability for Brazilian income tax. Otherwise, these individuals may be considered resident for tax purposes, subject to Brazilian income tax on worldwide income during the 12-month period following departure. From the time the individual files under the departure process mentioned above, taxation as a nonresident applies to Brazilian-source income only.

Income subject to tax. The various types of income subject to tax are described below.

Employment income. Taxable employment income generally includes wages, salaries, and any other type of remuneration and benefits received by an employee from an employer. The treatment of employer-provided allowances varies, as described below.

Under Brazilian law, individuals are taxed under a cash-basis system. Payments from foreign sources, including bonuses or premiums related to services rendered, that are made before or after an assignment in Brazil (non-tax resident period) are generally not taxable if received during a period when the individual is not a resident for tax purposes. Consequently, these payments should be scheduled so that they are received when the individual is not yet resident for tax purposes or after the individual applies under the departure process and requests tax clearance before repatriation.

Reimbursements received by employees from employers for income tax liability are recognized as income on a cash basis. If employers make the income tax payments directly, the amounts paid are taxable to the employees.

Schooling allowances for an individual's family members are considered indirect salary (a fringe benefit) and are taxed accordingly. For tax purposes, no distinction is made between amounts paid directly by the company or reimbursed by the company to an employee. Moving allowances are generally not taxable if paid by the employer.

Other allowances received by expatriates for work performed, including foreign service premiums and allowances for home leave, costs of living and housing, are subject to regular taxation.

However, under the Brazilian Labor Reform (Law #13,467/17), from 2017, the regular granting of meals, housing, clothing and allowances by an employer to the employee has a new interpretation. It is not considered as part of the individual's compensation for labor law purposes, nor is it considered ordinary compensation for labor and social security charges purposes. In this sense, these amounts, although usually granted, are no longer included in the employment contract or constitute the basis of incidence of any labor charges (for example, payments to the Severance Pay Indemnity Fund [FGTS]; see next paragraph).

Employees are not taxed on obligatory monthly deposits equivalent to 8% of gross salaries that are paid by employers to the FGTS, which is administered by the government. The amounts deposited, plus interest, may be withdrawn tax-free by the employees under certain conditions, including retirement or dismissal without just cause.

In addition, an employee who is dismissed arbitrarily or without just cause is entitled to a tax-free indemnification from the employer equal to 40% of the employer's deposits in the employee's FGTS fund.

The Labor Reform introduced a significant change in the Consolidation of Labor Laws. The Labor Reform created the possibility of an employee and employer negotiating a dismissal by mutual agreement. In this case, the total indemnification decreases to 20% instead of the above-mentioned 40%, and the employee is also entitled to immediately withdraw 80% of the FGTS fund.

Self-employment income. Self-employed resident individuals are subject to tax on income from a trade, business or profession, in accordance with the ordinary progressive personal income tax table (see Rates).

Investment income. Interest income received by resident individuals from sources abroad is generally included in taxable income and is taxed at the rates stated in Rates. Local financial income and gains from fixed or variable interest financial investments are taxed exclusively at source. The rates vary from 15% to 22.5%, depending on the investment term. In general, financial institutions withhold the tax due and the earnings are credited net.

Net rental income and royalty income from Brazilian and foreign sources are generally included in taxable income and are taxed at the rates stated in Rates.

Brazilian dividends paid to nonresidents are exempt from withholding tax. Rental payments to nonresidents from Brazilian sources are subject to a 15% final withholding tax, and other payments to nonresidents from Brazilian sources are generally subject to a 25% final withholding tax, unless a lower double tax treaty rate applies. Financial investments should be analyzed on a case-by-case basis.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Employer-provided stock options are not subject to tax at the time of grant. The taxation of equity plans represents a gray area in Brazil. In general, stock options are taxable at the time of exercise. The difference between the market price and the strike price is considered a fringe benefit and is taxable as employment income at a maximum rate of 27.5%. For purposes of capital gains tax, when the employee sells the shares the cost basis is the market value of the shares at the time of exercise (the spread between the strike price and the market value has already been taxed as employment income). A positive result from the sale of personal assets located outside Brazil is subject to capital gains tax at the rates stated in Capital gains. Capital gains earned by individuals on the sale of stocks on the Brazilian market are exempt from tax if the sale proceeds are equal to or lower than BRL20,000 in the month in which the sale occurs. In the case of the sale of stocks abroad, realized gains from sales proceeds of up to BRL35,000 in a given month are exempt from capital gains tax.

Capital gains. Capital gains are defined as the difference between the sale price of an asset and its acquisition price.

Under Law #13,259/16, effective from 1 January 2017, gains realized on the sale of assets and rights of any nature (real estate, vehicles and shares) are subject to the following progressive tax rates.

Exceeding BRL	Not exceeding BRL	Rate %
0	5,000,000	15
5,000,000	10,000,000	17.5
10,000,000	30,000,000	20
30,000,000	—	22.5

If the sale price exceeds the abovementioned thresholds, the entire gain is taxed at the rates stated in the above capital gains table.

For the purpose of calculating and paying the monthly tax on net gains, the losses calculated on the market operations may be offset against the net gains realized in the same month or in subsequent months from other market operations.

A special exemption is granted to individuals selling their only residence if they have owned it for at least five years and if the sale price does not exceed BRL440,000. In addition, gains derived from sales of residential real properties are exempt from tax if the seller uses the proceeds from the sale to buy other residential real estate properties in Brazil within 180 days from the first contract execution date.

Deductions. The following are the only deductible expenses permitted when calculating monthly income tax liability:
- Social security taxes paid to Brazilian federal, state or municipal entities
- Amounts paid as alimony and pensions in accordance with a Brazilian court decree
- BRL189.59 per month for each dependent, with no limitation on the number of dependents
- Brazilian Private Pension Fund contributions (PGBL or Fapi modes only), up to 12% of gross taxable income

On the annual federal income tax return, the taxpayer may elect the standard deduction, which is 20% of taxable income up to a maximum deduction of BRL16,754.34, or may deduct the following amounts:
- Brazilian Private Pension Fund contributions (PGBL or Fapi modes only), up to 12% of gross taxable income.
- Amounts paid as alimony and pensions in accordance with a court decree.
- BRL2,275.08 for each dependent, with no limitation on the number of dependents.
- Social security taxes paid to Brazilian federal, state or municipal entities.
- Payments made by the taxpayer or a dependent for educational expenses, up to an annual limit of BRL3,561.50 for each individual.
- Payments made during the calendar year to doctors, dentists, psychologists, physiotherapists, phono-audiologists, occupational therapists and hospitals, as well as expenses for laboratory tests and X-rays, with no limit. These payments are not deductible for income tax purposes if a health plan reimburses the individual for the payments.
- Payments for medical treatment plans managed by Brazilian companies or by companies authorized to carry out activities in Brazil, as well as payments made to entities to ensure the right to either medical attention or reimbursement for medical, dental and hospital expenses.
- Contributions directly made through the income tax return to the Children's Fund or to funds controlled by municipal, state and national councils for the elderly, up to 6% of income tax due with up to 3% being used for each category.
- Contributions for three types of actions made in the previous year, which are incentives to culture (such as donations, sponsorships and contributions to the National Fund for Culture), incentives to audiovisual activity and sports incentives, up to 6% of income tax due.
- Contributions to the National Programs for Supporting Health Care for People with Disabilities and Supporting Oncology Care. In this case, deductions are limited to 1% of the calculated income tax (not the income tax due).

Ordinarily, a dependent's medical expenses are deductible on the annual federal return. Expenses that are covered by insurance or reimbursed to the taxpayer are not deductible.

Rates. Federal income tax is levied on taxable income. Under Normative Instruction #1558/2015, the following tax rates apply to monthly taxable income.

Monthly taxable income		Deductible
Exceeding BRL	Not exceeding BRL	amount BRL	Rate %
0	1,903.98	0	0
1,903.98	2,826.65	142.80	7.5

3,751.05	4,664.68	636.13	22.5
4,664.68	—	869.36	27.5

The following rates apply to annual taxable income.

For information regarding the taxation of investment income paid to nonresidents, see Investment income.

Relief for losses. If a self-employed person's business activity shows a loss in one month, the loss may be carried forward to a later month in the same fiscal year (but not into a new year) if the proper supporting documentation is provided.

B. Estate and gift tax

The Senate has established a maximum estate and gift tax rate of 8%. States may levy estate and gift tax on transfers of real estate by donation and inheritance at any rate, up to 8%. A rate of 4% generally applies in São Paulo. In Rio de Janeiro, the rate can vary from 4% to 8%, depending on the values involved. Resident foreigners and nonresidents are subject to this tax on assets located in Brazil only.

For transfers of property through succession, inheritance or donation, the assets may be valued at either market value or the value stated in the declaration of assets of the deceased or donor. For transfers carried out at market value, the excess of market value over the value stated in the declaration of assets is subject to income tax at the rates stated in the capital gains table (from 15% to 22.5%) in Capital gains in Section A.

C. Social security

Contributions. All individuals earning remuneration from a Brazilian source are subject to local social security tax, which is withheld by the payer. Contributions are levied on employees at rates ranging from 8% to 14%, according to the following progressive table, depending on the level of remuneration, with a maximum required monthly contribution of BRL751.99 (for 2021).

Monthly income
Exceeding BRL	Not exceeding BRL	Rate %
0	1,100.00	7.5
1,100.00	2,203.48	9
2,203.48	3,305.22	12

Employers' contributions are calculated at approximately 26.8% to 28.8% of monthly employee's gross compensation, without ceiling. These contributions consist of ordinary social security contributions (20%) plus a percentage from 1% to 3% corresponding to the risk of the activity to the health or safety of the employee and additional social security contributions known as "s" system contributions (approximately 5.8%).

Corporate social contributions on employment-related income paid overseas (that is, the portion of split-payroll arrangements that is paid outside Brazil) are considered a gray area under the Brazilian tax law. According to Labor Reform, amounts paid, even if frequently, as fringe benefits, food allowances (not covered by its payment in cash), travel expenses, premiums and bonus allowances are not part of the employee's ordinary compensation. Accordingly, the above payments might not constitute basis for the calculation of labor and social security charges.

The Greater Brazil Plan took effect in August 2011. This plan changed the pricing model of social security contributions in Brazil with respect to the part of the contribution levied by the employer. Under this plan, employers do not pay the ordinary social contribution at a rate of 20% of payroll. Instead, the social security contribution is calculated according to a flat rate applicable to the gross revenue of the company, which can vary from 1% to 2.5%, depending on the sector and the case. The reduction allowed by the Greater Brazil Plan applies only to the ordinary employer social security contribution of 20%. It was valid until December 2020, but it was extended until December 2021 for some restricted sectors.

Self-employed individuals' contributions are calculated at a rate of 20% of base salary. The base salary is fixed by the government, and its value depends on when the self-employed individual joined the social security system. The maximum monthly contribution for a self-employed person is BRL1,286.71 (for 2021).

International social security agreements. Brazil has entered into social security totalization agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Argentina	France	Peru
Belgium	Germany	Portugal
Bolivia	Greece	Quebec
Canada	Italy	Spain
Cape Verde	Japan	Switzerland
Chile	Korea (South)	United States
Ecuador	Luxembourg	Uruguay
El Salvador	Paraguay

Brazil has also signed social security agreements with Angola, the Czech Republic, Bulgaria, Guinea-Bissau, India, Israel, Mozambique, São Tomé and Príncipe and Timor-Leste, but the Brazilian Congress has not yet ratified these treaties. Negotiations are in progress for social security agreements with Austria, China Mainland, Sweden and Ukraine.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The Brazilian tax year is the calendar year. Brazil imposes a pay-as-you-earn (PAYE) system. Under the PAYE system, income tax on income received by an individual through a foreign payroll should be paid on a monthly basis through a monthly income tax return commonly known as "carnê-leão." In addition, for the portion of the compensation paid through a Brazilian payroll, taxpayers are subject to withholding income tax.

Individuals who receive income from more than one source may pay the difference between tax paid or withheld at source and their total monthly tax liability at any time during the fiscal year or when they file their annual federal returns in the year following the tax year (the deadline for filing tax returns is generally the last business day of April). The balance of tax due is payable either in a lump sum when the return is filed or in eight monthly installments. The installments are subject to interest based on a monthly rate set by the Central Bank of Brazil (approximately 0.5% per month). Brazilian law does not provide for extensions to file tax returns. Nonresidents are not required to file tax returns.

Income tax on foreign earnings or on earnings received from other individuals in Brazil on which no Brazilian tax is withheld at source must be paid monthly, as described above. The tax is due on the last working day of the month following the month when the income is received. Late payments are subject to penalties (at a daily rate of 0.33%, limited to 20%) and to interest (at a monthly rate of approximately 0.5%).

Payments from companies to self-employed persons are subject to income tax withholding at source. The payer must withhold tax at the monthly rates set forth in Section A. If the payer makes several payments to a self-employed person during a month, the tax withheld at source must be calculated using the tax rate for the total amount paid that month.

To make monthly income tax payments, residents must register as individual income tax contributors and obtain an Individual Taxpayer Registry (Cadastro de Pessoa Física, or CPF) number. Disclosure of the CPF number is mandatory in most financial transactions.

Tax on capital gains derived from Brazil is generally not included in the total annual tax liability calculated in the annual federal income tax return. Instead, tax on capital gains is due on the last working day of the month following the month when the gain is realized. Special rules apply to gains derived from transactions on stock exchanges.

Married persons may be taxed jointly on all types of income if one spouse has no income and is listed as a dependent in the other spouse's return. In all other cases, married persons are taxed separately on all types of income.

Individuals resident or domiciled in Brazil who hold foreign assets of at least USD1 million on 31 December of the preceding year must annually declare their holdings of the following monetary assets, properties and rights to the Central Bank of Brazil:
- Foreign deposits
- Monetary loans
- Financing
- Leasing and financial leasing
- Direct investments
- Portfolio investments
- Investments involving derivative instruments
- Other investments, including real properties and other assets

The due date for the Declaration of Assets and Rights Held Abroad is 5 April of the following year. Penalties are imposed for failing to declare the required information or for submitting inaccurate declarations. Such declaration must be filed quarterly, based on the dates of 31 March, 30 June and 30 September, if the total value of the assets and other items that the declarant holds abroad is USD1 million or more on those dates.

Foreign nationals who were considered residents for tax purposes should apply under the departure process and obtain a tax clearance certificate from the Brazilian tax authorities before their definitive departure from Brazil. To obtain such certificate, individuals must file a Departure Communication and a Departure Income Tax Return covering the period of 1 January in the year of departure through the date on which the return is filed and pay all taxes due.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Brazil has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Argentina
Austria
Belgium
Canada
Chile
China Mainland
Czech Republic
Denmark
Ecuador
Finland
France
Hungary
India
Israel
Italy
Japan
Korea (South)
Luxembourg
Mexico
Netherlands
Norway
Peru
Philippines
Portugal
Russian Federation
Slovak Republic
South Africa
Spain
Sweden
Trinidad and Tobago
Turkey
Ukraine
Venezuela

In addition, the Brazilian Federal Revenue and Customs Secretariat recognizes that although Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States have not entered into formal tax treaties with Brazil, these countries waive reciprocal tax treatment for individuals who may be subject to double taxation. As a result, tax paid in one of the countries may be offset against the tax due in the other on the same earnings if all of the following requirements are satisfied:
- Same tax nature

- Same calculation basis
- Absence of a tax refund in the future

From a Brazilian perspective, even if the above requirements are met, foreign taxes may only be offset against the carnê-leão system (see Section D); it is not allowed to offset foreign income taxes against Brazilian payroll withholding taxation.

F. Visit visas (tourist or business purpose) and other types of visas

With the exceptions for nationals of countries that border Brazil and nationals of countries that do not require visas of Brazilians, foreign nationals must obtain valid entry visas to enter Brazil.

The visa is an individual document granted by the Brazilian consulate abroad, which provides expectation of entry into Brazil. After the visa holder enters the country, the Brazilian Federal Police defines the applicable immigration situation. The validity of the visa, which could be up to one year, is applicable at the first entry in Brazil.

The resident permit is granted by the Immigration Council, and it may have a temporary or indeterminate validity. Such authorization is ratified by the Federal Police at the moment of the visa registration.

The validity of the temporary visa is unrelated to the validity of the residence permit.

Visit visas. Visit visas are intended for visitors who will stay for a short period of time, with no intent to establish their residence in Brazil. This visa type is aimed at those who intend to enter Brazil for the following reasons:
- Tourism
- Informative, cultural, educational or recreational activities
- Family visits
- Participation in conferences, seminars, congresses or meetings
- Prospecting of commercial opportunities, transactions or signings of contracts
- Audit or consultancy
- Acting as an aircraft or vessel crew member
- Performance of volunteer services
- News coverage and reporting filming
- Research, teaching or academic extension activities

The visit visa does not allow the immigrant to receive remuneration in Brazil, except daily allowances.

This is also the case for a business visa, which is granted to short-term visitors who visit Brazil for specific purposes (for example, attending meetings and establishing business contacts). A business visa does not permit the holder to work for any locally owned or multinational company or organization located in Brazil, nor does it permit the holder to receive any remuneration in Brazil for products or services supplied.

In all cases, immigrants must obtain residence permits (see Section G) to receive remuneration in Brazil for services provided in Brazil.

The terms of business visas vary depending on the degree of reciprocity between Brazil and the home country of a foreign national. In general, business visas are valid for up to 10 years (depending on the consulate issuing the visa) and allow various entries into the country for stays of no longer than 90 days. Business visas are renewable once each year for an additional 90 days, for a total of 180 days per year. The visa must be renewed before the expiration of the 90 days; otherwise, the holder is subject to a fine. Depending on the nationality, an individual holding a temporary business visa can stay in Brazil for up to 90 days in a 6-month period.

Other types of visas. Visas are classified according to the purpose of the trip to Brazil, and not according to the type of passport presented. Under the new immigration law, the following types of visas are available.

Diplomatic Visa. Diplomatic Visas are granted to foreign officials and employees who have diplomatic status and travel to Brazil on an official mission, either on a temporary or permanent basis, representing foreign governments or international organizations recognized by Brazil.

Official Visa. Official Visas are granted to foreign administrative staff traveling to Brazil on an official mission, either on a temporary or permanent basis, representing foreign governments or international organizations recognized by the Brazilian government, or to foreigners traveling to Brazil under the official seal of their states.

Courtesy Visa. Courtesy Visas are granted to the following:
- Foreign personalities and officials on an unofficial trip to Brazil
- Spouses or partners, regardless of their gender, dependents and other family members who do not benefit from Diplomatic or Official Visa, for family reunification
- Domestic workers of foreign missions based in Brazil or of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs
- Foreign artists and sportspersons traveling to Brazil for free and primarily cultural events

Other. Nationals of countries that joined the Agreement on Residence for Nationals of the Mercado Comun del Cono Sur (Mercosur), which are Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Paraguay, Peru and Uruguay, may apply at a consular office for a temporary residence. Those who already live in Brazil can go directly to the Federal Police.

After two years in Brazil, Mercosur nationals holding a temporary residence permit can request residence for an indefinite period from the Federal Police. In addition, holders of certain types of work visas can request residence for an indefinite period by applying to the Immigration Council.

G. Temporary work permit (residence permit)

The following types of temporary work permits are based on the characteristics of the activities that will be performed in Brazil:
- Cultural or study trip
- Artist or entertainer
- Athlete
- Student

- Professional contracted by a Brazilian company or the government
- Scientist or teacher
- Technician or other professional without a local contract with a Brazilian company
- Correspondent for newspaper, magazine, radio, television or other foreign news agency
- Religious worker

A temporary work permit is designed for immigrants who have an interest in establishing residence in Brazil. For this type of work permit, the following may be considered:
- Research, teaching or academic activities
- Health treatment
- Humanitarian sheltering
- Study
- Work, including vacation work
- Practice of religious activities
- Volunteer service
- Investment purposes (including real estate)
- Activities with economic, social, scientific, technological or cultural relevance
- Family reunion
- Retirement and/or death pension benefit
- Artistic or sports activities with a contract for a determined term

Some temporary work permits may renewable for an additional equivalent period.

To obtain temporary work permits for their expatriate employees, employers must apply for authorization from the Immigration Council. The process and documents required depend on whether the work permit is based on a service contract between a Brazilian company and a foreign company (temporary technical work permit based on Normative Resolution 03) or whether the work permit is for an expatriate employee of a Brazilian company under a local work contract (temporary work permit based on Normative Resolution 02), such as a service contract.

For a temporary technical work permit, the contractor in Brazil initiates the procedure by applying to the Immigration Council. If the application is approved, the authorization is forwarded through the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to a designated Brazilian consulate abroad, where the individual designated in the service contract requests the issuance of the visa in the passport.

To obtain a temporary technical work permit under a service contract, the immigrant individual and the company must provide certain documents and information, including the technical service agreement between the companies.

To obtain a temporary work permit based on a labor contract with a Brazilian company, the individual must file proof of education and professional experience in addition to the passport. The employer in Brazil must also file certain documents with the Ministry of Justice and National Security, together with an employment contract.

H. Residence permits for indefinite period

Immigrant nationals who intend to establish permanent residence in Brazil may obtain residence permits for an indefinite period. This type of residence permit allows an immigrant to transfer his or her residency to Brazil for an indefinite period of time, beginning on the date on which he or she enters the country under this type of permit.

Self-employment. Immigrants may obtain a residence permit in Brazil as an investor to be able to be self-employed in the country. To obtain this type of residence permit, both of the following conditions must be satisfied:

- The immigrant must make a minimum investment, which is currently BRL500,000 if certain requirements are met, and register the investment at the Central Bank of Brazil. This limit may be reduced to BRL150,000 if certain requirements are met.
- The investor must present a plan of investment and a commitment to create work positions for Brazilian nationals.

The investment amount and the number of work positions referred to above may vary, depending on the region where the company is located. In the event of the cessation of the Brazilian business, the investment may be repatriated.

Statutory director of a Brazilian subsidiary. If an immigrant is to be appointed as statutory director (general manager, president or member of the board) of a Brazilian subsidiary of a foreign parent company, the company must present proof of an investment of BRL600,000 registered at the Central Bank of Brazil for each immigrant administrator applying for this type of residence permit.

Brazilian child, stable union or marriage. Immigrants who have a Brazilian-born child, have a stable union (common law) or are married to a Brazilian citizen may apply for a residence permit for an indefinite period.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Spouses of expatriates may work with dependent work visas. Working expatriates must list their dependents when applying for their visas. The listed dependents require dependent permits to reside in Brazil. These permits and the main applicant's work permit are applied for together. The children of working expatriates do not require student visas to attend schools in Brazil.

All dependents are allowed to work in Brazil.

Marital property regime. The Brazilian Civil Code provides for the following marital property regimes:

- Community property, under which all assets and liabilities of the spouses, whether acquired before or during the marriage, are held in common. Certain exemptions apply.
- Partial community property, under which assets acquired during the marriage are held in common.
- Separate property, under which assets acquired before and during the marriage are held separately.

- Final participation in the assets, under which each spouse has his or her own wealth, and in case of divorce, the couple divides only the assets acquired during the marriage.

The above regimes apply to heterosexual and same-sex couples married under the laws of Brazil. The partial community property regime automatically applies unless the spouses elect one of the other regimes in a prenuptial agreement.

Driver's permits. Immigrants from countries included in the Vienna Convention may drive legally in Brazil with their home country driver's licenses for up to 180 days. They can also use an international driver's license. These licenses are usually valid for one year. To drive in Brazil after this period, immigrants must obtain a Brazilian driver's license.

Fine and penalties. Penalties are imposed in case of violations of the immigration rules. Breaches committed by individuals face fines ranging from BRL100 to BRL10,000 per occurrence and those that are committed by a legal entity may range from BRL1,000 to BRL1 million per breach. In the case of recurrence, these penalties may be increased from one to five times and may reach BRL5 million.

A. Payroll tax

General. Under the Payroll Taxes Act, 2004, corporate tax, Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) income tax and any other income tax payable under the Income Tax Ordinance is applied at a 0% rate. Payroll tax is imposed on the following:

- Remuneration provided in cash or in kind by employers to employees and deemed employees
- Remuneration received in cash or in kind by self-employed persons
- Any benefits received in cash or in kind by employees, deemed employees or self-employed persons as a result of his or her employment

Remuneration is defined as the payment an employee receives for services rendered to his or her employer. The first USD10,000 of earnings is exempt from payroll tax. Persons receiving remuneration from a second employment are not entitled to the exemption of USD10,000 with respect to that remuneration because the exemption is granted only once.

Employers must pay the payroll tax, regardless of whether they withhold payroll tax from employee remuneration. Employers may withhold 8% of the remuneration of an employee and pay the amount withheld together with the balance of the tax due to the Department of Inland Revenue. Employers may not withhold payroll tax from the first USD10,000 paid to an employee in a tax year.

Individuals are not subject to tax on investment income in the British Virgin Islands.

Rates. The applicable rate of payroll tax depends on whether the employer is classified as a Class I employer or Class II employer.

Class I employers. For Class I employers, which include self-employed persons, payroll tax is imposed at a rate of 10%.

A Class I employer or self-employed person is one who meets the following conditions:

- Its annual payroll does not exceed USD150,000.
- Its annual turnover or gross receipts does not exceed USD300,000.
- The total of its employees and deemed employees does not exceed seven.

Class II employers. For Class II employers, which include self-employed persons, payroll tax is imposed at a rate of 14%.

A Class II employer is an employer that does not satisfy all the requirements for qualification as a Class I employer.

Capital gains. No tax is levied on capital gains. However, transfers of real property are subject to stamp duty at a rate of up to 4% of the sales price or market value of the property, whichever is higher. The rate of the duty is increased to 12% if the sale is made to a non-British Virgin Islander. British Virgin Islanders are persons who are born in the British Virgin Islands or who obtain "belonger" status, as defined by law.

B. Social security and health insurance

Social security. All employers and employees must contribute to the National Insurance Scheme. The total contribution rate is 8.5%; employers pay 4.5% and employees pay 4%.

Contributions are based on the amount of weekly or monthly wages, up to maximum weekly wages of USD850 or to monthly wages of USD3,683.33. Consequently, the maximum annual contribution is USD1,989 for employers and USD1,768 for employees.

Health insurance. The National Health Insurance (NHI) regime requires employers and employees to pay 3.75% each on the employee's monthly income. The maximum income on which NHI premiums is assessed is two times the upper wage limit for social security contributions, which equals USD7,366.67 per month. Consequently, the maximum monthly amount payable by employees and employers is USD276.25 each. Employees also must contribute an additional 3.75% on behalf of an unemployed spouse.

C. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year is the calendar year. Employers and self-employed persons must pay the payroll tax within 21 days after the end of each month for which the tax is due. A failure to comply with this rule results in the imposition of a penalty of 5% on the outstanding tax. The Commissioner of Inland Revenue may request that a return of payroll or remuneration for a tax year be submitted to the Inland Revenue.

Married persons are taxed separately.

D. Temporary permits

In general, all visitors may enter the British Virgin Islands if they meet certain requirements.

A person entering the British Virgin Islands to visit must satisfy the Immigration Officer at the port of entry that he or she satisfies all of the following requirements:

- He or she possesses a valid travel document.
- He or she does not intend to remain permanently in the British Virgin Islands.
- He or she has sufficient funds to support himself or herself, as well as any dependents, without working for the duration of his or her stay, and can meet the cost of return or onward travel. In general, a return ticket is required.

Citizens of the British Commonwealth, except Guyana and Jamaica, do not require visas to visit the British Virgin Islands.

All visitors to the British Virgin Islands are allowed entry without medical certification for 30 days. After the 30-day period expires, visitors can apply for an extension with the Department of Immigration.

E. Work permits and self-employment

Persons who are employed in the British Virgin Islands on a temporary or periodic basis must obtain temporary or periodic work permits (as applicable).

Work permits for foreign nationals are issued by the Labour Department for specific positions with specific employers if the positions cannot be filled locally. The permits are usually valid for one-year periods. However, one month before expiration, they may be submitted for renewal. Temporary work permits are issued to persons to enter and work in the British Virgin Islands for a single period not exceeding three months. Periodic work permits are issued to persons to enter and work in the British Virgin Islands for short periods within a one-year period.

Individuals renewing work permits must apply for Certificates of Good Standing and Certificates of Earnings from Social Security National Health Insurance and the Inland Revenue Department before submitting their renewal application. They must also apply for Certificates of Good Standing for the firm or company. The cost of each Certificate of Good Standing and Certificate of Earnings from Social Security National Health Insurance is USD20, while the cost for a Certificate of Good Standing and Certificate of Earnings from the Inland Revenue Department is USD50 and USD25, respectively.

Individuals in the following categories are not required to obtain work permits:

- Expatriate government employees from other territories who possess a letter from the British Virgin Islands' government offering them employment.
- Expatriates married to local men and women for at least three years. However, they must apply to the Ministry of Labour for this exemption.
- Children of expatriates who have completed their primary and secondary education in the British Virgin Islands.
- Individuals entering the British Virgin Islands to provide volunteer services. They are issued an exemption on application to the Ministry of Labour.

In general, an applicant cannot reside in the British Virgin Islands during the period during which his or her work permit application is being processed. However, if the applicant is changing employers and has worked and lived in the jurisdiction for five years or more, he or she is not required to leave while his or her work permit is being processed. Approval of work permits may be issued within six to eight weeks if all of the appropriate documentation is in order when it is submitted to the Labour Department.

A person coming to the British Virgin Islands for the purpose of employment must produce the following documents at the port of entry:

- A letter issued to his or her prospective employer by the Labour Department approving employment in the British Virgin Islands together with all documents stipulated in the letter. The possession of such a letter does not absolve the holder from complying with visa or immigration requirements.
- A certificate of good health from the country where the applicant lived before arrival.
- A recent Police Certificate of Character issued by the police department in the applicant's country of residence or any other country where the applicant has lived since becoming 18 years old.
- Evidence of a return travel booking to the applicant's country of origin.
- Two passport-size photos.
- Proof of address in the jurisdiction.

Applicants wishing to establish businesses in the British Virgin Islands must obtain the following:

- Trade licenses from the Chief Minister's Office
- Work permits from the Labour Department
- Documents required for permanent residence
- Entry permits from the Immigration Department

F. Annual and permanent residence

Permanent residency is reserved for those individuals who have lived in the British Virgin Islands continuously for 20 years or more, and who qualify after normal screening processes. Applicants for permanent residence must satisfy the same requirements at the port of entry as other visitors (see Section E).

If a person does not satisfy the 20-year requirement, he may instead apply for permission to reside in the British Virgin Islands. Permission to Reside is effectively an entry permit that is renewable from year to year. A successful application involves establishing to the Chief Immigration Officer that the applicant is of good character and, more importantly, has sufficient funds to support himself or herself and any dependents while in the British Virgin Islands. This requirement may be satisfied by producing bank statements, a statement of pension entitlement or any other evidence that the applicant has funds adequate for this purpose. The holders of this status are not eligible for work permits and cannot legally work in the British Virgin Islands.

An application for permission to reside must be submitted to the Chief Immigration Officer of the Immigration Department and must be supported by the following:

- Evidence that the applicant wishes to make the British Virgin Islands his or her home
- Evidence of financial support for the applicant and any dependents
- Evidence of marriage, if applicable
- Evidence of birth
- Photograph of applicant and any dependents
- A certificate of good health from the country of embarkation
- Two copies of a Police Certificate of Character, one from the applicant's country of birth and one from his or her country of residence prior to arrival
- Immunization records for children
- School transcripts for children
- Application to ministry of education for children

G. Family and personal considerations

Marital property regime. No community property or other similar marital property regime is in effect in the British Virgin Islands.

Driver's permits. An expatriate can drive legally in the British Virgin Islands using his or her home country's driver's license for one month. However, because the British Virgin Islands does not have driver's license reciprocity with any other countries, a foreign national must obtain a temporary three-month driver's license from the Department of Motor Vehicles in the British Virgin Islands. To obtain the temporary license, proof of a current valid driver's license from the expatriate's home country must be provided to the Department of Motor Vehicles. On expiration of the temporary driver's license, the applicant may apply for a permanent driver's license within one month by presenting his or her work permit, documents of residency or certificate of land ownership, and taking a written and road test within one month of residing in the British Virgin Islands. A visitor may apply for a three-month temporary license by providing a valid foreign license and passport to prove that he or she is not a resident. Expatriates now must now take both written and road tests to obtain a permanent driver's license.

A. Income tax

Who is liable

Territoriality. Individuals who are tax residents in Bulgaria are subject to income tax on their worldwide income. Individuals who are nonresidents for tax purposes are subject to income tax on their income from a source in Bulgaria.

Definition of tax resident. An individual is considered a tax resident for a calendar tax year if he or she satisfies either of the following conditions:
- On any day in that year, he or she has spent more than 183 days in Bulgaria in the previous 12 months.
- His or her center of vital interests is considered to be in Bulgaria.

Days of entry and departure count as days of presence in Bulgaria.

The center of vital interests is considered to be in Bulgaria if the individual's personal and economic interests are tightly connected to Bulgaria based on actual facts and circumstances such as family residence, real estate owned or place of work.

Tax residence status is determined for the entire tax year, which coincides with the calendar year.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Employed individuals are subject to income tax on remuneration (money or benefits in kind) paid or provided by or on behalf of an employer. Income derived from employment activities performed in Bulgaria has a Bulgarian source. The following employment income is exempt from tax:
- The amount of per diems received by an outbound employee of a Bulgarian employer that are related to business trips within Bulgaria and abroad up to double the statutory amounts determined by law if the trip does not constitute posting in line with the European Union (EU) rules on posted workers
- Travel and accommodation expenses relating to business trips covered by supporting documentation
- Certain social benefits provided by and taxed at the level of the employer

Employer-provided share units or options are taxed as employment income at the time of the transfer of the shares.

Private use of company assets is also considered employment income and can be reported either at the individual or company level, at the option of the employer. The employer must apply the chosen reporting with respect to all employees and cannot apply different reporting regimes for different employees.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employment and business income is income derived from professional services and business activities, such as the following:
- Income from activity as a sole entrepreneur
- Copyright royalties
- Agricultural income
- Forestry income
- Earnings from other self-employment and non-employment activities

A fixed deduction of 25%, 40% or 60% of gross revenue applies, depending on the type of activity, with the exception of sole entrepreneurs, who may deduct the actual expenses of the business.

Interest income. Interest income is taxable at a rate of 10%. Interest realized by Bulgarian tax residents from bank deposits is subject to withholding tax of 8%.

Directors' fees. Management income, including directors' fees, paid to residents is taxed as employment income. Any deductions that may be applied to residents may be claimed by nonresidents who are residents of EU countries and countries of the European Economic Area (EEA) through the filing of an annual tax return (see Section D).

Other income. A fixed deduction equal to 10% of revenue applies when determining the taxable rental income of residents. Nonresidents who are residents of other EU countries and countries of the EEA may apply the same deduction through the filing of an annual tax return (see Section D).

Payments for rights, damages and indemnities to residents in low-tax jurisdictions are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 10%.

Dividends and liquidation proceeds from participations in the profits of Bulgarian entities are considered Bulgarian-source taxable income. Foreign-source dividend income derived by Bulgarian tax residents is also taxable in Bulgaria at a rate of 5%.

Capital gains

Shares. Income derived from the sale of shares and other financial assets is taxable if a gain has been realized. Gains on disposals of securities traded through the Bulgarian or an EU/EEA stock exchange are exempt from tax.

The taxable gain is the positive difference between the total amount of profits realized during the year less the total amount of losses during the year, both determined for each transaction.

Non-monetary contributions to the capital of a company. For non-monetary contributions to the capital of a company, no tax is levied at the moment the contribution is made. However, if the contribution is subsequently sold, followed by a reduction in capital and payment to the shareholder, the realized gain is taxable at the individual level.

Real estate. Bulgarian and EU/EEA tax residents are not subject to tax on a gain derived from the disposal of one principal private residence in a year if the residence has been owned for at least three years. Such residents are also exempt from tax on gains derived from up to two other real estate properties if the properties have been owned for at least five years.

A fixed deduction of 10% of the taxable gain (sales price minus purchase price) on the disposal of real estate applies.

Exempt income. Income from scholarships, pensions derived from compulsory social security schemes in Bulgaria and abroad, alimony and certain insurance payments are not taxable.

Deductions. Individuals may claim deductions only if they have no outstanding public liabilities subject to public enforcement at the time of claiming the deduction.

Donations. Gifts and donations to Bulgarian and similar EU/EEA charitable institutions and other welfare institutions are deductible up to 5% of the annual tax base. A deduction of up to 50% applies to gifts and donations to special funds for children's medical treatment and assisted reproduction.

Child benefits. Bulgarian and EU/EEA tax residents may now deduct BGN200 per child from their annual tax base for up to three minor children. A deduction of BGN2,000 from the annual tax base is also available for taking care of a child with disabilities. Only one of the parents or legal guardians can benefit from these deductions.

Mortgage interest. Interest paid on the first BGN100,000 of a mortgage loan is tax deductible for married couples if all of the following conditions are satisfied:

- The taxpayer or his or her spouse was below the age of 35 when the mortgage agreement was concluded.
- The mortgage loan contract entered into force after the date of the marriage.
- The real estate subject to the mortgage is the only residential property owned by the family.

This deduction is also available to nonresidents from other EU/EEA countries.

Mandatory social security and health insurance contributions. Social security and health insurance contributions made by individuals to mandatory Bulgarian and EU/EEA systems, or mandatory systems of countries with which a totalization agreement is available, are deductible for tax purposes. Official documentation from the social security institution must be presented as proof for the paid contributions. The deduction can be applied on a monthly or on an annual basis.

Voluntary social security contributions. Deductions equaling up to 10% of the tax base may be claimed for voluntary pension contributions by individuals. In addition, deductions equaling up to 10% of the tax base may be claimed for voluntary health and life insurance contributions made by individuals to Bulgarian or EU/EEA authorized funds.

Deduction for cashless payments. A deduction of 1% of the tax due (but no more than BGN500) may be claimed by individuals who have received 100% of their income into their bank accounts and have spent at least 80% of it by making cashless payments.

Deduction for repairing or improvement of residential property. A deduction amounting up to BGN2,000 from the annual tax base for property repairing or improvement applies if the residential property is in Bulgaria, if the beneficiary is the owner of the property and if the improvement or repair has been done by Bulgarian or EU/EEA residents. Only expenditures for labor are deductible, not equipment or construction materials.

Tax rates. The rate of income tax is a flat 10%, except for dividend income, which is taxed at a rate of 5%, and the income of sole entrepreneurs, which is taxed at a rate of 15%.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

Inheritance tax is levied on all property located in Bulgaria and is paid by the recipient. Property located outside Bulgaria that is owned by Bulgarian citizens is also subject to inheritance tax. Spouses, parents and more remote ancestors and direct descendants are not subject to inheritance tax. The following flat rates apply for determining the inheritance tax for other heirs:

- For brothers, sisters and their children, the tax rate ranges from 0.4% to 0.8% (determined by the local Municipal Council of the last permanent residence of the deceased) for an inheritance share over BGN250,000
- For other heirs subject to inheritance tax, the tax rate ranges from 3.3% to 6.6% (determined by the local Municipal Council of the last permanent residence of the deceased) for an inheritance share over BGN250,000

Property acquired as a gift is taxable unless the gift is given by a spouse or the gift is made between descendants. The tax base is the value of the property at the moment of transfer determined by the tax authorities or the Municipal Council. The applicable rates vary by location and type of property.

C. Social security

Contributions. Different social security regimes apply to employees and self-employed individuals. Social security contributions payable by self-employed individuals vary depending on the individual's activity.

Individuals performing working activities in Bulgaria are subject to Bulgarian mandatory social security contributions unless an exemption is provided. Labor is divided into three categories, depending on the characteristics of the work performed. Professions involving harmful or risky conditions are included in the first or second category. The following table provides the rates effective from 1 January 2021 for contributions payable by employers and employees with respect to employees in the third labor category (normal work conditions) who were born after 1 January 1960 and work under employment contracts governed by the Labor Code.

	Employer's share (%)	Employee's share (%)	Total (%)
Pension Fund	8.22	6.58	14.8
Illness and Maternity Fund	2.1	1.4	3.5
Accident and Occupational Disease Fund	0.4 to 1.1*	0	0.4 to 1.1
Additional mandatory social insurance for individuals born on or after 1 January 1960	2.8	2.2	5
Unemployment Fund	0.6	0.4	1
Health insurance	4.8	3.2	8

* The percentage depends on the category of basic economic activities into which the company falls.

The monthly social security base is capped at BGN3,000.

Coverage. Employees working in Bulgaria under an employment contract are covered under all of the social security funds, as well as the Pension Fund. Third-country nationals with long-term residence permits (non-Bulgarian and non-EU/EEA, except for citizens of Albania, Montenegro, North Macedonia and Serbia) are not subject to the health insurance system.

Sole entrepreneurs and freelancers insure themselves by paying contributions on a level of monthly income selected by them of at least BGN650. For these individuals, the annual amount of social security and health insurance contributions is recalculated at the end of the year based on actual annual income received, up to a maximum of BGN36,000. The rate of the contribution is 27.8% or 31.3%, depending on the scope of coverage desired.

Exemption. Exemption from paying social security contributions in Bulgaria may apply under the provisions of EU Regulation 883/2004 or a bilateral social security agreement. Bulgaria has entered into bilateral social security agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Albania	Korea (South)	Russian Federation
Azerbaijan (a)	Libya	Serbia
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Moldova	Tunisia
Brazil (b)	Montenegro	Turkey (a)
Canada	Morocco (b)	Ukraine
Israel	North Macedonia
	Quebec

(a) This agreement has a limited scope of applicability.
(b) This agreement has been ratified and is pending entry into force.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Payment of tax

Employment income. An advance tax payment on employment income is due on a monthly basis. The employer withholds advance tax from the salary payment and must remit and report it to the tax authorities by the 25th day of the month following the month of payment of the income. A tax rate of 10% is applied to the tax base.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employed individuals must pay advance tax of 10% by the end of the month following the quarter of the earning of the income.

Advance tax of 15% applies to income derived from activities of sole entrepreneurs under the provisions of the Corporate Tax Act.

Directors' fees. Management income is treated as employment income if derived by residents. If nonresidents derive management income with a Bulgarian source, it is subject to 10% withholding tax. Management income earned from a fixed place of business outside Bulgaria is specifically distinguished from employment income.

Rental income. Rental income is subject to a 10% tax. This tax must be withheld and reported on a quarterly basis by the tenant if the tenant is an enterprise or a freelancer. For foreign entities or freelancers who do not have Bulgarian reporting obligations, the reporting must be done by the recipients of the income.

Interest income. Interest income is taxable at 10% on an annual basis. Withholding tax at a rate of 10% applies to nonresidents. Interest on bank deposits is taxable at a rate of 8%.

Dividend income. A 5% withholding tax applies to income from dividends and liquidation distributions received from resident entities.

Capital gains. A tax rate of 10% applies to capital gains, which are reported in annual tax returns for residents and quarterly tax returns for nonresidents.

Harmonization. Nonresidents who are residents of EU countries or countries of the EEA may apply the same deductions applicable for residents and claim the refund of the excess tax withheld or paid in advance through the filing of an annual tax return.

Tax returns

Quarterly tax returns. Certain types of income are subject to quarterly tax payment and reporting by both residents and nonresidents.

Annual tax returns. Annual tax returns must be filed and the balance of tax due must be paid by 30 April of the year following the tax year. Extensions are not possible. Registered self-employed individuals must file annual tax returns electronically. The submission must be completed on the National Revenue Agency website via a Personal Identification Code. Tax return filing requirements do not apply to individuals who receive only employment income during the year if they have no outstanding tax liabilities and do not use tax relief. Individuals may benefit from this exception even if they have no employer on 31 December 2020 or their employer does not perform an annual reconciliation. Heirs may file a tax return on behalf of the deceased after the statutory deadline but no later than six months following the opening of the estate.

Employers have an annual obligation to report all employment income processed through payroll through the filing of an electronic reporting form with the National Revenue Agency by 28 February of the following year. In addition, employers have the obligation to report employment income paid to Bulgarian tax nonresidents who are tax residents in another EU state by 30 April of the following year.

Discount. The Bulgarian income tax law provides for a 5% discount on the balance between the total annual tax liability (but no more than BGN500) and the advance tax payments made throughout the year if the following conditions are satisfied:
- The individual has no other outstanding public liabilities subject to public enforcement.
- The tax return is filed online by 31 March of the following year.
- The tax is paid by 31 March of the following year.

Penalties. Late filings and tax payments result in administrative fines and penalties.

F. Entry and visa requirements

EU nationals, citizens of EEA member states and citizens of Switzerland. EU nationals, citizens of EEA member states and citizens of Switzerland may benefit fully from the right of free movement. They may enter Bulgaria based on a valid identification card or international passport and reside freely in the country. Individuals who intend to spend more than three months in Bulgaria should register with the Bulgarian Immigration Office. A long-term residence certificate is obtained through this registration.

Other nationals enjoying a visa-free regime. Nationals of countries under Annex II of Council Regulation 539/2001, as well as holders of Schengen visas and residence permits issued by Schengen countries, Liechtenstein and Switzerland, are not required to obtain visas. They may stay in Bulgaria for up to 90 days within each 6-month period, counting from the date of the first entry into Bulgaria. These individuals are required to possess valid international passports to enter the country. If they intend to work or engage in self-employment activities in Bulgaria, they are subject to the same regime as citizens of non-preferred countries.

Holders of valid residence cards issued by other EU member states are not subject to visa requirements for Bulgaria.

Citizens of non-preferred countries. Citizens of non-preferred countries (countries whose nationals are not subject to a visa-free regime) need a valid international passport and a Bulgarian visa to enter the country. Citizens of some non-preferred countries may require a Type C visa to travel through the country or an air transit visa to stay in the international transit zone of a Bulgarian airport.

Visas. Visas are issued by the Bulgarian diplomatic and consular offices abroad. The following are the types of visas:
- Type A: air transit visa.
- Type C: short-term visa for a total stay of up to 90 days during a 6-month period beginning from the date of first entry. A Type C visa may be issued for tourist or business purposes. The Type C visa can be a single- or multiple-entry visa.
- Type D: long-term visa for a total stay of up to 180 days. The Type D visa is also a prerequisite for a long-term residence permit. In exceptional cases, a Type D visa may be issued for a period of 360 days, such as for seconded personnel of an employer certified in accordance with the International Investments Act. The Type D visa also allows multiple entries into Bulgaria.

G. Work permits, EU Blue Cards and self-employment

EU nationals, citizens of EEA member states and citizens of Switzerland. EU nationals, citizens of EEA member states and citizens of Switzerland enjoy the right of free movement within the EU. They do not need to obtain a work permit or register with the Employment Agency to work or engage in self-employment activities in Bulgaria.

Individuals enjoying preferential treatment. The following individuals do not need a work permit to work in Bulgaria:
- Permanent or long-term residence permit holders
- Family members of EU, EEA and Swiss nationals
- Individuals granted asylum or humanitarian status
- Individuals to whom the provisions of an international agreement apply

Other nationals. Individuals not enjoying preferential treatment who intend to work in the country under a local employment contract or under the terms of a secondment or intercorporate transfer must obtain a work permit from the Employment Agency by submitting an application form for initiating the respective immigration procedure to the immigration office. The immigration office distributes the documents received internally to various institutions, including, among others, the Employment Agency and Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Amendments to the Labor Code and a new ordinance on assignments introduce new rules on the posting of workers under service provision agreements and as part of intra-corporate transfers. The amendments introduce an obligation for foreign companies posting employees to Bulgaria to notify in advance the Labor Inspectorate of each posting as well as to appoint a representative in Bulgaria.

Applications for work permits are submitted by the Bulgarian entity that would employ or host the third-country nationals. For certain procedures, applications can be submitted personally by foreign nationals if they already have valid long-term residence permits in the country. Individuals who obtain work permits are authorized to work only for that employer.

Work permits are issued to foreign nationals who possess proper education, special skills or professional experience, suitable to the position they intend to take. In some cases, the Bulgarian employer must perform a labor market test to establish the lack of Bulgarians and individuals enjoying preferential treatment who are suitable for the position. The market test requirement can be avoided under specific circumstances.

The number of non-EU nationals employed by a company may not exceed 20% (for large enterprises) or 35% (for small and medium-sized enterprises) of the average number of Bulgarian nationals and individuals enjoying preferential treatment that were employed by the company in the preceding year. The ratio of foreign to local employees does not apply in cases of applications for EU Blue Cards, work permits based on secondments or intercorporate transfers.

The term of validity of the standard work permit is up to one year and may be renewed each year (for up to three years). In general, non-EU nationals may not reside in Bulgaria while their work permit application is being processed.

Highly qualified foreign employees can be granted EU Blue Cards subject to prior approval by the Employment Agency. Under the newly adopted amendments to the Bulgarian immigration law, effective from 23 May 2018, a Bulgarian employer is not required to conduct a labor market test to establish the lack of Bulgarians who are suitable for the position. An EU Blue Card allows its holder to work and reside in Bulgaria for up to four years.

Foreign nationals intending to perform self-employment activities in Bulgaria should apply for a permit before entering the country.

H. Residence certificates and permits

Residence certificates. Residence certificates are issued to EU, EEA and Swiss nationals who intend to reside in Bulgaria for a period exceeding three months. Long-term and permanent residence certificates may be issued.

A long-term residence certificate is issued for a term of up to five years. To obtain a residence certificate, an EU, EEA or Swiss national must present evidence of sufficient funds, accommodation and health insurance. Residence certificates are also granted to such nationals who are employed by a Bulgarian employer or are enrolled in a Bulgarian educational institution. EU, EEA or Swiss nationals who hold a residence certificate may apply for a biometric residence certificate card.

EU, EEA or Swiss nationals may apply for permanent residence certificates if they have resided legally in Bulgaria for longer than five years. The granting of a permanent residence certificate is subject to some additional conditions. The term of a permanent residence certificate is indefinite, subject to the renewal of the issued identification card each 10 years, similar to the standard process for the renewal of identification documents for Bulgarian citizens.

Residence permits. Residence permits may be issued to non-EU nationals who have entered Bulgaria with a Type D visa.

Prolonged residence permits are generally issued for a stay of up to one year, most often on the basis of employment, study, marriage or a management agreement. Depending on the grounds for application, the non-EU national must present a specific set of documents to the Immigration Office.

Non-EU nationals, who have legally and continuously resided in Bulgaria for the preceding five years, can acquire permanent resident status. Holders of permanent resident status enjoy equal treatment with Bulgarians with respect to access to work and self-employed activities and certain other matters.

Permanent residence permits are issued for an indefinite period. Permission for a permanent stay is also granted to foreign nationals who have a substantial link to Bulgaria, such as the following:
- They have been married to a Bulgarian national for more than five years.
- They are of Bulgarian origin.
- They have made a large investment in the country.

Investors. Long-term and permanent residence permits can be obtained based on investment in Bulgaria. For long-term residence permits, an additional requirement is that the foreigner must settle in Bulgaria. Greater investments must be made to obtain a permanent residence permit without settling in Bulgaria. A family member of a permanent resident based on investment can also obtain a permanent residence permit for the same period as the initial holder's residence. Local legislation provides opportunities for an individual and his or her family members to obtain Bulgarian citizenship based on an investment even though the investor does not have knowledge of Bulgarian and maintains other citizenships.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members

Family members of EU, EEA or Swiss nationals. Family members of EU, EEA or Swiss nationals who are not citizens of EU member states themselves can benefit from the right of free movement within the EU. They do not need a work permit to begin an employment relationship in Bulgaria. However, they need to register their employment with the Employment Agency. They may enter Bulgaria with an international passport and, if required as a result of their nationality, a visa. They can apply for a long-term residence permit on the grounds of their family relationship with an EU, EEA or Swiss national. The term of validity of a residence permit of a family member depends on the term of residency of the EU, EEA or Swiss national whom the family member is accompanying. However, the term cannot exceed five years.

Family members of non-EU, EEA or Swiss nationals. Family members of non-EU, EEA or Swiss nationals must have separate permits to reside in Bulgaria. They can apply for a residence permit on completion of a family reunion immigration procedure on the grounds of their family relationship with Bulgarian residence permit holders. The term of validity of their residence permits depends on the term of the residence permits granted to the non-EU, EEA or Swiss nationals whom they are accompanying.

They should apply independently for their own work permits if they wish to take up employment in Bulgaria.

Family members of an EU Blue Card holder can acquire a derivative residence permit for the period of validity of the EU Blue card. Family members of a foreigner with permanent resident status can acquire a Bulgarian residence permit for up to one year with an option for an extension.

Marital property regime. Married couples whose marital relationships are governed by Bulgarian law may choose between a community property regime or separation of assets regime. They may also choose to govern their relationship through a written marriage agreement.

The default regime is community property, under which all property acquired during marriage, except by gift or inheritance, is community property. However, on termination of the marriage each spouse is solely entitled to the property he or she brought to the marriage.

Under the separation of assets regime all property acquired during marriage belongs to the acquirer. On termination of the marriage, one spouse can claim part of the property that the other spouse acquired with his or her assistance.

Forced heirship. Bulgarian succession legislation provides for a "reserved part right" that entitles close relatives (surviving spouse, descendants and parents) to inherit a reserved part of an estate, regardless of the provisions of a will. The rules apply to the estate of a Bulgarian citizen or to property located in Bulgaria.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals, who reside in Bulgaria and have a valid driver's license issued by EU or EEA member states or Switzerland, may drive legally in Bulgaria. Holders of licenses issued by other states that signed the Vienna Convention for Traffic Rules may drive legally in Bulgaria for up to one year.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Cambodian resident and nonresident individuals are subject to Tax on Salary (ToS) on income from their employment activities and withholding tax on certain types of income. Resident individuals are subject to ToS on their worldwide employment income, while nonresident individuals are subject to tax on their Cambodian-source employment income only. For withholding tax rates, see the sections below.

For tax purposes, an individual is considered to be a resident if he or she has his or her residence or his or her principal place of abode in Cambodia or if he or she is present in Cambodia for more than 182 days in any period of 12 months ending in the current tax year.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. The taxation of the various types of employment income is described below.

ToS applies to employment income, which includes salary, remuneration, wages, bonus, overtime compensation and fringe benefits. Salary from employment activities advances and loans are taxable, except as provided below. However, taxable salary consists of all payments in cash or in kind except payments classified as fringe benefits. Fringe benefits are subject to a separate tax regime called the Tax on Fringe Benefits (ToFB; see Tax on Fringe Benefits).

Salary and fringe benefits received in foreign currency are converted to Cambodian riel in calculating taxable income.

The following categories of employment income are exempt from tax:

- Reimbursement of employment-related expenses
- Indemnity for a layoff within the limit provided in the Labor Law
- Additional remuneration with social characteristics as indicated in the Labor Law

- Flat allowance for mission and travel expenses (per diem for field work done by employees)
- Allowances for special uniforms or professional equipment
- Salaries of members of the National Assembly and Senate, and employees of approved diplomatic and international aid organizations

Self-employment and investment income. The following table provides the progressive tax rates for profits realized by individuals and for distributive shares of members of pass-through entities that are not classified as legal persons.

Annual taxable profit
Exceeding KHR	Not exceeding KHR	Rate %
0	16,000,000	0
16,000,000	24,000,000	5
24,000,000	102,000,000	10
102,000,000	150,000,000	15
150,000,000	—	20

Currently, no procedure exists for individuals to report income tax on their income. As a result, the tax authority does not collect income tax based on the above table. Tax on individuals' income is collected only through withholding tax.

Withholding tax is imposed on resident individuals at the following rates:
- Services (except payments to a real regime taxpayer with a valid value-added tax [VAT] invoice or payments less than KHR50,000): 15%
- Royalties (except payments to a real regime taxpayer with a VAT invoice for shrink-wrap software, site license, downloadable software and software bundled with computer hardware): 15%
- Interest income: 4% (non-fixed term deposits at domestic banks), 6% (fixed term deposits at domestic banks) and 15% (paid by resident taxpayers except domestic banks)
- Rental income: 10% (except payments to real regime taxpayer with a valid VAT invoice)

Withholding tax at a rate of 14% applies to all payments of Cambodian-source income by a resident or permanent establishment of a nonresident to a nonresident (except premiums with respect to the reinsurance of property or other risks in Cambodia).

Capital gains. Effective from 1 January 2022, capital gains are taxed at a flat rate of 20% on capital gains. Capital gains refer to taxable income resulting from the revenue received from the sale or transfer of capital less allowable expenses. Capital gains tax is applicable to resident physical persons and nonresident taxpayers, which can be a physical person or a legal entity.

Deductions. An allowance for a spouse and minor dependent children in the amount of KHR150,000 per person per month is deductible from taxable salary.

Rates. The employer must withhold ToS from Cambodian residents. ToS is imposed at progressive rates ranging from 0% to 20%. A flat rate of 20% applies to nonresidents. The following table presents the ToS rates imposed on the monthly taxable salary of residents.

Monthly taxable salary
Exceeding KHR	Not exceeding KHR	Rate %
0	1,300,000	0
1,300,000	2,000,000	5
2,000,000	8,500,000	10
8,500,000	12,500,000	15
12,500,000	—	20

Tax on Fringe Benefits. The Tax on Fringe Benefits (ToFB) is imposed on taxable fringe benefits provided by an employer in cash or in kind, including the providing of, among other items, private use of vehicles, accommodation, food, utilities, household personnel, low-interest loans, discounted sales, educational assistance (except for employment-related training), insurance premiums and pension contributions in excess of the levels provided by the Labor Law.

The ToFB is borne by the beneficiary. Fringe benefits are taxable at a rate of 20% of the total value of the benefit provided. In determining the tax payable, the tax base equals the fair market value of the fringe benefit and any other applicable taxes.

Effective from 6 October 2016, the following allowances received by employees and workers for the performance of their employment activities are not subject to ToFB:

- Travel allowances from home to workplace or factory and from workplace or factory to home, and provision of accommodation or a dormitory in the factory in accordance with the Labor Law
- Food allowances provided to all employees and workers regardless of job classification and function (including overtime meals)
- Contributions to the Social Security Fund within the limit provided under the law (see Section C)
- Life and health insurance premiums provided to all employees regardless of job classification and function
- Infant allowances or nursery expenses as stipulated in the Labor Law
- Severance pay for the termination of a contract or indemnity for a layoff within the limit of the Labor Law

However, to claim the above exemptions, the employer must inform the tax authority about its allowance policy.

B. Other taxes

Net worth, gift, inheritance and estate taxes are not imposed in Cambodia.

C. Social security

The two types of social security schemes in Cambodia are pension and occupational risks. The contribution for the occupational risks scheme consists of an occupational risk contribution (ORC) and a health care contribution (HCC). The occupational risks scheme is currently being applied. However, the pension scheme has not yet been implemented.

The ORC covers work-related accidents, accidents commuting between home and the workplace and other occupational diseases. The HCC covers health problems. All employers must register with the National Social Security Fund and make an ORC of 0.8% and HCC of 2.6% of the monthly average wages of the employees. The monthly average wage per employee is capped at KHR1,200,000 per month. As a result, the maximum ORC per employee is approximately KHR9,600 (0.8% of KHR1,200,000), and the HCC per employee is approximately KHR31,200 (2.6% of KHR1,200,000).

The ORC and HCC are not refundable.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Employees and other individuals are not required to file ToS and withholding tax returns with the tax authority. Employers and withholding agents must withhold ToS and other income taxes from employees and other individuals before making payments. They must file monthly ToS and withholding tax returns and remit the taxes to the tax authority on behalf of employees and other individuals.

If an employer resides outside Cambodia, it can appoint a fiscal representative (a local registered company) in Cambodia to be in charge of withholding the ToS (before making the salary payment to employees) and remitting the ToS to the Cambodian tax authority on its behalf. If no withholding of the ToS is made, the fiscal representative appointed by the foreign employer is held responsible under Cambodian law.

Effective from January 2021, the ToS and withholding tax return must be filed and the amount of tax must be paid to the tax authority through the tax authority's e-filing system by the 25th of the following month.

Cambodia does not require the filing of an annual ToS or personal income tax return.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Relief for foreign taxes. A resident person who receives foreign-source salary and who pays taxes according to the foreign tax law receives a tax credit against the ToS if supporting documents are available.

Tax treaties. To date, Cambodia has entered into tax treaties with Brunei Darussalam, China Mainland, the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (SAR), Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, Thailand and Vietnam. In addition, Cambodia has signed a tax treaty with Korea (South), but this treaty is not yet in force.

F. Entry visas

Foreign nationals of most countries must obtain valid entry visas to enter Cambodia. However, this requirement does not apply to nationals of the member countries of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) such as Brunei Darussalam, Indonesia, Laos, Malaysia, Myanmar, Philippines, Singapore, Thailand and Vietnam.

Cambodia has several types of entry visas, including business (Category E), tourism (Category T) and diplomatic missions (Category A). The duration of a single-entry business visa depends on the nationality of the employee.

Nationals of ASEAN countries may obtain an immigration stamp on arrival. This immigration stamp is valid for 14, 21 or 30 days, depending on the nationality of the employee.

To work in Cambodia, foreign nationals must obtain a multiple-entry business visa. Depending on an employee's nationality, visas may be obtained from the Cambodian embassy in the home country or from an Immigration Department office on arrival in Cambodia.

The following documents are required to be submitted to obtain a visa:

- A copy of the application form
- Original passport with a validity of at least six months
- A copy of the employment contract or offer letter
- Three photographs (4 cm x 6 cm)
- Duty fee

After an individual receives a single-entry business visa to Cambodia, he or she can obtain a multiple-entry business visa or an extension of temporary residency permission for up to 12 months from the Immigration Department of the Ministry of Interior. The following documents are required:

- Original passport with a validity of at least six months
- One photograph (4 cm x 6 cm)
- Supporting documents for residence application that are valid for a minimum of six months (rental contract, employment contract and business license of employer from Ministry of Commerce)
- Duty fee
- Certificate of non-criminal record issued by competent authority of the country of origin
- A copy of the employment contract
- A certified slip for guaranteeing all travel cost with the National Bank of Cambodia, amounting to KHR1,250,000 (approximately USD313)
- Physical presentation of assignee at the Immigration Department of the National Police of the Ministry of Interior
- A health-check certificate issued by a medical doctor of the country of origin (the certified date on the certificate may not be more than three months before the date of submission of the application)
- Work permit (in the case of an extension)

COVID-19 measures. As a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, Cambodia has temporarily stopped providing the business or Type E visa on arrival. Consequently, an assignee or foreign employee can only apply for a business visa at the Cambodian embassy or consulate in his or her home country before coming to Cambodia.

In addition, an assignee or foreign employee is required to have a medical certificate indicating a negative test for COVID-19 that was issued by the competent authorities of his or her home country no more than 72 hours before the date of travel, and the assignee or foreign employee may be quarantined for 14 days in Cambodia.

The assignee or foreign employee is also required to have a Validation Certificate on Payment Guarantee (CPG) or Validation Certificate of Invitation (CI), which is issued and approved by the Royal Government of Cambodia (RGC). These certificates must be requested on specific RGC websites by the chief executive officer or a shareholder of the company or director of the business association or federation, investment owner in the special-economic zone, or other person for which the assignee or foreign employee is working. After checking on the validity of the guarantee or invitation, which will take one or two days, the RGC issues the CPG or CI for the assignee or foreign employee to attach to the visa.

At the time of writing, the RGC had temporarily suspended the sponsorship mechanism for issuing the CPG or CI. However, the CPG and CI signed by the employer are currently required from the Cambodian embassy or consulate following their template. Moreover, the assignee or the foreign employee is required to buy health insurance of USD90 in Cambodia with a validity of 20 days. In addition, he or she is required to have a security deposit of USD2,000 for accommodation, transportation and other expenses during quarantine if any fellow travelers test positive for COVID-19.

G. Work permits

All foreign nationals who wish to work in Cambodia must obtain work permits from the Cambodian Ministry of Labor. To be eligible for a work permit, a foreigner must have a business visa.

An employer who has established an office and registered with the Ministry of Labor in Cambodia is responsible for processing an application for the employee's work permit. Work permits normally have an initial duration of one year.

The two types of work permits are the temporary work permit and the permanent work permit.

Temporary work permit. Temporary work permits are issued to the following foreigners:
- Staff and management specialists
- Technical staff
- Skilled workers
- Service providers or other laborers

The application for a temporary work permit must be submitted online to the Ministry of Labor with the following required items:
- Passports or an equivalent document with proper visa
- A photograph (4 cm x 6 cm), taken in the front without hat and glasses
- Medical certificate of employee obtained from the Cambodian Medical Department of the Ministry of Labor
- Certified employment contract
- Residency letter
- Annual tax fees for temporary work permit

Permanent work permits. Permanent work permits are issued to the following foreigners:

- Foreign immigrants recognized by the Ministry of Interior
- Foreign investors, spouses and dependents recognized by the Council for the Development of Cambodia

Applications for permanent work permits must be sent to the Ministry of Labor with the following required documents and information:

- Application form
- Resident card or equivalent documents recognizing the individual as an immigrant or investor
- Passport or any equivalent documents with proper visas
- Medical certificate of employee obtained from the Cambodian Medical Department of the Ministry of Labor
- Three photographs (4 cm x 6 cm), taken from the front without hat and glasses
- Annual tax fees for permanent work permit

It takes one to three months to obtain an approval for a work permit.

A work permit must be renewed every 12 months before its expiration. Before March of each year, an application to renew the work permit must be submitted to the Ministry of Labor together with the updated documents regarding the initial work permit submission.

H. Residence permits

Any person who does not have Cambodian nationality is considered to be alien. Aliens may obtain resident cards from the Ministry of Interior. The two types of resident cards for aliens are temporary and permanent.

Temporary resident cards. Temporary resident cards are valid for a period of two years and can be extended every two years. Temporary resident cards are issued for employees performing managerial, technical or specialized services.

The following documents must be submitted to obtain temporary resident cards:

- An application form for a temporary resident card
- Three copies of information slip form
- A copy of passport or any other equivalent document with proper visa
- Three photographs (4 cm x 6 cm)
- A copy of medical certificate from a doctor from the home country
- A copy of a written labor contract
- A copy of social security insurance
- A copy of the receipt of payment of temporary resident card tax

Permanent resident cards. Permanent resident cards are issued to foreign investors and their household members who have authorization to invest in Cambodia from the Council for the Development of Cambodia and to other individuals who are recognized by the Ministry of Interior.

The following documents must be submitted to obtain a permanent resident card:

- An application form for a permanent resident card
- A copy of the Proclamation recognizing the alien as an immigrant alien who is a private investor
- A copy of passport or any other equivalent document with proper visa
- Three photographs (4 cm x 6 cm)
- A certificate from a Cambodian bank that evidences the deposit of a bond required by the Anukret (sub-decree)
- A copy of the receipt of payment of permanent resident card tax

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The spouse and dependents of a work permit holder must apply for a single-entry business visa and then multiple-entry business visas, which would enable them to live in Cambodia.

For family members who have a CPG or CI, see the discussion of the COVID-19 pandemic requirements in COVID-19 measures in Section F. Family members who do not have a CPG or CI are required to buy health insurance of USD90 in Cambodia with a validity of 20 days. In addition, they are required to have a security deposit of USD2,000 for accommodation, transportation and other expenses during quarantine if any fellow travelers test positive for COVID-19.

Forced heirship. No forced heirship rules apply in Cambodia.

Driver's licenses. Drivers must have a Cambodian driver's license. Some foreign nationals may be able to use their valid home-country driver's licenses to apply for a Cambodian driver's license.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals who have their tax domicile located in Cameroon are subject to personal income tax on their worldwide income. Persons who have their tax domicile located outside Cameroon are subject to personal income tax only on their income derived from Cameroon. Cameroonian and foreign nationals who earn income or profits taxable in Cameroon under the terms of an international convention to avoid double taxation are also subject to personal income tax, regardless of whether their tax domicile is located in Cameroon.

An individual is considered to have his or her tax domicile located in Cameroon if he or she meets one of the following conditions:

- He or she has a home or a principal place of residence in Cameroon.
- He or she is engaged in a salaried or non-salaried activity in Cameroon, except when this activity is an accessory activity.
- He or she maintains a “center of interests or business” in Cameroon.
- He or she is a civil servant or state employee working in a foreign country and is exempt from tax in the foreign country.

Income subject to tax. For personal income tax purposes, taxable income consists of total net income from all categories earned by the taxpayer within the tax year, plus the profit from any gainful transactions engaged in by the taxpayer, less an abatement of XAF500,000.

Employment income. For purposes of the personal income tax, employment income includes all cash and noncash remuneration and allowances. Benefits in kind are valued according to the following fixed percentages of gross remuneration received.

Benefit in kind	Rate
Housing	15%
Automobile	10% for each
Domestic servant	5% for each
Electricity	4%
Water	2%
Food	10%

Allowances covering professional expenses and family-related allowances and benefits are specifically exempt. The tax base for employment income consists of gross remuneration and benefits after the 30% deduction for professional expenses (see Deductions).

In addition to the personal income tax, national housing contribution fund (CFC) and national employment fund (FNE) taxes are levied on employment income. The tax base for purposes of these taxes is the same as the tax base for personal income tax, except that the 30% deduction may not be claimed.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employed individuals are subject to personal income tax on profits derived from activities in Cameroon. Profits are categorized into the type of activity from which they are derived—commercial, professional and agricultural—and taxable income realized from each activity is calculated separately. Total net income from all categories is then subject to personal income tax under the rules applicable to employed individuals.

Taxable income derived from commercial activities and handicrafts depends on the tax regime of the taxpayer.

Self-employed individuals engaged in commercial activities or handicrafts, except for forestry companies, professional ministerial officers and liberal professions, who have annual turnover, exclusive of tax, of below XAF10 million, are subject to the flat rate taxation or discharge tax assessment system (régime de l'impôt libératoire). Individuals under the discharge tax assessment system cannot opt for another tax system but may be reclassified after the recalculation of their turnover.

Self-employed individuals engaged in commercial activities or handicrafts with annual turnover, exclusive of tax, of at least XAF10 but less than XAF50 million are subject to the simplified tax system (régime simplifié) except for passenger transporters, gambling companies and entertainment companies. Nonetheless, taxpayers realizing an annual turnover of at least XAF30 million can opt for the simplified tax system by filing a request with the competent head of the tax center, before 1 February of the tax year. This option is irrevocable for a three-year period. Their taxable income equals the difference between revenue and expenses required for operations.

Self-employed individuals engaged in commercial activities or handicrafts who have annual turnover, exclusive of tax, of XAF50 million or more are subject to the actual earnings tax system, and their tax is calculated in the same manner as company tax.

Self-employed intermediaries and agents are subject to the tax applicable to the categories of commercial activities or handicrafts to which their activities relate. The tax is withheld at source by the payers of the commissions.

Except for individuals engaged in the liberal professions who are also subject to the actual earnings tax system, taxable income derived from professional activities is the difference between income received and expenses paid during the tax year and is computed on a cash basis.

Profits from agricultural activities of farmers, tenant farmers and sharecroppers are included in taxable income. In general, taxable income is determined in the same manner as income derived from commercial activities.

Investment income. Investment income is subject to withholding tax at a rate of 16.5%, which includes a 10% surtax, known as the additional council tax. Special rules apply to capital gains (see Capital gains).

The following types of interest income are exempt from personal income tax:
- Interest accruing on negotiable securities with respect to loans issued by the state, regional and local authorities
- Interest accruing on savings accounts containing deposits of not more than XAF50 million
- Interest on savings accounts for housing purposes
- Interest on home loan accounts
- Interest on cash notes

Income derived from the rental of real property is subject to a 15% withholding tax if the rent is paid by government bodies and public establishments, corporate bodies or self-employed individuals assessed under the actual earnings or simplified systems. Rent paid to enterprises assessed under the actual earnings system and depending solely on a Specialised Management Unit (Large Size Taxpayer Unit [DGE] or Medium Size Taxpayer Unit [CIME]) is not subject to this withholding tax. These units are subject to the Directorate General of Taxation (DGI).

Under the 2022 Finance Act, rents paid by taxpayers who do not fall within the scope of the abovementioned withholding tax are subject to tax on real estate income at a final rate of 11% (including 10% council surtax). This tax is paid on the declaration of the owner or beneficiary of the rents, by the 15th of the month following the end of each quarter.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are treated as dividend income, not as employment income. They are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 16.5% (including 10% council surtax). The tax must be withheld by the payer company and remitted to the Treasury office where the establishment's headquarters is located within 15 days after the act resulting in the liability.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from the sale of real property by individuals are subject to personal income tax at a flat rate of 5%, which is withheld by the notary in charge of executing the deed of conveyance and paid at the same time as the registration duties on behalf of the seller. However, the purchaser may also pay the tax on behalf of the seller. If the last real property transfer is made by direct registration, the value used as the basis for the determination of the capital gains is the value declared in the deed of the parties. The Circular for the application of the 2017 Finance Law defines direct registration as the procedure of recognition of title over national land. In addition, the expenses that are deductible for the determination of the tax base are calculated on the basis of whether the taxpayer maintains an accounting.

Gains derived from the sale of shares are subject to personal income tax as income from securities and taxed at the standard rate of 16.5% (including 10% additional council tax).

The tax on capital gains derived from the transfer of certain fixed assets may be deferred if the gains are reinvested.

Tax treatment of exceptional income. Exceptional income is income that is not likely to be collected annually by an employee and that exceeds the average net income received by the taxpayer in the last three years (for example, additional gratuities and the portion of severance pay exceeding that provided by the labor code and collective agreements). The 2018 Finance Act introduced an obligation for employers to disclose the elements of exceptional income for the calculation of personal income tax.

The computation of personal income tax on exceptional income involves the following steps:

- Calculation of personal income tax on ordinary income by application of the progressive scale (a).
- Calculation of personal income tax on ordinary income plus one-quarter of exceptional income (b).
- Determination of the additional contribution on the exceptional income by subtracting the personal income tax on the exceptional income from the personal income tax on the ordinary income increased (b-a). The result is then multiplied by four (c).
- The addition of the supplement to the personal income tax on the ordinary income obtained (c + a).

This can be done solely at the employee's express request. The employer is required to file with its tax center all the elements used as a basis for calculating the personal income tax on exceptional income. These elements must be attached to the tax return filed by the employer for the month of payment of the exceptional income.

Deductions

Employment deductions. The following expenses are deductible in determining employment income:

- An amount equal to 30% of the gross remuneration and benefits received
- Pension plan contributions
- Insurance premiums paid for the spouse and children

Business deductions. Deductible expenses for commercial, professional and agricultural activities are similar. They include the following items:

- Costs of materials and inventories
- All expenses incurred to conduct the activity (including personnel expenses, certain taxes, rental and leasing expenses, and finance charges)
- Depreciation expenses
- Provisions for losses and expenses

Payments to persons located in tax havens. All expenses and remuneration that are recorded by natural persons or legal entities resident or established in Cameroon and linked to transactions with natural persons or legal entities resident or established in territories or states qualified as tax havens under Cameroon law are not deductible in determining personal income tax in Cameroon. However, amounts paid for the purchase of goods that are required for production in the country of production and that have been cleared at customs, as well as remuneration for services rendered in relation to such production, are deductible.

Rates. The following are the personal income tax rates.

Taxable income
Exceeding XAF	Not exceeding XAF	Rate %
0	2,000,000	10
2,000,000	3,000,000	15
3,000,000	5,000,000	25
5,000,000	—	35

A 10% surtax, known as additional council tax, is levied on the amount of personal income tax.

Contributions to the CFC are payable on employment income at a rate of 1% for employees and 1.5% for the employers.

Contributions to the FNE are withheld from employment income at a rate of 1%.

Audiovisual tax is imposed, with a maximum tax of XAF13,000. Local Development Tax is imposed, with a maximum of XAF2,500.

Nonresident individuals normally are taxed on Cameroon-source income only; tax is generally withheld from payments. The applicable rates depend on the nature of the payments, as shown in the following table.

Type of payments	Rate
Employment income and income from commercial activities carried out in Cameroon	Ordinary rates of personal income tax
Dividends, interest and directors' fees	16.5% (includes 10% additional council tax)
Special income, such as royalties and fees for technical services and professional activities	Special income tax (TSR) at a rate of 15% (subject to the provisions of international tax treaties)

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

For deceased Cameroon residents, estate tax is levied on worldwide personal property, real estate situated in Cameroon and intangible property located outside Cameroon. For nonresidents, only personal property and real estate located in Cameroon are subject to estate tax.

The rates of estate tax vary from 0% to 10%, depending on the value of the net assets. The tax may be reduced, depending on the relationship between the recipient and the deceased.

Claims from the administration with respect to inheritance tax lapse after 30 years.

All deeds that transfer real estate or business assets located in Cameroon, and all gift deeds executed in Cameroon, are subject to gift tax. The rates range from 5% to 20%, depending on the relationship between the recipient and the donor.

C. Social security

Social security contributions are calculated at the following rates on the basis of remuneration paid, including benefits in kind. Contributions of employees are withheld monthly by the employer.

Description	Rate (%)
Family allowances, paid by the employer on salary up to XAF9 million a year	7.0
Retirement pension on salary up to XAF9 million a year; paid by
Employer	4.2
Employees	4.2
Industrial accidents, varies depending on the employees' activities (level of risk); paid by the employer	1.75 to 5.0

Cameroon has entered into a social security totalization agreement with France to eliminate double taxation.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year is the calendar year.

Any professional taxpayer subject to the personal income tax is required to submit an annual tax return of the results of its operations. Individuals are required to file an annual tax return by 15 March of the year following the tax year.

Nonprofessional taxpayers who receive income from salaries, wages, pensions, life annuities, and/or income from securities and property income, as well as, in general, from passive income, are required to submit an annual tax return of personal income tax by 30 June of the year following the tax year at the tax office of their place of residence. This annual tax return of personal income tax can be filed directly online using a form provided by the tax authorities. It indicates by category of income the amount of income received during the past fiscal year; withholding taxes already incurred or advance payments made and the balances to be paid, if applicable.

Personal income tax on employment income must be withheld monthly by employers in accordance with a scale established by the tax administration and paid to the Treasury by the 15th day of the following month. Personal income tax on income from securities is withheld at source.

An individual must pay personal income tax for commercial, handicraft, professional, and agricultural activities to the tax office in accordance with the tax system applicable to the individual (see Section A).

Persons subject to the discharge tax assessment system are exempt from personal income tax and income tax and continue to pay their tax either quarterly or in full by 15 April of the year following the tax year.

Individuals subject to the simplified tax system must remit a down payment or installment each month. The payments must equal 5.5% of the turnover realized during each month. Individuals subject to the actual earnings system must make a monthly down payment equaling 2.2% of the turnover realized during each month. These standard installments include the 10% additional council tax and must be paid no later than the 15th day of the following month. The balance of the tax must be paid in a single payment by 15 March of the year following the tax year.

Effective from 1 January 2018, all individual enterprises falling under the specialized management units are obligated to declare personal income tax. Before 1 January 2018, this obligation was limited to individual establishments belonging to DGEs. It now applies to all individual establishments, regardless of the specialized management unit to which they belong (CIME and Specialized Tax Center for Liberal Professions [Centre Spécialisé des Impôts des Professions Libérales, or CSIPLI]).

An individual holding is not defined by law. However, it can be interpreted as being applicable to individual enterprises operated by natural persons that are not constituted as legal entities (for example, traders, artisans or farmers). The tax regime for these individual enterprises is based on the aggregate turnover of all establishments of such enterprises.

Individual enterprises that have several establishments and do not belong to any specialized management unit are also subject to this obligation.

Effective from 1 January 2019, employers falling under a specialized management unit and operating several establishments are required to declare and remit the taxes withheld from the salaries paid to their employees exclusively at the tax collector of the place of their registered office's tax center.

Tax registration. The provisions of Article L1 bis of the Book of Tax Procedures, as amended by the 2020 Finance Act, contains new obligations regarding the registration of taxpayers. This procedure is carried out online on the website of the tax administration.

Effective from 1 January 2020, any natural or legal person liable to pay a tax or right (including employees) may carry out the following operations only if they present a valid unique identification number:
- Opening of an account with credit and micro-finance institutions. Prepaid reloadable debit cards shall be assimilated to an account
- Subscription of any type of insurance contract
- Signature of contracts for connection or subscription to water and/or electricity networks
- Land registration
- Approval with respect to a regulated profession

Under the 2022 Finance Act, for newly registered taxpayers, registration in the active taxpayer file takes place as of the date of filing the first tax return.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

In general, no credit for foreign taxes is available in the absence of a treaty. Cameroon has entered into double tax treaties with Canada, France, South Africa, Tunisia and the United Arab Emirates. It has also entered into the Central African Economic and Customs Union (CEMAC/UDEAC) treaty, along with the Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Equatorial Guinea and Gabon.

A foreign tax credit equal to the tax paid in the other treaty country is generally available. For example, the CEMAC/UDEAC treaty provides the following relief:

- Commercial profits are taxable in the treaty country where a foreign firm performs its activities through a permanent establishment.
- Dividends, interest and royalties are taxable in the beneficiary's country of residence.
- Employment income is taxed in the treaty country where the activity is performed.

Under the treaties entered into with Canada, France, South Africa, Tunisia and the United Arab Emirates, withholding taxes may be levied on interest and royalties in addition to income taxes in the beneficiary's country. The rates of withholding are generally reduced, and the withholding tax may be offset against the tax payable in the beneficiary's country of residence.

F. Temporary entry visas

All foreign nationals wishing to enter Cameroon must have passports or other valid travel documents to obtain entry visas. When applying for a temporary entry visa, an individual must present a valid passport, a certificate of accommodation and payment of XAF60,000. Cameroon does not have a specific quota system for the issuance of visas. Several types of temporary entry visas are described in the following paragraphs.

Tourist visas are granted to foreign nationals who intend to travel in Cameroon. They are issued by diplomatic embassies or Cameroon consulates abroad. Tourist visas are valid for 30 days, are not renewable and permit an unlimited number of entries into the country.

Business visas are granted to foreign nationals coming to Cameroon to take up technical, industrial or commercial positions. They are valid for one year, are non-renewable and permit multiple entries into the country.

Student visas are issued to foreign nationals coming to Cameroon to pursue studies. They are valid for six months. Students must obtain residence permits valid for the length of stay (see Section H).

Temporary visas are granted to foreign nationals coming to Cameroon for all other purposes (for example, for family visits). They are valid for three months, are non-renewable and permit an unlimited number of entries into the country.

Transit visas are issued to foreign nationals passing through the country en route to other destinations. They are valid for five days and permit an unlimited number of entries into the country.

Entry visas may not be transferred from one category to another. However, their validity may be extended in the case of a force majeure and on the express authorization of the Delegate-General for National Security.

G. Work permits and self-employment

Work permits are valid for two years and are renewable for an unlimited number of times; the renewed permit is valid for two years. Expatriates may obtain work permits in Cameroon.

Following the submission of the necessary documentation, work permits are processed in approximately four to six weeks.

A foreign national may be self-employed if he or she obtains a residence permit. No minimum amount of capital is necessary to be self-employed.

H. Residence permits and residence cards

In general, foreign nationals must obtain residence permits to obtain residence status. These permits are valid for two years and are renewable for the same period. To obtain the residence permit, the foreigner should have a long-term visa of six months. It is possible to obtain a temporary visa or a business visa by having a residence permit authorized in Cameroon.

Foreign nationals wishing to work in Cameroon must obtain residence cards, which, unlike residence permits, always include work permits. Residence cards are valid for 10 years and are renewable for unlimited periods.

To obtain a residence card, foreign nationals must present a valid passport and an international certificate of vaccination at the port of entry.

In certain cases, one or more copies of the following items and information must also be presented at the port of entry to receive a residence card:

- The work contract
- Authorization of entry and stay delivered by the Delegate-General for National Security
- Date of commencement of the stay
- Residence permit issued by the Delegate-General for National Security
- A ministerial agreement
- Proof of intention to repatriate

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Under Cameroon law, the working spouses of expatriates are obligated to have entry visas. Generally, it is advised that spouses wishing to work file jointly with the expatriates for work permits.

Independent children of foreign nationals should obtain personal residence permits; dependent children residing with their parents in Cameroon must obtain authorized entry visas and residence permits.

Marital property regime. Cameroon's elective community property regime applies only to Cameroonian nationals. Non-Cameroonian nationals who are married in Cameroon or who establish a marital domicile in Cameroon are not subject to Cameroon's marital property regime.

Forced heirship. Forced heirship rules in Cameroon apply only to Cameroonian nationals.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally in Cameroon if they exchange their home country driver's licenses for Cameroon licenses. No prior examinations are required to exchange the home country driver's license.

In the absence of a home country driver's license, a foreign national may obtain a Cameroon driver's license by filing an application with the Ministry of Transport, taking a written examination and taking a practical driving test.

The tax rates and other information for 2021 provided in this chapter are based on known and proposed rates as of 1 July 2021.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. The major determinant of Canadian income tax liability is an individual's residence status. An individual resident in Canada is taxable on worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxed on Canadian-source income only.

The tax statutes do not contain a specific definition of "residence." Accordingly, the residence of an individual is determined by such matters as the location of dwelling places, spouse, dependents, personal property, economic interests and social ties. However, a nonresident individual who stays temporarily in Canada for 183 days or longer in a calendar year is deemed to be a resident of Canada for the entire year, unless he or she is determined to have nonresident status under a tax treaty. This provision applies only to an individual who would otherwise be considered a nonresident, and not to an individual who purposely takes up residence in Canada or to an existing resident who ceases to be a resident after moving away from Canada. These latter individuals may be treated as part-year residents.

In certain situations, an individual may move from Canada to another country and retain enough ties to continue to be considered a Canadian resident for domestic tax purposes. At the same time, this individual may be considered a nonresident of Canada for tax treaty purposes. Individuals who become treaty nonresidents of Canada after 24 February 1998 are deemed to be nonresident in Canada for domestic tax purposes as well.

In the year that an individual becomes a Canadian resident, that individual is considered a part-year resident, and is subject to tax in Canada on worldwide income for the portion of the year he or she is resident in Canada. A part-year resident is also subject to Canadian tax on any Canadian-source income received during the nonresident period.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is discussed below.

Employment income. Income from employment includes salaries, wages, directors' fees and most benefits received from employment. Some examples of taxable benefits are low-interest loans, the use of company-owned automobiles, subsidized or free personal living expenses and stock option benefits (see Taxation of employer-provided stock options). Among the few nontaxable benefits are employers' contributions to certain employer-sponsored retirement savings plans, including registered Canadian pension plans and deferred profit-sharing plans.

Reasonable education allowances provided by an employer to its relocated employee with respect to the employee's children who live away from home to attend school on a full-time basis are not taxable for income and social security tax purposes if a school suitable for the child, offering instruction primarily in the official language of Canada that is primarily used by the employee, is not available in the location where the employee is required to live as a result of his or her employment. The school must be the closest one that satisfies both of the following conditions:

- It has suitable boarding facilities.
- The language primarily used for instruction is an official language of Canada and is the official language of Canada primarily used by the employee.

A Salary Deferral Arrangement (SDA) includes most situations in which the following two circumstances exist:

- An employee has the right to receive an amount after the end of the year instead of salaries or wages for that year or a prior year.
- One of the principal purposes of the arrangement is to postpone the payment of Canadian tax.

Consequently, foreign deferred compensation plans may be subject to Canadian tax under the SDA rules. If the SDA rules apply, the amount of salary deferred in the year and any interest earned on amounts previously deferred are subject to Canadian tax on a current basis.

An exception applies to certain amounts that were deferred under a plan established primarily for the benefit of nonresidents with respect to services rendered in a country other than Canada. Amounts deferred before an employee becomes resident in Canada, or deferred in the first 36 months of Canadian residence, are not subject to Canadian tax if the employee was a member of the plan before moving to Canada, and if the deferred amount relates to services rendered while the employee was a nonresident of Canada (or during the first 36 months of Canadian residence). Amounts deferred after an employee becomes resident in Canada that are not taxed on a current basis are usually taxed when received. Consequently, other than in the case of the above exception, an amount deferred after an employee becomes resident in Canada is taxed in the year earned, while any interest or other amount accruing on the amounts deferred before moving to Canada is not taxable unless received while a resident of Canada.

Self-employment income. The computation of an individual's income from a business or property is similar to that for a corporation, with business income generally computed using the accrual method of accounting.

Income derived from a partnership is allocated among the partners in accordance with either the partnership agreement or, in the absence of such an agreement, the governing partnership law. Deductions and credits also flow through to the individual partners. Special rules limit the amount of business or property losses that may be claimed by a limited partner of a limited partnership.

Directors' fees. In Canada, a director is deemed to be an employee. Directors' fees derived from Canada or a foreign country are taxable to a Canadian resident as employment income. Tax treaties signed by Canada generally do not allow a resident of Canada to be exempt from tax on directors' fees received from a foreign (nonresident) company or to otherwise receive favorable tax treatment.

For a nonresident, directors' fees are considered to be earned where the services of the director are rendered. Therefore, fees for services rendered at a specific board meeting in Canada are taxable in Canada. If a fee is related to services rendered both in and outside Canada, it may be possible to prorate the fee in proportion to the number of days that the director spent in Canada during the year. However, no specific guidelines for such allocations are provided.

Under certain tax treaties, directors' fees are considered similar to compensation from regular employment. If the conditions exempting a nonresident from Canadian taxes on compensation from regular employment are met, the directors' fees are exempt.

Investment income. Interest income may be reported by an individual using the cash basis (when received), the receivable basis (when due) or the accrual basis (as earned during the year) on investments if the investment is held for less than 12 months. Whichever method is selected, it must be applied to an investment consistently. However, for most investments held for a period of more than 12 months, accrued interest must be included in income annually. The bonus or premium paid on the maturity of certain investments, such as treasury bills, strip bonds or other discounted obligations, must be reported as interest income.

Dividends received by individuals resident in Canada from taxable Canadian corporations are given special treatment to recognize corporate taxes already paid on the accumulated income used as the source for the dividend distribution. These dividends are classified as "eligible dividends" or "ineligible dividends."

An "eligible dividend" is a taxable dividend paid to a person resident in Canada by a corporation resident in Canada and designated by the corporation at the time of payment to be an "eligible dividend."

For eligible dividends, 138% of the actual amount received is included in income, and a credit against federal tax is allowed in an amount approximately equal to 20.73% of the cash amount of the dividend. For other taxable dividends from Canadian corporations ("ineligible dividends"), 115% of the actual amount received is included in income, and a credit against federal tax is allowed in an amount approximately equal to 10.38% of the cash amount of the dividend. For many Canadian-controlled private corporations and their shareholders, the result of this gross-up and dividend tax credit procedure is that the combined corporate tax on the original income and the net personal tax on the dividend is approximately equal to the tax that would have been paid on the original income had it been received directly by the individual rather than passed through the corporation.

Royalties and rental income are taxed as ordinary income. In computing a loss from the rental of real estate or leasing of other property, allowable depreciation generally is limited to the net income determined before deducting depreciation. Therefore, the depreciation claimed by an individual may not create or increase a rental loss.

Beginning in 2009, all residents of Canada age 18 or older may contribute to a tax-free savings account (TFSA). No tax deduction is allowed for the contributions, but the investment earnings are not subject to tax. For 2021 and subsequent years, the annual TFSA limit is CAD6,000. Unused contribution room can be carried forward indefinitely. If an individual is nonresident for the entire tax year, he or she will not have any current-year contribution room. Withdrawals from a TFSA increase the carryforward TFSA room in the following calendar year. Individuals retain the full annual contribution room for the year they become nonresident of Canada and the year that they resume being a Canadian tax resident. The tax on over-contributions is 1% per month.

Passive income derived by nonresidents. Nonresidents with sources of income from Canada other than employment or business income generally are subject to a withholding tax of 25% of gross income received. Examples of income subject to withholding tax are rental income, royalties, dividends, trust income and pensions. The payer must withhold and remit the appropriate amount of tax and must file the required returns. For the recipient, withholding taxes generally are final taxes, and tax returns are not required for income subject to withholding. However, nonresidents receiving real estate rentals or timber royalties may choose to file a tax return and be taxed in Canada on the net rental or timber royalty income at the same tax rates that apply to Canadian residents (that is, at marginal rates on net income rather than at withholding tax rates on gross income). Nonresidents receiving certain pension and benefit income may elect to be taxed on such income at the same incremental tax rates as Canadian residents, rather than at the withholding tax rate.

Most arm's-length interest payments to nonresidents are exempt from Canadian withholding tax.

Canada's double tax treaties generally reduce withholding taxes to 15% or less on most types of passive income paid to nonresidents.

Other sources of income. Other amounts that must be included in income are receipts from superannuation or pension plans and amounts paid from Canadian Registered Retirement Savings Plans. Eligible pension income can be split between spouses for tax reporting purposes. Under this measure, if spouses have taxable income in different income tax brackets, overall tax may be reduced by moving income from the higher-rate taxpayer to the lower-rate taxpayer.

In general, amounts received as a result of severance pay in recognition of long service at retirement, and spousal support payments (deductible to the payer, subject to certain limitations) are also includible in income. Child support payments pursuant to agreements or court orders made on or after 1 May 1997 are neither taxable to the recipient nor deductible by the payer. Payments made pursuant to agreements or court orders made before 1 May 1997, continue to be taxable to the recipient and deductible by the payer. However, the new rules may apply if the amount of child support payable under the agreement is changed.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Individuals are not taxed when the employer grants stock options. In general, tax consequences arise when the employee exercises the options.

Under the longstanding view of the Canada Revenue Agency on determining the location of services to which a stock option benefit relates, the benefit was generally considered to be attributable to services rendered in the year of grant, unless compelling evidence existed to suggest that some other period was more appropriate. However, for stock options exercised after 2012, the Canada Revenue Agency applies the principles set out in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) model to allocate a stock option benefit for purposes of the Income Tax Act, unless an income tax treaty specifically applies.

Under these principles, the process of determining the amount of a stock option benefit that is derived from employment exercised in a source country is to be carried out by examining all relevant facts and circumstances, including any underlying contracts, applicable to a specific situation. In particular, a stock option benefit is apportioned to each source country based on the number of days of employment exercised in that country over the total number of days in the period during which the employment services from which the stock option is derived are exercised. In making this determination, a stock option benefit is generally presumed to relate to the period of employment that is required as a condition for the employee to acquire the right to exercise the option (that is, the vesting period). In addition, a stock option benefit is generally presumed not to relate to past services, unless evidence indicates that past services are relevant in the particular circumstances.

The fifth protocol to the Canada-United States income tax treaty introduced a sourcing method for options based on where days are worked in the period between grant and exercise. This change is effective for stock options exercised on or after 1 January 2009.

The amount of the taxable benefit equals the difference between the value of the shares at the time the shares are acquired and the exercise price paid. The shares have a cost basis equal to the fair market value of the shares at the time of acquisition, provided the employee does not hold identical shares of the issuer at that time.

The employee may be entitled to a deduction equal to 50% of the taxable benefit (25% for Quebec tax and 50% if the public corporation has a significant presence in Quebec) if the option price is at least equal to the fair market value of the shares on the date of grant, if the shares are prescribed shares and if certain other conditions are met. The effect of this deduction is taxation of the benefit at tax rates applicable to taxable capital gains. For stock options granted after 1 July 2021, the 50% stock option deduction is limited to an annual cap of CAD200,000 at the time of grant, based on the fair market value of the underlying shares except in the case of options granted by Canadian-controlled private companies (CCPC) and non-CCPCs whose gross revenues, or whose corporate group gross revenues, if applicable, are CAD500 million or less.

The Canadian stock option rules apply to both shares and to units of mutual fund trusts.

If the employee is a resident of Canada at the time that the shares are sold, any gain is subject to the regular capital gains rules. If the employee ceases to be a Canadian resident prior to the sale of the shares, then he or she is subject to the deemed disposition rules at departure (see Capital gains and losses).

An automatic deferral of tax to the year of disposition of the shares is provided with respect to the option benefit for shares of Canadian-controlled private companies acquired through stock options.

Capital gains and losses. Fifty percent of the year's capital gains are included in taxable income, to the extent that the amount exceeds 50% of capital losses for the year. This includes capital gains on real estate and personal property, regardless of whether used in a trade or business, and on shares held for personal investment. Special rules apply to determine the nature of the gain or loss on the sale of depreciable property.

The adjusted cost basis of identical shares must be averaged for the purpose of determining the capital gain or loss on a disposition of such shares if the individual has acquired shares of a particular corporation at different dates.

The specific identification method is used to calculate the adjusted cost basis of shares that are acquired through the exercise of a stock option and that are disposed of within 30 days after the acquisition of the shares.

Capital gains derived from the sale of a principal residence are generally exempt from tax. Capital losses incurred on the sale of a principal residence may not be used to reduce income for the year. In tax years before 2016, the reporting of the sale of a principal residence on a tax return was not required if the entire gain was eliminated as a result of the principal residence exemption. However, beginning in the 2016 tax year, the sale of a principal residence must be reported on a tax return in order to claim the principal residence exemption.

In general, capital losses from personal-use assets are not allowed.

Gains derived from the sale of qualifying farm property, qualifying fishing property or shares of small business corporations (see below) qualify for a lifetime capital gain exemption. However, the amount of this exemption is reduced by any amounts claimed in prior years under the CAD100,000 lifetime capital gain exemption that was eliminated in 1994.

Qualifying farm property. Farmers are eligible for a lifetime exemption equal to CAD1 million on the sale of qualified farm property, which includes farmland, shares of a family farm corporation or an interest in a family farm partnership. The available exemption is reduced by the amount of any exemption claimed on the disposition of any other capital property during the tax year or in preceding years.

Qualifying fishing property. Fishers are eligible for a lifetime exemption equal to CAD1 million on the sale of qualified fishing property, which includes real or immovable property or a fishing vessel used in a fishing business in Canada, shares of a family fishing corporation or an interest in a family fishing partnership. The available exemption is reduced by the amount of any exemption claimed on the disposition of any other capital property during the tax year or in preceding years. The exemption is effective for dispositions of qualified fishing property after 2 May 2006.

Shares of a small business corporation. Capital gains realized on the disposition of shares of a small business corporation qualify for a lifetime CAD892,218 capital gains exemption, provided that certain criteria are met. This exemption amount is reduced by any portion of a gain eligible for the exemptions described in the preceding paragraphs.

The use of this exemption may be restricted in a particular year because of cumulative net investment loss (CNIL) rules. Essentially, an individual's CNIL is the excess of his or her post-1987 investment expenses over investment income for those years. To the extent that an individual has a CNIL balance, the capital gains for the year that are eligible for the exemption are reduced.

An individual using the various capital gains exemptions may be subject to minimum tax.

For capital gains realized on the disposition of an eligible small business investment, individuals are permitted a tax-free rollover if the proceeds of the disposition are used to make other eligible small business investments. The amount of gain deferred is proportional to the amount reinvested.

Capital losses. Except for allowable business investment losses and capital losses realized in the year of death, capital losses not utilized in the year realized are deductible only against net capital gains realized in another year. Unused capital losses may be carried back to any of the three preceding years or may be carried forward indefinitely.

Allowable business investment losses (ABILs), a special type of capital loss, are deductible against any other source of income in the year incurred. Any unused ABIL realized in a particular year is converted into a business loss and is subject to the business loss carryover rules described in Relief for losses. If an unused portion of the ABIL remains at the end of the 10 years following the year when it was realized, the loss converts back into a capital loss and may be carried forward indefinitely.

Ceasing Canadian residency. An individual who ceases Canadian residency is generally deemed to have disposed of all assets, including taxable Canadian property, and excluding real property located in Canada, capital property or inventory used in carrying on a business in Canada, certain pension rights and unexercised employee stock options, at fair market value on the date that residency is terminated. The deemed disposition rule is commonly referred to as "departure tax."

The following special tax rules and exceptions apply to individuals entering or leaving Canada with respect to the calculation of capital gains or losses and the general deemed disposition rule:
- The departure tax provision is modified for an individual who was not resident in Canada for more than 60 months during the 120-month period preceding departure. Property owned by such an individual when he or she became resident, or property inherited since that time, is not subject to the deemed disposition rule.
- Nonresidents who return to Canada after emigrating may elect to reverse the tax effects of the deemed dispositions of the assets that are still held regardless of how long they were nonresidents.
- Emigrating taxpayers who are subject to the deemed disposition rules may post security for the departure tax instead of paying such tax by the balance-due date for the year of departure. An individual is not required to provide security for an amount of departure tax that is equal to or less than the taxes payable on the first CAD100,000 of capital gains resulting from the deemed dispositions.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Few deductions are allowed in computing income from employment. Among the deductible items are employee contributions to a registered pension plan (up to a certain maximum amount), travel and certain other expenses of commission employees, certain travel expenses of other employees, and union or professional dues.

Employers must generally withhold income tax, government pension contributions and unemployment insurance premiums from remuneration paid to employees, and must remit those amounts to the tax authorities for credit to the employees' accounts.

Interest may be claimed as a deduction in the year it is paid or when it becomes payable, depending on the taxpayer's normal practice, as long as the money is borrowed for the purpose of earning income. Other costs, including investment counseling fees and accounting costs (but not tax return preparation fees), are deductible. Personal interest, including interest on mortgages or charge accounts, is not deductible.

Other deductions include contributions to registered retirement savings plans (an individual retirement income plan), payments for alimony, expenses for certain moves within Canada and certain childcare expenses.

Federal personal credits and allowances. A resident individual is allowed to deduct several federal personal tax credits in computing the amount of basic federal tax for the year. Personal tax credits include a basic personal credit, a spousal credit subject to thresholds for spousal income, an employment credit, a disabled dependent's credit, an age credit, a disability credit, and education and tuition fee credits. An employee's contributions to the Canada/Quebec pension plan and to employment insurance/the Quebec parental insurance plan are also eligible for tax credit treatment.

Charitable donations (up to 75% of net income) are eligible for a federal tax credit of 15% on the first CAD200 and a federal tax credit of 29% for donations in excess of CAD200. A 33% tax credit is available to the extent that the individual has income greater than CAD200,000. The unused portion of the donation credit may be carried forward for up to five years. Qualifying first-time donors may receive an additional federal tax credit of 25% on the first CAD1,000 of monetary donations. Similarly, medical expenses in excess of the lesser of CAD2,421 or 3% of net income are eligible for a federal tax credit equal to 15% of the excess. An individual is eligible for a federal tax credit of up to CAD300 on the first CAD2,000 of qualifying pension income.

Various other credits are available, including credits determined with reference to employment income and adoption expenses. The federal credit amounts mentioned above are based on known and proposed amounts as of 1 July 2021. The credit amounts are indexed annually for inflation.

In general, the Canada Child Benefit (CCB) is a tax-free monthly payment program that provides a maximum annual benefit of up to CAD6,639 per child under the age of 6 and CAD5,602 per child aged 6 through 17. These benefit amounts are reduced (phased out) if adjusted family net income exceeds CAD31,120.

Provincial tax credits. Several provinces provide provincial tax credits against taxes otherwise payable for certain groups of taxpayers. The credits are available to taxpayers with low incomes and are calculated by reference to rental or other occupancy costs.

Business deductions. Interest and other charges incurred to acquire business assets or investment property generally may be deducted. Limitations apply to the deduction of automobile and home office expenses. Deductions for business meals and entertainment expenses are limited to 50% of actual expenses.

Rates

Federal/provincial tax authorities. The federal government, as well as the provinces and territories, impose income taxes on resident individuals. However, only the province of Quebec collects its own individual income tax and requires filing a separate return. The federal government collects the tax on behalf of all other provinces and territories, which means that only one combined return must be filed.

The calculation of an individual's tax payable is a two-step process. An individual's federal income tax for a given year is calculated on taxable income using a single graduated rate schedule. From this amount, allowable federal personal tax credits (see Federal personal credits and allowances) and the dividend tax credit are deducted. The net result is the individual's basic federal tax payable.

Income tax is generally paid to one of the provinces or territories based on the individual's residency on the last day of the year. All of the provinces and territories calculate tax by applying their graduated tax rates to taxable income. A separate calculation of taxable income, which is similar to the calculation of federal taxable income, is required. However, the treatment of certain items may differ.

Federal tax rates. Canada has five tax brackets for federal income tax purposes. These brackets are indexed annually by the inflation rate for the period from 1 October to 30 September of the previous year. The federal tax brackets and rates for 2021 shown below are based on known and proposed amounts as of 1 July 2021.

Taxable income		Tax on lower amount	Rate on excess
Exceeding CAD	Not exceeding CAD	CAD	%
0	49,020	0	15
49,020	98,040	7,353	20.5
98,040	151,978	17,402	26
151,978	216,511	31,426	29.32
216,511	—	50,141	33

Top marginal combined rates. The following table summarizes the top marginal combined federal and provincial/territorial tax rates in 2021 for an individual residing in various provinces and territories.

Yukon	48.00	28.93	44.04	24.00

(a) The rates shown are the maximum combined federal and provincial/territorial marginal tax rates, including surtaxes. The rates are based on known and proposed amounts as of 1 July 2021.
(b) The rates apply to the actual amount of taxable dividends received by individuals from taxable Canadian corporations.
(c) Only 50% of capital gains is included in taxable income (see Capital gains and losses). Consequently, total capital gains are effectively taxed at 50% of the ordinary tax rates.

Minimum income tax. To ensure that high-income taxpayers pay a certain level of tax, an alternative minimum tax applies. Under its provisions, individuals are required to recalculate taxable income, without deducting certain items that are otherwise deductible in the regular tax calculation. In recalculating taxable income, a blanket CAD40,000 exemption is permitted. Individuals pay the greater of the regular tax or the minimum tax. If the minimum tax exceeds the regular tax, the excess amount may be carried forward for seven years. The carryforward amount may be used to reduce regular tax to the extent that regular tax exceeds minimum tax.

Relief for losses. In general, business losses not utilized in the year incurred may be deducted from taxable income earned in the 3 years preceding the year of loss or in the 20 years following the year of loss.

B. Other taxes

Estate and gift taxes. Canadian succession law does not include an estate or gift tax. However, provincial probate fees may apply at rates that vary depending on the province.

In the year of death, the income of a deceased taxpayer includes income on an accrual basis from all sources up to the date of death, including accrued capital gains and losses. Various provisions alleviate hardship caused by the taxation of income and capital gains on an accrual basis at death. Among these provisions are the options to file a separate tax return for certain types of income and to tax the beneficiaries on certain transferred amounts. Special tax-free rollover provisions are available for property transferred to the Canadian-resident spouse of the deceased or to a qualifying trust for the benefit of the spouse, and for transfers of farm property to a child of the deceased.

Foreign home buyer's taxes. The provinces of British Columbia and Ontario have implemented foreign home buyer's taxes that apply to non-Canadian citizens and nonpermanent residents of Canada. The tax is levied on the value of the property being acquired at a rate of 20% in British Colombia and 15% in Ontario.

Furthermore, in British Columbia, the Speculation and Vacancy Tax has been implemented with respect to certain properties located in certain urban centers. For Canadian citizens or permanent residents of Canada who are not members of a satellite family, the tax rate is 0.5% of the property's assessed value. The tax rate for foreign owners and satellite families is 2% of the property's assessed value. A satellite family is defined as persons who declare less than 50% of their total combined household income for the year on a Canadian income tax return. This could apply even if an individual is a Canadian citizen or British Columbia resident. Certain exemptions exist.

C. Social security

Contributions. Individuals employed in Canada and their employers must each make Canada Pension Plan (CPP) contributions at a rate of 5.45% on salaries, which includes the 0.50% enhanced CPP contribution. Contributions to the Québec Pension Plan, when applicable, are made at a rate of 5.9%. For 2021, the maximum amount of earnings subject to CPP contributions is CAD61,600, with a basic exemption of CAD3,500. This results in a maximum annual CPP contribution for employers and employees of CAD3,166.45 each. Self-employed individuals must pay both portions for a maximum annual contribution of CAD6,332.90. Quebec Pension Plan contributions are subject to the same thresholds, resulting in maximum employers' and employees' contributions of CAD3,427.90 and self-employed individuals' contributions of CAD6,855.80.

Employment insurance premiums are also payable. For 2021, an employee's required employment insurance premiums are calculated at a rate of 1.58% on the maximum annual amount of insurable earnings of CAD56,300. This results in a maximum annual premium of CAD889.54. Employers must make contributions equal to 1.4 times the amount of the employee's premiums, up to CAD1,245.36. The federal employment insurance premiums for Quebec residents are lower. The premium rates are 1.18% for employees and 1.652% for employers. Quebec has lower rates because Quebec residents also participate in the Quebec parental insurance plan. For 2021, an employee's required premiums under the Quebec parental insurance plan are calculated at a rate of 0.494% on the maximum annual amount of insurable earnings of CAD83,500. This results in a maximum annual premium of CAD412.49 for the Quebec parental insurance plan. Employers must make contributions equal to 1.4 times the amount of the employee's premiums, up to a maximum of CAD577.82.

Beginning in 2012, if employees are at least 65 but under 70 and work while receiving government pension amounts, employees must continue to make contributions to the plan unless they file an election not to contribute. Also, if employees are under 65 and work while receiving a CPP retirement pension, both the employee and the employer must make government pension plan contributions. While contributing during this period, the number of years of low or zero earnings are automatically dropped from the calculation of CPP retirement pension distributions.

Coverage. The following table shows the maximum monthly amounts of the listed CPP benefits for 2021 (the Quebec pension plan provides similar benefits).

Benefit	Amount (CAD)
Retirement	1,203.75
Disability	1,413.66
Survivor with disability	1,413.66

The maximum amounts are paid to a person at 65 years of age. The pension amount is reduced if a person retires before reaching 65 years of age and is increased if the person delays taking the pension until the age of 70.

Canadian resident individuals or employers may have to contribute to health care plans operated by the provinces. Most hospital bills and physicians' fees, including those for drugs and dental care in some provinces, are covered by these plans.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Canada has entered into totalization agreements with the jurisdictions listed below (as of 1 July 2021). The agreements usually apply for a maximum of two to five years.

(a) A limited interim agreement, which is in force, deals only with contributions and does not cover benefits.
(b) Consolidated arrangements permit residents of the United Kingdom to use their periods of residence in Canada as if they were periods of contribution to the United Kingdom.
(c) These are limited agreements that only cover benefits.

The province of Quebec has separate totalization agreements. As a result, it does not follow the agreements listed above.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Married persons are taxed separately, rather than jointly, on all types of income. Therefore, spouses must file separate tax returns.

Individuals must file tax returns if they owe tax or if they are specifically requested to do so by the tax authorities. In addition, because of the capital gains exemption rules (see Section A), all individuals with capital gains or losses must file income tax returns, regardless of whether tax is owed for the year.

Nonresident individuals generally must file Canadian income tax returns if they earn employment or business income (including resource income, which is generally oil, gas and mineral rights) in Canada or if they have capital gains from dispositions of "taxable Canadian property" (TCP), which includes the following:
- Real estate in Canada
- Property used in carrying on a business in Canada
- Shares of a Canadian resident or nonresident corporation not listed on a designated stock exchange, capital interests in trusts, income interests in nonresident trusts (other than units of mutual fund trusts) or interests in partnerships, if at any time during the 60-month period before the disposition, more than 50% of the fair market value of these shares or interests was derived directly or indirectly from real or immovable property located in Canada, Canadian resource property, timber resource property or options on or interests in any of these properties (or from any combination of these properties)
- Shares of a Canadian resident or nonresident corporation listed on a designated stock exchange, shares of mutual fund trust corporations or units of mutual fund trusts, if at any time during the 60-month period before the disposition, 25% or more of the issued shares of the corporation or units of the mutual fund trust was owned by nonresident and related parties and more than 50% of the fair market value of the shares or units of the mutual fund trust was derived directly or indirectly from real or immovable property located in Canada, Canadian resource property, timber resource property or options on or interests in any of these properties (or from any combination of these properties)
- Income interests in trusts resident in Canada

Canada's double tax treaties may modify or exempt nonresidents from the above tax provisions. However, in general, Canadian nonresident tax withholding is required unless a payroll waiver is obtained or unless the employer becomes certified under a new certification process implemented in 2016.

The tax year for individuals in Canada is the calendar year. Annual income tax returns must generally be filed on or before 30 April of the year following the tax year. The filing due date is extended to 15 June for individuals earning self-employment or business income. This extended due date also applies to these individuals' spouses. No other extension of time to file income tax returns is available in Canada.

Any unpaid income taxes are due on or before 30 April of the year following the tax year, regardless of the due date of the individual's return. Penalties are levied if any tax due is not paid on time, and interest is charged on unpaid taxes.

Individuals may be required to make quarterly installment payments if the difference between tax payable and the amount withheld at source is greater than CAD3,000 (for Quebec residents, CAD1,800 of federal tax payable after federal withholding) in both the current year and either of the two preceding years. The amount of the quarterly installments is based on the lesser of the liability calculated by the tax authorities on installment notices, the liability for the preceding year or the liability projected for the current year after deduction of withholdings.

Taxpayers coming to or departing from Canada during a tax year are taxed on their worldwide income for the portion of the year in which they are residents of Canada. They are entitled to the same deductions and tax credits for the period of residency as a full-time resident with the exception of personal credits, which are prorated for the number of days during the year in which they are resident in Canada.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Foreign tax relief. Foreign taxes paid are generally allowed as credits. If an individual receives foreign-source income that has been subject to foreign tax, foreign tax credit relief may be provided in Canada to reduce the effects of double taxation. The foreign tax credit is computed on a country-by-country basis and may be taken only to the extent of Canadian tax payable on the net foreign income from the country. Separate foreign tax credits are computed for business income and nonbusiness income. The nonbusiness foreign tax credit allowed on income derived from property, other than real property, is further limited to 15% of gross foreign income from property.

To the extent that foreign taxes paid on foreign nonbusiness income are not credited against Canadian federal tax, the individual may deduct the excess amount in computing income derived from property. The individual also has the option of deducting from property income any foreign nonbusiness income taxes paid, rather than applying the amount for foreign tax credit purposes.

Unused foreign business tax credits may be carried back 3 years and forward 10 years. Unused foreign nonbusiness tax credits are not eligible for carryover.

Provincial foreign tax credit relief for nonbusiness foreign income taxes is also provided. The provincial tax credit is generally limited to the lesser of the provincial taxes payable on the income and any foreign tax paid exceeding the amount of tax allowed as a credit and deduction for federal income tax purposes.

Double tax treaties. Canada has negotiated double tax treaties with most major industrialized nations and many developing nations. All treaties negotiated after 1971 generally follow the provisions of the model treaty developed by the OECD. Many treaties currently in force were negotiated prior to 1972 and may vary significantly from the OECD model treaty.

Double tax treaties have been entered into with the following jurisdictions as of 1 July 2021.

Algeria	Iceland	Peru
Argentina	India	Philippines

(b) This treaty is under negotiation or renegotiation.
(c) This treaty does not apply to Hong Kong; a separate treaty with Hong Kong is in force.

F. Temporary permits

Entry visas. Unless he or she is a citizen of a visa-exempt country, an individual who is not a citizen or permanent resident of Canada and who wishes to enter the country as a tourist, business visitor, student or foreign worker must obtain a Temporary Resident Visa before entering Canada. Applications may be submitted online or through a Visa Application Centre.

Electronic travel authorization. A foreign national who is exempt from the above requirement to possess a travel entry visa (for example, most citizens of a European Union country, Australia and Japan) must first obtain an electronic travel authorization (eTA) before departing for Canada when arriving by air for visitor, temporary work or study purposes. An eTA is normally valid for five years or for the duration of the traveler's passport, whichever is shorter. The application and approval process is normally very fast for most travelers through the Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada website, but must be completed and approved before departure in order for the airline to allow the traveler to board the aircraft. It is recommended that a traveler apply for his or her eTA as soon as possible in advance of travel to Canada to avoid having to reschedule travel in the event of a delay in processing. US citizens are exempt from the eTA requirement and can travel to Canada without a visa or eTA.

Biometrics. Canada expanded the requirement for biometrics for most foreign nationals traveling to Canada. Applicants for visitor visas, study or work permits or permanent residence in Canada subject to the biometric requirements are required to provide their fingerprints and photographs. In most cases, biometrics only need to be provided once every 10 years. US citizens are exempt from the requirement as well as children under the age of 14 years and those over the age of 79 years. Visa-exempt nationals may also be able to provide biometrics at one of eight major Canadian airports where fingerprint verification will be conducted at inspection kiosks.

Tourists. An individual wishing to enter Canada as a tourist must generally first secure a Temporary Resident Visa from a consulate outside Canada or, in the case of visa-exempt foreign nationals, an eTA (see Electronic travel authorization). US citizens are exempt from the eTA and Temporary Resident Visa requirement. Visitors are generally admitted to Canada for periods of up to six months after the original date of entry. An application for an extension may be submitted from within Canada, depending on the circumstances.

Business visitors. An individual wishing to enter Canada as a business visitor generally must first secure a Temporary Resident Visa or, in the case of visa-exempt foreign nationals, an eTA (see Electronic travel authorization). US citizens are exempt from the visa and eTA requirement. A foreign national may enter Canada as a business visitor, without obtaining a work permit, in certain limited instances. In general, these instances are limited to foreign nationals engaging in international business activities in Canada, without directly entering the Canadian labor market or providing services to a Canadian entity. Common circumstances in which a foreign national may enter Canada as a business visitor include the following:

- Foreign nationals attending business meetings or conferences
- Foreign nationals seeking to purchase Canadian goods or services or receiving training and familiarization with such goods or services
- Foreign nationals giving or receiving training with a Canadian parent or subsidiary of the corporation that employs the foreign national abroad
- Foreign national sales representatives who come to Canada to sell goods (or services) manufactured outside Canada, if they do not sell to the general public

G. Work permits

With few exceptions, most individuals providing services in Canada's labor market require a work permit, regardless of duration of stay or source of income. Admission to Canada is generally granted for a specific purpose and is time-limited. All foreign nationals seeking entry to Canada must ensure that they have the appropriate status for their intended activities and length of stay.

The federal government, through Service Canada and Employment and Social Development Canada, is responsible for ensuring that the Canadian labor market is not negatively affected by the employment of foreign nationals in place of Canadian citizens or permanent residents. Unless exempted, a foreign worker may apply to Immigration, Refugees, Citizenship Canada (IRCC) for a work permit only after Service Canada has provided a Labor Market Impact Assessment (Confirmation) (LMIA; see Labor Market Impact Assessment) to the employer that a job may be offered to a foreign worker. However, in several occupations and circumstances, an employer may be exempt from the requirement to obtain an LMIA and the qualifying employee may apply directly for a work permit (see Exempt categories).

Labor Market Impact Assessment. In general, unless a foreign national meets the criteria for an exemption, a LMIA is required before the foreign national can apply for a work permit (see Exempt categories). In general, the LMIA process requires the employer to demonstrate to Service Canada that a job offer to a foreign worker is likely to have a positive or neutral impact on the Canadian labor market. In reaching its opinion, Service Canada considers a number of factors, including the efforts made by the employer to recruit Canadians for the position, whether the work will result in direct job creation or retention for Canadians, and whether the work will result in the creation or transfer of skills and knowledge for the benefit of Canadians.

In addition, Service Canada assesses the genuineness of a job offer, the ability to transition the job to a Canadian in the future, its consistency with the terms of applicable federal-provincial/territorial agreements, whether the foreign worker will be paid a prevailing wage in Canada, and the employer's past history of compliance with the conditions of previous job offers to foreign nationals.

After Service Canada is satisfied that the above criteria are met, it issues a positive LMIA confirming the job offer to the foreign worker, who must then submit an application for a work permit online, through a visa office or at a port of entry, if eligible to apply upon arrival in Canada.

Work permit applications must be submitted before expiration of the LMIA and are issued for a specific time period, which coincides with the recommended duration stated in the LMIA, usually between one to three years. A work permit extension may be applied for through an IRCC processing center in Canada with the support of a new LMIA or proof of eligibility for an LMIA exemption. A transition plan is required for most high-skilled positions, outlining how the role will be transitioned to a Canadian citizen or permanent resident. If a foreign worker is contemplating a longer stay, he or she should consider obtaining Canadian permanent resident status.

Foreign workers employed in lower-skilled and lower-wage occupations have greater restrictions on their ability to work in Canada or apply for permanent residence.

Global Talent Stream. The Global Talent Stream, which is a subset of the Temporary Foreign Worker Program, allows innovative firms in Canada a more streamlined process to hire highly skilled foreign talent when they can demonstrate that there are benefits to the Canadian labor market. As part of the application process, employers are either referred by a designated partner organization or they are eligible to hire highly skilled workers for one of the occupations listed on the Global Talent Occupations List. A labor market benefits plan is required instead of formal public recruitment and a transition plan.

Exempt categories. Canadian immigration legislation and policy outlines the circumstances under which a work permit may be issued without an LMIA. Exempt categories include work that will result in significant economic, social or cultural benefits for Canada, international treaty-based permits and other occupation-specific exemptions.

The most common LMIA-exempt categories are discussed below.

Free trade agreement professionals. As of 1 July 2020, the new Canada-United States-Mexico Agreement (CUSMA) enters into force. This new agreement replaces the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) while preserving the same requirements and guidelines regarding work permit applications. The CUSMA will continue to provide a special opportunity for US and Mexican citizens to secure a Canadian work permit without obtaining an LMIA. Applicants with certain education and skill levels may accept job offers from Canadian employers in listed professions. For certain professions, licensing in Canada may also be required. Listed professions include, among others, accountants, architects, economists, engineers, hotel managers, lawyers, librarians, management consultants and scientists. Canada has also entered into free trade agreements with Chile, Colombia, Korea (South) and Peru, which provide similar benefits to professionals of those countries. The Canada-European Union (EU) Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement, which includes mobility provisions for key personnel, contractual service providers and short-term business visitors, has also been implemented. The most recent agreement is the Comprehensive and Progressive Agreement for Trans-Pacific Partnership (CPTPP), which came into effect in December 2018. This agreement applies to citizens of the signatory parties as well as permanent residents of Australia and New Zealand.

Students. Full-time international students currently studying at a designated post-secondary institution are eligible to work on or off campus for up to 20 hours a week during school terms and full time during scheduled study breaks.

The married or common-law spouse of a foreign student who wishes to work in Canada while the student is attending a full-time course at a designated post-secondary institution is eligible for an unrestricted permit for a period concurrent with the student's study permit.

A foreign student who has graduated from a designated post-secondary educational program in Canada of at least one year can apply for an unrestricted work permit for a period of one to three years, based on the length of his or her program of study.

International Experience Class. Canada has entered into reciprocal agreements with several countries to facilitate international work experience for youths. Depending on the country of citizenship, work permits may be issued under one of the following three programs:

- Working holiday
- Young professional
- Co-op/internship

Program availability may be subject to quotas and age restrictions.

Canada has bilateral agreements with many jurisdictions, including Australia, Japan, Sweden and the United Kingdom.

Intracompany transferees. The most commonly relied on LMIA exempt category is for intracompany transferees. The exemption for intracompany transferees is designed to facilitate the transfer of "executive," "senior or functional managerial" and "specialized knowledge" personnel from companies affiliated with those established in Canada. The applicant must be employed by the foreign related company for at least one year in the three years preceding the transfer, and must come to Canada to take a similar role in a "senior management," "executive" or "specialized knowledge" position.

Spousal work permits. Spouses, including common-law and same-sex partners, who are in Canada accompanying their skilled foreign workers or student spouses ordinarily qualify for work permits themselves under the spousal work permit program. These work permits are "open" work permits, which are unrestricted in terms of employer, occupation and location of employment. Individuals seeking to work in child care, medical or teaching fields may require the completion of medicals in advance. Spousal permits are typically valid for a period concurrent with the foreign national spouse's status in Canada or the period of validity of the spouse's passport, whichever is shorter.

Global Skills Strategy. In June 2017, the Canadian federal government launched the Global Skills Strategy (GSS) to support faster access to high-skilled talent in Canada and to help Canadian businesses support the creation of jobs for Canadians. The program includes a multipronged approach including faster consular processing times (two weeks) for high-skilled work permit applications (National Occupation Classification Skill Level 0 and A occupations), establishment of a dedicated service channel for referred companies looking to make significant job-creation investments in Canada, introduction of a simplified process to allow the entry of short-term, highly skilled workers for a limited duration of up to 30 days within a 12-month period, and a more consistent service standard for LMIA applications for high-skilled, in-demand positions supported by a labor market benefits plan.

H. Permanent residence status

The following descriptions apply to permanent residence outside the province of Quebec. Individuals intending to settle in Quebec should consult with Quebec-based professionals to obtain relevant information.

Express Entry. Express Entry refers to the intake management system used by IRCC to invite potential economic immigrants to apply for permanent residence to Canada. Potential immigrants who meet the criteria for one or more of the permanent residence streams including the Federal Skilled Worker Program (FSWP), Canadian Experience Class (CEC) or certain Provincial Nominee Programs (PNP) are required to submit an online profile using the Express Entry system. Individuals are then assessed a Comprehensive Ranking Score (CRS) based on several factors including the following:

- Age
- Education
- Language ability in English and/or French
- Previous work experience

Potential applicants are then entered into the "Express Entry Pool." Draws are held periodically (usually every three to four weeks) and those with the highest CRS scores are invited to submit a permanent residence application. Only those with an invitation to apply are eligible to proceed with an application. Applicants will then have 60 days to complete a full application online, including the completion of medicals, obtaining police clearances and providing required support documentation. The majority of applications are processed within six to eight months following submission of the full application.

Federal Skilled Worker Program. The Federal Skilled Worker Program (FSWP) is based on a points-based assessment system, which requires applicants to meet a minimum points threshold, based on the following:

- Age
- Education
- Work experience
- Adaptability to Canada factors

To qualify for immigration under the FSWP, an applicant must be assessed at least 67 out of a possible 100 points.

At a minimum, the applicant must have at least one year of work experience in a skilled occupation, demonstrate that he or she meets the minimum language proficiency requirements in French or English, and have his or her foreign educational credentials formally assessed.

The applicant must also demonstrate that he or she meets the minimum language proficiency requirements in French or English.

Canadian Experience Class. The Canadian Experience Class (CEC) recognizes that certain individuals have the qualities to make a successful transition from temporary to permanent residence and can contribute to the Canadian economy. It is a simplified program that allows certain high skilled temporary foreign workers to remain permanently in Canada and apply for permanent residence from within Canada. To be eligible under the CEC, the applicant must be proficient in English and/or French and must have obtained at least 12 months of full-time (or an equal amount of part-time) skilled work experience in Canada in the three years before the application is made.

CEC applicants must also submit the results of a designated third-party English or French language proficiency assessment to meet language proficiency requirements.

Provincial nominee programs. Under agreements between the provincial and federal governments, provinces are able to nominate candidates for permanent residence in Canada if the applicant has the intention to settle and establish themselves in a particular province. Program criteria differ between provinces but the overriding principle is that applicants have skills or resources in demand in the particular province, that they have a job offer from an employer in the province, and that the applicants intend to reside permanently in such province. Some provinces also have programs for immigrant entrepreneurs. It is recommended that potential applicants consult with an authorized Canadian immigration representative to confirm eligibility criteria for specific provincial streams and whether applications are currently being accepted (there are limited numbers of nominations available each year).

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The legally married spouse or common-law partner and any dependent children (under the age of 22 years and who do not have a partner/spouse) of a holder of a Canadian work permit in a high-skilled occupation may seek to enter and reside in Canada for a term concurrent with the principal holder's work permit. These family members are usually issued Visitor Records, if required, to document their status as accompanying family members. Study Permits for minor children are not required to attend primary and secondary schools unless the children require Temporary Resident Visas to enter Canada. Attendance at a post-secondary institution requires a letter of acceptance from that institution prior to the issuance of the Study Permit. Study Permits are not required if the student is enrolled in a short-term program in Canada of six months or less.

Married spouses and common-law partners, including same-sex couples, may be eligible for work permits if their spouse/partner is in Canada on a work permit or a study permit. An applicant for a spousal work permit may be eligible for an "open" work permit (unrestricted in terms of occupation, location or employer) if the applicant's spouse is performing work that is at a management level, is a professional occupation, or is a technical or skilled trade, and the work permit is valid for a term of at least six months.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive temporarily in Canada using driver's licenses from their home countries. Because each Canadian province issues driver's licenses independently, rules for foreigners vary. In general, foreign nationals have 60 days from the time of their arrival in Canada to obtain a Canadian driver's license. Depending on the province, an eye examination and a driving examination may be required. Insurance coverage requirements should also be reviewed.

The personal income tax rules described in this chapter reflect the current legislation and are expected to be in force until 31 December 2021.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents of Cape Verde are subject to personal income tax (Imposto sobre o Rendimento das Pessoas Singulares, or IRPS) on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to IRPS on income arising in Cape Verde.

An individual is considered resident in Cape Verde if he or she meets any of the following conditions:
- He or she stays in Cape Verde for more than 183 days in any 12-month period.
- On 31 December, he or she has a dwelling in Cape Verde that suggests habitual residence in Cape Verde.
- He or she exercises abroad public functions or commissions for the Republic of Cape Verde.
- On 31 December, he or she is a crew member of a ship or aircraft at the service of an entity having its residency, head office or place of effective management in Cape Verde that has been resident in Cape Verde in the past five years.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment and pension income. IRPS is imposed on the income received by employed individuals, which includes all payments related to work. It is also imposed on all types of pensions. Some exemptions are available, particularly for termination payments and pensions up to CVE960,000.

Business and professional income. Business and professional income includes all income from professional activities and commissions and profits from a trade received by individuals.

Business and professional income may be subject to one of the following two regimes:

- Simplified regime for micro and small companies: turnover subject to a special rate of 4%
- Organized bookkeeping regime: net profit subject to the standard tax rates listed in Rates

Income may be taxed under the simplified regime if such regime is chosen by the taxpayer and if such taxpayer meets the requirements established in the legal regime for micro and small companies (notably, having up to 10 employees and/or having a gross turnover of up to CVE10 million), as defined by the relevant legislation. The organized bookkeeping regime applies to those taxpayers that do not meet the relevant requirements established in the legal regime for micro and small companies.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are taxed in the same manner as employment income.

Rental income. Rental income is subject to withholding tax at a rate of 10%. Taxpayers may opt for rental income to be included in taxable income computed in the tax return. In this case, the withholding tax is treated as a payment on account of the final annual income tax. Rental income must be included in the taxable income computed in the tax return if the payer is an individual or if the taxpayer simultaneously obtains rental income from individual and legal entity lessees. Expenses incurred on the maintenance and repair of the property may be deductible up to 30% of the gross rental income. For subleases, the difference between the rental income received and the rental income paid is not allowed as a deduction.

Investment income. Interest derived from public company bonds and state bonds and dividends are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 10%. An exemption applies to dividends received by resident individuals from resident companies or nonresident companies in Cape Verde subject to and not exempt from corporate income tax (Imposto sobre o Rendimento das Pessoas Colectivas, or IRPC). Dividends received by nonresident individuals from resident companies subject to and not exempt from IRPC are exempt from IRPS.

In general, other gross investment income is subject to a final withholding tax of 20%.

Other income. A flat rate of 20% applies to gains from gambling, lotteries, betting and prizes awarded in sweepstakes or contests.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains derived by individual taxpayers from the disposal of immovable property, intellectual property or shareholdings are subject to a flat rate of 1%.

The IRPS Code provides an exemption for gains realized by nonresident individuals in Cape Verde from the disposal of shares and other securities. This exemption does not apply if real estate located in Cape Verde accounts for more than 50% of the assets of the entity being disposed of.

Special regime for non-habitual residents. A special regime applies to individuals who become tax residents of Cape Verde and have not been taxed as such in any of the previous five years. Non-habitual resident status applies for up to 10 years, and requires the taxpayer to be registered as a non-habitual resident with the tax authorities. The main features of this regime are summarized below.

Employment income, pensions and business or professional income derived from high value-added activities of a scientific, artistic or technical nature are taxed at a flat rate of 10% on net income.

Foreign-source income, such as employment income, income from certain business or professional activities (as mentioned above), income from copyrights, industrial property rights or transfer of know-how, investment income, rental income and capital gains, is exempt from tax in Cape Verde if such income is effectively taxed (for employment income) or may be taxed (for the other types of income) in either of the following countries:
- A tax treaty country, in accordance with the terms of the treaty
- A non-tax treaty country, in accordance with the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) Model Tax Convention rules, provided that the country is not a territory considered a tax haven (not applicable to employment income) and that the income cannot be deemed sourced in Cape Verde under domestic tax law

Foreign-source pension income is exempt from tax in Cape Verde if such income is taxed in a tax treaty country or is not deemed sourced in Cape Verde under domestic tax law.

In general, income benefiting from the exemption method is considered to determine the tax rate applicable to the remaining income (except employment and business or professional income subject to the 10% rate mentioned above, which are taxed at special flat rates). Taxpayers may opt to apply the credit method (rather than the exemption method) to this income.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. Personal allowances are granted in the form of credits (see Credits).

Business and professional deductions. Professionals and individuals carrying on a business may be taxed under the simplified regime for micro and small companies or the organized bookkeeping regime (see Business and professional income).

The organized bookkeeping regime provides for the deduction of activity-related expenses. Taxable income is calculated using the IRPC rules, subject to the following limitations contained in the IRPS Code:
- Travel and accommodation expenses are only deductible up to 10% of total revenue.
- If a professional's house is partially used as an office, the professional may deduct certain expenses, including rent, electricity, water and telephone costs, and depreciation, up to 50% of the total amount of expenses incurred.
- Amounts booked as per diem allowances, kilometer allowances, meal allowances and other remuneration allowances are not deductible.

Rates. The following personal income tax rates apply for 2021.

Taxable income
Exceeding CVE	Not exceeding CVE	Rate %
0	960,000	16.5
960,000	1,800,000	23.1
1,800,000	—	27.5

Taxable income up to CVE220,000 is exempt from tax. The CVE220,000 is subtracted from the amount taxable. As a result, the 16.5% rate applies to income between CVE220,000 and CVE960,000.

For purposes of assessment of the personal income tax liability on capital gains arising from the disposal of wealth goods, the following amounts are considered unjustified patrimonial increases and are taxable.

Evidence of wealth	Income to be considered
Acquisition of immovable property in an amount greater than CVE15 million	25% of the acquisition price
Passenger vehicles acquired for a price above CVE5 million	50% of the acquisition price in the register year (the calendar year in which the first certificate of register of the vehicle is issued)
Loans granted amounting to at least CVE2,500,000 in a year	30% of the annual amount Withholding taxes. Tax on income listed in the following table is withheld at source.

	Withholding tax rates
Type of taxable income	Residents %	Nonresidents %
Employment income	— (a)	— (a)
Business and professional income	15	15
Royalties	20	20 (b)
Bank deposit interest	20	20 (b)
Interest derived from public company bonds and state bonds	10	10 (b)
Dividends	0/10 (c)	10 (b)(d)
Income from the use or concession of equipment	20	20 (b)
Rentals	10	10
Pensions	— (a)	— (a)
Other investment income	20	20

(a) Withholding taxes are imposed at progressive rates according to the levels of income.
(b) This is a final withholding tax; income need not be declared.
(c) An exemption applies to dividends received from resident companies or nonresident companies in Cape Verde subject to and not exempt from IRPC.
(d) An exemption applies to dividends received from resident companies subject to and not exempt from IRPC.

Credits. For 2021, individuals may credit the following amounts against their tax liability:
- CVE5,000 for each dependent not subject to IRPS, each dependent under declared permanent incapacity and for each ascendant who lives with the taxpayer and does not receive income above the minimum social security retirement pension (the credit is subject to an annual cap of CVE25,000)
- 10% of documented medical expenses of the taxpayer or a member of the household (the credit is subject to an annual cap of CVE25,000)
- 10% of alimony payments (the credit is subject to an annual cap of CVE25,000)
- 10% of expenses incurred on the rental of the taxpayer residence (the credit is subject to an annual cap of CVE12,500)
- 10% of interest on certain loans and debts incurred for the acquisition or improvement of the taxpayer residence (the credit is subject to an annual cap of CVE12,500)
- 10% of education expenses of the taxpayer or a member of the household up to 24 years old (the credit is subject to an annual cap of CVE12,500)
- Advance personal income tax payments and taxes withheld at source

B. Other taxes

Inheritance and gift taxes. Inheritance and gift taxes were eliminated, effective from April 1999.

Property tax. Property tax is levied on the property value at a flat rate of 1.5%. It is payable by the owners or users of the property, regardless of whether they reside in Cape Verde.

Property tax is due in the following circumstances:
- Annually, as a real estate tax
- On the act of transfer, in case of acquisition of real estate
- At the moment of disposal, in case of qualifying capital gains

Real estate registration acts may benefit from the following tax incentives:
- Notarial and private deeds with respect to the transfer of real estate are exempt from stamp duty for two years. This exemption also applies to notarial and private deeds that aim to legalize real estate transfer transactions if certain conditions are met.
- Legalization of the ownership of immovable property acquired by 31 December 2016 is exempt from real estate tax for two years from the moment when the deed is registered in the land register.

Touristic contribution. For 2019, the tourist contribution established in 2013 remains in force. Accordingly, every overnight stay in a tourist establishment incurs a cost of CVE220 per occupant for a maximum of 10 nights. Children under 16 years old are not subject to this contribution.

C. Social security

Contributions. Social security contributions are payable on all salaries, wages, bonuses, subsidies and other regular income, excluding some allowances and transport subsidies. Effective from 26 July 2017, the employer rate is 16%, and the employee rate is 8.5%. An employer must deduct an employee's contribution and pay the total amount by the 15th day of the following month.

Self-employed individuals engaged in a business or professional activity are subject to a special regime for social security contributions. Their contributions are calculated on a base preselected by the individual. The following are the contribution rates for self-employed individuals:
- 11% for the restricted social security regime
- 19.5% for the extended social security regime

Employment incentive. Companies or individuals (with organized accounts) who hire young employees up to 37 years old for their first employment relationship for a minimum term of one year are exempt from the mandatory employer social security contributions if certain conditions are met.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security contributions and to assure benefit coverage, Cape Verde has entered into totalization agreements. Under social security agreements, foreigners who work up to two years in Cape Verde and who contribute to a compulsory social security scheme in their country of origin may not be subject to Cape Verdean social security contributions.

Cape Verde has entered into social security agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Brazil*	Luxembourg	Spain
France	Netherlands	Sweden
Italy	Portugal

* A new agreement is under negotiation.

A social security agreement is being negotiated with Senegal.

Cape Verde has also signed a community of Portuguese-language countries multilateral social security agreement with the following jurisdictions, which is not yet in force.

Brazil	Portugal	São Tomé and Príncipe
Mozambique

Angola, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea-Bissau and Timor-Leste have not yet signed the multilateral agreement.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Cape Verde is the calendar year. Residents, as well as nonresidents who have filing obligations, with only employment income or pension income must file their personal income tax returns by the end of March. Residents, as well as nonresidents who have filing obligations, with other income must file their returns by the end of May. Any balance of tax due or excess tax paid is payable or refundable when the Cape Verdean tax authorities issue the respective tax assessment.

Resident and nonresident individuals must use Form MOD 112 to self-assess the personal income tax. The tax return must be submitted electronically.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Residents who receive foreign-source income are entitled to a tax credit equal to the lower of the foreign tax paid or the Cape Verdean tax payable on such income (after the respective credits). The credit applies to income derived from treaty and non-treaty countries.

Cape Verde has entered into double tax treaties with the Macau Special Administrative Region, Mauritius, Portugal and Spain. Cape Verde has signed double tax treaties with Angola, Equatorial Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, São Tomé and Príncipe, and Senegal, which are not yet in force.

Income tax treaties are under negotiation with Brazil, Luxembourg, Morocco, Seychelles and Singapore.

A. Income tax

The Cayman Islands government does not tax the income or capital gains of resident or nonresident individuals.

B. Social security

No welfare or social security taxes are imposed. No deductions or contributions are required for any other government-sponsored programs. Medical insurance is mandatory for all private employees in the Cayman Islands. Employees must contribute a minimum of 5% of their earnings to a mandatory pension plan up to KYD87,000 except for foreign workers who have completed less than nine months of their employment contracts.

C. Business licenses

Unless exempt, every person or company carrying on a trade or business in the Cayman Islands must have a business license for each location where the trade or business is conducted. The cost of the annual license depends on the type and location of the business and on the number and type of employees. The license fee is payable every year, and the application for renewal must be made at least 28 days before the anniversary of the grant of the license.

Companies carrying on a trade or business in the Cayman Islands that are not 60% owned and controlled by Caymanians also need a license under the Local Companies (Control) Law. This license normally has a 12-year term.

D. Double tax treaties

The Cayman Islands have not entered into any double tax treaties covering income tax.

E. Entry into the Cayman Islands

Visitors, other than prohibited immigrants, wishing to enter the Cayman Islands are normally permitted to enter and remain initially for up to one month. Frequent short-term visitors and persons who have other close connections to the Cayman Islands may be granted permission for entries lasting up to six months. Applications for extensions to these permitted visitations must be made within that period to the Chief Immigration Officer.

Before a visitor may enter the Cayman Islands, a valid passport or other document establishing the identity and nationality of the visitor is required. In addition, visas are required for nationals of all jurisdictions other than the following jurisdictions.

(a) Only those Chinese nationals holding a Hong Kong passport do not need an entry visa to enter the Cayman Islands.
(b) The individual must hold a Hong Kong passport.
(c) The visa exemption does not apply to nationals of the following British Commonwealth countries.

Bangladesh
Cameroon
Gambia
Ghana
India
Jamaica*
Nigeria
Pakistan*
Sierra Leone
Sri Lanka
Uganda

* Nationals who are between 15 and 70 years old.

(d) The visa exemption applies only if the individual holds an ordinary passport that includes personal identification numbers issued by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Taiwan.

Each person arriving in the Cayman Islands is required to produce for inspection by an immigration officer a passport or other valid document establishing his or her identity and nationality or place of permanent residence. This should be valid beyond the date of their return ticket. Proof of citizenship or residence may be established by producing photo identification together with a certified copy of a birth certificate, or a naturalization certificate.

Persons from certain jurisdictions are also required to possess a valid visa for the Cayman Islands.

Nationals of China Mainland and Jamaica, who possess a valid visa from Canada, the United Kingdom or the United States, can visit the Cayman Islands if arriving directly from the country for which that visa was issued. Persons taking advantage of the waiver of the visa requirement above are permitted to enter and remain in the Cayman Islands for a period not exceeding 30 days.

A visitor must possess a passport or other appropriate documentation that is valid beyond the date of his or her return ticket. However, this documentation does not necessarily have to be valid for over six months if this is longer than the length of stay.

A visitor must also possess a paid-up return ticket or tickets entitling the visitor and his or her dependents, if any, to travel to their next destination outside the Cayman Islands. A visitor may also be required to satisfy the immigration officer that he or she has sufficient funds to maintain himself or herself and his or her dependents during the period of their stay in the Cayman Islands.

The law also states that persons may be refused entry if they fail to satisfy officials that they will be admitted to another country after their stay. In such circumstances, to enter the Cayman Islands, these persons would need a passport or valid travel document.

Any resident of the United States who arrives in the Cayman Islands directly or is in transit and who produces a valid US Alien Registration Card may be permitted to enter and remain in the Cayman Islands for up to 30 days. This concession enables some individuals who otherwise would need to obtain Cayman Islands visas before their journeys to travel to the Cayman Islands without visas.

Foreign nationals, including tourists, who are granted permission to enter and reside in the Cayman Islands are not permitted to engage in any form of employment, or to carry on or offer to carry on any financial, professional, trade or business activity without valid work permits. An exception is made for individuals who have been granted permanent residence (see Section G).

If a prospective employee is not a national of an English-speaking country and they are already in the Cayman Islands, he or she is required to come to the Department of Immigration Headquarters to take an English test. If a prospective employee is not yet in the Cayman Islands, he or she is required to take an English test on arrival at the Department of Immigration

Headquarters. If an individual is found not to possess sufficient knowledge of the English language, he or she will be refused entry or, if resident in the Cayman Islands, may have his or her permission to remain or work permit revoked.

F. Work permits

General. The Cayman Islands' immigration policy gives employment precedence to those who hold Caymanian status, but recognizes that the continuing expansion of the economy often entails the recruitment of skilled individuals from overseas.

An employer who is unable to find a Caymanian with the necessary qualifications to fill a vacancy may apply for a work permit to bring in a qualified non-Caymanian. Non-Caymanians wishing to work in the Cayman Islands must have job offers from local employers who must apply for work permits.

The applications are handled by the Chief Immigration Officer, the Work Permit Board, which is appointed by the government to control the entry, residence and employment of non-Caymanians (the Chief Immigration Officer is a non-voting member of the Work Permit Board), or the Business Staffing Plan Board (see below). Work permits are normally issued for a specific occupation with a specific employer. The relevant board may set conditions or limitations on granting a permit.

Before an application is made to the relevant board, the vacant position must be advertised every six months in the local press for a minimum of two issues for two consecutive weeks and must indicate a full and accurate job description, remuneration, benefits and identity of the employer. Certain categories of workers are exempt from the advertising requirement, including individuals married to Caymanians, domestic helpers, various unskilled laborers in construction, agriculture and other specified industries, and self-employed individuals.

The following actions are required by a foreign national seeking employment:

- Obtain, complete and return to the employer the work permit application form, together with evidence of qualifications and experience. Qualification certificates that are not in English must be translated to English.
- Enclose one full-faced, passport-size photograph.
- Obtain a police clearance certificate from the applicant's home district or last place of residence, issued within six months before the date of application. For applicants from the United Kingdom and other jurisdictions where the police do not readily issue clearance certificates, an affidavit of no convictions, sworn before a notary public, may be submitted. If police clearance has been undertaken in another language, it must be translated to English.
- Obtain a medical certificate of good health, completed on the board's prescribed form. If the medical certificate has been completed in another language, it must be translated to English.
- Provide notarized copies of any professional certifications or credentials to support the applicant's qualification for the position. If professional certifications or credentials have been issued in another language, they must be translated to English.

- If the applicant's dependents are also seeking to reside in the Cayman Islands as part of the work permit application, provide certified copies of the marriage certificate for the spouse and birth certificates for the dependent children. A police clearance certificate and completed medical exam are also required for the spouse and dependent children over the age of 18. An approval letter from a private school or university confirming attendance for dependent children is required. If the person is over 18 years old, the confirmation or attendance letter must be submitted annually.

Companies licensed to carry on business in the Cayman Islands may also submit a detailed business plan outlining their staffing requirements for the next three to five years, including identifying the number of Caymanians employed, plans for training and promotion programs and increasing the number of Caymanians on staff, and the demands for foreign expertise and personnel over that period. These business plans are reviewed by the Business Staffing Plan Board and, if accepted, provide a fast track to identify the permit sought as within the categories of the plan.

The following individuals do not require work permits and are exempt from the requirement to pay a nonrefundable registration fee or work permit dependent fee:
- Caymanians
- Holders of permanent residence with the right to work
- Holders of a Residency and Employment Rights Certificate
- Holders of a Visitor's Work Visa
- Ministers of religion and teachers
- Spouse of a Caymanian
- Persons working for a nonprofit cultural, educational or charitable body
- Surviving spouse of a Caymanian who has not married a non-Caymanian
- Exempt Cubans
- Cayman Islands Monetary Authority employees
- Employees of the Cayman Islands Civil Service
- UK government employees working in the Cayman Islands
- Consular officers and staff
- Accredited representatives or agents of a government of a British Commonwealth country
- Members of the British armed forces
- Members of crews of visiting vessels and aircraft
- A person who is the beneficial owner of up to two units of property and is lawfully present in the Cayman Islands to facilitate rental or lease arrangements with respect to such units and whose spouse does not own, operate or have an interest in those units
- Other persons declared by the Governor-in-Cabinet to be exempt from work permit requirements
- Other persons declared to be exempt under the provisions of the Immigration Law

Work permits are granted for employment with a specific employer and may not be transferred. With respect to entities with multiple subsidiaries, it is possible to demonstrate that such multiple employers share the permit related to the application. After an application is accepted, changes may be made under exceptional circumstances. Inappropriate variances from a permit that the Immigration Board considers abusive may result in the immediate termination of the work permit or non-renewal of the work permit on its expiration.

Temporary work permits allow foreign nationals to enter the Cayman Islands for specified temporary employment. A temporary work permit may be issued for all occupations for periods of up to six months at the discretion of the Chief Immigration Officer. A temporary work permit may not be extended or renewed unless it was issued for an initial period of less than six months. Applications for temporary or short-term permits are made to the Chief Immigration Officer.

Fees. Employers must pay an annual fee for a work permit for each non-Caymanian person working in the Cayman Islands. The fees vary from USD183 for domestic, manual and unskilled workers to USD39,512.20 for partners, managing directors and chief executive officers of organizations. Spouses of persons with Caymanian status must apply for residency with employment rights before they are allowed to work in the Cayman Islands (see Section G). An annual supplemental fee also applies for each dependent who requests to reside in the Cayman Islands as part of the employee's application. The fee varies from USD305 for domestic, manual and unskilled workers to USD610 per dependent for all other workers. Application filing fees range from USD85.36 to USD1,219.51.

On the initial grant of a work permit, employers are also required to pay a nonrefundable fee of USD244 per person as a guarantee for the repatriation of expatriate employees and their dependents.

Term limits. The initial term for a work permit may be up to three years, or up to five years with respect to permits for domestic helpers, doctors, teachers, nurses, ministers of religion or workers filling positions authorized by the employer's business staffing plan. The maximum total time for which an annual work permit may be granted and renewed for an individual is nine years, unless the employee is designated as a key employee (see below). On expiration of the nine-year term limit, the person is required to leave the Cayman Islands for a minimum period of one year. After the end of this one-year period, the employer may apply for another annual work permit for the individual and the term-limit period begins again.

Employers may apply to have a person designated a key employee. Persons approved as key employees are granted an additional two years to their work permit. After the end of the additional period, the person may apply for residency with a right to work as detailed in Section G. The employer must demonstrate that the person has specific skills or experience that is vital to the employer's business and is not available within the Cayman Islands.

G. Residence permits

Residence permits with a right to work. An individual designated as a key employee who has resided in the Cayman Islands on a work permit for a continuous period of eight years may apply for the right to reside and work permanently in the Cayman Islands. The permit is known as a Residency with Employment Rights Certificate. Spouses of persons possessing Caymanian status are also required to hold a Residency with Employment Rights Certificate to work in the Cayman Islands.

Applicants, other than spouses of Caymanians, are considered on a points system that takes into consideration factors contained in the Guidance for Points System, which is issued by the Immigration Board.

The applicant is required to pass a written examination on the history and culture of the Cayman Islands. A nonrefundable application fee of USD1,219.51 is payable. On approval, the applicant is required to pay a fee. The minimum amount of this fee is USD595.24 for spouses of Caymanians, and domestic, unskilled and manual workers, and the maximum amount of the fee is up to USD15,243.90, based on the applicant's income. The permanent residence holder is responsible for paying the annual fee each year, but he or she can make an arrangement with the employer to do so.

Effective from 25 October 2013, the Immigration Board is no longer granting any new key employee status. However, any previous key employee grantees can still apply after they meet the term limit requirements.

Permission to engage in gainful occupation is normally restricted to a specified occupation, but not to a specified employer.

Residence permits for persons of independent means. Government policy encourages people of good reputation and financial standing who make substantial investment in the Cayman Islands to become permanent residents of independent means. Anyone wishing to reside in the Cayman Islands without engaging in employment may apply to the Chief Immigration Officer. To qualify, applicants must normally be able to financially support themselves and any dependents with a continuous source of annual income in the amount of at least USD147,000, without having to engage in any form of employment in the Cayman Islands. In addition, they must be able to make an investment in a home or a local enterprise of at least USD1,200,000.

To apply for an initial residence permit, an applicant must submit the following:
- Application form completed in full, together with a cover letter and an application fee of USD610. A separate application is not required for accompanying dependents.
- Police clearance certificate. This certificate, obtained from the applicant's home district or last place of residence, should cover the last 10 years. A certificate must be submitted for each accompanying dependent older than 18 years of age.
- A medical certificate of health for each family member and evidence of health insurance.

- Three written references from persons, not related to the applicant, who have known the applicant for several years.
- Full-faced, passport-size photographs for the applicant and each dependent.
- Evidence of financial status and local investment. A statement of financial position and statement of income demonstrating the applicant's ability to support himself or herself without engaging in employment in the Cayman Islands is required. These statements must be accompanied by such independent evidence as bank statements and tax returns and be certified by an independent accountant. This information is treated in strict confidence.

A separate application is not necessary for an accompanying spouse or for children younger than 18 years of age.

The application for permanent residence is reviewed by the Chief Immigration Officer, who may refuse, defer or grant the application either unconditionally or subject to conditions or restrictions. At this stage, the Chief Immigration Officer takes into account whether the applicant has made an investment and is living in the Cayman Islands. Evidence of ownership of a home with a value of at least USD2,439,024.39 is helpful.

If the application is successful and if the fee of USD24,390.24 is paid, the person is granted a Residency Certificate for Persons of Independent Means. The certificate, which is valid for 25 years and is renewable thereafter at the discretion of the Chief Immigration Officer, entitles the person to reside in the Cayman Islands without the right to work.

Persons of independent means have the option of applying for three other types of residency, subject to meeting the relevant requirements. These types of residency are described below.

Residency Certificate (Substantial Business Presence). Persons who invest in or are employed in a senior management capacity within an approved category of business may apply for a Residency Certificate (Substantial Business Presence). This category is open to persons already resident in the Cayman Islands and persons wishing to become resident. Applicants who meet the eligibility criteria and are of good character and health are issued a Residency Certificate (Substantial Business Presence), which is valid for 25 years and is renewable thereafter. The certificate entitles them to reside in the Cayman Islands and to work in the business in which they have invested or are employed in a senior management capacity.

Certificate of Direct Investment. Persons who are 18 years of age or older and who satisfy the requirements of the law may apply to the Chief Immigration Officer for the right to reside in the Cayman Islands as a high net worth investor. If this application is successful, the applicant is granted a Certificate of Direct Investment. This certificate is valid for 25 years and is renewable thereafter at the discretion of the Chief Immigration Officer. This certificate also entitles the applicant to reside in the Cayman Islands with the right to work in the businesses in which he or she holds an investment.

Certificate of Permanent Residency for Persons of Independent Means. The Certificate of Permanent Residency for Persons of Independent Means affords the holder residency for life. The holder of a Certificate of Permanent Residency for Persons of Independent Means or his or her spouse may apply to the Caymanian Status and Permanent Residency Board for a variation of his or her certificate to allow the right to work for any employer in a particular occupation or occupations specified by the board.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Except in exceptional circumstances and at the discretion of the Immigration Board, a work permit holder may not bring more than three dependents to the Cayman Islands. Unskilled workers are rarely permitted to have any dependents accompany or join them in the Cayman Islands.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally in the Cayman Islands with their home-country driver's licenses for up to three months. After three months, they must obtain Cayman Islands driver's licenses.

Foreign nationals who bring in their current and valid license from a Geneva contracting state and proof of residential status in the Cayman Islands (a passport bearing the appropriate stamp from the Customs and Border Control) can successfully carry out a "Geneva Transfer." This is an exchange of a foreign driver's license for a Cayman Islands driver's license. New residents must carry out this exchange within the first six months of being in the Cayman Islands.

The Cayman Islands does not have driver's license reciprocity with other jurisdictions. To obtain a driver's license in the Cayman Islands, an applicant must take written and physical exams. Holders of foreign driver's licenses from certain jurisdictions that have agreements with the Cayman Islands are exempt from the examination requirements.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. All individuals domiciled or resident in Chile are subject to personal income tax on their worldwide income. However, during their first three years of residence, foreign nationals are subject to tax on Chilean-source income only. Nonresidents are taxed on Chilean-source income only.

Income earned for services rendered in Chile or for activities performed in the country is considered to be Chilean-source income, regardless of where it is paid.

A person with presence in Chile for a period or periods that in total exceed 183 days within any 12-month period is considered a resident of Chile.

Domicile is defined as residence in a place with the intention of staying there. The intention is proved through facts and circumstances, such as employment within the country or moving one's family into the country.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable employment income includes any kind of remuneration received under an employment contract, including entertainment expenses. However, board and lodging provided to workers for the employer's convenience are exempt from tax. Family allowance payments and social security benefits established by law, as well as severance payments within certain limitations, are not included in taxable income.

Scholarships provided by employers to their employees or their employees' children are not taxable, but the latter has a tax deduction cap for the employer.

Self-employment income. Personal income tax, which is imposed at progressive rates ranging from 0% to 40%, must be paid on income withdrawn from business enterprises. The business enterprises are subject to the First Category Tax. The corporate income tax rate is 27%. Small to medium-size entities are subject to corporate income tax at a rate of 25% (certain requirements need to be met). Corporate tax paid by a company is creditable against the withholding tax applicable to the distribution of profits to the company's partners or shareholders.

Income earned by professionals and independent workers, minus deductions for actual or deemed expenses, is also subject to personal income tax, which is imposed annually at progressive rates ranging from 0% to 40%.

Income and expenses are subject to a monetary correction based on the change in the Consumer Price Index (inflation index) between the month prior to the collection or disbursement and the month preceding the financial year-end.

Individuals and small partnerships engaged in agriculture, mining, land transportation and certain other activities are entitled to special tax benefits for small taxpayers, which includes paying tax on deemed income if gross income does not exceed a specified amount.

Investment income. Shareholders receiving dividends from Chilean corporations are entitled to a total or partial credit of the First Category Tax paid by the corporation. The dividends are then aggregated with other non-compensation income and taxed as personal income, along with interest derived from the following sources:
- Demand deposits or time deposits in cash
- Bonds, debentures or other debt instruments, unless otherwise provided by international agreement

Income derived from rentals and royalties is included in taxable income and is subject to personal income tax.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are taxed in the same manner as professional income, without deduction of actual or deemed expenses.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Since February 2020, neither the grant nor the exercise of a stock option is taxable for the beneficiary if a stock option plan is included in an individual or collective employment agreement; if not, it is taxable at exercise. The above applies regardless of the taxation that may be imposed on the subsequent sale of the shares.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from sales of personal property, including automobiles and household furniture, not used in connection with a trade or business, are exempt from tax. Since 1 January 2017, capital gains derived from sales of personal property are taxable income if the amount of the capital gain exceeds UF8,000 (approximately USD300,000). The UF is an inflation-indexed unit expressed in Chilean pesos that varies according to the consumer price index.

Gains derived from transfers of personal property and real property used in a trade or business are treated as ordinary income and are subject to tax at the regular rates (see Rates).

Capital gains arising from the sale of shares are subject to the general tax regime. However, for residents complying with certain requirements, the tax paid can be allocated to the number of years during which the shares were held by the owner, up to a maximum of 10 years. Alternatively, the taxpayer may choose to pay a 10% flat rate on the amount of the capital gains.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. Individuals may deduct from their taxable income their social security contributions paid, up to certain limits. Subject to certain limitations, amounts invested in pension or insurance funds may be fully deductible from taxable income. Mortgage interest paid may be deducted from the tax base, subject to certain limitations.

In addition, child education expenses incurred during the year are eligible for a tax credit against personal taxes if the parents' total yearly income does not exceed UF792 (approximately USD29,700). The maximum annual tax credit per child is UF4.4 (approximately USD165).

Business deductions. Deductible expenses consist of expenses necessary to produce taxable income.

Instead of accounting for actual expenses, individual professionals and independent workers may take a standard deduction equivalent to 30% of gross income, limited to 15 Annual Tax Units (ATUs, see Rates).

Rates

Employment income. Personal income tax is levied on a progressive scale. The income brackets are adjusted monthly in accordance with the consumer price index variation expressed through a unit called a Monthly Taxable Unit (MTU). An MTU is equivalent to approximately USD66. The Annual Taxable Unit (ATU) is equal to one Monthly Taxable Unit multiplied by 12.

The following table presents the personal income tax brackets and corresponding rates.

Taxable income
Exceeding MTU	Not exceeding MTU	Rate %
0	13.5	0
13.5	30	4
30	50	8
50	70	13.5
70	90	23
90	120	30.4
120	310	40

Employment income taxpayers may voluntarily file an annual tax return to recalculate the monthly taxes paid on an annual basis.

Self-employment and business income. Tax is calculated on an annual basis rather than the monthly basis used by dependent employees. The brackets and rates are the same as those indicated above, except that the MTU is replaced by the ATU, which is equivalent to 12 MTUs for the month of December.

For 2021, sole proprietors are subject to the First Category Tax at a rate of 25% or 27%, depending on the corporate tax regime assumed by them.

Certain self-employed taxpayers are subject to provisional tax at a rate of 11.5% (applicable tax rate during 2021) of gross fees or receipts. In certain cases, the provisional tax is withheld by the payer and credited against the final tax. This applies to independent workers, professionals and individuals in professional partnerships who are not subject to the First Category Tax.

Nonresidents. Individuals working in Chile for periods not exceeding 183 days within any 12-month period are considered nonresidents. However, a person may be treated as domiciled in the country from the first day of his or her stay in Chile if evidence of an intention to establish a domicile in Chile exists.

Nonresidents are subject to an Additional Tax on their Chilean-source income, which is income earned for services rendered in Chile or activities performed in the country, at flat rates of 15%, 20% or 35%.

The rate is generally 15% for remuneration paid for technical or engineering work or for professional or technical services rendered under certain conditions in Chile or abroad. However, the 15% rate is increased to 20% if the payments are made to a related entity or to a resident in a country listed as a tax haven.

The rate is 20% for fees or salaries for scientific, cultural or sports activities. The tax rate for other types of services is 35%.

The Additional Tax may also be imposed on nonresidents receiving payment of remuneration from Chile for services rendered abroad. The general tax rate is 35%, with special rates of 15% or 20% imposed under the conditions described above.

Dividend income of nonresidents generally is subject to tax at a rate of 35%, with a credit for corporate tax paid. Profits from Foreign Capital Investment Funds, however, are subject only to a 10% withholding tax when repatriated, with no credit.

Interest and remuneration for certain services are generally subject to a 35% withholding tax. The tax rate for directors' fees is also 35%. Royalties are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 30%.

Relief for losses. Business losses of a self-employed person must first be carried back. To the extent the loss exceeds profits from prior years, the unused portion of the loss may be carried forward indefinitely.

Individuals who are not self-employed or engaged in their own business may offset investment losses against investment profits in the same year.

B. Estate and gift tax

Estate and gift tax is a unified tax, assessed in accordance with rates and brackets expressed in ATUs (see Section A). Residents are subject to estate and gift tax on worldwide assets. Nonresidents are subject to estate and gift tax on assets located in Chile only. Estate tax paid abroad may be credited against Chilean tax.

A zero rate applies to the first 50 ATUs transferred from an estate to close relatives, including a spouse or children. Only five ATUs are subject to the zero rate if assets are transferred to other beneficiaries. The following tax rates apply after deduction of the exempt amount.

Taxable amount
Exceeding ATU	Not exceeding ATU	Rate %
0	80	1
80	160	2.5
160	320	5
320	480	7.5
480	640	10
640	800	15
800	1,200	20
1,200	—	25

C. Social security

Employers pay a basic contribution of 0.9% and an additional contribution ranging from 0% to 3.4% on payroll to cover work accident insurance for employment activities considered risky. As a result of the application of a new coverage for permits in case of child illness, the employer should add a 0.03% contribution to the 0.9% contribution indicated above.

In addition, employers must pay a 2.21% contribution for each employee to cover death and disability insurance. These contributions are paid on salaries up to a maximum of UF81.6 for 2021 (approximately USD3,060) (for details regarding the UF, see Capital gains in Section A). This amount is adjusted on a yearly basis.

Social security contributions covering health care institutions and pension funds are paid by employees at a maximum basic rate of approximately 18.4% (7% for health care institutions, 10% for pension funds and the Pension Funds Administrator commission of approximately 0.77% to 1.44%) on salaries up to a maximum of UF81.6 for 2021 (approximately USD3,060). The applicable wage ceiling is adjusted annually.

The contributions described above are withheld and remitted by employers on a monthly basis. In addition, employees may contribute voluntarily in excess of the ceiling to individual pension funds or health insurance. Voluntary contributions are entitled to the same tax benefits as required contributions, within certain limits.

Another mandatory social security contribution relates to unemployment insurance, which is financed by employers, employees and the government. For employees hired indefinitely, the contribution rates are 2.4% for employers and 0.6% for employees, with a salary ceiling of UF122.6 for 2021 (approximately USD4,600) per month. This amount is also adjusted on an annual basis. For fixed-term employees, the contribution is 3%, which is borne entirely by the employer.

To provide relief from paying double social security contributions and to assure benefit coverage, Chile exempts foreign nationals from paying social security contributions in Chile if they are technical or professional employees covered under a similar social security system in their home country. However, this exemption does not apply to unemployment insurance, work accident insurance and coverage for permits in case of child illness ("Sanna" fund).

Independent workers are also required to contribute to the Chilean pension system, on an annual basis. It is mandatory for independent workers whose annual income exceeds four monthly minimum incomes, with a cap equal to 12 times the social security cap of UF81.6.

It also applies to independent workers who receive dependent income simultaneously during a year, within the above caps, and to individuals who are currently receiving a partial disability pension while continuing to work as independent workers.

Independent workers must contribute for the following coverages:
• Pension
• Health insurance
• Disability insurance
• Work accident insurance
• "Sanna" fund

In 2021, mandatory COVID-19 insurance is payable by the employer for private employees who need to render services in their place of work, either all the time or partially (not required when the work is performed online). The annual value of this insurance is currently CLP9,500 per employee (approximately USD12). This insurance will remain mandatory while the health alert is in place in Chile.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Taxes withheld by employers must be paid by the 12th day of each month for the preceding month's payroll.

Spouses are taxed separately on their personal income.

Annual income tax returns must be filed in April for income received in the preceding calendar year. Tax withheld or paid monthly is credited against tax due. Any tax owed must be paid when filing the tax return. Balances in the taxpayers' favor are refunded in May.

Certain self-employed taxpayers, including independent workers, professionals and professional partnerships, must pay provisional monthly tax at a rate of 10% of gross monthly fees or receipts. The provisional tax is credited against final tax. Enterprises that pay fees to professionals or independent workers must withhold 11.55% (applicable rate for 2021) from gross fees. The withholding is treated as a provisional payment by the taxpayer. Taxes withheld by payers of fees are credited against the provisional monthly payments.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Chile has entered into double tax treaties based on the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) model convention with the following jurisdictions.

Argentina	France	Poland
Australia	Ireland	Portugal
Austria	Italy	Russian Federation
Belgium	Japan	South Africa
Brazil	Korea (South)	Spain
Canada	Malaysia	Sweden
China Mainland	Mexico	Switzerland
Colombia	New Zealand	Thailand
Croatia	Norway	United Kingdom
Czech Republic	Paraguay	Uruguay
Denmark	Peru
Ecuador

Chile has also signed double tax treaties with India, the Netherlands, the United Arab Emirates and the United States, which are not yet in effect.

It is important to consider that the COVID-19 pandemic has significantly affected the immigration processes in Chile, altering timing and procedures due to government measures. These measures may imply border closures and the impossibility of applying for visa/permits.

A new Immigration Law has been published, but it is not yet in force. For details, see Section J.

F. Tourist visas

Most foreign nationals from countries with which Chile has consular relations do not need to obtain entry visas before entering Chile. However, citizens of certain countries need to obtain a tourist visa in advance through the Chilean consulate in their home country to be able to enter Chile. A list of these citizens is provided by the Foreign Affairs Chilean Office.

Tourist permits are generally issued on arrival by the International Police to individuals who intend to visit Chile for business, family, health, recreational or sporting activities and who have no intention of immigrating or conducting remunerated activities. Tourist permits are valid for 90 days and are renewable for an additional 90 days.

G. Work visas and self-employment

An expatriate who wishes to engage in remunerated activities in Chile must apply for a visa or residence permit that entitles him or her to work. The most common of these are the provisional work permits for tourists, subject-to-employment-contract visas and temporary visas. Although the visas may be obtained after the expatriate has entered the country or through a Chilean consulate abroad before his or her arrival, the provisional work permits for tourists can only be obtained after the expatriate has entered Chile.

Subject-to-employment-contract visas are valid for up to two years and are renewable indefinitely for additional two-year periods. After two years in Chile under this visa, the employee may apply for a permanent residence status. Temporary visas are granted for up to one year, and may be renewed one time for an additional year. After the expiration of the renewal period, the expatriate must apply for permanent residence status or leave the country.

Foreign nationals may start businesses in Chile if they comply with all legal requirements. Companies may be headed by foreign nationals if such nationals are residents or domiciled in Chile for tax purposes.

The above visas imply residency and permission to work.

H. Residence visas

The following types of residence visas are issued:
- Officials: members of the consular and diplomatic corps
- Temporary: gives the expatriate the right to work or perform other legal remunerated activities in Chile, and may be granted to individuals who have relatives in Chile or who intend to make investments that are considered advantageous for Chile
- Subject-to-employment-contract: valid for up to two years, and may be renewed for an additional two-year period
- Student: valid for up to one year and may be renewed for additional one-year periods, as many times as necessary
- Political refugee: issued to foreign nationals who intend to establish permanent residence in Chile
- Permanent residence: an indefinite visa that gives the expatriate the same rights as an ordinary Chilean national, except for the rights to vote and seek public office

In general, foreign nationals must file all or some of the following documents when applying for visas and permits:
- An application form
- Passport and documents proving current visa status
- Documents that prove professional status
- Documents that prove marital status
- Birth certificates
- Documents that support the activities an applicant will develop in the country, such as a labor contract or documents that prove that the applicant has been accepted in a college or educational institution
- Health certificate
- Police record (required to apply for consular visas and permanent residence)

However, the appropriate authorities have the discretion to request different or additional documents if these are deemed necessary for the approval of the visa.

The following are special types of temporary visas, which must be applied for only through a Chilean consulate:
- Humanitarian visa for family reunion for citizens of Haiti
- Democratic responsibility visa for citizens of Venezuela

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family members of a working foreign national do not need separate visas to reside in Chile, and children of a foreign national do not need student visas to attend schools in Chile. However, they have to apply for a dependent visa. A separate work visa must be obtained by any family member of a working foreign national who intends to work legally in Chile.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may not drive legally in Chile using their home country driver's licenses. However, they may legally drive in Chile with an international license while the license is in force. Chile has driver's license reciprocity with a few countries. To obtain a Chilean driver's license, a foreign national must take a basic written exam, a technical exam, a basic practical driving test and a basic medical exam.

J. New Chilean Immigration Law (entry into force is pending)

In April 2021, a new Immigration Law was published in the Chilean Official Daily, establishing new rules with respect to institutions, procedures and types of visas that can be requested.

The effects of the new law are suspended until the corresponding regulation is published for which a period of one year has been granted; notwithstanding the above, a longer period could be possible. Until the regulation is published, the current law and regulations will continue in force.

The following are relevant aspects of the new law:
- The National Immigration Service is created, which replaces the current Immigration Department. This authority would have the mission of granting, extending or revoking the work, residency and permanent residency permits submitted for its consideration, including applications filed through the Chilean consulates around the world.
- As a general rule, the National Immigration Service does not have the faculty to receive files related with residency or work permits requested for the first time in Chile, except those cases related with family reunion. The filing of these kinds of applications can only be made through the Chilean consulates worldwide.
- The regulation will define a new catalog of residency and work permits and establish its requirements. However, the immigration benefits acquired before the entry into force of the new law will not be affected and maintain their validity until the expiration date.

This chapter relates to the mainland China tax jurisdiction, referred to as "China" within this chapter.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. China residents are generally subject to tax on their China-source and non-China-source income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on their China-source income only.

Effective from 1 January 2019, China residents include the following persons:
- Individuals who have their domicile in China
- Individuals who do not have their domicile in China, but reside in China for 183 days or more in a tax year

For employment income, non-China-domiciled individuals who are China tax residents for no more than six consecutive years are subject to China individual income tax (IIT) on income earned from services rendered in China and on income earned from services rendered outside China but paid or borne by the individual's China employer.

China-domiciled individuals are subject to China IIT on their worldwide income. Non-China-domiciled individuals who have been a China resident for more than six consecutive years and who had no absence from China for more than 30 consecutive days in any of the six consecutive years are subject to China IIT on their worldwide income, regardless of the mode of payment and place of payment of the income.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income that are common to foreign expatriates is described below. For China residents, employment income, labor services income, copyright income and royalties should be aggregated in a tax year as consolidated income.

Employment income. The types of taxable compensation under the China IIT law include, but are not limited to, wages and salaries, foreign service or hardship allowances, cost of living and automobile allowances, tax reimbursements, bonuses and equity compensation. The form of the individual income may be cash, physical objects, securities and economic interests in any other form.

Nontaxable compensation for expatriate employees includes housing rental, home leave (limited to twice a year for employee only), relocation or moving, meals and laundry, language training and children's education in China, provided such items are paid directly or reimbursed by the employer on the presentation of official tax invoices. The non-taxable treatment of housing rental, language training and children's education may not be available from January 2022. At the time of writing, no further instruction had been issued by the tax authority.

The annual bonus can be treated as a separate one-month salary for tax purposes. Effective from 1 January 2019, for China residents, the applicable marginal tax rate can be determined based on 1/12 of the annual bonus, while for nonresidents, the annual bonus or several-month bonus may be divided evenly into six installments and each installment is taxed using the monthly tax rates. This calculation method can be used by each individual only once in a calendar year. For China residents, bonuses other than the annual bonus must be treated as a part of monthly salary income and are taxed based on the aggregated amount of monthly income. For China residents, the favorable tax treatment on the annual bonus may not be available from January 2022. At the time of writing, no further instruction had been issued by the tax authority.

Self-employment income. Taxable income includes compensation for independent personal services performed in China, bonus payments and income specified as taxable by the Ministry of Finance.

Investment income. Interest, dividends and other investment income from China sources are subject to tax at a flat 20% rate, with no deductions allowed.

Dividends, interest, royalties and rental income received by non-resident foreign nationals from China sources are normally subject to a 10% withholding tax under most double tax treaties entered into by China on the approval of the local tax authorities in charge.

Dividends paid by foreign-investment enterprises to foreign nationals in China are exempt from China IIT.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are considered income from independent personal services and are taxed as income derived from labor services. However, directors' fees paid to a company director are taxed as "wages and salaries" if he or she is an employee of that company or a related company. If the director is not also an employee of the company, his or her directors' fees may be taxed under the "labor service" category.

If directors' fees are taxed under the "labor service" category, the tax liability is computed by applying the rules outlined for income from independent personal services. If directors' fees are taxed as "wages and salaries," they must be included in the salary for the month of receipt of the fees and are subject to the progressive tax rates ranging from 3% to 45%.

Enterprise annuities. Under a tax circular that took effect on 1 January 2014, deferred taxation is provided to qualified annuity plans that are set up by enterprises in accordance with Chinese annuity regulations. Both employer and employee contributions are not subject to IIT at the time of contribution if certain conditions are met.

Tax deferral. Effective from 1 May 2018, the Chinese Government launched IIT deferral on commercial pensions in pilot areas including Fujian Province, Shanghai and the Suzhou Industrial Park Zone. Under the trial program, individual contributions (capped at 6% of monthly salary or CNY1,000 a month, whichever is lower) to qualified commercial pension plans can be deducted from taxable income when filing IIT returns.

Temporary relief. Under a temporary measure, for dividends and profit sharing derived by individuals from domestic listed companies, only 50% of the income is chargeable to IIT if the stockholding period is longer than one month but no more than one year, and 100% of the income is exempt from IIT if the stockholding period exceeds one year. Also, interest income derived by individuals from domestic banking institutions on deposits is temporarily exempt from IIT.

Exempt income. The following types of income are exempt from tax:

- Monetary awards granted by provincial People's Governments, State Council ministries and commissions, units of the People's Liberation Army at army level or above, or by foreign or international organizations for achievement in fields, such as science, education, technology, culture, public health, sport and environmental protection
- Interest on state treasury bonds and state-issued financial bonds and national debt obligations
- Subsidies and allowances paid in accordance with the centralized State Council

- Welfare benefits, disability pensions and relief payments
- Insurance indemnities
- Military severance pay and demobilization pay
- Resettlement allowances, severance pay, retirement pay, retirement pensions and cost-of-living subsidies of personnel who have left their jobs on a permanent basis to rest and recuperate, and subsidies distributed to cadres and workers, in accordance with centralized state regulations
- Income of diplomatic representatives, consulate officials and other personnel of foreign embassies and consulates in China who enjoy tax exemptions in accordance with the relevant Chinese laws
- Tax-exempt income stipulated in international conventions
- Tax-exempt income approved by the finance department of the State Council

Capital gains. After deducting costs and related expenses, income derived from the sale or transfer of movable or immovable property in China is taxed at a flat 20% rate.

Capital gains derived from transfers of shares listed on China stock exchanges in the secondary market are temporarily exempt from China IIT.

Foreign individuals are subject to a 20% tax on gains derived from the sale of equity in a foreign-investment enterprise in China (for example, an equity joint venture).

The applicable tax rate may be reduced for individuals who are residents of treaty jurisdictions.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Taxable income is recognized on the date an employee exercises an employer-provided stock option. For foreign nationals, stock option income attributable to China employment is considered China-source income.

If the stock option is taxable, the amount of taxable income is the difference between the fair market value of the stock on the exercise date and the exercise price. For stock options of publicly listed companies, the taxable income may be reported in the month of exercise as stand-alone employment-related income, which is subject to IIT at progressive rates ranging from 3% to 45%. Effective from 1 January 2019, annual tax rates can be applied to the taxable income for China residents while for nonresidents, the taxable income can be divided into six equal installments and each installment is taxed using the monthly tax rates (this treatment is referred to below as the "favorable tax treatment"). This favorable tax treatment is applied only when a tax registration of the stock option plan has been performed with the in-charge tax bureau. In addition, all exercises of stock options in the same calendar year must be aggregated for the calculation of China IIT.

The above favorable tax treatment applies to employees of publicly listed companies (including branches) and their subsidiaries that are at least 30% owned by the listed companies. For companies indirectly held by listed companies, the ownership percentage is determined by multiplying the respective shareholder percentage at each level of ownership. If a listed company holds over 50% of the first-tier subsidiary's shares, the ownership percentage is calculated as 100%.

Effective from 1 September 2016, if equity incentives (that is, stock options, restricted stocks and stock rewards) granted to employees by unlisted domestic companies meet certain criteria, an employee of the domestic company can defer taxation until the equity is sold.

If the above types of favorable tax treatment do not apply, the taxable income derived from the stock option is aggregated with regular taxable monthly employment income in the month of exercise and subject to the marginal rate of the employee.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. A China resident can enjoy a CNY60,000 deduction each year in computing his or her net taxable consolidated income, which is an aggregate of employment income, labor services income, copyright income and royalties. A nonresident foreign employee can enjoy a deduction of CNY5,000 per month on his or her employment income. Qualified charitable donations are also deductible.

Employees, self-employed individuals and individual partners of partnerships can claim a deduction for their contributions to qualified commercial health insurance schemes from taxable income. The deduction is capped at CNY2,400 per year (that is, CNY200 per month).

For foreign expatriates, overseas social security contributions made by individuals are not deductible.

If an employer is responsible for paying the employee's China income tax liabilities, the employee's taxable income is grossed up by the amount of the payment. Any hypothetical tax, which is an amount withheld by the employer as full or partial compensation for satisfying the employee's China tax liability, is normally allowed as a deduction in computing the employee's net taxable income.

Personal deductions and allowances. Effective from 1 January 2019, China residents are eligible for the following specific additional tax deductions, if applicable.

Specific additional tax deductions	CNY
Children's education	1,000 per month per qualified child
Continued education
Academic education	400 per month
Continued education for skilled professional or technical personnel	3,600 per year
Medical expenses for serious illness	Expense above 15,000, capped at 80,000 per year
Housing loan interest	1,000 per month
Housing rent	800/1,100/1,500 per month, depending on the category of the city

Specific additional tax deductions	CNY
Caring for the elderly
Single child	2,000 per month
Non-single child	Not exceeding 1,000 per month

However, foreign employees who are China residents cannot enjoy the nontaxable benefits, such as housing and children's education, and the above specific additional tax deductions at the same time. They can elect to only enjoy one of them. The non-taxable benefits of housing, children's education and language training may be unavailable to foreign employees from January 2022; thereafter, China resident foreign employees would only be able to enjoy the children's education, housing rent or housing loan interest, and continued education deductions mentioned above. At the time of writing, no further instruction had been issued by the tax authority.

On the approval of the local tax bureau, employees who do not have their domicile in China and who have job responsibilities both within and outside China may be allowed to report income on a time-apportionment basis. The employment income may be prorated based on the number of days the employee stays in China. To qualify, an employee needs to provide supporting documentation.

No distinction is made between married and single taxpayers.

Business deductions. Independent personal services income and royalties can have a deduction of 20% of income.

Rental or leasing income can have a deduction of CNY800 or 20% of income, whichever is higher.

A taxpayer may claim a deduction for reasonable repair fees from rental income, limited to CNY800 per month, on the presentation of official invoices and the approval of the local tax authorities in charge.

Rates. Effective from 1 January 2019, employment income is accumulated for purposes of calculating monthly tax liabilities for China residents. Income tax for resident individuals is computed on a monthly basis by applying the progressive annual tax rates shown below to employment income under a cumulative pre-withholding method.

For China residents, labor services income, royalties and copyright income can have a deduction of 20% of income, and copyright income can have a further 30% deduction of income.

Employment income, labor services income and royalties must be aggregated as consolidated income and the following progressive annual tax rates are applied to compute the annual tax liability.

Annual tax rates

Taxable income CNY	Tax rate %	Tax due CNY	Cumulative tax due CNY

Rental or leasing income is subject to tax at a flat rate of 20%.

Relief for losses. Except for individual proprietorship enterprises and individual equity partnership enterprises, no measures exist for the carryover of losses.

Nonresidents. Individuals who do not have their domicile in China and who stay in China for less than 183 days in a calendar year are considered nonresidents and are subject to IIT under different rules, as described below.

Resident for 90 days or less. Individuals who reside in China continuously or intermittently for not more than 90 days during a calendar year are treated in the following manner:

- An expatriate is exempt from IIT if the salary is paid and borne by an overseas employer.
- Employment income paid or borne by the employer's establishment in China is subject to IIT to the extent that the income is attributable to services actually performed in China. For these purposes, an establishment includes a representative office and a permanent establishment that a foreign entity has or constitutes in China.
- Normally, the employment income paid or borne by the employer's establishment in China is apportioned to China and non-China services in accordance with the actual number of days the expatriate resides in China.

Residents for more than 90 days but less than 183 days. Individuals who reside in China for more than 90 days, but less than 183 days in a year, are treated in the following manner:

- The expatriate is subject to IIT on employment income derived from services actually performed in China.

- Employment income attributable to services performed outside China is exempt from IIT. Normally, the employment income is apportioned to China and non-China services in accordance with the actual number of days the expatriate resides in China.

Notwithstanding the above, special treatment may be available for a foreign individual who serves in the senior management of a Chinese entity or for an individual who is a resident of a jurisdiction that has signed a tax treaty with China.

Income paid and borne by an employer outside China with respect to these individuals is taxed in one of the following ways:
- The income is exempt from individual income tax if the individual resides in China for not more than 90 days during a calendar year (or for tax treaty expatriates, not more than 183 days during a calendar year or any 12-month period, depending on the relevant tax treaty terms).
- The income is subject to individual income tax if the period of residency in China extends more than 90 days during a calendar year (or for tax treaty expatriates, more than 183 days during a calendar year or any 12-month period, depending on the terms of the relevant tax treaty), to the extent that the income is attributable to services performed in China.

Registration requirement. To claim the treaty entitlement provided under relevant tax treaties to nonresident individuals, such as for dependent services income, these individuals must submit the required documents to the tax authorities for confirmation.

B. Other taxes

Net worth tax. No net worth tax is levied in China.

Estate and gift taxes. No estate and gift taxes are levied in China.

C. Social security

Chinese nationals employed by China entities are subject to the social security (that is, must participate in the social security system) in China. Under the new China Social Security Law, which took effect on 1 July 2011, foreign nationals working in China must also participate in the China social security system. The Ministry of Human Resources and Social Security in China released interim measures for the participation of foreign nationals employed in China in China social insurances on 6 September 2011. These interim measures took effect on 15 October 2011. Under the interim measures, foreigners who have obtained a China Permanent Residence Certificate, Work Permit, Foreign Expert Certificate or Certificate of Permanent Foreign Correspondent are required to contribute to Chinese social security schemes. They must participate in basic pension schemes, basic medical insurance, work-related injury insurance, maternity insurance and unemployment insurance. Chinese employers are required to perform social security registration for foreign employees within 30 days after the employees obtain a work permit and withhold the required contributions on a monthly basis.

Hong Kong, Macau and Taiwan residents working in China are allowed to participate in the China housing provident fund, effective from 28 November 2017. They are required to participate in the China social security system, effective from 1 January 2020.

Special rules apply to foreigners from certain jurisdictions or territories. Under the totalization agreements with Germany and Korea (South), if German and Korean employees do not contribute to their home jurisdiction's pension and unemployment insurance during their employment in China, they should contribute to pension and unemployment insurance in China. A totalization agreement with Denmark took effect on 14 May 2014. Under the totalization agreement, Danish employees who are required to participate in Danish pension schemes can be exempt from the contributions to pension insurance in China. Also, under rules that took effect on 1 October 2005, employees from Hong Kong, Macau and Taiwan who have entered into local labor contracts in China can contribute into the China social security system.

Social security tax rates vary among cities. Employers and employees are subject to social security taxes at an average rate of 25% and 11% of gross income, respectively. For this purpose, the amount of gross income is capped at three times the average salary in the city for the preceding year as published by the local government.

China has entered into totalization agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Canada	Germany	Netherlands
Demark	Japan	Serbia
Finland	Korea (South)	Spain
France*	Luxembourg	Switzerland

* The totalization agreement with France had not yet entered into force as of the time of writing.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year is the calendar year. Spouses are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

Foreigners must register with the local tax bureau or, if individuals are engaged in offshore oil and gas exploration activities, with the local offshore oil tax bureau.

Foreigners subject to China IIT may need to complete a tax registration form and provide an employer's certification stating the amount of their compensation, along with copies of relevant passport pages to verify their date of arrival.

Although the recipient of income is responsible for payment of income tax, it is generally collected through a withholding system under which the payer is the withholding agent.

A withholding agent must notify its supervising tax authorities of the basic personal details regarding all individuals to whom it has paid taxable income. Required personal details for payees include name, personal identification number, position, residential address, telephone number and correspondence address. Additional information may be required if the income recipients are not employees of the withholding agent, investors, equity owners, or nonresidents of China. However, payers of dividends and interest are required only to file a set of simplified information with respect to the recipients. The withholding agent must submit the above information in the month following the month of payment of taxable income to an individual, regardless of the availability of deductions or concessions that may be offset against the income. The withholding agent must also notify the tax authorities of any subsequent changes. If the withholding agent fails to withhold the tax and file the monthly tax returns with its governing local tax bureau for its employees and income recipients, the tax authorities may impose a penalty of 50% to 300% of the tax due on the withholding agent.

All taxpayers, including those earning China-source income but not covered by the withholding system, and employees who are paid outside China must file monthly income tax returns and pay the relevant tax to the local tax bureau. The returns must be filed within 15 days after month-end.

Chinese residents with foreign-source income must file annual reconciliation tax returns and pay tax due between 1 March to 30 June of the following year. Foreign taxes paid on this income are allowed as a tax credit, up to the amount of China IIT levied on the same income.

Individuals who are taxpayers are required to register and file annual reconciliation tax returns between 1 March to 30 June with a tax bureau in charge if any of the following circumstances apply:

- An individual receives consolidated income in two or more locations and the balance of annual consolidated income less specific tax deductions (that is, statutory social security and housing fund contributions by the individual) exceeds CNY60,000.
- An individual receives labor services income, royalties or copyright income and the balance of the annual consolidated income less specific tax deductions exceeds CNY60,000.
- The prepaid tax amount is less than the actual tax liability in a tax year.
- The individual needs to apply for a tax refund.

Late payment of tax is subject to a daily interest charge of 0.05%. A penalty of up to five times the amount of unpaid tax may be levied for tax evasion or refusal to pay tax.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

An individual subject to China IIT on worldwide income may claim a foreign tax credit if he or she has paid tax in a foreign jurisdiction or region. The credit is limited to the China tax payable computed on the same income based on China tax law.

China has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

- The recipient is present in China for a period or periods not exceeding 183 days in the calendar year, or in a 12-month period for certain jurisdictions.
- The remuneration is paid by, or on behalf of, an employer that is not resident in China.
- The remuneration is not borne by a permanent establishment or a fixed base maintained by the employer in China.

Under many of the treaties, income derived from independent professional services or other independent services is exempt from China IIT if the recipient meets both of the following conditions:

- The recipient does not have a fixed base regularly available to him or her in China for the purpose of performing the services.
- The recipient is present in China for a period or periods not exceeding 183 days in the relevant calendar year, or in a 12-month period for certain jurisdictions.

F. Types of visas

All foreign nationals entering, leaving, passing through or residing in China must obtain the relevant visas from the relevant

Chinese authorities, which include the Chinese diplomatic missions, consulates and other representatives in foreign jurisdictions and the Ministry of Public Security, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs or local designated authorities within China.

Depending on the status and type of passport held by a foreign national, a diplomatic, courtesy, business or ordinary visa may be issued.

Ordinary visas are designated by letters that correspond to the purposes of the individuals' visits. The following are selected letter designations:

- D: Issued to a person who plans to reside permanently in China
- Z: Issued to a person who will work in China
- X: Issued to a person who enters China for long-term (X1) or short-term (X2) study purposes
- F: Issued to a person who has been invited to visit China on a temporary basis for the following purposes:
  - Scientific, educational, cultural, health and athletic exchanges
  - Short-term visits and fact-finding
  - Other noncommercial activities
- M: Issued to a person who performs business or trade activities for a short period
- R: Issued to a person who is considered by the Chinese Government to be a senior-level talent and/or professional in short supply in China

- L: Issued to a person who enters China for tourist purposes

G. Steps for obtaining visas

Foreign nationals who wish to enter China should apply for visas at a Chinese diplomatic mission or consulate or with other representatives in foreign jurisdictions authorized by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The following documents are required when applying for a visa:

- A valid passport or an equivalent certificate of identification. The passport must have a period of validity of at least six months before expiration and at least one blank visa page left in it.
- A completed visa application form with one recent passport-size photograph.
- Other relevant documents that vary according to the type of visa for which the foreign national is applying. The following are the relevant documents:
  - D: A permanent residence confirmation form, for which the applicant or an entrusted relative applies to the entry-and-exit department of the public security bureau in the city or county where the applicant intends to reside

- Z: A work permit notification letter or a short-term work certificate (for short-term employment), for which the sponsor employer in China applies to the provincial or municipal Expert Bureau
- X: JW201 form or JW202 form (Application Form for Overseas Students to China) issued by the receiving unit or the relevant department in charge, Admission Notice and medical report for foreigners
- F: An invitation letter from the inviting unit or person
- M: A visa notification letter from an authorized unit (that is, a commercial or trade partner in China) or an invitation letter issued by a relevant entity or individual in China
- R: Special approval documents from the designated government authorities in China
- Q: An invitation letter from the family members together with supporting documents proving the relationship between the applicant and family members in China and permanent residency status of the family members in China

- G: A valid visa for the jurisdiction (region) to which the applicant intends to travel next and an onward ticket with confirmed date and seat
- L: A certificate or letter issued by the receiving tour agency of China and a round trip ticket

Note: As a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, a Chinese government invitation letter (PU letter) is necessary for a China business or work visa application at overseas Chinese consulate posts. As of 15 March 2021, foreign nationals who have been inoculated with the COVID-19 vaccine produced in mainland China are not required to provide a PU letter, and visa application documents can be the same as those prior to the COVID-19 pandemic.

When applying for an entry visa, if a foreign national intends to take up permanent residence or stay in China on a long-term basis, he or she may be required to present a notarized medical report issued by a public health and medical unit designated by the Chinese embassy in the foreign national's home jurisdiction or issued by any authorized health and medical unit in China. The medical report must remain valid for six months from the date of issuance. A non-criminal report issued by the police or public security or judicial authorities from the foreign national's home jurisdiction is also required for a permanent resident or long-term work authorization permit application in China, and this report needs to be authenticated by the Chinese embassy in the home jurisdiction.

Under the following special circumstances, an application for a visa may be made at any designated entry point authorized by the Ministry of Public Security (landing visa):

- The foreign person is invited, because of a late confirmation on the part of the Chinese party, to attend a trade fair in China.

- The foreign national is invited to submit a bid or to formally sign an economic or trade contract.
- The foreign national, pursuant to an agreement, visits China to conduct inspection of import or export products or for contract verification and acceptance.
- The foreign national is invited to perform equipment installation or to undertake emergency repairs.
- The foreign national is requested by a Chinese party to come to China for a settlement of claims.
- The foreign national is invited to visit China to provide scientific and technical consulting services.
- The foreign national is an additional or substitute member of a group that has already been issued visas.
- The foreign national comes to China to visit a seriously ill person or to arrange funeral matters.
- The foreign national is in direct transit but, for unavoidable reasons, cannot leave China within 24 hours.
- The foreign national is invited to China but is unable to apply in time to the aforementioned Chinese organizations abroad, and he or she holds a document issued by the designated authorities indicating he or she is approved to apply for a visa at the port of entry.

The landing visa application may be accepted in 30 provinces and about 71 cities in China, including, among others, Beijing, Chengdu, Guangzhou, Shanghai, Shenzhen, Xiamen, Xi'an, Yantai and Zhuhai.

Note: As a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, China temporarily suspended landing visa issuance until further notice.

H. Visa exemptions

Citizens of Brunei Darussalam, Japan and Singapore who enter China for tourist or business purposes, or to visit friends, need not apply for a China visa if their stay in China is less than 15 days beginning from the date of entry.

Changsha, Guilin and Ha'erbin have implemented a 72-hour Visa-free Transit Policy for foreign visitors with valid third-country visas who plan to travel to the third destinations from the airports of these cities. Foreign visitors who hold passports issued by certain jurisdictions on the 72-hour Visa-free Transit Policy List (total of 53 jurisdictions) need to stay in the relevant cities within 72 hours of their travel and can apply for a temporary stay in the respective cities without applying for a Chinese visa at the Exit and Entry Frontier Inspections of the airports.

Beijing (Capital airport and Beijing West Railway Port), Chengdu (Chengdu Shuangliu International Airport), Chongqing (Jiangbei International Airport and Wuqiao Airport), Dalian (Dalian Zhoushuizi International Airport), Guangzhou (Guangzhou Baiyun Airport), Hangzhou (Xiaoshan International Airport), Kunming (Kunming Changshui International Airport), Jieyang (Jieyang Chaoshan International Airport), Nanjing (Lukou International Airport), Ningbo (Lishe International Airport), Qinhuangdao (Qinhuangdao Harbor Port), Qingdao (Qingdao Liuting International Airport), Shanghai (Shanghai Pudong

I. Residence permits

Foreign nationals may obtain residence permits from the local Public Security Bureau. The term of the resident permit varies from three months to five years, depending on the purpose of residence. The renewed permit is normally valid for three months to five years.

Foreign nationals holding residence visas (including D, J1, S1, Q1, X1 and Z visas) must apply for their resident permit with the local Public Security Bureau within 30 days after their entry.

Foreign nationals holding entry visas are required to register with the local police and obtain a Registration Form of Temporary Residence within 24 hours after their arrival.

J. Short-term employment

Foreign nationals who perform one of the following activities in China for less than 90 days are considered to have short-term employment in China and are required to obtain a short-term work certificate:

- Technical, scientific research, management, consulting and similar activities, or support or works with respect to such activities, for a cooperative entity in China
- Conducting training as requested by a sports association in China (including coaches and athletes)
- Film production (including advertisements and documentaries)
- Fashion shows (including car models, print advertisements and other activities)
- Foreign commercial performances or shows
- Other activities as determined by the Human Resources and Social Security Department

Foreigners who are considered to have short-term employment in China must go through the following procedures with the required documents before they can carry out the approved activities in China:

- Application for employment license and work certificate
- Application for Single-Entry Z Visa
- Application for work-type residence permit (for staying in China over 30 days but less than 90 days)

Foreign nationals who are considered to have short-term employment in China generally need to obtain an employment license and work certificate from the provincial or municipal labor authorities. For foreigners who will conduct foreign cultural performances or shows in China, the organizing unit will need to obtain approval from the local Cultural Bureau. Foreigners who expect to work in China for less than 30 days can reside and work in China based on the valid period indicated on the work certificate and Single-Entry Z Visa.

Foreigners who will work in China for more than 30 days but less than 90 days should apply for a "90 days" work-type residence permit from the local Public Security Bureau.

K. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family members of a working expatriate do not automatically receive the S visa and residence permit and must apply for it independently. These applications are completed after the expatriate obtains a work authorization in China or they are completed together with the expatriate's visa and residence permit applications. Legalized relationship documents are required in a dependent residence permit application, such as a marriage certificate for a spouse and a birth certificate for a child.

Subject to the decision of the local government and schools, children of working expatriates may be required to obtain student visas to attend schools in China.

Note: As a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, some cities in China temporarily suspended dependent PU letter issuance until further notice. As of 15 March 2021, foreign dependents who have been inoculated with Chinese vaccines may obtain a China visa with a PU letter exemption.

Marital property regime. No community property or other similar marital property regime is in effect in China.

Forced heirship. Forced heirship rules do not apply in China.

Driver's permits. China has driver's license reciprocity with Belgium. Foreign nationals from other jurisdictions may not drive legally in China with their home jurisdiction driver's licenses, but they may take written exams and exchange their driver's licenses for Chinese licenses.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on their Colombian-source income only. Foreigners are considered residents for tax purposes if they remain in Colombia for more than 183 continuous or discontinuous days during a consecutive 365-day period. Colombian citizens are also deemed to be tax residents if they meet additional conditions.

Colombian-source income includes employment income attributable to services rendered in Colombia, regardless of where the payment is made.

Income subject to tax. Law 2010 of 2019 established three categories of taxable income (income baskets), reductions and tax rates for such baskets. The following are the income baskets:

- General basket (includes employment income, non-employment income and capital income related to financial interest and rental income)
- Pensions
- Dividends

The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Employment income is classified to be in the general basket. It includes salaries, wages, bonuses, benefits in kind and any other income derived from services rendered by an individual.

Law No. 1111 of 27 December 2006 created the Tax Unit Value (Unidad de Valor Tributario, or UVT) as a value measurement to adjust the amounts of taxes and other obligations contained in the laws administered by the Colombian tax authority (Dirección de Impuestos y Aduanas Nacionales, or DIAN). The UVT is COP36,308 for 2021.

Contributions to the mandatory health and pension systems decrease taxable income. Twenty-five percent of employment income is exempt up to UVT240 per month.

Exemptions and deductions applicable to employees are capped at 40% of gross income less contributions to the mandatory Social Security System. In any case, deductions and exemptions cannot exceed the annual amount of UVT5,040.

Self-employment income. Self-employment income is usually considered to be in the general basket, as it could be part of labor income. Taxable self-employment and business income equals gross income less contributions to mandatory health and pension systems and business expenses applied according to the tax law.

An independent employee who receives income from labor activities or services can choose between the following:
- Costs and expenses incurred in the development of such activity
- Exempt income of 25%, with applicable limitations

Exemptions and deductions applicable to employees are capped to 40% of gross income less contributions to the mandatory Social Security System. In any case, deductions and exemptions cannot exceed the annual amount of UVT5,040.

Capital gains. Capital gains (typically understood as the sale of assets owned for more than two years and inheritances, among others) are taxed at a fixed rate of 10%. This rate is applied separately from the ordinary income. In determining the amount of capital gain, the acquisition costs of shares and real estate are calculated in Colombian pesos and adjusted according to inflation.

Pensions. Pensions include pensions for retirement, disability, survivors and employment risks, as well as refunds of pension savings plans and pension substitution indemnities. Taxable income can be reduced with mandatory contributions to the health system and an annual tax exemption up to UVT12,000.

Investment income. Investment income is classified in the general basket as well as with non-labor income and employment income. Applicable exemptions and deductions are capped to 40% of net income (including the employment and non-labor income) and cannot exceed the annual amount of UVT5,040 (additionally, the inflation component that varies each year according to the regulations of the national government must be included).

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are classified in the work income basket. Contributions to mandatory health and pension systems decrease taxable income. Twenty-five percent of employment income is exempt up to UVT240 per month. Exemptions and deductions applicable to employees are capped to 40% of gross income less contributions to mandatory Social Security System. In any case, deductions and exemptions cannot exceed the annual amount of UVT5,040.

Taxable income reductions. Specific reductions and benefits are applicable for each basket income. The main items are described below.

Employment income. Mandatory contributions to health and pension systems decrease taxable income. Twenty-five percent of employment income is exempt up to UVT240 per month. Exemptions and deductions applicable to employees are capped at 40% of gross income less contributions to the mandatory Social Security System. In any case, deductions and exemptions cannot exceed the annual amount of UVT5,040 (COP182,992,000 for 2021).

Deductions include economic dependents, payments to private health enterprises, interest and payments on loans for the acquisition of a taxpayer's house.

Starting from 2020, a deduction was established with respect to interest paid to the Colombian Institute of Educational Credit and Technical Studies Abroad (Instituto Colombiano de Crédito Educativo y Estudios Técnicos en el Exterior, or ICETEX) for educational loans obtained by the taxpayer. This deduction may not exceed annually the amount equivalent to UVT100 (approximately COP3,631,000 for 2021).

Exemptions are related to voluntary contributions deposited in a Colombian pension fund and deposits in AFC Accounts (for housing construction promotion) opened in local commercial banks.

Under Colombian law, the following are tax dependents:
- An employee's child who is under 18 years old
- An employee's child who is 18 years old or older and under 23 years old and who is studying in an institution certified by the appropriate official authority in Colombia or abroad, provided that the employee pays the education fees
- An employee's child who is 23 years old or older and whose dependence is related to physical or psychological factors, as certified by the appropriate official authority in Colombia or abroad
- Employee's spouse or one parent who depend on the employee financially and who receive income in an amount of less than UVT260, as certified by a Colombian certified public accountant
- An employee's spouse or one parent whose dependence is related to physical or psychological factors, as certified by the appropriate official authority in Colombia or abroad

Capital income. Gross capital income (financial interest, royalties and rental income) can be reduced applying expenses that meet general requirements applicable to deductions (for example, property tax and interest paid on the acquisition of real property). Deductions and exemptions cannot exceed the annual amount of UVT5,040, including the total exemptions and deductions of the general basket.

Monthly tax rates. The following table sets forth the marginal withholding tax rates applicable to monthly employment income for the 2021 tax year.

Income		Marginal
Exceeding UVT	Not exceeding UVT	rate %	Tax calculation
0	95	0	0
95	150	19	(Taxable employment income expressed in UVT – UVT95) x 19%
150	360	28	(Taxable employment income expressed in UVT – UVT150) x 28% + UVT10
360	640	33	(Taxable employment income expressed in UVT – UVT360) x 33% + UVT69
640	945	35	(Taxable employment income expressed in UVT – UVT640) x 35% + UVT162
945	2,300	37	(Taxable employment income expressed in UVT – UVT945) x 37% + UVT268
2,300	—	39	(Taxable employment income expressed in UVT – UVT2,300) x 39% + UVT770

The base for applying withholding tax on employment income is 75% of such income after the subtraction of the mandatory and voluntary contributions to pension funds, deposits in AFC Accounts and the other deductions described above. This 25% exemption is limited to a monthly amount of UVT240 (COP8,714,000). Deductions and exemptions cannot exceed 40% of the amount of the income less the mandatory contributions to the health and pension system and cannot exceed UVT5,040.

The income tax withholding rate for nonresident individuals is 20% on gross income.

Annual tax rates. Effective from 2021, the applicable annual income tax rates depend on the category of income.

The following are the applicable rates for residents on income reported in the general basket and pensions.

Income		Marginal
Exceeding UVT	Not exceeding UVT	rate %	Tax calculation
0	1,090	0	0
1,090	1,700	19	(Taxable income in UVT – UVT1,090) x 19%
1,700	4,100	28	(Taxable income in UVT – UVT1,700) x 28% + UVT116
4,100	8,670	33	(Taxable income in UVT – UVT4,100) x 33% + UVT788
8,670	18,970	35	(Taxable income in UVT – UVT8,670) x 35% + UVT2,296
18,970	31,000	37	(Taxable income in UVT – UVT18,970) x 37% + UVT5,901
31,000	—	39	(Taxable income in UVT – UVT31,000) x 39% + UVT10,352

Dividends distributed by a Colombian company are taxed according to the rules discussed below.

Dividends distributed to resident individuals out of profits that were taxed at the level of the distributing company are subject to rates from 0% to 10%, depending on the level of the income received. The following is a table of these rates.

Dividends
Exceeding UVT	Not exceeding UVT	Rate %	Tax calculation
0	300	0	0
300	—	10	(Dividends in UVT – UVT300) x 10%

Dividends distributed out of profits that were not subject to tax at the level of the distributing company are taxed at a rate of 31% (for 2021), regardless of whether the recipient of the dividend is an individual resident in Colombia or a nonresident, plus the dividend tax (0% to 10% in accordance with the table above for residents, or 10% for nonresidents). In this case, the dividend tax should be applied to the amount of the dividends, reduced by the 31% tax (for 2021). If the dividend is paid to a nonresident individual, the dividend tax rate is 10%.

B. Estate and gift tax

For the 2021 tax year, the first UVT3,490 received as a gift or inheritance by spouses and legal heirs is exempt from tax. For inheritances or legacies received by individuals other than the legitimate heirs and spouse, as well as for donations, the exempt amount of the "capital gain" is 20% of the value received. A "capital gain" is unexpected income or profit from an extraordinary event, such as an extraordinary sale or winning a lottery or a raffle. An inheritance or legacy is deemed to be a "capital gain" if it is received by individuals other than the legal inheritors.

In addition, the first UVT7,700 of urban or rural real estate property received as a gift or inheritance by spouses and legal heirs is exempt from tax.

C. Social security

Employers and employees are subject to the following monthly social security contributions (calculated as percentages of salaries).

Contribution	Employer (%)	Employee (%)
Health (a)	8.5	4.0
Pensions (b)	12.0	4.0
Additional contribution (c)	—	1 to 2
Labor risks	0.348 to 8.7 (d)	—

(a) Contributions to the health system are mandatory for all employees. Under Law 1819 of 2016, companies, consortiums, free-trade zones and joint ventures that have not signed legal stability agreements, as well as trusts acting as employers, are exempted from paying the 8.5% health contribution for employees who earn less than 10 monthly legal minimum salaries per month, if they file income tax returns. One monthly legal minimum salary equals COP908,526 for 2021.
(b) According to the second paragraph of Article 15 of Law 100 of 1993, the affiliation to the pension system is voluntary for foreign employees if they remain covered under a pension scheme abroad.
(c) An additional 1% contribution for pensions must be paid by employees who earn at least four monthly legal minimum salaries (COP3,634,104) per month. This rate will be increased by 0.2%, 0.4%, 0.6%, 0.8% or 1%, depending on the total amount of the salary (from 16 to 25 monthly minimum legal salaries).
(d) The contribution for labor risks ranges between 0.348% and 8.7% of the employee's salary. It varies according to the insured risk, which is based on the type of activity carried out by the employee.

The base on which these contributions are calculated is limited to the equivalent of 25 monthly legal minimum salaries (COP22,713,150) per month.

In addition to the above, employers must pay monthly payroll taxes equal to 9% of the salaries paid to their employees. These taxes are distributed in the following percentages among the following entities:
- Family Compensation Funds: 4%
- Colombian Family Welfare Institute (ICBF): 3%
- National Learning Service (SENA): 2%

The base for the 9% contribution is not limited to 25 times the monthly legal minimum salaries.

For payroll tax calculation purposes, employers must consider only salary payments and paid rest days and exclude extralegal benefits, aids and fringe benefits.

Companies that file income tax returns, consortiums and free trade zones, and joint ventures that have not signed legal stability agreements, as well as trusts acting as employers, are exempted from paying the payroll taxes that are allocable to the ICBF and the SENA with respect to the payroll of employees who earn less than 10 monthly legal minimum salaries. They continue to be obligated to pay payroll taxes designated to the Family Compensation Funds for these employees (4%).

Non-salary payments exceeding 40% of the employee's monthly remuneration are part of the base for contributions to the Social Security System (Pension, Health and Labor Risks) (Article 30, Law 1393 of 2010). This 40% limit does not apply for payroll taxes.

If the employee earns an integral salary (all-inclusive salary), social security contributions and payroll taxes are calculated based on 70% of such salary This labor rule does not apply for the calculation of the income tax withholding. For income tax withholding purposes, the base is 100% of the taxable income, regardless of the type of salary (ordinary or all-inclusive).

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year is the calendar year.

Each year, the Colombian government establishes deadlines for filing income tax returns through the issuance of an Official Decree. The tax-filing dates for individuals are between August and October of each year, according to the last two digits of the Colombian tax identification number.

An income tax return for the 2021 tax year must be filed if any of the following conditions is met by a tax resident:
- Gross assets or equity are equal to or higher than UVT4,500 (COP163,386,000) (for 2021)
- Annual gross income equal to or higher than UVT1,400 (COP50,831,000) (for 2021)
- Total of purchases and consumptions are equal to or higher than UVT1,400 (COP50,831,000) during the year (for 2021)
- Consumptions with credit cards, bank deposits or investments in Colombia are higher than UVT1,400 (COP50,831,000) during the year (for 2021)

Nonresidents must file a tax return if 100% of their total taxable income was not subject to local withholding tax at the nonresident rate (currently 20%). Additional conditions may be applicable. The annual tax rate for nonresidents with a filing obligation is 35%.

Individuals who are required to file tax returns must calculate and pay advance tax for the following tax year in accordance with the applicable rules under specific circumstances.

Married individuals are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

There is an audit benefit for the 2020 and 2021 tax years for individuals who increase their net income tax by at least 20% as compared to the preceding year.

Typically, the tax authority could review income tax returns within three years. With this benefit, such term could be reduced to six months if there is an increase up to 30%. If there is an increase up to 20%, the term could be reduced to 12 months.

Report of assets held abroad. The report of assets held abroad is a tax obligation for resident individuals that entered into force as of 2015. Individuals must submit a report listing assets held outside Colombia if the assets have a value equal or greater than UVT2,000 (COP72,616,000) for 2021, including the value of the assets, and the jurisdictions in which they are located.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Taxpayers deemed tax residents who receive foreign-source income subject to income tax in the country of origin may apply a tax credit for the foreign tax paid in their income tax return, up to the amount of Colombian tax payable on the same income. Foreigners may not claim the credit. As of the 2020 tax year, Colombia has entered into double tax treaties with Canada, Chile, the Czech Republic, India, Korea (South), Mexico, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the Andean Community member countries (Bolivia, Ecuador and Peru).

F. Entry visas

Under this decree, foreigners who wish to work or carry on business in Colombia must apply for an appropriate visa. - Medical treatment
- Legal proceedings
- Crew member
- Conferences
- Internships
- Volunteering
- Audiovisual production
- Journalistic coverage
- Temporary services or technical assistance
- Internal corporate transfer
- Foreign commercial representative officer
- Vacation-work program

The most common subcategories of the Visitor Visas are described below.

Visitor Visa for temporary services. The Visitor Visa for temporary services is issued to the foreigners who wish to enter the country in order to provide temporary services such as specialized technical assistance, with or without an employment contract. The validity of this visa is 180 days, with multiple entries. An individual can request a visa for a shorter period if his or her activity in Colombia will be for a shorter period. It can be renewable. The relatives of a holder of this type of visa may apply for a beneficiary visa.

Companies that sponsor this kind of visa must notify the Special Administrative Unit Migration Colombia (Unidad Administrativa Especial Migración Colombia ["Migración Colombia"]) of the initiation and termination of activities through the Foreigners' Information and Report System (Sistema de Información y Reporte de Extranjeros, or SIRE) within 15 calendar days after the beginning or termination of the activity. SIRE is an online platform, which was created by Migración Colombia to facilitate the reporting of foreigners generating benefits for Colombian companies, hotels and education entities. Every Colombian company, hotel or education entity that accepts a foreigner generating benefits in any form (including under a work contract) must report to Migración Colombia the initiation and termination dates of the foreigner's activities. In addition, the employer must pay for the foreigner and his or her family's travel expenses back to their home country or their last residence within 30 days after the end of his or her professional activities. If the foreigner decides not to use this benefit from the Colombian company, this company must report to Migración Colombia that the foreigner decided not to make use of such benefit. This must be reported within five working days after his or her departure.

Visitor Visa for business purposes. The Visitor Visa for business purposes is granted to a foreigner who intends to enter Colombia to conduct trade and business, promote economic exchange, make investments and create business. This visa is valid for up to three years with multiple entries, but the holder of this type of visa can stay only up to 180 continuous or discontinuous days per year in Colombia. An individual can request a visa for a shorter period if his or her activity in Colombia will be for a shorter period. The individual's activities cannot generate the payment of wages in Colombia. It can be renewable. The relatives of a holder of this type of visa may not apply for a beneficiary visa.

A Migrant Visa is granted to a foreigner who enters Colombia with the intention of establishing himself or herself in Colombia and does not fulfill the conditions to apply for a Resident Visa (see Resident ["R" Type] Visa). The validity of this visa can extend up to three years.

The following are the subcategories for Migrant Visas:

- Colombian national spouse

To obtain these permits, they must provide their diplomas, legalized or apostilled with an official translation to Spanish.

Noncompliance with the requirement to obtain the special permits or licenses to develop regulated professions may result in the imposition of penalties by the Migración Colombia authority. Decree 834 of 2013 (confirmed in Decree 1067 of 2015) eliminated the requirement of presenting the special permits or licenses to the Visas Office of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in order to obtain this visa. However, the permit or licenses must be submitted when the employer or contractor notifies the Migración Colombia offices of the initiation of activities.

This type of visa is granted for the entire term of the contractual relationship. Therefore, the validity of the visa depends on this relationship, and its duration cannot exceed three years. It can be renewable. It allows multiple entries and the engagement in study activities by the holder.

The visa is canceled if the foreigner leaves Colombia for more than 180 consecutive days. The foreigner can stay in Colombia for the entire term of the visa. The relatives of a holder of this visa may apply for a beneficiary visa.

Contractors and employers of foreigners must notify Migración Colombia of the beginning and ending of activities through SIRE within 15 calendar days after the beginning or ending of the activities.

Also, workers who contribute to the social security system, including Venezuelan nationals with special permit of permanence, and the administrative personnel of the embassies or consulates in Colombia, must be registered through the Unique Registry of Foreign Workers (Registro Único de Trabajadores Extranjeros en Colombia, or RUTEC) platform of the Ministry of Labor.

In addition, the employer must pay for the foreigner and his or her family's travel expenses back to their country or their last residence within 30 days after the end of his or her professional activities. If the foreigner decides not to use this benefit from the Colombian company, this company must report to Migración Colombia that the foreigner decided not to make use of such benefits. This needs to be reported within five working days after his or her departure.

After two years of holding this visa, it is possible to request the Resident ("R" type) Visa. It allows multiple entries, but it is not renewable. The relatives of a holder of this visa may apply for a beneficiary visa.

For regulated professions (for example, engineering, accounting and business administration), foreigners must request special permits or licenses from the competent Professional Council to exercise their professions in Colombia. To obtain the permits or licenses, the foreigners must provide their diplomas legalized or apostilled with an official Spanish translation.

Resident ("R" type) Visa. A Resident Visa will be granted to a foreigner who wants to enter and/or remain in Colombia to establish himself or herself permanently in Colombia or establish his or her domicile in Colombia. A foreigner can stay in Colombia for the entire term of the visa. A Resident Visa holder can perform any legal activity, including activities under an employment relationship or civil contract to provide services to an individual or corporation domiciled in Colombia. A Colombian company must file a Report of Initiation/Finalization of Activities with SIRE within 15 calendar days after a foreigner's initiation/finalization of activities in Colombia. This report must be done by the Colombian company for each foreigner coming to Colombia, regardless of the type of visa or permit.

A son or daughter who is 25 years or older and has a disability may apply for the beneficiary visa. These visas have the same duration as the applicant's visa. Visas for family members authorize the holders to carry out home and study activities only. The principal requirement to obtain the beneficiary visa is to present the birth or marriage certificate that proves the link with the visa holder, granted and apostilled with a validity of no more than three months.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are subject to tax on worldwide income. Nonresident employees who work in the Republic of Congo more than two weeks a year are subject to tax on a lump-sum salary, regardless of where their employers are resident. Under the double tax treaties between the Republic of Congo and France and Italy, nonresident employees become taxable in the Republic of Congo after 183 days.

Definition of resident. Individuals are considered resident if they meet either of the following conditions:

- They have a dwelling in the Republic of Congo, either as owners or as tenants with leases for at least one year, or they otherwise maintain their principal residence in the Republic of Congo.
- They stay in the Republic of Congo for more than six months.

Under the 2020 Finance Law, individuals appointed as managing directors, representatives or responsibles of branches established in the Republic of Congo and owned by foreign companies are deemed to be resident in the Republic of Congo, even if they actually live outside the Republic of Congo.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Taxable employment income includes all compensations, allowances and benefits in kind.

Investment income. Dividend and interest income from investments in the Republic of Congo are included in taxable income. Residents are also taxed on foreign investment income.

A withholding tax, called the tax on movable assets, is levied on dividends at a rate of 15%, on directors' fees at a rate of 17%, and on bonds and debentures at a rate of 20%. After the income is included in taxable income, the tax on movable assets withheld is deducted from general income tax due.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employed individuals are subject to tax on income from commercial, agricultural and professional activities. Taxable income consists of total income from all categories.

Taxable income from commercial and agricultural activities includes all receipts, advances, interest and gains directly related to the activities. It is calculated on an accrual basis, with a possible option for a deemed-profits system if turnover does not exceed a certain amount. Capital gains derived from sales of fixed business assets may be exempt if reinvested.

Taxable income from professional activities is determined on a cash basis. Taxable income equals the difference between amounts received and expenses paid during the calendar year, including gains or losses from the sale of professional assets.

Directors' fees. Compensation paid to directors is treated as investment income and is subject to income tax. Taxes withheld by the payer may be credited by the recipient against general income tax payable.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Congolese law does not specifically address the taxation of employer-provided stock options.

Capital gains. Capital gains are taxed at ordinary income rates.

The taxable portion of gains from the disposal of real property is the difference between the sale price and the revalued purchase price. For developed land, the gain is taxed at a rate of 5% for ownership in excess of 10 years. For undeveloped land, the gain is taxed at a rate of 7% for ownership in excess of 10 years.

Gains derived from sales of shares are generally exempt from tax. However, one-third of the gain is taxed if, during the five preceding years, the seller, together with his or her ascendants, descendants and spouse, held more than 25% of the capital stock of the company and if any of these individuals served as managers or directors in the company at any time during the five-year period.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. To determine taxable income, the following items are deducted:
- A 20% deduction from the personal income tax base.
- Pension plan contributions, limited to 6% of gross compensation.
- Social security contributions.
- Interest on loans for which the taxpayer is liable, restricted to the first six annual payments of loans related to the construction or acquisition of a principal apartment building. The deductible amount is limited to XAF1 million.

- Alimony paid pursuant to a judicial decision.
- Family allowances, limited to XAF5,000 per child.
- Medical expenses paid by the taxpayer and dependents, not exceeding 10% of net income up to a maximum of XAF200,000. Prosthesis and pharmaceutical expenses are excluded.
- Special allowances to cover professional expenses (for example, transport allowances), limited to 15% of taxable income.
- One plane ticket per year for the individual and his or her family.
- Dismissal allowances.
- Retirement allowances.

Personal deductions and allowances. The family coefficient rules described in Rates are used instead of a schedule of personal allowances and deductions.

Business deductions. All expenses necessary to carry on a professional activity are deductible. Deductible expenses for commercial and agricultural activities include the following:
- Expenses necessary to carry on the activity, such as personnel and rental expenses
- Depreciation
- Provisions for losses and expenses
- Interest on loans from shareholders
- Certain taxes, including business tax, license fees and tax on wages

Rates. Tax is levied at progressive rates, up to a maximum rate of 40%. Income is taxed under a family coefficient system, which adjusts the amount of income subject to the progressive tax rate table according to the number of family members. Under this system, taxable income is divided by the number of family allowances to which the taxpayer is entitled. The amount calculated corresponds to the income per allowance. Tax is then computed for one allowance and multiplied by the number of family allowances. No more than 6.5 allowances may be taken. The following allowances are available.

Type of allowance	Number of allowances
Single, divorced or widowed individual with no children	1
Married with no children, single or divorced with one child	2
Widowed or married with one child	2.5
Each additional child	0.5

The following table presents the tax rates that apply to income for one allowance.

Taxable income
Exceeding XAF	Not exceeding XAF	Rate %
0	464,000	1
464,000	1,000,000	10
1,000,000	3,000,000	25
3,000,000	—	40

Relief for losses. Losses in one category may be deducted from income in other categories. If income from all categories does not fully offset the loss, the remaining loss may be carried forward for three years.

Nonresidents. Nonresidents are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 20% on payments for work or services carried out in the Republic of Congo. This rate does not apply to French residents under the France-Republic of Congo tax treaty. The withholding rate is 20% for royalties derived by nonresidents, except residents of France, for whom the rate is 15%.

B. Other taxes

Property tax. An occupancy tax for premises for residential use is imposed. The following are the rates:
- Center: XAF60,000
- Periphery: XAF12,000

The tax is due by 20 April of each year.

The occupancy tax is withheld at source by the employer at a rate of XAF1,000 per month for the periphery and XAF5,000 per month for the center.

Inheritance and gift tax. If a deceased person or donor was a resident of the Republic of Congo, inheritance or gift tax is payable on worldwide net assets, unless otherwise provided by applicable tax treaties. Resident foreigners and nonresidents are subject to inheritance and gift tax only on assets located in the Republic of Congo.

Inheritance and gift tax rates vary, depending on the relationship between the recipient and the deceased or donor and on the value of the gift or inheritance. The rates range from 0% to 18%.

C. Social security

Contributions. Social security contributions are withheld monthly by employers. The tax base includes all compensation, benefits and allowances.

The following contributions are required and are paid by the employer, with the exception of the pension contribution, which is paid by the employer and the employee.

Description	Rate (%)
On monthly salary, up to XAF600,000
Family allowances	10.035
Accidents and illnesses due to professional activity	2.25
Pension contributions on monthly salary up to XAF1,200,000; paid by
Employer	8
Employee	4

Coverage. The social security system includes the following branches:
- A family benefits branch, which provides maternity benefits
- An occupational risk branch, which provides benefits for work injury or occupational disease

- A branch of pensions for responsible service, which provides benefits relating to old age, invalidity and death

Universal Health Insurance Scheme. The 2021 Finance Law created the solidarity contribution for the Universal Health Insurance Fund. The amount of the contribution is equal to 0.5% of the portion of monthly salary income exceeding XAF500,000. The contribution is withheld and remitted together with personal income tax by the employer on behalf of its employees.

Employers and self-employed individuals are also liable for this contribution. In their case, the contribution is calculated on the basis of the amount of the business license tax at the rate indicated above. The contribution must be remitted by 20 April each year.

Totalization agreement. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, the Republic of Congo has entered into a totalization agreement with France. Under this agreement, French employees on a secondment (short assignment with a duration of one year) are exempt from social security taxes for one year. An exceptional extension for one year may be granted in response to a request addressed to the relevant authorities.

The Republic of Congo has signed a social security treaty with other member countries of the Common African and Mauritian Organization (Organisation Commune Africaine et Mauricienne, or OCAM), which are Benin, Burkina Faso, Central African Republic, Côte d'Ivoire, Gabon, Mauritius, Niger, Rwanda, Senegal and Togo. The application of this treaty is subject to the rule of reciprocity.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year is the calendar year. Under the law, individuals must file general income tax returns between 10 April and 20 April following the end of the tax year. An extension to between 10 May and 20 May is provided for self-employed individuals required to file balance sheets. Self-employed individuals must file separate returns between 10 May and 20 May for income derived from commercial and agricultural activities. Although tax on employment is withheld monthly by employers, employees must file annual income tax returns.

Individuals engaged in commercial, professional or agricultural activities must make two prepayments, each equal to one-third of the tax paid the previous year. The balance is payable on receipt of a tax assessment.

Married persons are taxed jointly or separately, at the taxpayer's election, on employment income.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

No foreign tax credit is available unless a double tax treaty provides otherwise. However, taxes withheld in a foreign country are deductible for determining taxable income in the Republic of Congo.

The Republic of Congo has entered into double tax treaties with France, Italy and Mauritius and with other member countries of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community (Communauté Économique et Monétaire de l'Afrique Centrale, or CEMAC), including Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Equatorial Guinea and Gabon.

The following relief is available under the CEMAC treaty:
- Commercial profits are taxable in the treaty country where a foreign firm performs its activities through a permanent establishment.
- Dividends are taxable in the country of source.
- Interest is taxable in the country of residence of the beneficiary.
- Royalties are taxable in the country of residence of the beneficiary.
- Employment income is taxable in the treaty country where the activity is performed.

F. Temporary visas

Foreigners who have expired visas, who want to enter the country for the first time, or who have visas that were canceled when they left the country, must apply for 15-day visas at a Congolese embassy or consulate before entering the Republic of Congo. During this 15-day period, the foreigner can apply for a three-month visa. This visa may be obtained from the General Director of Immigration in Brazzaville or from the department director of immigration in Pointe-Noire.

To obtain a three-month visa, an applicant must submit the following documents:
- Receipt for the temporary work permit
- Valid passport
- Four identity pictures
- Employer testimony

G. Work visas and/or permits

A nonresident also needs a temporary work permit to work legally in the Republic of Congo. To obtain a temporary work permit, the applicant must submit the following documents:
- Valid passport
- Two identity pictures
- Copy of the entry visa
- An information form
- A job analysis form

For workers, an attestation of employment or an acknowledgement of receipt of the request for employment must be added to the permit application file.

H. Residence visas (and/or permits)

Temporary residence permit. A temporary residence permit (carte de résident temporaire) is the same as a one-year visa. It is valid for one year, and is granted exclusively by the General Director of Immigration Services in Brazzaville.

To obtain a temporary residence permit, the applicant must submit, in addition to the documents required for a temporary permit, the following documents:
- A duty stamp of XAF5,000

- A valid passport or substitute document, with a visa if the foreigner is a national of a country that has not signed an immigration treaty with the Republic of Congo
- Four photographs of the applicant
- An international vaccination book
- A receipt for payment of a deposit guaranteeing repatriation (for applicants who are neither citizens of the CEMAC countries nor of the Democratic Republic of the Congo)
- A work contract signed by the Congolese Minister of Labor if the applicant is a salaried employee, a certificate of inscription in a school or university if the applicant is a student, or a commercial agreement if the applicant is an independent worker

I. Family and personal considerations

Marital property regime. The following marital property regimes apply in the Republic of Congo:
- Community property
- Division of property
- Conventional community

The community property regime is the default regime and applies automatically if a couple does not specifically choose another regime.

The choice of marital regime is made when the marriage is solemnized. The marital property regime may not be changed during the first two years of the marriage. After two years, changes are allowed only if the rules under the original regime conflict with the family's interests. Changing regimes must be official and accepted by the authorities.

The Republic of Congo's marital property regimes apply to married couples who solemnize their marriage in the Republic of Congo or to couples who solemnize their marriage abroad but under Congolese laws. The regimes do not apply to couples who establish a permanent domicile in the Republic of Congo if they were married under foreign laws. The community property claims purport to survive a permanent move to a non-community property country.

Forced heirship. Forced heirship rules do not apply in the Republic of Congo.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals can use the international driving license for six months in the Republic of Congo, and then they must obtain a local permit.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident and nonresident individuals, regardless of their nationality, are taxed on their income earned in Costa Rica. Foreign-source income is not taxed.

Individuals are considered resident if they have lived in Costa Rica for more than six consecutive months (that is, 183 days) during a tax year. However, the tax authorities may apply a shorter term for employed individuals.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Monthly income in excess of CRC842,000 is taxable, including salary, pensions, bonuses, premiums, commissions and allowances (for example, housing and educational allowances). Payments made to board members, other executives and counselors not included in the payroll are subject to a 15% withholding tax.

Self-employment and business income. Income derived from self-employment or from a trade or business is subject to taxation.

Investment income. In general, dividends paid or credited by corporations to individuals or entities are subject to a 15% withholding tax. Dividend distributions paid to another entity domiciled in Costa Rica are exempt, provided that the recipient is an entity that carries out an economic activity and is subject to income tax or is the holding company of a financial conglomerate or group duly supervised in Costa Rica. Dividend distributions by companies of their own shares are also exempt. In addition, interest paid to multilateral development banks and other institutions of multilateral or bilateral development and to other not-for-profit entities that are not subject to tax is exempt from the withholding tax. Royalties from franchises, technical advice payments and similar payments are subject to a 25% withholding tax.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees paid to resident and nonresident individuals are subject to a 15% withholding tax.

Capital gains. Capital gains on the sale of tangible or intangible assets are subject to the capital gains tax at a 15% rate. For the first sale of goods and rights acquired before 1 July 2019, taxpayers are allowed to apply a capital gains tax of 2.25% over the gross purchase price.

The gain is subject to corporate income tax if any of the following circumstances exist:
- The sale of assets is considered to be part of the taxpayer's ordinary trade or business.
- The goods or rights are used to generate other taxable income.
- The asset being transferred is a depreciable asset.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. Annual tax credits are allowed in the amounts of CRC18,840 for each dependent child and CRC28,440 for a spouse. The spouse tax credit may be taken by either the husband or the wife, but not by both.

Business deductions. All costs and expenses that are necessary to generate taxable income and protect investments are deductible for self-employment and business income.

Rates. Employment income is taxable at the following monthly tax rates, which are applicable from 1 January 2021 to 31 December 2021.

Monthly taxable income
Exceeding CRC	Not exceeding CRC	Tax rate %
0	842,000	0
842,000	1,236,000	10
1,236,000	2,169,000	15
2,169,000	4,337,000	20
4,337,000	—	25

Fringe benefits and salary in kind are subject to a 15% withholding tax.

Self-employment and business income are taxable at the following monthly tax rates, which are applicable from 1 January 2021 to 31 December 2021.

Monthly taxable income
Exceeding CRC	Not exceeding CRC	Tax rate %
0	3,742,000	0
3,742,000	5,589,000	10
5,589,000	9,322,000	15
9,322,000	18,683,000	20
18,683,000	—	25

Withholding tax is levied on nonresidents at a rate of 10% on salaries, other remuneration, pensions, commissions and directors' fees. A 25% rate applies to payments for professional services rendered by nonresidents in Costa Rica.

Relief for losses. Self-employed individuals may carry their losses forward for a period of three years.

B. Estate and gift taxes

Costa Rica does not impose estate or gift taxes. However, estates may be taxed as ordinary taxpayers if they derive income before the distribution of assets to beneficiaries.

C. Social security

Social security contributions are levied on salaries, at a rate of 26.5% for the employer and 10.5% for the employee. Contributions are computed based on an employee's gross compensation, with no deductions allowed.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Employers are responsible for withholding income taxes and social security contributions from employees' salaries on a monthly basis. Employees are not required to file an annual income tax return if their only source of income is employment compensation. Nonresidents are not required to file tax returns if they are only subject to income tax withholding at source.

The fiscal year for self-employed individuals and individuals with a trade or business in Costa Rica is from 1 January to 31 December. Returns must be filed, and any tax liabilities due must be paid, no later than 15 March. However, in certain specific circumstances, taxpayers may elect to file using a different tax year. Self-employed individuals and individuals with a trade or business must make advance quarterly tax payments.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Costa Rica has entered into double tax treaties with Spain (effective from 1 January 2010), Germany (effective from 1 January 2017) and Mexico (effective from 1 January 2019).

Costa Rica has entered into bilateral tax information exchange agreements with Argentina, Australia, Canada, France, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway and the United States. Also, the Congress has approved such agreements with Denmark, Faroe Islands, Finland, Greenland, Iceland and Sweden. It is negotiating such agreements with Guernsey, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Korea (South) and South Africa.

F. Temporary visas

Depending on their country of citizenship, individuals may be required to apply for and obtain an entry visa before traveling to Costa Rica. A Costa Rican consulate overseas grants the visa. The immigration authorities have established a list of countries for which an entry visa is required before entering Costa Rica. The requirements for obtaining a visa often vary. Therefore, it is necessary to check the entry visa requirements on a case-by-case basis.

In addition, as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, the Costa Rican government has introduced the rules described below for immigrants to enter the country as tourists:

The government does not request negative coronavirus detection tests and no longer issues sanitary confinement orders when individuals enter the country by air, land or sea.

As of 1 August 2021, adults must obtain travel insurance that covers medical expenses and isolation costs unless they are fully vaccinated with Moderna, Pfizer-BioNTech, AstraZeneca or Johnson & Johnson, which are the vaccines recognized by the Health Department, and have waited at least 14 days from the last dose of vaccination.

Vaccinated tourists must attach the vaccination certificate to the health form (see below) requested by the Health Department prior to boarding the plane. Every vaccination certificate and/or vaccination card needs to have the following information in order to be accepted by the health and immigration authorities:
• Complete name of the foreigner who received the vaccines
• Date on which each dose was applied
• Pharmaceutical house or brand of the vaccine

In the case of US travelers, the "COVID-19 vaccination record card" is accepted.

Unvaccinated tourists must obtain a national or international health insurance that meets the following requirements:
• It is valid during the entire stay in Costa Rica (coverage dates).
• It covers USD50,000 of medical expenses, including COVID-19 disease.
• It covers USD2,000 for lodging expenses in case of COVID-19 quarantine.

Foreign tourists must complete a health form called a "Pase de Salud" within the 72 hours preceding their proposed entry.

Foreign tourists meeting the above conditions are not required to self-isolate on entry to Costa Rica.

G. Work visas (and/or permits)

The government of Costa Rica grants a work authorization to foreign employees who have special knowledge or experience in a certain field. The granting of a work authorization is subject to certain rules that must be checked on a case-by-case basis because the rules may vary. The main criterion applied by the Ministry of Labor is that persons in the local work force cannot be displaced by the hiring of foreigners. Consequently, it may not be possible to obtain a work permit for foreigners in certain occupations unless the employer is a company registered and recognized by the immigration authorities.

H. Residence visas (and/or permits)

The government of Costa Rica may grant migratory statuses that allow foreigners to reside in the country. These include the following:
• Science status
• Athletes

- Journalists
- Workers
- Businesspersons
- Investors
- Retired individuals
- Religious status
- Certain family relatives

The request must be submitted and processed by the immigration authorities in Costa Rica. The application requirements may vary. Therefore, they should be checked on a case-by-case basis.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Spouses of foreigners who are granted work permits do not automatically receive the same treatment as the original permit holder and must apply for an independent visa or work permit. However, they can apply as a dependent of the main applicant.

Children of expatriates may use the granted migratory status of their parents to attend schools in Costa Rica.

Once residency is obtained, the spouse and children must be registered as insured before the Costa Rican social security system so that they can be attended to in the medical centers.

Marital property regime. Assets obtained by any means, except by donation, after the commencement of the marriage are considered to be marital property.

Forced heirship. If an individual dies without leaving a will, the beneficiaries of his or her assets and patrimony according to the law are descendants, ascendants, spouse and collaterals (certain other relatives). The priority order is set by the Civil Code according to a series of different combinations. The amounts needed to satisfy maintenance and other obligations of the deceased are removed from the decedent's estate before the estate is divided between the beneficiaries.

Driver's permits. A foreigner may drive legally in Costa Rica using his or her home country driver's license for the duration of his or her tourist visa. After the tourist visa expires and before obtaining a migratory status, the foreigner is not allowed to drive. After the migratory status is approved, the resident must obtain a Costa Rica driver's license in order to drive.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are subject to income tax in Croatia on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to income tax on their Croatian-source income only.

A resident taxpayer is an individual who has a permanent or temporary place of residence in Croatia. A nonresident taxpayer is an individual who does not have a permanent or temporary place of residence in Croatia but derives Croatian-source income that is subject to tax in Croatia.

An individual is considered to have a place of permanent residency if he or she owns a place of abode or has one at his or her disposal for an uninterrupted period of 183 days. An individual does not need to stay in the place of abode to meet the 183-day threshold. If an individual stays in Croatia for at least 183 days, he or she is considered to have a temporary place of residence in Croatia. In both cases, the 183-day period may span more than one calendar year.

An individual who is single and has permanent residence in Croatia and abroad is deemed to have permanent residence in the country from which he or she mostly travels to his or her place of work. For an individual who has family, Croatian local law prescribes that he or she has permanent residence in the country where his or her family has permanent residence.

Income subject to tax. Residents are subject to income tax on the following types of income:
- Income from employment
- Income from self-employment
- Income from capital
- Income from property and property rights
- Other income

Nonresidents are subject to tax on the same types of income as residents. However, they are taxed only on income sourced in Croatia. Nonresident performers (artists, entertainers, athletes) are not required to pay personal income tax if the fee for their performance is paid to a foreign legal entity and subject to withholding tax in line with the corporate income tax law.

The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Employment income includes receipts in cash or in kind provided by employers under current, past and future employment relationships. Employers may make certain types of payments that are free of tax to employees. These include voluntary pension insurance premiums, reimbursements of business trip expenses, daily allowances, Christmas bonuses, severance payments, accommodation, meal allowances and similar payments, all up to certain prescribed amounts. Employment income is subject to tax at the rates set forth in Rates.

Digital nomad income. Personal income tax is not payable on the salary generated by natural persons who have obtained the digital nomad status. For further details regarding digital nomads' status, see Section G.

Self-employment and business income. Individuals performing small business activities (sole trader activities) in their own name and at their own risk are subject to income tax on income derived from these activities, which is known as income from self-employment. Business income is subject to tax at the rates set forth in Rates.

Under certain conditions, self-employment and business income can be taxed under the rules applicable for corporate taxation (at the corporate tax rate of 10% or 18%, depending on the circumstances).

In principle, all income attributable to business, including gains from the sale of property used in a business, is subject to income tax.

Capital income. Interest income received from bank savings, securities, investment funds and loans is subject to a 10% withholding tax (plus city tax). The following types of interest are exempt from tax:
- Penalty interest
- Interest based on court rulings and resolutions rendered by local or regional authorities
- Interest derived from positive balance on giro, current and foreign-currency accounts
- Bank interest up to 0.5% per year
- Bond interest
- Yields from life insurance and voluntary pension funds

Dividends (and profit shares) are subject to a 10% withholding tax (plus city tax). Dividends paid out from profits realized in the period from 1 January 2001 through 31 December 2004 and from 1 March 2012 onward are taxable. Dividends that are used to increase share capital are not taxable.

Income from property and property rights. Income from leasing of immovable and movable property is taxed at a rate of 10% (plus city tax), after a deduction of 30%, representing notional expenses.

Income from property rights and the disposal of property is taxed at a rate of 24% (plus city tax). However, capital gains derived from the sale of real estate are not taxable if the real estate meets either of the following conditions:

- It was held more than two years.
- It was used by the owner or dependent family members for lodging.

If a person sells more than three real estate or property rights in a five-year period, income from sale of real estate or property rights is taxed at a rate of 20% (plus city tax). The expenses incurred are deductible for tax purposes.

Other income. Other income includes all types of income that cannot be included in one of the above categories, such as directors' fees. Other income is taxed at a prepayment rate of 20% (plus city tax), without the right to deduct personal allowances. Exceptionally, other income tax will be increased by a rate of 100% (plus city tax) in the event of tax audit findings of unreported income and 30% (plus city tax) in the event of the claiming back of pension contributions paid in excess of the annual limit.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains derived from the sale of financial property acquired in or after 2016 are subject to tax at a rate of 10% (plus city tax). Realized capital losses may offset realized capital gains in the same year. Certain exceptions apply (for example, capital gains are not subject to tax if the financial property is held for at least two years).

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Compulsory social contributions payable by an individual on a specified type of income are deductible in determining taxable income. Personal expenses incurred to produce income from employment are not deductible.

Personal allowances. Resident and nonresident taxpayers may claim a basic personal allowance of HRK4,000 per month. Resident taxpayers may also increase personal allowances by the following:

- HRK1,750 for a dependent spouse and ascendants
- HRK1,750 for the first dependent child, HRK2,500 for the second, HRK3,500 for the third, HRK4,750 for the fourth, and HRK6,250 for the fifth
- HRK1,000 or HRK3,750 (depending on circumstances) for a dependent invalid child or other family member or for an invalid taxpayer

Nonresident taxpayers who are residents of the European Union (EU) can claim increased personal allowances in the same manner as residents if their total Croatian-source income accounts for at least 90% of their total annual income.

To be considered a dependent family member, the individual's annual earnings may not exceed HRK15,000. A dependent family member is not required to live in the same household as the taxpayer.

Resident taxpayers may also claim deductions for donations made in Croatia up to the amount of 2% of income earned in the preceding year.

Business deductions. All business-related expenses are deductible from gross income for self-employed taxpayers who keep business books. Living or personal expenses are not deductible. Fifty percent of business entertainment costs and 50% of business car costs are not deductible. Per diem allowances and travel costs are not taxable up to certain amounts specified by the tax regulations.

Rates. Personal income tax on employment income is levied at the following progressive rates (however, see the next paragraph).

Taxable income HRK	Tax rate %	Tax due HRK	Cumulative tax due HRK
First 360,000	20	72,000	72,000
Above 360,000	30	—	—

The above rates apply to employment income and other income that is included by default in the annual tax return.

Income tax is increased by municipal surcharges (city taxes) ranging from 0% to 18%, which are levied on personal income tax by local governments. The highest rate of 18% applies in Zagreb.

Relief for losses. Tax losses may be carried forward for five years. Nonresidents may carry forward only losses incurred in Croatia. Losses may not be carried back.

B. Other taxes

Wealth tax. Croatia does not levy wealth tax on net property. However, tax is levied on certain types of property, including vacation houses (up to a maximum tax of HRK15 per square meter per year), cars (up to a maximum tax of HRK1,500 per year), motorbikes (up to a maximum tax of HRK1,200 per year), and boats and yachts (up to a maximum tax of HRK5,000 per year).

Estate and gift taxes. A tax is imposed on movable and immovable property, including cash, monetary claims and securities received by inheritance or donation at a rate of 4% on the fair market value of the property transferred. Certain transfers of property are tax-exempt, depending on the relationship between the transferee and the transferor and on the type of property. In addition, transfers of movable property are exempt if the fair market value of the property is less than HRK50,000 or if the transfer is subject to value-added tax (VAT).

C. Social security

Contributions. Employment income is subject to health and social security contributions at rates of 16.5% for employers (uncapped) and 20% for employees (partially capped).

Social security contributions consist of the following elements.

	Employer rate %	Employee rate %
Old-age pension	—	20
Health insurance	16.5	—

Other income is subject to a health care contribution at a rate of 7.5% for payers and 10% for recipients.

Capital income, income from insurance and income from property and property rights are generally not subject to health and social security contributions.

Coverage. An employee who pays social security contributions in Croatia is entitled to benefits, such as health insurance for the employee and dependent family members, disability and professional illness insurance, unemployment allowances, retirement benefits and other benefits.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Croatia has entered into totalization agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Australia	Korea (South)	Quebec
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Montenegro	Serbia
Canada	North Macedonia	Turkey

In the EU, special rules contained in the regulation on the coordination of social security systems apply (EU Regulation 883/2004). These rules also apply to Iceland, Lichtenstein, Norway and Switzerland.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Personal income taxes are generally payable through withholding. However, for income received directly from abroad, the tax reporting and tax payment obligation arises within 30 days of receiving the income and rests with the individual taxpayer.

Croatian annual tax returns are generally filed by the end of February of the year following the year in which the income is earned. Under new rules introduced in 2017, annual taxes are assessed only with respect to employment income and other income. The tax authorities normally issue the annual assessment based on data on income and taxes reported in their IT tool during the year. This simplified procedure may not apply to individuals in a complex tax position or in cross-border arrangements.

Individuals who earn self-employment income from ongoing business activities must pay advance tax monthly in an amount determined by the tax authorities. The balance of tax due is payable or refundable after the official assessment of annual personal income tax. The payer of self-employment income must withhold and pay personal income tax and contributions with respect to such income.

Nonresidents receiving Croatian-source income may need to register with the tax office. For nonresidents employed by resident employers, the employer is responsible for tax withholding and reporting requirements. Residents and nonresidents who work in Croatia for a nonresident employer and are being paid from abroad must file monthly tax returns and pay advances of personal income tax within 30 days after the income is received. The same rule applies to any other income received directly from abroad (dividends, foreign pensions and other income).

E. Tax treaties

Croatia has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Albania	Indonesia	Oman
Armenia	Iran	Poland
Austria	Ireland	Portugal
Azerbaijan	Israel	Qatar
Belarus	Italy	Romania
Belgium	Japan	Russian Federation
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Jordan	San Marino
Bulgaria	Kazakhstan	Serbia
Canada	Korea (South)	Slovak Republic
Chile	Kosovo	Slovenia
China Mainland	Kuwait	South Africa
Czech Republic	Latvia	Spain
Denmark	Lithuania	Switzerland
Estonia	Luxembourg	Syria
France	Malaysia	Turkey
Georgia	Malta	Turkmenistan
Germany	Mauritius	Ukraine
Greece	Moldova	United Arab Emirates
Hungary	Montenegro	United Kingdom
Iceland	Morocco	Vietnam
India	Netherlands
	North Macedonia

Croatia has adopted double tax treaties entered into by the former Yugoslavia with the following jurisdictions.

Finland	Norway	Sweden

F. Travel visas

Whether a foreign national must have a travel visa to enter Croatia depends on the individual's country of origin. Travel visas are issued for tourist, business, personal or other purposes. The period of the stay of a foreign national with a travel visa varies according to the type of visa.

G. Permits for stay and work

Under the Act on Foreign Nationals, a foreign national must obtain a permit for stay and work if he or she enters into an employment relationship with a Croatian employer or if he or she is assigned to a Croatian company that is related to the individual's foreign employer.

In general, permits for stay and work for employment with Croatian employers are subject to a labor market test. Croatian employers must request a labor market test to confirm there is no available Croatian individual who can perform the required work. If the employer receives a positive test, it can then apply for the work permit for a foreign individual. Intercompany transfers, employment of "key personnel" or EU Blue Card work permits are not subject to a labor market test. Specific requirements are prescribed for employment of non-EU citizens under a "key personnel" function (share capital exceeding HRK200,000, employment of at least three Croatian citizens and gross salary above the average). Specific requirements are also prescribed for the EU Blue Card (only for individuals with higher education [meaning they have a bachelor's degree or a master's diploma] and gross salary above the average).

The Ministry of Internal Affairs issues permits for stay and work, which are usually granted for a period of one or two years. However, foreigners who have obtained permanent residence in Croatia do not need to obtain a permit for work. Employers are fined if their foreign employees do not possess valid permits for stay and work.

The new Foreigners Act introduced a novel concept in the Croatian immigration system, which is the approval of a temporary stay for digital nomads. Digital nomads are third-country nationals who are employed or performing work through communication technology for a company (including their own company) that is not registered in Croatia and who do not perform work or provide services to employers in the Croatian territory. The application for the approval of a temporary stay is submitted to the diplomatic mission or consular office of Croatia. If a third-country national does not need a visa to enter Croatia, the respective application can be submitted to the competent police department. The approval of a temporary stay is issued for one year.

Because Croatia joined the EU on 1 July 2013, EU nationals and individuals with permanent stay in EU countries are no longer required to obtain a work permit in Croatia. They are required only to register their stay in Croatia.

H. Residence permits

Under the Act on Foreign Nationals, foreign nationals must obtain residence permits for temporary residence or permanent residence. EU citizens may obtain a residence card, but it is not required.

Registration. Foreign nationals who stay in Croatia up to 90 days (with a travel visa, or without one if not required) must register at the local police station within 48 hours after their arrival in Croatia. This period is increased to eight days for EU nationals. If the foreign national stays in a hotel, the hotel must complete the registration. Each change of residence must also be registered.

Foreign nationals with temporary residence in Croatia must register their place of residence or change of address at the local police station within three days after their arrival in Croatia or their change of address.

Foreign nationals with permanent residence in Croatia must register their place of residence or their change of address at the local police station within eight days.

Temporary residence. The temporary residence permit is issued for purposes of work, education, joining the family or other purposes determined by law. It must be obtained if the foreign national intends to stay in Croatia for a period longer than 90 days or for the purposes mentioned above.

Temporary residence is limited to stays of up to one or two years, with the possibility of extension, depending on specific circumstances.

Temporary residence permits are issued by Croatian diplomatic missions or consulates or by the Croatian Ministry of Internal Affairs for foreign nationals who do not need a travel visa to enter Croatia.

Permanent residence. Permanent residence is granted to foreigners who held temporary residence permits for five years without interruption before filing the request for permanent residence. Knowledge of the Croatian language is one of the requirements for non-EU nationals.

The Ministry of Internal Affairs must approve permanent residence.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members of foreign nationals working in Croatia must apply separately for permits for stay and work (if they intend to work in Croatia). If they are EU citizens, only a stay permit needs to be obtained. A temporary residence permit for the purpose of joining the family is approved for a foreign national who is a close family member with respect to the following individuals:

- A Croatian national
- A foreign national who has been granted permanent residency
- A foreign national who has a temporary residence permit

On 10 October 2010, the country Netherlands Antilles, which consisted of five island territories in the Caribbean Sea (Bonaire, Curaçao, Saba, Sint Eustatius and Sint Maarten), was dissolved. On dissolution of the Netherlands Antilles, the islands of Bonaire, Sint Eustatius and Saba (BES-Islands) became part of the Netherlands as extraordinary overseas municipalities. Curaçao and Sint Maarten have both become autonomous countries within the Kingdom of the Netherlands. The former Netherlands Antilles tax laws remain applicable to Curaçao, with the understanding that references in the laws to "the Netherlands Antilles" should now be read "Curaçao." A tax reform in Curaçao was effective from 1 January 2012. This was the first step in a more extensive tax reform planned for upcoming years. The following chapter provides information on taxation in Curaçao only. Chapters on the BES-Islands and Sint Maarten appear in this guide.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are taxable on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxable only on income derived from certain Curaçao sources. A resident individual who receives income, wherever earned, is subject to income tax in Curaçao.

Residence is determined based on an individual's domicile (the availability of a permanent home) and physical presence, and on the location of an individual's vital personal and economic interests.

Income subject to tax. The following types of income are taxed in Curaçao:
- Employment income
- Self-employment and business income
- Income from immovable property and the rights to which they are subject (rental income)
- Income from movable assets (dividend and interest income)
- Income from periodic allowances, including payments received from private foundations

Employment income. Taxable employment income consists of employment income, including directors' fees, less itemized and standard deductions and allowances (see Deductions), pension premiums and social security contributions, whether paid or withheld.

Effective from 1 January 2015, a deemed salary was introduced for employees who have a substantial share interest in their employer. These employees must report an annual minimum salary. The applicable minimum salary depends on, among other items, the revenue of the company and the salary of other employees. The minimum salary is treated similarly to ordinary employment income and is taxed at the rates set forth in Rates. In addition, the minimum salary is subject to withholding of wage tax and social security premiums. The deemed salary does not apply to certain entities, such as Curaçao investment companies (see next paragraph), entities that have opted for transparent status, insurance companies and E-zone companies.

Effective from 1 July 2018, changes to the Curaçao profit tax law were adopted. These changes included, among others, the following:

- The introduction of the Curacao investment company, which replaces the tax-exempt company
- The discontinuation of the export facility

However, existing entities enjoying the former tax facilities were able to do so until 31 December 2018 (with the exception of profits derived from intangible assets, which are considered nonqualifying as defined in the Curaçao tax law).

A nonresident individual receiving income from current or former employment carried on in Curaçao is subject to income tax and social security contributions in Curaçao. Wage tax and social security contributions are withheld from an individual's earnings.

A nonresident who is employed by a Curaçao public entity is subject to tax on income, even if the employment is carried on outside Curaçao.

A nonresident individual receiving income as a managing or supervisory director of a company established in Curaçao is subject to income tax and, in principle, social security contributions in Curaçao. Nonresidents may not claim the standard tax credit (see Personal tax credits).

Temporary workers and interns are specifically subject to wage tax.

Self-employment and business income. Residents are subject to tax on their worldwide self-employment and business income, as well as on income derived from a profession. Nonresidents are taxed on income derived from a profession practiced in Curaçao.

Annual profits derived from a business must be calculated in accordance with sound business practices that are applied consistently. Taxable income is determined by subtracting the deductions and personal allowances specified in Deductions from annual profits.

A nonresident individual earning income from activities carried on in Curaçao through a permanent establishment or a permanent representative is subject to income tax in Curaçao. Profits of a permanent establishment are calculated in the same manner as profits of resident taxpayers.

Income from periodic allowances. Resident individuals are subject to tax on their worldwide periodic allowances, including old-age pensions (not related to previous employment), alimony payments and disability allowances. In general, periodic allowances are taxable if the allowances exceed their purchase price and if the purchase price has not (nor could have) been deducted from Curaçao income or was considered to be a component of Curaçao income. Periodic allowances received from private foundations or trusts are subject to income tax. Only the distributions that exceed the contributions to the private foundation are taxed.

Income from immovable property. Sixty-five percent of the income from real estate (rental income), grounds, mines and waters is taxed at the income tax rates set forth in Rates. Income derived from a person's residence is not taxed as income from immovable property. Interest paid on mortgage loans for the acquisition or the restoration of immovable property can be deducted from taxable income.

Nonresident individuals are taxed on rental income derived from real estate located in Curaçao or from the rights to such property.

Income from movable assets. Income from movable assets, such as dividend and interest income and non-periodic payments from private foundations and trusts, is subject to a reduced flat tax rate of 19.5%. A special flat tax rate of 8.5% applies to interest received from local financial institutions. Financial institutions withhold the income tax from the interest payments. These interest payments are not subject to social security premiums. For investments in foreign portfolio investment companies and investments in Curaçao investment companies, a fictitious yield at a rate of 4% must be reported annually based on the fair market value of the investments at the beginning of the calendar year. The fair market value of the investments is increased by the amount of the dividends distributed during the preceding calendar year. The retained earnings originating from a period during which the relevant entity did not qualify as a Curaçao exempt company or a foreign portfolio investment company are excluded from this measure.

Nonresident individuals are taxed on interest income derived from debt obligations if the principal amount of the obligation is secured by mortgaged real estate located in Curaçao.

No withholding taxes are levied on dividends, interest and royalties earned by nonresidents.

Income from substantial share interests. An interest of at least 5% in the issued share capital of a company, a right to acquire such interest and a corresponding profit-sharing right qualifies as a substantial share interest.

Resident individuals are taxed on dividend income and capital gains derived from substantial share interests at a fixed rate of 19.5%. In principle, nonresident individuals are taxed on dividend income and capital gains derived from substantial share interests in companies that are resident in Curaçao if the nonresident individuals were residents of Curaçao at some time during the 10 years preceding the receipt of the dividends or the realization of the capital gains. In the event of immigration to Curaçao, a "step-up" facility is available to determine the cost of a substantial share interest. In the event of emigration from Curaçao, the tax authorities may issue an income tax assessment on the difference between the fair market value of the shares on emigration and the fair market value on establishing residency or acquiring the substantial share interest. However, this tax assessment need not be paid if certain conditions are met. If the taxpayer emigrates within eight years after establishing residency, this income tax on emigration may not be imposed if the substantial share interest is held in a nonresident company.

Capital gains. Capital gains are generally exempt from tax. However, in the following circumstances, residents may be subject to income tax on capital gains at the indicated rates.

Type of income	Rate (%)
Capital gains realized on the disposal of business assets and on the disposal of other assets if qualified as income from independently performed activities	Up to 46.5
Capital gains on the liquidation of a company	17 to 34
Repurchase of shares by the company in excess of the average paid-up capital (non-substantial share interest)	19.5
Capital gains derived from the sale of a substantial share interest in a company	19.5

Nonresidents may be subject to income tax on capital gains derived from the disposal of business assets or of shares in a Curaçao resident corporation if the shares constitute a substantial share interest and if certain other conditions are met.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. A resident taxpayer is entitled to more deductible items than a nonresident taxpayer. A fixed deduction of ANG500 may be deducted from employment income. Alternatively, actual employment-related expenses incurred may be fully deducted to the extent that the expenses exceed ANG1,000 annually.

Residents may claim the following personal deductions:
- Alimony payments to a former spouse
- Mortgage interest paid that is related to the taxpayer's dwelling (limited to ANG27,500 annually)
- Maintenance expenses related to a taxpayer's dwelling that qualifies as a protected monument
- Interest paid on consumer loans (limited to ANG2,500, or ANG5,000 if married, annually)
- Life insurance premiums that entitle taxpayers to annuity payments (up to a maximum of 10% of the income or ANG5,000, annually)
- Pension premiums paid by an employee
- The General Old Age Pension Ordinance (AOV)/General Widows and Orphans Ordinance (AWW) premiums paid by an employee (see Section C)

- Qualifying donations in excess of certain threshold amounts
- Repayments of the principal amounts, interest and costs related to student loans up to ANG10,000 per year for a maximum of 10 years

Residents may deduct the following extraordinary expenses (thresholds applicable):
- Financial support to children exceeding 27 years of age and other relatives not capable of providing for themselves
- Medical expenses, educational expenses and support for up to second-degree relatives, if they meet certain threshold amounts

Deductions that may be claimed by nonresidents include the following:
- Employment expenses
- Qualifying donations in excess of certain threshold amounts

Business deductions. In general, business expenses are fully deductible. However, the deduction of certain expenses is limited. Restrictions on deductions for self-employed persons are described below.

Costs of donations, promotional gifts, courses, conferences, seminars, symposiums are 100% tax-deductible. However, the travel expenses related to these expenses are 80% tax deductible.

Costs incurred for food, and beverages are 80% tax deductible.

The above two restrictions do not apply if the main purpose of the business is to deliver such goods or services.

An investment allowance of 10% is granted for acquisitions of or improvements to fixed assets in the year of investment. This allowance applies only if the investment amounts to more than ANG5,000 in the year of investment.

The depreciation on buildings is limited as of 1 January 2016. Buildings can be depreciated to 50% of the value of the building, as assessed for real estate tax. For buildings that have been depreciated by 1 January 2016 for less than three years, the limit applies as of the fourth year. No recapture is required for buildings that have already been depreciated to an amount that exceeds the above limit.

Personal tax credits. The following personal tax credits may be subtracted by a resident taxpayer from actual income tax due for the 2021 fiscal year:
- Standard tax credit: ANG2,408
- Sole earner tax credit: ANG1,470
- Senior tax credit: ANG1,109
- Child tax credit per child: varies between ANG79 and ANG783, depending on the children's age, residence and education

Pensioners and retirees. Pensioners who request and obtain the penshonado status can opt to be taxed at an income tax rate of 10% on all foreign-source income or they can declare a fixed income of ANG500,000 per year as foreign income. This fixed income is taxed at the progressive income tax rates (see Rates). The penshonado status can be obtained if certain conditions are met, including the following:
- The applicant must not have been a resident of Curaçao for the past five years.

- The applicant must at least be 50 years of age.
- The applicant must apply for the penshonado status within two months of his or her registration in Curaçao.
- The applicant must acquire a house or Protected Monument for personal use with a value of at least ANG450,000 within 18 months of his or her registration in Curaçao, or lease all or part of a Protected Monument with a value of at least ANG450,000 at the start of the lease. If a Protected Monument is acquired, the applicant may lease the Protected Monument to third parties up to four months per year.

Expatriate facility. Individuals that meet certain criteria can request the application of the expatriate facility. To acquire the expatriate status, an individual must meet the following conditions:

- The applicant must not have been a resident of Curaçao for the past five years.
- The applicant must have completed his or her education at the college or university level with a diploma and at least five years of relevant working experience at the required level.
- The applicant must receive annual remuneration from his or her employer of at least ANG150,000.
- The applicant must possess skills that are scarce in Curaçao.

The employer must file the application. In principle, the expatriate status applies with retroactive effect to the beginning of the employment if the application is filed within three months after the beginning of the employment.

An employee with the expatriate status can receive limited amounts of fringe benefits tax-free, such as wages in kind, travel expenses, hotel expenses and expenses with respect to means of transportation and relocation. The remainder of the compensation paid to the expatriate by the employer is taxed at the progressive income tax rates (see Rates). In addition, a net employment contract can be entered into with the expatriate, and the wage tax should then not be grossed up as an additional benefit received from employment.

Rates. Resident and nonresident individuals are subject to income tax at the same progressive rates. The following are the individual income tax rates and tax brackets for the 2021 fiscal year.

Taxable amount		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding ANG	Not exceeding ANG	amount ANG	excess %
0	32,304	0	9.75
32,304	43,073	3,150	15.00
43,073	64,610	4,765	23.00
64,610	91,530	9,719	30.00
91,530	134,603	17,795	37.50
134,603	—	33,947	46.50

Relief for losses. Individual taxpayers may carry losses forward for five years.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

Inheritance and gift tax is levied on all property bequeathed or donated by an individual who is a resident or deemed to be a resident of Curaçao at the time of death or donation. For individuals who are nonresidents at the time of death or donation, inheritance and gift tax is levied on real estate located in Curaçao only. The tax is payable by the heir or the recipient of the gift, regardless of his or her place of residence.

Inheritance and gift tax rates range from 2% to 24% of the value of the taxable estate or the donation, less deductions. The rates vary, depending on the applicable exemptions and the relationship of the recipient to the deceased or the donor. In general, the following rates apply.

Relationship of recipient	Rate (%)
Spouse, spousal equivalent, child or grandchild	2 to 6
Brother or sister (in law)	4 to 12
Parent or grandparent	3 to 9
Niece, nephew or grandchild of a brother or sister	6 to 18
Other	8 to 24

Notwithstanding the above, the tax rate is 25% for a donation from a resident to a private foundation or trust.

C. Social security contributions

All resident individuals must pay social security contributions. The contributions provide benefits under the AOV, the General Widows and Orphans Ordinance (AWW) and the General Insurance Extraordinary Sickness Ordinance (AVBZ). The Basic Illness Insurance (BVZ), which was amended 1 November 2014, partially replaces the old Illness Insurance (ZV). The ZV continues to exist in a significantly amended form. The ZV now requires the employer to contribute at a rate of 1.9% for employees with an annual income not exceeding the threshold ANG69,373.20, as determined by the Social Security Bank.

In principle, all Curaçao residents fall within the scope of the BVZ. However, in certain cases, an exemption may be requested (for example, for individuals who are privately insured for medical expenses with an insurance company that provides worldwide coverage and individuals who need a temporary residency permit to be admitted to Curaçao). Nonresidents are not subject to BVZ.

The BVZ mainly consists of the following two components:
- Income-based premium: 13.6% (pensioners, 6.5%), payable by employers at a rate of 9.3% and employees at a rate of 4.3%, up to income of ANG150,000
- Own-risk premium: ANG1 per prescription line

The total AOV/AWW contributions payable annually are 16% of earnings. In 2021, for AOV/AWW, employers contribute 9.5% of salary, up to a certain maximum amount of contributions per year (ANG9,500 for 2021) and employees contribute 6.5% of salary, up to a certain maximum amount of contributions per year (ANG6,500 for 2021). The maximum AOV premium income is ANG100,000. However, if the individual insured under the AOV has income exceeding ANG100,000 per year, an additional premium contribution of 1% is payable by the individual on an income in excess of ANG100,000. In principle, nonresidents are not subject to AOV/AWW.

For AVBZ, the following are the contributions:
- Employers: 0.5% of salary
- Employees: 1.5% of salary

- Self-employed persons: 2% of earnings
- Pensioners: 1.5% of pension income

The rates of contributions for AVBZ are applied to taxable income, up to a maximum amount (ANG501,089.11 for 2021). Only nonresidents who earn income from employment and are subject to wage tax in Curaçao are subject to AVBZ.

The rate of required disability insurance (OV) contributions for employees and self-employed individuals varies between 0.5% and 5%, depending on the applicable risk category. The contribution is fully payable by the employer. OV contributions are due on salaries up to a certain maximum amount (ANG5,907 per month for 2021).

Only nonresidents earning income from employment in Curaçao are covered by OV and ZV. Employers must pay the premiums for the employees.

In addition, employers must pay a severance contribution (cessantia) fee of ANG40 (2021 amount) per employee per year. Only nonresidents earning income from employment are subject to the cessantia.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Because the wage tax is a pre-levy to the income tax, employers must file wage withholding tax returns on a monthly basis. The wage tax return must be filed before the 16th day of the month following the month in which the salaries are paid to employees. For most employees, wage withholding tax is the final tax. The personal income tax returns for the calendar year must be filed within two months after the issuance of the tax return forms, unless extensions for filing are obtained. Any additional income tax to be paid is normally due within two months after the date of the final assessment.

Filing income tax return together with spouse. If both spouses earn income, married persons are taxed separately on the following types of income:
- Employment income
- Self-employment and business income
- Certain periodic allowances, including old-age pensions, alimony and disability allowances

Investment income, including rental income, dividends and interest on bonds, is included in the taxable income of the spouse who has the higher individual income or, if both spouses earn the same amount of individual income, in the taxable income of the older spouse. Personal deductions must be claimed by the spouse with the higher individual income, or if both spouses earn the same amount of individual income, by the older spouse.

Social security payments. Social security contributions are withheld by the employer and are declared in the wage tax returns. Individuals receiving other types of income must pay social security contributions within two months after the date of the assessment.

Filing inheritance tax returns. An inheritance tax return must be filed within six months after the date of death. A gift tax return must be filed within three months after the gift is made. Both inheritance and gift tax must be paid within two months after the date of assessment.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Curaçao has entered into double tax treaties with the Netherlands (including the BES-Islands) and Norway. The double tax treaty with the Netherlands entered into force on 1 December 2015. The Tax Regulation for the Kingdom of the Netherlands remains in force between Curaçao and Aruba and Curaçao and Sint Maarten. Curaçao's double tax treaties apply to taxes on income, capital, inheritances and gifts. If no double tax treaty applies, in general, the Tax Office allows a deduction of foreign taxes paid as expenses from taxable income.

Double tax treaties with Cuba, Jamaica, Malta, Qatar and the Seychelles have been signed, but they have not yet entered into force.

Negotiations for a double tax treaty with Venezuela are ongoing.

Curaçao has entered into tax information exchange agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Antigua and Barbuda
Argentina
Australia
Bermuda
British Virgin Islands*
Canada
Cayman Islands
Colombia*
Denmark
Faroe Islands
Finland
France
Greenland
Iceland
Mexico
New Zealand
St. Kitts and Nevis
St. Lucia
St. Vincent and the Grenadines
Spain
Sweden
United Kingdom
United States

* This treaty has not yet entered into force.

Effective from September 2015, Curaçao, in principle, automatically exchanges information with the United States based on an intergovernmental agreement with the United States regarding the Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act.

As of 2018, Curaçao automatically exchanges information under the Common Reporting Standard.

The Kingdom of the Netherlands has entered into many bilateral investment treaties that also apply to Curaçao.

Curaçao also signed the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development Convention on Mutual Administrative Assistance in Tax Matters.

F. Residency and working permits

In general, foreign individuals who wish to reside and work in Curaçao need residency and working permits. The conditions for obtaining such permits depend on the nationality of the individual. Special provisions apply to individuals holding a Dutch passport and individuals holding a US passport.

Wealthy individuals (Investors) who meet certain conditions are granted through a simplified procedure a residency permit known as an Investors Permit. The permit allows an Investor a legal stay in Curaçao of, in principle, up to three or five years, depending on the amount of investment.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are taxed on their worldwide profits or other benefits from a business, profits or other benefits from an office or employment, dividends, interest or discounts, pensions and any rental income arising from immovable property. Nonresidents are taxed only on their Cyprus-source income from employment exercised in Cyprus, a permanent establishment in Cyprus, rental of immovable property located in Cyprus and pensions from employment exercised in Cyprus.

An individual is resident in Cyprus if he or she is present in Cyprus for an aggregate of more than 183 days in any calendar year.

The definition of tax resident also includes an individual who does not stay in any other state for one or more periods exceeding in aggregate 183 days in the same tax year and who is not considered a resident for tax purposes in any other state in the same tax year, provided that the individual meets all of the following criteria:

- He or she stays in Cyprus for at least 60 days in the tax year.
- He or she exercises any business in Cyprus and/or is employed in Cyprus and/or holds an office for a person tax resident in Cyprus at any time during the tax year.
- He or she maintains a permanent residence in Cyprus that is owned or rented by him or her.

Domiciled in Cyprus. An individual is considered to be domiciled in Cyprus if he or she has a domicile of origin as defined in the Wills and Succession Law or if he or she has been a tax resident of Cyprus for at least 17 out of the 20 years prior to the tax year. Nevertheless, the following individuals are not considered to be domiciled in Cyprus:

- An individual who has obtained and maintained a domicile of choice outside Cyprus in accordance with the Wills and Succession Law, provided that he or she has not been a tax resident of Cyprus for 20 consecutive years preceding the tax year.

- An individual who was not a tax resident of Cyprus for a period of 20 consecutive years prior to 16 July 2015.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. For an individual tax resident of Cyprus, tax is levied on all gains or profits from any office or employment exercised in Cyprus or abroad. Foreign-source income from employment exercised abroad for an employer not resident in Cyprus or for a permanent establishment outside Cyprus of an employer resident in Cyprus, for a total aggregate period of more than 90 days in any calendar year, is exempted. This is known as the "90-day rule."

For an individual who is a non-tax resident of Cyprus, tax is levied on gains or profits from any office or employment exercised in Cyprus only.

Taxable income from employment includes the estimated value of any accommodation and other allowances from employment, whether paid in cash or in kind (for example, the private use of a saloon car [a sedan]).

Tax is levied on the benefit in kind related to loans or other financial facilities granted to an individual (either tax resident or non-tax resident), director or shareholder (including the spouse and relatives up to the second degree of kindred). Such benefit is assessed as being equal to 9% per annum, calculated on the monthly balance of the loan or financial facility outstanding, less any actual interest charged.

Nonresidents of Cyprus who take up employment in Cyprus may deduct the lower of 20% of their salary or EUR8,550. This deduction applies for a period of five years beginning from 1 January of the year following the year of beginning of employment (provided the employment began during or after 2012). This deduction applies in relation to employment that commenced up to and until the 2025 tax year inclusive.

Nonresidents of Cyprus who take up employment in Cyprus after 1 January 2012 and have remuneration of more than EUR100,000 may be allowed a 50% deduction from their employment income. This deduction applies for the first 10 years of employment. The 50% deduction is not available to individuals who began their employment on or after 1 January 2015 and meet one of the following conditions:
- They were tax residents of Cyprus for a period of three of the five years preceding the year of beginning of employment.
- They were tax residents of Cyprus in the year preceding the year of beginning of employment.

The Tax Department allows individuals to claim only one of the above two deductions during a tax year.

Self-employment and business income. Residents are subject to income tax on self-employment income. Nonresidents are subject to income tax on self-employment income received from the carrying on of a business in Cyprus.

Gross income derived from Cyprus by nonresident professionals, artists, athletes and entertainers is subject to 10% final withholding tax.

Rental income. Residents are subject to income tax on rent received from immovable property located anywhere in the world. Nonresidents are subject to income tax on rent received from immovable property located in Cyprus. Rent received by residents who are also considered to be domiciled in Cyprus are also subject to the Special Contribution to the Defence Fund (SDC) at a rate of 3%. The SDC is applied on 75% of the gross rent receivable.

Investment income. Dividends and interest received are exempt from income tax.

Dividends received by resident individuals who are considered to be domiciled in Cyprus are subject to the SDC at a rate of 17%. Interest received by resident individuals who are considered to be domiciled in Cyprus is subject to the SDC at a rate of 30%.

Profits from the sale of securities are exempt from income tax both for individuals and legal persons (also, see Capital Gains).

Withholding tax is not imposed on dividends and interest paid to nonresidents. Royalties and premiums derived from Cyprus by nonresidents from sources in Cyprus are subject to a 10% withholding tax. Income received by nonresidents from film rentals is subject to a 5% withholding tax. Withholding taxes on income paid to nonresidents are final taxes.

Pension income. Pensions received by residents for employment exercised outside Cyprus may be taxed at a special tax rate of 5% for amounts exceeding EUR3,420.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are considered compensation and are taxed in the same manner as income from employment.

Capital gains. Capital Gains Tax is imposed at a rate of 20% on profits from the disposal of the following:

- Immovable property located in Cyprus
- Shares of companies that own immovable property located in Cyprus
- Shares of companies that either directly or indirectly participate in a company or companies that own immovable property located in Cyprus if at least 50% of the market value of such shares is derived from the relevant property

The disposal of shares listed on a recognized stock exchange is exempt from Capital Gains Tax.

Trading profits derived from disposal of shares of companies that directly or indirectly own immovable property in Cyprus are subject to Capital Gains Tax if such profits are exempt under the Income Tax Law.

For the disposal of shares of companies that directly or indirectly own immovable property in Cyprus, the disposal proceeds subject to Capital Gains Tax are restricted to the market value of the immovable property owned directly or indirectly by the company whose shares are sold.

For a disposal between related parties, the disposal proceeds subject to CGT are determined by reference to the market value of the property sold at the date of disposal.

An exemption from Capital Gains Tax is granted with respect to gains from the disposal of immovable property acquired between 17 July 2015 and 31 December 2016 if all of the following conditions are satisfied:
- The property consists of land, buildings or land and buildings.
- The property is acquired from an independent third party.
- The property is not acquired through an exchange of property or through a donation or gift.

The gain is the difference between the sale proceeds and the original cost of the property, adjusted for increases in the cost-of-living index. No other assets are subject to capital gains tax.

The following lifetime exemptions from tax on capital gains derived from property sales are available to individuals.

Type of property	Amount of exemption EUR
Ordinary property	17,086
Agricultural land	25,629
Private residence	85,430

Deductions

Deductible expenses. The range of deductible expenses allowed in Cyprus is limited. Membership fees for trade and professional organizations and documented donations to approved charitable institutions are fully deductible.

Personal deductions and allowances. The following are the principal deductions and allowances permitted.

Deduction or allowance	Allowable amount
Contributions to social insurance and other approved funds (for example, pension funds, provident funds and medical funds); the total contributions to the social insurance and other approved funds are restricted to 1/5 of taxable income)	Various
Life insurance premiums paid (certain restrictions exist)	Various

Business deductions. All expenses incurred wholly and exclusively in the production of taxable income are deductible. In addition, the following allowances are given for depreciation and amortization:
- Plant and machinery: A straight-line allowance of 10% a year is given on most capital expenditure, except expenditure on certain automobiles. The allowance is increased to 20% for additions in 2012 through 2018.
- Industrial buildings: A straight-line allowance of 4% a year is available for industrial buildings. This allowance is increased to 7% for additions in 2012 through 2018.
- Disposal of assets: On the disposal of assets other than buildings, if the sales proceeds are less than the remaining depreciable base, a further allowance is granted, up to the difference.

If sale proceeds exceed the depreciable base, the excess (up to the amount of allowances received) is included in taxable income.

Rates. Income derived by Cyprus residents, other than capital gains income, is taxed at the following rates.

Taxable income EUR	Tax rate %	Tax due EUR	Cumulative tax due EUR
0 to 19,500	0	0	0
19,500 to 28,000	20	1,700	1,700
28,000 to 36,300	25	2,075	3,775
36,300 to 60,000	30	7,110	10,885
Over 60,000	35	—	—

Spouses are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

Employment and business income received by nonresidents, as well as rental income, is taxed at the rates that apply to residents.

Relief for losses. Operating losses may be carried forward for five years from the end of the year of assessment.

B. Other taxes

Estate and gift taxes. Cyprus does not impose estate tax or gift tax.

Special contribution for employees, self-employed individuals and pensioners in the private sector. The Special Contribution for the Employees, Self Employed and Pensioners in the Private Sector Law has been abolished as of the 2017 tax year.

C. Social security

Under the Cypriot Social Insurance Scheme, contributions to the Social Insurance Fund are made monthly on the gross emoluments of each employee. As of 1 January 2019, employers and employees must make equal social security contributions at a rate of 8.3% on monthly compensation up to the maximum monthly insurable amount, which is currently EUR4,784 (yearly maximum insurable amount of EUR57,408 The employer is responsible for payment of both contributions.

The employer is also responsible for contributing 1.2% to the Redundancy Fund, 0.5% to the Human Resource Development Authority Fund and 2% to the Social Cohesion Fund out of the monthly gross emoluments of the employees. Except for the contributions to the Social Cohesion Fund, the others are capped to the maximum insurable amount as stated above.

Self-employed individuals must contribute to the social security scheme at a rate of 15.6% on monthly income. Minimum and maximum monthly incomes of self-employed individuals are classified according to the type of business, profession or vocation.

Foreign nationals working in Cyprus must contribute to the Cyprus social security system unless either of the following applies:

- They can claim exemption according to bilateral agreements entered into by Cyprus (applicable for employees working in Cyprus for periods of approximately up to three years).

Normally, coverage for one to two years is permitted. However, the two-year period can be extended if the competent institutions of the two countries give their consent. Cyprus has entered into bilateral agreements with Australia, Austria, Canada, the Czech Republic, Egypt, Greece, the Netherlands, Quebec, Serbia, the Slovak Republic, Switzerland, Syria and the United Kingdom.
- They are nationals of the European Union (EU), European Economic Area (EEA) or Switzerland who are in Cyprus on secondment. Normally, coverage for up to two years is permitted. Such individuals should apply for a certificate of coverage issued by the social insurance authorities of their home jurisdictions in order to be exempted from social insurance contributions in Cyprus.

The bilateral agreements that Cyprus has concluded with EU member states have been replaced by the EU Regulations 883/04 and 987/09 which coordinate the social security systems of the member states.

D. General Healthcare System

The General Healthcare System (GHS) is applicable as of 1 March 2019 (Phase A). Based on the provisions of the GHS law, employers must withhold from their employees' salaries relevant contributions and remit these together with their contributions to the social insurance department. In addition, the law provides that persons who are making interest, dividend or rental payments to individuals are also obliged (conditionally) to make a withholding with respect to GHS contributions and remit these contributions to the Tax Department. GHS contributions are made at the following rates, which are effective from 1 March 2020.

	Rate (%)*
Every employee on his or her emoluments	2.65
Every employer on his/her employee's emoluments	2.90
Every self-employed on his or her emoluments	4.00
On the pension income of every pensioner	2.65
On the emoluments of any person who holds or exercises an office	2.65
Any legal or physical person who, or the government that, is responsible for paying the emoluments of an officer, on the emoluments of the officer	2.90
A person earning income such as rental, dividends and interest income	2.65
The fund of the government on the emoluments and pensions of the persons of the first, third and fourth items above	4.70

* For a three-month period (April 2020 to June 2020), reduced contribution rates applied.

If the sum of an employee's emoluments, self-employed emoluments, pension income, emoluments of any person who holds or exercises an office and the income from dividends, interest and rent is in excess of EUR180,000, the amount of income on which the contribution is calculated is capped at EUR180,000.

The EUR180,000 is calculated cumulatively in the following order:

- Emoluments from employment
- Emoluments from self-employment
- Emoluments from positions as officers
- Pensions
- Dividends, interest and rental income

E. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Cyprus is the same as the calendar year.

As of the 2021 tax year, all individuals who have taxable income in Cyprus must electronically file a personal tax return by 31 July of the year following the tax year (that is, the tax return deadline for 2021 is the 31 July 2022). The Council of Ministers has the power to issue a decree regarding the individuals who can be exempted from this obligation. Before the 2021 tax year, resident and nonresident individuals whose gross income does not exceed EUR19,500 were not required to file tax returns.

The employer should withhold the relevant income tax from employees' salaries through the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) process. Income tax must be withheld on a monthly basis and remitted to the Income Tax Department of Cyprus. In addition, the employer must withhold the relevant social insurance and GHS contributions of the employee and remit them to the Social Insurance Department of Cyprus together with the relevant employer's social insurance and GHS contributions by the end of the month following the month of assessment.

Each individual who is considered to be self-employed but has no obligation to submit audited financial statements (on the basis that the individual has turnover of less than EUR70,000), must file electronically a personal income tax return by 31 July of the year following the tax year. The final personal tax of an individual must be settled by the same date.

Self-employed individuals preparing audited financial statements must submit electronically their personal tax return within 15 months after the end of the tax year (that is, the 2021 tax return should be filed electronically by 31 March 2023). The final tax for self-employed individuals preparing audited financial statements is due by 1 August of the year following the tax year.

Overdue tax is subject to interest at a rate of 1.75% per year (rate applicable as of 1 January 2020). In addition, any person failing to pay the tax due by the payment due date is liable to a monetary charge of 5% on the tax due date. An additional monetary charge of 5% is imposed on the tax due if the tax due is not settled within two months from the deadline for payment of the relevant tax liability.

F. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Residents are entitled to a credit for foreign taxes paid, up to the amount of Cyprus tax payable on the same income, regardless of whether a tax treaty applies.

Cyprus has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Andorra	Hungary	Russian Federation
Armenia	Iceland	San Marino
Austria	India	Saudi Arabia
Azerbaijan	Iran	Serbia
Bahrain	Ireland	Seychelles
Barbados	Italy	Singapore
Belarus	Jersey	Slovak Republic
Bulgaria	Kazkahstan	Slovenia
Belgium	Kuwait	South Africa
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Kyrgyzstan	Spain
Canada	Latvia	Sweden
China Mainland	Lebanon	Switzerland
Czech Republic	Lithuania	Syria
Denmark	Luxembourg	Thailand
Egypt	Malta	Ukraine
Estonia	Mauritius	USSR (a)
Ethiopia	Moldova	United Arab Emirates
Finland	Montenegro	United Kingdom
France	Netherlands	United States
Georgia	Norway	Uzbekistan
Germany	Poland	Yugoslavia (b)
Greece	Portugal
Guernsey	Qatar
	Romania

(a) Cyprus honors the USSR treaty with respect to republics of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS).
(b) Cyprus generally honors the treaty with the former Yugoslavia.

These agreements usually allow expatriates to obtain credits against taxes levied in the country where the taxpayer resides. In general, the taxpayer pays no more than the higher of the two rates.

G. Visas

Visas are not required for citizens of an EU member state, Iceland, Liechtenstein, Norway or Switzerland. EU nationals may enter Cyprus with their national identity card if it contains a photo identification.

Citizens of countries on a list of countries do not need a visa for a stay of up to 90 days if they are bona fide visitors and if Cyprus has entered into bilateral agreements with the citizens' countries.

The categories of visas are discussed below.

Short-stay or travel visas (multiple-entry visas). Short-stay or travel visas (multiple-entry visas) allow aliens who seek entry to Cyprus for reasons other than immigration to enter once or several times. The duration of each visit may not exceed three months in any half-year, beginning from the date of first entry. In general, this visa may be issued once or several times. For aliens who need to travel frequently to Cyprus, such as for business, short-stay visas may be issued for several visits if the total length of these visits does not exceed three months in any half-year.

Airport transit visas. Airport transit visas are required for aliens of certain countries. They allow these aliens to pass through the international transit area of Cypriot airports without actually entering the national territory of Cyprus, during a stop-over or transfer between two stages of an international flight. The requirement to have this visa is an exception to the general right to travel without a visa through Cyprus. Nationals from Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Congo, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Ghana, Iran, Iraq, Nigeria, Pakistan, Somalia, Sri Lanka and Turkey are required to possess an airport transit visa. Citizens of these countries are exempt from the airport transit visa requirement if they are holders of residence permits of an EU or EEA member, Andorra, Canada, Japan, Monaco, San Marino or the United States.

Group visas. Group visas are transit visas or visas limited to a maximum stay of 30 days that may be attached to a group passport unless the national law provides otherwise. They may be issued to groups of aliens formed prior to the decision to travel, provided that the members of the group enter, stay and leave Cyprus as a group. Group visas may be issued to groups of between 5 and 50 people.

H. Employment in Cyprus

Non-EU nationals. Non-EU nationals (third-country nationals) can work and reside in Cyprus if they register and obtain the required permits. Eligible companies of foreign interests (International Business Companies, or IBCs) can register with the Civil Registry and Migration Department (CRMD) and follow a simplified procedure for employing third-country nationals in Cyprus.

Companies of foreign interests can qualify as IBCs and accordingly apply for residence and employment permits for third-country national employees if it can be proved that the majority of the company's ultimate shareholders are foreigners and if certain other conditions are met.

Non-EU nationals with a monthly gross salary exceeding EUR2,000 per month who intend to work for an approved IBC can easily obtain a temporary resident permit allowing them to work in Cyprus for an initial period of up to two years that can be further extended.

For individuals who may become employees of IBCs with a monthly gross salary below EUR2,000 or may become employees of non-IBCs, an additional step in the process is required. They must obtain the consent of the labor office because such employees are considered to be unskilled labor and it has to be proved that the company cannot find properly qualified employees for that position who are Cypriots or EU residents residing in Cyprus. This may be a lengthy process with an uncertain outcome depending on the specific job description. After the required documentation is submitted and the approval of the labor office is obtained, the same process for other third-country nationals is followed. The labor office usually provides its approval for one year, which can be extended or renewed up to a maximum of four years, but certain categories of employment such as agricultural laborers or cooks can be renewed without being subject to the maximum years' limitation.

For individuals intending to be employed in Cyprus who need a visa to enter the country, an entry permit can be issued instead of a visa after the submission of the required documents. Within three months after the date of issuance of the entry permit, the employees must submit the remaining documents so that the CRMD can issue the residency card.

Temporary residence and work permits are issued approximately two to three weeks after the foreign national submits the required documents (this only applies for employees under the IBC regime; for employees under general employment procedures, the examination period can take up to four months). After the registration is completed, the employee is given a temporary residence permit, which is now in the form of a plastic card. The employee can travel in and out of Cyprus for the duration of the permit, provided that he or she is not outside Cyprus for a continuous period exceeding three months. If the employee is absent from Cyprus for more than three continuous months, the permit is canceled.

Intra-corporate transfers. An intra-corporate transfer is considered to be a temporary secondment for occupational or training purposes of a third-country national who, at the time of application for an intra-corporate transferee permit, meets all of the following criteria:

- He or she does not reside in an EU member state.
- He or she is transferred from an undertaking established in a non-EU member state to an entity belonging to the undertaking or to the same group of undertakings that is established in an EU member state.
- He or she is bound by a work contract prior to and during the transfer and has the right to mobility between host entities established in one or several second EU member states.

The procedures for entry, stay and work in Cyprus in the context of an intra-corporate transfer depend on whether Cyprus is the first or second EU member state.

In general, the application for an intra-corporate transferee permit must be submitted to the authorities of the EU member state where the first stay takes place. If the first stay is not the longest, the application must be submitted to the authorities of the EU member state where the longest overall stay is to take place during the transfer (first EU member state).

The application for an entry permit is submitted when the assignee is abroad by the company in Cyprus (employer) at the central offices of the Civil Registry and Migration Department in Nicosia.

If the application is approved, an intra-corporate transferee residence permit is issued for the assignee, which is in a card format. Depending on the merits of each individual case, the maximum duration of the permit can be the following:

- Manager: three years or equal to the duration of the transfer, if shorter
- Specialist: three years or equal to the duration of the transfer, if shorter
- Trainee Employee: one year or equal to the duration of the transfer, if shorter

The inter-corporate transferee permit entitles the assignee to work in any company in Cyprus belonging to the same group of companies. On the permit, the main employer is indicated.

The procedures for the entry, residence and work permit when Cyprus is considered as the second member state (that is, when the assignee will reside and work in Cyprus for a shorter period than in another EU member state) depend on the duration of the transfer. For the mobility to be possible, the assignee must hold a valid intra-corporate transferee permit issued by the first EU member state, covering the entire duration of the mobility.

If the mobility does not exceed 90 days within a period of 180 days, it is a short-term mobility. In this case, no permit is issued by the Cypriot authorities and the assignee having the intra-corporate transfer permit issued by the first EU member state may reside and work in Cyprus, if the conditions of the legislation are met. During the short-term mobility, the assignee can work in any company in Cyprus belonging to the same group of companies.

If the transfer of the assignee relates to a period exceeding 90 days, it is considered to be long-term mobility. In this case, the assignee must apply for and obtain a long-term mobility permit (card format) from Cyprus and meet the provisions of the legislation. The application for a long-term mobility permit may be submitted when the assignee is abroad or when he or she is in Cyprus for short-term mobility. It is submitted by the company in Cyprus (employer) at the central offices of the Civil Registry and Migration Department. The long-term mobility permit entitles the assignee to work for any company in Cyprus belonging to the same group of companies. The main employer in Cyprus appears on the permit.

EU nationals. Nationals from EU member states have the right to enter Cyprus with a valid EU passport or identification card without having to register on arrival. If they wish to stay for more than three months or begin employment, they must apply at the CRMD for the issuance of registration certificate (yellow slip) within one month after the expiration of the three-month period.

EU citizens and their family members can apply for the issuance of a permanent residence certificate after a five-year period of uninterrupted legal residence in Cyprus.

I. Permanent residence by investment

In accordance with the provisions of Regulation 6(2) of the Aliens and Immigration Regulations, the Minister of Interior, having notified the Council of Ministers, has decided to issue an immigration permit to third-country applicants, in cases of investments that meet the requirements of this policy.

The applicant must meet one of the investment criteria in Section 1.1 of the Regulation, as well as the quality criteria in Section 2. The money that will be used for the investment must be proven to have been transferred to Cyprus from abroad.

Investment criteria. Under Section 1.1, the applicant must invest at least EUR300,000 in one of the following investment categories:

- Investment in a house or apartment: Purchase of a house or apartment from a development company, which should concern a first sale of at least EUR300,000 (plus value-added tax).
- Investment in real estate (excluding houses and apartments): Purchase of other types of real estate such as offices, shops, hotels or related estate developments or a combination of these with a total value of EUR300,000. The purchase of an interest can be the result of a resale.
- Investment in a Cyprus company's share capital, with business activities and personnel in Cyprus: Investment worth EUR300,000 in the share capital of a company registered in Cyprus, based in and operating in Cyprus and having a proven physical presence in Cyprus and employing at least five people.
- Investment in units of a Cyprus Investment Organization of Collective Investments (forms of Alternative Investment Fund with Unlimited Number of Persons [AIF], Alternative Investment Fund with Limited Number of Persons [AIFLNP] or Registered Alternative Investment Fund [RAIF]): Investment worth EUR300,000 in units of Cyprus Investment Organization Collective Investments.

Any alienation by the holder of the immigration permit of the investment made without its immediate replacement with another of the same or greater value that meets the conditions set out in the present procedure, will result in the cancellation of the immigration permit based on the provisions of Regulation 6 of the Aliens and Immigration Regulations.

Under Section 1.2 of the Regulation, the applicant should, in addition to the investment under Section 1.1, be able to prove that he or she has at his disposal a secure annual income of at least EUR30,000. This annual income increases by EUR5,000 for each dependent family member and EUR8,000 for each dependent parent (of the applicant and/or his or her spouse). This income should derive from abroad and may include salaries or wages, pensions, dividends from shares, fixed deposits, rents and certain other types of income in cases in which the applicant chooses to invest as stated in the first item above. In calculating the total amount of income, the spouse's income may also be taken into account.

In cases where the applicant chooses to invest as stated in the second, third and fourth items above, his or her total income or part of it may also come from sources coming from activities in Cyprus.

Quality criteria. Under Section 2 of the Regulation, the following are the quality criteria:

- The applicant and his or her spouse must submit a clean criminal record certificate from their country of residence, or from Cyprus in the case that they reside in Cyprus, and generally they should not be considered as a threat in any way to public order or public security in Cyprus.

- The applicant and his or her spouse must confirm that they do not intend to undertake any sort of employment in Cyprus with the exception of their employment as directors in a company in which they have chosen to invest under this policy.
- In cases in which the investment does not concern the company's share capital, the applicant and/or his or her spouse are allowed to be shareholders in companies registered in Cyprus, and the income from the dividends derived from such companies may not be considered as an obstacle for the purposes of obtaining the immigration permit. In such companies, they may also hold the position of an unpaid director.
- In cases in which the applicant chooses to invest as stated in the second, third and fourth items stated in Investment criteria, he or she should provide evidence regarding his or her accommodation in Cyprus (for example, title of ownership or contract of sale and proof of payment for the property or rental agreement).

J. Family and personal considerations

Family members. For dependents of the employee of an IBC, an additional application form (MFR1) needs to be completed and filed for their registration under the family reunification section. In addition, the dependents of the employee may apply for employment in Cyprus but the procedure regarding the approval from the labor office (see Section G) needs to be followed. In this case, the approval from the labor office may be obtained more easily because the person who applies is dependent of an employee of an IBC.

For dependents of employees of non-IBCs, they may enter and reside in Cyprus as visitors. The family reunification section does not apply.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally in Cyprus with their home country driver's license for one year unless they are resident in Cyprus, in which case they must exchange their driver's license for a Cyprus driver's license. To obtain a Cyprus driver's license, applicants must take an oral exam on traffic laws and a practical driving test.

Cyprus has driver's license reciprocity with most other countries.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Czech residents are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on Czech-source income only. There is no special regime applicable to Czech tax nonresidents. However, Czech nonresidents may not qualify for certain tax-deductible items and tax reliefs.

The term “resident” includes any person residing in the Czech Republic for at least 183 days within a calendar year or having a residence (permanent home) in the Czech Republic. Employment income received by a nonresident whose employment activity in the Czech Republic does not exceed 183 days during any 12 successive calendar-month period is exempt from tax in the Czech Republic if it is paid by a foreign entity without a permanent establishment in the Czech Republic and if no economic employment exists in the Czech Republic.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Employment income includes salaries, wages, bonuses, other compensation of a similar nature and most benefits in kind. Employment income also includes fees paid to directors of private companies, shareholders of private limited companies and limited partners of limited partnerships for work performed for the company or partnership, regardless of whether their position with the entity is one of authority.

Effective from 2021, the tax base for employment income equals the gross employment income.

Individuals assigned by a foreign employer to the Czech Republic who continue to be employed and paid by the foreign employer, and who perform work for and under the instruction of a Czech resident individual or legal entity (the so-called "economic employer"), are deemed to be employed by the Czech resident individual or legal entity, and their employment income is subject to monthly payroll tax withholding.

Self-employment and business income. Taxable self-employment and business income consists of income from business activities and professional services, less deductible expenses. Authors, lecturers, athletes and artists are considered providers of professional services. Net income from business activities and professional services is subject to tax with other income at the rates set forth in Rates.

Investment income. Czech-source interest income derived from personal investments is subject to a 15% final withholding tax. However, if the source of the interest income is part of the individual's business activities, the interest income is taxed in the individual's tax return. Other investment income, including dividends and limited partners' shares of partnership profits, is subject to a 15% final withholding tax. Nonrecurring income (for example, arbitration awards) is generally taxed with other ordinary income at the rates set forth in Rates.

A 35% final withholding tax applies to the abovementioned types of income (other than income from lease-purchase contracts) subject to final withholding tax for tax residents of countries that have not entered into a valid double tax treaty or treaty on exchange of information with the Czech Republic.

Dividend and interest income derived by a resident from foreign sources is taxed in the individual's tax return. A separate tax base with a rate of 15% applies to selected types of non-Czech investment income (for example, dividends and interest income).

For the rates applicable to certain types of income of nonresidents, see Rates.

Rental income. Income derived from the rental of immovable and movable assets is taxed in the annual tax return together with other types of income at the rates set forth in Rates.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains derived from the sale of property acquired for the purpose of resale or exchange for profit are taxed as ordinary income at the rates set forth in Rates. Capital gains realized from the sale of real estate or personal property not acquired for resale are generally exempt from income tax if the minimum required holding period is met. The minimum required holding periods are 12 months for automobiles, 2 years for a primary residence and 10 years for other immovable property. Other holding periods apply to other types of personal property.

Effective from 2014, income from sale of securities is exempt from personal income tax if the total gross income from the sale of securities (without taking into account costs or deductions) does not exceed CZK100,000 in a calendar year. In addition, if the gross income from the sale of securities exceeds CZK100,000 on an annual basis, income from the sale of securities is exempt from tax if the securities have been held for a period of more than three years. This rule applies to securities acquired after 31 December 2013. For securities acquired on or before that date, the prior rule applies. Under the prior rule, income from the sale of securities is exempt from tax if the securities have been held for a period of more than 6 months and if the individual had a direct share of less than 5% in the company in the 24-month period preceding the sale.

In general, capital losses derived from the sale of securities cannot be carried forward, and they can be offset only against gains derived from the sale of other securities during the same tax period. The same rule applies to movable assets or immovable property. As a result, gains derived from the sales of such assets can be offset only against losses derived from the sales of the same types of assets.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. No specific law in the Czech Republic addresses the tax treatment of stock options.

In general, employer-provided stock options do not result in a taxable event until the option is exercised if the following conditions are met:
- The exercise price equals the fair market value of the underlying stock at the date of grant.
- The option is not transferable.
- The option is subject to a suspensive condition and is capable of lapsing before it vests (for example, if the option holder ceases to be an employee).

However, this treatment is not a settled matter, particularly whether the taxable event occurs at grant, vesting or exercise. Readers are encouraged to consult with professional advisors on this matter. The taxation of stock options must be examined on a case-by-case basis.

The difference between the exercise price and the fair market value of the stock at the date of exercise is generally taxed as employment income at the exercise date, at the same tax rate applicable to other employment income. Capital gains derived from the sale of shares by an individual are taxed as described in Capital gains and losses. If the capital gains are not exempt from income tax, the excess of the sale proceeds over the exercise price is taxable, at the rate set forth in Rates, in the year of disposal.

Business deductions. In general, expenses and costs are considered to be deductible for tax purposes if they are incurred to generate, assure and maintain taxable income. In addition, the law explicitly provides that certain expenses are deductible (for example, depreciation) and that certain expenses are not deductible (for example, representation expenses).

Instead of deducting actual expenses, taxpayers engaged in certain business activities may choose to deduct a percentage of gross revenues as lump-sum costs. The percentage of lump-sum costs varies depending on the individual's business activity, as indicated in the following table.

Activity	Deductible rate (%)
Agriculture, forestry, fishing, farming and craft	80
Trade license income	60
Licensing intellectual property rights (inventions and copyrights), sole proprietorships and other business income	40
Rental	30

The lump-sum costs for the activities listed above are limited to the following amounts:
• 80% deductible rate: CZK1,600,000
• 60% deductible rate: CZK1,200,000
• 40% deductible rate: CZK800,000
• 30% deductible rate: CZK600,000

Rates. Taxable income of residents and nonresidents, other than income subject to withholding tax or included in a separate tax base, is taxed by progressive taxation. The personal income tax rate is 15% for the tax base not exceeding CZK1,701,168 per year (for 2021). The tax rate for the tax base above this threshold is 23%.

For the purposes of monthly payroll tax calculations, the monthly employment income below the monthly threshold of CZK141,764 (in 2021) is subject to a 15% tax rate. Income above the threshold is subject to a tax rate of 23%.

Royalties and fees for professional services, such as directors' fees and payments under management or consultancy agreements, derived by nonresidents are subject to a 15% withholding tax. Nonresidents' rental income is subject to a 5% final withholding tax on lease-purchase contracts and to a 15% final withholding tax on other rental income of movable property. These rates may be reduced under applicable tax treaties.

Tax reliefs. Czech tax residents may subtract tax reliefs from their annual tax liability. The amounts of these reliefs for 2021 are described below.

The annual personal tax relief is CZK27,840 (CZK30,840 as of 2022). In addition, tax relief of CZK24,840 is granted for a spouse living in the same household with the taxpayer, unless the spouse's annual income exceeds CZK68,000.

Additional personal tax relief of CZK2,520 is granted for partially disabled persons and of CZK5,040 for totally disabled persons.

Tax relief of CZK15,204 is granted for the first dependent child. If an individual has more children, the tax relief for the second child is CZK22,320, and the tax relief for the third and each additional child is CZK27,840.

The tax reliefs, except for the personal tax relief, are available to Czech tax residents. Also, these are available to tax residents of European Union (EU) countries, Iceland and Norway if their Czech-source income accounts for at least 90% of their total annual income. To apply the tax reliefs, Czech tax nonresidents must submit the official confirmation of the worldwide income provided by the foreign tax authorities.

Relief for losses. Losses incurred in self-employment or rental activities may be carried forward for five years. Effective from July 2020, losses may also be utilized in the two tax periods preceding the period in which the loss is incurred.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

Effective from 2014, inheritance and gift taxes are incorporated in the income tax; that is, the same basic rules apply to the taxation of gifts. In general, Czech residents are subject to tax on their worldwide gifts, and nonresidents are subject to tax on Czech-source gifts only.

The following groups of gifts are exempt from tax:
- Gifts received from lineal relatives, a spouse, minor relatives, such as brothers and sisters, lineal relatives of a spouse, children's spouses, nieces, uncles and aunts
- Gifts received from persons who lived with the transferor longer than one year in one household
- Property of a beneficiary that has been allocated to a trust fund by any of the persons mentioned above
- Gifts received occasionally up to the amount of CZK15,000 per year

All taxpayers are exempt from inheritance tax.

C. Social security

Contributions. Social security and health insurance contributions are paid by both the employer and the employee on employment income at the following rates.

	Employer %	Employee %	Total %
Social security
Old-age pension	21.5	6.5	28
Sickness	2.1	—	2.1
Unemployment	1.2	—	1.2
Health insurance	9.0	4.5	13.5

The maximum assessment base for health insurance contributions was canceled, effective from 2013. The second pension insurance pillar was canceled, effective from 2016.

The maximum assessment base for social security contributions equals 48 times the monthly average salary. For 2021, the maximum annual assessment base for social security contributions is CZK1,701,168. Income above the limit is not subject to social security contributions, with certain exceptions for situations in which the individual has multiple employers during the year. In such circumstances, the maximum assessment base applies to each employer separately. However, the employee remains subject to one maximum assessment base.

EU social security legislation and totalization agreements. As a member state of the EU, the Czech Republic is bound by the EU Social Security Regulations (currently applicable to all member states of the European Economic Area (EEA) and Switzerland) and other EU law. In addition, to prevent double social security taxation and to assure benefit coverage, the Czech Republic has entered into totalization agreements with several non-EU jurisdictions, including Albania, Australia, Belarus, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Canada, Chile, India, Israel, Japan, Korea (South), Moldova, Montenegro, North Macedonia, Quebec, the Russian Federation, Serbia, Syria, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine and the United States.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year for individuals is the calendar year. Individual tax returns must be filed by 1 April of the following year. Extensions may be granted until 1 July. By additional application, the deadline may be extended to 1 November for Czech tax resident individuals who must include foreign-source income in their Czech tax return. The tax is due by the deadline for filing the tax return.

Czech employers must withhold monthly payroll tax advances from all compensation paid to their legal or deemed (economic) employees.

Joint taxation of married couples is not available in the Czech Republic.

Effective from 2015, individuals must submit a notification of tax-exempt income exceeding CZK5 million received after 1 January 2015 to the Czech tax authorities. Such income must be reported to the tax authorities by the deadline for filing the tax return. Fines of up to 15% of the tax-exempt income can be levied for failing to meet the obligation. Individuals who are not required to file a tax return must also file this notification.

F. Immigration requirements

Foreigners coming from EU and non-EU countries must satisfy immigration obligations.

Non-EU nationals. Non-EU nationals intending to stay in the Czech Republic for a period up to 90 days can apply for a short-term visa (also called a Schengen visa). The short-term visa can be granted for one or multiple entries. It is processed by a Czech embassy or consulate in about two weeks.

Citizens of countries under a Schengen visa waiver program may enter and travel within the Schengen Area freely according to a "90/180 rule"; that is, they can stay in the Czech Republic/Schengen area for a maximum of 90 days within any 180-day period. The visa waiver program applies only for travels of a nonprofit nature. Non-EU citizens interested in a short-term employment or assignment in the Czech Republic should apply for a work permit and a short-term work visa, unless they meet certain criteria to avoid this obligation.

For all non-EU nationals, a longer stay than 90 days in a 180-day period is possible only with a long-term visa or relevant residence permit (see Long-term visa and Employee Card below and ICT and Blue Card in Section G). A visa or residence permit is issued for a single purpose, such as for business, studies or employment. A foreign national working in the Czech Republic without a visa or residence permit and/or relevant work permit may be subject to deportation, and significant fines can be assessed on Czech companies if the foreign national performs work without the respective permit.

Long-term visa and Employee Card. A long-term visa for a stay exceeding 90 days is issued based on an application filed at a Czech embassy or consulate abroad. The process usually takes up to three months.

The long-term visa can be issued for a period of up to one year. If the purpose of the visit remains the same, the stay in the Czech Republic may be extended. The visa is then replaced by a residence permit that can be issued for a period of up to two years and may be renewed repeatedly.

Non-EU nationals intending to work in the Czech Republic must apply for an Employee Card, which is granted by the Czech Ministry of Interior.

The Employee Card has two forms. The dual version combines a work permit and residence permit and is intended for all non-EU nationals employed by a Czech entity. The non-dual version of the Employee Card needs to be supported by the work permit granted by the Czech Labour Office and is intended mainly for the assigned non-EU individuals without an employment contract with a Czech entity. The government processing can take up to six months. However, this overall processing time may be prolonged if available appointments are lacking for employee card application filings at the Czech embassy or consulate abroad. The Employee Card in both forms can be valid for up to two years and can be further extended in the Czech Republic.

Health insurance requirements. For short-term stays (up to 90 days), foreigners must arrange travel health insurance to cover any medical costs and expenses that might arise in connection with emergency health treatment, repatriation or death during their stay in EU member states. The insurance must be valid throughout the territory of the member states and cover the entire period of the person's intended stay or transit. The minimum coverage is EUR30,000 per insured event without any co-insurance or co-payment.

Foreigners must also present a document proving their health insurance coverage when they apply for or collect their short-term visa.

For stays exceeding 90 days, foreigners must arrange for commercial comprehensive health insurance with the Czech health insurance company, Pojišťovna VZP, a.s., in the period from 2 August 2021 until 2 August 2026; no other health insurance is acceptable.

On commencement of work in the Czech Republic, foreign nationals with a local employment agreement with a Czech company must be registered with the Czech public health insurance scheme; their coverage equals that of the Czech nationals. As such, the need for commercial health insurance may be avoided or limited. The obligation to register with the public health insurance scheme may also apply for some assignment cases. A detailed case-by-case assessment is advisable.

Registration of non-EU nationals after arrival in the Czech Republic. Non-EU nationals need to be registered with the Czech Foreigner's Police within three working days after their arrival in the Czech Republic (unless they stay in a hotel and the registration is processed automatically by the hotel). Individuals who will work in the Czech Republic need to visit the Czech Ministry of Interior instead to provide their biometric data that will be used for issuance of their Employee Card (see Section G). Non-EU nationals working in the Czech Republic need to be also registered at the Czech Labour Office on their first working day at the latest.

EU nationals. No visas or work permits are required for the EU nationals.

EU nationals need to be registered at the Labour Office by a company for which they perform their work on their first working day at the latest. In addition, they must process their registration with the Czech Foreigner's Police within 30 days after their arrival (if not processed via a hotel). A residence permit is not mandatory but is recommended if the EU national intends to stay and/or work in the Czech Republic for a period exceeding three months, because it is usually needed for car registration, obtaining a parking permit, closing a contract with a phone provider, buying property in the Czech Republic and other transactions. EU nationals must be covered by health insurance during their stay in the Czech Republic. An EU Health Insurance Card satisfies this requirement.

Family members of EU nationals from third countries are subject to a preferable treatment (compared with other non-EU nationals) if they accompany or follow the EU national residing in the Czech Republic. Registration at the Foreigner's Police and mandatory application for a temporary residence permit apply to them.

Business visitors. In general, a non-EU national who is in the Czech Republic on a short-term (few days) business trip is not required to have a work permit or Employee Card. Non-EU nationals from countries with a free visa regime are not required to obtain a visa to travel to the Czech Republic. Non-EU nationals from countries with a visa requirement need to apply for the business type of visa to be able to enter the Czech Republic.

Students. Students from non-EU countries intending to study in the Czech Republic for a period exceeding 90 days may apply for a long-term study visa. Students from non-EU countries with the visa-entry obligation may need a study visa for a short-term study stay under 90 days. Non-EU students intending to work in the Czech Republic do not need to obtain work permits if they are studying or have completed studies at a Czech high school, university or artists' school accredited in the Czech Republic.

Trainees. A special regime may be applied to non-EU national trainees assigned to the Czech Republic. These individuals may apply for the same immigration permits as the standard assignees or undertake a simplified immigration procedure. This simplified procedure avoids the obligation to apply for a work permit or Employee Card if the trainees' work in the Czech Republic will not exceed six months and the substance of the work will be experience and training for their future career in a "home country company." Before the assignment of trainees, the Czech company may qualify for the simplified procedure by filing a special request and meeting certain conditions.

Termination of the stay. The termination of work in the Czech Republic for both EU nationals and non-EU nationals must be reported to the Labour Office. In addition, non-EU nationals must inform the Ministry of Interior about the termination of their stay and return the relevant residence permit (if applicable).

G. Work permits, Employee Cards, intra-corporate transfers, Blue Cards and self-employment

Local employees. A company intending to employ a non-EU national in the Czech Republic must register a job position with the Czech Labour Office. This registration is public, and the Czech Labour Office has 30 days to fill the position with a Czech or other EU national. If no appropriate candidate is found in the Czech Republic or in other EU countries, the position is registered in the official database for Employee Cards and a non-EU national can apply for it by filing an application at the Czech embassy or consulate in his or her country of residence. The application for the Employee Card must be supported by the local employment contract or agreement on the future contract between the applicant and the Czech company. This contract must meet certain criteria relating to a working schedule and level of salary.

If the Ministry of Interior approves the application, the Czech embassy or consulate issues a special visa to the applicant to allow him or her to enter the Czech Republic and register with the Czech Ministry of Interior. On the finalization of this process, the non-EU national obtains the Employee Card in the form of a plastic biometric residence permit.

Assigned individuals. Assigned individuals (individuals who do not have a local employment contract) are required to apply for a work permit in the Czech Republic. After the work permit application is filed with the respective Labour Office, they are allowed to apply for the non-dual Employee Card. A Czech company must inform the Czech Labour Office about the assignment of a non-EU national to the Czech Republic. No testing of the Czech or EU labor market is required. On the collection of the work permit (to be delivered with the Employee Card application) and approval of the Employee Card application, the process of entering the Czech Republic and collecting the Employee Card is the same as in the case of local employment.

The following assigned individuals (and some others) are exempt from the work permit obligation and need apply only for the non-dual Employee Card:

- A holder of a Czech permanent residence permit
- A foreigner who undertakes or completes studies at a high school or university accredited in the Czech Republic
- A foreigner seconded to provide services in the Czech Republic on behalf of his or her employer with a seat in an EU country
- A third-country citizen who is accompanied by his or her close family member (spouse, child or parent) from an EU country
- A dependent of a non-EU national who is working in the Czech Republic based on a residence permit provided that the dependent holds a valid residence permit

Nevertheless, the Czech company must register these individuals at the Czech Labour Office, and the individuals are always required to obtain a relevant visa or residence permit.

Intra-corporate transfers. Foreign workers seconded to the Czech Republic based on intra-corporate transfers (ICTs) may apply for an ICT Card, which may be obtained for a period of one year for trainees and three years for specialists and managers. Because of the relative inconvenience of ICT (restricted duration of card validity, condition of at least six months' prior employment with the seconding enterprise and complexity of the documentation to be submitted), employers may choose to continue to use the "old" process of legalizing a working stay for assigned non-EU nationals, which is the obtaining a work permit and an employee card.

Blue Card. A Blue Card is intended for the non-EU nationals with high qualifications who want to work in positions that are not covered by Czech or EU nationals.

Czech companies need to register positions available under the Blue Card procedure in the Blue Card register.

A Blue Card is a combination of a work permit and a residence permit in one document and allows the recipient to reside in the Czech Republic and work in a job for which the Blue Card is issued.

A Blue Card is issued to workers with high professional or university education who have already agreed on an employment contract with a Czech company. The contract must have a duration of at least one year and meet certain other criteria.

A Blue Card is valid for the duration of the agreed employment contract plus three months.

The Blue Card is issued for a maximum period of two years. The application for a Blue Card must be submitted to the relevant embassy or consulate of the Czech Republic. The process is very similar to the dual Employee Card regime; the overall processing time is the same.

In comparison to the dual Employee Card, a Blue Card may ease the relocation of its holder to other EU member countries.

H. Self-employed individuals

Self-employed individuals must have trade licenses to perform self-employment activities in the Czech Republic. In addition, non-EU nationals must obtain an entrepreneur type of visa.

To acquire this license, the individual must apply at the appropriate trade license office.

The entire immigration process takes approximately five months after all the required documents are submitted.

I. Family members

Non-EU national dependents of a long-term visa, Employee Card, ICT or Blue Card holder may stay in the Czech Republic based on a granted short-term or long-term visa or a residence permit for reunion purposes. The long-term visa and residence permit may be further extended in the Czech Republic.

The visa or residence permit applications of the family members can be filed together with the main applicant (employee) with the Czech embassy or consulate abroad and is valid only for the validity period of the visa or residence permit of the main visa holder.

All family members need to have required health insurance coverage (these are the same requirements specified in Section F).

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents in Denmark are subject to Danish tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxed on Danish-source income, including the following:

- Income from a permanent establishment in Denmark
- Salary related to work performed in Denmark
- Directors' fees
- Income from real property in Denmark
- Dividends
- Royalties

Individuals are generally considered to be resident if they permanently reside or are present in Denmark for more than six months.

Denmark applies a rather strict interpretation for determining Danish-source income in connection with the hire-out of labor if individuals legally employed abroad are being, in fact, regarded as working for and on behalf of a Danish employer. As a result, individuals normally not covered by the ordinary tax regimes may be subject to tax liability, and reporting, withholding and registration may be required. This matter, as well as taxation under the hydrocarbon tax legislation, is not covered by this guide.

Income subject to tax. Income is divided into personal income and net capital income. Accordingly, taxable income consists of personal income plus or less net capital income or loss and less allowable deductions.

Employment income. Personal income from employment consists of wages, salaries, directors' fees, pensions, allowances and fringe benefits. In principle, all benefits in kind are taxable at their fair market value. However, the values assigned to the personal use of a company car, company phone and certain other benefits is determined according to special tables.

School fees paid by employers on behalf of their employees, such as international school fees, are deemed to be salary income and taxed accordingly.

A special tax regime applies to expatriates employed by a Danish resident employer. Salary income is taxed at a flat rate of 32.84%, including the 8% labor market tax, for one or more periods up to a total of 84 months.

To qualify for the special tax regime, the individual cannot have been tax resident or otherwise tax liable to Denmark on salary or similar income or business income within the last 10 years. In addition, the individual cannot have had a controlling influence in the employing company five years before or during the employment. Additional criteria apply.

Two alternatives exist for individuals to qualify for the special expatriate tax regime. Under the first alternative, the individuals' cash salary must be at least DKK69,600 per month (2021) and DKK70,400 per month (2022). Under the second alternative, the individual must be acknowledged as a scientist or researcher by the Danish Council for Independent Research. No minimum salary requirement applies for the second alternative.

After the 84-month period, the expatriate is taxed according to ordinary income tax rules. Income other than salary earned during the use of the special regime is subject to tax at the normal progressive tax rates.

Self-employment or business income. Business or self-employment income is taxed as ordinary income (personal income) for the business owner. Expenses are deductible to the extent they are incurred to obtain, secure or maintain business income.

Persons with business income may choose to tax this income under the Business Tax Act. Under these rules, taxable income from a trade and industry, including income from partnerships, is assessed in accordance with the principles used for companies, including rules for depreciation and write-offs.

Investment income. Net capital income includes interest income (less interest expenses), taxable gains on securities, rental income and other investment income. It is generally subject to tax as ordinary income. Dividends and capital gains on the sale of shares are taxed separately at 27% or 42%, depending on the level of income. Royalties received by residents are taxed as personal income. Royalties received by nonresidents are subject to a 22% withholding tax.

Dividends are subject to a 27% withholding tax. If total dividend income in 2021 exceeds DKK56,500 (DKK113,000) for married couples), residents are subject to a supplementary 15% tax.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Gains realized by an employee on the exercise of an option obtained under an employer-provided stock option plan are taxable. No tax is due at the time of vesting. In general, the gains are subject to the highest marginal rate of income tax, which is 52.06% in 2021. The gains are subject to labor market tax at a rate of 8%.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains tax is levied on individuals at rates of up to 42%.

Gains derived from the disposal of bonds are generally taxable, and losses are deductible.

Gains derived from the disposal of shares are taxable as share income at a maximum rate of 42%. On departure from Denmark, certain shareholders are deemed for tax purposes to have disposed of their shares at the fair market value and are taxed on the deemed gain. If a shareholder applies for an extension and does not pay the exit tax, the shareholder may obtain a refund of the difference between the tax on the deemed gain and the tax on any subsequent lesser gain actually realized. The tax on the deemed gain applies only to individuals who have been subject to unlimited tax liability for one or more periods, totaling 7 years within the 10 years before departure.

Gains derived from the disposal of residential property are not taxable if the owner occupied the property and if certain other conditions are met. Gains derived from the disposal of other real property are taxable as capital income.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Contributions to pension schemes with limited annuities are deductible up to an annual maximum of DKK53,800 (2021), while contributions to certain employer-administered life annuity schemes are fully deductible.

Interest paid on all types of debt is deductible from capital income. If this results in a negative amount, approximately 25% to 33% (2021) of the negative amount may be offset against tax payable on other income.

Items that may be deducted from taxable income include, among others, the following:
- Commuting costs to and from work (special rates)
- Fees paid to labor unions and unemployment insurance
- Child support and spouse support or alimony payments

Personal deductions and allowances. Each taxpayer is permitted the following:
- A personal allowance of DKK46,700 (2021)
- A supplementary allowance for salaried employees of 10.6% of salary income, up to a maximum amount of DKK40,600 (2021)
- A job deduction for salaried employees of 4.5% of the salary income above DKK200,300, up to a maximum deduction of DKK2,600 (2021)

All of the above are applied automatically during the tax calculation process. A further allowance may apply for single parents. A personal allowance not used by one person may be transferred to the spouse. This does not apply to individuals taxed under the special expatriate tax regime.

Rates. For 2021, income tax is levied on residents at the marginal rates shown in the table below. Dividends are taxed separately (see Investment income).

An 8% mandatory labor market tax is imposed on all salary income. Income taxes are calculated on the income after labor market tax and the following shows the approximate total marginal income and labor market tax rates applicable for 2021.

Taxable income DKK	Tax rate %	Tax due DKK	Cumulative tax due DKK
First 50,761	8	4,061	4,061
Next 541,413	42	227,393	231,454
Over 592,174	56	—	—

The above rates are estimates based on the average municipality tax rates and do not reflect the voluntary church tax.

Nonresidents. The tax rates applicable to residents also generally apply to nonresidents.

Relief for losses. Trading losses and interest expenses may be offset against other income and taxable gains. Tax losses may be carried forward for an unlimited number of years, but carrybacks are not allowed. Losses from certain types of passive partnership interests, such as a business with more than 10 nonworking owners, may be offset only against income from the same business.

B. Other taxes

Home-ownership tax. Home-ownership tax applies to homes or vacation houses in Denmark. The tax also applies to properties located abroad that are owned by Danish tax residents. However, home-ownership tax is not imposed if the property is rented out. The tax rate is 0.92% of the public value of the property up to DKK3,040,000, and 3% of the value exceeding DKK3,040,000. Similar tax paid abroad on foreign property may be credited.

Inheritance tax. Assets inherited by a spouse or registered partner (see Section G) are not subject to inheritance tax.

Inheritance tax at a rate of 15% is levied on the total value of estates exceeding DKK308,800 (2021). No additional tax is levied for beneficiaries closely related to the deceased (for example, cohabiters, descendants, stepchildren and their descendants, parents, sons- and daughters-in-law, and divorced spouses). For other beneficiaries, an additional tax at a rate of 25% is levied. Further conditions apply to the calculation.

Inheritance tax applies to estates of nonresidents only if the estate includes property located in Denmark or if a Danish probate court administers the estate.

Denmark has entered into estate tax treaties with Finland, Germany, Iceland, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland and the United States.

Gift tax. Gifts to a spouse or registered partner are not subject to tax.

Gift tax at a rate of 15% is levied on gifts to the following:
- Lineal descendants
- Stepchildren and their descendants
- Sons-in-law and daughters-in-law
- The spouse of a deceased child or stepchild
- Individuals residing with the donor two years before the event
- Foster children (if certain conditions are met)
- Parents

Additional gift tax at a rate of 25% is levied on gifts to stepparents and grandparents. Gifts to less closely related persons and to unrelated persons are subject to ordinary income tax, not gift tax.

Gifts of up to DKK68,700 (2021) a year may be donated free of gift tax to the following:
- Descendants
- The spouse of a deceased child or stepchild
- Individuals residing with the donor two years before the event
- Foster children (if certain conditions are met)
- Parents
- Stepparents
- Grandparents

An annual tax-exempt gift of up to DKK24,000 (2021) may be made to sons- and daughters-in-law.

Nonresidents are subject to gift tax if the donor or donee is a Danish resident or if the gift is Danish real estate.

C. Social security

Contributions. The monthly contribution to the Danish Supplementary Pension Scheme (ATP) for 2021 is DKK284, of which 1/3 is borne by the employee through payroll withholding. The annual cost of insurance depends on the nature of the business and other factors. For a white-collar employee, this may be approximately DKK15,000.

Other mandatory contributions for coverage in Denmark do not apply.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from paying double social security contributions and to assure benefit coverage, Denmark has entered into totalization agreements, which usually apply for periods up to 36 months, with the following jurisdictions.

Australia	Greenland	North Macedonia
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Iceland	Norway
Canada*	India	Pakistan
Chile	Israel	Philippines
China Mainland	Korea (South)	Serbia
European Union (EU) member states	Liechtenstein	Switzerland
Faroe Islands	Montenegro	Turkey
	Morocco	United States
	New Zealand

* Including Quebec

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The Danish tax year is the calendar year. Before each tax year, an advance income assessment must be made for each taxpayer. Advance tax is paid through deductions (withholding) from employment income. In addition, if self-employment income or net capital income rises to a certain level, advance tax is paid through prepayments claimed from the individual by the authorities in 10 installments over the tax year, based on the advance assessment.

After each tax year, taxpayers must file tax returns no later than 1 May/1 July of the following year. Any overpaid tax is refunded by the tax authorities when the final tax assessment notice is issued. Underpaid tax, including interest, up to DKK21.798 (regarding the 2020 income year) is carried forward to the 2022 income year, while the remainder is due in three installments in August, September and October 2021. Married persons must file separate tax returns. In the tax calculations, certain deductions may be transferred between the spouses.

Voluntary payment of tax may be made during the fiscal year and until 1 July of the following fiscal year in order to save interest on underpaid tax.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

If a Danish resident taxpayer receives income from abroad, tax relief may be provided either through a foreign tax credit or by exemption with progression. Relief is provided in accordance with either a tax treaty or Danish domestic law.

Danish law grants a foreign tax credit for income taxes paid abroad. The credit may not exceed the lesser of the income tax paid abroad or the Danish tax payable on the same income. Domestic Danish law also contains an exemption with progression that applies to salary income for work performed outside Denmark during working periods exceeding six months. Further conditions must be met. The rule applies only to individuals who are tax residents in Denmark according to domestic law (that is, fully taxable) while working abroad.

Denmark has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

(a) The Denmark-USSR double tax treaty of 1986 probably covers Belarus and probably also Armenia and Kyrgyzstan, but this needs to be definitively confirmed. Denmark has entered into double tax treaties with Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, the Russian Federation and Ukraine. Azerbaijan, Moldova, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan do not regard themselves as being covered by the Denmark-USSR double tax treaty of 1986.
(b) The treaty does not apply to Hong Kong or Macau.
(c) This treaty does not apply to the Palestinian Authority.
(d) These treaties primarily concern air and/or maritime traffic.
(e) As of 30 May 2018, this treaty was not yet in force. It will enter into force when national procedures are concluded.

The treaties with France and Spain were terminated, effective from 1 January 2009.

F. Work and residence permits

Denmark is a member of the EU and of the Nordic Council. Consequently, varying rules apply for EU nationals, for citizens of Scandinavian countries (Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden) and for non-EU nationals who wish to enter Denmark to live and work there.

The ordinary rules for EU citizens apply to citizens of Switzerland, as well as to citizens of Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway, the non-EU members of the European Economic Area (EEA).

Scandinavians. Nationals from Scandinavian countries may live and work in Denmark without restrictions. However, if they take up residence in Denmark for more than six months, they must register with the National Registration Office (the CPR registration system) in their local municipality.

Permission to be self-employed in Denmark is normally granted. However, for certain types of businesses, permission is granted only if the Danish Commerce and Companies Agency finds that a special Danish interest is served by establishing the business in Denmark.

EU nationals. EU citizens and EEA nationals may stay in Denmark under the EU rules on free movement of persons and services. They may stay and work freely in Denmark for up to three months. If EU citizens and EEA nationals wish to stay longer than three months, they must apply for an EU residence certificate within three months after their arrival in Denmark. If the stay in Denmark will exceed six months, registration in the CPR system is also mandatory. The EU certificate is formal proof of the rights already conferred on an EU citizen/EEA national under the EU rules on free movement. Each member of an applicant's family must apply separately for an EU-residence certificate. Third-country nationals can also apply for and obtain a residence document under EU rules as an accompanying family member of an EU national.

The application must be submitted in person, and the authorities generally process EU residence applications on the spot. For third-country family members, the processing time is up to three months (the application is not processed on the spot). During processing, the non-EU family member is allowed to stay in Denmark under the rules of procedural stay. EU applicants are generally not prevented from working during the processing time (applies only to EU nationals, not third-country family members). EU nationals who are commuting are not entitled to obtain a registration certificate, which requires that the individual take up actual residence in Denmark with the intent to stay.

EU-residence certificates issued to citizens from other EU member countries do not expire and will remain in force as long as deregistration from the CPR system does not take place and the holder does not stay outside of Denmark for more than six consecutive months. A dispensation may be granted in special circumstances to allow deregistration and longer stays outside of Denmark. After five years' uninterrupted residence in Denmark, the applicant may apply for permanent residence under EU rules.

Non-EU nationals. Citizens from jurisdictions other than EU/EEA countries and the Nordic Council countries may stay in Denmark for either the time period stated in their tourist or business visas or, if a visa is not required (visa-exempt nationals), up to 90 days within a 180-day period. Certain citizens with biometric passports are exempt from the visa requirement. A work permit is generally required from the first day if the stay involves work in Denmark.

Non-EU/EEA nationals who wish to work in Denmark must apply for a residence and work permit. Applications for residence and work permits must be filed with the Danish Agency for International Recruitment and Integration or with the Danish embassy or consulate in the country in which the individual resides.

Normally, profession or labor market considerations must warrant a residence and work permit but for particular schemes, the minimum salary is the decisive factor.

When processing the application, the Danish Agency for International Recruitment and Integration pays particular attention to the following:

- Whether professionals residing in Denmark or the EU/EEA who are qualified to carry out the relevant job are available (only applicable for certain types of permits).
- Whether the nature of the relevant job is specialized enough to warrant a residence and work permit. Normally, work permits are not granted for ordinary skilled-labor vacancies or unskilled positions.
- Whether the minimum salary required is met (only applicable to certain types of permits).

Regardless of the specific circumstances, a written job contract or offer specifying the salary and employment conditions is required. These must correspond to Danish employment law and standards.

Certain special schemes are designed to allow highly qualified professionals from abroad to obtain a residence and work permit in Denmark. Under a Fast-track Scheme, effective from 1 April 2015, certified companies with a Danish entity can obtain work and residence permits for recruited foreign employees faster and on more flexible terms.

In some cases, the Danish Agency for International Recruitment and Integration obtains a statement from the relevant branch organization or regional labor market council to process an application if input is required in terms of salary or employment terms in general.

If the applicant still meets the condition of the original work and residence permit, the permit can be extended. If the individual applies for the extension before the expiration of the current work permit, he or she remains compliant and is allowed to continue working until the extension application has been processed. If the terms on which the permit is based continue to be met, the permit can continue to be extended.

If an individual already holds a Danish residence permit based on family reunification, asylum, or humanitarian grounds or holds a dependent residence permit, a separate work permit is not required.

To live and work in Denmark for more than three months, non-EU nationals must generally register in the CPR register.

Non-EU nationals rendering a service in Denmark may be eligible to apply for a permit to work as posted employees under EU rules.

For EU rules to apply, the services to be rendered (In Danish: tjenesteydelser) must be services usually rendered for payment. Furthermore, the work in Denmark must be of a temporary nature and the job to be undertaken in Denmark must be defined clearly.

If the company in Denmark to which a non-EU national is posted is a subsidiary or a branch of the EU company (the company from which the individual is posted to Denmark), the posting can generally not take place under EU rules (new interpretation of Section 4 of the EU Directive implemented in Denmark in mid-2019).

Family members. After specific consideration, residence permits may be granted to family members of individuals who have residence and work permits in Denmark. Separate applications for each family member must be filed.

Biometric residence cards. Citizens of non-EU jurisdictions are issued biometric residence cards, which include the holder's facial image and fingerprints stored on a microchip embedded in the card. The residence card allows the non-EU national to travel within the Schengen area. If the individual does not have a valid residence card in his or her possession, he or she is required to apply for a re-entry permit to be able to enter Denmark after exiting the country.

G. Family and personal considerations

Marital property regime. Under Danish law, a regime of "ordinary community property" (fælleseje) applies between spouses and between persons of the same sex who have formed a registered partnership. (The legal consequences of a registered partnership are the same as those of a marriage.) Community property includes all property brought into the marriage and all property acquired during the marriage.

Driver's licenses. If an individual is in Denmark for a temporary period of time, the person can drive if he or she holds a valid foreign driver's license and an international license (a translation). However, for individuals in Denmark on a more permanent basis, different rules apply to citizens from Nordic countries, EU member countries and non-EU member jurisdictions who wish to use their home jurisdiction driver's licenses in Denmark.

Nordic and EU nationals. Expatriates from Nordic countries and EU nationals may drive legally in Denmark with their home country driver's licenses until expiration, but they might choose to switch to a Danish license without further required tests. Certain time limitations apply depending on the expiration date of the EU driver's license.

Non-EU nationals. As a general rule, non-EU and non-Nordic individuals may drive in Denmark for only up to 90 days after registration of residence. After the 90 days, the driver must pass a Danish driving test and accordingly obtain a Danish driver's license to continue to drive in Denmark.

Individuals from specified jurisdictions may legally drive using a foreign driver's license for up to one year from the date of registration. The foreign license may be changed into a Danish license without passing a driving test. Special further conditions may apply, depending on the jurisdiction.

In general, non-EU nationals are required to take a driving test. However, individuals from the following jurisdictions may exchange their driver's licenses for Danish driver's licenses without having to pass a Danish driving test.

Australia
Bosnia and Herzegovina
Brazil
Canada
Chile
Japan
Korea (South)
Russian Federation
Singapore
Switzerland
Taiwan
Ukraine
United States

To exchange the foreign driver's license for a Danish license, the following items must be presented to the driver's license bureau:
- The home jurisdiction driver's license
- A residence permit
- A photograph
- A fee of DKK280 (2019)

Passing a driving test results in further fees. English-speaking driving instructors and/or interpreters are available in certain Danish driving schools. Individuals may also be required to pass a physical examination.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident individuals are subject to tax on their Dominican Republic-source income as well as on their foreign-source taxable income derived from investments and financial gains. Income tax paid abroad with respect to foreign-source income may be credited against the Dominican Republic tax liability. However, such credit is restricted to the portion of Dominican Republic tax allocated to the foreign-source income that is taxed abroad.

Nonresidents are subject to tax on their Dominican Republic-source income and on income derived from technical assistance services provided to residents in the Dominican Republic, regardless of the location from where the technical assistance is provided.

Individuals who become residents of the Dominican Republic are subject to tax on foreign-source income after the third year of residency. In addition, individuals who become residents may qualify for a special retirement regime if certain conditions are met. This regime may exempt foreign-source income from income tax and provide other tax benefits.

For tax purposes, individuals who spend more than 182 continuous or non-continuous days in a tax year in the Dominican Republic are considered residents of the Dominican Republic.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Annual employment income is taxable. Employment income includes salary, bonuses, premiums, commissions and allowances (for example, housing and education allowances). Allowances are considered taxable compensation only if they are paid in cash to the employee. Benefits in kind are subject to fringe benefits tax, which is payable by the employer at a rate of 27%.

Self-employment and business income. Income derived from self-employment or from a trade or business is subject to tax.

Investment income. Dividends paid in cash or credited by local companies or entities to resident and nonresident individuals are subject to a 10% withholding tax. This withholding tax is considered to be a final tax payment.

All interest paid from Dominican sources to nonresident individuals is subject to a 10% withholding tax. This tax is considered to be a final tax payment. Interest received from abroad is subject to tax in accordance with the tax rate schedule set forth in Rates.

Local interest payments to resident or domiciled individuals are also subject to a 10% withholding tax, which is considered a final tax payment.

Royalties, payments for technical assistance services and similar payments made or credited by local companies or individuals to nonresidents that are considered Dominican-source income are subject to a 27% withholding tax.

Directors' fees. Dominican-source directors' fees paid or credited to individuals who are not resident or domiciled in the Dominican Republic are subject to a 27% income withholding tax.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from the sale of Dominican Republic capital assets (for example, shares of Dominican Republic companies) by residents or domiciled individuals are taxed at the individual progressive income tax rates, which range from 0% to 25%. The tax base for capital gains tax purposes is the difference between the transaction value (sale price) and the asset's historical cost adjusted by local inflationary rules. Capital gains derived from the sale of Dominican Republic capital assets by nonresidents or non-domiciled individuals are subject to a flat 27% tax rate.

Capital assets do not include inventory to be sold in the ordinary course of a trade or business, depreciable assets used in the ordinary course of a trade or business, or accounts receivable corresponding to the ordinary course of a trade or business.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. Employee contributions to social security may be deducted for income tax purposes.

Individuals may deduct education expenses for themselves and their dependents up to a maximum of 10% of the individual's taxable income. However, this deduction may not exceed the 25% of the minimum exempt amount established in Section 296 of the Dominican Tax Code. The deduction does not apply to self-employed individuals.

Business deductions. Individuals may deduct all costs and expenses that are necessary to generate, maintain and conserve taxable income and protect investments.

Rates. Ordinary income derived by resident individuals is taxable at the following rates.

Annual taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding DOP	Not exceeding DOP	amount DOP	excess %
0	416,220	0	0
416,220	624,329	0	15
624,329	867,123	31,216.35	20
867,123	—	79,775.15	25

B. Other taxes

Real estate with a value exceeding DOP8,138,353.26 is subject to a 1% tax on the excess value. For the purposes of this tax, the value of all real estate owned by an individual is taken into account.

Donations are subject to a tax at a rate of 27%, which is payable by the recipient.

C. Social security

Retirement contribution. A social security retirement contribution is payable on salaries at a rate of 7.1% for employers and 2.87% for employees, with a cap of 20 legal wages per month. The monthly legal minimum wage is DOP13,482.

Health contribution. A health contribution is payable on salaries at a rate of 7.09% for employers and 3.04% for employees, with a cap of 10 legal minimum wages per month.

Labor risk contribution. Employers must pay a labor risk security contribution at rates ranging from 1% to 3%, depending on the classification of the activity of the employer. The social security law provides a cap of 10 legal minimum wages for this contribution.

Contribution to the Institute for the Development of Technical Professionals. A contribution of 1% of payroll is payable by employers to the Institute for the Development of Technical Professionals (Instituto de Formación Técnico Profesional, or INFOTEP). Employees contribute an additional 0.5% on annual profit-sharing compensation.

Totalization agreement. The Dominican Republic and Spain have entered into a totalization agreement regarding social security contributions.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Employers are responsible for withholding income taxes and social security contributions from employees' salaries on a monthly basis.

Individuals must file an annual income tax return by 31 March. Employees are not required to file an annual income tax return if their only source of income is employment compensation unless they are deducting education expenses. In the event of excess withholding, the employer applies the overpayment to future withholding tax obligations.

Nonresidents are not required to file an annual income tax return if their tax liability has been satisfied through withholding at source.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

The Dominican Republic has entered into double tax treaties with Canada and Spain.

F. Temporary visas

Depending on their country of citizenship, individuals may be required to apply for and obtain an entry visa before traveling to the Dominican Republic. A Dominican Republic consulate overseas grants the visa. Because the rules indicating the countries of citizenship of individuals who are required to obtain an entry visa before entering the Dominican Republic and requirements for obtaining a visa often vary, it is necessary to check the entry visa requirements on a case-by-case basis.

G. Work visas (and/or permits)

The government of the Dominican Republic grants a work authorization to foreign employees who have special knowledge or experience in a certain field. The granting of a work authorization is subject to certain rules that must be checked on a case-by-case basis because the rules may vary.

In addition, nonresident employees who intend to work in the Dominican Republic in a dependent employment relationship for a local entity must obtain a work visa. The NM1 Visa for work purposes is granted to individuals who, as a result of the nature of their occupation, remain in the country for one year. In general, this visa is granted to people who fulfill contracts for a specific time period. The visa can be renewed for one-year periods during the term of the contract.

H. Residence visas (and/or permits)

The government of the Dominican Republic may grant migratory statuses that allow foreigners to reside in the country. These include the following:
- Science status
- Athletes
- Journalists
- Workers
- Businesspersons
- Investors

- Retired individuals
- Religious status
- Certain types of family relatives

Foreigners normally apply for a resident or business visa to work in the Dominican Republic. After all documents are filed with the immigration authorities, the approximate time for obtaining a business or resident visa is approximately 3 months (90 days). Business or resident visas are valid for one year and are renewable for similar time periods.

Before entry into the Dominican Republic, the employee must request a Temporary Worker Visa (Visado de Trabajador Temporero, or VTT) from the Dominican consulate in his or her country of origin. The estimated time to obtain the VTT is between 5 to 15 days from the date of the request. This type of visa is granted to employees who receive a job offer from an entity duly registered in the Dominican Republic. The VTT has a maximum validity of one year and allows multiple entries into the Dominican Republic.

After entry, the employer must request from the Dominican immigration authorities a Temporary Worker Card (Carnet de Trabajador Temporero, or CTT). The estimated time to obtain this card is approximately 90 days. The CTT is the final documentation that will allow the employee to work in the Dominican Republic.

Alternatively, employees of companies registered as foreign investors with the Dominican Center for Exportation and Importation (Centro de Exportación e Importación de la República Dominicana, or CEI-RD) may apply for an investment visa, which may be issued within a 45-day period.

Foreign investors and retirees qualifying for special incentives under Law 171-07 may apply for the Residence Permit Program for Investments in Dominican Republic. The benefits extend to the spouse and children under 18, with some exceptions.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Spouses of foreigners who are granted work permits generally do not automatically receive the same treatment as the original permit holder and must apply for an independent visa or work permit. In certain cases, a work permit may be granted automatically to the spouse.

Marital property regime. Assets obtained by any means, except by donation, after the commencement of the marriage are considered to be marital property if the spouses are married under community property laws.

Forced heirship. If an individual dies without leaving a will, the beneficiaries of his or her assets and patrimony according to the law are descendants, ascendants, spouse and collaterals. The priority order is set by the Civil Code according to a series of different combinations. The amounts needed to satisfy maintenance and other obligations of the deceased are removed from the decedent's estate before the estate is divided between the beneficiaries.

Driver's permits. Foreigners may drive legally in the Dominican Republic using their home country driver's licenses for up to three months. After the three-month period expires, resident foreigners must obtain a Dominican Republic driver's license.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Ecuadorians and foreign nationals resident in Ecuador are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on Ecuadorian-source income only, regardless of where it is paid. Both Ecuadorians and foreign residents who receive income for business activities or professional, commercial or other services performed in Ecuador are subject to income tax.

Individuals are considered resident for tax purposes if their stay in Ecuador exceeds 183 days, consecutive or non-consecutive, within a calendar year. In addition, individuals are considered resident if their stay exceeds 183 days within a 12-month period in two consecutive calendar years.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable income includes income from services rendered under a verbal or written contract of employment, regardless of whether the income is received in cash, in services or in kind.

In general, all employees receive the following annual bonuses, which are exempt from income tax:
- Christmas bonus, known as the thirteenth salary, which equals approximately one-twelfth of their annual compensation.
- Education bonus, known as the fourteenth salary, which equals one Unified Basic Remuneration (USD400 for 2021).
- Retirement funds, which equal one-twelfth of the year's remuneration (8.33% of annual remuneration). This amount is payable from the second year of employment for the same employer.

Compensation for industrial accidents and death, payments for out-timed dismissal (dismissal without legal notice or legal cause), severance payments and amounts received from pension and retirement funds are also exempt from tax.

Self-employment and business income. Individuals are subject to tax on income from business activities conducted within Ecuador and on income arising from goods and assets located in Ecuador.

Business income includes the income of individuals who are sole proprietors or active members of a partnership in a business in which they have invested capital. Income is taxed at the rates set forth in Rates.

Investment income. Dividends are subject to a 10% withholding tax. In addition, this income needed to be incorporated in the global income of the individual for the purposes of applying the progressive tax rates of 0% to 35%, which are applied to taxable income (see Rates).

Royalties received from investments in Ecuador are treated as ordinary income. Royalties received from abroad are exempt from tax if they were subject to tax in the source country.

Interest paid to residents is added to the taxpayer's taxable income and taxed at the rates set forth in Rates. Interest paid to residents is subject to withholding tax at a rate of 2%, which is credited against the taxpayer's annual tax due.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. In general, benefits derived from stock options are taxed as other income (income that is different from salary or professional wages). Each case must be analyzed separately.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from sales of shares are subject to a single income tax at the following rates:

From USD	To USD	Rate %
0	20,000	0
20,001	40,000	2
40,001	80,000	4

C. Social security

Coverage. The Social Security Institute of the government manages the social security system, which covers health benefits, pensions and certain social payments. All private, public and foreign employees and self-employed professionals are covered by social security legislation.

Expatriates engaged in a labor relationship must make social security contributions. They must ask their Ecuadorian employer to register them with the social security system beginning with their first day of work. Foreign residents who contribute to the system may not continue to receive coverage from their home countries.

Totalization agreements. Ecuador has entered into totalization agreements with Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, the Netherlands, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, Spain, Uruguay and Venezuela.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Tax on income from wages is withheld at source by employers. Taxpayers might not be required to file returns if 100% of their gross income for the calendar income year consists of employment income from one employer. Otherwise, in the following year, taxpayers must file returns between 10 March and 28 March, depending on the ninth digit of the individual's taxpayer identification number.

Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

The fiscal year runs from 1 January to 31 December.

Late filers must pay a monthly penalty equal to 3% of the tax due, up to 100% of the tax due, plus monthly interest at a low rate.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Foreign income received by Ecuadorian tax residents is exempt from income tax in Ecuador if such income has been subject to tax in the source country, unless the Ecuador Internal Revenue Service has determined that the source country is a tax haven.

Ecuador has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Argentina*	France	Romania
Belarus	Germany	Russian Federation
Belgium	Italy	Singapore
Brazil	Japan	Spain
Canada	Korea (South)	Switzerland
Chile	Mexico	Uruguay
China Mainland	Qatar

* This is a double tax treaty on activities with respect to air traffic.

Ecuador has also entered into a double tax treaty with Bolivia, Colombia and Peru (Andean Community countries), through Decision 578 of the Andean Community, but this particular agreement has limited application.

F. Temporary visas

An application for a visa may be presented before the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Ecuador or at the Ecuadorian consulate in the applicant's country of origin or in the country where the individual is considered a legal resident. Both temporary and permanent residence visas are issued to foreign nationals.

Temporary resident visas are valid for two years and can be renewed multiple times.

G. Temporary visas for labor activities and self-employment

All foreign nationals must obtain temporary visas for labor activities to work legally in Ecuador. Temporary residence visas are valid for two years and can be renewed multiple times, at the discretion of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Depending on the conditions of the assignment, foreign nationals can apply for the following visas:

- Temporary residence visa under labor contract: this type of visa allows expatriates to work in an Ecuadorian company by being part of the local payroll and signing a labor contract. The Ecuadorian branch must be duly incorporated with all documentation updated. In addition, the share capital of the company must be at least USD12,500.
- Temporary residence visa for legal representation: this type of visa allows expatriates to perform temporary legal representation activities in an Ecuadorian company (for example, general managers, presidents and attorneys). The legal representative must be designated by an appointment or a power of attorney. It must meet the same corporate requirements listed above.

A foreign national who wants to begin his or her own business in Ecuador must obtain a temporary residence visa. After 21 months as a temporary resident, he or she will be allowed to obtain a permanent residence visa.

Foreign nationals traveling temporarily in Ecuador may apply for a change of status during their stays in Ecuador without leaving the country. This depends on the purpose of their stays.

All foreign nationals holding one of the visas described above can obtain an Ecuadorian identification.

H. Permanent residence visas

Permanent residence visas are valid for an indefinite period of time. This type of visa allows individuals to obtain an Ecuadorian identification, as well as to work or not work for an Ecuadorian company. In this regard, they are not required to change their migratory category if they are employed by a local company.

Foreign nationals can obtain permanent residence visas if they have stayed in Ecuador as a temporary resident for 21 months.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Depending on the conditions of the expatriate's assignment, family members can apply for visas as dependents. If the expatriate has a temporary residence visa as a dependent, the spouse is not allowed to work in Ecuador. If the spouse has a temporary residence visa as a holder, the spouse can perform any type of activity in Ecuador. Children can study if they have a temporary or permanent residence visa as a dependent. Such children are not required to obtain a student visa.

Marital property regime. Ecuadorian law provides for a marital property regime that applies to all couples legally married under Ecuadorian law and to foreign couples living in Ecuador who register their marital status with the Ecuadorian officials. Under the regime, all types of property interests arising during the marriage belong to the couple in common. Income earned on jointly held property is divided equally between spouses. Property acquired before the marriage remains separate, unless it is contributed to the marital community at the time of the marriage.

Driver's permits. A foreign national may drive legally in Ecuador using his or her home country driver's license. However, after a foreign national obtains a valid visa, he or she must obtain a corresponding Ecuadorian driver's license.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Income tax is imposed on the following sources of income:
- Worldwide income from employment or dependent services paid by the Egyptian government or any Egyptian public organization, regardless of the employee's residence, the place where services are rendered or the place of payment
- Egyptian-source income paid by Egyptian or foreign companies or by private sector enterprises to any employee resident in Egypt or resident abroad, in return for services rendered in Egypt (pension payments are excluded)
- Non-Egyptian-source income paid to a resident employee or individual if Egypt is the location of the headquarters of the individual's commercial, industrial or professional activity

Under the law, persons are deemed to be residents of the country where they have a permanent domicile. A person who resides in Egypt for a period exceeding 183 days during a calendar year is deemed to be resident in Egypt for tax purposes.

Nonresident individuals and expatriate experts (as defined) are generally taxed on Egyptian-source income only.

Income subject to tax. Income tax is levied on the following types of income:
- Employment income
- Business profits, noncommercial profits (self-employment income) and income from immovable properties (including the assessed rental values of agricultural lands and buildings)
- Dividends
- Capital gains on disposals of shares and securities

Employment income. Income tax is levied on salaries, wages, compensation awards, overtime pay and all cash and in-kind fringe benefits.

The following rules apply to the taxation of employment income:
- Casual workers are also subject to tax.
- Tax is imposed on income generated from Egyptian sources, regardless of whether the work is performed in or outside Egypt. Tax is also imposed on income generated from foreign sources for work performed in Egypt.

- Tax is imposed on all salaries, remunerations and bonuses paid to managing directors, board members and managers of corporations for the performance of administrative duties.

In addition to other tax exemptions prescribed in special laws, the following types of income are exempt from tax:
- Certain collective in-kind allowances for employees, which are meals distributed to the workers, collective transportation of workers or equivalent transportation costs, health care, tools and uniforms necessary for performing work and housing provided by the employer to workers for performing their work.
- Workers' share in the profits distributed according to the law.
- All compensation received by members of diplomatic and consular corps, international organizations, and other foreign diplomatic representatives in the context of their official work. This exemption is conditioned on reciprocity of treatment and is granted within the limits of such treatment.

Self-employment and business income. Income tax is levied on noncommercial profits derived by professionals or independent persons practicing other noncommercial activities in Egypt if work is the primary element of the activity (for example, lawyers, accountants, artists and writers). This tax applies to any income derived from professions or activities not otherwise subject to tax in Egypt. Graduates and members of a professional association about to practice for the first time enjoy certain exemptions.

Noncommercial profits generated outside of Egypt that are derived by professionals or independent persons practicing noncommercial activities in Egypt are subject to tax in Egypt if Egypt is the location of the headquarters of the professional or noncommercial activities.

Taxable noncommercial income consists of net noncommercial profits from various operations after deduction of all related costs. If no proper books are kept, gross revenue is estimated using indicators and guidelines issued by the tax authorities.

Income tax is levied on the net profits of business income from all activities carried on by commercial and industrial entities operating as sole traders, partnerships and limited partnerships in Egypt, and on profits derived from certain other categories of income as specified by law.

Profits generated outside of Egypt by commercial and industrial entities operating in Egypt are subject to Egyptian income tax if Egypt is the location of the headquarters of the entity's commercial and industrial activities.

Nonresidents with commercial and industrial activities are taxed only on income earned from an establishment in Egypt or from operations carried on in Egypt.

Taxable commercial and industrial income consists of net commercial and industrial profits derived within a calendar year from all business transactions, including sales of assets (after deduction of all business charges, expenses and personal allowances).

Investment income. Dividends from shares and interest received by residents from bonds and debentures of companies that are officially listed on the Egyptian stock exchange are exempt from income tax. See Capital gains and losses for the taxation of capital gains on these investments.

Dividends received from foreign sources by resident individuals are subject to tax.

Certain interest is exempt from tax, including interest derived from securities listed on the Egyptian stock exchange.

Commission payments unrelated to a resident taxpayer's profession and royalties received by residents are taxed on gross income as commercial and industrial profits (business income; see Self-employment and business income).

Payments by domestic corporations to foreign or nonresident persons are subject to withholding taxes in accordance with the following rules:

- Dividends realized in Egypt by resident and nonresident individuals engaged in a commercial or industrial activity are subject to tax at a rate of 10% without deducting any expenses. This rate is reduced to 5% if the individual holds more than 25% of the distributing company's capital or voting rights and if the shares were held for at least two years (effective from 21 August 2015).
- Dividends realized in Egypt by resident individuals not engaged in a commercial or industrial activity are subject to tax at a rate of 10% of the annual taxable income of more than EGP10,000. This rate is reduced to 5% if the recipient meets the above-mentioned conditions.
- Royalties are taxed on gross income at a rate of 20%. Several tax treaties concluded between Egypt and other countries have specific rates for taxes on royalties, varying from complete exemption to a tax of up to 20% of gross royalties.
- Interest is subject to a 20% withholding tax with some specific exemptions. Special rates are established by certain tax treaties.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains derived from transfers of real estate are not subject to tax unless the real estate is used in a trade or business. However, a 2.5% tax is levied on the gross proceeds from the total disposal value of built real estate and land prepared for buildings.

Tax on capital gains realized by business entities from the sale of other capital assets, including machinery and vehicles, is calculated in the same manner and at the normal rates that apply to commercial and industrial profits. Trading losses and capital losses on the sale of these assets are deductible from taxable capital gains.

Capital gains on sales of personal property, including automobiles, jewelry and shares, owned by an individual are not taxed in Egypt, unless used in a trade or business.

Tax on capital gains realized from the disposal of securities listed on the Egyptian Stock Exchange applies at a rate of 10% (not yet enforced).

Capital gains realized by resident or nonresident individuals from the disposal of shares not listed on the Egyptian Stock Exchange or shares abroad is subject to income tax at a rate of 22.5%.

Deductions. The following deductions may be claimed:
- An annual personal deduction of EGP9,000 for each individual (as of 1 May 2020)
- Social insurance and other contributions that may be deducted in accordance with the measures in the social insurance law and under alternative systems
- Employees' contributions to private insurance funds established according to the provisions of the Private Insurance Funds Law, as promulgated by Law No. 54 for 1975
- Premiums paid for life and health insurance for the benefit of the individual or the individual's spouse or minor children, and insurance premiums paid with respect to pensions

The total deduction for the last two items mentioned above may not exceed 15% of the net annual income or EGP10,000, whichever is lower.

For purposes of computing taxable commercial and industrial income, all costs generally are deductible. In particular, the following specific deductions are allowed:
- Costs for rental of premises
- Tax depreciation and accelerated depreciation for new machines (applying accelerated depreciation to new machines is optional, effective from 13 March 2015)
- All taxes except taxes on business income
- Social insurance contributions
- Contributions to pension and savings funds
- The deductions described in the first paragraph of this section

Amounts paid and benefits provided to nonresidents performing activities in Egypt are subject to the same tax rates as Egyptian residents.

Relief for losses. A taxpayer may offset losses against profits of a business and may carry losses forward for a period up to five years. Losses may not be carried back. Losses incurred in long-term projects may be carried back within the same project.

Losses incurred outside Egypt cannot be offset against taxable profit in Egypt.

If capital losses exceed capital gains realized from disposals of securities and shares in a tax year, the excess can be carried forward for three years.

B. Inheritance tax

Egypt does not impose inheritance tax.

C. Social security

Social insurance contributions are levied only on Egyptian nationals with full-time employment. An employee pays 11% on the monthly base salary up to EGP7,000.

To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Egypt has concluded totalization agreements with Cyprus, Greece, the Netherlands and Sudan, which usually apply for an unlimited period of time.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Egypt is the calendar year. Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

Individuals engaged in business or professional activities must notify the tax authorities within 30 days of starting such activities and within 30 days after ceasing activities or relocating. They are also required to obtain a tax identification card.

Individuals deriving noncommercial profits, regardless of the amount, must submit annual tax returns and pay tax before 1 April for income derived in the preceding calendar year. The returns must give details of profits or losses, and must be supported by the relevant books of account together with all necessary documents. An individual may request to extend the date of submitting his tax return if the request is submitted 15 or more days before the due date for the submission of the return and if, on the date of submitting the request, the individual pays the estimated tax stated in the tax return. If the extension request is submitted in accordance with the above requirements, the date for submitting the tax return is extended for a period of 60 days.

Employees are not required to submit annual returns for their employment income.

Companies must withhold monthly tax from the salaries of employees and remit such amounts to the tax authorities. They must submit a quarterly declaration to the relevant tax office in January, April, July and October of each year. Companies must submit an annual declaration to the relevant tax office in January of each year. Free-zone projects must withhold the taxes due from their employees and remit such amounts to the tax authorities.

Nonresidents with commercial and industrial activities operating as partnerships must file annual tax returns within four months after the end of the financial year or within 30 days after the cessation of their activities.

Tax becomes due and is payable within 30 days after receipt of a notice of final tax assessment from the tax authorities. If an individual fails to pay the tax due before the due date, a delay penalty applies until the date of payment. The delay penalty is imposed at a rate of 2% plus the credit and discount rate set each January by the Central Bank of Egypt.

F. Tourist and temporary visas

All foreign nationals are required to obtain valid entry visas to enter Egypt, with certain exceptions for nationals of countries that do not require visas for Egyptians.

Tourist visas. In general, most business visitors and tourists seeking to enter Egypt must obtain an entry visa. For Canadian, European and US nationals, this visa is stamped in the traveler's passport at the port of entry or the airport. Nationals of certain countries are required to obtain the entry visa from the Egyptian consulate in their home country before arriving to Egypt. Visitors having tourist visas are generally prohibited from remaining in Egypt beyond the authorized period and are not permitted to engage in any form of employment or studying. The authorized period of the visa is one month. However, visitors may apply for an extension of up to three months, depending on the applicant's nationality.

Temporary visas. Temporary visas are issued to foreign nationals who enter Egypt for reasons other than tourism and whose stay will exceed three months but not more than one year. Certain individuals, including foreign investors, may receive temporary visas for a period of three years. Visitors having temporary visas are generally prohibited from remaining in Egypt beyond the authorized period and are not permitted to engage in any form of employment or studying.

Each individual applying for or requesting a renewal of a business visa must submit the following forms and documentation at the Egyptian consulate:

- A passport or an equivalent travel document valid for travel to Egypt with a validity date of at least six months after the applicant's intended period of stay in Egypt
- An application form
- Six photographs
- Additional forms

G. Work permits, work visas and self-employment

If a foreign visitor wants to work in Egypt on a full-time basis, under Egyptian labor law, he or she needs to obtain a work permit. Work permits are granted to expatriates by the Ministry of Manpower and Immigration on an individual basis. A work permit is granted for six months subject to renewal for another six months, provided that an approval is received from the Ministry of Interior confirming that the employee has a good and clear security situation. The work permit may be renewed annually up to a maximum of four years unless exceptional approval is received from the Ministry of Manpower and Immigration. The renewal of the work permit usually takes from 10 to 15 working days, depending on the employee's nationality.

The applicant must first submit a work permit enrollment application, together with certain supporting documentation, to the Ministry of Manpower and Immigration.

The issuance of a work permit involves the following two-phase process:
- Phase 1 is the enrollment process. This should be initiated and completed while the applicant is outside Egypt by submitting an enrollment application to the Ministry of Manpower and Immigration and all of the required documents from both the applicant and the legal entity for which the applicant will work. The application requests that the ministry approve the enrollment of the applicant then notify the Main Passport Directorate to issue an entry visa number for him or her to use to enter Egypt.
- Phase 2 is the work permit issuance process. After entering Egypt, the assignee should perform an HIV test (blood test). After the test results and all of the required documents for issuing the work permit have been submitted and the approval to issue the work permit for the assignee is received, an application shall be submitted to the Passport and Immigration Department to issue the residence visa card (work is permitted for the same duration same as the work permit), noting that the family members can apply at the same time. However, residence visa cards for family members are for the purpose of residency only, and family members are not permitted to work in Egypt.

In addition, under the immigration law, an individual should apply for the work permit while the employee is outside the country. However, based on the new instructions issued by the immigration authority, extra governmental fees can be paid to obtain an exemption from the enrollment process and to allow the employee to apply for the work permit while he or she is in the country.

The estimated timeline from the date of the receiving all of the required documents is four to six weeks for Phase 1 and four to five weeks for Phase 2. This estimated timeline may vary depending on certain factors such as the applicant's nationality, particularly Far East nationalities, because their security investigation process takes a longer time.

The following criteria are considered for applicants who will work on full-time basis:
- The applicant should have a legal entity in Egypt through which the applicant applies for enrollment.

- The applicant's position should add value to the Egyptian legal entity (that is, he or she should be an expert in his or her area of specification, because ordinary positions, such as administrative positions, are not acceptable for enrollment).
- The applicant should have at least three years of relevant experience in the same position that he or she will be holding in the Egyptian legal entity.
- The Egyptian legal entity should comply with the labor ratio of 9:1 (that is, nine Egyptian full-time employed and socially insured employees for each expatriate employee).

H. Residence visas

Ordinary visas. Ordinary visas are issued for a period of three to five years to foreign nationals who are married to Egyptians or who were born in Egypt or the Palestinian Authority.

Special visas. Special visas are issued to foreign nationals for political reasons or to individuals who have provided beneficial services to Egypt. The duration of this visa is 10 years, and it is renewable for similar durations.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The rules for family members are summarized below.

Visitors. Visitors should apply for a tourist visa at an Egyptian consulate abroad.

Employment for spouses. A spouse has the same duration of residency as the applicant. However, he or she is required to apply for a work permit separately from the applicant if he or she intends to work as a full-time employee in Egypt. A marriage certificate or other document is usually required to prove the marriage status.

Study permits for children. Children receive the same duration of residence as the applicant and his or her spouse. In general, children are allowed to apply to schools and colleges.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally using their home country driver's licenses only if they are visiting Egypt temporarily and hold international driver's licenses. After permission to work is granted, they must obtain local driver's licenses.

To obtain an Egyptian driver's license, an individual must submit a doctor's certificate, take a verbal examination and perform a fairly simple driving test.

Egypt signed the United Nations Convention (1949), and it is a legal requirement for visitors to have a valid International Driving Permit in order to rent a car and legally drive in Egypt.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident individuals are subject to tax on El Salvador-source income as well as foreign-source investment income (interest from cash deposits in financial institutions abroad, and gains on the sale of foreign securities, financial instruments and derivative contracts). Income tax paid abroad with respect to foreign-source income may be credited against the Salvadoran tax liability for such income according to specific rules.

Nonresident individuals, regardless of their nationality, are taxed only on their El Salvador-source income, which includes income derived from the following:

- Assets located in El Salvador
- Activities carried out or capital invested in El Salvador
- Services rendered or used in El Salvador, even if received or paid for outside El Salvador

Individuals are considered tax resident if they stay in El Salvador for more than 200 consecutive days during a tax year. An individual staying 200 consecutive days or less within a tax year is considered a nonresident for tax purposes. Individuals that have been deemed residents for more than one calendar year may remain outside the country for up to 165 days without losing their resident status. In addition, individuals whose principal place of trade or business is in El Salvador are also considered residents.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Tax is imposed on salary, remuneration, fees and other compensation received for services rendered or used in El Salvador.

Self-employment and business income. Income derived from self-employment services rendered or used in El Salvador or from a trade or business is subject to tax in El Salvador.

Investment income. Individuals are subject to tax on interest income, premiums and other yields, derived from savings and time deposits with banks and financial institutions domiciled in El Salvador. Tax is imposed at a flat rate of 10% if the monthly average deposits equal or exceed USD25,000.

Income derived from deposits in financial institutions abroad that is earned by individuals domiciled in El Salvador is subject to a flat tax rate of 10% if the income was not subject to tax in the country of origin. If the tax rate or the tax paid in the country of origin is less than the Salvadoran tax rate, the taxpayer is required to pay the difference between the tax rate or tax paid abroad and the Salvadoran tax rate or tax due.

Resident legal entities that pay or register dividends or profits with respect to resident or nonresident individuals must withhold income tax at a flat 5% rate, which is considered as a definitive and final tax. Taxation occurs on actual or constructive receipt of the dividend.

If the company distributing the dividends does not withhold the 5% tax, the individual must report the income and pay the corresponding tax through the filing of an annual income tax return.

If the nonresident individual is domiciled or resident in a tax-haven jurisdiction for Salvadoran tax purposes, the applicable dividend withholding tax rate is 25%.

Loans granted by resident legal entities to their partners, shareholders, associates, trustees, beneficiaries, and spouses or family within the fourth consanguinity degree and second affinity degree of the abovementioned individuals is subject to the flat 5% withholding tax on the total amount loaned (that is the principal amount), unless the agreed interest rate is in accordance with or above market rates. In addition, if the term of the loan exceeds one year and if the repayment is in arrears for more than six quotas, a taxable cancellation of debt to the borrower is deemed to occur.

Dividends, interest, capital gains or any other benefits derived from investments in or sales of securities, financial instruments and derivative contracts by Salvadoran individuals domiciled in El Salvador are subject to tax at a flat rate of 10% if any of the following conditions are met:

- The issuing entity is a national entity or it is domiciled in El Salvador.

- The capital is invested or employed in El Salvador.
- The risk of the underlying asset is placed or located in El Salvador.

The above conditions are deemed to have been met if the taxpayer is domiciled in El Salvador or is a domiciled establishment or branch for Salvadoran tax purposes.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees paid to resident and nonresident individuals who are not employees of the company are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 10% for resident individuals and 20% for nonresident individuals. This tax is a final tax for nonresident individuals. However, if the director is an employee, the fee is subject to progressive rates (see Rates).

Special rules for payments to tax-haven jurisdictions. A 25% final withholding tax is imposed on amounts paid to or through non-domiciled individuals or legal entities resident or domiciled in tax-haven jurisdictions if the payment has a tax effect in El Salvador (for example, it is regarded as a deductible expense for the payer). Exemptions apply in the following circumstances:
- The payments are made for the acquisition or transfer of tangible assets.
- The tax-haven jurisdiction is a Central American country that has entered into a cooperation agreement with the Salvadoran tax and customs authorities.
- The tax-haven jurisdiction has entered into an information exchange agreement or double tax treaty with El Salvador.
- Reduced withholding tax rates apply in El Salvador to the payment (that is, for payments for international transportation services, insurance and similar services, interest from loans and specific intangible assets and rights).

Also, see Rates.

Capital gains. In general, capital gains are subject to a tax at a flat rate of 10%.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. A deduction of USD1,600 is allowed for each employed individual with annual income that does not exceed USD9,100. Individuals with income exceeding USD9,100 may deduct up to USD800 for medical expenses and up to USD800 for education expenses, subject to confirmation by the tax authorities.

Business deductions. All costs and expenses that are necessary to generate taxable income or maintain its source are deductible if the following conditions are satisfied:
- They are not excessive or unreasonable.
- They pertain to the same fiscal year as the taxable income.
- They are supported by the required corresponding documentation.
- Applicable withholding taxes, if any, have been imposed.

Expenses related to the acquisition of movable goods and the rendering of services in an amount equal to or exceeding USD7,604.25 are deductible for income tax purposes only if the payment is made by check, bank wire transfer, credit or debit card or if the transfer or the service is documented by a written contract or other documents regulated by civil or commercial law.

Payments for services rendered by nonresident individuals to resident individuals and domiciled entities are subject to withholding taxes that are imposed in the month of payment or in the month in which the payment is credited. If by 31 December, the payment for services rendered or used in El Salvador has not been made, the payer must remit the corresponding tax that would have been withheld from the payments in order to deduct the payments when calculating its annual taxable income.

Rates. Employment and self-employment income for resident individuals is taxable at the following rates.

Annual taxable income	Tax rate
Up to USD4,064	Exempt
From USD4,064.01 to USD9,142.86	10% on the excess over USD4,064 + USD212.12
From USD9,142.87 to USD22,857.14	20% on the excess over USD9,142.86 + USD720
Over USD22,857.14	30% on the excess over USD22,857.14 + USD3,462.86

Nonresident individuals are subject to income tax from Salvadoran sources at a flat 30% rate.

Withholding tax is imposed on nonresidents at a rate of 20% on remuneration, pensions, commissions, directors' fees and other similar items of compensation that are classified as El Salvador-source income. In practice, this may be considered a definitive withholding tax.

If an individual receiving a payment is resident or domiciled in a tax-haven jurisdiction or if a payment is paid or credited through individuals or legal entities resident, domiciled or incorporated in tax-haven jurisdictions, a 25% withholding tax applies, subject to certain exemptions (see Payments to tax-haven jurisdictions).

Relief for losses. Losses may not be carried forward or back. However, capital losses derived from the sale of movable or immovable assets may be offset against future capital gains for up to five years, provided such losses have been reported to the tax authorities. Capital losses derived from the sale of securities or financial instruments issued abroad may be offset against future capital gains from the same assets for up to five years.

B. Estate and gift taxes

El Salvador does not impose separate estate or gift taxes. However, estates may be taxed as ordinary taxpayers if they derive income before the assets are distributed to the beneficiaries.

C. Social security

Social security contributions are levied monthly on salaries at a rate of 7.5% for employers and 3% for resident and nonresident employees, with a monthly salary ceiling of USD1,000. Death and pension funds are covered by private institutions, which are funded through monthly contributions levied on salaries at a monthly rate of 7.75% for employers and 7.25% for employees, with a monthly salary ceiling of USD6,523.20. The Pension Fund

Administration considers any compensation for services provided in El Salvador under an existing employment relationship to be taxable, regardless of the migratory status of the individual. For foreign individuals, the Pension Fund Administration has established a refund mechanism for such contributions, and a refund may be requested after the foreign individual leaves El Salvador. In principle, salary-in-kind is not subject to Pension Fund contributions because the Pension Fund Law states that only compensation received in cash by the employee for ordinary services rendered to the employer is subject to Pension Fund contributions.

In addition, employers with 10 or more employees are required to withhold a 1% contribution for the Salvadoran Institution for Professional Education (in Spanish, INSAFORP).

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The normal tax year is the calendar year. Returns must be filed and any tax liabilities due must be paid within the first four months of the following tax year. Extensions are not available.

Employers are responsible for withholding income tax and social security contributions from employees' salaries on a monthly basis. Employees must file annual income tax returns, which report their employment compensation and corresponding taxes withheld. However, employees are not required to file annual income tax returns if their annual earnings are less than USD60,000. However, they must file annual income tax returns if the income was not subject to withholding or if the withholding was not in accordance with the tax due based on the progressive tax rate table.

In June and December of each year, a half-year and end-of-year withholding recalculation is required. To determine withholding as of June and December, the employer must recalculate based on accumulated taxable wages at the end of each period.

In principle, nonresidents are required to file tax returns. However, if all El Salvador-source income was subject to withholding at source, the withholding tax is considered a final tax and the filing of a tax return is not required.

Individuals who are taxpayers in El Salvador are required to file a Personal Real Estate Statement, which is filed together with the annual income tax return. Taxpayers who satisfy any of the following conditions are exempt from the filing of a Personal Real Estate Statement:

- They have annual income equal to or less than 362 minimum monthly salaries (USD132,130) in a tax year.
- They own real estate in El Salvador with a fair market value equal to or less than 1,446 minimum monthly salaries (USD527,790).
- They do not own real estate in El Salvador.

E. Foreign tax relief and double tax treaties

In general, Salvadoran law does not provide relief for foreign taxes paid, except in case of taxes on foreign dividends, interest, capital gains or any other benefits derived from investments in or sales of securities, financial instruments and derivative contracts, and interest from cash deposits in financial institutions abroad (see Section A). El Salvador has entered into a tax treaty with Spain to avoid double taxation and prevent evasion of income tax and net worth tax.

F. Temporary visas

Depending on their country of citizenship, individuals may be required to apply for and obtain an entry visa before traveling to El Salvador. A Salvadoran consulate overseas grants the visa. Because the rules indicating the countries of citizenship of individuals who are required to obtain an entry visa before entering El Salvador and requirements for obtaining a visa often vary, it is necessary to check the entry visa requirements on a case-by-case basis.

G. Work permits

Foreigners must apply for a work permit to work in El Salvador, regardless of where the compensation is paid. The government of El Salvador grants work authorization to foreign employees, under the option of temporary resident. This is subject to certain rules that have to be checked on a case-by-case basis because these rules vary among employees and by country of citizenship. The application must be filed once the foreigner arrives in El Salvador.

The approximate time for obtaining a work permit after all documents are filed with the immigration authorities ranges from three months to four months. Work permits are valid for one year and are renewable for similar periods of time.

H. Residence permits

The government of El Salvador may grant residencies to foreign nationals who are interested in residing in El Salvador as foreign workers as well as to the dependents of foreign workers. Dependents must prove that they receive income from the foreign worker or that the foreign worker covers their living expenses. However, immigration requirements generally are amended frequently in El Salvador, and applicable requirements may vary among workers. As a result, the rules should be checked on a case-by-case basis.

Foreigners may apply for local residency with the General Direction of Immigration and Foreigner Issues (Dirección General de Migración y Extranjería) if certain requirements are met. Residency is granted for a renewable one- to two-year period.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. El Salvador law does not grant an automatic work authorization to family members of a foreign worker. Family members wanting to work must apply independently to obtain a work authorization.

Children of expatriates must have student visas or dependent visas to attend schools and/or universities in El Salvador. The rules should be checked on a case-by-case basis. After the children become adults (turn 18 years old), they must apply separately for a residency in El Salvador.

Marital property regime. If the two spouses do not establish one of the three patrimonial regimes contemplated in the Family Code of the Republic of El Salvador (Separation of Assets, Profit Sharing and Deferred Compensation), the regime of Deferred Compensation is automatically applied. Such regime is applied as the supplementary regime under which all assets obtained by any means, except by donation, after the commencement of the marriage are considered to be marital property.

Forced heirship. If an individual dies without leaving a will, the beneficiaries of his or her assets and patrimony according to the law are in the following order:
- 1: Descendants, parents and spouse
- 2: Grandparents and other ascendants and grandchildren
- 3: Brothers
- 4: Nephews
- 5: Uncles
- 6: Cousins
- 7: University of El Salvador and national hospitals

Amounts for the following are deducted, paid and/or removed from the mortuary estate before the estate is distributed to the beneficiaries:
- Mortuary procedures
- Debts
- Taxes
- Maintenance obligations of the deceased

Driver's permits. Foreigners entering El Salvador are authorized to drive vehicles with a current driver's permit from their country, subject to the following:
- Reciprocity principle and provisions of international conventions and treaties ratified by El Salvador
- The validity of the authorization under which the visitor remains in El Salvador
- Validation of the foreign driver's permit issued by the country of origin

After the entrance visa has elapsed, driver's permits can be acquired from a private entity authorized by the government to issue the permits. When a foreigner obtains a migratory status that allows him or her to reside in El Salvador, he or she is required to obtain a local driver's permit. This applies only if the temporary residency granted to the foreigner is for a term longer than four months.

A. Income tax

Who is liable

Territoriality. Individuals are subject to income tax based on residence. Taxpayers are categorized as residents or nonresidents.

In principle, residents are subject to general income tax on world-wide income. However, recent tax audits have shown that the government auditors tax only income derived from Equatorial Guinean sources.

Nonresidents are taxed on income derived from Equatorial Guinea.

Definition of resident. A person may be considered resident in Equatorial Guinea for tax purposes under a facts-and-circumstances test or under an arbitrary test, which is based on the number of days of presence in Equatorial Guinea.

Under the fact and circumstances test, an individual is considered to be a tax resident of Equatorial Guinea if he or she satisfies either of the following conditions:
- He or she has a dwelling in Equatorial Guinea in the capacity of owner, equitable owner or tenant, regardless of whether he or she is part of a family unit.
- He or she has his or her principal residence in Equatorial Guinea.

Under the arbitrary test, an individual is considered to be a tax resident of Equatorial Guinea, if he or she satisfies both of the following conditions:
- He or she stays in Equatorial Guinea for more than three months in a calendar year or for more than six months within two consecutive calendar years.
- He or she carries on operations or provides remunerated services in Equatorial Guinea.

For individuals in the hydrocarbon sector, an individual needs to stay in Equatorial Guinea for more than three months in a calendar year to meet the arbitrary test mentioned above.

Individuals who are not considered to be tax residents under the facts and circumstances or arbitrary tests are classified as tax nonresidents.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Taxable income includes all remuneration, fringe benefits, allowances, overtime and bonuses.

The amount of income arising from fringe benefits equals specified percentages of gross wages, as shown in the following table.

Type of fringe benefit	Percentage of gross wages
Accommodation	15%
Domestic services	5%
Water and electricity	5%
Service or office vehicle	5%
Food	20% of the gross wages, up to a maximum amount of XAF150,000

Allowances covering professional expenses (limited to 20% of the total remuneration with a cap of XAF1 million per year) are exempted from tax.

Investment income. Under Article 252 of the General Tax Code, dividends received by resident individuals are included in taxable income and subject to income tax at the progressive tax rates. The tax may be reduced through the filing of a global income return, as provided under Articles 240 and 241 of the General Tax Code.

A final withholding tax at a rate of 25% is imposed on dividends and interest paid to nonresidents.

Self-employment income. Individuals are subject to income tax on their self-employment income from real estate assets, as well as from commercial, noncommercial, agricultural and professional activities.

The taxable income or profit from self-employment activities equals the difference between the total income derived from and the total expenses incurred in such activities.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from the sale of real estate assets are subject to income tax.

Exempt income. The following types of income are exempt from tax:
- Special payments intended to cover expenses inherent to the nature of the employment, such as travel allowances, to the extent that the allowance corresponds to the length of the travel and does not exceed the additional expense borne by the employee
- Family allowances
- Student scholarships
- Temporary payments to victims of accidents at work
- Damages paid under a judicial order to an individual who has suffered permanent damage
- Seniority payments

Deductions. In addition to the deductions claimed with respect to various categories of income, individuals may deduct certain items, including the following:
- Interest on loans and debt that are incurred for the construction, purchase or major repairs of real estate located in Equatorial Guinea that the individual maintains as his or her principal residence
- Alimony and child support paid in compliance with a judicial ruling
- Payments made for the purpose of setting up retirement funds in accordance with the rules of the Ministry of Labor
- Payments made to the Institute of Social Security on behalf of domestic employees
- Payments of allowances or pensions that are delayed

If a loss is recorded in an income category, such loss may be carried forward to offset income in the following three years. In the oil and gas sector, losses may be carried forward to the following five years. However, losses arising from recreational real estate or real estate that is used for summer holidays may not be used in such a manner.

Rates

Residents. Residents are subject to individual income tax at the following progressive rates.

Taxable income XAF	Tax rate %	Tax due XAF	Cumulative tax due XAF
First 1,000,000	0	0	0
Next 2,000,000	10	200,000	200,000
Next 2,000,000	15	300,000	500,000
Next 5,000,000	20	1,000,000	1,500,000
Next 5,000,000	25	1,250,000	2,750,000
Next 5,000,000	30	1,500,000	4,250,000
Above 20,000,000	35	—	—

Nonresidents. Nonresidents are subject to tax at a rate of 20% (oil and gas sector) and 15% (other sectors) of the gross salary earned in Equatorial Guinea.

B. Other taxes

Inheritance and gift taxes. Inheritance and gift taxes are imposed on acquisitions by individuals of the following:
- Goods located in Equatorial Guinea.
- Rights, shares and obligations that have arisen, can be exercised or fulfilled in Equatorial Guinea.
- Goods and chattels located outside of Equatorial Guinea if the decedent or successor, or the donor or beneficiary, are citizens of Equatorial Guinea. This category includes benefits from life insurance contracts.

The following items are included in the tax base for inheritance and gift tax purposes:
- Acquisitions as a result of death (mortis causa): the actual value of the goods and rights acquired by each successor reduced by the burdens and debts that may be deductible

- Donations and other inter vivos acquisitions as gifts: the value of the goods and rights acquired, reduced by the burdens or debts that are deductible
- Life insurance: the amounts received by the beneficiary

The following are the inheritance and gift tax rates:
- All hereditary successions over XAF100,000: 10%
- Donations: 5%
- Life insurance: 10%

Tax on Individuals. The Tax on Individuals is imposed annually on all individuals residing or domiciled in Equatorial Guinea that are 18 years or older. The tax is imposed regardless of the individual's nationality or origin.

The amount of the Tax on Individuals depends on the area of residence in Equatorial Guinea. The Tax on Individuals is XAF5,000 for Malabo and Bata, and XAF3,500 for Mongomo, Ebibeyin, Evinayong, Luba, Djibloho and Annobón.

The Tax on Individuals must be paid within the first quarter of each fiscal year. In practice, this tax is paid by employers on behalf of their employees.

Property tax. All owners of and certain other individuals holding rights in urban real estate are subject to urban property tax. The tax base equals 40% of the sum of the value of the land and buildings. The tax rate is 1%. If the tax base for properties held by a taxpayer totals less than XAF1 million, the taxpayer is exempt from tax. In addition, certain properties are not subject to the tax.

C. Social contributions

Social security. Employees subject to individual income tax are also subject to social security contributions.

The social security contributions are based on gross salary, including, but not limited to, base salary and other fixed and periodic income derived in Equatorial Guinea.

The rate of the employer contribution is 21.5%, while the rate of the employee contribution is 4.5%.

Social security covers pension, death, temporary incapacity, maternity and medical assistance.

Worker Protection Fund. Employers and employees must make contributions to the Worker Protection Fund (WPF). The employer contribution is based on gross salary, while the employee contribution is based on net salary. Gross salary includes base salary, fringe benefits, allowances, overtime pay and bonuses. To calculate net salary, social security payments made to local social security systems for the employee and personal income tax are subtracted from gross salary.

The contribution rates for the WPF are 1% for employers and 0.5% for employees. The seniority payment is exempted from the social security and WPF contributions and the individual income tax.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Equatorial Guinea for purposes of general income tax is the calendar year.

Employers must withhold individual income tax on behalf of their employees and remit such tax to the tax administration by the 15th day of the following month.

Penalties for late payments of individual income tax are imposed at a rate of 25% of the tax owed. Interest is payable on arrears at a rate of 10% per month.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Equatorial Guinea has entered into the Economic and Monetary Community of Central Africa (Communauté Économique et Monétaire de l'Afrique Centrale, or CEMAC) tax treaty.

F. Temporary visas

A person who wants to enter Equatorial Guinea must apply for a temporary visa. This visa can be obtained by contacting an Equatorial Guinea Embassy in Belgium, Cameroon, China, Ethiopia, France, Gabon, Morocco, Nigeria, the Russian Federation, Spain or the United States. Foreigners who do not have an Equatorial Guinea Embassy in their countries may obtain a temporary visa in any country where an Equatorial Guinea Embassy is located.

CEMAC, Tunisian and US nationals are not required to obtain visas.

G. Work permits and self-employment

The labor ministry issues the following five types of work permits:
- Permit A (PA) is granted to an employee who will work in a single work location for less than six months. It is not renewable.
- Initial Permit B (IPB) is granted to an individual who will engage in an established profession, working place or activity. It is valid for one year.
- Permit B Renewed (PBR) is granted to individuals holding IPB at the end of the validity period for IPB. It is valid for two years.
- Permit C (PC) is granted to individuals holding PBR at the end of the validity period for PBR. It is valid for three years.
- Permanent Permit (PP) is granted to individuals holding PC at the end of the validity period for PC.

A company must apply for a work permit before the foreign employee begins work in Equatorial Guinea. An application must be filed with the employment office of the city where the employer resides or where the employment contract will be carried out.

Before applying for a work permit, a person must apply for the authorization of recruitment.

H. Residence permits

In addition to work permits, foreign workers must obtain residence permits to work in Equatorial Guinea.

The requirement to hold a residence permit depends on the duration of the stay in Equatorial Guinea. For further information, please contact the police department in Malabo.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family members of foreign executives are granted no special privileges with respect to the right to work in Equatorial Guinea.

Marital property regime. Couples who are married in Equatorial Guinea may elect the community property or separate property regime to apply to their marital property.

Community property is the default regime. A couple married abroad is subject to the laws of the country where the marriage was solemnized.

Driver's permits. Foreign workers may not drive legally in Equatorial Guinea with their home country driver's license or their international driver's license. Equatorial Guinea does not have driver's license reciprocity with other countries.

To obtain a driver's license in Equatorial Guinea, a foreign citizen already possessing a driver's license from his or her home country may apply for an Equatorial Guinea driver's license, which requires the temporary surrender of the home country driver's license.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents of Estonia are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to income tax on income from Estonian sources only.

For tax purposes, individuals are considered to be resident if they have a permanent place of residence in Estonia or if they remain in Estonia for at least 183 days during a period of 12 consecutive calendar months. Natural persons must inform the tax authorities about the establishment or change of their Estonian residency by submitting a special registration form to the tax authorities.

Income subject to tax. Income for tax purposes is income derived from all sources, including salaries, wages, pensions, scholarships, grants, capital gains, lottery prizes, directors' fees, insurance indemnities, payments from a pension fund (supplementary or voluntary pension), rent payments, royalties, interest accrued from loans, securities, leases or other debt obligations, and other payments made for services rendered (under contracts governed by the Law of Obligations, which stipulates the terms of civil law agreements).

Individuals acting independently in their own name and at their own risk are subject to income tax on income derived from self-employment or entrepreneurial activities.

Education allowances provided by employers to their local or expatriate employees' children are taxable for income tax and social tax purposes.

Items excluded from taxable income. In general, fringe benefits, including a company car, housing, lunch vouchers and similar items, are not treated as taxable income of the recipient. Instead, the Estonian employer pays the income tax on fringe benefits, including fringe benefits provided by a nonresident company belonging to the same group as the employer. If foreign employees working in Estonia are paid solely by a foreign company, the foreign company must register in Estonia as a nonresident employer and pay income tax and social tax (if no A1 certificate in place) on fringe benefits provided to the employee working in Estonia. In the case of an A1 certificate, the foreign employee is not liable for Estonian social tax in accordance with the rules of European Council Regulation No. 883/2004.

Various items are excluded from the taxable income of residents including, but not limited to, the following:

- Inheritances received (accepted succession).
- Gifts received from other individuals, state or local government authorities, resident legal persons or nonresidents through or on account of their permanent establishment registered in Estonia.
- Insurance proceeds received under specific insurance contracts.
- Dividends received from resident companies. Effective from 2018, dividends received from resident companies taxed at a lower rate under a special three-year distribution rule are included in the taxable income of individuals.
- Dividends received from nonresident companies, if income tax was paid on the share of profits out of which the dividends were paid or if income tax on the dividends was withheld in a foreign country.
- Income from the exchange of a holding (for example, shares) in the course of a merger, division or transformation of companies or nonprofit associations, or a merger of investment funds.
- Income from the increase or acquisition of a holding in a company through a non-monetary contribution.
- Income from the exchange of units of an investment fund.
- Income from transfers of movable property used for personal purposes.
- Gains derived from transfers of real estate, structures or apartments treated as movables or as contributions to housing associations, if the asset is privatized under government order, is received as restitution for the unlawful alienation of property or is used as the taxpayer's primary or permanent place of residence.
- Gains derived from transfers of summer cottages or garden houses owned by residents for more than two years if the size of the land related to the cottage or house does not exceed 0.25 hectares.
- Employment income and service fees for working in a foreign state if the individual has stayed in the foreign state for the purpose of employment for at least 183 days during a period of 12 consecutive calendar months and if the relevant income has been included in the taxable income of the person in the foreign state and this is certified, with the amount of income tax indicated on the certificate (even if the amount is zero).
- Per diem allowances and accommodation costs of business trips, and compensation for business use of a private car, in accordance with the prescribed rates.
- Childbirth allowances paid by an employer to an employee or public servant, in an amount not exceeding EUR2,500.
- In-service training and retraining of employees paid for by the employer on termination of the employment or service relationship as a result of redundancy.
- Payments at prescribed rates by an employer for the treatment of damage caused to the health of an employee or public servant as a result of an accident at work or an occupational disease.
- Payments made to diplomats on the basis of the Foreign Service Act.
- Benefits paid to victims of crime under the law.
- Gambling winnings received from gambling organized on the basis of an operating permit or registration.

- Pensions in accordance with the prescribed limits.
- Scholarships that are paid by the state or that are mandatory according to the law, if they are not paid with respect to entrepreneurship, employment or management board member status.
- Property returned as restitution in the course of ownership reform.

In addition, compensation for certified expenses incurred for the benefit of another person and compensation for direct proprietary damage that is not paid with respect to entrepreneurial activities are not deemed to be taxable income of a resident, except for compensation that is paid subject to separate terms, conditions and limits, such as compensation for the business use of a private car.

Effective from July 2020, a special personal income tax regime for seamen applies, under which a 0% income tax rate is applied to crew member remuneration derived from work done on a ship meeting the following conditions:
- The ship has a gross tonnage of at least 500 and is used for international carriage of goods or passengers by sea, except passenger ships engaged in regular service in the European Economic Area (EEA).
- The ship is flying the flag of an EEA contracting state.

Self-employment income. For registered sole proprietors, all income attributable to self-employment or entrepreneurship is subject to income tax and social tax. General partnerships are taxed as entities.

Effective from 2018, an individual not registered as a sole proprietor can open a business income account (a bank account in a credit institution resident in an EEA member state) for business income simplified taxation. Income derived from selling goods or services transferred to the business income account is subject to business income tax at the following rates.

Taxable income
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	Tax rate %
0	25,000	20
25,000	—	40

The tax should be automatically calculated, withheld and paid to the tax authorities on a monthly basis by the credit institution. The tax is used to proportionally cover all payroll tax obligations applicable to the individual. No separate social security contributions are due. The individual is covered by social security, provided that the tax paid meets the minimum social tax obligation.

Investment income. Dividends received by residents from resident companies are exempt from tax. However, effective from 2018, dividends received from resident companies that are taxed at a lower rate under a special three-year distribution rule are included in the taxable income of the individual. Residents are taxed on all dividends and other profit distributions received from foreign companies unless income tax was paid on the profits out of which the dividends were paid or unless income tax on the dividends was withheld in a foreign country.

Dividends paid to shareholders are not subject to withholding tax. However, effective from 2018, dividends paid to individuals (including nonresident individuals) are subject to an additional 7% income tax withholding if those dividends are paid by a resident company and taxed at a 14% corporate income tax rate at the company level.

Dividends and profit distributions paid by resident companies are subject to corporate income tax at a rate of 20% at the level of the distributing companies at the moment of the profit distribution. This tax is not a withholding tax and is paid by the company, in addition to the amount of dividends distributed.

Rental payments and royalties paid to resident individuals are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 20%. However, if a dwelling is rented out under a rental agreement, under certain conditions, the tax authorities consider 20% of rental income as rental-related costs and only 80% is taxed. This deduction can be applied in the personal income tax return.

Nonresidents. Nonresident individuals are taxed on the following types of income derived from Estonian sources:
- Income from the alienation or lease of assets registered in Estonia.
- Interest received as a result of ownership of a contractual investment fund if the fund owned (directly or indirectly) at any time during the two-year period before the date of interest payment more that 50% of real estate located in Estonia and if the interest recipient owns at least 10% of the investment fund, unless the profits of the investment fund has been already taxed.
- Royalties and income from sales or licenses of patents, copyrights, trademarks, software, know-how and other information received from Estonian persons.
- Liquidation distributions and payments related to a company's reduction of its stock capital, to the extent the amount received exceeds the acquisition cost of the shares, except for the portion of the amount received that has been taxed at the level of the company making the payments.
- Salary, wages and other employment income for work performed in Estonia if more than 183 days are spent in Estonia or if the payments are made by a resident or a nonresident registered in Estonia. Starting from January 2021, nonresident rental employee employment income becomes taxable in Estonia from day one if the user entity is an entity registered in Estonia.
- Income of nonresident board members (this income is taxed even if the remuneration for managing the Estonian company is paid by a foreign company).
- Dividends or other profit distributions received from Estonian resident companies that were taxed at a reduced rate of 14% at the company level.

Nonresidents are exempt from tax on the following types of income:
- Inheritances received (accepted succession)
- Income from the transfer of movable property used for personal purposes
- Expropriation payments and compensation paid on expropriation

- Income from the exchange of a holding (for example, shares) in the course of a merger, division or transformation of companies or nonprofit associations, or a merger of investment funds
- Income from the increase in or acquisition of a holding in a company through a non-monetary contribution
- Income from the exchange of units of an investment fund
- Interest received by nonresident individuals from resident credit institutions or branches of nonresident credit institutions entered in the Estonian commercial register
- Per diem allowances and accommodation costs with respect to business trips, and compensation for business use of a private car, in accordance with the prescribed rates
- Gains derived from transfers of real estate, structures or apartments treated as movables or as contributions to housing associations, if the asset is privatized under government order, is received as restitution for the unlawful alienation of property or is used as the taxpayer's primary or permanent place of residence
- Gains derived from transfers of summer cottages or garden houses owned by residents for more than two years if the size of the land related to the cottage or house does not exceed 0.25 hectares

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Grants of stock options are not considered taxable. However, the income received from the transfer of employer-provided stock options or from the exercise of stock options is considered a fringe benefit that is taxable to the Estonian employer for purposes of income tax and social tax unless the time period between grant and exercise of the stock options is at least three years. Effective from July 2017, an exemption from company-level fringe benefit tax also applies in the case of a shorter vesting period. This exemption applies proportionally to the actual vesting period if full ownership in the relevant company (underlying securities of an option) is transferred or if the employee dies or is totally incapacitated for work. Fringe benefits include benefits that are provided by other group entities to the Estonian employee. The taxable value of a fringe benefit is the difference between the fair market value of the securities and the purchase price paid by the employee. Except for option agreements digitally signed or certified by a notary, agreements concluded since 1 July 2017 should be filed with the tax authorities within five working days after their conclusion.

No tax obligations are imposed on employees with respect to the receipt of non-monetary benefits from Estonian or foreign employers. However, the employees should inform their employer if such benefits are received from foreign companies. Employees must report income and pay income tax when a gain is derived from the sale of the shares. A capital gain equals the sales price reduced by the acquisition price, by the taxable value for income tax purposes of the fringe benefit paid by the employer and by the costs related to the transfer.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived by resident individuals with respect to the following sources are not subject to income tax:

- Transfer of movable property in personal use
- Transfer of land and assets returned in the course of ownership reform

- Transfer of a dwelling house or an apartment, if it has been used as a permanent home until transfer (applicable to one transfer of residence during a two-year period), received as restitution or acquired as a result of privatization with the right of preemption and if the size of the related land does not exceed two hectares
- Transfer of a summer cottage or garden house if it has been owned for more than two years and if the size of the related land does not exceed 0.25 hectares

Capital gains derived from the sale of business property or securities are taxable at a rate of 20%.

Natural persons can register their bank accounts as investment accounts and defer the taxation of financial income until it is withdrawn from the accounts; that is, it is possible to invest the income gained from some common financial investments without being liable to annual taxation on such income.

Nonresident individuals are taxed on gains derived from the sale of property located in Estonia, excluding transfers of permanent homes under the same criteria described above regarding residents and securities issued by companies registered in Estonia. However, this exclusion does not apply if the transferred holding is a holding in a company, contractual investment fund or other pool of assets and if both of the following circumstances exist:
- At the time of the transfer or during the two-year period before the transfer, more than 50% of the property of the company, fund or pool of assets was directly or indirectly made up of immovables or structures as movables located in Estonia.
- At the time of transfer, the nonresident had a holding of at least 10% in the company, fund or pool of assets.

Deductions

Deductible expenses and exemptions. Estonian residents, as well as residents of other EEA member states who derive their taxable income from Estonia and file an income tax return in Estonia, may claim deductions for the following items:
- Gifts to nonprofit organizations registered as tax favored in the EEA.
- Mandatory unemployment insurance premiums, contributions to mandatory funded pensions and other mandatory social security payments made in Estonia or abroad from income taxable in Estonia.
- Acquisition of voluntary pension fund units registered in the EEA, limited to 15% of income for the tax year or to EUR6,000, after subtracting the deductions from business income (joint limits with employer making such payments on behalf of an employee).
- Training expenses, which include costs of educating individuals and their dependents who are under 26 years old and permanent residents of Estonia who are under 26 years old and in certified educational institutions or license training. For adults, the deductions are available only for expenses for formal education and certain additional limitations apply to driver's license training and hobby school costs.

- Interest paid to EEA credit institutions on housing loans for the purpose of acquiring an apartment, dwelling house or a plot of land to build a house for personal use (including erection, expansion and reconstruction of a home).

The total amount of deductible gifts, housing loan interest and training expenses for a tax year is limited to EUR1,200 or 50% of an individual's income after business deductions. Housing loan interest is deductible up to EUR300.

Effective from 2020, an increased basic exemption of up to EUR5,000 can be deducted from the income derived from the sale of timber felled from an immovable belonging to a forest owner, the transfer of the right to cut the standing crop growing there and Natura 2000 support for private forest land after the deductions related to forest management have been made.

In addition to the above deductions, the following tax exemptions apply for each tax year under the same circumstances:

- Basic tax exemption. The amount is EUR6,000 if the annual income is up to EUR14,400. However, if income exceeds EUR14,400, the amount of basic tax exemption is calculated using the following formula:

$$6{,}000 - \frac{6{,}000}{10{,}800} \times (\text{income amount} - \text{EUR}14{,}400)$$

  If annual income exceeds EUR25,200, no basic exemption applies.
- Additional tax exemption if raising two or more minor children. The additional basic exemption for a second child is EUR1,848. Starting with the third child, it is EUR3,048.

Effective from 2020, a resident in Estonia and a resident of another state that is a contracting party to the EEA agreement may take deductions into account regardless of the share of the income derived from a foreign state.

Deductions do not apply to crew member remuneration, which is subject to a 0% income tax, including basic tax exemption, additional tax exemption for provision of maintenance to a child, increased basic exemption for spouse, interest paid on housing loans, training expenses, gifts and donations, insurance premiums, acquisitions of pension fund units and mandatory social security contributions.

Business deductions. Registered individual entrepreneurs may deduct documented expenses directly related to entrepreneurial or self-employment activities, including expenses for work-related advanced training and retraining of employees, and losses incurred from the disposal of assets (except for losses incurred on the sale of securities). If certain expenses are only partly related to the entrepreneurial or self-employment activities, only the part directly related to those activities is deductible.

Documented expenses for entertainment, recreation, reception (catering, transport or cultural expenses incurred to serve clients or business partners) and other expenses incurred for clients or business partners with respect to entrepreneurial or self-employment activities may be deducted from income, up to a maximum amount of 2% of adjusted income. Adjusted income is financial income after adjustments for nontaxable income and expenses that are not deductible for tax purposes.

Rates. The standard income tax rate is a flat rate of 20%. The basic annual exemption ranges regressively from nil to EUR6,000, depending on the amount of the individual's income (see Deductible expenses and exemptions).

Withholding tax rates are presented in the following table.

Type of payment	Rate (%)
Dividends	0/7 (a)
Interest	20
Wages and salaries	20
Payments for services rendered in Estonia
By nonresident legal persons from a low tax rate territory or noncooperative tax jurisdictions (b)	20
By other nonresidents	10
Royalties
Paid to residents	20
Paid to nonresidents	10
Rent	20
Payments made to nonresident athletes and artists	10
Supplementary and voluntarily funded pension payments	10

(a) The 7% withholding tax rate applies to dividends or other profit distributions received from Estonian resident companies that were taxed at a reduced rate of 14% at the company level.
(b) Effective from 1 July 2021, the current list of low-tax territories indicated in the Estonian Income Tax Act is replaced by the European Union (EU) list of noncooperative tax jurisdictions.

Credits. Residents may claim a credit for foreign tax paid, up to the amount of Estonian tax attributable to the foreign-source income. The rules regarding the calculation of the credit are summarized below.

Income tax is calculated separately for income derived in Estonia and for income derived in each foreign country. The individual must pay in Estonia the difference between the foreign income tax and Estonian income tax if the income tax calculated on income derived from abroad exceeds the amount of income tax paid in the foreign country. The overpaid amount of income tax abroad is not refunded in Estonia.

If the income tax on income derived in a foreign country is paid during a tax year other than the tax year in which the income is derived, the foreign income tax is taken into account in Estonia during the tax year in which the income taxable in a foreign country is received.

Foreign dividends and employment income are exempt from tax in Estonia if these types of income are taxable abroad (see Income subject to tax).

Relief for losses. Losses from entrepreneurship, except losses incurred on the sale of securities and receivables, may be offset against income derived from other sources of entrepreneurship. Losses may generally be carried forward for seven years. However, losses incurred on the sale of securities may offset only income from the sale of securities and may be carried forward indefinitely.

B. Inheritance and gift tax

Inheritance and gift taxes are not levied in Estonia. However, gifts received from nonresident entities are taxed at a rate of 20%.

C. Social security

Contributions. Social tax is levied on employers at a rate of 33%; employees are not liable for social tax. No ceiling applies to the amount of salary subject to social tax. In addition, unemployment insurance and mandatory pension fund (if one has joined) charges are imposed on gross salary. The unemployment insurance rates are 0.8% for employers and 1.6% for employees. The mandatory pension fund rate is 2%, which applies only to employees. The unemployment insurance and mandatory pension fund charge are withheld by employers.

Effective from 2021, the mandatory pension fund is no longer mandatory and one can opt to leave or not join the mandatory pension fund. Individuals who have not joined can join. Also, individuals can withdraw and use the money accumulated in the mandatory pension fund before reaching the pensionable age. As a general rule, the money withdrawn from the fund before pensionable age is subject to income tax at a rate of 20%. If the money is taken out after pensionable age, on certain conditions, a lower tax rate of 10% or a tax exemption may apply.

Self-employed persons must pay social tax at a rate of 33% on their net business income, subject to a maximum amount of annual income equal to 10 times the sum of the minimum monthly wages for the tax year (maximum amount of EUR70,080 for 2021). Self-employed persons must make quarterly advance payments of social tax to the Tax and Customs Board by the 15th day of the third month of the second, third and fourth quarters. Each payment must be at least EUR578.16 (EUR2,312.64 for the calendar year).

Effective from July 2020, new social tax rules apply to remuneration paid to seamen. A reduced social tax rate 20% and fixed tax base EUR750 per month are applicable for qualifying entities if the following conditions are satisfied:

- The ship has a gross tonnage of at least 500 and is used for international carriage of goods or passengers by sea, except passenger ships engaged in regular service in the EEA.
- The ship is flying the flag of a contracting state.

Crew member remuneration that is subject to social tax is also subject to unemployment insurance contributions and mandatory pension fund contributions.

Totalization agreements. Estonian social security legislation follows the rules provided in European Council Regulation No. 883/2004, effective from 2020, the Brexit Withdrawal Agreement and, effective from 2021, the agreement between the EU and the European Atomic Energy Community and the United Kingdom.

Estonia has applicable totalization agreements on social security with Australia, Canada and Ukraine. It has agreements regarding pension insurance regulation with Moldova and the Russian Federation.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Estonia is the calendar year.

An individual must file an income tax return if his or her annual income exceeds the amount of the basic exemption applicable to him or her and if he or she would be required to pay additional income tax based on the income tax return or if he or she would like to claim applicable tax deductions. Resident individuals also need to submit a tax return to report their foreign income. Individual income tax returns must be filed by 30 April of the year following the tax year. Individuals must pay income tax due by 1 October of the year following the tax year. Spouses cannot file a joint tax return. However, a spouse may use the other spouse's basic exemption up to EUR2,160, depending on the other spouse's taxable income, provided that the sum of the spouses' taxable income does not exceed EUR50,400.

Employers must withhold the appropriate amount of income tax from employees' salaries. Tax liability is determined by deducting taxes withheld, and creditable amounts of foreign taxes paid, from the computed amount of income tax.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Most of Estonia's double tax treaties follow the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) model convention. The income tax law provides relief for foreign taxes paid, up to the amount of Estonian tax imposed on the foreign-source income (see Section A).

Estonia has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Estonia signed the Multilateral Convention to Implement Tax Treaty Related Measures to prevent Base Erosion and Profit Shifting (also known as the Multilateral Instrument or MLI), which allows the modification of existing tax treaties simultaneously. For Estonia, the MLI entered into force as of 1 May 2021, meaning that it is applicable with respect to the covered tax treaties concluded by Estonia as of 1 January 2022. For an individual, the MLI will extend the possibilities to initiate mutual agreement procedures. In the future, an Estonian resident, in certain cases, may turn for a tax dispute to the tax authority of the member state where the income is earned.

F. Temporary visas

Exceptions to the visa requirement. In general, a foreign national must have a visa to enter Estonia or stay in Estonia. However, visas are not required for the individuals described below.

A citizen of the EU, EEA or Switzerland may stay in Estonia on the basis of a valid travel document or identity document and must register his or her place of residence within three months after his or her date of entry in Estonia. If a citizen of the EU, EEA or Switzerland registers his or her place of residence, he or she acquires a temporary right of residence in Estonia for five years, which also gives the right to work in Estonia. At the end of the five years, the term of temporary right of residence is extended for another five years if the residence of the citizen of the EU, EEA or Switzerland continues to be registered in Estonia and if the right of residence of this citizen has not been extinguished or terminated. The EU member states are Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Croatia, Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, the Netherlands, Poland, Portugal, Romania, the Slovak Republic, Slovenia, Spain and Sweden. The EEA member states are all of the EU member states and Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway.

Holders of diplomatic and official passports of Argentina, Morocco, Philippines and Thailand may stay in Estonia without a visa for up to 90 days during a 6-month period. Holders of diplomatic and service passports from Bolivia, Cape Verde and Ukraine may stay in Estonia without a visa for up to 90 days during a 6-month period. Holders of biometric diplomatic passports of Mongolia may stay in Estonia without a visa for up to 90 days during a 6-month period. Holders of the United Nations travel permit (laissez-passer) may stay in Estonia without a visa for up to 90 days during a 6-month period.

In addition, a third-country national who is a holder of a residence permit of a Schengen state or appropriate Schengen visa (see below) may enter and stay in Estonia during the validity period of such Schengen residence permit or visa. Member states of Schengen include Switzerland and all EEA countries except Bulgaria, Croatia, Cyprus, Ireland and Romania.

Types of visas. Foreign nationals may enter Estonia or its international transit zone with the following types of Schengen visas:
- Airport transit (Type A)
- Short-term (Type C)
- Long-term (Type D)

An airport transit visa (Type A) is issued for entry into the international transit zone at an Estonian airport and for the stay in such zone until the departure to the next transit country or arrival country, where the person has a legal right to enter. The visa does not grant a foreign citizen the right to enter Estonia or stay in Estonia.

Nationals from the following countries must possess an airport transit visa when passing through the international transit area of airports located in Schengen member states:
- Afghanistan
- Bangladesh
- Congo (Democratic Republic of)
- Eritrea
- Ethiopia
- Ghana
- Iran
- Iraq
- Nigeria
- Pakistan
- Somalia
- Sri Lanka

A short-term visa (Type C) is issued for transit through or an intended stay in the territory of EU member states for a duration of no more than 90 days in any 180-day period from the date of first entry in the territory of Schengen member states. If visiting only Estonia, the Schengen visa must be applied for at the Estonian representation or at the representation of the member state representing Estonia in issuing Schengen visas.

If the travel destination includes more than one Schengen member state, the application must be filed at the representation of the main destination. The main destination is the destination where the individual intends to spend the longest time or the destination where the individual intends to carry out the main purpose of the intended journey.

Long-term visas (Type D) are issued for single or multiple entries into Estonia if the intended stay in Estonia will last longer than the period available under a short-term visa (that is, more than three months). The long-term visa is issued for a period of stay up to 12 months, and with a period of validity up to 365 days. It also gives the right to enter other Schengen member states for a period of up to 90 days in a period of 180 days. An individual can apply for a long-term visa for several reasons, such as study, work or family relations. An individual must apply in person for a long-term visa at Estonian representations.

A foreign national may work in Estonia on the basis of a long-term visa. However, before applying for the visa, short-term employment must be registered at the Estonian Police and Border Guard Board (PBGB).

G. Work permits and self-employment

To work in Estonia, a third-country national must hold a valid residence permit that entitles him or her to work. Effective from 1 September 2013, no separate work permit is issued, and aliens residing in Estonia may work on the basis of the residence permit. For details, see Section H.

A citizen of the EU, EEA or Switzerland has the right to stay and work in Estonia on the basis of a valid travel document or identity document and is required to register his or her place of residence within three months after the date of entry into Estonia (see Section F).

Unless an international agreement stipulates otherwise, aliens who arrive or stay in Estonia either on the basis of a long-term visa or on a visa-free basis may engage in short-term employment, which must be registered by their employer at the PBGB. Short-term employment cannot exceed a period of 365 days during a period of 455 days.

Short-term employment may be registered in an expedited procedure (such as for employment as a teacher or lecturer, for scientific research or for employment as a top specialist) or in an ordinary procedure. Under the expedited procedure, the short-term employment must be registered by the next business day after the date of submission of the application. Under the ordinary procedure, short-term employment is registered or refused registration within 15 business days beginning from the date following the date of acceptance of the submission of the application.

The following documents must be submitted when applying for registration of short-term employment in Estonia:

- A standard application form
- Copy of the identity document of the applicant
- A digital color photo, format JPEG, sized 1 to 5 MB, minimum resolution 1300 x 1600 pixels
- Copy of the personal data page of the identity document of the person who submits the application, unless the application is submitted personally by an employer who is a natural person or by a signatory for an employer who is a legal person
- A document certifying the payment of a state fee

Additional documents may be required depending on the basis of short-term employment registration. For example, a document proving professional education is required in certain cases.

H. Residence permits

Citizens of the EU, EEA or Switzerland have the right to stay in Estonia on the basis of a valid travel document or identity document (see Section F). As a result, these individuals are not subject to the rules regarding resident permits discussed below. Residence permits are issued to the third-country nationals and persons with undetermined citizenship. The residence permits may either be temporary (up to five years) or long-term (without a term).

An alien who applies for a residence permit, is subject to the immigration quota of Estonia for aliens, which may not exceed 0.1% of the Estonian permanent population in one year.

Temporary residence permit for employment. An alien may apply for a residence permit for employment with an employer registered in Estonia or for engagement in scientific or research works

if the employer is entered in the register of science and development institutions. To obtain a temporary residence permit, one of the following conditions must be met:

- The Estonian Unemployment Insurance Fund must consent and the salary criterion must be met.
- The Estonian Unemployment Insurance Fund does not consent, and the salary criterion is not fulfilled (applicable to specific categories of employees, such as artists, sports persons, teachers and members of academic staff).
- The Estonian Unemployment Insurance Fund does not consent, but the salary criterion is fulfilled, provided the applicant will work as an expert, advisor or consultant (professional qualification is required).
- The Estonian Unemployment Insurance Fund does not consent, but the salary criterion is fulfilled, and if the applicant will perform managerial or supervisory functions of a legal person registered in Estonia, which is governed by private law, and if the following additional conditions are satisfied:
  - The company must have been registered in Estonia at least five months, it must have been conducting actual business activities in Estonia during the last five months, and the granting of the temporary residence permit will significantly contribute to the granting of a residence permit for employment.
  - It is granted to a partner of a general partnership and limited partnership, member of the management or supervisory board of private limited company, public limited company, foundation or commercial association, member of the management board of a nonprofit association, procurator, liquidator, bankruptcy trustee, auditor, tax auditor, member of an audit committee or director of foreign company branch.

- A document certifying that the applicant has actual domicile in Estonia (unless the domicile has been registered in the population register of Estonia)
- A document certifying the payment of a state fee

Additional documentation requirements exist depending on the basis for the application for the residence permit. The following are examples of these requirements:

- Posted workers: an employment contract from the foreign country, documents certifying the assignment abroad and an insurance contract
- Aliens performing managerial or supervisory functions of legal persons that are governed by private law and registered in Estonia: documents evidencing economic activities of the company (for example, statement of the bank account of the company, data from value-added tax declaration, and documents evidencing transactions and contracts)
- Top specialist: documents evidencing appropriate professional training or experience for the intended employment

A sole proprietor must apply for residence permit for business (see Temporary residence permit for business).

The decision to grant or refuse a temporary work permit must be made within two months after the acceptance of the application.

A residence permit for employment is issued for a period of employment in Estonia that is guaranteed by an employer. The period of validity of this permit is up to two years, and it can be extended for up to five years at a time.

If a higher professional qualification is required for the employment, it is possible to apply for a residence permit for employment on the basis of an EU Blue Card. Higher professional qualification is required for applying for the EU Blue Card. Higher professional qualification may be based on either of the following:

- The nominal time of study of at least three years, which is evidenced by a document certifying higher education
- At least five years of working experience

Jobs for highly qualified individuals require the necessary knowledge and experience evidenced by higher professional qualification. The PBGB assesses the compatibility of the qualification to the requirements before the submission of an application for the EU Blue Card.

The residence permit for employment under an EU Blue Card is issued with a validity period that is three months longer than the employment period granted by an employer. The validity period cannot exceed two years and three months, and it can be extended for up to four years and three months at a time.

Temporary residence permit based on legal income. Since 1 July 2012, it is not possible to apply for temporary residence permit based on the existence of sufficient legal income. Aliens holding a valid residence permit based on the existence of sufficient legal income on 1 July 2012 can extend the residence permit based on the same terms and conditions on which they applied for the residence permit.

Temporary residence permit for settling with a spouse. A temporary residence permit may be issued to a foreign national to settle with his or her spouse who resides in Estonia permanently and who satisfies any of the following conditions:

- He or she is an Estonian citizen.

- He or she is a citizen of an EU member state who holds a right of residence.
- He or she is an alien who has been residing in Estonia on the basis of a residence permit for at least two years, unless the spouse received a residence permit for any of the following:
  - — Business
  - — Master's or doctorate degree studies
  - — Employment on the basis of an EU Blue Card
  - — An alien who formerly resided in Estonia on the basis of an EU Blue Card

In addition to standard documents required, the alien must submit the following documents:

- A document certifying the spouse's actual dwelling in Estonia (unless the residence has been registered in the population register of Estonia)
- Documents certifying the legal income of both spouses
- Insurance contract

The residence permit is refused if false data is submitted with the application, the marriage is fictitious or the spouses do not reside in Estonia.

Temporary residence permit for settling with a close relative. A temporary residence permit may be issued to certain foreign citizens to settle with a close relative who is an Estonian citizen or to settle with a close relative who is a foreign national and who resides in Estonia on the basis of a long-term residence permit. This permit may be issued to the following individuals:

I. Estonian e-Residency

Estonia is the first country to offer e-Residency, which is a transnational digital identity available to anyone in the world interested in administering a location-independent business online.

An e-Resident is a foreigner for whom, as a benefit, Estonia has created a digital identity and issued digital identity card, on the basis of the identification credentials of the foreigner's country of citizenship. This card is an e-Resident digi-ID.

The e-Resident digi-ID is a digital document that only can be used in the electronic environment to identify the person and to give digital signatures. The e-Resident digi-ID enables a foreigner to participate in public and private administration in Estonia, notwithstanding his or her physical residence. The e-Resident digi-ID does not grant a right to reside in Estonia.

The e-Resident digi-ID can be issued to a foreigner who has links to Estonia or a reasonable interest in using public e-services in Estonia, and who is not one of the following:

- A foreigner who is residing in Estonia based on a residence permit or the right of residence
- A foreigner who is staying in Estonia on the basis of the International Military Co-operation Act, and is holding an identity card or residence card issued by the Police and Border Guard Board

E-Residents can do the following:

- Digitally sign documents and contracts
- Verify the authenticity of signed documents
- Encrypt and transit documents securely
- Establish an Estonian company online within a day (currently, a physical address in Estonia is required, which may be obtained using an external service provider)
- Administer the company from anywhere in the world
- Conduct e-banking and remote money transfers
- Access online payment service providers
- Declare Estonian taxes online (e-Residency does not automatically establish tax residency)

E-Residents receive a smart ID card. Digital signatures and authentication are legally equivalent to handwritten signatures and face-to-face identification in Estonia between partners on agreement anywhere in the world.

The following documents are required for applications for e-Residency:

- An application form
- Foreigner's identity document or a copy of the document if the application is submitted by post and by email

- A digital color photo, format JPEG, sized 1 to 5 MB, minimum resolution 1300 x 1600 pixels
- A document certifying payment of the application fee
- A written explanation in free form concerning the intention to use the digital ID and the circumstances of its use (the holders of a service card or diplomat card need not submit this document)
- For an applicant for the e-Resident digital identity who is an employee for external representation, his or her service or diplomatic card

The decision on the issuance or refusal of an e-Resident digi-ID is made within 30 working days.

E-Residency does not confer citizenship, tax residency, residence or right of entry to Estonia or to EU. The e-Resident smart ID card is not a physical identification or a travel document, and does not display a photo.

J. Digital Nomad Visa

Estonia has launched a new Digital Nomad Visa, which allows remote workers to live in Estonia and legally work for their employer or their own company registered abroad.

Remote workers can apply for the Digital Nomad Visa if the following requirements are met:
- They can work independent of location.
- They can perform work duties remotely using telecommunications technology.
- They have an active employment contract with a company registered outside of Estonia, conduct business through their own company registered abroad or work as a freelancer for clients mostly outside of Estonia.
- They provide evidence that their income met the minimum threshold during the six months preceding the application (currently, the monthly income threshold is EUR3,504 [gross of tax]).

To apply for the Digital Nomad Visa, applicants must make an appointment with the nearest Estonian embassy or consulate to submit their application (either short-term or long-term visa application). In addition to the general visa application procedure and rules, applicants need to provide documents proving that they meet the eligibility requirements of being a location-independent employee or digital nomad.

K. Brexit and immigration

UK citizens residing in Estonia as of 31 March 2021 will be able to continue to reside in Estonia on the basis of a valid identification card until its expiration if they do not plan to travel outside of Estonia. From 1 December 2020, UK citizens can exchange their current identification card for a valid residence document that will allow them to reside in Estonia and travel outside of Estonia. UK citizens must have exchanged their present document for a new document proving their new status by the end of June 2021. In the EU, this document is a residence permit card with a reference to Article 50 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, referring to UK citizens' earlier residence in EU member states under EU law. To exchange residence permit cards, all UK citizens must contact PBGB service offices, where they may complete an application form, have a photograph taken, provide fingerprints and pay a state fee.

UK citizens arriving to Estonia after 31 March 2021 are considered third-country nationals and fall within the scope of the Aliens Act. Citizens wishing to stay longer than the granted visa free period (90 days within half a year) must apply for a residence permit in accordance with the requirements established for third-country nationals.

UK citizens studying in Estonia before 31 December 2020 and taking part in courses that continue beyond 2020 need to apply for a new UK-issued European Health Insurance Card. UK citizens with a registered S1 in Estonia can apply for a new UK European Health Insurance Card that will be valid from 1 January 2021.

L. Family and personal considerations

Family members. An Estonian citizen residing in Estonia or a foreign national permanently residing in Estonia may call their spouse to live with them in Estonia, if the spouses share close economic ties, they have a close psychological relationship, the family is stable and the marriage is not fictitious.

A family member of a citizen of an EU or EEA member state or Switzerland may stay in Estonia together with such citizen on the basis of a valid travel document and visa (if applicable) for a period of up to three months after the date of entry in Estonia. Within three months after the date of entry in Estonia, a family member staying in Estonia on the basis of a valid travel document must apply for a temporary right of residence. Otherwise, he or she must leave Estonia before the end of the three-month period.

Marital property regime. Under Estonian family law, spouses may choose their property regime (jointness of property, set-off of assets increment or separateness of property). Proprietary rights of spouses may be specified in a marital property contract. A marital property contract may be entered into before or during a marriage.

Forced heirship. Regardless of the terms of a deceased relative's will, disabled ascendants, descendants and spouses for whom the deceased had a maintenance obligation arising from the Family Law Act are entitled to receive a compulsory portion of the estate, which equals one-half of the share they would receive in an intestate succession.

Driver's permits. A driver's license issued in an EEA member state or Switzerland is valid until the end of the period of validity stated on the license. If the period of validity of the driver's license is longer than 10 years, it must be replaced with an Estonian driver's license within 24 months after the date on which a residence permit was issued or on which the person settled in Estonia. If the driver's license has expired or if the person has not replaced it within 24 months after the date on which the person settled in Estonia, it will be replaced with an Estonian driver's license after the individual passes the theory test and driving test. The replaced driver's license must be surrendered to the Estonian Road Administration.

Driver's licenses issued in certain foreign states that are parties to specific conventions or mutual agreements are valid for the 12-month period beginning on the date of the issuance of the residence permit. A driver's license issued in certain foreign states may be replaced with an Estonian driver's license without a test. In other cases, passing the traffic theory test and the driving test is mandatory. In all cases, passing the tests is mandatory if the driver's license expired more than five years ago.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals are taxed on employment and self-employment income from sources in or deemed to be in Eswatini except to the extent that the income is of a capital nature. An amount is deemed from a source in Eswatini if it is paid for services rendered or work or labor performed by a person in Eswatini regardless of whether the payment is made by a resident or nonresident of Eswatini.

Income subject to tax. The various types of income subject to tax are described below.

Employment income. Employees are subject to tax on their remuneration, which consists of salary, wages, leave pay, allowances, overtime pay, bonuses, gratuities, commissions, fees, emoluments, pensions, superannuation allowances, retirement allowances, stipends, honoraria and lump-sum payments. These items are included in remuneration regardless of whether they are paid in cash or whether they relate to services rendered. Employment income also includes the annual value of benefits with respect to any quarters, board or residence, loans granted to employees, payments for restraint of trade (lump-sum payments to employees with unique or specialized expertise in exchange for the agreement of the employees not to provide services to entities or persons in direct competition with the payer), share options and employers' contributions to approved bursary schemes for the benefit or educational assistance of the children of employees or dependents of employees.

Investment income. Dividends paid to resident individuals are subject to 10% withholding tax that is a final tax.

Interest or dividends of up to SZL20,000 accruing from the following is exempt from tax:
- Subscription shares in building societies registered under the Building Societies Act 1962

- Permanent or fixed-period shares in building societies registered under the Building Societies Act 1962
- Society shares from savings at mutual loan associations or cooperative societies
- Deposits in financial institutions, building societies or the Swaziland Development Savings Bank established under the Swaziland Development and Savings Bank Order 1973
- Deposits in unit trust companies

Self-employment and business income. Persons receiving income other than remuneration, such as self-employment income, must submit an income tax return when the Commissioner of Taxes issues a notice for the submission of returns.

Directors' fees. A director is an employee as defined in the Income Tax Order. Directors' fees are considered to be remuneration and are subject to the Final Deduction System (FDS; see Section D) at a marginal rate of 33% (the highest applicable tax rate).

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. An employee is liable to tax on 50% of the difference between the value of the shares and the amount paid by the employee for shares issued to an employee under an employee share acquisition scheme. Employees are taxed on the same basis for both share acquisition and share option schemes. Employees are also taxable on gains derived from the disposal of a right or option to acquire shares under an employee share acquisition scheme.

Capital gains and losses. Eswatini does not impose capital gains tax.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Expenses are deductible to the extent that they are incurred both in and outside Eswatini in the production of taxable income. However, they are not deductible if they are of a capital nature.

Personal deductions and allowances. Contributions to approved pension funds are deductible to the extent that the total amount does not exceed 10% of an individual's pensionable salary. Contributions to a retirement annuity fund are deductible to the extent that they do not exceed 15% of the taxable income accruing to that person from a trade carried out by that person. If an individual contributes to both pension and retirement annuities, the total deductible amount is restricted to 15% of taxable income.

Rates. The following are the personal income tax rates in Eswatini.

Taxable income SZL	Tax rate %	Tax due SZL	Cumulative tax due SZL
First 100,000	20	20,000	20,000
Next 50,000	25	12,500	32,500
Next 50,000	30	15,000	47,500

Credits. Individuals below the age of 60 as of the last day of the year of assessment (1 July through 30 June) are entitled to an annual rebate of SZL8,200. Individuals above the age of 60 as of the last day of the year of assessment are entitled to an annual primary rebate of SZL8,200 and a secondary rebate of SZL2,700, resulting in a total rebate of SZL10,900. The rebate is apportioned if the period of assessment is less than one year.

Relief for losses. Losses may be carried forward indefinitely and deducted from taxable income. Losses incurred by individuals from one business cannot be offset against income from another business.

B. Other taxes

Wealth tax and net worth tax. Eswatini does not impose a wealth tax or net worth tax.

Immovable property transfer tax. Immovable property transfer tax is levied on the transfer of immovable property. The tax is based on the purchase price or value of the property. The following are the rates:

Purchase price or value SZL	Tax rate %	Tax due SZL	Cumulative tax due SZL
First 40,000	2	800	800
Next 20,000	4	800	1,600

Marketable securities transfer tax. Transfer duty of 1% is levied on the transfer of shares.

Stamp duty. Stamp duty is levied on agreements, contracts, bonds, insurance policies, bills of exchange, debentures and shares. The rate of duty depends on the nature and value of the instrument.

Local authorities tax. Local authorities impose tax based on the value of the immovable properties located in their jurisdictions.

Graded tax. Graded tax of SZL1.50 per month is levied on each Eswatini adult.

C. Social security contributions

Employers and employees must each make monthly contributions of SZL115 to the Swaziland National Provident Fund (SNPF).

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The year of assessment (tax year) runs from 1 July through 30 June.

Eswatini has adopted the Final Deduction System (FDS) with respect to all individuals who receive employment income only. The FDS requires the employer to deduct and remit employees' tax as a final tax. Consequently, employers must deduct tax from their employees' remuneration and remit it to the Commissioner of Taxes. The FDS system is a Pay-As-You Earn (PAYE) system in which the employer makes the final deduction of tax on the employee's tax. Unlike under a normal PAYE system in which the tax authority makes the final adjustment of individual tax on the submission of a return, under the FDS system, the employer may make adjustments to the employee's tax at the end of the year with respect to any overpayment or underpayment of tax during the year.

Employees must submit tax returns regardless of whether the deductions were made under the FDS system during the year. Tax returns must be submitted within 30 days after the issuance of the Commissioner of Taxes' public notice. They are generally due by 31 October of each year. The tax must be paid within the time period prescribed in the notice of assessment.

A person who receives income other than remuneration as defined in the Income Tax Order is a provisional taxpayer. Provisional taxpayers must make provisional tax payments based on tables prescribed by the Commissioner of Taxes and file income tax returns. Fifty percent of the provisional tax must be paid within six months after the beginning of the year of assessment (less any employee's tax deducted by the taxpayer's employer). The balance is payable by the last day of the year of assessment.

Directors of private companies must file their income tax returns together with their companies' returns.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Eswatini has entered into double tax treaties with Botswana, Lesotho, Mauritius, Seychelles, South Africa, Taiwan and the United Kingdom.

F. Temporary visas

- Invitation letter from the host institution or individual

- 3 months: ZAR300

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Fiji residents are subject to tax on worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on Fiji-source income only.

Section 6 of the Fiji Income Tax Act defines a resident as a person who resides in Fiji and includes a person who meets any of the following conditions:
- His or her domicile is located in Fiji.
- He or she is present in Fiji continuously or intermittently during more than one-half of the income year. However, this does not apply if the tax authorities are satisfied that the person's usual place of abode is outside Fiji and that the person does not intend to take up residence in Fiji.
- He or she is a government employee posted abroad.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Taxable income includes the following:
- All wages, salaries, or other remuneration or allowances derived by the employee with respect to employment, including leave pay, payments in lieu of leave, overtime pay, bonuses, commissions, fees, gratuities and work condition supplements
- The value of a fringe benefit, other than an exempt fringe benefit, derived by an employee with respect to employment that is not subject to tax under the Fringe Benefits Tax Decree
- An amount derived by the employee as consideration for entering into an employment agreement, for agreeing to conditions of employment or changes to the conditions of employment or for the acceptance of a restrictive covenant with respect to past, present or prospective employment

Self-employment and business income. Resident individuals are subject to tax on worldwide business income. Nonresident individuals are taxed on Fiji-source income only.

Taxable income is determined based on the accounting profit shown in the annual financial statements, adjusted for taxable and non-taxable items.

Investment income. Dividends paid by publicly listed companies and those paid by other companies out of profits that have been subject to tax are tax-exempt to the recipient. Dividends paid by unlisted companies out of profits that have not been subject to tax are taxable as ordinary income. Dividends paid from realized capital gains are exempt from income tax but subject to capital gains tax.

Interest income is taxable at the rates set forth in Rates.

Interest, royalties and know-how fees paid to nonresidents are subject to the final withholding taxes shown in the treaty withholding tax rate table below. These withholding taxes are subject to double tax treaties entered into by Fiji. Effective from 1 August 2017, dividends paid to residents and nonresidents are not subject to withholding tax. The following is the treaty withholding tax rate table.

	Interest %	Royalties %	Know-how %
Australia	10	15	15
India	10	10	10
Japan	10	10	15
Korea (South)	10	10	15
Malaysia	15	15	15
New Zealand	10	15	15

Social responsibility tax. In addition to normal income tax, a social responsibility tax (SRT) is payable on chargeable income exceeding FJD270,000 of resident and nonresident individuals. However, the rates now have been reduced by 5% and an Environmental and Climatic Adaption Levy (ECAL) is imposed at a rate of 5%. For a listing of the tax rates, see Rates.

Environmental and Climatic Adaption Levy. The ECAL is imposed at a rate of 5% and is included in the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) tax tables. In addition, the following items are subject to ECAL:

- Prescribed services under the ECAL Act 2017: 5%

There has been a total ban of plastic bags.

- Gains less than FJD30,000 made by a resident individual or Fiji citizen

- Gains derived from the sale of the principal place of residence of a resident individual or Fiji citizen, if the residence has been the individual's principal place of abode
- Gains derived from the sale of shares listed on the South Pacific Stock Exchange
- Gains derived from the transfer of assets between spouses through "love & affection"
- Gains derived from the sale of capital assets used solely to earn exempt income

The capital gain is computed by deducting the cost of the capital asset at the time of disposal from the consideration received.

Effective from 1 August 2020, an asset that is a depreciable is considered a capital asset.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. If a lump-sum entertainment allowance is paid by an employer, an employee must justify the amount spent for business entertainment. The allowance is taxable to the extent that it is not fully justified.

Business deductions. In general, all expenses incurred in producing taxable income are deductible, with the exception of expenses of a capital, private or domestic nature. Depreciation of fixed assets used in the production of taxable income is allowed at rates set by the tax authorities.

Rates. The income tax rates, SRT rates and ECAL rates for employment income (excluding redundancy payments) and self-employment and business income are shown below. The threshold for income tax is increased to FJD30,000 for residents only. Income tax, SRT and ECAL are all subject to PAYE.

ECAL. ECAL is imposed on resident and nonresident taxpayers at a rate of 5% of the excess of taxable income over FJD270,000.

Withholding taxes. Dividend taxation is no longer imposed in Fiji except for the 1% Dividend Transitional Tax for pre-2014 undistributed profits and 2014 and 2015 undistributed profits. After dividend taxes for these periods are paid, any further distributions of profits are exempt from tax, effective from 1 July 2017.

Interest, royalties and know-how fees paid to nonresidents are subject to final withholding taxes as described in Investment income.

Relief for losses. Losses incurred in any trade or business may be offset against an individual's taxable income from other sources in the same year, except for employment income, because employment income is subject to final tax at source, which is withheld by the employer. To the extent that it is not fully offset, a loss may be carried forward for the next four years unless the business that gave rise to the loss is discontinued, sold or changed substantially in nature. Effective from 1 August 2019, any losses incurred before 31 December 2018 are allowed to be carried forward for four years and any losses incurred on or after 1 July 2019 are allowed to be carried forward for eight years. No monetary limits are imposed on the amount of losses for carryforward or offset purposes. Effective from 1 April 2020, an amendment in the COVID-19 Response Budget introduced a new provision for the offsetting of business losses against employment income. Under this new amendment, individuals who have incurred business losses and also have earned employment income in a tax year are entitled to deduct losses of up to FJD20,000 against 2020 employment income. Any loss exceeding FJD20,000 that is not utilized can be carried forward to offset business income for the next eight years and subsequent tax years.

B. Other taxes

Other taxes and levies include the value-added tax, service turnover tax and environmental levy. All stamp duty tax has been abolished from 1 August 2020. Fiji does not impose tax on property, net worth, inheritances or gifts.

C. Social security

Although Fiji imposes no social security taxes, all employers must contribute an amount equal to at least 5% of the gross earnings of all regular employees to the Fiji National Provident Fund (FNPF). Total contributions must equal a minimum of 10% (theoretically, a contribution of 5% from the employer and 5% from the employee), but an employee need not contribute or may contribute a smaller amount if an employer contributes the difference on his or her behalf. Contributions of up to 30% are allowed; however, amounts in excess of 10% are taxable to the employee. Effective 1 January 2022, FNPF mandatory contributions will increase from 10% to 12% (that is, 6% employee contribution and 6% employer contribution).

On retirement, the fund provides either a lump-sum payment equal to total contributions made plus accrued interest or a pension based on the amount of total contributions made plus accrued interest.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Fiji is the calendar year, and returns must be filed by 31 March. Extensions to May and future months are normally granted on request.

For employees, withholding of tax from employment income and social responsibility tax deductions are made in accordance with tables to ensure that an employee's liability is fully covered. Because employment income is subject to withholding of PAYE tax, which is a final tax, tax return filling is not required.

For self-employed individuals, provisional tax based on the liability for the preceding year must be paid in three installments in April, August and November. An assessment is made when the return is filed, and a final payment or refund is made.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Income derived by Fiji residents from treaty and non-treaty countries is subject to tax in Fiji. However, a credit is allowed for tax paid in the source country, to the extent that Fiji tax applies to the same income.

Expatriate employees who are resident in Fiji as a result of employment under a service contract of up to three years in duration are taxed only on income earned in Fiji.

F. Visitor visas

A visitor's visa, which is usually issued for one month but may be extended to six months, is normally granted to tourists or to individuals wishing to investigate business opportunities in Fiji.

Foreign nationals from visa exempt countries may obtain visitors' visas at the port of entry if they have valid passports, return or onward tickets, and sufficient funds for living expenses. All other persons from non-visa exempt countries must obtain visas before entering Fiji.

G. Work permits and self-employment

The right to work in Fiji is restricted, but the Fiji government recognizes the need to admit individuals with special commercial, professional or technical skills to improve Fiji's economic development. Therefore, permits to reside and work in Fiji are granted to foreign investors and expatriate employees under qualifying circumstances.

Permits to reside and work in Fiji are granted to fill positions that cannot be filled adequately by local Fiji citizens. In these cases, the Fiji Immigration Department requires foreign nationals to be employed under a contract of employment, and the prospective employer must show evidence that the position cannot be adequately filled locally. In most cases, the prospective employer is required to advertise the position locally and to submit all applications received to the Immigration Department for review.

Permits are usually granted for an initial period of three years for long-term work permits and are renewable only if the continued presence of the permit holder is considered to be to Fiji's economic advantage and essential to the employer's operations.

Applications for all categories of visas and permits except for visitor visas must be applied for outside Fiji. The application must be accompanied by health and police clearance certificates from the applicant's home country. Processing permit applications normally takes four to six weeks. Applicants are not permitted to work until the permits are issued, and changing employers is allowed only in special circumstances.

Foreign nationals with investment in approved business ventures in Fiji are granted investor permits that allow them to increase and manage their investments. These permits are usually valid for a three-year period, and extensions are virtually assured as long as the capital remains invested in Fiji.

Foreign investors, regardless of nationality, wanting to establish a business in Fiji must have the prior approval of Investment Fiji (IF). To obtain this approval, a separate application describing all pertinent information relating to the proposed project must be filed with IF.

No set guidelines are used to evaluate or approve business ventures involving foreign investors. Fiji welcomes investment in virtually all sectors, particularly in tourism, mining, manufacturing and high-technology industries. Certain activities are reserved or have a requirement for local equity participation. In general, proposed projects meeting the following criteria are well received:
- Substantial capital outlay
- New technology
- High employment-generating potential
- High local equity participation

H. Residence permits

As a matter of policy, Fiji is not open to immigration. However, individuals who wish to live or retire in Fiji and are able to demonstrate that they have sufficient funds from overseas sources to live in Fiji may obtain renewable three-year permits. In these instances, the Immigration Department considers the age of the applicant and the source and amount of funds available from abroad.

Alternatively, any person who has been in Fiji on a valid permit for five years or more may apply for citizenship, which is normally granted, unless the person is proved to be undesirable in the eyes of the law. Fiji also permits dual citizenships.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The spouse and dependent children of a work permit holder are granted permits to reside in Fiji upon application. These permit holders are not permitted to engage in any form of employment.

Driver's permits. A holder of a valid driver's license from most developed countries may drive legally in Fiji. However, a Fiji driver's license should be obtained no later than three months after arriving in Fiji. Generally, a Fiji driver's license is issued on presentation of a valid driver's license from most countries. If the expatriate does not have a valid foreign driving license, to obtain a local driver's license, one must take written and verbal tests on road codes, as well as a fairly simple practical driving test.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals resident in Finland are taxed on their worldwide income. However, salary earned abroad is exempt from tax in Finland if a Finnish resident works abroad continuously for at least six months and satisfies certain other requirements. Non-resident individuals are subject to income tax on income from Finnish sources only.

Domestic law treats an individual as resident if his or her permanent home is in Finland or if he or she stays in Finland a continuous period of more than six months. The stay in Finland may be regarded as continuous even in the event of temporary absences from the country.

In the case of emigration, foreign citizens become nonresidents for Finnish tax purposes at the time they leave the country and surrender their permanent home in Finland. With respect to a Finnish citizen, he or she is still considered to be resident in Finland until three years have passed from the end of the year when the individual left the country, unless he or she can establish that no essential connections with Finland have been maintained.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable income is calculated separately for earned income and capital income (see Capital gains and losses). Business income is divided between earned and capital income (see Self-employment and business income).

Earned income is subject to national income tax, municipal income tax, church tax and Public Broadcasting (Yleisradio, or YLE) tax. With the exception of YLE tax that is due on gross income, taxable earned income is generally computed in the same manner for each of these taxes, although the deductions and credits allowed for each tax differ slightly.

Earned income consists of salaries, wages, directors' fees and benefits in kind. Fringe benefits, including a company car, housing and lunch benefit, are taxed on values set forth in an official table that are lower than the actual costs incurred. Scholarships from private institutions are exempt in certain circumstances, up to approximately EUR23,600 (2021 tax year).

Under a special expatriate tax regime, qualifying expatriates may elect to be taxed on their salary income at a rate of 32% for a period of up to 48 months, instead of at the normal progressive income tax rates.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employment income of residents is considered to be business income. Taxable business income is apportioned between capital income and earned income. The amount of capital income is generally determined using a 10% or 20% rate of return on investment and is taxed at the 30% or 34% rate applicable to capital income (see Capital gains and losses). The remainder of taxable business income is taxed as earned income according to the progressive income tax scale (see Rates).

Taxable business income consists of profits shown in the statutory accounts required for self-employed individuals. Accounting profit and taxable profit are, in principle, the same, although the tax law prescribes a number of adjustments.

Investment income. For Finnish individuals, the taxation of dividend income depends on several factors. If the distributing company is a listed company that is resident in a country with which Finland has entered into a tax treaty and if certain other requirements are met, 85% of the dividend is taxable capital income. The remaining 15% is exempt from tax. Dividends from unlisted companies may be exempt from tax, taxed as capital income and/or taxed as earned income (similar to salary), depending on, for example, the net assets and the country of residence of the distributing company.

For residents, interest income on bank deposits and bonds is subject to a 30% final withholding tax. Certain government bonds are exempt from this tax.

In 2021, 10% of the interest on mortgages and 100% of interest on loans related to the deriving of taxable income are deductible from capital income. In general, 30% of the excess of deductible interest expense over capital income is deductible from income taxes on earned income. However, this credit is limited to EUR1,400 for a single person and EUR2,800 for a couple. The maximum amount deductible is increased by EUR400 for one child and by EUR800 for two or more children.

For nonresidents, dividends and royalties paid from Finland are generally subject to a 30% final withholding tax, unless a tax treaty provides otherwise. In most cases, interest paid to nonresidents is tax exempt.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Stock options provided by an employer are not taxed at the time of grant. At the date of exercise, the difference between the fair market value of the underlying stock and the exercise price of the option is treated as taxable employment income. Employee social security contributions are generally not payable on the benefits except for the Medicare contribution of 1.65% (in 2021). Similarly, stock options are not usually subject to employer's social security contributions. The base for the employee contribution is generally the taxable amount.

Any gain derived from the subsequent sale of the stock is taxed as a capital gain under the rules described in Capital gains and losses.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains on property are taxed as capital income at a rate of 30%. If the capital income received during a calendar year exceeds EUR30,000, the excess income is taxed at a rate of 34%. A taxable capital gain is computed by deducting from the disposal proceeds the greater of the acquisition cost plus the sales cost, or 20% of the proceeds (40% for property owned for at least 10 years before disposal). The acquisition cost used for property received by gift or inheritance is generally the value used for purposes of the gift and inheritance tax (see Other taxes). However, certain exceptions may apply.

A capital gain resulting from the sale of an apartment or house that the seller used as a primary residence for at least two years on a continuous basis during the time of ownership is exempt from tax.

Also, capital gains may be exempt from tax if the total sales price of all assets sold during the tax year (excluding, for example, the sales price of one's primary residence) does not exceed EUR1,000.

Capital losses are deductible from all capital income in the year of the loss or in the five following years. However, capital losses are not deductible if the acquisition costs of all assets sold during the tax year do not exceed EUR1,000.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. In general, a taxpayer may deduct all expenses directly incurred in generating or maintaining taxable income. However, separate deductions apply for earned income and capital income. See Investment income for deductions applicable to capital income.

The following are the primary deductions applicable to earned income:

- Travel expenses that exceed EUR750 incurred between home and office, up to a maximum of EUR7,000
- Payments to labor unions
- Standard deduction from salary income, up to a maximum of EUR750
- Expenses incurred in connection with earning income, to the extent they exceed EUR750
- Employee contributions for health insurance per diem, unemployment insurance and pension

Contributions paid by individuals to voluntary pension insurance are generally deductible for tax purposes up to certain maximum limits from capital income.

Business deductions. Expenses incurred to create or maintain business income are generally deductible. Exceptions apply, for example, to salaries paid to entrepreneurs, their spouses and their children under 14 years of age who work for their business.

Interest expenses relating to business or farming activities are generally deductible for business or farming income purposes in determining taxable income from these activities.

Rates. Income tax consists of national tax, municipal tax, church tax (payable if the individual is a member of certain Finnish congregations) and YLE tax.

National income tax. For 2021, national income tax is imposed on individual residents at the following progressive rates.

Taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	amount EUR	excess %
0	18,600	0	0
18,600	27,900	8	6
27,900	45,900	566	17.25
45,900	80,500	3,671	21.25
80,500	—	11,023,50	31.25

Municipal tax. For 2021, municipal tax is levied at a flat rate that ranges from 17% to 23.5% of taxable income, depending on the municipality.

Church tax. For 2021, church tax is payable by members of certain Finnish congregations at rates ranging from 1% to 2.2%.

YLE tax. For 2021, YLE tax of 2.5% is levied on annual income exceeding EUR14,000. YLE tax is capped at a maximum of EUR163 per year.

Nonresidents. Nonresidents' Finnish-source pension income is taxed in a similar manner to pension income received by residents; that is, they are subject to tax at the progressive rates.

Salaries, including directors' fees received by nonresidents, are subject to final withholding tax at a rate of 35%, unless a tax treaty provides otherwise. Nonresidents may deduct EUR510 per month (or EUR17 per day) from salary. This standard deduction may be claimed only if a Finnish tax at source card has been applied. The deduction does not apply to the directors' fees. Nonresidents from tax treaty countries can alternatively apply for progressive taxation in which case their Finnish-source salaries are taxed broadly similarly to the salaries received by residents.

Remuneration paid to a nonresident artist or athlete for a personal performance is subject to withholding tax at a rate of 15%, unless a tax treaty provides otherwise. If artists and athletes are subject to the 15% tax, they may not claim the standard deduction of EUR510. However, nonresident artists and athletes from other European Union (EU)/European Economic Area (EEA) countries can apply for progressive taxation.

Relief for losses. A business loss is deductible from capital income. Any excess loss from a business may be carried forward for 10 years and offset against business income. Any loss from earned income may be carried forward for 10 years and offset against income from the same category.

B. Other taxes

Wealth tax. Finland does not impose wealth tax.

Inheritance and gift taxes. Inheritance and gift taxes are levied on inheritances, testamentary dispositions and gifts. All property owned by a person resident in Finland or received by a person resident in Finland is taxable. If both the owner and recipient are nonresidents, the tax applies only to real property located in Finland and to shares in a corporate body in which more than 50% of the assets consists of Finnish real property. A tax credit is allowed for estate or gift tax paid abroad on the same inheritance or gift if the recipient is resident in Finland at the time of the taxable event.

Beneficiaries are divided into the following two categories:
- Spouses, children, spouses' children and grandchildren, grandchildren, parents and grandparents (first category)
- Other related and unrelated individuals (second category)

Inheritance tax is imposed in the first category at the following rates for 2021.

Taxable amount		Tax on lower amount	Rate on excess
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	EUR	%
0	20,000	0	0
20,000	40,000	100	7
40,000	60,000	1,500	10
60,000	200,000	3,500	13
200,000	1,000,000	21,700	16
1,000,000	—	149,700	19

The following are inheritance tax rates for the second category.

Taxable income		Tax on lower amount	Rate on excess
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	EUR	%
0	20,000	0	0
20,000	40,000	100	19
40,000	60,000	3,900	25
60,000	200,000	8,900	29
200,000	1,000,000	49,500	31
1,000,000	—	297,500	33

For 2021, the following deductions may be applied against the taxable share for inheritance taxation:
- Widow/widower deduction of EUR90,000
- Minor deduction of EUR60,000 (applies to direct heirs under 18 years old)

For 2021, gift tax is imposed in the first category above at the following rates.

Taxable amount		Tax on lower amount	Rate on excess
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	EUR	%
0	5,000	0	0
5,000	25,000	100	8
25,000	55,000	1,700	10
55,000	200,000	4,700	12
200,000	1,000,000	22,100	15
1,000,000	—	142,100	17

The following are the gift tax rates for the second category.

Taxable amount		Tax on lower amount	Rate on excess
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	EUR	%
0	5,000	0	0
5,000	25,000	100	19
25,000	55,000	3,900	25
55,000	200,000	11,400	29
200,000	1,000,000	53,450	31
1,000,000	—	301,450	33

Inheritance and gifts from one person to the same beneficiary during a three-year period are aggregated to determine the amount of the tax due.

Finland has entered into an inheritance and gift tax treaty with Denmark and Iceland, and inheritance tax treaties with France, the Netherlands, Switzerland and the United States.

C. Social security

The social security contributions are imposed on employers, employees and self-employed individuals. For employees in 2021, the social security contributions consist of a Medicare contribution and a per diem contribution. The per diem contribution is 1.36% of gross salary income (excluding certain items, such as most employee stock option and share award benefits), and the Medicare contribution is 0.68% of municipal taxable income. Furthermore, the Medicare contribution is due at 1.65% on the difference between taxable municipal income and the per diem contribution basis; that is, most salary income and other earned income that is not subject to the per diem contribution is ultimately subject to the Medicare contribution at the same rate. In addition, a 7.15% compulsory pension insurance premium and a 1.4% unemployment insurance premium apply to gross salary income (excluding certain items, such as most employee stock option and share award benefits). The compulsory pension insurance premium is 8.65% for employees who are more than 52 years but less than 63 years old.

For employers, social security contributions are levied as a percentage of uncapped gross wages and salaries (excluding certain items, such as most employee stock option and share award benefits). The average total percentage of all contributions for private-sector employers goes up to 21.15%, which consists of 1.53% for employer’s sickness insurance contributions, 0.07% for group life insurance premiums, pension premiums that average 16.95%, 0.7% for average accident insurance premiums and 0.5% for unemployment insurance premiums (1.9% for salaries exceeding EUR2,169,500).

For self-employed individuals insured under the Entrepreneur Pension Act, in 2021, social security contributions consist of a Medicare contribution and a per diem contribution as with employees. However, compared to employees, the per diem contribution is 1.55% of the annual pensionable amount agreed to between the employer and his or her pension insurance institution. In addition, entrepreneur pension insurance contributions are due on the annual pensionable salary at a rate of 24.1% (25.6% for individuals who are more than 52 years but less than 63 years old; the corresponding rates for starting entrepreneurs are 18.8% and 19.2%, respectively). Self-employed individuals insured under the Entrepreneur Pension Act do not have to obtain compulsory unemployment, accident or group life insurance coverage.

The EU social security regulations apply to cross-border situations with other EU countries, with EEA countries (Iceland, Lichtenstein and Norway) and with Switzerland.

Finland has also entered into bilateral totalization agreements with Australia, Canada, Chile, China Mainland, India, Israel, Korea (South), Quebec and the United States. The material scope of the bilateral totalization agreements varies.

For assignments to Finland from a country other than an EU/EEA country, Switzerland or a totalization agreement country, employees working in Finland for foreign employers are generally exempt from the pension insurance contributions for the initial two years of an assignment. Employees can apply for a prolonged exemption.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Finland is the calendar year. Married persons are taxed separately on all types of income. Pre-filled tax returns are sent to all individuals in April of the year following the tax year. The individuals must review the pre-filled tax return and submit any corrections to the tax authorities within the specified time limit.

The final tax is assessed individually for each taxpayer, depending, for example, on whether there have been changes in the individual's pre-filled tax return and possibly on whether the individual's spouse has made changes to his or her pre-filled tax return. The final tax should be assessed at the latest by the end of October. To reduce or eliminate the amount of the residual tax and interest, the taxpayer can apply for additional prepayments. Residual tax due dates are individual for every taxpayer. The due dates are between August of the year following the tax year and February of the following year. Refunds of overpayments are made between August and December of the year following the tax year.

An employer must withhold tax from an employee's salary for national, municipal and church tax purposes. In addition, an employer must withhold social security contributions (see Section C). Self-employed individuals must make monthly advance tax payments, which are calculated and levied separately by the tax authorities.

Self-employed individuals receive their pre-filled tax returns in March of the year following the tax year, and they must submit their corrections to the tax authorities within the specified time limit. The tax authorities assess final tax individually for each taxpayer, at the latest by the end of October of the year following the tax year.

Nonresidents who are subject only to final withholding taxes do not need to file tax returns. However, if the nonresidents want to apply for progressive taxation, they must file a tax return (see Section A). Nonresidents must generally declare all of their income from immovable property located in Finland (including shares in Finnish residential housing companies and real estate companies).

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Most of Finland's treaties are based on the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) model. Most tax treaties eliminate double taxation using the credit method, but some use the exemption method. If no treaty is in force, Finnish law provides, under certain conditions, relief for foreign taxes paid, but only for purposes of national income taxes.

Finland has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

F. Temporary visas

EU, EEA and Swiss nationals. EU/EEA/Swiss nationals are free to stay and work in Finland for up to three months. After the three-month period, an EU/EEA/Swiss national must register his or her residence online in the Enter Finland portal and attend a personal appointment at the Finnish Immigration Service service point in Finland. Nationals of the Nordic countries (Denmark, Iceland, Norway and Sweden) are exempt from the registration obligation applicable to other EU/EEA nationals, but they should register their presence in the local register office within one week after moving to Finland, if the stay exceeds six months.

Non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals. Non-EU/non-EEA/non-Swiss nationals usually need a Schengen visa to enter Finland. However, under the Schengen treaty, nationals of approximately 50 countries do not need a Schengen visa to enter and stay in the Schengen zone for a combined maximum period of 90 days in a rolling 180-day period if they have a valid passport or other travel document accepted by the state of Finland, as well as sufficient funds for living, sufficient travel insurance coverage and a return journey.

The Schengen zone consists of the following countries.

Austria

G. Residence permits

Under the Aliens Act, an individual wishing to reside in Finland usually needs a residence permit. Exceptions to this requirement may be granted based either on the employee's nationality, length of stay or certain type of work performed in Finland.

Nordic country nationals. Nationals from other Nordic countries do not need residence permits. If they want to take up residence in Finland, they must register with the population register at the local registry office. Under the Nordic convention, Nordic citizens need only register if their stay in Finland exceed six months.

EU, EEA and Swiss nationals. EU/EEA/Swiss nationals do not need residence permits. However, EU/EEA/Swiss nationals who stay in Finland continuously for longer than three months must register their right of residence in the Enter Finland online portal and attend a personal appointment at the Finnish Immigration Service service point.

Non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals. A non-EU/non-EEA/non-Swiss national must apply for a residence permit at the Finnish embassy or consulate in the country where he or she was last domiciled, or in his or her country of citizenship. A renewal application should be submitted in Finland at the Finnish Immigration Service service point. After a person has stayed in Finland for at least four years with a continuous residence permit (A-type), he or she may apply for a permanent residence permit.

Residence permit for employment. Non-EU/non-EEA/non-Swiss nationals usually need a residence permit in order to work in Finland. There are various categories available depending on the type of work.

Typically, a residence permit for an employed person is needed. The application for a residence permit for an employed person is processed in two stages. First, an Employment and Economic Development Office assesses whether the individual has sufficient means of support, whether the work will be temporary or continuous, and whether a labor force is available within a reasonable time in Finland or within the EU/EEA for the work in question. Secondly, following the first stage, the Finnish Immigration Service makes its decision.

If an employee works, for example, in the middle or top management of the company, or as a specialist (highly skilled worker), a visiting consultant or a teacher, the employment office's opinion is not required.

Intra-corporate transfers (ICTs) of individuals within a company or group of companies who come to Finland to work as a manager, specialist or trainee may apply for a residence permit based on ICT. Employees holding a residence permit on the basis of ICT issued by another EU country may work in Finland for no more than 90 days within a 180-day period. In this case, the host entity in Finland must submit a mobility notification to the Finnish Immigration Service before entry to Finland. If their work in Finland exceeds 90 days, they must apply for a residence permit for long-term mobility (Mobile ICT). In the case of ICT and Mobile ICT residence permits, the employment office's opinion is not required.

Entrepreneurs. Private entrepreneurs who are non-EU/non-EEA/non-Swiss nationals and who wish to come to Finland as entrepreneurs must apply for an entrepreneur's residence permit. Before a permit can be issued, entrepreneurs usually need to enter their business in the Trade Register maintained by the Finnish Patent and Registration Office. An individual cannot get an entrepreneur's residence permit only because he or she owns a company; he or she must also work for the company in Finland. The application is processed in two stages. First, a Centre for Economic Development, Transport and the Environment (ELY Centre) assesses whether the individual meets the requirements in terms of profitability and whether his or her means of support is secured. After this stage, the Finnish Immigration Service processes the application.

If an individual intends to come to Finland to become an entrepreneur, he or she may apply for a startup entrepreneur residence permit. He or she must first obtain a positive Eligibility Statement from Business Finland before he or she can apply for this permit. A startup entrepreneur cannot get a residence permit without a positive statement from Business Finland.

Students. Students who are non-EU/non-EEA/non-Swiss nationals may need to obtain a residence permit to study in Finland. If the studies in Finland take longer than 90 days, a residence permit for studies is required. This residence permit is valid for two years, unless the individual applies for a shorter period. However, the residence permit is only valid for the duration of the studies if the studies take less than two years. If a residence permit is not applied for, the individual can study in Finland for a maximum of 90 days. Even if the stay in Finland is for less than 90 days, the individual may still need a visa.

If the individual has been granted a residence permit for studies by another EU member state other than Finland and if the individual is covered by a program or an agreement specified in the Finnish act on residence permits for students, he or she can come to Finland to carry out part of his or her studies for a period up to 360 days. In this case, a mobility notification must be submitted to the Finnish Immigration Service. If the individual is coming to Finland for postgraduate studies, he or she needs to apply for a residence permit for scientific research.

Accepted educational institutions include institutions that provide education after basic education, such as universities, universities of applied sciences and vocational education institutions. The individual must have sufficient funds to pay for the tuition fees as well as sufficient means for living in Finland during the entire period of validity of the residence permit.

The residence permit for studies enables work without restrictions if the work is related to the degree. This means practical training and thesis work. For other jobs, the right to work is restricted to an average of 25 hours per week during the academic terms or work without restrictions at the times when the educational institution offers no instruction.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family members of a residence permit holder, including the spouse, the guardian of a child under 18 years of age and children under 18 years of age, may apply for residence permits on the basis of family ties. If an individual has been granted a residence permit on the basis of family ties, his or her right to work and study in Finland is not limited in any way.

Driver's licenses. All driver's licenses issued in states recognized by Finland are valid for driving in mainland Finland. However, the foreign driver's license is not valid for driving in Finland if the holder was permanently living in Finland when the license was issued.

A driver's license issued in an EU or EEA member state is valid in Finland for all driving categories marked on the license within the period of its validity regardless of whether the holder is visiting Finland as a tourist or living in Finland permanently. A temporary driver's license issued in the Nordic countries is also valid in Finland. If the holder is permanently living in Finland or has studied in Finland for at least six months, the holder may exchange or renew a driver's license issued in an EU or EEA member state for a Finnish license or apply for a Finnish license in place of a lost, stolen or destroyed driver's license issued in an EU or EEA member state. If the EU or EEA license has expired, the holder must enclose a medical certificate with the application. The holder will not need to pass a driving examination if the driver's license is still valid or less than two years have passed since the expiration of a Group 1 license, or under a year has passed since the expiration of a Group 2 license.

A driver's license issued in Hong Kong, Macau, Taiwan or a jurisdiction that has ratified the Geneva or Vienna Road Traffic Convention (hereinafter, Contracting States) is valid in Finland when visiting as a tourist until the license expires. It is also valid for two years after its holder moves permanently to Finland. The information in the Contracting State's driver's license must be written in a Latin alphabet or accompanied by a translation into Finnish or Swedish, by a reliable source, or an international driving license. If the holder has a permanent address in Finland and has a valid driver's license issued by a Contracting State, the holder can exchange the license for an A1, A2, A or B Class driving license without passing the driving examination. However, the holder will need to pass the driving examination (theory and driving test) to obtain a license in the Group 2 and BE category. To get an exchange without the driving examination, the holder must exchange the driver's license within two years of having a permanent address in Finland and before the Contracting State license expires. If the driver's license that the holder wishes to exchange has expired or the holder has been permanently living in Finland for over two years, the holder must also pass a driving examination (theory and driving test).

Driver's licenses issued in other jurisdictions recognized by Finland are valid for driving categories A1, A2, A or B when visiting Finland as a tourist unless the license has expired. Driver's licenses are also valid for one year starting from the date the license holder is marked to the population register if it is not expired during that time. The information in the foreign driver's license must be written in a Latin alphabet or accompanied by a translation into Finnish, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, English, German or French by a reliable source. The driver must also fulfill the current age and health requirements in Finland. The holder must submit a driver's license permit application for a foreign driver's license at Ajovarma, prove that the holder fulfills the conditions for issuing the driver's license permit and pass the driving examination (theory and driving test) to obtain a Finnish driver's license.

If a driver's license was issued in a state that is not recognized by Finland or if the holder of the permit was permanently living in Finland when they were granted a driving license by a non-recognized state, the license cannot be accepted as a basis for passing the Finnish driving examination.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individual income taxation is based on residence. Taxpayers are categorized as residents or nonresidents. Treaty rules on tax residence override domestic rules.

Residents. Persons of French or foreign nationality are considered residents for tax purposes if their home, principal place of abode, professional activity or center of economic interest is located in France. As a resident, an individual is taxed on worldwide income, subject to applicable treaty exemptions.

Nonresidents. Persons not considered resident as defined above are taxed on French-source income only.

Expatriate tax law. A favorable expatriate tax law applies to employees seconded to France after 1 January 2004. This favorable tax regime (Article 81 B of the French tax code) provides that under certain conditions, expatriates seconded to France after 1 January 2004 may not be taxed on compensation items relating to the assignment in France, such as a cost-of-living allowance, housing cost reimbursement and tax equalization payments. The main condition is that the taxpayer must not have been considered a tax resident of France in any of the five tax years preceding his or her year of arrival in France. In addition, up to 20% of the remaining taxable compensation can potentially be excluded if the expatriate performs services outside of France during his or her assignment (non-French workdays). The exemptions are available until 31 December of the fifth year following the year of transfer to France. Administrative regulations on the law, which were released in 2005, provide that the exemptions in the law may not be combined with the benefits under the French headquarters rules (see Expatriate French headquarters and distribution center employees).

Effective from 1 January 2008, the favorable tax regime described above (now Article 155 B) was extended to local hires (including French nationals) who relocate to France and meet the above residency criteria. Under the Impatriate Tax Regime (Régime fiscal des impatriés), employees hired directly by a French company (excluding intra-company transfers) may elect to have 30% of their net remuneration treated as an impatriate premium and thereby exempted from French income tax up to the limit of the French reference net taxable salary (compensation received by other employees with respect to equivalent positions).

Taxpayers who satisfy the Article 155 B conditions benefit from a 50% tax exemption with respect to their foreign-source dividends, interest, royalties and capital gains (resulting from sale of securities) for a period of five years (subject to certain conditions concerning the source of such income). Social surtaxes of 17.2% remain payable on the full income.

The option for the 30% impatriate premium, which was previously reserved for individuals hired directly abroad by a company established in France, has been extended to the following:

- Individuals called by a foreign company to a company in France
- Intra-company transfers

This provision applies to individuals taking up their duties in France on or after 16 November 2018.

The period of the application for the favorable tax regime is extended to 31 December of the eighth year following the year of transfer to France for taxpayers who transferred to France on or after 6 July 2016.

Expatriate French headquarters and distribution center employees. A foreign expatriate assigned to the French headquarters (HQ) of a multinational company may be eligible under a HQ ruling for tax relief for up to six years from the assignment date. The principal advantage of a HQ ruling is the elimination of tax-on-tax if the employer reimburses an expatriate for his or her excess foreign tax liability. This tax reimbursement is taxed only at the corporate rates and is not grossed up. With careful planning, exemption from personal income tax on many benefits and allowances may be obtained. The new expatriate tax law is generally more favorable than the HQ rules and an election must be made as to which of the two regimes applies to the expatriates of a HQ.

Taxable income. Taxable income consists of annual disposable income from all sources. Income is identified based on its nature, and then allowances, deductions and treaty provisions are applied in calculating net taxable income subject to progressive tax rates.

The taxation of each category of income may be modified by an applicable treaty provision. For example, US citizens are not taxed on US-source passive income (however, see Effective rate rule).

Taxable salary income. The total of all compensation paid by an employer is considered taxable salary income and includes such items as the private-use element of a company car, employer-paid meals and employer-paid education expenses for employees and their dependent children. Taxable compensation does not include the following items paid by employers: certain pension contributions, certain medical insurance premiums and, for resident foreigners and nonresidents, home-leave expenses, moving expenses and temporary housing expenses.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employment income is divided into the following three categories, depending on the nature of the activities: commercial (includes trades), professional and agricultural.

Taxable income realized from each category is subject to the progressive tax rates that apply to resident individuals (see Rates). In addition, a self-employed individual is subject to a flat social tax (see CSG/CRDS and social tax).

Self-employed individuals involved in commercial activities are required to use the accrual method of accounting and must include in taxable income all receipts, advances, expense reimbursements and interest directly related to the activities. Long-term capital gains from disposals of a company's assets benefit from a special measure, which provides for gains to be taxed at a rate of 12.8%, with an additional 17.2% (9.7% for contribution sociale généralisée [CSG]/contribution reimboursement de la dette sociale [CRDS] and 7.5% additional social tax) charged on passive income and capital gains (see Rates).

Taxable income for professional activities is equal to the difference between receipts and expenses actually received or paid in the calendar year. This use of the cash-basis method of accounting (though optional) constitutes the principal difference between the taxation of commercial and professional activities. Detailed daily records must be maintained by self-employed persons. Long-term capital gains from disposals of assets used in professional activities are taxable at a rate of 12.8%, with an additional 17.2% for CSG/CRDS and additional social tax charged on passive income and capital gains.

Profits derived from agricultural cultivation and breeding constitute taxable income, which is determined by using the cash method of accounting. Because of the variability of farm income, special tax rules apply. In general, long-term gains from disposals of assets used in agricultural activities are taxable at a rate of 12.8%, with additional social taxes of 17.2%. However, specific rules apply in certain cases.

Directors' fees. Under French internal law, directors' fees are treated as dividend income. Similarly, because directors' fees are not considered salary, the 10% standard deduction does not apply.

Directors' fees paid to nonresidents are generally subject to a flat 12.8% withholding tax, unless a tax treaty provision reduces or eliminates the tax.

Investment income. Interest and dividends are taxed at a flat rate of 30% (12.8% income tax and additional social charges of 17.2%). However, taxpayers can elect to be taxed on such income under regular progressive rates if more favorable. See Expatriate tax law for information regarding taxpayers qualifying under Article 155 B.

Net income derived from the rental of real estate and from royalty income (other than for industrial property) is taxed as ordinary income. Royalties from industrial property are taxed at a rate of 33.33%, subject to a possible reduced rate provided in a tax treaty. Income from real estate is subject to income tax plus 17.2% CSG/CRDS and social tax.

Exempt income. Exempt income includes the following:
- Certain profits from the sale of securities
- Family allowances and health care reimbursements
- Payments received pursuant to life insurance contracts (under certain conditions)

Employment income earned by a tax resident of France with respect to employment duties performed outside France for an employer established in France, a European Union (EU) member state or a member state of the European Economic Area (EEA) that has concluded with France a tax treaty containing an administrative cooperation clause is exempt if one of the following conditions is satisfied:
- For more than 120 days during a 12-month period, the employee is engaged outside France in prospecting for new clients for his or her employer.
- The employee establishes that his or her salary is subject to a foreign income tax equal to at least two-thirds of the equivalent French tax.
- For more than 183 days in a 12-month period, the employee performs employment duties overseas in connection with construction, engineering, or exploration or extraction of a natural resource.

Supplemental amounts, contractual premiums or per diems earned for foreign duty by such residents may be exempt from tax under certain conditions, depending on the number of foreign workdays. This exemption is limited to a maximum of 40% of the annual remuneration. Special exemptions and rules apply for small businesses engaged in commercial, professional and agricultural activities and in certain other circumstances.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Exercise gains realized on stock options are subject to full ordinary income tax and employee and employer social security contributions as employment income if either the following circumstances exists:
- The stock options are from nonqualified plans.
- The stock options are from qualified plans, and the reporting requirements are not satisfied.

Stock option plans that qualify under French corporate law benefit from a favorable tax regime. Foreign plans may be amended to qualify under the French rules.

No taxes or social security contributions are levied when the option is granted. At the time of exercise, taxes and social security contributions are not levied unless the option exercise price is less than 95% of the average stock price over the 20 trading days preceding the grant date.

An employer contribution is due on the grant of options awarded under a French qualified plan. This contribution equals 30% of the fair market value (FMV) of the option as determined for accounting purposes (International Financial Reporting Standard [IFRS] 2) or 30% of 25% of the value of the shares underlying the options. Employees are also subject to a specific contribution at the date of sale of the shares acquired through the exercise of an option granted under a French qualified plan. This contribution applies to options granted on or after 16 October 2007 and equals 10% of the exercise gain (difference between the FMV of the shares on exercise and the amount paid to exercise the options).

When stock acquired under a qualified plan is sold, the gains benefit from favorable tax treatment if both of the following requirements are met:
- The shares are kept in nominative form.
- The employer and the employee satisfy specific reporting requirements at the time of exercise of the option.

Gains derived from the sale of stock acquired under French qualified options granted on or after 27 April 2000 and before 28 September 2012 are taxed in accordance with the following rules:
- If the stock has not been held for at least two years after exercise, the spread (the difference between the FMV of the stock at exercise and the strike price) is subject to tax at a 47.2% flat rate (including 17.2% of social taxes) on the amount of the spread up to EUR152,500, and at a 58.2% flat rate (including 17.2% of social taxes) on the excess.
- If the stocks are sold more than six years after grant of the options and more than two years after exercise of the option, the spread is subject to tax at a 35.2% flat rate (including 17.2% of social taxes) on the amount of the spread up to EUR152,500, and at a 47.2% flat rate (including 17.2% of social taxes) on the excess.

Alternatively, the employee may elect to have the exercise gain taxed at the regular progressive tax rates (plus 17.2% of social taxes) if this is more advantageous.

As discussed above, for options granted on or after 16 October 2007, an additional employee social contribution of 10% must be paid.

For gains derived from the sale of stock acquired under French qualified options granted on or after 28 September 2012, the spread is subject to the following:
- Income tax at the regular progressive rates
- 9.7% CSG/CRDS and the 10% employee social contribution described above

Gains derived from French qualified options granted before 27 April 2000 are subject to specific tax rates.

Any additional capital gain resulting from the difference between the sale price and the FMV of the shares on the date of exercise is taxed as described below in Capital gains.

Taxation of restricted stock awards. Vesting gains realized on restricted stock awards from nonqualified plans are considered employment income and are subject to full ordinary income tax and employee and employer social security contributions at the time of vesting.

Restricted stock awards may be subject to favorable tax and social security treatment. To qualify, the company's plan must meet specific rules, which include minimum vesting and holding periods, the length of which depends on the date of grant of the awards or the date of the decision of the shareholders authorizing the implementation of a restricted stock plan.

If the plan qualifies for French purposes and the vesting and holding period conditions are satisfied, the income tax charge is deferred until the date of the sale of the shares, and no social security tax is due with respect to the value of the stock award.

For restricted stocks granted under an authorization given by the shareholders after 8 August 2015, the tax law reduces the duration of the minimum vesting and holding periods. Under the new law, the acquisition period cannot be lower than one year and the aggregated period of the vesting and holding periods cannot be lower than two years. If a vesting period of at least two years is implemented, no legal or tax obligation to impose a holding period applies.

An employer contribution is due at the date of the award of restricted stocks under a French qualified plan if the implementation was authorized by the shareholders before 8 August 2015. This contribution equals 30% of the FMV of the shares awarded as determined for accounting purposes (IFRS 2) or 30% of the value of the shares on the date of the award. The employer freely determines the method and can choose the method that results in the lowest valuation.

For restricted stocks granted under an authorization given by the shareholders on or after 8 August 2015 and on or before 31 December 2016, the employer contribution is due at the date the shares are delivered to the employee. This contribution is due at a rate of 20% and is assessed on the FMV of the shares on the vesting date. For restricted stocks granted under an authorization given by the shareholders after 31 December 2016 and on or before 31 December 2017, the employer contribution is due at a rate of 30%. For restricted stocks granted under an authorization given by the shareholders on or after 1 January 2018, the employer contribution is due at a rate of 20%.

Employees are subject to an additional contribution at the date of sale of the shares acquired under a French qualified plan. This contribution applies to shares granted on or after 16 October 2007 and equals 10% (rate applicable for shares sold since 18 August 2012) of the FMV of the shares on the date of delivery. This 10% employee contribution has been removed for restricted stocks granted under an authorization given by the shareholders after 8 August 2015. However, it has been partly reinstated for restricted stocks granted under an authorization given by the shareholders after 31 December 2016 (see below).

Gains derived from the sale of shares awarded under French qualified restricted stock plans that were granted before 28 September 2012 are taxed in accordance with the following rules:

- Taxable income equals the FMV of the shares at the date of vesting and is subject to tax only at the date of sale. It is subject to income tax at a flat 30% rate, plus 17.2% of social taxes and the 10% employee social contribution described above.
- If more favorable, the taxpayer can elect to have the stock award taxed at the regular progressive rates of income tax, plus the 17.2% of social taxes and 10% employee social contribution described above.

For gains derived from the sale of shares awarded under French qualified restricted stock plans that are granted on or after 28 September 2012 (under an authorization given by the shareholders before 8 August 2015), the acquisition gain (FMV of the shares on the date of delivery) is subject to the following:

- Income tax at the regular progressive rates
- 9.7% CSG/CRDS and the 10% employee social contribution described above

For gains realized under French qualified restricted stock plans for which implementation was authorized by the shareholders on or after 8 August 2015 and on or before 31 December 2016, the vesting gain (FMV of the shares on the date of delivery) is taxed at the date of sale of the shares in accordance with the following rules:

- Income tax is imposed at the regular progressive rates with application of a reduction of the tax base of 50% if the shares are held for more than two years after the vesting date. The reduction of the tax base is increased to 65% if the shares are held for more than eight years after the vesting date.
- 17.2% social taxes are imposed on investment income (calculated on the amount before any reduction of the tax base).

For gains realized under French qualified restricted stock plans for which implementation was authorized by the shareholders after 31 December 2016 and on or before 31 December 2017, the vesting gain (FMV of the shares on the date of delivery) is taxed at the date of sale of the shares in accordance with the following rules:

- Portion of the annual gain below EUR300,000: Income tax is imposed at the regular progressive rates with application of a reduction of the tax base of 50% if the shares are held for more than two years after the vesting date. The reduction of the tax base is increased to 65% if the shares are held for more than eight years after the vesting date. On investment income, 17.2% social taxes are imposed (calculated on the amount before any reduction of the tax base).
- Portion of the annual gain above EUR300,000: Income tax at the regular progressive rates is imposed. The 9.7% CSG/CRDS and the 10% employee social contribution described above is imposed.

For gains realized under French qualified restricted stock plans for which implementation was authorized by the shareholders on or after 1 January 2018, the vesting gain (FMV of the shares on the date of delivery) is taxed at the date of sale of the shares in accordance with the following rules:

- Portion of the annual gain below EUR300,000: Income tax is imposed at the regular progressive rates with application of an automatic reduction of the tax base of 50%. 17.2% social taxes are imposed (calculated on the amount before any reduction of the tax base).
- Portion of the annual gain above EUR300,000: Income tax at the regular progressive rates is imposed. The 9.7% CSG/CRDS and the 10% employee social contribution described above is imposed.

Any additional capital gain resulting from the difference between the sale price and the FMV at vesting is taxed as described below in Capital gains.

Withholding obligation on French-source portion of French qualified gains realized by nonresident taxpayers. Under Article 182 A of the French Tax Code, the French income tax due on the French-source portion of qualified stock options or qualified restricted stock award gains realized by individuals who are not tax residents in France at the time of the taxable event (that is, the sale of the underlying shares) must be withheld by the entity that pays the cash proceeds from the sale of the shares. The income tax must be withheld at the flat rate applicable to the qualified stock options or qualified restricted stock award gains (18%, 30% or 41% for gains realized in 2021), or at the specific progressive withholding tax rates applicable to compensation income. This obligation applies at the date of sale of the underlying shares and concerns restricted stock vested and options exercised since 1 April 2011.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from the disposal of shareholdings and real estate are subject to tax in France.

Investments. Capital gains realized by a taxable household on the sale of listed or unlisted shares, bonds or related funds are taxed at a flat rate of 30% (12.8% income tax and 17.2% of CSG/CRDS and additional social charges). In some cases, taxpayers can elect to be taxed at progressive tax rates with a discount based on the holding period if more favorable. See Expatriate tax law for information regarding taxpayers qualifying under Article 155 B.

Real property and shares in real estate companies. Gains derived from the sale of real property are taxable at a rate of 19%, and are subject to CSG/CRDS and social tax (17.2%), resulting in a combined total tax rate of 36.2%. Gains are reduced for each year that the property is held, effective from the fifth year of ownership (no chargeable gain arises with respect to property owned for 22 years or more for income tax and no charge for CSG/CRDS and social taxes applies after 30 years of ownership). The purchase price is increased to take into account purchase expenses and capital improvements. Effective from 1 January 2013, supplementary tax rates apply to capital gains in excess of EUR50,000. These supplementary tax rates range from 2% to 6%.

Exemptions. Individuals may benefit from a total exemption for gains derived from the sale of a principal private residence.

Deductions and credits

Deductible expenses. Expenses incurred in earning or realizing income are generally deductible from such income, and credits may also be available. The following deductions and credits are specifically allowed:

- Taxpayers may either deduct 10% of net taxable employment income, limited to EUR12,652 (for 2020 employment income), as an allowance for unreimbursed business expenses, without providing proof of expenditure, or they may elect to deduct actual expenses and provide a detailed listing.
- Tax credits are granted for investment in specified historical or classified real estate, for investment incurred for rental purposes and for domestic employee expenses up to a maximum of EUR12,000 (2020 ceiling) plus EUR1,500 per dependent. The credits cannot exceed EUR15,000.
- A credit is available for qualifying childcare expenses (outside the home) equal to 50% of the amount paid, limited to EUR2,300 per child under the age of six.
- Tax credits are granted, within certain limits, for charitable donations to recognized charitable institutions.
- School credits are available in the amount of EUR61 for a child in a college, EUR153 for a child in a lycée and EUR183 for a child in higher education.
- Amounts paid for alimony and child support (limited for children over 18 years of age) and for limited dependent parent support are deductible.
- A tax credit is available for investments in the motion picture and fishing industries and for certain other investments.

Numerous other allowances and deductions may also be available.

Personal deductions and allowances. The family coefficient rules discussed in Rates are used in calculating tax at progressive rates and take into account the size and taxpaying capacity of the household.

Business deductions. In general, deductible expenses for commercial, professional and agricultural activities are similar. They include the following items:

- The cost of materials and stock
- General expenses of a business nature, including personnel expenses, certain taxes, rental and leasing expenses, finance charges and self-employed persons' social security taxes
- Depreciation expenses (two methods are applicable, straight-line and declining-balance, over the normal life of the asset)
- Provisions for losses and expenses if the accrual method of accounting is used

Rates. French individual income tax is levied at progressive rates, with a maximum rate of 45% for the 2020 tax year (these are the most recent rates available). Family coefficient rules are used to combine the progressive tax rate with the taxpaying capacity of the household. France has a regime of joint taxation for married couples and individuals who have contracted a civil union (Pacte Civil de Solidarité, or PACS). Income tax is assessed on the combined income of the members of the household, including dependents. No option to file separately is available.

Family coefficient system. Under the family coefficient system, the income brackets to which the tax rates apply are determined by dividing taxable income by the number of allowances available to an individual. The final tax liability is then calculated by multiplying the tax computed for one allowance by the number of allowances claimed. Available allowances are shown in the following table.

Family composition	Allowances
Single individual	1
Married couple
No children	2
1 child	2.5
2 children	3
Each additional dependent child	1

Limits are imposed on the tax savings resulting from the application of the family coefficient system. For example, for a married couple, for the 2020 tax year, the tax savings may not exceed EUR1,570 for each additional half allowance claimed.

The progressive tax rates take into account the family coefficient.

The following table provides the 2020 income tax brackets and rates for individuals.

Annual taxable income		Tax
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	rate %
0	10,084	0
10,084	25,710	11
25,710	73,516	30
73,516	158,122	41
158,122	—	45

Exceptional 3% and 4% tax on high income taxpayers. High income taxpayers are liable for an exceptional tax calculated on their gross reference taxable income. For single taxpayers, the rate is 3% for the portion of the gross reference taxable income between EUR250,000 and EUR500,000 and 4% for the portion exceeding EUR500,000. For married taxpayers, the rate is 3% for the portion of the gross reference taxable income between EUR500,000 and EUR1 million and 4% for the portion exceeding EUR1 million. Gross reference taxable income equals taxable income plus exempt income, less limited items that are tax deductible.

CSG/CRDS and social tax. CSG/CRDS applies to all resident taxpayers. It is charged at a rate of 9.7% on 98.25% of gross salary if it does not exceed EUR164,544 (2021 ceiling) per year and on 100% of the portion of the gross salary that exceeds EUR164,544, including benefits in kind and bonuses.

CSG/CRDS on passive income and capital gains is increased by a social tax surcharge, resulting in a total rate of 17.2%. If the individual is not affiliated to the French mandatory social security scheme and is affiliated to a mandatory social security scheme located in the EU, Iceland, Liechtenstein, Norway or Switzerland, he or she is exempted from CSG/CRDS (9.7%) resulting in a total rate of 7.5%.

The tax administration characterizes CSG/CRDS as an income tax for domestic purposes. However, for social security bilateral agreements and EU social security regulation purposes, it is characterized as a social security charge. Consequently CSG/CRDS is not payable on employment income for expatriates covered under a social security certificate of continued coverage. This exemption for employment income does not apply to taxable passive income, including taxable capital gains.

CSG is charged at a rate of 9.2%, of which 6.8% is deductible for French income tax purposes.

Nonresidents. Nonresidents are subject to a withholding tax on French-source remuneration, after the deduction of statutory employee social security contributions and the 10% standard deduction.

Withholding rates applicable to net French-source compensation received by nonresidents in 2021 are set forth in the following table.

Annual taxable income		Tax
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	rate %
0	15,018*	0
15,018	43,563*	12
43,563	—	20

* Tax brackets are prorated according to the time actually worked in France.

The withholding tax discharges the individual's tax liability to the extent that the taxable amount does not exceed the 12% income bracket. Excess taxable income subject to the 20% bracket must be reported on an annual nonresident income tax return and is subject to the regular progressive tax rates. The 20% withholding then constitutes a tax credit against the tax liability. Any excess tax credit is not refundable.

A nonresident's tax liability may not be less than 20% of net taxable income for income between EUR0 and EUR25,710 and 30% for income exceeding EUR25,710. However, if a nonresident can prove that the effective rate of tax computed on his or her worldwide income, according to French tax rules, is less than 20% or 30%, the progressive income tax rates apply without limitation.

Effective rate rule (exemption with progression). If an individual has income exempt from tax under treaty provisions, the effective rate rule generally applies. Under this rule, the taxpayer's income tax liability is calculated based on worldwide income using the progressive rates and other French tax rules. Total income tax is then divided by worldwide income to yield the effective percentage rate, which is then applied to income taxable in France to determine total tax payable in France.

Relief for losses. French taxable income is determined for each category of revenue. Expenses incurred in creating income are deductible from the income produced. The following are deductible losses:

- Certain rental losses not due to interest payments, up to EUR10,700 per tax household per year
- Certain professional losses

The general principle is that losses from one category of income may offset profit from other categories and may be carried forward for six years. However, this principle is subject to limitations. Certain losses may be offset only against income from the same category of income. These include capital losses on quoted stocks and bonds.

Capital losses from the disposal of real estate are final losses and may not be carried forward to offset future capital gains from real estate.

B. Other taxes

Real estate wealth tax. Effective from 1 January 2018, the real estate wealth tax replaced the wealth tax.

The real estate wealth tax is levied on individuals with total net real estate assets exceeding EUR1,300,000 as of 1 January.

Real estate wealth tax applies to all real estate assets and real estate rights as well as to the shares in companies or other organizations for the fraction of the assets that represent real estate or real estate rights held directly or indirectly.

The following are the progressive rates of real estate wealth tax.

Taxable wealth
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	Rate %
0	800,000	0
800,000	1,300,000	0.5
1,300,000	2,570,000	0.7
2,570,000	5,000,000	1
5,000,000	10,000,000	1.25
10,000,000	—	1.5

A discount is planned for the taxable wealth included between EUR1,300,000 and EUR1,400,000.

French tax residents are taxed on their French and foreign real estate assets. Non-French tax residents are taxed on their French real estate assets only, subject to the application of tax treaties.

In addition, a specific exemption from real estate wealth tax on any assets located outside of France exists for individuals who move their residence from abroad to France and who have not been French tax residents during the preceding five civil years. This measure applies until 31 December of the fifth year following the year of the transfer of the residence in France.

Real estate wealth tax due from a French tax resident can be capped if the total taxes due from the individual exceed 75% of his or her annual income of the preceding year.

French taxpayers liable for real estate wealth tax must indicate their net asset value on the 2042-IFI tax form filed with the annual income tax return. The French tax administration calculates the real estate wealth tax and the amount due must be paid after receipt of the real estate wealth tax assessment.

Debts relating to assets exempt from real estate wealth tax or not included in the real estate wealth tax base cannot be deducted in the calculation of the real estate wealth tax.

Specific deduction rules apply for the valuation of shares of a company owning real estate, notably in the case of in fine loans (loans for which the capital must be reimbursed at once at the end of the loan; that is, loans with maturity) and loans that have been concluded directly or indirectly between the company and the taxpayer or members of his or her family.

Exit tax. An exit tax on restricted categories of income (mainly capital gains) may apply to taxpayers who departed France on or after 3 March 2011 if they own more than 50% of the stocks of a company or have more than EUR800,000 in shares the day before breaking their French tax residency and if the taxpayer was a French resident for at least 6 years during the last 10 years. The exit tax on the unrealized capital gain calculated at the date of the tax residency transfer may be due or may be postponed with or without a financial guarantee, depending on the country to which the taxpayer transfers her or his tax residency. Effective from 1 January 2014, after the departure from France, the taxpayer must hold his or her shares for at least 15 years (for transfers of residence after 1 January 2019, the 15-year period is reduced to 2 years or 5 years if the shares value exceeds EUR2,570,000). If the taxpayer decides to sell his or her shares before the end of this period, the postponement of the taxation ends, and the taxpayer is taxable on the capital gains calculated at the departure. The taxpayer must comply with filing obligations, which differ depending on the state and the date of the transfer.

Inheritance and gift taxes. If a decedent or donor was resident in France (or if the heir or beneficiary is French tax resident and was French tax resident during 6 years of the 10 past years), tax is payable on gifts and inheritances of worldwide net assets, unless otherwise provided by an applicable double tax treaty. For nonresident decedents or donors, only gifts and inheritances of French assets are taxable, provided the beneficiary is also a non-resident of France, unless otherwise provided by an applicable double tax treaty.

Surviving partners (spouses or partners in a Civil Union [Pacte Civil de Solidarité, or PACS]) are exempt from inheritance tax. The allowance for parents and children amounts to EUR100,000. The excess is taxed at rates ranging from 5% to 45%, depending on the value of the inheritance. Surviving brothers and sisters may be exempt from inheritance tax if specific conditions are met. In the absence of these conditions, they may each claim a personal allowance of EUR15,932 and are taxed at a rate of 35% on inheritances of up to EUR24,430 and at a rate of 45% on the excess. Other close relatives are taxed at a rate of 55% on the excess over EUR1,594 (or EUR7,967 for nephews and nieces), and other persons at a rate of 60% on the excess over EUR1,594.

The gift tax rates are generally the same as those for inheritance tax. Gifts between partners are taxable (spouses or partners in PACS), but partners benefit from a personal allowance of EUR80,724 instead of an exemption. For grandchildren, the allowance is EUR31,865. The excess is taxed at rates ranging from 5% to 45%.

The following items are exempt from inheritance tax:
- Life insurance contracted by the deceased (subject to certain age conditions). This exemption is limited to EUR152,500 for each designated beneficiary (as an exception, full exemption for surviving partners), and the excess is taxed at rates of 20% and 31.25%.
- The transfer of companies by death or gift (Collective Holding Commitment [Pacte Dutriel]). The transfer is partially exempt from inheritance and gift tax (75% rebate) if specific conditions are met (in particular, commitment of the heirs or the donees to retain the shares of the company). A tax reduction of 50% may also apply to a gift of the company if the donor is less than 70 years old.
- Works of art, if offered to the state.

Trusts. Assets held indirectly through trusts located abroad may result in wealth tax and inheritance tax. A trust is an unknown concept in French civil law. It was defined by the tax law in 2011 as legal rights created under foreign law by a settlor (constituent), either inter vivos or by death, who transfers assets to a trustee (administrateur) in the interests of beneficiaries. Since 2011, the French law provides specific rules for trusts located outside France.

Real estate wealth tax. Non-French tax residents who are true settlors of a trust (contributors to the trust and not acting for the account of others), or beneficiaries of a trust in the event of the settlor's death, are liable to real estate wealth tax in France only on the basis of the immovable assets located in France. Non-French tax residents must complete their real estate wealth tax returns. If they fail to meet these real estate wealth tax obligations, the trustee must pay a specific contribution, which equals the amount calculated by applying the marginal real estate wealth tax rate (1.5%) to all immovable assets located in France.

Reporting obligations. The trustee must disclose to the French tax administration some details about the trust (including but not limited to settlor identity, beneficiary identity, and nature and value of the asset) if the settlor or at least one of the beneficiaries is a French tax resident, if any asset held in the trust is located in France or if the trustee is a French tax resident. The trustee must file the following two kinds of tax returns:

- A tax return for each event occurring with respect to the trust (creation, modification, termination and distribution) within one month after the event
- An annual return detailing all the assets held by the trust and providing their FMV at 1 January

If the reporting obligations are not respected by the trust, a fine equal to EUR20,000 is imposed. Furthermore, an 80% penalty applies to the amount of the potential reassessments deriving from income in the trust (this 80% penalty cannot be less than EUR20,000; however, if the 80% penalty applies, the flat EUR20,000 fine does not apply).

Inheritance tax. The inheritance tax regime applicable to assets held through a trust is not favorable in comparison with the direct holding of the assets. However, if the assets are specially allocated to the beneficiaries before the death of the settlor and if certain other requirements are satisfied, the assets could be subject to progressive inheritance tax rates in France as if they were held directly by the settlor. If these conditions are not satisfied, the assets are subject to a higher flat rate of 45% (60% if the assets are allocated to a third party).

Trust distribution. Distributions from the trust to a beneficiary may be subject to French taxes or treated as investment income.

C. Social security

Contributions. An individual's social security taxes are withheld monthly by the employer. French social security contributions are due on compensation, including bonuses and benefits in kind, earned from performing an activity in France even if paid from a foreign country. However, this rule may be modified by a social security totalization agreement. The total charge for 2021 is approximately 15% to 24% (depending on retirement fund contributions and level of remuneration) of gross salary for employees, and 35% to 47% for employers.

Some of the contributions are levied on wages, up to ceilings of EUR41,136, EUR164,544 or EUR329,088 per year (2020 amounts). However, the sickness contribution (employer rate, 13.3%), the basic state pension contribution (employer rate, 1.9%), the family allowance contribution (employer rate, 5.25%), and the housing aid, old-age, work accident and transportation contributions (employer rate, approximately 7%) are levied on the employees' total remuneration.

Social security taxes are independent from CSG and CRDS contributions (see Section A).

Provisions allowing certain employees to opt out of paying French statutory pension contributions. The PACTE law (an action plan for business growth) introduced a new article relating to the social security code, which allows eligible employees and their employers to opt out of paying statutory pension contributions for a period of three years that is renewable for three additional years.

To opt out, the following conditions must be met:
- The employee has not been subject to compulsory pension contributions in the five calendar years preceding his or her start date in France.
- The employment began in France on or after 11 July 2018 with a French or foreign work contract.
- Employers and employees should be able to provide documentation of a minimum EUR20,000 contribution per year to an eligible private French pension fund or to a foreign pension fund. EUR20,000 is equal to the employer portion of compulsory French retirement contributions for an employee with a gross annual compensation amounting to EUR134,000 if the employer contributes at the minimum ARRCO/AGIRC (French statutory pension) rates.

The exemption applies for both the basic state old-age pension and the compulsory complementary pension contributions, which are CNAV, ARRCO/AGIRC, CEG, CET and APEC. The employee portion and employer portion of these contributions are exempt. The maximum savings for an employee with a gross annual compensation that exceeds the pension rate ceiling (EUR329,088 for 2021) is EUR80,500 plus 2.3% of the gross annual compensation, if the company contributes at the minimum ARRCO/AGIRC rates.

The employer and the employee need to send a joint request to the relevant social security office (URSSAF). Documentation needs to be included demonstrating either a payment or intention for payment of the annual minimum contribution of EUR20,000 to an eligible alternative pension plan as well as a sworn statement by the employee that he or she was not subject to a mandatory French pension regime in the five calendar years preceding the start of employment in France.

Benefits. The following benefits are available to an individual subject to the French social security system:
- Daily compensation in the event of interruption of professional activity
- Full retirement pension (basic state pension and complementary pension cover)
- Family allowance (exempt from income tax)
- Full professional accident coverage
- Partial or total medical expense reimbursement

Totalization agreements. The provisions of the French social tax code apply if work is performed on a regular basis in France, regardless of an employer's place of residence or the source of payment. A French citizen or resident on foreign assignment outside France may continue to contribute to the French social security system for a limited period under certain conditions.

To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, France has entered into totalization agreements with the jurisdictions listed below. The EU social security regulation can usually provide for periods of continued coverage under a home country social security regime for up to five years (with the mutual agreement of the competent authorities of both member states). Agreements with other jurisdictions apply for one to five years and periods of continued coverage may be extended with the mutual agreement of both competent authorities.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Filing. French residents are required to file annual income tax returns (Form 2042), in general, by the middle to end of May following the end of the relevant tax year (tax year is the calendar year), declaring their net income and charges incurred during the preceding calendar year. The official deadline for filing is in principle the end of February following the close of the calendar year, but this deadline is normally extended to different dates each year depending on the circumstances. The actual filing deadline for a particular tax year is determined by the tax administration and is reflected on the tax return forms issued to taxpayers. A married couple must file a joint return for all types of income and report their dependent children's income, if any.

Details of certain income items, such as capital gains, real estate income and income received abroad that is taxable in France, are reported on separate returns attached to Form 2042.

Payment. French income tax for resident taxpayers is paid via the French withholding tax system, which has been implemented from 1 January 2019. This system applies to wages, pension payments and unemployment allowances paid by French entities. Wages paid by non-French legal employers through a payroll outside France is also subject to a withholding process via shadow payroll (a fictitious payroll used only for calculating the basis of the withholding tax due).

For income not subject to the withholding tax, such as business income, self-employment income and rental income, monthly or quarterly income tax installments are directly withheld from the French bank accounts of individuals.

Both resident and nonresident taxpayers must file in the following year an annual French income tax return. Based on the return, the French tax administration issues a French income tax bill in August or September, mentioning the additional amount to be paid or the amount of the tax refund.

A penalty of 10% of tax due is imposed for either a failure to file or a failure to pay by the due date. Other interest and penalties may also be assessed, generally at an annual rate of 2.4%, or at a monthly rate of 0.2%.

Nonresidents. The filing date for the annual nonresident tax return is generally mid-to-late May following the end of the tax year.

A nonresident with income taxable in France is not required to report that portion subject to final withholding tax on a nonresident tax return. This includes salary income taxed at 0% or 12% rates, dividends and interest. Dividends are subject to a 12.8% withholding tax, and interest is taxed at rates ranging from 0% to 12.8%. Tax treaties may modify these rates. Rental income and the portion of salary taxed at a 20% rate must be included on a nonresident return. Few deductions are allowed in calculating a nonresident's taxable income. The tax liability with respect to the taxable income declared on the tax return is then calculated using the progressive rates (with a minimum of 20% for the income not exceeding EUR25,710 and 30% for the income exceeding EUR25,710) and the family coefficient system. The tax payable is reduced by withholding prepayments, including the 20% withholding on salary.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

If a double tax treaty does not apply, residents are generally allowed to deduct foreign taxes paid as an expense.

France has signed numerous double tax treaties. Double taxation is generally eliminated by a tax credit (for employment income, the credit is generally equal to the French income tax on such income) or by exemption with progression (income is exempt from French income tax but is taken into consideration in determining the effective rate of tax applied to the taxpayer's other French taxable income).

F. Work and residence permits

EU nationals. Nationals of the EU (not including the United Kingdom), EEA and Switzerland are not required to hold work or residence permits. However, if needed for personal or professional reasons, a residence permit is issued on written request to the relevant police authorities (préfecture).

Temporary status. All EU (not including the United Kingdom), EEA and Swiss nationals working in France while remaining on the payroll of the company in their home country have temporary détaché status. The employee may enter France without a visa by showing a valid passport or national identity card. The home company must comply with secondment obligations in France and complete a posting declaration online (Déclaration préalable de détachement) before the arrival of the assignee, which outlines the nature, place, duration, and terms and conditions of the assignment. This document is automatically sent to the local Labor Inspection Officer in France. The employee must remain on the payroll of their foreign employer, and the salary received while on assignment must be commensurate to the peer French employee.

Long-term status. EU (not including the United Kingdom), EEA and Swiss nationals hired by a French company on long-term expatriate status do not need a visa to enter France. They are not required to hold work and residence permits.

For both temporary and long-term status, on arrival in France, the employee must be in possession of a valid social security certificate of continued coverage or must be affiliated with the French statutory social security regime.

Non-EU nationals. Several immigration categories are available to non-EU nationals coming to France for work purposes.

Categories for non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals seconded to France. The categories for non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals (including UK nationals) seconded to France are discussed below.

Salarié détaché ICT status is available to individuals who have at least six months of service within the group and are assigned to France for up to three years (no extension possible) by their home employer to perform an activity under its reporting line, such as providing specific expertise or performing managerial functions. They must remain on the payroll of their home employer, and the salary received while on assignment must be commensurate to the peer French employee. Under this category, a work visa application is submitted at the French consulate in the assignee's country of residence. For an assignment shorter than 12 months, the visa serves as a residence permit. If the assignment is for 12 months or more, the visa issued is valid for 3 months and will need to be converted into a residence permit. The stay in France under this status cannot exceed three years. No renewal beyond three years is possible. A new ICT permit can be applied for after a cooling-off period of six months.

Travailleur temporaire status is available to seconded assignees who are not eligible for the Salarié détaché ICT (for example, a foreign employee sent to a client site in the framework of a services provision contract). Assignees must remain on the payroll of their home employer, and the salary received while on assignment must be commensurate to the peer French employee. Under this category, a work permit application must be submitted to the French labor authorities. After the work authorization is granted, the individual applies for a visa at the French consulate in his or her country of residence. The visa is valid for up to 12 months and serves as a residence permit. If the assignment goes beyond the expiration date of the visa, a residence permit is required.

For all assignees seconded to France, the home company must complete and submit a Posted Worker's Declaration (PWD) on the SIPSI online platform (Declaration préalable de détachement) before the arrival of the assignee. This document outlines the nature, place, duration, and terms and conditions of the assignment and is automatically sent to the local Labor Inspection Officer in France. This requirement applies to any seconded employee regardless of their nationality (that is, both EU and non-EU employees).

Citizens of jurisdictions that have signed totalization agreements with France (see Section C) may continue to be affiliated with the social security scheme of their home jurisdiction for as long as the totalization agreement applies (for example, up to five years under the agreement between France and the United States).

Categories for non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals locally hired in France. The categories for non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals locally hired in France are discussed below.

Passeport talent salarié en mission status is available to intracompany transferees temporarily integrated into the French company headcount (co-employment situation). The following are the eligibility criteria:

- At least three months of service within the group
- Work contract of at least three months with the host company belonging to the same group
- Minimum salary requirement of at least EUR33,579 gross per year or equivalent to salary paid to a French employee in a similar role, whichever is more favorable to the individual

Citizens of jurisdictions that have signed totalization agreements with France (see Section C) may continue to be affiliated with the social security scheme of their home jurisdiction for as long as the totalization agreement applies (for example, up to five years under the agreement between France and the United States).

Passeport talent Carte bleue européenne (European Blue Card) status applies to highly qualified non-EU employees who meet the following conditions:

- Recognized degree of at least bachelor level or proof of five years of professional experience at a comparable level commensurate with the position to be held
- Local employment contract for one year or more
- Minimum annual gross salary of EUR53,837

Passeport talent salarié qualifié status is available to non-EU nationals who hold a master's degree (mastère) or licence professionnelle obtained in France, conclude a work contract of at least three months with a French company and earn at least twice the French minimum wage (approximately EUR37,310 gross per year).

For all types of Passeport talent status, a work visa application is submitted at the French consulate in the assignee's country of residence. For contracts shorter than 12 months, the visa serves as a residence permit. If the assignment is for 12 months or more, the visa issued is valid for 3 months and must be converted into a residence permit. The residence permit is valid up to four years and is renewable.

Salarié permanent status is available to individuals hired by French companies under a permanent contract (CDI). In principle, the employer must search the local labor market before applying for a work permit for a foreign employee unless the job is listed on the official shortage occupation list. A work permit application must be filed before the arrival of the employee in France. After the work permit is granted, the employee must apply for a visa at the French consulate of his or her place of residence abroad. The visa is valid for 12 months. At the expiration of the visa, the individual applies for a residence permit valid for four years, which can be renewed.

If the individual is hired under a fixed-term contract (CDD), he or she falls under the Travailleur temporaire status. The visa obtained is valid for the duration of the work contract up to 12 months. If the contract is for a longer period, the individual must apply for a residence permit at the expiration of the visa.

The average timeline for processing work permit applications is six to eight weeks from the date when all required documents are filed with the authorities until the date when the work permit is sent to the relevant French consulate for visa issuance.

Categories for non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals who do not have a salaried activity in France. The categories for non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals who do not have a salaried activity in France are discussed below.

Non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals who want to act as a legal representative of a French company must apply for a Passeport talent mandataire social visa at the French consulate in their country of residence before arrival in France. The individual must have at least three months of service as an employee or a corporate officer in an entity of the group outside France and must earn yearly at least the gross equivalent of three times the French minimum wage (EUR55,965). The residence permit obtained in France is valid for up to four years and can be renewed.

The following categories of individuals are not required to obtain a Passeport talent mandataire social visa:
- Holders of a 10-year resident card (carte de résident; see Section G)
- Nationals of the EU, EEA or Switzerland

Entrepreneur/Independent Professional status is available to individuals performing a non-salaried activity or engaging in commercial activities in France. It can be used when the Passeport talent mandataire social eligibility criteria are not met. If the individual resides outside France, he or she must apply for the relevant visa at the French consulate in the country of residence. The visa is valid for up to 12 months and serves as a residence permit. At the expiration of the visa, the individual is required to apply for a residence permit, which is valid up to four years.

Passeport talent créateur d'entreprise status applies to individuals who want to set up a company in France. The following are the eligibility criteria:
- Master's degree or at least five years of relevant professional experience
- Presentation of a serious and feasible business project
- Investment of at least EUR30,000 in the business creation project

If the individual resides outside France, he or she must apply for the relevant visa at the French consulate in the country of residence. The visa is valid for up to 12 months and serves as a residence permit. At the expiration of the visa, the individual must apply for a residence permit, which is valid up to four years.

Short-term assignments. A work permit is required for short-term assignments (up to 90 days) or work contracts. However, as of 1 November 2016, non-EU nationals seconded to France to perform audit and expertise assignments in the information technology, management, finance, insurance, architecture or engineering fields may be exempt from work authorization. Short-term assignments cannot be extended beyond 90 days.

Other categories of activities that trigger the work permit exemptions are the following:
- Sporting, cultural, artistic and scientific events
- Conferences, seminars and trade shows
- Production and distribution of cinematic and audiovisual works, shows and recordings
- Modeling and artistic posing
- Personal service workers and domestic workers working in France during their private employers' stay in the country
- Occasional teaching activities by invited lecturers

Although a work permit exemption might apply, PWD continues to be required (see above).

G. Permanent residence permits

After five consecutive years of residence in France and payment of French income tax, the holder of a residence permit may apply for a resident card (carte de résident), which is valid for 10 years and is renewable. However, some categories of residence permit do not give access to a resident card. The relevant police authorities have substantial discretion with respect to the approval of a permanent resident card, which allows individuals to work for any employer in France.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals who accompany their EU national spouse to France must obtain a residence permit with the endorsement "Family Member of an EU citizen" (carte de séjour "Membre de famille d'un citoyen UE") if the EU national lives in France. They are granted the same right to work as their EU spouses.

Non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals who accompany their non-EU national spouses to France must also obtain a residence permit if they reside in France for more than 90 days.

Spouses of non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals in the following categories receive a residence visa/permit that entitles them to work in France:
- Intracompany secondment (Salarié détaché ICT)
- Intracompany local transfer (Passeport talent salarié en mission)
- European Blue Card (Passeport talent Carte bleue européenne)
- Qualified workers (Passeport talent salarié qualifié)
- Corporate officers (Passeport talent mandataire social)
- Business setup (Passeport talent créateur d'entreprise)
- Spouse of a French national

Spouses of non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals living in France under a Salarié permanent, Travailleur temporaire or Entrepreneur status are not allowed to work in France.

Non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss dependent children under the age of 18 obtain a circulation document for foreign minors (document de circulation pour étranger mineur) if they accompany non-EU, non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals to France.

Marital property regime. In the absence of a marriage contract, the default marital property regime in France is community property. For spouses married in France without a specific contract, all property is community property (including income derived from separately acquired property, but excluding gifts and inheritances and assets owned before the marriage). Spouses may elect a different marital regime (for example, separate ownership) by pre-nuptial agreement or, during the marriage, by a court-approved notarial deed.

Forced heirship. A person may not give away a certain portion (called the réserve) of his or her property by either inter vivos or testamentary transfer. The reserved portion is one-half of the property for a person with one child and a spouse, two-thirds of the property for a person with two children and a spouse, and three-quarters of the property for a person with three or more children and a spouse. This measure may apply to nonresidents who own property located in France.

Driver's permits. Holders of foreign driver's licenses must apply to exchange them for French driver's licenses before the end of the first year of residence in France. An exchange is authorized automatically for licenses issued by certain countries or certain states in a country. For example, with respect to the United States, automatic exchange is authorized for the following states.

Arkansas	Iowa	Ohio
Colorado	Maryland	Pennsylvania
Connecticut	Massachusetts	South Carolina
Delaware	Michigan	Texas
Florida	New Hampshire	Virginia
Illinois	Oklahoma	Wisconsin

Individuals with driver's licenses from other countries or states for which an exchange is not authorized must take the French driver's license test, which consists of a written examination and a practical driving test.

Holders of valid driver's licenses from EU member states are not required to exchange them for French licenses. However, licenses from certain EU member states may need to be renewed regularly.

A. Income tax

Who is liable

Territoriality. Subject to double tax treaties entered into by Gabon with foreign countries, residents are subject to personal income tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax only on their income derived from Gabon.

Definition of resident. The Gabonese General Tax Code provides that an individual is deemed to be resident in Gabon if he or she stays at least six months on average in the calendar year in Gabon or if he or she maintains his or her main residence in Gabon.

An individual is deemed to have his or her main residence in Gabon if he or she satisfies either of the following conditions:
- He or she has a home available to him or her as an owner, usufructuary or lessee.
- He or she has his or her center of economic or vital interests or his or her habitual abode in the country.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Taxable income includes all remuneration or compensation paid for services provided, including but not limited to, base salary, overtime, fringe benefits, allowances, and benefits in kind. Under the Gabonese General Tax Code, a deemed value for benefits in kind is included in the tax base. The deemed value equals a percentage of gross salary.

The Amending Finance Law for 2020 has modified the rate of the benefit in kind for housing from 6% to 15%. Similarly, the Amending Finance Law for 2021 introduces the total taxation of the representative indemnity of benefit-in-kind housing. These changes will be applicable from 1 January 2022.

Individuals may claim a deduction for professional expenses equal to 20% of gross salary after deduction of social contributions, capped at XAF10 million per year.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employment income is divided into the following categories:
- Commercial (including trades)
- Professional
- Agricultural

The net income from each of the above categories is combined, and the total is subject to the progressive rates set forth in Rates. A withholding tax of 20% applies to remuneration paid to foreigners without a permanent establishment in Gabon for activities performed or services rendered in Gabon. Self-employed individuals engaged in commercial activities calculate taxable income in the same manner as companies. Taxable income equals the difference between income received, including capital gains, and expenses paid during the calendar year. The accrual method of accounting is used.

At the option of the individual, instead of calculating taxable income from commercial activities as described above, such income may be subject to simplified taxation if the gross turnover ranges from XAF30 million to XAF60 million. Individuals performing certain activities and having annual gross turnover under XAF30 million are exempt from personal income tax and must pay a fixed tax amount determined according to their activity.

Individuals performing certain activities and having an annual gross turnover equal to or above XAF30 million are subject to taxation on gross turnover, less a deduction equal to the following:
- 70% for activities related to the purchase or resale or the production of goods for sale
- 50% for the provision of services
- 40% for liberal professions and similar professions

Investment income. Dividends and interest are subject to the tax on investment income (Impôt sur les Revenus de Capitaux Mobiliers, or IRCM). The IRCM on such income is withheld at a rate of 20% for both individuals and resident and nonresident corporate bodies. The IRCM is a final tax.

The 2021 Finance Law introduces an exception to the above-mentioned 20% rate for income from bonds with a maturity of at least five years issued in Gabon as well as for dividends and financial investment income received by private equity companies during the period of the carry trade. The exception provides for a rate of 10%, which is a final tax.

A 20% withholding tax is imposed on royalties paid to nonresidents.

Capital gains. Gains on the transfer of assets or rights held by individuals are taxed at a rate of 20%. This tax is a final tax.

The capital gain tax on the sale of a building and on all other sales is paid directly by the notary at the same time as the payment of registration duties.

The Gabonese Tax Code provides for exemption or rollover relief with respect to tax on capital gains under certain specified conditions.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. The following items are deductible:

- Voluntary pension fund premiums not exceeding 10% of taxable income before deduction of deductible charges
- Interest on loans and debts contracted by taxpayers for the construction and acquisition of, or for major repairs to, buildings located in Gabon and used by taxpayers as their principal place of residence, up to a maximum amount of XAF6 million per year
- Life insurance premiums not exceeding 5% of taxable income before deduction of deductible charges
- Alimonies paid under a court order
- Social security contributions paid for domestic servants

Personal allowances. The family coefficient system is used to reduce the personal income tax calculated for families (see Rates).

Business deductions. For individuals engaged in commercial, professional or agricultural activities, the following expenses are deductible under specific conditions:

- General expenses incurred for business purposes, mandatory and non-mandatory social contributions up to certain limits, certain taxes, insurance premiums, gifts and subsidies, rental expenses and financial charges

Rates. Income tax is levied at progressive rates, up to a maximum of 35%.

Income is taxed under a family coefficient system, which adjusts the amount of income subject to the progressive tax rate table according to the number of family members. Taxable income is divided by the applicable number of family allowances, and the final tax liability is calculated by multiplying the tax computed for one allowance by the number of allowances claimed. The following allowances are available.

Family status	Number of allowances
Single, divorced or widowed individuals with no children	1
Married individuals with no children, and single or divorced individuals with one child	2
Married individuals with one child, and single or divorced individuals with two children	2.5
Married individuals with two children, and single or divorced individuals with three children	3
Married individuals with three children, and single or divorced individuals with four children	3.5
Each additional child (up to six children)	0.5

The following table provides the annual personal income tax rates for taxpayers with one allowance.

Taxable income
Exceeding XAF	Not exceeding XAF	Tax rate %
0	1,500,000	0
1,500,000	1,920,000	5
1,920,000	2,700,000	10
2,700,000	3,600,000	15
3,600,000	5,160,000	20
5,160,000	7,500,000	25
7,500,000	11,000,000	30
11,000,000	—	35

In addition to the personal income tax, a supplementary tax at a rate of 5% is levied on net employment income (after deduction of social charges and pension plan contributions). The portion of monthly income under XAF150,000 is exempt. The family coefficient system does not apply to this tax. Employers withhold the supplementary tax.

Progressive income tax and supplementary tax are levied on monthly income using a prorated tax schedule. These are the final taxes for individuals who have no other income subject to income tax.

Taxable income realized from the various self-employment categories is aggregated, and the total is subject to the progressive tax rates applicable to employment income.

The minimum tax payable by taxpayers engaged in commercial, professional and agricultural activities equals 1% of annual taxable turnover or XAF500,000, whichever is greater.

Relief for losses. In general, losses from one category may be offset against profits in other categories. However, losses from commercial, professional or agricultural activities may not offset income in other categories. Such losses may be carried forward for five years to offset income from the same category.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

Inheritances and gifts are taxable if the transferred goods are located in Gabon. Inheritance and gift tax rates range from 0% to 35%, depending on the net value of the property and the relationship between the beneficiary and the donor or deceased.

C. Social security

Social security contributions are computed on monthly gross remuneration paid, including fringe benefits and bonuses, up to XAF1,500,000.

The rate of the employee contribution is 2.5%. This contribution, which is withheld by the employer, is for the pension allowances.

The rate of the social security contribution for employers is 16%. The following table shows the components of such rate.

Benefits	Rate (%)
Family allowances	8
Industrial accident insurance contributions	3
Pension allowances	5

The National Health Insurance and Social Welfare Fund (Caisse Nationale d'Assurance Maladie et de Garantie Sociale, or CNAMGS) is a new fund established with the aim of providing access to medical facilities for public and private sector employees. The CNAMGS contributions are computed on monthly gross remuneration paid, including fringe benefits and bonuses, up to XAF2,500,000. The employer rate for this contribution is 4.1%, which consists of the following components.

Benefits	Rate (%)
Distribution of medicine by hospital	2
Hospital expenses and miscellaneous	1.5
Fund for health evacuation	0.6

Employees are required to contribute 1% of their monthly pay for the CNAMGS.

Parliament recently adopted the Law No. 028/2016, dated 6 February 2017, implementing the new Social Security Code in Gabon. Under the law, the limits regarding the computation of social security contributions and social welfare as well as the respective rates will be determined by Ministry Order and Decree.

The new ceilings and applicable rates for social security contributions and social welfare have not yet been implemented. Therefore, in practice, the previous provisions described above still apply.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Employees are required to file an income tax return by 1 March of the year following the tax year. Employers must withhold tax from employees' salaries monthly.

Self-employed individuals are required to file the following tax returns:
- Individuals subject to the simplified tax regime must file a tax return by 30 April of the year.
- Individuals subject to the real tax regime must file a return by 30 April of the year, in the same format as the corporate income tax return.

Individuals subject to the above regimes must file a personal income tax return by 30 April of the year following the tax year of the realization of income, in addition to the above returns.

They are also required to file a declaration on salary and amounts remitted abroad by 30 April of each year.

Individuals required to pay a fixed tax amount must make the tax payment by 28 February of the tax year. Others must pay the tax due by 30 April.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Gabon has entered into double tax treaties with Belgium, Canada, France and Morocco. In addition, Gabon is a member state of the Central African Customs and Economic Union (Communauté Economique et Monétaire en Afrique Centrale, or CEMAC). The CEMAC is an organization of states of Central Africa (Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Chad, Congo [Republic of], Equatorial Guinea and Gabon) established to promote economic integration among countries that share a common currency, the CFA franc BEAC. Gabon is also a former member of the Common African and Mauritian Organization (Organisation Commune Africaine et Mauricienne, or OCAM). The OCAM no longer exists. However, Gabon and another former member state (Senegal) still apply the provisions of the OCAM tax treaty.

The CEMAC and OCAM treaties provide the following reliefs:
- Under the treaties, commercial profits are taxable in the treaty country where a foreign firm performs its activities through a permanent establishment. In addition, employment income is taxed in the treaty country where the activity is performed, except in the case of a short assignment.
- Dividends are taxable in the country where the beneficiary is resident.
- Under the OCAM treaty, interest is taxable in the country of residence of the beneficiary, but the country of source may apply a withholding tax if such a tax is contained in its domestic law. Royalties are taxable in the country of residence of the beneficiary.

In the absence of tax treaty relief, foreign taxes paid are deductible as expenses by individuals taxable on worldwide income.

F. Temporary visas

A visa is required for entry into Gabon.

Gabonese authorities issue two types of visas, which vary according to the duration of the permissible stay in Gabon. The following are the types of visas:
- Tourist visa (visa touriste)
- Business visa (visa d'affaires)

Tourist visa. A tourist visa is granted to non-professional visitors. It has a duration of one month. This initial period can be extended to a maximum of three months.

Business visa. A business visa is granted to foreign workers or businesspersons coming into Gabon for a period that does not exceed three months. They are exempt from the entry authorization requirement. However, they must state in writing their qualifications and describe the contacts they will meet during their stay in Gabon.

G. Work permits and authorizations

For individuals who will stay in Gabon for a period longer than three months for the performance of a remunerated activity, the following actions must be taken:
- Their employer must apply to the Ministry of Labor for an employment authorization (if the employee is less than 60 years of age) and a foreign worker card.

- They must apply and submit appropriate documentation to the immigration authorities for an entry authorization for the long term.
- They must apply to the immigration authorities for a residency card and an exit visa if applicable.

H. Residency cards

Residency cards are issued by the immigration authorities. They are required for all foreign nationals over the age of 16 who are staying longer than three months in Gabon.

The 2021 Finance Law makes the issuance of residence permits to individuals subject to the flat-rate synthetic tax and to the income tax on individuals in the categories of salaries and wages, industrial and commercial profits, noncommercial profits and agricultural profits. A lump-sum payment to the tax authorities is required.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. If the head of a family is allowed to enter Gabon, the family members accompanying this individual are admitted at the same time. However, to enter Gabon, all of the family members must present entry authorization (entry visa for long-term stay), passports and documentation proving their civil status.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally in Gabon using their home-country driver's licenses for a period of three months if they have a receipt for the payment for the registration of their license with the Ministry of Transport in Gabon.

Gabon has driver's license reciprocity with France and states affiliated with the International Treaty of Geneva (international driver's license). To obtain a Gabonese driver's license, a French or international driver's license must be registered with the Ministry of Transport in Gabon.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident individuals and nonresident individuals are subject to income tax on income received from Georgian sources.

For tax purposes, individuals are considered resident if they actually are located on the territory of Georgia for 183 or more cumulative days in any continuous 12-month period ending in the current tax year (that is, the calendar year) or if they are in Georgian state service abroad during the tax year. For purposes of the above residency test, the days considered are the days when the individual is actually located on the territory of Georgia, as well as the days spent by the individual outside the territory of Georgia for medical treatment, vacation, business trip or study purposes. The time of actual presence does not constitute time spent in Georgia by the following individuals:

- Persons with diplomatic or consular status as well as their family members
- Staff members of an international organization under Georgian international agreements, state servants of a foreign country, including their family members, but excluding citizens of Georgia
- Persons moving from one foreign country to another through the territory of Georgia
- Persons residing in Georgia for medical treatment or vacation purposes only

The status of residency is determined for each tax period. Days that were taken into account in determining the residency of an individual in the preceding tax period are not taken into account in determining residency in the current tax period.

In addition, high net-worth individuals may become residents of Georgia for tax purposes even if under the above general rule on residency, they are not deemed to be Georgian residents. For this purpose, high net-worth individuals are individuals who hold property with the value in excess of GEL3 million or whose annual income for each of the preceding three years exceeded GEL200,000.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice of Georgia set the rules and conditions for granting the status of Georgian resident to high net-worth individuals. Under these rules, an individual qualifying as a high net-worth individual in Georgia may become a Georgian resident if he or she holds a local personal identification card or residence permit or proves the receipt of annual Georgian-source income of GEL25,000 or more. If these conditions are satisfied, the Ministry of Finance of Georgia grants Georgian residency to such individual for a tax year based on the submitted application.

If residency of a Georgian citizen cannot be attributed to any other country, such person may become a resident of Georgia for tax purposes by applying to the tax authorities.

In certain circumstances, except for the cases mentioned above, the Minister of Finance sets the rules and conditions for granting the status of Georgian resident to foreign citizen individuals.

A nonresident is an individual who is not considered to be a Georgian resident under the rules provided above.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable income from employment consists of all types of compensation or benefits, whether received in cash or in any other form, subject to certain exceptions.

Self-employment and business income. Tax is levied on an individual entrepreneur’s annual income, which consists of gross income less expenses (except for nondeductible or partially nondeductible expenses) incurred in earning the income.

Directors’ fees. Directors’ work is considered to be employment performed in Georgia, and the income from such work is subject to income tax.

Investment income. A 5% withholding tax is imposed on dividends paid by Georgian enterprises to individuals. Dividends received by resident individuals that were taxed at source are not included in the gross income of such individuals and are not subject to further taxation.

The following dividends are not taxed at source and are not included in the gross income of recipients:
- Dividends received in a free industrial zone (FIZ) from a FIZ company
- Dividends distributed by an entity that has the status of an agricultural cooperative under Georgian law to its members (until 1 January 2023)
- Dividends distributed by an investment company established in accordance with the Law of Georgia on Investment Funds

A 5% withholding tax is imposed on interest payments made by or on behalf of Georgian residents and permanent establishments (PEs) of nonresidents to individuals, if the source of interest income is in Georgia. Interest received by individuals that was taxed at source is not included in the gross income of such individuals and is not subject to further taxation. If these payments are received by a person registered in a low-tax jurisdiction, the tax rate is 15%.

The following interest is not taxed at source and is not further included in the gross income of the recipient:
- Interest received from financial institutions licensed according to the Georgian legislation
- Interest received in a FIZ from a FIZ company
- Interest on free-floating securities or on debt securities issued by Georgian enterprises and listed on a recognized foreign stock exchange

Other income. Inheritances and gifts received are generally included in taxable income. However, certain exceptions apply (see Exempt income). Income received by individuals from renting out living space for living purposes is taxed at a rate of 5% if no expenses are deducted from this income. A 5% rate also applies to gains received by individuals from the supply of living space and the land attached to it, as well as from the supply of vehicles. In general, the taxable gain equals the difference between the sale price of the land or vehicle and its cost.

Nonresidents' income. Georgian-source income of a nonresident that is not related to a PE of the nonresident in Georgia is subject to tax at the source of payment without deductions. A 4% rate applies to the income received from the oil and gas operations of nonresident subcontractors under the Law of Georgia on Oil and Gas. Other payments to nonresidents deemed to represent income received from a Georgian source are taxed at source at a rate of 10%.

Exempt income. The following types of income are exempt from income tax:
- Income derived by nonresidents from employment with diplomatic or equalized organizations located in Georgia
- Grants, state pensions, state compensation, state academic scholarships, cumulative and repayable pensions from private pension schemes up to the amount of the contributions made and other specific state payments
- Financial and other awards received by persons engaged in sports-related activities and their coaches for winning and/or getting medal placing at the Olympic Games and/or the world and European championships
- Alimony
- Value of property (income) received on the basis of divorce
- Capital gains derived from the sale of vehicles that were held for more than six months after official registration
- Capital gains derived from the sale of residential apartments (houses) together with the attached land plot that were held for more than two years
- Capital gains derived from the sale of assets (other than vehicles and apartments or houses) that were held for more than two years and that were not used for economic activities (mere possession of securities or an equity interest with the purpose of receiving dividends and interest is not considered to be the use of assets in economic activities)

- In the case of the liquidation or capital reduction of a company, capital gains derived from the receipt of real estate in exchange for a partner's share in the company that was held for more than two years
- Capital gains derived from the sale of tangible assets held for more than a total of two years by an individual (I level legatee) and a decedent
- Property received by a I or II level legatee free of charge or by inheritance
- Property received by a III and IV level legatee, up to GEL150,000, free of charge or by inheritance
- Property with a value of up to GEL1,000 received free of charge during a tax year, other than property received from an employer
- Amounts paid to a donor for food required for the restoration of blood
- Until 1 January 2023, income received from the initial supply of agricultural products before their reproduction (change of commodity code) and salary payments received from these individuals by their employees if such income does not exceed GEL200,000 during a calendar year
- Georgian-source income of a nonresident received from insurance, reinsurance of risks and leasing services not related to his or her PE in Georgia
- Interest income and gains derived from the sale of bonds issued by the Government of Georgia, the National Bank of Georgia (NBG), deposit insurance agencies and international financial institutions (Government Ordinance #198, dated 21 February 2014, provides a list of international financial institutions)
- Income of resident individuals received from foreign sources
- Lottery winnings up to GEL1,000
- Income received by a nonresident individual from a nonresident employer for employment executed in Georgia for up to 30 calendar days in a tax year, if such salary expenses are not attributable to the PE of a nonresident in Georgia, regardless of whether the payment is made by the PE
- Income received from the transfer of property by a partnership to its members if, by the moment of the transfer, the members of the partnership consist only of individuals, the members have not changed since the establishment of the partnership, and the partnership is not a value-added tax (VAT) payer
- Income earned by a person who is in a bankruptcy regime after the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings under the Law of Georgia on Insolvency Proceedings
- Income earned by a natural person as a result of being employed by a person in relation to whom bankruptcy proceedings are pending

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Employer-provided stock options are a taxable benefit.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains are subject to regular income tax when they are realized. Unrealized capital gains are not subject to tax.

Individual entrepreneurs may offset their capital losses (except for losses incurred in economic activities) against proceeds received from the sale of the same type of assets. If the loss cannot be offset in the year in which it is incurred, the loss may not be carried forward (see Relief for losses).

Individuals who are not entrepreneurs may offset losses from the sale of assets against gains from the sale of the same type of assets. However, if a loss cannot be offset in the year in which it is incurred, the loss may not be carried forward.

Deductions

Business deductions. Taxpayers may deduct all documented expenses contributing to the generation of taxable income (for example, expenditure for materials, depreciation deductions, lease payments, wages and interest payments), except for expenses of a capital nature and expenses that are nondeductible or partially nondeductible.

A taxpayer may deduct the gain derived from the free-of-charge supply of goods and services from his or her gross income, subject to the restrictions imposed by the TCG in the reporting year in which such goods or services are used in an economic activity.

Nondeductible expenses include the following:

- Expenses that are not related to economic activities, except for contributions to charity funds. However, such contributions (both cash and noncash contributions except for immovable property) are deductible only up to 10% of taxable income before deduction of charitable expenses.
- Entertainment expenses, unless a taxpayer is engaged in entertainment business and the expenses have been incurred in the framework of such activity.
- Expenses incurred for personal consumption and costs related to the winnings received from lotteries, casinos (gambling houses), games of chance or other winning games.
- Expenses related to generation of income that is exempt from personal income tax.
- Penalties and fines paid or payable to the Georgian state budget.
- Income tax, except for income tax paid by an individual with respect to receiving a benefit (with the exception of a benefit received from employment and economic activities).
- Interest expenses above the established limit of 24% per year.
- Representative expenses in excess of 1% of gross income earned during the tax year.
- Expenses incurred on goods and services purchased from an individual with the status of micro business (see Section E).
- A bad debt may be deducted only if the respective income was previously included in gross income and if such receivables have been written off in the accounting books. Certain conditions provided by the TCG must be met for the receivable to be considered a bad debt.
- Capital repair expenses for fixed assets in excess of 5% of the balance of the corresponding group of fixed assets at the end of the preceding tax year. These expenses are added to the group and deducted through depreciation charges. However, such expenses are immediately expensed if a person applies the full depreciation method (see below).
- Insurance premiums paid by insured parties under pension insurance agreements.

Expenditures on tangible assets are deducted in the form of group depreciation charges through the application of the diminishing-balance method. The following are the rates for the depreciation groups.

Group	Rate (%)
I	20
II	20
III	8
IV	5
V	15

Depreciation may not be claimed for land, works of art, museum items, historical objects (except for buildings), fixed assets with a value under GEL1,000 and biological assets (animals and plants). Fixed assets with a value below GEL1,000 can be fully deducted from gross income in the year in which their exploitation begins. Expenditure on biological assets may be deducted in the year when it was incurred. Taxpayers may claim accelerated depreciation norms with respect to the II and III groups. However, such accelerated depreciation may not be more than double the amount of the rates mentioned above. In addition, repair expenses on rented fixed assets (if they do not reduce the rental fee) result in the creation of a separate group of assets that is depreciated at the rate set for Group V. On the expiration or termination of the rent agreement, the remaining balance value of the group may not be deducted from gross income and the value of the group is set to zero.

Alternatively, the cost of fixed assets purchased or produced (except for non-amortized fixed assets) can be depreciated at a rate of 100% in the year in which the exploitation of such assets begins. A taxpayer selecting the full depreciation method may not change it for five years.

Expenditures on intangible assets are deducted in proportion to the useful life of the assets. If it is impossible to determine the useful life of an intangible asset, a 15% rate applies. In addition, expenditure on intangible assets with a value below GEL1,000 can be fully deducted from the gross income in the year in which the respective expenditure is incurred.

Rates. The personal income tax rate is 20%.

Credits. Because the income of resident individuals received from foreign sources is exempt from personal income tax, no foreign tax credits are allowed.

Relief for losses. Individual entrepreneurs may carry forward losses for up to five years to offset future profits. The offsetting of loss carryforwards against the salary income of individual entrepreneurs is not allowed.

Losses may also be carried forward for up to 10 years. However, the statute of limitations is 11 years for a 10-year carryforward period, and 6 years for a 5-year carryforward period. A 10-year carryforward period may be changed back to a 5-year carryforward period if the losses carried forward are used up. No loss carrybacks are allowed.

B. Other taxes

Inheritance and gift taxes. Georgia does not impose gift taxes. As mentioned in Section A, inheritances and gifts are subject to general income taxation. However, certain exemptions are applied.

Wealth tax. Georgia does not impose wealth tax or net worth tax.

Property tax. For individuals, the following items are subject to property tax:
- Owned immovable property (buildings or parts of buildings)
- Unfinished construction
- Yachts (motorboats), planes and helicopters
- Passenger vehicles (under Harmonized System [HS] Code 8703)
- Property leased from nonresidents

In addition, for individuals carrying out economic activities, the following items are taxable:
- Fixed assets
- Unassembled equipment
- Property leased to other parties

Property located in a FIZ is exempt from tax.

The property tax rates for taxable property, except for land, vary according to the revenues earned during the tax year by the family owning the property. The rates are applied to the market value of the property. The following are the rates.

Annual revenues		Property tax
Exceeding GEL	Not exceeding GEL	rate %
40,000	100,000	0.05 to 0.2
100,000	—	0.8 to 1

Property tax is a local tax. The local government fixes the rate within the above ranges.

The property tax rates for agricultural land vary according to the administrative unit and the land quality. The annual base tax rate per 1 hectare varies from GEL5 to GEL100. The local government fixes the rate for land at up to 150% of the above annual base tax rate.

The base tax rate for non-agricultural land is GEL0.24 per square meter. The local government adjusts the rate by a territorial coefficient of up to 1.5.

The property tax rate for land granted to a person using natural resources on the basis of a license may be set at a rate of up to GEL3 per hectare.

C. Social insurance tax

Contributions. Georgia does not impose social insurance tax.

Totalization agreements. Georgia is not a party to any international agreement regarding contributions to social funds.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Georgia is the calendar year.

Employers in Georgia (Georgian entities, PEs of foreign entities and individual entrepreneurs, except for FIZ companies with respect to salary payments to their resident employees) must withhold personal income tax from the salaries paid to resident and nonresident employees in Georgia.

A nonresident person making salary payments that are not attributable to its PE in Georgia is exempt from the obligation to withhold tax at the source of payment. In this case, the employee may calculate the tax liability, file a tax return and pay tax.

Tax agents who withhold personal income tax at source must file monthly tax returns and forms containing information about the income recipients, income paid and taxes withheld by the 15th day of the month following the reporting month.

Resident individuals and nonresident individuals who derive income that was not taxed at the source of payment in Georgia must file personal income tax returns before 1 April of the year following the tax year.

Individual entrepreneurs engaged in economic activities in Georgia must make current tax payments during the tax year. Each current tax payment equals 25% of the tax liability for the preceding tax year. The payments are due on 15 May, 15 July, 15 September and 15 December of the current tax year. A balancing payment must be made before 1 April of the year following the tax year. Individuals who did not derive income during the preceding tax year are not required to make current tax payments.

If an individual has made current tax payments (or has no obligation to make current tax payments) due for the tax year, the submission date can be extended for up to a further three months by notifying the Georgian Tax Authorities (GTA) before the filing deadline. Personal income tax returns can be amended within the statute of limitation, which is three years.

Individual entrepreneurs must file a final tax return within 30 working days following the cessation of their economic activities in Georgia. In the following periods, they are not required to file a tax return until the resumption of economic activity.

E. Special tax regimes

Individuals may obtain the special status of micro business and individual entrepreneurs may obtain the status of small business. On obtaining these statuses, individuals become eligible for certain simplified accounting rules and tax exemptions. The GTA grants the statuses to individuals. Individuals may also be granted the status of fixed taxpayer.

Micro business. The status of micro business can be granted to individuals who satisfy the following conditions:

- They conduct economic activities independently without hiring employees.

- They receive annual gross income up to GEL30,000.
- They maintain an inventory balance up to GEL45,000.
- They are not registered VAT payers.

The government determines the prohibited activities for individuals with the status of micro business, as well as the types of income that are not taxed under the special tax regime and that are not included in the calculation of the above gross income threshold.

Individuals with the status of micro business are exempt from personal income tax. However, they must maintain all primary tax documentation. In addition, such individuals must file a tax return annually.

The status of micro business is canceled for the current tax year if any of the above requirements for micro business are violated or if an individual with the status of micro business applies to the GTA for cancellation of the status or obtains the status of small business. On cancellation of the status, the income of an individual is taxed either according to the rules for small business if such status is obtained or according to the standard personal income tax rules.

Small business. A small business is liable for personal income tax at a 1% rate. The applicable personal income tax rate increases to 3% if gross income of a small business received from economic activities exceeds GEL500,000. A 3% rate applies from the beginning of the month in which a small business exceeded the GEL500,000 threshold until the end of a calendar year. Taxable income of a small business consists of Georgian-source income except employment income and certain other types of income determined by the government of Georgia that is not taxed under the special status and is not included in the gross income of a small business.

A small business is not required to withhold tax at source on payment of salaries to its employees up to GEL6,000 during the calendar year if either of the following conditions is met:

- He or she has been registered as an individual entrepreneur and has been granted a small business status within the same calendar year.
- Gross income received during the preceding calendar year did not exceed GEL50,000.

The status of a small business will be canceled if one of the following conditions is met:

- Annual income from business activities exceeds GEL500,000 for two calendar years.
- The individual applies for status cancelation voluntarily.
- The individual is engaged in activities that are prohibited by the government of Georgia under the status of a small business.
- The individual is fined at least three times during the calendar year for the violation of rules for using a cash register.

Individuals with the status of a small business must file a tax return and pay the respective taxes no later than the 15th day of the month following the reporting month.

Fixed taxpayer. The status of fixed taxpayer can be granted to a person who satisfies both of the following conditions:
- He or she carries out activities subject to fixed tax as defined by the government of Georgia.
- He or she is not registered as a VAT payer.

In addition to activities subject to fixed tax, a person having the status of fixed taxpayer can carry out additional activities defined as permitted activities by the government of Georgia. Income earned from carrying out activities subject to fixed tax are not included in the gross income of a fixed taxpayer and are not subject to further taxation. Instead, such income is subject to fixed tax at the following rates:
- GEL1 to GEL2,000. The government of Georgia sets the exact fixed rate for each type of activity. Also, the fixed rate for the same type of activity may vary among the territorial units of local self-governing bodies.
- 3% of income generated from taxable activities.

Income earned from carrying out additional activities not subject to fixed tax but allowable by the government of Georgia is subject to tax under the normal rules. Fixed taxpayers must keep all primary tax documentation issued to or by them.

Fixed taxpayers are not liable to make advance tax payments and are exempt from the obligation to file a tax return.

The status of fixed taxpayer is canceled if any of the following circumstances exists:
- A person ceases to perform activities subject to fixed tax.
- A person carries out an activity that is different from activities authorized by the government of Georgia for fixed taxpayers as additional activities.
- A person applies to the GTA for cancellation of the status.
- A person is liable to register as a VAT payer within the scope of allowed additional activities or voluntarily registers as a VAT payer.

If any of the above circumstances exists, a person must apply to the GTA within 10 working days from that moment and request cancellation of the status.

- The income is paid to the individual by or on behalf of an employer who is not a resident of Georgia.
- The cost of the income is not borne by a PE of the employer in Georgia.

Tax benefits granted by the tax treaties can be claimed in accordance with the rules established by the Minister of Finance of Georgia.

H. Residence permits

The Legal Entity of Public Law Civil Registry Agency under the Ministry of Justice of Georgia issues residence permits.

The Law on Legal Status of Foreigners and Stateless Persons provides for the following residence permits:

- A work residence permit, which is issued for the carrying out of entrepreneurial or labor activities in Georgia to a foreign person who provides documentation proving the carrying out of such activities, as well as a certificate proving that income from such activities is not less than five times the amount of the substance minimum (approximately GEL200) and that the employer or established company (except for educational or medical establishments) of such person has a turnover of more than GEL50,000. For medical establishments, the abovementioned threshold is GEL35,000.
- A study residence permit, which is issued for the purpose of study at an authorized educational institution in Georgia.
- A residence permit for the purpose of family reunification, which is issued to family members of an alien holding a residence permit.
- A residence permit of a former citizen of Georgia, which is issued to an alien whose citizenship of Georgia has been terminated.
- A residence permit of a stateless person, which is issued to an individual whose status of statelessness has been determined in Georgia.
- A special residence permit, which is issued to an alien who is reasonably assumed to be a victim of or affected by human trafficking.

- A permanent residence permit, which is issued to a spouse, parent of a Georgian citizen minor child and minor child of a Georgian citizen. A permanent residence permit is also issued to an alien who has lived in Georgia for the last 10 years on the basis of a temporary residence permit. This period does not include the period of residence in Georgia for study or medical treatment, and the period of work at diplomatic missions and equivalent missions.
- An investment residence permit, which is issued to an alien who has made an investment worth at least USD300,000 in Georgia, in accordance with the Law of Georgia on Investment Activity Promotion and Guarantees, or owns an immovable property in Georgia, the market value of which is at least USD300,000, and to his or her family members. For the purposes of this permit, family members are a spouse, minor children and the alien's legally incompetent or disabled dependents. This permit may be issued for a period of five years.
- A temporary residence permit, which is issued to persons holding the status of victims. Temporary residence permits are issued for no more than six years.
- A short-term residence permit, which is issued to a person having ownership in real property located in Georgia and to his or her spouse and children. The market price of this property should be at least the equivalent in Georgian lari of USD100,000. The short-term residence permit is issued for one year.
- Lifetime residence permit, which is issued to persons and their family members who have obtained an investment residence permit on the basis of the following:
  - Making an investment worth USD300,000 in Georgia
  - Having turnover of over USD50,000 in the first year, over USD100,000 in the second year and over USD120,000 in the third, fourth and fifth years
  - Having owned immovable property in Georgia with a value of over USD300,000 for five years

  For the purposes of this permit, family members are a spouse, minor children and the alien's legally incompetent or disabled dependents.

Persons arriving in Georgia for working purposes from visa-free countries are not required to obtain a work residence permit for up to a year. If they intend to work in Georgia for more than a year, they must apply for the work residence permit 40 days before the expiration of the visa-free period.

I. Driver's permits

A foreign national with an international driver's license may drive legally using this license if information is indicated in Latin letters or if it is translated into Georgian and certified by a notary. A foreign national who wishes to drive in Georgia but does not have an international driver's license must legalize his or her home-country license in the country where the license was issued and have it translated into Georgian. This translation needs to be notarized in Georgia.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals are subject to tax on their worldwide income if they meet either of the following conditions:

- They have a domicile in Germany for their personal use.
- They have a “customary place of abode” in Germany and do not stay only temporarily at this place or in this area. This means that if they are present in Germany for an uninterrupted period of at least six months that may fall in two calendar years, a customary place of abode is in principle given in any case.

The citizenship of a taxpayer usually is not a consideration in determining residency. However, under the provisions of certain tax treaties entered into by Germany, citizenship may be one of the factors to consider if a taxpayer qualifies as a resident under the domestic laws of both Germany and the other treaty country. Individuals not resident in Germany are generally subject to tax on income derived from German sources only.

Nonresidents may elect to be treated as residents if either their income subject to German taxation amounts to 90% or more of their worldwide income or their income not subject to German taxation does not exceed the amount of EUR9,744 per calendar year. This provision allows nonresidents to file German income tax returns like residents and to claim all deductions and allowances normally granted to residents only.

Income subject to tax. German income tax law distinguishes between several categories of income, including income from employment, self-employment, investment, business and real estate. Income from each of the categories may be combined, and overall taxable income is then determined by subtracting special deductions. However, income from investment is generally taxed at source with a flat tax rate.

Employment income. Employed persons are subject to income tax on remuneration received from employment. An individual is treated as an employee if he or she is obliged to follow an employer's directions and is integrated into the employer's organization as a dependent member.

Employment income includes the following:

- Salaries, wages, bonuses, profit participations, and other remuneration and benefits granted for services rendered in a public office or in a private employment
- Pensions and other benefits received from a former employee or the employee's surviving spouse or descendants, in consideration of services performed in the past

Under certain conditions, employment income does not include employer-paid actual moving expenses, education expenses for employees or contributions to a pension plan up to certain limits.

Allowances paid to foreign employees working in Germany, including foreign-service allowances, cost-of-living allowances and housing allowances, are considered to be employment income and generally do not receive preferential tax treatment.

Education allowances generally provided by employers to their employees' children must be considered for income tax and social security purposes. Under specified circumstances, on filing a personal income tax return, 30% of school fees is deductible for tax purposes as special expenses (see Deductions). However, this deduction is limited to EUR5,000 for each child.

In addition, two-thirds of childcare expenses (for example, kindergarten, babysitter and nanny) are deductible for tax purposes as special expenses, up to a maximum deduction of EUR4,000 per year, until the child reaches age 14.

Self-employment and business income. Individuals acting independently in their own name and at their own risk are subject to income tax on income derived from self-employment or business activities.

Business income includes income from activities performed through a commercial entity or partnership, while self-employment income includes primarily income from professional services rendered (for example, as doctors, dentists, attorneys, architects, journalists and tax consultants).

In general, all income attributable to self-employment or business, including gains from the sale of property used in a business or profession, is subject to income tax.

Income derived by general or limited partnerships is not taxed at the level of the partnership, but each partner is taxed on his or her attributable profits separately. The compensation that a partner receives from a partnership for services rendered, for loans given or for assets loaned to the partnership is included in the partner's income from self-employment or business activities.

If a nonresident carries on a business through a permanent establishment in Germany, taxable income is computed in the same manner as for a resident individual and is taxed at the same income tax rates. However, the basic tax-free allowance in the amount of EUR9,744 is not considered.

Directors' fees. Remuneration received as a supervisory board member of a corporation is treated as income from self-employment. A member of a supervisory board has been regarded as an entrepreneur and was generally subject to value-added tax at a rate of 19%. As a result of new case law, this can no longer be claimed as a general rule. A case-by-case examination is therefore necessary.

Investment income. Investment income, such as dividends and interest, is taxed at a flat tax rate of 25%, which must be withheld at source by the payer. A solidarity surcharge (5.5% of the flat withholding tax) and church tax, if applicable, (8% or 9% of the final withholding tax, depending on the location) is added. The flat withholding tax is, in most cases, the final tax. In general, investment income taxed at source does not have to be declared in the German income tax return. However, if the investment income was not subject to the flat tax withholding at source (in particular, capital investment income from foreign sources), the total annual gross investment income must be declared in the tax return. In general, if the investment is held in a German account, the financial institution determines the amounts to be considered in the income tax return. However, if the taxpayer owns, for example, investment funds' units or shares that are held in a foreign account, the taxable income (pre-determined tax base [Vorabpauschale]), which consists of all distributions made by the fund and any gain from the sale of funds) needs to be calculated individually for each fund. Taxpayers with an average personal income tax rate below 25% can apply for the lower personal tax rate to investment income by declaring such income in the German income tax return.

Negative investment income cannot be deducted from income of other sources (for example, employment income and self-employment income). However, a net investment loss can be carried forward to be credited against future positive investment income. A special loss consideration rule applies to capital gains derived from the sale of shares.

Investment income is tax-free in an amount of EUR801 per year for a single taxpayer (EUR1,602 per year for a married couple filing jointly). In general, actual expenses cannot be deducted. The investor can provide the investment institution with an exemption order for the applicable lump-sum amount or with a certificate of non-assessment; in both cases, the final withholding tax is not deducted up to the amount of tax-free income.

Income from rentals and leases of real property located in Germany is taxed by assessment.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. German tax law does not differentiate between qualified and non-qualified stock option plans.

In general, stock options provided by employers are non-tradable. In this case, the acceptable tax-filing position is taxation at the date of exercise, more specifically on the transfer of the economic ownership of the shares.

In general, the amount equal to the difference between the fair market value of the stock at the date of exercise and any price paid by the employee (grant price and transaction cost) must be included as employment income. This amount is generally subject to tax at the ordinary personal progressive tax rates and may qualify for treaty relief.

The taxable benefit may qualify for relief for compensation received for services performed over a period of several years (see Personal deductions and allowances).

A special tax exemption is available, provided certain conditions are met, most importantly that the equity participation is offered to "all" employees (certain exceptions are permissible).

Effective July 2021, the tax-free amount was increased from EUR360 to EUR1,440 per year.

The grant of non-tradable options is regarded as an additional incentive for future services. Consequently, such grant is regarded as compensation for services rendered during the period between the grant date and the date of vesting. For expatriates, the benefit is allocated by reference to the work performed during the period between the grant date and the vesting date if treaty relief is available.

Tradable options are generally also taxed at the time of exercise, unless sold before that time.

For the capital gains treatment of shares acquired due to stock options, see Capital gains. To determine the amount of the capital gain, the acquisition price is deemed to be the fair market value used for taxation as employment income (see above).

Capital gains

Real estate. Gains derived from the disposal of real estate held for not more than 10 years are included in taxable income and taxed at the ordinary rates, unless the property was exclusively used by the taxpayer as a personal residence in the year of sale and the two preceding years.

Sales of securities. Gains on the sale of shares were not subject to tax before 1 January 2018 if the participation in the company was less than 1%. Capital gains on shares that were acquired before 1 January 2009 are not subject to income tax. Capital gains on investment funds units that were acquired before

1 January 2009 are only taxable to the extent that the rise in value happened after 31 December 2017 Moreover, they are tax-exempt in an amount of up to EUR100,000.

Losses incurred on the sale of shares acquired before 2009 could be deducted from taxable gains from the sale of shares and certain other assets, particularly real estate, until the end of 2013. If losses incurred on the disposal of shares before 2009 were not balanced by 31 December 2013, they cannot be offset against gains from the sale of shares, and they may only be offset against gains from the sale of certain other assets (for example, real estate) as of 2014.

Gains derived from the sale of shares or investment funds units acquired after 31 December 2008 are subject to the 25% withholding tax mentioned in Investment income, regardless of the holding period. The gain is fully taxable. Losses incurred on the sale of shares acquired after 31 December 2008 can only be offset against gains derived from the sale of shares. Any remaining losses can be carried forward to the following calendar year.

Gains derived from a disposal of shares of a corporation are considered to be business income rather than investment income if the vendor has held a direct or indirect participation of at least 1% of the corporation in the last five years.

Sales of certain other assets. Gains derived from the disposal of certain other assets are not subject to tax in Germany if the individual holds them for more than one year. However, if the individual realizes income from these assets in at least 1 calendar year, the tax-relevant period is extended to 10 years. If the individual sells the assets before the expiration of the 10-year period, the gain derived from the disposal is subject to tax in Germany. A potential loss from the sale is subject to certain restrictions. Convenience goods, which are necessities or goods for day-to-day use, are not covered by this rule even if the holding period is less than one year.

Tax-free amount. Capital gains are tax-free if the total gains in the calendar year amount to less than EUR600.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Expenditure incurred by an employee to create, protect or preserve income from employment generally is deductible.

Income-related deductible expenses include the following:

- Cost of travel between home and the “primary place of work” (see below)
- Expenses for working from home (lump-sum deduction for home office)
- Expenses connected with maintaining two households for business reasons (rent, home trips, per diems and moving costs, to a certain extent)
- Specialist books and periodicals for business purposes
- Membership dues paid to professional organizations, labor unions and similar bodies
- Childcare expenses (subject to certain limitations; see Employment income)

The following are the tax rules regarding the deduction of work-related travel expenses:
- The legal definition of "primary place of work" describes a fixed central location of the employer, an affiliated company or a third party determined by the employer to which the employee is permanently assigned.
- Per diems are determined by a two-tiered scale of flat fees, which are set at EUR14 and EUR28 (generally for up to three months). For one-day business trips (absence of at least 8 to 24 hours), the per diem is EUR14. The per diem for the arrival and departure day of a multiday business trip equals EUR14, while the per diem for an absence of 24 hours equals EUR28. For meals granted by employers, the standard per diems are reduced by a certain percentage referring to the meal granted to the employee by the employer (or by a third party at the request of the employer) during a business trip. The percentages are 20% for breakfast and 40% each for lunch and dinner.
- For job-related maintenance of two households in Germany (that is, the maintenance of a personal household at the place of residence and lodging at the workplace and job-related inducement), the expenses can be deducted as income-related expenses up to a general limit of EUR1,000 per month. If the household at the workplace is located abroad, the upper limit of EUR1,000 does not apply.
- Lodging expenses during assignments outside the primary workplace can be deducted as income-related expenses without restriction for up to 48 months.

A standard deduction of EUR1,000 per year for employment-related expenses is granted without any further proof. However, an employee can claim a larger deduction if he or she proves that the expenses actually paid exceed the standard deduction.

For retirees, the standard deduction is EUR102 per year.

Premiums under contracts for life, health, accident or liability insurance, and compulsory payments to various forms of social security are deductible as special expenses within certain limits. Payments to foreign insurance companies are deductible only if the respective company has a registered office or an executive board in the European Union (EU) or a contracting member state of the European Economic Area (EEA) and is authorized to perform its insurance services in Germany. Other foreign insurance companies are required to hold a permit to operate in Germany.

The deductions will be increased over the next years, corresponding to the increase in taxation of future benefits. Ninety percent of the employees' portion of the following payments, limited to an annual total of EUR25,787 less the tax-free employer's contribution, is deductible:
- Compulsory state old age insurance
- Certain professional group pension plans
- Qualifying life annuity pensions

Premiums for basic health care services under German social security law are deductible only as special expenses. Fees for additional services relating to private health care plans are generally not deductible.

Contributions under contracts for nursing care insurance entirely qualify as deductible special expenses.

In addition, taxpayers may claim deductions for contributions to health and nursing care insurance paid for spouses subject to unlimited taxation, common-law spouses and children for whom the taxpayer is entitled to receive childcare allowances under German regulations. The deduction is subject to the abovementioned restrictions.

Other insurance contributions under contracts for unemployment, disability, accident, liability and life insurance are deductible only up to EUR1,900 for employees (EUR2,800 for all others), provided that this limit has not already been reached by contributions to health and nursing care insurance.

Other items that may be claimed as special deductions include church tax and donations. Instead of itemizing these deductions, a standard deduction of EUR36 (EUR72 for married couples filing jointly) per year is granted.

Personal deductions and allowances. The following tax benefits are granted to individuals:

- A basic tax-free allowance of EUR9,744 is available for single individuals (EUR19,488 for married couples filing a joint return).
- The income tax on compensation received in one year for services performed over a period of several years (for example, a long-term bonus is calculated by reference to a special formula one-fifth rule). Under this formula, tax is calculated both for income less the one-time payment and for income less the one-time payment plus one-fifth of the one-time payment. The difference between the two results is multiplied by five. This tax relief is also granted to individuals who are nonresidents for tax purposes.
- Termination payments are also subject to taxation, considering the abovementioned one-fifth rule, if certain conditions are fulfilled. Termination payments that are paid in connection with cross-border employees subject to tax in more than one country with a double tax treaty in place must be considered as additional income for the former employment. This rule usually was applied by allocating the payment basically over the period of employment to the countries where the individual has been subject to tax during that employment period. According to a new ruling, the termination payment must be allocated based on where the former employment had actually been performed. However, this interpretation of the law can still be rejected by the supreme tax court. In any case, the tax treatment of termination payments needs to be investigated in detail based on the underlying situation. However, any regulation in an underlying double tax treaty regarding the taxation of termination payments must be considered preferential. If one country interprets the underlying double tax treaty in a manner so that it will not tax the termination payment, Germany taxes this payment instead if the individual is tax resident in Germany at the time of payment.
- Private use of a company car is generally subject to income tax. However, it benefits from preferential tax treatment.

- Income derived on business days spent in foreign countries may be exempt from tax in Germany under the progression clause generally contained in tax treaties entered into by Germany. However, proof of actual foreign tax paid or a waiver of the taxation of such income by the foreign tax authorities is required.

Taxpayers with children receive children-related deductions, such as for the following:
- Each child under 18 years of age
- Each child under 21 years of age if the child is jobless and registered as seeking work
- Each child under 25 years of age who is attending school, college or university, is receiving vocational training or is doing voluntary work in the social or ecological sector

The children allowance equals EUR227.50 for each child for each month of eligibility. Parents filing a joint return receive an allowance of EUR455 per child per month. The allowance in the amount of EUR455 also applies to a single parent if the spouse dies before the beginning of the calendar year or if one parent lives outside Germany during the entire calendar year. A monthly childcare allowance of EUR122 (EUR244 under the circumstances mentioned above) is also granted for each eligible child. German tax residents and foreign individuals with certain residence permits are entitled to a monthly child subsidy payment of EUR219 per child for the first two children, EUR225 for the third child and EUR250 for the fourth child and each additional child. The subsidy described above relates to children who are resident in the EU/EEA and qualify for the deductions mentioned above. Taxpayers who are entitled to claim child subsidy payments cannot benefit from both the child-related deductions and the child subsidy payments. When the income tax return is filed, the tax authorities determine automatically whether the child-related deductions or the child subsidy payments are more favorable to the taxpayer. The child-related deductions are not considered for wage tax withholding purposes, but they are considered in calculating the solidarity surcharge and church tax (if applicable), which is withheld via the payroll.

Business deductions. In general, all business expenses are deductible from gross income. Living or personal expenses are not deductible unless they are incurred for business reasons and the amount is considered reasonable.

Rates. Individual tax rates for 2021 increase progressively to a marginal rate of 42%. The top rate of 45% applies only if taxable income is EUR274,613 (EUR549,226 for married taxpayers filing jointly) or more. For taxable income from EUR57,919 (EUR115,838 for married couples filing jointly) up to EUR274,612 (EUR549,224 for married couples filing jointly), the top rate is 42%.

The following tables present the tax on selected amounts of taxable income in 2021.

* Excluding church tax, if applicable.

Certain income that is not taxable is taken into account when determining the tax rate on German taxable income. This inclusion rule is known as the "tax exemption under progression clause." For example, individuals who transfer to or leave Germany within the calendar year must take into account foreign income earned either before becoming a German resident or after leaving Germany when determining the tax rate on their German taxable income.

To help finance the costs related to German unification, a 5.5% solidarity surcharge used to be imposed on the income tax liability of all taxpayers. This surcharge is phased out from 2021 onward. In 2021, the full surcharge of 5.5% of the income tax liability applies only if the taxable income is higher than EUR96,820 (EUR193,641 for couples filing jointly).

If a German tax resident is a member of a registered church in Germany entitled to impose church tax, church tax is assessed at a rate of 8% or 9% on income tax liability, depending on the location.

Business income is subject to both income tax and trade tax. Trade tax rates vary, generally ranging from 7% up to 18.5%, depending on the location. Income tax is partially reduced insofar as the income tax is allotted to business income (business income is subject to income tax and trade tax; however, for trade tax already paid on business income, a certain tax credit on income tax is granted). Trade tax is not levied on income from self-employment.

Salaries of nonresidents employed by domestic employers are subject to withholding tax (that is, wage taxes and solidarity surcharge) at rates that apply to residents who have single taxpayer filing status. However, no church tax is due. The withholding tax generally constitutes the final income tax liability. The withholding tax on directors' fees is 30%.

Relief for losses. Tax losses from one of the categories of income, except for losses from investment income and losses incurred on the sale of shares acquired after 31 December 2008, are offset against gains realized from one or more categories of income. Remaining tax losses up to EUR1 million (EUR2 million for married taxpayers filing jointly) may be carried forward indefinitely and are offset against gains realized in the following years. For losses exceeding the amount of EUR1 million (EUR2 million for married couples filing jointly), only 60% of the remaining gains is offset. The difference of 40% is considered within the assessment for losses carried forward and can be used in the following years, subject to the abovementioned rules. For income tax purposes (but not for trade tax purposes), losses may be carried back for one year, subject to certain limitations that ensure minimum taxation. The overall maximum loss carryback amount is EUR10 million (EUR20 million for married taxpayers filing jointly) annually. A taxpayer may choose whether a loss is carried back or carried forward to the following years.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

A tax is imposed on transfers of property at death or by gift. Decedents and donors are considered transferors, and beneficiaries and donees are considered transferees.

Transfers of worldwide net property are taxable if either the transferor or the transferee is resident in Germany at the time of the decedent's death or at the date on which the gift is made. If neither the transferor nor the transferee is resident in Germany, the tax applies only to transfers of property located in Germany. However, the property that is not taxable in Germany is considered for determining the tax rate. Depending on the family relationship between the transferor and transferee, personal exemptions ranging from EUR20,000 (no close familial relationship) to EUR500,000 (spouse or common-law spouse of transferor) are granted. The tax rates are graduated, depending on the family relationship and on the value of taxable property transferred. For example, in 2019, the rates include the following:
- Spouse, common-law spouse, children and parents (only in case of acquisition for the reason of death) of the transferor: up to 30%
- Parents (in other cases), siblings and grandchildren: up to 43%
- No family relationship: up to 50%

For a limited inheritance tax liability (nonresidents), the amount of the abovementioned exemptions also applies, but the exemption is decreased by a partial amount. This partial amount corresponds to the proportion of the values of the assets acquired at the same point in time not subject to the limited tax and those pecuniary advantages not subject to the limited tax liability that have accrued within the last 10 years to the total value of the assets that have accrued to the same person within the last 10 years.

Foreign gift or inheritance taxes assessed in addition to German gift or inheritance taxes may be credited against German taxes (foreign tax credit). This unilateral relief applies primarily to gifts and inheritances from those countries with which Germany has not entered into a tax treaty.

To prevent double taxation, Germany has entered into estate tax treaties with Denmark, France, Greece, Sweden, Switzerland and the United States.

C. Social security

Coverage. Social security taxes comprise the following five elements:
- Old-age pension
- Unemployment insurance
- Health insurance
- Nursing care insurance
- Accident insurance

Old-age insurance, unemployment insurance, health insurance and nursing care insurance contributions are required for all employees, unless they are otherwise exempt under EU regulations or a social security totalization agreement. The same rule applies to accident insurance contributions, which are required to be paid by the employer only.

Contributions. Compulsory old-age pension and unemployment insurance coverage exists for all employees working in Germany, regardless of how much they earn. For 2021, contributions amount to 21% (18.6% for old-age pension and 2.4% for unemployment insurance) of employment income, up to EUR85,200 (special contribution ceilings apply to the Eastern German federal states) a year. Income exceeding EUR85,200 (special contribution ceilings apply to the Eastern German federal states) is not subject to these contributions. One-half of the contributions must be paid by the employer. Employees' portions must be withheld by employers from their monthly compensation.

Health insurance coverage is compulsory if an individual's annual employment income does not exceed EUR64,350 for 2021. The rate of the contribution is 14.6%. Health insurance contributions must be paid on employment income up to EUR58,050 for 2021. One-half of the contribution must be paid by the employer. In addition, as of 1 January 2019, both the employer and the employee must bear an individual surcharge. The rate of the individual surcharge is determined by each state health insurance provider. The average rate is 1.3%.

Individuals who earn more than EUR5,362.50 a month and contribute to a private health insurance plan must pay the full premium and may then claim a refund from their employer for half the premium, up to the amount they would receive under the compulsory scheme (maximum of EUR384.58 per month).

Every employee is asked to contribute to nursing care insurance. If an employee's income is less than EUR64,350 for 2021, coverage is compulsory. If an employee has private health insurance coverage, the employee must also contribute to the private nursing care insurance. Nursing care insurance contributions are levied at a rate of 3.05% and are shared equally by employer and employee. Contributions of childless employees are increased at a rate of 0.25%. The increase is borne solely by the employee.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Germany has entered into totalization agreements that usually apply for a maximum period of two to five years with the following jurisdictions.

EU countries	India	Philippines
Albania	Israel	Switzerland
Australia	Japan	Tunisia
Brazil	Korea (South)	Turkey
Canada and Quebec	Moldova	Uruguay
Chile	Morocco	United States
China Mainland	North Macedonia	Yugoslavia*

* Germany honors the totalization agreement with Yugoslavia with respect to the successor countries, except for Croatia, North Macedonia and Slovenia.

EC Regulation No. 883/2004 took effect on 1 May 2010. This regulation determines, among other items, which social security legislation applies to employees posted to other EU member countries. The new regulation applies to the EU member countries. Effective from 1 January 2011, the coverage of the new social security regulation is extended to non-EU nationals (third-country nationals) moving within the EU, with the exception of Denmark and the United Kingdom. As of 1 April 2012, Switzerland has adopted EC Regulation No. 883/2004.

Effective from 1 June 2012, EC Regulation No. 883/2004 applies also to assignments to European Free Trade Association (EFTA) states (Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway). For non-EU citizens under certain conditions, the former totalization agreements entered into with each of the EU/EFTA countries or Switzerland continue to apply.

Effective from 1 January 2021, the United Kingdom left the EU and the determination of the applicable social security law between the EU member countries and the United Kingdom is governed by the new Trade and Cooperation Agreement for all scenarios that started as of 1 January 2021. In transitional cases, EC Regulation No. 883/2004 still applies based on the Withdrawal Agreement between the EU member countries and the United Kingdom.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Germany is the calendar year.

The following are the deadlines for the annual tax returns:
- Individuals filing on their own: 31 July of the following year
- Individuals filing with the assistance of a tax advisor: 28 or 29 February of the year thereafter

To take into account the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic, the deadlines for the 2020 tax year have been extended by three months. If a tax return is not filed on time, late filing penalties are automatically assessed and, in general, cannot be eliminated.

Married persons or persons living in a civil union are taxed either separately or jointly, at their election, on all types of income. The election to file a joint return is restricted to married persons and persons living in a civil union who are both residents of Germany and who are not permanently separated at any time during the tax year. Nonresidents are generally not allowed to file joint income tax returns.

A special provision applies to EU citizens and citizens of EEA countries. On application, married EU and EEA citizens or citizens who are living in a civil union may file joint returns, even though their spouses are not German residents, but are living in an EU or EEA country. On qualification, the favorable tax rates for married persons filing jointly apply (see Rates). Because of the United Kingdom's declaration to leave the EU (Brexit), the special rules for EU nationals no longer apply with respect to the United Kingdom.

Employers must withhold income tax (known as wage tax) as well as solidarity surcharge and church tax, if applicable, on wages. In addition, social security contributions must be withheld.

Nonresidents may file an income tax return only if they have income that is not subject to withholding tax. If a nonresident's income is subject to withholding tax, such as income from dependent work or investment income, an income tax return generally cannot be filed. However, a nonresident can file a German income tax return if he or she is a citizen of an EU/EEA member state. Nonresidents are subject to the individual income tax rates but the basic tax-free allowance in the amount of EUR9,744 does not apply to income other than employment income.

Income tax is assessed based on the tax return filed, and any additional amount due is charged by means of an assessment notice. The balance due must generally be paid within one month after receipt of the notice. In the case of late payment, penalties become due. Refunds are paid immediately after the issuance of the assessment. After a grace period of 15 months, which begins at the end of the year to which the tax relates, assessment interest is imposed at a rate of 0.5% per month in the case of outstanding payments and refunds. For the 2020 tax year, the grace period has been extended by three months to take into account the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Quarterly tax prepayments are levied by the tax authorities based on the last assessed taxable income if the withholding is not sufficient to cover the annual income tax assessed or if the personal income subject to taxation is declared.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

German income tax law provides that foreign taxes, up to the amount of German income tax payable on foreign-source income taxable in Germany, may be credited against German income tax (foreign tax credit). This unilateral relief applies primarily to income from those countries with which Germany has not entered into a tax treaty.

Tax treaty provisions override German income tax law, usually by excluding certain foreign-source income from German taxation. This includes income from real estate, business income from a foreign permanent establishment and income from personal services performed in a foreign country if certain requirements are fulfilled. However, some treaties provide that foreign taxes (up to the amount of German income tax payable on foreign-source income taxable in Germany) may be credited against German income tax. Several treaties contain a subject-to-tax clause, which excludes foreign-source income only if the taxpayer proves that he or she paid foreign tax on this income. Under the "national subject-to-tax clause," Germany excludes foreign-source employment income only if the taxpayer provides proof showing that he or she paid foreign tax on this income. In addition, Germany does not exempt foreign-source income from tax if the taxpayer does not qualify to be a resident for tax purposes in the other country or if the other country interprets the double tax treaty in a different manner that results in the income being exempt from tax or subject to limited tax. Foreign-source income excluded from German taxation may be considered for purposes of determining the effective tax rate on other taxable income (see Section A for an explanation of the tax exemption under progression clause).

Germany has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

(c) Armenia, Moldova and Turkmenistan have agreed to honor the USSR treaty.

(d) Germany honors the Yugoslavia treaty with respect to Bosnia and Herzegovina, Kosovo, Montenegro and Serbia.
(e) Because Germany has never recognized Taiwan as a sovereign state, this agreement is not a treaty under international law. Instead, it was completed in accordance with the practice that other Western states have followed with respect to Taiwan. It is an agreement between the head of the German Institute in Taipei and the director of the Taipei Representative Office in Germany.

The treaties mentioned above are applicable for 2021. For the application of the treaty in previous years, it needs to be determined which version of a treaty is effective. Germany is negotiating double tax treaties with Angola, Benin, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Chile, Colombia, Ethiopia, Hong Kong, Jordan, Kosovo, Lebanon, Nigeria, Oman, Qatar, Rwanda, San Marino, Senegal and Serbia.

F. Entry into Germany

COVID-19 regulations. The COVID-19 regulations are only temporary and therefore not necessary to further elaborate. However, during this pandemic, rules and procedures can change on short notice.

General. In general, any individual needs a visa to enter Germany. However, nationals of certain jurisdictions are exempt from the requirement to obtain a visa if they want to enter Germany for tourist, visitor or business trip purposes (not for work purposes). The visa-free jurisdictions are Albania, Andorra, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Denmark, Dominica, El Salvador, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Kiribati, Korea (South), Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Macau, Malaysia, Malta, the Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Moldova, Monaco, Montenegro, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, North Macedonia, Norway, Palau, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Samoa, San Marino, Serbia, Seychelles, Singapore, the Slovak Republic, Slovenia, the Solomon Islands, Spain, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, Sweden, Switzerland, Taiwan, Timor-Leste, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tuvalu, Ukraine, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, the United States, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Vatican City and Venezuela. This exemption only applies for a maximum (cumulative stay) of 90 days within a period of 180 days. EU/EEA citizens are exempted from the visa regulations.

EU/EEA nationals. From an immigration point of view, EU nationals are not restricted from entering, staying permanently or temporarily, or working in Germany. The EU countries (aside from Germany) are Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Croatia, Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Netherlands, Poland, Portugal, Romania, the Slovak Republic, Slovenia, Spain and Sweden.

A passport or national identity card valid throughout the entire length of stay is mandatory for entering and staying in Germany.

The same treatment also applies to nationals of Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway (members of the EEA). Registration requirements may apply for reasons other than immigration (see Section G).

Swiss citizens have nearly the same rights as EU nationals. However, in contrast to EU nationals, for a stay exceeding three months, they generally need to obtain a declaratory German residence permit for Swiss citizens from the responsible local foreigners' office to confirm this right.

Rules for the United Kingdom. Third-country rules apply for citizens of the United Kingdom since January 2021. Any transition treatments between the United Kingdom and Germany are no longer applicable. Consequently, citizens of the UK effectively left the EU on 31 January 2020 (Brexit), but the immigration issues need to be addressed or solved in the context of Brexit. Although an agreement was signed by both the EU and the United Kingdom, citizens of the United Kingdom are considered third-country nationals.

G. Visas, residence permits, notification of residence and registration

Visas. The following are the different types of German visas:

- Schengen visa (Type C), which allows a stay in Germany for nonworking purposes (for example, business activities) up to a total of 90 days within a period of 180 days. Stays in other countries of the Schengen area during the last 180 days usually reduce the maximum duration of 90 days. A Schengen visa is issued by the national authorities of the member states of the Schengen treaty. The Schengen treaty countries are Austria, Belgium, the Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, the Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, the Slovak Republic, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland. Individuals must apply for the visa with the embassy or consulate of the Schengen country where the longest stay is planned. If this could not be determined previously, the embassy or consulate of the country of first arrival is responsible. Although a Schengen visa usually does not permit working activities, a Schengen visa can include a work authorization if the German labor authorities' pre-approval is obtained. Nationals of preferred jurisdictions (visa-free countries; see Section F) are exempted from the necessity to apply for a Schengen visa and are thereby allowed to enter the Schengen area when holding a biometric and valid passport.
- National visa (Type D), which allows stays exceeding 90 days in a period of 180 days and includes a work authorization that sometimes is limited. An applicant for a national visa for any stay for work purposes must obtain the visa from the German embassy or consulate in the applicant's country or area of living. Only citizens from the most preferred countries are exempt from the requirement of a national visa. The most preferred countries are Australia, Canada, Israel, Japan, Korea (South), New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States. Citizens from these countries are permitted to apply directly for a residence permit for work purposes after arrival in Germany at the local German foreigners' office without first obtaining a visa. However, they also have the option to obtain such a visa for working reasons outside of Germany at the German embassy in their country of living before entering Germany. Considering that the process after arriving in Germany may include long wait times, this can speed up the start of work in Germany.

Residence permits. After the entry into Germany and the completion of registration at the town hall registration office, the final residence permit must be applied for in person at the local foreigners' office. If a national visa for work purposes has been granted, the application for the final residence permit is only necessary if the stay exceeds the validity of the national visa. Employees from the most preferred countries who enter Germany without a visa must visit the foreigners' office to apply for the final residence permit and to obtain a preliminary residence permit that includes work authorization before starting to work in Germany. The final permit combines the work and residence permits.

Usually, the residence permit is granted as an electronic residence permit (elektronischer Aufenthaltstitel, or eAT) in a credit card format equipped with a contact-free chip inside the card on which biometric features (photograph and two fingerprints), ancillary conditions (special requirements) and personal data are stored.

Under the German immigration law, various types of residence permits are available.

Temporary residence permit. A temporary residence permit (Aufenthaltserlaubnis) is granted primarily in connection with stays for working and education purposes, for family reasons and for humanitarian and political reasons. The residence permit for working purposes usually requires the approval of the labor office (see Section H).

EU Blue Card. The EU Blue Card can be obtained if the following prerequisites are met:
• Acknowledged university degree
• Local German employment contract of at least one year
• Minimum level of annual salary (EUR56,800 per year for 2021)

The name, EU Blue Card, is somewhat misleading because it allows working only in Germany but not in other EU member states.

EU Intercompany Transfer Card. For intercompany secondments, application generally must be made for an Intercompany Transfer (ICT) Card.

The following are the main prerequisites for obtaining an ICT Card:
• The individual must have Specialist or Manager status, or be a trainee.
• The sending and receiving entity must belong to the same company group.

- The individual must have prior employment within the corporate group of at least six months.
- The employment contract with the current employer outside the EU must remain active.
- A local German employment contract must not be agreed on.
- The minimum stay is 90 days and the maximum stay is three years.

A German ICT Card can be issued for a maximum period of three years (for trainees up to one year). Afterward, a cooling-off period of six months must be observed. To improve work-related transfers within the EU region, the following possibilities have been implemented:

- Short-term mobility (allows the ICT holder to stay up to 90 days within 180 days in Germany, based on an ICT Card from another EU country) if a mandatory notification to the competent German authorities has been completed. If the notification is rejected (only limited reasons possible) by the German authorities, the employee needs to stop working in Germany immediately.
- Long-term mobility allows the ICT holder to stay longer than 90 days within 180 days in Germany based on an ICT Card from another EU country if a mandatory application has been made. Work can be started from the point of arrival and before approval for up to 90 days if such application is filed at the latest 20 days before traveling to Germany. If the application is rejected (only limited reasons possible) by the German authorities, the employee needs to stop working in Germany immediately.

Permanent residence permit. An unlimited residence permit (Niederlassungserlaubnis) includes an unlimited working permission. The permanent residence permit is generally granted if a foreigner holds a valid temporary residence permit for more than five years or an EU Blue Card for four years and fulfills further requirements.

Other residence permits. An unlimited German residence/work permit, known as the EU long-term residence permit (Daueraufenthalt EU), may be granted to non-EU citizens if they meet several conditions, including, but not limited to, the following:

- They have lived in Germany for more than five years.
- They can take care of their subsistence.
- They have basic German language skills.
- They have enough living space.

After the Daueraufenthalt EU is granted, a foreign national is allowed to work in Germany without time or local restrictions.

Non-EU citizens who intend to enter Germany for more than a three-month period and who have been granted the Daueraufenthalt EU status in another EU country are issued a residence permit for work purposes from the local German foreigners' office.

Registration. Registration at the German registration office is required for each person residing in Germany if the stay is planned to exceed three months, regardless of the person's nationality (this also applies to German citizens). Details of the registration process depend on the location of the stay and may vary significantly among towns. In general, foreign nationals, including EU citizens, who enter Germany and move into an apartment must register their living address with the registration office (Einwohnermeldeamt) generally within two weeks after moving into the apartment; this includes subsequent changes of the living address.

The newly adopted Specialist Immigration Act (Fachkräfteeinwanderungsgesetz, or FEG) opens up a further possibility for accelerated procedures at the foreigners' authorities of the federal states in future. Because the assignees usually have to wait for the approval of the labor office, this new law provides that the authorities have to answer the assignees' request for approval in the course of one week; if not, the request is fulfilled by the nondisclosure period of one week (Verschweigefrist). With the approval, the foreigners' authorities forward the application to the competent embassy or consulate. However, this process also comes with more effort; both the assignee and the employer are required to provide the authorities with more documents than before.

H. Approval of the labor office and self-employment

General. The work permission in the residence permit usually mentions the name of the employer as well as the profession of the employee. Consequently, a change of employer, including a change within a group of companies, generally requires a change of the residence permit.

Application process for obtaining a residence permit for work purposes for non-EU citizens. Except for the EU Blue Card, generally, all non-EU employees who want to work in Germany must obtain the approval of the labor office prior to the application for a national visa. Usually, a university degree, acknowledged by the German government, is a precondition; however, according to regulations introduced with the FEG for specialists, vocational training may also be sufficient. This process typically takes two to six weeks until the approval is obtained and may include (if necessary in accordance with the immigration regulations) a labor market test. Usually, a regular residence permit for working purposes is initially valid for one year and is extendable on application for each additional year. The employment of individuals without valid residence permits is punishable under German law with severe fines.

Many uncertainties may arise in the initial planning stages of an expatriate's assignment. The procedure for obtaining residence permits for working purposes is particularly difficult. Also, language barriers and time limitations may present obstacles. The practice with the authorities indicates that the authorities are interpreting German immigration law more and more restrictively.

Simplification rules. Simplification rules that may result in the possibility of entering and staying in Germany without a residence permit for work purposes are available for several activities of foreign employees in Germany, which do not exceed 3 months within a period of 12 months. These activities include, for example, internal training and after-sales services.

In addition, if a stay involves the rendering of specified services by foreign employees who are assigned by an employer resident in an EU member state and if the employee belongs to the permanent staff of the company, simplification rules may apply (van der Elst regulation).

Foreign nationals conducting business negotiations on behalf of a foreign company and business executives may stay in Germany for three months or less per year without applying for a German residence permit.

Students holding a German residence permit for study purposes in Germany may work without the approval of the labor office if the work period is limited to 120 days per year or 240 half-days per year or if the student is employed part-time at a university (without time limit).

Fast-track procedure. Simplified rules can apply to internal transfers within a company under certain conditions, including the following:

- A comparable number of employees of a corporate group are assigned from Germany to work abroad.
- A foreign employee is assigned to Germany for project work in Germany. For example, certain employees prepare in Germany for a certain project abroad and the employees themselves will participate in the realization of the project in the future.

Under the fast-track procedure, a special department of the labor authorities may decide quickly without checking the German labor market, and the local labor offices do not get involved.

Self-employment. In general, self-employment of foreign non-EU nationals needs to be approved prior to the application for the national visa. Approval is granted by the local foreigners' office, which consults the appropriate local Commercial Office (Gewerbeamt) and business and professional associations. These rules may also apply to managing directors who hold a relevant stake in the company of which they are managing directors.

Any person wishing to begin a trade or business in Germany is required to report their intention to the local Commercial Office (Gewerbeamt). This local authority then provides a certificate confirming that the trade or business is duly registered, while simultaneously informing the German tax authorities. Certain trades also require special permits.

Individuals intending to begin a specialized trade or business subject to legal restrictions must verify certain qualifications and personal reliability. In certain circumstances, even if the applicant is unable to produce proof of sufficient knowledge of the subject, a certificate may be granted if the applicant has passed an examination conducted by an appropriate German board.

Self-employed persons need to prove the following main prerequisites:

- The respective activity is within the economic interest of Germany.
- The means of subsistence are guaranteed.
- Proof of sufficient investment capital (amount varies for each case) exists.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Spouses and children, younger than 18 years, of EU nationals employed in Germany are entitled to stay in Germany after registration of residence with the foreigners' office even if they are non-EU nationals. For example, a US national married to an Italian national does not need to apply for a residence permit for working purposes if the Italian national stays in Germany. The US national needs only to register with the Registration Office and to report his or her residence to the foreigners' office to obtain the certificate of residence.

The spouse and dependents of a non-EU national must apply for their own residence permits for family unification purposes separately. Third-country nationals' family members are generally allowed to work in Germany.

In general, residence permits for the spouse and children younger than 16 years old are granted if the foreign national holds a residence permit and if sufficient income and housing for all family members are ensured. Other dependents may receive residence permits if unreasonable hardship would otherwise exist.

Spouses of non-EU citizens may not stay in Germany on a dependent residence permit if they are less than 18 years old. In general, spouses of non-EU citizens must prove that they have basic German language skills or a higher education before they enter Germany.

Driver's permits. Citizens of EU and EEA member countries may use their home-country driver's licenses until the expiration date of the licenses for the entire length of their stays in Germany without applying for German licenses. However, the citizen must be at least 18 years old.

Other foreign nationals on assignment in Germany may drive for a maximum of six months if they have valid foreign driver's licenses. A foreign national must apply for a German license with the Public Affairs Office (Ordnungsamt) within three years after the date of entry into Germany. Citizens of the following jurisdictions can apply for a German driver's license with a limited examination or without a new examination.

Andorra
Bosnia and Herzegovina
French Polynesia
Guernsey
Isle of Man
Israel
Japan
Jersey
Korea (South)
Monaco
Namibia
New Caledonia
New Zealand
North Macedonia
San Marino
Serbia
Singapore
South Africa
Switzerland
Taiwan

Australian, Canadian and US citizens may apply without examination if they hold specified state driver's licenses (for example, Alabama, Arizona, Ohio and Utah in the United States). However, even if an individual described in this paragraph applies for a German driver's license, he or she may not drive in Germany with his or her home-country driver's license after a six-month period beginning with the date of entry into Germany.

The following documents are generally necessary to obtain a driver's license:

- Valid passport and residence permit.
- One photograph.
- Translation of the foreign driver's license by a qualified sworn translator or by one of the major German automobile clubs. This rule does not apply to citizens of EU or EEA member countries, Hong Kong, New Zealand, Senegal and Switzerland.
- Original and photocopy of the foreign driver's license.
- Name of the German driving school that the foreign national wishes to attend to prepare for the practical and theoretical exam (only if exam is required).

After a three-year period, proof of eye examination and a certificate for training in first aid procedures are required.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident individuals are subject to tax on their worldwide income. However, the employment income of a resident individual from employment exercised in a foreign country is exempt from tax if the employment is exercised with either of the following:

- A nonresident employer
- A resident employer if the individual is present in the foreign country for 183 continuous days or more during the year of assessment

Nonresidents are subject to tax only on chargeable income accruing in or derived from Ghana.

Individuals are considered resident in Ghana if they meet any of the following conditions:

- A citizen of Ghana other than a citizen who has a permanent home outside Ghana and lives in that home for the whole year of assessment
- An individual who is present in Ghana for an aggregate of at least 183 days in a 12-month period that begins or ends during the year of assessment
- An employee or official of the government of Ghana posted abroad during the year of assessment
- A citizen with a permanent home in Ghana who is temporarily absent from Ghana for no longer than 365 successive days

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Employees, including directors of companies, are subject to tax on gains or profits from any employment, including allowances, gifts or benefits paid in cash or in kind to or on behalf of an employee.

Taxable income of employees consists of the following:
- Salary, wages, leave pay, fees, commissions and gratuities
- Overtime pay and bonuses
- Individual allowances, including cost-of-living allowance, subsistence, rent, entertainment and travel allowance
- A discharge or reimbursement of an expense incurred by an individual or an associate of the individual
- A payment made for the individual's agreement to the conditions of the employment
- Other payments, including gifts received with respect to the employment
- Subject to the National Pensions Act, 2008 (Act 766), as amended, a retirement contribution made to a retirement fund on behalf of an employee and retirement payments received with respect to employment

The following items are excluded in the calculation of the taxable income of employees:
- Reimbursement of medical, dental or health insurance expenses, if all full-time employees are entitled to the same benefit
- Passage to and from Ghana for a nonresident individual appointed outside Ghana whose presence in Ghana is solely for the purpose of serving the employer
- Employer-provided accommodation at the field site of timber, mining, building, construction, farming business or petroleum operations
- Reimbursement for expenditure incurred by the employee that serves the proper business purposes of the employer
- Payments made to employees on a nondiscriminatory basis that, by reason of their size, type and frequency, are unreasonable or administratively impracticable for the employer to account for or to allocate to the individual
- Redundancy pay

Self-employment and business income. Self-employed individuals include traders, professionals or individuals carrying on any vocation, partners in partnerships and sole proprietors. Taxable business income consists of net accounting profit plus expenses that are not deductible for tax purposes, less capital (depreciation) allowances and personal reliefs.

The income of an individual from a business for a year of assessment is the gains and profits of that individual from that business for the year or a part of the year. It includes the following:
- Service fees
- Consideration received with respect to trading stock
- An amount derived that is effectively connected with the business and that would otherwise be included in calculating the income of the individual from an investment
- Gains from the realization of capital assets and liabilities of the business
- A gift received by the individual with respect to the business
- Amounts derived as consideration for accepting a restriction on the capacity to conduct the business

Individuals who only have business income from sources within Ghana may qualify to be taxed on a modified basis (that is, based on installment, turnover or cash basis).

Investment income. Investment income includes the following:
- Dividends, interest income, annuities, natural resource payment, royalties and rents
- Gains from the realization of investment assets
- Amounts derived as consideration for accepting a restriction on the capacity of the individual to conduct an investment
- Lottery winnings in excess of GHS2,592
- Gifts received other than those received with respect to business or employment

The dividend tax rate is 8%. The 8% tax is withheld at source, and it is imposed on dividends paid to resident and nonresident individuals.

Interest paid to individuals by resident financial institutions or the government is exempt from tax.

Capital gains. Capital gains are included in business income or investment income, depending on the source of the gain, and taxed accordingly. The separate taxation of capital gains has been abolished.

However, individuals may elect to pay a 15% tax on gains on the realization of an asset instead of including the gain in business income or investment income.

If the gains are included in business income or investment income and taxed as such, the tax rate is the same rate applicable to the individual on his or her business income or investment income.

Deductions. Expenses wholly, exclusively and necessarily incurred in the production of income from business or investments are deductible.

Mortgage interest incurred during the year with respect to only one residential premises during the lifetime of that individual is deductible.

Individuals may deduct the annual personal reliefs granted them as indicated in the following table.

Type of allowance	Amount
Children's education allowance	GHS600, per child or ward, up to a maximum of three children
Dependent elderly relative allowance	GHS1,000 per dependent, up to a maximum of two dependents
Marriage/responsibility relief	GHS1,200
Disability allowance	25% of assessable income from business or employment
Old age relief	Up to GHS1,500 per year
Professional/vocational training allowance	Up to a maximum of GHS2,000

Contributions of individuals to the mandatory pension schemes qualify as tax reliefs under the National Pensions Act, 2008 (Act 766), as amended. Contributions to the voluntary pension scheme of an individual employee up to 16.5% of the employee's salary are also exempt from tax if certain conditions are met.

Rates. The table below presents the progressive rates of income tax applicable to resident individuals for a tax year. Nonresidents are subject to income tax at a flat rate of 25%.

Chargeable income GHS	Tax rate %	Tax due GHS	Cumulative tax due GHS
First 3,828	0	0	0
Next 1,200	5	60	60
Next 1,440	10	144	204
Next 36,000	17.5	6,300	6,504
Next 197,532	25	49,383	55,887
Exceeding 240,000	30	—	—

Withholding tax. Management and technical service fees paid to nonresidents are subject to a 20% final withholding tax.

Relief for losses. Unrelieved losses incurred by persons in a specified priority sector can be carried forward for five years. Unrelieved losses incurred by persons in any other sectors can be carried forward for three years.

Unrelieved losses are losses that have not been deducted in calculating the income of the individual.

B. Other taxes

Net worth tax. Ghana does not impose a net worth tax.

Estate and gift taxes. Estate and gift taxes apply.

Gifts are taxed as part of employment, business or investment income.

C. Social security

Ghana imposes a mandatory social security tax at a rate of 18.5%. Employers must pay social security tax at a rate of 13% of the employees' salaries, and must withhold an additional 5.5% from each employee's salary. Employers remit 13.5% out of the 18.5% to the Social Security and National Insurance Trust. The remaining 5% is remitted by the employers to the trustees appointed to manage the employees' occupational pension schemes. In addition to the mandatory 18.5%, either the employer or the employee or both may contribute to a provident fund scheme for the benefit of the employees. Up to 16.5% of contributions to a provident fund scheme is exempt from tax if the conditions imposed on the withdrawal from the scheme are fulfilled. Self-employed individuals who qualify may contribute toward the mandatory schemes. Persons in the informal sector who are not covered under the mandatory schemes must have 35% of their declared income treated as deductible income for the contributor for the purposes of income tax.

Non-Ghanaian individuals who have emigrated or are emigrating permanently from Ghana are entitled to a lump-sum benefit.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year for individuals is the calendar year. Individuals, including employees, must file their returns within four months after the end of the tax year. In the case of employees, their primary employers are required to file their returns on their behalf within three months after the end of the year. If the employees and the Commissioner-General agree, the returns filed by the primary employers become final returns. An employee who has additional sources of income must file, in addition to the return filed by the primary employer, a separate return including details of the income from the primary employer within four months after the end of the year. Payment of tax by self-employed individuals must be made on a monthly basis. Employees are subject to withholding tax on their salaries under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Tax paid on income earned outside Ghana by a resident of Ghana that is liable to tax in Ghana is credited against the total tax payable in Ghana. However, the credit is capped at the total tax payable on that income in Ghana.

Ghana has entered into double tax treaties with the following countries.

Belgium	Germany	Singapore
Czech Republic	Italy	South Africa
Denmark	Mauritius	Switzerland
France	Netherlands	United Kingdom

Ghana has ratified a double tax treaty with Morocco, but this treaty is not yet in force. Ghana has signed double tax treaties with Ireland and Malta, but it has not yet ratified these treaties.

F. Temporary permits

Ghana requires visitors to obtain entry visas, except visitors from countries that have visa abolition treaties with Ghana. Nationals of British Commonwealth countries in East Africa and Southern Africa, notably Botswana, Kenya, Malawi, Tanzania, Uganda, Zambia and Zimbabwe, nationals of the 16 member countries of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and nationals of Malaysia, Singapore and Thailand do not need entry visas.

Visas and permits are used interchangeably. British Commonwealth citizens need entry permits, while all other foreign nationals require visas. The government of Ghana issues the following permits and visas:

- Transit visas
- Visitors' visas
- Business visas
- Work permits
- Residence permits

To obtain an entry visa, individuals must prove that they can sustain themselves financially while in Ghana, except foreign nationals who own assets in Ghana.

Emergency entry visas may be obtained on arrival in Ghana through direct application to the Comptroller-General of the Ghana Immigration Service. This facility is primarily for foreign nationals who come from countries where Ghana has no mission or consulate. Application for emergency entry visas should be made to the Comptroller-General at least seven days prior to the date of arrival.

Transit visas are issued to travelers who wish to pass through Ghana.

Visitors' visas valid for 60 days are issued on arrival to visitors who have acquired entry permits or visas (either single- or multiple-entry). Visitors' visas may be extended up to six months by submitting an application to the Ghana Immigration Service at Accra or to regional headquarters.

G. Work permits and self-employment

Work permits are generally granted by the Ministry of the Interior to expatriate employees or to individuals who have already been issued residence permits to enable them to take up specified employment for remuneration. Work permits may also be granted to foreign nationals engaged on a short-term basis for certain specific services and, in these cases, are not counted against a company's immigrant quota (see Section H).

Other than reciprocity, when reviewing applications, the Ministry of the Interior considers whether the activity in which the foreign national will engage will be functional, whether the applicant honors his or her tax obligations, and whether the applicant has evidence of satisfactory financial support.

An applicant may not work in Ghana while his or her work permit application and other papers are being processed. If possible, approval must be obtained from the nearest Ghana consulate before an expatriate employee travels to Ghana. However, such protocol can be received in Ghana.

It is an offense for a foreign national to change employers after he or she receives a work permit. If it is necessary to change employers, the Ghana Immigration Service should be notified within one week after the applicant knows he or she is changing jobs.

Work permits must be renewed annually. However, long-term (two or more years) work permits are issued if the applicant has worked consistently in Ghana for at least three years.

A foreign national may invest or start a business in Ghana by registering the company with the Registrar of Companies and then by applying to the Ghana Investment Promotion Centre, indicating his or her field of investments.

Foreign nationals may manage subsidiary companies in Ghana.

H. Residence permits

Residence permits are issued by the Comptroller-General of the Ghana Immigration Service to foreign nationals wishing to reside in Ghana. The initial residence permit is valid for one year. Applications for renewals may be submitted to the Comptroller-General within one month before the other permit expires.

Subsequent one-year renewals may be granted at the Comptroller-General's discretion. Applicants must normally be sponsored by established entities in Ghana or by universities or international organizations.

Residence permits are granted by the Ghana Immigration Service to expatriate personnel employed by companies or individuals under the immigration quota system. The immigration quota specifies the number of foreign nationals a person or firm is permitted to employ in Ghana in a particular occupation. A foreign national on a company's quota automatically receives a residence permit but must apply for the permit to be stamped in his or her passport.

New investors who wish to take up residence in Ghana are granted residence permits only after satisfying the investment requirements of the following institutions:

- Petroleum Commission: for investment in the oil and gas sector
- Minerals Commission: for investment in the mining sector
- Department of Social Welfare: for nongovernmental organizations (NGOs)
- Ghana Investment Promotion Centre: investment in all sectors

Investors qualifying under the Free Zone Act have an open immigrant quota.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Residence permits may be issued to a spouse and other dependents of a principal residence permit holder. Issuance is subject to the condition that the dependents may not undertake remunerated employment without authorization.

Driver's permits. In general, it is illegal for foreign nationals to drive in Ghana without Ghana driver's licenses. However, an international driver's license may be used for a brief period. Applicants are required to pass written and practical tests to obtain a Ghana driver's license.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. The taxation of individuals in Gibraltar is partly determined by residence.

Residents. Individuals who are "ordinarily resident" for tax purposes are generally subject to Gibraltar tax on their worldwide income.

Nonresidents. Nonresidents are subject to tax on their Gibraltar-source income.

Ordinary residence. An individual who is "present" in Gibraltar for 183 days or more in a tax year, or more than 300 days in total during three consecutive tax years, is deemed to be ordinarily resident in Gibraltar. "Present" means being in Gibraltar at any time during a 24-hour period commencing at midnight, regardless of whether the individual uses any accommodation.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. In principle, an employee is taxed on all remuneration and benefits from employment received during the tax year, which ends on 30 June (the receipts basis).

An employee is taxable on both basic salary and most perquisites or benefits in kind, including company cars, meals, permanent housing, tuition and education allowances for dependent children, medical insurance premiums (subject to exemptions) and imputed interest on loans at below-market rates.

Benefits received by an employee of less than GIP250 in a tax year are not taxable.

Employers may apply for a dispensation from the Commissioner of Income Tax. As part of this dispensation, they may opt to pay the tax on benefits on behalf of the employee. If an employer is paying the tax under a dispensation, the benefits received by an employee that are between GIP250 and GIP15,000 in the tax year are taxed at a rate of 20%, with any benefits in excess of GIP15,000 taxed at a rate of 29%. The first GIP250 of benefits is not taxed.

Contributions by an employer, up to prescribed limits, to approved personal pension schemes and occupational pension schemes are normally not taxed as a benefit-in-kind. Other exemptions from treatment as benefits-in-kind include accommodation and relocation expenses for relocated employees, health insurance (subject to restrictions), motor scooters and motorcycles.

Tax is deducted from employment income at source under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system (see Section D).

Investment income. Savings income is not subject to tax. This includes dividends from securities quoted on a recognized stock exchange and interest income.

Dividends received by an ordinarily resident individual that represent the distribution of underlying profits that were subject to tax in Gibraltar are taxable in the hands of the recipient. The taxable amount is the amount of the dividend paid or payable, grossed up by a tax credit. Tax relief is given with respect to the tax credit. Dividends paid out of underlying profits that were not subject to tax in Gibraltar are not taxable in the hands of the recipient. No withholding tax is imposed on dividends paid by companies.

Proprietary trading in securities and other investments is not taxable.

Rental income from property located in Gibraltar is taxable to both residents and nonresidents. Rental income from properties located outside Gibraltar is not taxable in Gibraltar.

Self-employment income. Taxable self-employment income includes income from any trade, business, profession or vocation if all or any part of the activities, administration, marketing or support functions are performed in Gibraltar. For an ordinarily resident individual, such trade, business, profession or vocation is treated as indivisible. Consequently, if any activities of a trade, business, profession or vocation are carried out in Gibraltar, similar activities in another jurisdiction are regarded as part of the Gibraltar activities.

A self-assessment system applies to self-employed individuals. For tax purposes, profits are usually determined in accordance with normal accounting principles, but adjustments may be necessary. Self-employed individuals must prepare their accounts for the tax year (ending 30 June).

Directors' fees. No tax is imposed on fees paid to a director of a company who is not ordinarily resident in Gibraltar and is present in Gibraltar in less than 30 days in the relevant tax year. Otherwise, directors' fees are taxable in the same manner as other employment income.

Pension income. Income from state pensions is not taxable.

Occupational pensions received from an "approved" pension scheme by individuals aged 60 or above (or those compulsorily retired at age 55, such as policemen, firemen, prison officers, customs officers and ex-Royal Gibraltar Regiment) who are employed are not taken into account in determining tax due on their earned income. No requirement to buy an annuity from the capital value of a pension fund exists, and pensioners may withdraw the entire capital tax-free on reaching retirement age. For purposes of these rules, "approved" means approved by the Commissioner of Income Tax in Gibraltar.

Imported pension schemes are not taxed in Gibraltar on the transfer of funds to the scheme or on the scheme's income or capital growth. Limited tax relief is available on contributions made by ordinarily resident individuals to such schemes. Up to 30% of the pension fund value may be withdrawn as a lump sum by members who have attained the minimum benefit commencement age of 55 years. Pension payments from a scheme are taxed in the hands of the recipient at a rate of 2.5%.

Other exemptions. Other items that are exempt from tax include the following:
- Compensation for unfair dismissal and redundancy payments that are approved as non-taxable by the Commissioner of Income Tax
- Income received by a full-time student from employment

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. The granting of an option or the transfer of shares to an employee is a taxable event. Restrictions on the vesting of options or restrictions on the shares may be taken into account in applying a value to the option or shares in certain circumstances. Any subsequent gain from exercising the option, from the disposal of shares acquired under the option or from the disposal of shares granted is a capital gain and, accordingly, not taxable.

Capital gains and losses. No capital gains tax is imposed in Gibraltar.

Deductions. Under either of the alternative tax systems (see below), expenses incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of the duties of employment are generally deductible. No allowance is available for travel between home and work or for office attire.

Alternative tax systems. Taxpayers may choose from the gross-income-based (GIB) system and the more traditional allowance-based (AB) system. Under the GIB system, the taxpayer is entitled to very few allowances and/or reliefs, but generally the applicable tax rates are lower. The majority of taxpayers are taxed under the GIB system. Regardless of the system for which the taxpayer opts, on final assessment, the Tax Office applies the system most beneficial to the taxpayer.

In the case of spouses, if one spouse opts for the GIB system and the other for the AB system, conditions apply to the latter's entitlement to allowances.

Personal deductions and allowances under the GIB system. The following deductions are available for taxpayers assessed under the GIB system:
- Approved expenditure on premises, which is expenditure incurred on painting, decorating, repairing and, in general, enhancing the appearance of the frontage of premises. This deduction applies to individuals, regardless of whether the expenditure relates to the business of a self-employed person or to property held for nonbusiness purposes, and is in addition to any other deduction that may already be available as a business expense. The expenditure must be certified by the town planner, and the claim for the deduction must be made within two years after the end of the tax year for which the deduction is claimed. Under the GIB system, the deduction is restricted to a maximum of GIP5,000.

- Mortgage interest payments with respect to the purchase of the main residential property in Gibraltar up to a maximum of GIP1,500.
- Deduction for first-time buyers of up to GIP7,500 with respect to approved expenditure toward the purchase of their main residential property in Gibraltar.
- Up to GIP1,500 per year of contributions to approved pension schemes.
- Up to GIP3,000 per year of private medical insurance premiums.
- Up to GIP6,000 over two years for the installation of solar or wind energy installations.
- Up to the first GIP2,000 of the cost of installing an electrical vehicle charging mechanism in a garage or parking space owned by the taxpayer.

Personal deductions and allowances under the AB system only. The following allowances apply only under the AB system for the year ending 30 June 2021.

Type of allowance	Amount (GIP)
Personal allowance	3,455
Spouse allowance	3,455
Nursery school allowance (per child)	5,480
Child relief with respect to the first child only	1,190
Child relief with respect to each child educated abroad	1,375
Medical insurance (maximum)	5,395
Disabled person relief (for parents, with respect to each disabled unmarried individual)	10,000
Resident dependent relative (maximum)	400
Nonresident dependent relative (maximum)	250
Blind person	5,475
Apprentice	380
Single parent	5,800
House purchase allowance	13,000 (a)
Additional (special) house purchase allowance	4,000 (a)
Social insurance (employee)	335
Social insurance (self-employed)	432
"Top up" (minimum allowance in total)	4,343 (b)
"Top up" for men aged 65 or over and women aged 60 or over (minimum allowance in total)	12,645

(a) This applies to an individual ordinarily resident in Gibraltar who purchases or constructs his or her own residential accommodation in Gibraltar. The deductions of up to GIP13,000 and GIP4,000 may be spread over as many years as the taxpayer wishes, provided that the amount claimed with respect to the special deduction of GIP4,000 cannot exceed GIP1,000 per year. The deductions may not be claimed again after the maximum amounts have been claimed.

(b) Individuals whose total allowances are less than GIP4,343 have their personal allowances "topped up" to that amount. Elderly persons (men aged 65 or over and women aged 60 or over) have their allowances increased to GIP12,645.

Other allowances and deductions include the following:

- Certain pension contributions (see below).
- Low-income earner's tax credit. Individuals with income of less than GIP11,450 are entitled to an additional allowance so that no tax is payable by them. Allowances of lower amounts are available to taxpayers whose earned income for the tax year is between GIP11,451 and GIP19,712.
- Disabled individuals' tax allowance. An additional earned income allowance effectively exempts employees from tax if the employees receive financial assistance out of the Social Assistance Fund or if they would be eligible for such financial assistance had they resided in Gibraltar for at least five years.
- Interest relief on loans for the purchase, improvement or development of property. Interest paid by an individual or his or her spouse who occupies property in Gibraltar for residential purposes on a loan used to purchase, improve or develop the property is allowable, restricted to the amount of interest on GIP350,000 of the loan amount.
- Interest relief on loans for the purchase or construction of a parking bay or garage. Interest paid by an individual on loans to purchase or construct a garage or parking bay in Gibraltar is deductible by the individual or his or her spouse or both in whichever proportion is most beneficial.
- Approved expenditure on premises is deductible as described in Personal deductions and allowances under the GIB system only, but without the restriction referred to in that section.
- Life insurance relief. Premiums or contributions (or both) payable during the tax year are allowable subject to certain restrictions. The relief is granted with respect to premiums payable by the claimant for an insurance contract on the claimant's or spouse's life and, in the case of a man, with respect to contributions to a widow's or orphan's pension scheme or to a provident society or fund approved by the Commissioner of Income Tax. However, premiums must not exceed the following:
  - One-seventh of the taxable income
  - Seven percent of the capital sum assured at death
- Up to GIP6,000 over two years for the installation of solar or wind energy installations.
- Up to the first GIP2,000 of the cost of installing an electrical vehicle charging mechanism in a garage or parking space owned by the taxpayer.

Tax relief for pensions. In terms of Gibraltar tax treatment, pension schemes may broadly be divided into the following three groups:

- Personal pension schemes
- Retirement annuity contracts
- Occupational pension schemes

Personal pension schemes and retirement annuity contracts. Aggregate contributions to personal pension schemes and retirement annuity contracts are eligible for tax relief limited to the lower of 20% of earned income or GIP35,000. To allow members of these schemes to top up unused tax relief, a one-year carry-back provision allows excess contributions in one year to be applied to otherwise unused tax relief in the previous year.

Occupational pension schemes. Contributions with respect to proprietary directors and shareholders are eligible for tax relief of up to 25% of taxable income in total for employees' and employers' contributions combined. For other employees, the maximum tax relief available with respect to contributions is the difference between one-sixth of the taxpayer's taxable income and any deduction for life assurance premiums already claimed (the deduction for life assurance premiums is restricted to one-seventh of taxable income).

Business deductions. Expenses that are wholly and exclusively incurred for the purposes of the production of income of a trade, business, profession or vocation are generally deductible. However, certain types of expenses are not allowed as deductions in determining taxable profit or allowable loss. These include the following:

- Interest paid or payable to a person not resident in Gibraltar, to the extent that the interest charged is at more than a reasonable commercial rate
- Depreciation and amortization of assets (instead capital allowances are granted with respect to plant, machinery, equipment, motor vehicles and information technology expenditure)
- Contributions to a provident, pension or other fund for the benefit of employees if the fund has not been approved by the Commissioner of Income Tax

Entertaining expenses, which are generally the cost of entertaining existing and potential clients and business introducers (for example, brokers and agents) are deductible, but detailed rules restrict these deductions.

Rates

GIB system. The following are the rates under the GIB system for ordinarily resident individuals who have taxable income of up to GIP25,000.

Taxable income GIP	Tax rate %	Tax due GIP	Cumulative tax due GIP
First 10,000	6	600	600
Next 7,000	20	1,400	2,000
Above 17,000	28	—	—

The following are the tax rates under the GIB system for ordinarily resident individuals who have taxable income of more than GIP25,000.

Taxable income GIP	Tax rate %	Tax due GIP	Cumulative tax due GIP
First 17,000	16	2,720	2,720
Next 8,000	19	1,520	4,240
Next 15,000	25	3,750	7,990
Next 65,000	28	18,200	26,190
Next 395,000	25	98,750	124,940
Next 200,000	18	36,000	160,940
Above 700,000	5	—	—

Notable features of the above tax rates are that the effective tax rate never exceeds 25%, and the tax rates decrease for income above GIP500,000.

AB system. The following are the tax rates under the AB system for ordinarily resident individuals.

Taxable income GIP	Tax rate %	Tax due GIP	Cumulative tax due GIP
First 4,000	14	560	560
Next 12,000	17	2,040	2,600
Above 16,000	39	—	—

Taxpayers under the AB system then receive a tax credit amounting to the greater of GIP300 or 2% of the tax payable based on the above table.

Nonresidents. The following tax rates apply under the AB system to the taxable income of individuals who are not ordinarily resident in Gibraltar in certain circumstances.

Taxable income GIP	Tax rate %	Tax due GIP	Cumulative tax due GIP

The above rates do not apply to pensions received by nonresidents of Gibraltar. In the case of employment income and self-employment income, the GIB system is generally available as an alternative, but tax bands would be reduced on a pro rata basis dependent on the number of months in the tax year in which no employment or self-employment activities were carried on in Gibraltar.

If a person is not ordinarily resident and if they are present in Gibraltar for less than 30 days in a tax year, no tax is imposed on the following:
- Directors' fees
- Income from employment or self-employment duties that are carried out in Gibraltar but are ancillary to work otherwise exclusively carried on outside Gibraltar

Relief for losses. Individuals may offset any losses incurred in a trade, business, profession or vocation against any assessable profits or gains in subsequent years. Losses may not be carried back.

Tax scheme for high net worth individuals. Under the Qualifying (Category 2) Individuals Rules 2004, individuals may apply to the Finance Centre Director for a Category 2 Individual certificate. This certificate is granted to applicants who fulfill the following conditions:
- They have available approved residential accommodation in Gibraltar for the exclusive use of themselves and their families.
- They not been a resident in Gibraltar for the preceding five years.
- They were not engaged in the preceding five years and will not be engaged in the future while a Category 2 individual in a trade, business or employment in Gibraltar, other than, in general, duties that are incidental to a trade, business or employment based outside Gibraltar or the provision of consultancy services from Gibraltar in certain circumstances, unless otherwise agreed to by the Finance Centre Director.
- They must submit two character references from recognized and established professionals (a bank plus a law or accounting firm), a copy of the passport, a curriculum vitae and proof of financial standing (in practice this should be in excess of GIP2 million).

- They pay an application fee of GIP1,000.
- They receive a certificate from the Finance Centre Director confirming their status.

An individual who obtains a Category 2 individual certificate is subject to income tax on the first GIP80,000 (GIP105,000 from 1 August 2021) of income only. The Income Tax Office applies the AB system to Category 2 individuals. Consequently, the maximum tax payable in a full year is GIP27,560 (GIP37,310 from 1 August 2021. This cap generally does not apply to income derived from activities carried out in Gibraltar; any such income outside the cap is taxable under the AB system at a rate of 39%.

The minimum tax payable under the scheme is GIP22,000 (GIP32,000 from 1 August 2021), which is prorated if the certificate is obtained or expires in the midst of the tax year. In certain circumstances, the income of the spouse and children is deemed to be that of the certificate holder so that no additional tax is payable on that income. Tax advantages are available for individuals with Category 2 status with respect to trusts (see Trusts).

Tax scheme for high executives possessing specialist skills. Under the tax scheme for high executives possessing specialist skills (HEPSS), the tax payable by HEPSS is limited to the first GIP120,000 (GIP160.000 from 1 August 2021) of earned income (maximum tax payable of GIP29,940 [GIP39,940 from 1 August 2021]). The GIB system is applied to HEPSS. Transitional rules apply as from 1 August 2021 to HEPSS who earn between GIP120,000 and GIP160,000.

HEPSS must have skills or experience that are not available in Gibraltar and that are necessary to promote and sustain economic activity of particular economic value to Gibraltar.

They must also occupy high executive or senior management positions, earn more than GIP120,000 (GIP160,00 from 1 August 2021) per year and have approved residential accommodation in Gibraltar available for the exclusive use of themselves and their families. The individuals may not have been a resident or employed in Gibraltar during the three years preceding the year in which the application is made (however, Gibraltar's Finance Centre Director may waive this requirement). A nonrefundable fee of GIP1,000 is payable for the issuance or renewal of the certificate.

Trusts. A trust is tax resident in Gibraltar if one or more of the beneficiaries are ordinarily resident in Gibraltar or if the class of beneficiaries may include an ordinarily resident person or the issue of an ordinarily resident person. The residency status of the trustees or settlor is not relevant in itself.

An individual who has Category 2 status (see Tax scheme for high net worth individuals) or the spouse or child of such individual (provided that the individual has elected to include them under the Category 2 rules) is deemed not to be a tax resident in Gibraltar for the purposes of determining the taxation of a trust or of the beneficiaries.

A trust that is not tax resident in Gibraltar is taxable only on income that accrues in or is derived from Gibraltar. In contrast, a trust that is ordinarily resident in Gibraltar is taxable on its worldwide income. Non-trading interest income, dividends from companies listed on a recognized stock exchange, non-Gibraltar property-based rental income and capital gains are not taxable to trusts in Gibraltar. Trusts are taxed at a rate of 10% on their taxable income.

The capital of the trust is not liable to tax because Gibraltar has no wealth or gift taxes, estate duty, or other capital taxes.

Trusts of a public nature are completely exempt from income tax if the profits from any trade or business are used only for the purposes of the trust and if this business helps carry out a primary purpose of the trust or the work is mainly carried out by the beneficiaries of the trust.

The trustees of a trust are required to pay any tax due by the trust under self-assessment. Payments on account are due by 31 January and 30 June in the tax year. Any remaining balance is payable by 30 November following the end of the tax year.

The trustees of a trust that makes a distribution from taxable income or that otherwise gives rise to any income that is taxable or potentially taxable in Gibraltar are required to file a trusts tax return by 30 November. Trusts with taxable income must prepare their accounts for tax purposes for the year ending 30 June.

Private foundations. A foundation registered under Gibraltar's Private Foundations Act 2017 is resident in Gibraltar, unless persons resident in Gibraltar and the issue of such persons are irrevocably excluded from benefit with respect to the foundation.

Resident foundations are taxable on worldwide income. Nonresident foundations are taxable only on chargeable income accrued in or derived from Gibraltar.

Non-trading interest income, dividends from companies listed on a recognized stock exchange, non-Gibraltar property-based rental income and capital gains are not taxable to foundations in Gibraltar.

Private foundations are taxed at a rate of 10% on their taxable income. Nonresidents of Gibraltar are not taxed on their income as beneficiaries of foundations.

Beneficiaries who are ordinarily resident in Gibraltar are taxable on the following:
- Distributions received from foundations if the underlying income was taxable to the foundation. A tax credit is given with respect to Gibraltar tax suffered by the foundation on the distributed income.
- Benefits derived by them from the use of assets that are owned or leased by the foundation.
- Loans made by foundations to their beneficiaries or to persons connected to the beneficiaries.

B. Other taxes

Wealth tax. Gibraltar does not impose wealth tax.

Property tax. Property tax is payable on residential and business real estate located in Gibraltar, based on the ratable value of the property. Discounts are available for the early payment of tax for businesses, generally 20%. An early payment discount of 50% applies to retail and distributive trades and catering establishments and 30% for hotels. New startups benefit from a 65% discount in their first year of trading and 25% for their second year; this discount must be applied for in advance.

Stamp duty. Stamp duty is payable on instruments relating to real estate property in Gibraltar and on capital transactions. The principal rates of stamp duty are described below.

Stamp duty on share capital (on initial authorized share capital and increases in the capital) is imposed at a flat rate of GIP10. The stamp duty on each issue of loan capital (for example, debenture stock) is also imposed at a flat rate of GIP10.

The following are the rates of stamp duty on the conveyance or transfer of residential real estate property for first- and second-time buyers:
- On the first GIP260,000 of value of the property: nil
- Balance above GIP260,000 to GIP350,000: 5.5%
- Balance above GIP350,000: 3.5%

The following are the rates of stamp duty on the conveyance or transfer of real estate property for other purchasers:
- Total value of up to GIP200,000: nil
- If the total value is between GIP200,001 and GIP350,000: 2% on first GIP250,000 and 5.5% on the balance
- If the total value exceeds GIP350,000: 3% on the first GIP350,000 and 3.5% on balance

Stamp duty of 7.5% applies to the sale of any property that was sold as an "affordable home" for and on behalf of the government in the four years preceding 2 July 2018. This will not apply in certain circumstances, such as a forced sale. Initial purchases of residential properties in government-developed affordable housing estates are exempt from stamp duty.

The following are the rates of stamp duty on mortgages:
- Mortgages not exceeding GIP200,000: 0.13%
- Mortgages over GIP200,000: 0.2%

Inheritance and gift taxes. Gibraltar does not impose inheritance tax, gift tax or estate duty.

C. Social insurance

In general, the following social insurance contributions are payable on the earnings of individuals who work in Gibraltar.

Contributor	Rate payable on employee's gross earnings (%)	Minimum payable per week (GIP)	Maximum payable per week (GIP)
Employer	20	28.00	50.00
Employee (under 60)	10	12.10	36.30
Employee (age 60 and over)	—	—	—
Self-employed	20	25.00	50.00

No contributions are payable if the individual does not receive earnings. Income earned by a student while on holiday is exempt. Contribution credits apply in certain cases, including employees on unpaid sick leave or maternity leave and persons over the age of 60 years. A worker seconded to work in Gibraltar on a temporary basis from the United Kingdom normally remains subject to social security contributions in his or her home country, but needs to present a valid A1 certificate to the Gibraltar authorities to be exempted from Gibraltar social insurance. As of 1 July 2021, the authorities recognize valid A1 certificates from European Union (EU) countries issued to employees registered in Gibraltar pre-2021. However, this recognition and the position regarding new employees are subject to change pending negotiations between the United Kingdom and Spain.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

General. The tax year for individuals in Gibraltar runs from 1 July to 30 June. Taxable compensation of employees is taxed in the year of receipt.

Payment of taxes. Income tax and social insurance contributions on the cash earnings of employees are normally collected under the PAYE system. All employers must use the PAYE system to deduct tax and social security contributions from wages or salaries. Any additional tax due, including tax due on benefits in kind, is generally payable by the employee after it is assessed by the Commissioner of Income Tax.

Income from self-employment is payable under a self-assessment system. The taxpayer must make two payments on account by 31 January and 30 June of the tax year. Each installment equals 50% of the tax payable for the preceding tax year. If a taxpayer believes that the amount of the advance payments calculated on this basis will exceed the liability payable for the year, the taxpayer may apply to be discharged in whole or in part from the obligation to make the advance payment. However, if it is subsequently determined that the application has been made erroneously and that the final liability is higher than predicted by the taxpayer, a surcharge on the late payment of the difference may apply. Any balance remaining is payable by 30 November following the end of the tax year.

Late payment of tax results in a surcharge of 10% of the tax payable on the day immediately after it is due. After 90 days, a further surcharge of 20% of the amount unpaid (tax plus initial surcharge) is imposed.

Income tax returns. Individuals are required to file their tax return for a tax year by 30 November following the end of the tax year. Individuals with income from self-employment must prepare their accounts for the tax year ending 30 June. A fixed penalty of GIP50 is imposed if an individual does not file the return by the applicable deadline, with a further penalty of GIP300 if the failure continues for three months and a further penalty of GIP500 if the failure continues for an additional three months.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

A double tax treaty with the United Kingdom entered into force in March 2020. This treaty applies with respect to income tax in Gibraltar for the tax year commencing on 1 July 2020 onward. It applies in the United Kingdom for income tax and capital gains tax for the tax year commencing on 6 April 2020 onward.

An international agreement was signed between Spain and the United Kingdom with respect to Gibraltar taxation matters. The agreement was ratified in 2021 by the relevant parties. Consequently, many of the provisions with respect to income tax apply in Gibraltar for the tax year commencing on 1 July 2021 onward, and in Spain for the tax year commencing on 1 January 2022 onward. Although the agreement has little similarity to an Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) model-based double tax treaty, it includes provisions to remove double tax-residency for individuals. It also delays the time taken for a non-Spanish national to lose Spanish tax residence if he or she moves from Spain to Gibraltar. The agreement provides that if a Spanish national moves from Spain to Gibraltar after the 4 March 2019, he or she will retain Spanish tax residency.

No other double tax agreements are in force between Gibraltar and other jurisdictions. However, unilateral tax relief is generally available with respect to foreign income tax imposed on income that is similarly chargeable to Gibraltar tax, up to the lower of the Gibraltar tax or the foreign tax on the income. This only applies if the jurisdiction imposing the foreign tax is the jurisdiction in which the income is generated.

F. Temporary visas

Passports are required by all visitors to Gibraltar except EU nationals who possess a valid national identity card. Nationals from certain countries are required to obtain a visa. For a list of these countries, refer to the following website: https://www.gibraltar.gov.gi/new/civil-status-registration-office. In general, individuals who require a visa for entry into the United Kingdom also require a separate visa for entry to Gibraltar.

The above is subject to change pending the outcome of negotiations between the United Kingdom and Spain following the end of the Brexit transition period on 31 December 2020.

Types of visas. The types of visas are tourist visas, business visas and transit visas.

Application procedure. Applications should be made to the British embassy in the applicant's normal country of residence or the visa section of the UK Passport Office in London (by appointment only).

G. Work permits

Under the Control of Employment Act, the government may control the employment of "non-entitled" workers by means of work permits.

An “entitled” worker is a worker who is one of the following:

- A national of a country belonging to the European Economic Area (EEA)
- A non-EEA national who has been working in Gibraltar since before 1 July 1993
- A non-EEA national authorized to work in Gibraltar under the Immigration Control Act

A “non-entitled worker” is a worker who is not an entitled worker.

EEA nationals may stay in Gibraltar for three months. After this period, they are granted a renewable residence permit for five years if they have found suitable employment or established a business.

A work permit is granted to a non-entitled worker if no entitled workers are able and willing to take up the particular employment. Such individual may be granted a residence permit on an annual basis and are normally renewable only if the individual is still in possession of a work permit. A non-EEA national may be refused permission to buy real estate in Gibraltar; such permission cannot be refused to residents of EEA countries. Work permits for non-EU nationals are only issued after a (refundable) deposit is paid to the Employment Service to cover any repatriation costs and other costs that may be required.

A non-EEA national who wants to set up a business and reside in Gibraltar needs to register with the Income Tax Office as a self-employed person. After the work permit is granted, the individual may apply to the Civil Status and Registration Office in Gibraltar for a residence permit.

The above is subject to change pending the outcome of negotiations between the United Kingdom and Spain following the end of the Brexit transition period on 31 December 2020.

H. Residence permits

The Immigration Control Act governs immigration and the right to enter Gibraltar. All individuals registered as having Gibraltarian status or who are British Dependent Territory Citizens as a result of their connection with Gibraltar are exempt from having to hold any permit or certificate of residence required by the act. This exemption is also granted to Commonwealth citizens employed in Gibraltar in HM Services, HM Government Service or Gibraltar Government Service.

An EEA national has the right to enter Gibraltar on the production of a valid passport or national identity card and remain for three months in order to seek employment or to establish himself or herself under any other qualifying category. An EEA national who exercises EEA rights as a qualified person and establishes himself or herself in Gibraltar acquires the right to reside in Gibraltar and must register for residence during or after a three-month period of residence in Gibraltar. The residence documentation (civilian registration card) has a validity period of five years and is renewable. However, a civilian registration card is issued for 12 months in the first instance.

Other nationals require both work permits and residence permits. Any individual not having a right to reside in Gibraltar may be refused admission (or after admission be required to leave) in the interests of public policy, security or health.

Residence permits may be granted at the governor's discretion to non-EEA nationals who do not have a work permit if the governor is satisfied that the applicants are of good character and that it is in the interest of Gibraltar that residency should be granted. Non-EEA nationals who have obtained Category 2 individual tax status (see Section A) are likely to obtain residence permits on this basis.

At the governor's discretion, citizens of the United Kingdom can be granted a certificate of permanent residence if they are of good character and if they are likely to be an asset to the community.

EEA nationals who wish to retire in Gibraltar must prove to the satisfaction of the authorities that they have the following:

- Full risk private medical insurance (except eligible UK nationals)
- Adequate financial resources
- Adequate accommodation in Gibraltar (in practice, this would involve the purchase of a quality property)

Under a reciprocal agreement between the United Kingdom and Gibraltar, eligible UK nationals retiring in Gibraltar may be entitled to free medical services in Gibraltar.

The above is subject to change pending the outcome of negotiations between the United Kingdom and Spain following the end of the Brexit transition period on 31 December 2020.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The members of the family of established qualified persons also have the right to reside in Gibraltar if the qualified person has suitable accommodation for them. This rule applies regardless of whether the family members are EEA nationals. They must apply for residence documentation after being in Gibraltar for three months. The entitlement of non-EEA national family members to work in Gibraltar is dealt with on a case-by-case basis.

Marital property regime. Gibraltar does not have a community property or similar marital property regime.

Driver's permits

EU/EEA licenses. Gibraltar has driver's license reciprocity with most EU and EEA jurisdictions. If a holder of a valid national driving license of an EU or EEA state who is authorized to drive on any public road within that state takes up residence in Gibraltar, the license has the same validity and effect as a license issued in Gibraltar. Such person has the option of exchanging his or her existing license for a Gibraltar license at any time, but he or she must do so on the expiration of the existing license. If a resident of Gibraltar who has an EU license that has not been issued in Gibraltar commits a traffic offense and the license is endorsed by the court, the individual must exchange it for a Gibraltar license so it may be endorsed with the particulars of the offense.

Non-EU/EEA licenses. From the time a person comes to Gibraltar until the time that person acquires normal residence, he or she may continue to drive with his or her non-EU/EEA license as long as that license is valid. After a person acquires normal residence, the license does not entitle person to drive in Gibraltar. To obtain a Gibraltar driving license, the person must pass a theoretical and practical driving test.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals who are tax residents of Greece are taxed on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxed on their Greek-source income only.

Individuals are considered to be Greek tax residents if they satisfy any of certain specified conditions, including, among others, the following:

- Their center of vital interest is in Greece (that is, their domicile).
- Their habitual abode is in Greece. An individual's habitual abode is deemed to be in Greece if the individual spends more than 183 days in Greece in any 12-month period. This condition is deemed to be satisfied if an individual has spent over 183 days physically in Greece (short stays outside Greece are also counted to determine whether the 183-day threshold has been exceeded). After the above 183-day threshold is surpassed, the individual is deemed to be a Greek tax resident as of the beginning of the 183-day period in Greece unless he or she is also considered domiciled in Greece; in such case, he or she is taxed for the full year as a Greek tax resident. An exception to the above-183-day habitual abode rule applies to individuals coming to Greece for "medical, tourist or similar private purposes" and staying in Greece for more than 183 days but less than 365 days in a calendar year; that is, although they surpass the above 183-day threshold, they are not considered as having their habitual abode in Greece.

Protection under a double tax treaty may be available if the individual can claim to be tax resident for the respective tax year of another country with which Greece has entered into a double tax treaty.

Non-tax residents who earn income from Greek sources should obtain supporting documentation, such as a tax-residence certificate, from their home country to validate their nonresident status in Greece if requested to do so.

Special tax regimes have been recently introduced for foreign tax resident high-net-worth individuals, for foreign tax resident individuals with foreign-source pension income who transfer their tax residency to Greece, and for foreign tax resident individuals with Greek private employment income who transfer their tax residency to Greece and choose to be subject to these tax regimes. These regimes are discussed below.

Alternate tax regime for high-net-worth individuals. As of the 2020 fiscal year, individuals who transfer their tax residence to Greece may choose to be subject to an alternate tax regime regarding the taxation of their foreign income in Greece. To be eligible for the above regime, an individual needs to satisfy the following conditions:
- He or she has not been a Greek tax resident for the previous seven of the last eight years before the transfer of his or her tax residence to Greece.
- He or she proves that he or she or a close relative has made an investment of at least EUR500,000 in real estate, businesses or legal entities in Greece or securities or shares in legal entities based in Greece, or has made such investment through legal persons in which they hold the majority of the shares.

If the application for the transfer of the tax residency in accordance with the above process is successful, the following rules apply:
- The individual needs to pay an amount of EUR100,000 per tax year for income arising abroad.
- The individual needs to declare his or her Greek-source income and is taxed in Greece only on such income.
- Any assets held abroad by the individual are exempted from inheritance and donation tax.

An individual who opts to be subject to the above alternate method of taxation may request that the application be extended to their close relatives if he or she pays an amount of EUR20,000 per tax year per relative.

An individual can be enrolled in this regime for 15 years.

Alternate tax regime for individuals with foreign pension income. For the 2020 fiscal year and future years, individuals who earn pension income from abroad and who transfer their tax residence to Greece may choose to be subject to an alternate tax regime regarding the taxation of their foreign income in Greece. To be eligible for this regime, an individual needs to satisfy the following conditions:
- He or she has not been a Greek tax resident for the previous five of the last six years before the transfer of his or her tax residence to Greece.
- He or she relocates from a country with which Greece has a valid agreement concerning administrative cooperation on tax issues.

If the application for transfer of the tax residency is successful, the following rules apply to the individual:

- He or she must report in Greece all Greek-source income and all foreign-source income that is subject to this alternate tax regime.
- He or she must pay annually by the end of July a 7% flat income tax for their income obtained abroad with their tax liability in Greece for such foreign-source income (including a relief from solidarity tax) being fully exhausted. A foreign tax credit is also available on certain conditions.
- He or she is subject to Greek personal income tax for all their Greek-source income according to the general tax rules.

An individual can be enrolled in this regime for 15 years.

Individuals taking advantage of one of the above regimes are considered tax residents of Greece for the purposes of applying the tax treaties that Greece has enacted with foreign jurisdictions.

Law 4758/4.12.2020 alternate tax status. A new special tax regime was introduced in December 2020 for foreign tax residents intending to relocate to Greece and become Greek tax residents in order to work in new employment positions or as freelancers.

Under this new regime, effective for fiscal years beginning on or after 1 January 2021, individuals earning employment income in Greece who transfer their tax residence in Greece may choose to be subject to a favorable tax regime regarding their employment income for services rendered in Greece. To be eligible for this regime, an individual needs to satisfy the following conditions:
- He or she has not been a Greek tax resident for five of the last six years preceding the transfer of his or her tax residence to Greece.
- He or she relocates from a country with which Greece has a valid agreement concerning administrative cooperation on tax issues.
- He or she is providing employment services in Greece through an employment relationship as defined by Greek law to a Greek legal person or legal entity or to a Greek branch of a foreign company.
- He or she declares that his or her stay in Greece will be for at least two years.

If the application for the transfer of the tax residence per the above process is successful, the individual will be exempt from paying income tax and solidarity tax on 50% of his or her Greek employment income.

Income subject to tax. The Greek Income Tax Code (Law 4172/2013) provides for the following four categories of income:
- Employment and pension
- Business income
- Income from capital
- Capital gains income

Different tax rates apply to the categories. Some tax rates are progressive while others are exhaustive. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment and pension income. Employees are subject to income tax on income derived from employment, which includes income from salaries, wages, allowances, pensions, stock-based compensation and any other payments periodically made in cash or in kind for services rendered and certain other income items.

The Greek Income Tax Code contains specific provisions for the taxation of the following types of benefits:

- Company cars, which are taxed in accordance to a deemed income formula
- Loans provided to employees, which yield deemed taxable income to the employee
- Company provided housing, regardless whether it is leased or owned by the company
- Equity-based compensation

In general, the market value of benefits in kind received by an employee or a relative of the employee is considered taxable income for the employee if the value exceeds EUR300 per year.

Other payments usually made to employees on international assignment are taxable, including the following:

- International service premiums
- Cost-of-living allowances
- Education benefits
- Relocation bonuses
- Performance bonuses
- Employee tax reimbursements
- Other allowances paid periodically and regularly

Insurance premiums paid by an employer on behalf of an employee and his or her family members under an insurance program for health, medical or hospital coverage and/or life insurance coverage of the employee are considered tax-exempt income for the employee up to an amount of EUR1,500 per year per employee.

Capital accumulated until 31 December 2013 that reflects insurance premiums paid by the employee in the course of a life insurance private pension scheme is considered exempt from tax (that is, it is not taken into account for the purposes of applying a special tax rate of 10% for insurance indemnities up to EUR40,000 and 20% for insurance indemnities exceeding such threshold that are paid out of and derived from such life insurance private pension schemes).

Employer contributions toward a group life insurance private pension scheme are not considered to be employment income and are taxed separately on redemption at special final tax rates (conditions apply).

Expenses incurred by an employee in the course of their work duties does not constitute taxable income to the employee if proper tax documentation evidencing the expense exists and if it can be proven that the expenditure was a productive business expense.

Board of director fees are categorized as employment income for tax purposes but may be payable through a distribution of capital if savings exist.

The following progressive tax rate scale applies to individuals with salary income, pension income, freelancer income and personal agricultural income.

Taxable income EUR	Tax rate %	Tax due EUR	Cumulative tax due EUR
0 to 10,000	9	900	900
10,001 to 20,000	22	2,200	3,100
20,001 to 30,000	28	2,800	5,900
30,001 to 40,000	36	3,600	9,500
40,001 and above	44	—	—

A tax allowance may be available under certain conditions on income from salaries and pensions, which depends on one hand on the existence and the number of the dependent children and on the other hand on whether the income exceeds the amount of EUR12,000. In principle, each taxpayer with salary income, pension income, freelancer income or real estate property rental income is expected to realize expenses via electronic means of payment at a rate of 30% of their actual income per tax year. The maximum limit of the expenses is set at the amount of EUR20,000. Failure of the taxpayer to reach the corresponding limit of expenses leads to additional tax of 22% applied on the difference between the declared and the corresponding amount of expenses.

Severance payments made by Greek companies to departing employees are taxed at the following rates.

Severance payment EUR	Tax rate %	Tax due EUR	Cumulative tax due EUR
First 60,000	0	0	0
Next 40,000	10	4,000	4,000
Next 50,000	20	10,000	14,000
Above 150,000	30	—	—

Insurance indemnities paid under group insurance private pension schemes are taxed at the following rates:

- Each periodically paid benefit: 15%
- Lump-sum payment of up to EUR40,000: 10%
- Lump-sum payment exceeding EUR40,000: 20%

Business income. The above progressive income tax scale applicable to salary income and pension income also applies to the income of freelancers and single proprietorships.

An unjustified increase of wealth of an individual is taxed as business income at a rate of 33%.

In general, an expense is considered to be deductible for business tax purposes if it satisfies the following conditions:

- The expense is incurred for the benefit of the company in the course of its usual business transactions, including company social responsibility actions.
- It corresponds to an actual transaction, and the value of the transaction is not deemed to be lower or higher than the market price of a similar transaction.
- It is recorded in the proper accounting books for the period and is evidenced by proper documentation. For social responsibility expenses, it is deductible for company profit determination purposes if the company shows profits in the year in which the expense is incurred.

Income from capital. Dividends are subject to a 5% final withholding tax rate. The concept of dividends is extended, in accordance with Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) guidelines, to include all distributed profits, regardless of the legal form of the distributing entity. Foreign dividends received by a Greek tax resident may be subject to more favorable tax treatment under an applicable double tax treaty.

In principle, interest is subject to a final withholding tax rate of 15%, with no further personal income tax liability for individuals (but solidarity tax is assessed in addition to the withholding tax on assessment of the personal income tax return filed annually).

Royalties are subject to a final withholding tax rate of 20%, with no further personal income tax liability for individuals (but solidarity tax is in addition to the withholding tax on assessment of the personal income tax return filed annually).

Income from immovable property is subject to tax in accordance with the following progressive tax scale.

Real estate income EUR	Tax rate %	Tax due EUR	Cumulative tax due EUR
First 12,000	15	1,800	1,800
Next 23,000	35	8,050	9,850
Above 35,000	45	—	—

Income from immovable property is any income whether in cash or in kind that is derived from the leasing, self-use or free-use of real estate.

To derive income in kind, a 3% rate of return is applied to the objective value of the real estate.

Profits derived by individuals from the sale of shares listed on the Athens Stock Exchange or in any recognized foreign stock exchange market are subject to transaction tax at a rate of 0.2%.

Capital gains. Capital gains from the transfer of capital are taxed at a rate of 15%. They include gains from the transfer of securities if such transfers are not classified as business activities. For the transfer of listed shares or other listed securities, a capital gains tax is imposed only if both of the following circumstances exist:
- The listed shares or listed securities were originally acquired after 1 January 2009.
- The transferor holds a 0.5% or higher stake in the share capital of the company.

The above provisions apply to capital gains from transfers of securities taking place on or after 1 January 2014.

An exemption from capital gains tax applies to gains derived from the transfer of securities if the seller is a tax resident of a country with which Greece has entered into a double tax treaty.

Losses incurred from the sale of securities can be carried forward for a five-year period and be offset against profits that arise from the same income category.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options and stock awards. Recently enacted legislation has amended the tax treatment of the following:
- Share settled stock option income
- Income deriving from stock awards, which involve the granting of shares for free as a benefit in kind in the context of stock award plans, in which the achievement of key performance indications or the occurrence of a specific event is set as a condition for awarding the shares

Under the new rules, if certain conditions are met, in principle, the tax point is at the sale of the shares, and only a 15% capital gains tax is imposed.

Other considerations

Deemed income. The amount of declared income is compared with the amount of deemed income, determined based on evidence relating to amounts spent on the acquisition of assets and on living expenses.

In general, amounts spent for the acquisition of assets are considered evidence of income to the extent that such amounts cannot be justified by the following:
- Taxable income
- Tax-exempt income or income that has been taxed under special rules, such as bank interest and directors' fees
- Capital that has been accumulated out of taxed or tax-exempt income of prior years or from the sale of assets
- The importation of foreign exchange into Greece (restrictions apply to the importation of foreign exchange by Greek tax residents to cover deemed income)
- Contracted loans
- Gifts received or gains from lotteries

Capital purchases (for example, a home or car) constitute deemed income on an "actual expense" basis. Certain items generate deemed income under the "living expenses" section. In this context, deemed income from "living expenses" is derived from assets that are owned, while deemed income from "actual expenses" is derived from amounts spent to purchase assets. Currently, the list of deemed income items consists of the following:
- Motor cars, pleasure boats, aircraft, and chattels of great value.
- The annual deemed income for using a private home that is owned, rented or granted for free. The deemed income is calculated based on the square meters of the home and on the zone prices applicable for the respective location. For secondary residences, the amount described in the preceding sentence is reduced by half.
- The annual objective living expense for cars is calculated according to the engine capacity of each car.
- Swimming pools.
- Annual donations in excess of EUR300, except donations made to the state and municipal governments and other government bodies.
- Loans and gifts from parents to children in excess of EUR300.
- Purchase or formation of a business, increase of share capital for amounts invested in the business or purchases of shares or securities in general.

- Annual expenditure for the payment of interest and principal with respect to loans or credit.
- Purchases of valuable articles over EUR10,000.
- Loans granted to anyone.
- Repayment of loans.
- Private education and private school tuition fees, and remuneration for housemaids, private drivers, teachers and other household personnel.

Deemed income does not apply to non-tax residents who earn no real income (any amount or type of income) in Greece. If non-tax residents earn real income in Greece, the deemed income related to amounts spent on the acquisition of assets applies.

Earning of income. Income is deemed to be earned at the time the individual has the right to collect such income. Exceptionally, for uncollected accrued income from employment or pensions that has been collected by the beneficiary in a later tax year, the time of acquisition of such income is the time of collection.

Credits. Under certain conditions, Greek and foreign tax resident individuals may subtract certain credits from the tax computed on their taxable income. All claims regarding expenses must be supported by proper documentation.

A 20% tax credit is provided on certain conditions for money donations of the taxpayer to public entities, charities and nonprofit organizations in Greece or other countries of the EU/ European Economic Area (EEA), provided that the donation exceeds the amount of EUR100 per tax year.

In addition, the tax law provides for a EUR200 credit per disabled individual living with an individual taxpayer.

For the 2020 to 2022 tax years, a deduction from income tax is recognized on certain conditions for costs incurred by taxpayers who receive services for the aesthetic, functional and energy upgrading of buildings.

A foreign tax credit is provided for foreign income declared that is taxed in Greece in accordance with the progressive income tax scale. The tax credit is limited to the Greek tax payable on that foreign income.

Rates. For the income tax rates applicable to the various categories of income, see the sections on these categories in Income subject to tax.

Solidarity tax contribution. A special solidarity tax contribution is imposed on individuals who earn income exceeding EUR12,000 on an annual basis. In general, this solidarity tax contribution is imposed on the following:
- Both Greek and foreign income of Greek tax residents
- Greek-source income of foreign (non-Greek) tax residents

Net personal income (both taxable and tax exempt) is used to determine liability of the taxpayer.

The following are the progressive tax rates for the solidarity tax contribution for income earned on or after 1 January 2016.

Taxable income EUR	Tax rate %	Tax due EUR	Cumulative tax due EUR
First 12,000	0.0	0	0
Next 8,000	2.2	176	176
Next 10,000	5.0	500	676
Next 10,000	6.5	650	1,326
Next 25,000	7.5	1,875	3,201

Solidarity tax contributions are withheld from salary income on a monthly basis (together with the regular tax withholdings on salary income). In some cases (for example, dividends, interest and capital gains from sale of securities that are declared on the annual personal income tax return), solidarity tax is assessed on the filing of the individual's annual personal income tax return.

For salaried employees, solidarity tax contribution withholdings are made on the basis of the salaried employee's annual salary after the deduction of employee social security contributions. A salaried employee's annual salary is calculated on the basis of his or her monthly salary. The following types of individuals are excluded from the obligation to pay solidarity tax:
• Individuals with over 80% disability rate
• Long-term unemployed individuals

Severance payments are not subject to solidarity tax.

Law 4738/27.10.2020 introduced a suspension of solidarity tax for specific categories of income of individuals depending on the year concerned. For example, for the 2020 fiscal year, the exemption from solidarity tax applies to the following income categories:
• Business income
• Income from capital (dividends, interest, royalties and real estate income)
• Capital gains

For the 2021 and 2022 fiscal years, the exemption from solidarity tax applies to employment income earned by employees of the private sector.

Additional conditions may apply in order to grant the above exemption if the alternative income computation (deemed income) rules are used to determine the individual's taxable income.

Luxury tax. A luxury tax is applied to the deemed income arising from the use of automobiles, pleasure boats (private yachts), airplanes, helicopters, gliders and swimming pools. The luxury tax rates range from 5% to 13%.

B. Other taxes

Inheritance and gift taxes. All property located in Greece, regardless of ownership, and any movable property located abroad that belongs to a Greek citizen or to any other person domiciled in Greece are subject to inheritance tax. All property located in Greece and any movable property located abroad that is donated by a Greek citizen or by a foreigner to a person domiciled in Greece are subject to gift tax.

Movable assets located abroad and belonging to a Greek tax resident who was established outside Greece for at least 10 consecutive years is exempt from Greek inheritance tax.

Effective from 31 July 2020, donations of movable property located abroad that have not been acquired during the last 12 years in Greece by Greek citizens are exempt from tax, provided that such donors (Greek citizens) have been residing abroad for at least 10 consecutive years and, in case of relocation to Greece, no more than 5 years have elapsed.

The categories of rates for inheritance tax and gift tax depend on the relationship of the beneficiary to the deceased or donor. The rates are higher for more distant relatives and unrelated persons.

The following table illustrates the increase in the inheritance tax rates for categories of persons less closely related to the decedent.

Category	Threshold amount EUR	Tax on threshold amount EUR	Tax rate on amount exceeding threshold amount %
A	600,000	16,500	10
B	300,000	23,500	20
C	267,000	71,700	40

A gift or parental grant of cash is taxed separately at a rate of 10%, 20% or 40%, depending on the relationship of the beneficiary with the provider.

Effective from 1 October 2021, parental grants or gifts to the persons belonging to Category A, as well as parental grants or the gifts of money to said persons via bank transfer, are subject to tax, which is calculated at a rate of 10%, after deducting a one-time tax-free amount of EUR800,000.

Estate tax treaties. Greece has entered into estate tax treaties with Germany, Italy, Spain and the United States to prevent double estate taxation.

Real estate taxes. Annual Real Estate Tax (ENFIA) has replaced FAP. ENFIA is divided into a main tax and a supplementary tax. ENFIA applies to real estate located in Greece that is owned by individuals or legal entities.

ENFIA is payable on an annual basis. The tax payable depends on a number of factors, including but not limited to the following:
- The zone price of the location where the property is located
- The area the property in square meters
- The intended use of the property
- The age of the building
- The floor where the property is located (if it is above ground)
- The number of "building facades" of the property (that is, whether the property is adjacent to a public road and if so whether it is adjacent to more than one public road)

Additional ENFIA tax is imposed if the total value of the taxpayer's land exceeds a threshold of EUR250,000. Rates ranging from 0.15% to 1.15% are applied progressively on the value of the taxpayer's property in excess of the EUR250,000 threshold.

At the time of writing, the Greek government was also considering the introduction of a wealth tax but no final decision had been reached.

The rate of the real estate transfer tax is 3% for transfers occurring on or after 1 January 2014.

A special 15% tax is applied to real estate owned by foreign companies in Greece. Many exemptions are available. In certain circumstances, actions must be taken to obtain such exemptions.

C. Social security

Coverage. The state social security system in Greece is administered by the National Social Security Organization (e-EFKA), which has encompassed the different social security organizations covering each category of employed persons. Its benefits include pensions, medical expenses and long-term disability payments.

Contributions. Social security contributions are made by employers and employees based on a percentage of the employee's monthly salary.

Under Law 4387/2016 and subject to the relevant ministerial decisions, there are various packages in relation to social security coverage of employees, depending on the type of employment. The most common social security contribution package is set according to the provisions of Law 4826/2021, which includes the following rates:
- Employers' contribution: 22.54%
- Employees' contribution: 14.12%

The maximum monthly amount subject to social security contributions is now EUR6,500 (14 payroll periods).

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Greece has entered into totalization agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Argentina
Australia
Brazil
Canada
Cyprus
Egypt
EU member states
Libya
New Zealand
Ontario
Quebec
Serbia
Switzerland
Syria
United States
Uruguay
Venezuela

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

A taxpayer who is 18 or older must declare all of his or her taxable and exempt income to the tax authorities electronically.

Tax returns must be filed by 30 June of the year following the relevant calendar year.

Married persons, regardless of whether they file joint or separate tax returns, are taxed separately on all types of income.

Tax liability is determined by deducting from the computed amount of tax any previous advance payments of income tax, any taxes withheld at source and any creditable amounts of foreign taxes paid.

In addition, if the individual receives income from a business, as a general rule, 100% of the amount of a current year's income tax must be paid as an advance payment of the following year's tax liability. The amount of the advance tax payment reduces the following year's tax liability.

Income tax is usually paid in three equal bimonthly installments.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Greek residents are entitled to a credit for foreign taxes paid, not to exceed the amount of Greek tax payable on the foreign-source income.

Greece has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Albania

F. Temporary visas (Schengen visas) and Digital Nomad Visas

An entry visa, which may be obtained from the Greek embassy or consulate of the expatriate's place of origin, is usually required for visiting Greece. However, a temporary visa is not required for citizens of EU-member countries, for citizens of the United States or for citizens of countries that have signed reciprocity treaties with Greece.

Non-EU nationals, including citizens of the United States or citizens of countries that have signed reciprocity treaties with Greece, who intend to enter Greece to obtain a Greek residence permit need to obtain a special type of Schengen visa from the Greek consulate or embassy of their country of origin before entering Greece.

Law 4825/2021 (Government Gazette A' 157/4.9.2021) introduced the Digital Nomad Visa for foreigners who wish to work remotely from Greece. Holders of a Digital Nomad Visa have the right of legal residence in Greece, with no access right to Greek-dependent employment or business activity in Greece whatsoever.

Third-country (non-EU) nationals who are either dependent employees or self-employed persons and who work remotely with employers or clients outside Greece using information and communication technologies are considered Digital Nomads. Family members are eligible for an individual visa, valid for the same period as the Digital Nomad Visa, which does not provide right of employment or professional activity in Greece.

A Digital Nomad Visa is valid for up to 12 months. If the third-country national estimates that he or she will continue to be eligible following that period, then prior to the expiration of the visa, he or she may apply for the issuance of a Digital Nomad residence permit with a two-year period of validity (with option of renewal). In that case, family members are eligible.

The Greek consular authority of the place of main residence of the applicant can issue a Digital Nomad Visa by applying a fast-track process. The Digital Nomad residence permit is issued by the competent authority of the Greek Ministry of Migration and Asylum.

To be eligible to a Digital Nomad Visa, the applicant is required (among others prerequisites) to provide evidence that he or she has sufficient resources, such as a stable income, to cover his or her living expenses during his or her stay in the country, without burdening the national social welfare system. The amount of sufficient resources is set at EUR3,500 per month. If the applicant's resources derive from dependent employment or independent provision of services, the above minimum amount refers to the net income after payment of the required taxes in the country where the employment or services are provided. The above amount is increased by 20% for the spouse or cohabitant and by 15% for each child. In addition, the applicant is required to provide documentation proving that he or she is a dependent employee or self-employed person working remotely with employers or clients outside Greece, covering the validity period of the Digital Nomad Visa.

A third-country citizen, as well as members of his or her family, who meet the conditions to apply for a Digital Nomad Visa and have already entered Greece either with a uniform type of visa or under a visa waiver regime, have the opportunity, within the period of validity of their existing visa, to apply to the one-stop service of the Greek Ministry of Migration and Asylum for the issuance of a Digital Nomad residence permit. In this case, they will also be required to submit documentation proving their residence address in Greece.

G. Residence permits providing access to dependent employment and self-employment and permits for investors in strategic investments and owners of real estate

EU nationals are not required to obtain residence permits to live and work in Greece. However, EU nationals who intend to reside and work in Greece for more than three months must obtain a European Citizen Residence Card. This card, which may not be denied to EU nationals, is granted for an indefinite time period by the appropriate Police Department (Alien Bureau).

Non-EU nationals must obtain a residence permit. Greek law provides for specific types of residence permits for non-EU nationals, which provide access to employment in Greece. Consequently, a non-EU national does not need to obtain a separate work permit apart from the residence permit.

The competent authority for the issuance of a residence permit depends on the type of residence permit. For example, the Greek Ministry of Internal Affairs grants residence permits to members of boards of directors, administrators, legal representatives and higher executives of subsidiaries or branches of foreign companies exercising their commercial activities legally in Greece. Residence permits are usually valid for one year and are renewable.

In addition, individuals who have adequate means to support their activities and who are engaged in activities that make a positive contribution to the national economy may be self-employed in Greece if they obtain an entry visa and file an application for a residence permit.

Apart from the above, residence permits are available to non-EU citizens who will invest in Greece.

In this context, a residence permit is granted to a third-country national (non-EU) who purchases real property or enters into a time-sharing agreement or lease agreement under specific requirements set by the Greek Immigration Code. The residence permit is granted for five years. The residence permit may be renewed for an equal term if the property remains in the ultimate ownership and possession of the interested party and if the party complies with other provisions of the applicable laws. The permit is granted if the interested party has been granted a visa (under certain conditions) and if the interested party has ultimate ownership and possession of the property in Greece, individually or through a legal entity of which the party is the sole owner of the respective shares or capital parts. The minimum value of the property should be EUR250,000.

Under the Greek Immigration Code (Law 4251/2014), a Blue Card may be issued to highly specialized personnel (European Directive 2009/50/EC). The Greek Immigration Code has incorporated into the Greek legal framework the provisions of the EU Intercorporate Transfer Directive (Directive 2014/66/EU) on the conditions of entry and residence of third-country nationals in the context of an intra-corporate transfer.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Residence permits are granted to an EU citizen's non-EU family members according to specific prerequisites set by the Greek Immigration Code.

Marital property regime. Spouses (heterosexual couples) in Greece may choose the marital property regime they prefer. If they do not make an election, a regime of separate property applies. Spouses under a separate property regime may nonetheless acquire common property.

Before or during the marriage, the spouses may modify the default regime of separate property by entering into a marital contract adopting a community property regime. The contract must be notarized and recorded in the public registry. The community property claims purport to survive a permanent move to a non-community property country.

The property relationship of the spouses is subject, in order of priority, to the law of their last common nationality if one of them retains it, to the law of their common marital residence or to the law of the country to which they are most closely connected. These rules are fixed permanently at the time the marriage is solemnized.

Forced heirship. The Greek rules on forced heirship protect the closest relatives of the decedent, who may not disinherit them. Forced heirs are always entitled to a certain percentage of the estate, and they have all the rights and duties of other heirs. Forced heirs in general are the descendants, the parents and the surviving spouse of the decedent. If descendants survive, the parents are excluded, and the surviving spouse's portion is one-eighth of the estate.

Forced heirs are entitled to one-half of their intestate share of the decedent's estate. The forced heir's right may be inherited and devolves under the rules of the intestate succession.

Any testamentary dispositions to the prejudice of the forced heir or any restrictions imposed on his or her share by the will are void. Inter vivos donations of the testator to the detriment of the estate and, consequently, to the legitimate portion are canceled if the estate at death is insufficient to provide the forced heirs their portions.

Under the provisions of Greek law, distribution of all property, movable and immovable, is governed by the law of the decedent's country of nationality at death.

Driver's permits. An expatriate may drive legally in Greece on his or her home-country driver's license. EU citizens are provided with EU driver's licenses, which they may use for up to one year. Non-EU citizens are provided with international driver's licenses.

No examination is required to obtain a Greek driver's license for holders of European or international driver's licenses.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Guam residents are subject to tax on all income, regardless of source. An individual who is not a citizen or permanent resident of the United States or a resident of Guam is subject to tax on Guam-source income only.

A nonresident alien is subject to Guam tax on income that is effectively connected with a Guam trade or business and on Guam-source fixed or determinable, annual or periodical gains, profits and income (generally investment income, including dividends, interest and rental income).

Foreign nationals who are not lawful US permanent residents (that is, who do not hold green cards) are considered Guam residents if they meet both of the following requirements:
- They are present in Guam for at least 31 days during the current year.
- They are deemed present in Guam for at least 183 days during a test period of three consecutive years, including the current year, using a formula weighted according to the following percentages:
  - Current year: 100.00%
  - First preceding year: 33.33%
  - Second preceding year: 16.67%

Among the exceptions to the test outlined above are the following conditions:
- An individual may claim to be a nonresident of Guam in the year of departure from Guam by having a closer connection to a foreign country.
- Under certain circumstances, it may be beneficial for an individual to be considered a resident of Guam for income tax purposes. If certain conditions are met, an individual may, for tax purposes, elect to be a resident in the year of arrival (first-year election).

Because Guam is a US territory, US citizens and permanent residents with Guam income are taxed somewhat differently from nonresidents. At present, Guam is using the US Internal Revenue Code in "mirror-image" fashion, with the word "Guam" substituted for "United States" wherever it appears. Citizens and permanent residents of the United States who are bona fide residents of Guam must file their individual tax returns with the government of Guam instead of with the US Internal Revenue Service.

Citizens or permanent residents of the United States are generally considered bona fide residents of Guam if they satisfy both of the following conditions:
- They are physically present in Guam for 183 days or more during the tax year.
- They do not have a tax home outside Guam during any part of the tax year and do not have a closer connection to the United States or a foreign country during any part of the tax year.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Gross income and deductions in Guam are determined under the same rules as those in the United States. Taxable income from personal services includes all cash wages, salaries, commissions and fees paid for services performed in Guam, regardless of where the payments are made. In addition, taxable income includes the value of an employee's expenses paid by the employer and the fair-market value of noncash goods and services provided by the employer, including housing and vehicles. Guam-source investment income received by nonresidents is ordinarily taxed on a gross basis at a flat 30% rate, which may be withheld by the payer.

A nonresident alien who performs personal services as an employee in Guam at any time during the tax year is considered to be engaged in a Guam trade or business. A limited exception to this rule applies to a nonresident alien performing services in Guam if the services are performed for a foreign employer, if the employee is present in Guam for no longer than 90 days during the year and if compensation for the services does not exceed USD3,000.

Compensation is considered to be from a Guam source if it is paid for services performed in Guam, regardless of where the income is paid or received. If income is paid for services rendered partly in Guam and partly in a foreign country and if the amount of income attributable to services performed in Guam cannot be accurately determined, the Guam portion is determined based on a workday ratio. Fringe benefits that meet certain requirements are sourced to the person's principal place of work. These benefits include moving expenses, housing, primary and secondary education for dependents and local transportation. A Guam or foreign employer is responsible for withholding Guam income tax from payments made to nonresident alien employees.

Educational allowances provided by employers to their local or expatriate employees' children 18 years of age and younger are taxable for income tax and social security tax purposes.

Self-employment and business income. Every Guam resident who operates a business is taxable on the worldwide income of the business. Nonresidents are taxable on business income from Guam sources only. The rules for the computation of an individual's taxable income from a business are similar to the US rules. A 5% gross receipts tax applies on all income earned by an individual in connection with a business in Guam, with certain exceptions, including income from wholesale sales, real property sales and export sales.

Investment income. In general, dividend and interest income of residents is taxed at the ordinary rates (outlined in Rates). Nonresident alien individuals are subject to special rules. Guam-source investment income received by nonresidents is ordinarily taxed on a gross basis at a flat 30% rate, which may be withheld by the payer.

Portfolio interest received by nonresidents is exempt from the 30% tax rate. An election to tax rental income on a net basis is available.

Directors' fees. In general, directors' fees are considered to be earnings from self-employment. A 5% gross receipts tax applies to directors' fees earned in Guam.

Income from certain foreign corporations. Under a complex set of rules, US citizens and Guam residents with ownership interests in "controlled foreign corporations" may be subject to tax on certain categories of income, even if the income has not been distributed to them as a dividend. Beginning in 2018, the categories of income subject to current taxation are expanded. Individuals who were subject to these rules in 2017 were required to calculate a "transition tax" when filing their 2017 tax returns.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options

Qualified stock option plans. Under incentive stock option (ISO) rules, options provided to employees under qualified stock option plans are not subject to tax at the time the option is granted nor at the time the employee exercises the option and buys the stock. However, at the time of exercise, the difference between the exercise price and the fair market value of the stock at the date of exercise is considered a tax preference item for AMT purposes (see Rates). Tax is levied at capital gains tax rates when the employee sells the stock (see Capital gains and losses). The employee's basis in the stock is the amount paid for the stock at the time the option is exercised. Consequently, the employee recognizes a capital gain or loss in the amount of the difference between the sale price and the grant price. For purposes of determining whether the capital gain is long term or short term, the holding period begins on the date after the option is exercised, not on the date the option is granted. Stock purchased under an ISO may not be sold within two years from the grant date and within one year from the exercise date. If the stock is sold before the expiration of the required holding period, any gain on the sale is treated as ordinary income.

Non-qualified stock option plans. A stock option provided to an employee under a non-qualified plan is taxed when it is granted if the option has a readily ascertainable fair market value at that time. An option that is not actively traded on an established market has a readily ascertainable fair market value only if all of the following conditions are met:

- The option is transferable.
- The option is exercisable immediately and in full when it is granted.
- No conditions or restrictions are placed on the option that would have a significant effect on its fair market value.
- The fair market value of the option privilege must be readily ascertainable.

The above conditions are seldom satisfied. Consequently, most non-qualified options that are not traded on an established market do not have a readily ascertainable fair market value and are not taxable at the date of grant.

The exercise of a non-qualified stock option triggers a taxable event. An employee recognizes ordinary income in the amount of the value of the stock purchased, less any amount paid for the stock or the option. When the stock is sold, the difference between the sale price and the fair market value of the stock at the date of exercise, if any, is taxed as a capital gain.

Capital gains and losses. Net capital gain income is taxed at ordinary rates, except that the maximum rate for long-term gains is limited to the following:

- 0% for married individuals filing jointly, with a maximum taxable income of USD80,800 (USD40,400 for single individuals)
- 15% for married individuals filing jointly, with a maximum taxable income of USD501,600 (USD445,850 for single individuals)
- 20% for married individuals filing jointly, with taxable income of more than USD501,600 (USD445,850 for single individuals)

Net capital gain equals the difference between net long-term capital gains over net short-term capital losses. Long term refers to assets held longer than 12 months. Short-term capital gains are taxed as ordinary income at the rates set forth in Rates.

Investors who hold "qualified small business stock" may be entitled to exclude from income part or all of the gain realized on disposition of the stock.

Once every two years, Guam taxpayers, including resident aliens, may exclude up to USD250,000 (USD500,000 for married taxpayers filing jointly) of gain derived from the sale of a principal residence. To be eligible for the exclusion, the taxpayer must generally have owned the residence and used it as a principal residence for at least two of the five years immediately preceding the sale. However, if a taxpayer moves as a result a change in place of employment, for health reasons or as a result of unforeseen circumstances, a fraction of the maximum exclusion amount is allowed in determining whether any taxable gain must be reported. The numerator of the fraction is generally the length of time the home is used as a principal residence, and the denominator is two years. The repayment of a foreign currency mortgage obligation may result in a taxable exchange-rate gain, regardless of any economic gain or loss on the sale of the principal residence. In certain cases, part of the gain on the sale of a principal residence may not be eligible for exclusion. To the extent the taxpayer has "non-qualified use" of the property, that portion of the gain (determined on a time basis over the total holding period of the property) is not eligible for exclusion from income. A complex set of rules applies to determine whether a particular use of the property, such as renting out the property or leaving it vacant, is considered a "non-qualified use."

Capital losses are fully deductible against capital gains. However, net capital losses are deductible against other income only up to an annual limit of USD3,000. Unused capital losses may be carried forward indefinitely. Losses attributable to personal assets (for example, a personal residence or an automobile) are not deductible.

In general, capital gains received by nonresidents from the sale of stock in a Guam company is exempt from the 30% tax rate described in Investment income. Gains received by nonresidents from sales of Guam real property interests are generally considered to be effectively connected income, and special complex rules apply.

Dividends. Dividends received by individuals from domestic corporations and "qualified foreign corporations" are taxed at the same special rates as those applicable to net capital gains, for both the regular tax and the alternative minimum tax. See Capital gains and losses for the tax rates.

To qualify for the 15% (or 0% or 20%) tax rate, the shareholder must hold a share of stock for more than 60 days during the 120-day period beginning 60 days before the ex-dividend date. Other dividends are taxed at ordinary rates.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Certain types of deductions, including amounts related to producing gross income, are subtracted to arrive at adjusted gross income. Alimony payments to a former spouse and contributions to health savings accounts are among the most commonly claimed deductions in this category. Alimony (but not child support) must meet certain criteria, and must be included in the recipient's gross income, to be deductible by the payer. A tax of 30% generally must be withheld (and remitted) from alimony paid by a US citizen or Guam resident to a nonresident-alien former spouse. For divorce agreements executed after 31 December 2018 (or modified after that date to reflect the new tax rules), alimony payments are not deductible, and alimony received is not taxable.

Complex rules determine eligibility for other deductions from gross income. For example, depending on the taxpayer's income level, interest of up to USD2,500 on qualified educational loans, and individual retirement account (IRA) contributions of up to USD6,000 (USD7,000 if age 50 or older at the end of 2021) may be deducted.

After adjusted gross income is determined, a citizen or resident alien is entitled to claim the greater of itemized deductions or a standard deduction. The amount of the standard deduction varies, depending on the taxpayer's filing status. For 2021, the standard deduction is USD25,100 for married individuals filing a joint return, USD18,800 for a head of household, USD12,550 for a single (not married) individual and USD12,550 for a married taxpayer filing a separate return.

Itemized deductions include the following items:

- Unreimbursed medical expenses to the extent that they exceed 10% of adjusted gross income
- Income, general sales, and property taxes of US states and localities, but limited to USD10,000 in total
- Foreign income taxes paid if a foreign tax credit is not elected
- Certain interest expenses, generally home mortgage interest and investment interest expenses
- Casualty losses to the extent they are attributable to specified natural disasters
- Gambling losses to the extent of gambling winnings
- Charitable contributions made to qualified charities

A nonresident alien may not use the standard deduction instead of actual itemized deductions. Also, the types of itemized deductions a nonresident alien may claim are limited to charitable contributions made to qualified charities, and state and local taxes imposed on effectively connected income (limited to USD10,000). A nonresident alien may not claim an itemized deduction for medical expenses, taxes (other than state and local income taxes) or most interest expenses.

Business deductions. Self-employed individuals are entitled to the same deductions as employees, except that they may also deduct directly related ordinary and necessary business expenses. However, special rules may apply to limit business deductions if a taxpayer's business activity does not result in a profit for three out of five years. In this situation, the activity may be classified as a hobby, and the expenses are deductible only if they qualify as itemized deductions. Self-employed individuals may establish, and may deduct contributions paid to, their own retirement plans, subject to special limitations.

Beginning in 2018, taxpayers may be entitled to deduct up to 20% of their "qualified business income," when calculating taxable income. The 20% deduction is calculated under a complex set of rules. There are many limitations to this deduction, including whether the taxpayer operates a qualified business, and whether the individual's taxable income is below the overall limit of USD164,900 (USD329,800 for married filing jointly) for 2021. In general, qualified business income does not include income from performing services as an employee.

Rates. The applicable Guam tax rates, like the US rates, depend on whether an individual is married and, if married, whether the individual elects to file a joint return with his or her spouse. Certain individuals also qualify to file as head of household. The graduated tax rates listed below apply in Guam for 2021.

Over USD523,600	USD157,804.25 plus 37% of the excess over USD523,600

The brackets of taxable income are indexed annually for inflation.

The above rates are used to compute an individual's regular Guam income tax liability. In addition, higher income taxpayers (income over USD250,000 for married filing jointly and USD200,000 for single) are subject to a 3.8% tax on their "net investment income." The definition of "net investment income" is broad and essentially includes all income other than income from a trade or business. Compensation from personal services is generally excluded from this tax.

Guam also imposes alternative minimum tax (AMT) at a rate of 26% on alternative minimum taxable income, up to USD199,900, and at a rate of 28% on alternative minimum taxable income exceeding USD199,900 (long-term capital gains and qualified dividends are generally taxed at lower rates of 15% or 20%; see Capital gains and losses and Dividends). The primary purpose of AMT is to prevent individuals with substantial income from using preferential tax deductions (such as accelerated depreciation), exclusions (such as certain tax-exempt income) and credits to substantially reduce or to eliminate their tax liability. It is an alternative tax because, after an individual computes both the regular tax and AMT liabilities, the greater of the two amounts constitutes the final liability.

Nonresidents are taxed on income effectively connected with a Guam trade or business after related deductions at the graduated rates of tax set forth above. Unmarried nonresident aliens are taxed under the rates for single individuals. Married nonresidents whose spouses are also nonresidents are generally taxed under the rates for married persons filing separately.

Credits. Tax credits directly reduce income tax liability rather than taxable income and therefore provide a dollar-for-dollar benefit. Most credits are limited, depending on the taxpayer's income level. Credits include a maximum USD14,440 credit for qualified adoption expenses, a USD3,000 child tax credit for dependents under 6 years of age (and who have a social security number), a USD3,600 child tax credit for dependents between the ages of 6 and 17 years of age, a USD500 credit for certain other dependents, and two alternative higher education credits, with maximums of USD2,000 and USD2,500.

Relief for losses. In general, passive losses, including those generated from limited-partnership investments or rental real estate, may be offset only against income generated from passive activities.

Limited relief may be available for real estate rental losses. For example, an individual who actively participates in rental activity may use up to USD25,000 of losses to offset other types of income. The USD25,000 offset is phased out for taxpayers with adjusted gross income of between USD100,000 and USD150,000, and special rules apply to married individuals filing separate tax returns.

Disallowed losses may be carried forward indefinitely and used to offset net passive income in future years. Any remaining loss may be used in full when a taxpayer sells the investment in a transaction that is recognized for tax purposes.

B. Estate and gift taxes

Guam does not impose estate or gift tax. Non-US citizens and US citizens who obtained their citizenship by birth or naturalization in Guam and are residents of Guam at the time of death are subject to US estate and gift tax only on assets located in the United States, not on those located in Guam. US citizens other than those who received their citizenship by birth or naturalization in Guam are subject to US estate and gift taxes on all of their assets, including those located in Guam.

C. Social security

Social security tax. Guam is covered under the US social security system. Under the Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA), social security tax is imposed on wages or salaries received by individual employees to fund retirement benefits paid by the federal government. The following two taxes are imposed under FICA:

- Old-age, survivors and disability insurance (OASDI)
- Hospital insurance (Medicare)

For 2021, the OASDI tax is imposed on the first USD142,800 at a rate of 6.2% on the employee and 6.2% on the employer. Medicare tax is imposed, without limit, at a rate of 1.45% on the employee and 1.45% on the employer. In addition, higher income employees (but not their employers) pay an extra 0.9% Medicare tax. The income threshold varies by tax return filing status. Married couples filing jointly pay the extra tax on their combined wages in excess of USD250,000, single taxpayers and heads of households on wages exceeding USD200,000, and married taxpayers filing separately on wages exceeding USD125,000. Self-employment income (see below) is added to the amount of wages when determining the threshold.

FICA tax is imposed on compensation for services performed in Guam, regardless of the citizenship or residence of the employee or employer. Consequently, absent an exception, nonresident alien employees who perform services in Guam are subject to FICA tax. Certain categories of individuals are exempt from FICA tax, including foreign government employees, exchange visitors in Guam under J visas, foreign students holding F, M or Q visas, and individuals covered under social security totalization agreements between the United States and other countries. These agreements allow qualifying individuals to continue paying into the social security system of their home countries, usually for a period of five years.

A Guam or foreign employer is responsible for withholding social security taxes from compensation paid to nonresident alien employees.

Self-employment tax. Self-employment tax is imposed under the Self-Employment Contributions Act (SECA) on self-employment income, net of business expenses, that is derived by US citizens and Guam residents. The following two taxes are imposed under SECA:

- OASDI
- Hospital insurance (Medicare)

For 2021, the OASDI tax is imposed on the first USD142,800 of the net earnings of a self-employed individual at a rate of 12.4%. Medicare tax is imposed, without limit, at a rate of 2.9%. In addition, higher income individuals pay an extra 0.9% Medicare tax. The income threshold varies by tax return filing status. Married couples filing jointly pay the extra tax on their combined self-employment income in excess of USD250,000, single taxpayers and heads of households on self-employment income exceeding USD200,000, and married taxpayers filing separately on self-employment income exceeding USD125,000. Wage income (see above) is added to the amount of self-employment income when determining the threshold.

Self-employed individuals must pay the entire tax (unlike an employee who pays half the tax while the employer pays the other half of the tax) but may deduct 50% (not including the extra 0.9% Medicare tax) as a trade or business expense on their federal income tax return. No tax is payable if net earnings for the year are less than USD400. If a taxpayer has both wages subject to FICA tax and income subject to SECA tax, the wage base subject to FICA tax is used to reduce the income base subject to SECA tax. SECA tax is computed on the individual's US income tax return (Form 1040-SS). Nonresident aliens are not subject to SECA tax unless they are required to pay the tax under a totalization agreement (see Social security tax).

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Guam income tax returns are filed under the same rules, and using the same forms, applicable in the United States, but they are filed with the government of Guam instead of with the US Internal Revenue Service. Residents of Guam must report their US income on their Guam return, and residents of the United States must report their Guam income on their US return. Income taxes withheld on Guam wages offset Guam income reported on a US return, and vice versa. Estimated tax payments are filed with Guam or the United States, depending on where a taxpayer resides on the date the payment is due. Self-employment taxes are paid to the US Internal Revenue Service.

If a nonresident alien is not engaged in a Guam trade or business and if all of the tax owed on Guam-source income is withheld, the nonresident alien is not required to file a tax return.

Nonresidents must file tax returns if they are engaged in a trade or business in Guam, even if they report no income from the business. Individuals not engaged in a Guam trade or business must file returns if they have any Guam-source income on which all of the tax due is not withheld. Nonresident employees subject to Guam income tax withholding must file tax returns by 15 April. Other nonresidents must file returns by 15 June.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Foreign tax credits offset taxes on Guam income in the same manner as in the United States. Under the Guam Investment Equity Act, Guam may apply the Guam withholding tax at the applicable US income tax treaty rates.

F. Non-immigrant and immigrant visas

The immigration procedures in Guam are the same as those for the United States. For details, see the chapter on the United States.

G. Marital property regime

Guam is a community property jurisdiction. Any person who establishes residency or domicile in Guam is subject to Guam's community property laws. For these purposes, continuous physical presence in Guam for at least 90 days normally gives rise to a conclusive presumption of residence in Guam. During divorce proceedings, the community property laws apply to all property acquired during the marriage, whether located within or outside Guam.

Under Guam law, community property is any property acquired by either spouse during the marriage that is not separate property. Separate property is property acquired by either spouse before the marriage and property designated as separate property in a written agreement between the spouses. Income derived from separate property is separate property.

Guam's community property laws apply only to married couples. The laws of Guam do not prescribe any particular form for the ceremony of marriage.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident and nonresident individuals are taxed on Guatemalan-source income only. Individuals are considered residents for tax purposes if they meet any of the following conditions:
- They spend more than 183 days in a calendar year in Guatemala, even if not on a continuous basis.
- The center of their economic interests is located in Guatemala.
- They are Guatemalan diplomats with residence abroad.
- They are Guatemalan individuals with residence abroad for less than 183 days in a calendar year as a result of employment by a private entity.
- They are foreign diplomats on assignment to Guatemala, unless a reciprocity condition with their country of origin exists.

Income subject to tax. Under the Income Tax Law, income derived from activities rendered or services used within Guatemala qualifies as Guatemalan-source income and must be classified and taxed in one of the following categories:
- Employment income
- Income from a trade or business engaged in for profit (self-employment income)
- Investment income

The taxation of the various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable income includes wages and all types of remuneration or payments, regardless of the denomination, received in cash by employed resident individuals.

Self-employment and business income. Both resident and nonresident individuals are subject to tax on Guatemalan-source self-employment and business income derived from ordinary or occasional trade or business. Individuals who earn such income may choose to be taxed under one of the following tax regimes:
- Regime on Profits from Business Activities, which applies on a net income basis (authorized expenses are deductible)
- Optional Simplified Regime on Revenue from Business Activities, which applies on a gross income basis (no deductions are allowed)

Under the Regime on Profits from Business Activities, individuals may deduct expenses incurred to generate taxable income or to preserve the source of such income, except for certain specified cases in which the law has imposed limits on deductibility. Net taxable income is subject to tax at a rate of 25%. In addition, a 1% Solidarity Tax applies.

Alternatively, individuals may elect to be taxed under the Optional Simplified Regime on Revenue from Business Activities. Under this regime, taxpayers are subject to income tax on taxable income, which equals gross income less exempt income. No deductions are allowed. The final withholding tax rate is 5% for the first GTQ30,000 (approximately USD3,896) of monthly taxable income and 7% for the amount exceeding GTQ30,000.

Investment income. Dividends paid are subject to a tax rate of 5%, regardless of the beneficiary's country of residence.

Interest paid to resident and nonresident individuals is subject to a final 10% withholding tax. However, withholding tax is not imposed on the following interest payments:
- Interest paid by local taxpayers to local banks or representative offices authorized to operate in Guatemala by the Guatemalan Law on Banks and Financial Groups.
- Interest paid by local taxpayers to non-domiciled first-order banks. This exemption is based on criteria set by the tax authorities. Consequently, a private letter ruling should be obtained to secure the position of the borrower.

Royalties paid to nonresident individuals are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 15%.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees paid to nonresident individuals are subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 15%. Resident individuals must include directors' fees, which are considered self-employment income, in their taxable income.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains are taxed at a rate of 10%, regardless of the regime elected by the individual taxpayer. They include gains from the sale of the following:
- Movable assets
- Immovable assets
- Lottery winnings

The following types of income are subject to capital gains tax if they are generated from Guatemalan sources:
- Royalties paid to Guatemalan residents
- Leasing and subleasing income (when not part of the taxpayer's ordinary trade or business)

- Gains from the transfer of shares issued by resident entities
- Gains from the transfer of shares issued by foreign entities that own immovable property located in Guatemala
- Gains derived from the transfer of movable or immovable assets
- Income from lotteries, raffles and similar earnings

Deductions

Personal expenses. Deductible personal expenses consist of the following items:

- Personal deduction of GTQ48,000 (approximately USD6,234), without the need for documentation
- Social security contributions
- Life insurance premiums
- Exempt income (special bonus and Christmas bonus)
- Charitable contributions (maximum annual deduction of 5% of net income)
- A maximum of GTQ12,000 (approximately USD1,558) of value-added tax (VAT) paid during the tax year Rates. Income tax is levied on employment income received by resident individuals at the rates set forth in the following table.

Annual taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding GTQ	Not exceeding GTQ	amount GTQ	excess %
0	300,000	0	5
300,000	—	15,000	7

The average exchange rate as of December 2020 was GTQ7.79382 = USD1.

Nonresident individuals are subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 15% on salaries, fees, commissions and allowances. To apply the 15% withholding tax rate to salaries paid to nonresident individuals, the tax authorities require that a labor relationship be documented through a written contract between the foreign individual and the Guatemalan employer. For fees received for professional services rendered by a nonresident individual in a non-dependent relationship, a 15% withholding tax applies.

Nonresident individuals with income subject to tax at a fixed withholding rate are not subject to further taxation.

Foreign individuals who render local services for more than 183 days in Guatemala are considered residents for tax purposes and are required to register with the tax authorities as self-employed persons and pay taxes in Guatemala under the Regime on Profits from Business Activities or the Optional Simplified Regime on Revenue from Business Activities (see Self-employment and business income). In addition, VAT at a rate of 12% applies to the services rendered in Guatemala.

Relief for losses. Self-employed individuals may not carry forward losses to offset future income from self-employment.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

A separate tax law governs inherited property and gifts resulting from death. The tax rates range from 0% to 7% for bequests or gifts resulting from death to the spouse, ascendants and descendants. For relatives within the second, third and fourth degree of consanguinity, the applicable rates range from 3% to 12%. Rates from 9% to 25% apply to relatives and unrelated parties. A VAT rate of 12% applies to inter vivos gifts.

C. Social security

Social security contributions are levied on salaries, which includes wages and all types of remuneration or payments, regardless of the denomination. The contribution rates are 12.67% for employer contributions and 4.83% for employee contributions. No limits are imposed on the amount of earnings subject to social security contributions.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Employers are responsible for withholding income tax and social security contributions from the employee's salary on a monthly basis. Consequently, an annual income tax return is not required for employed individuals if all compensation is subject to withholding at source through the local payroll. Self-employed individuals engaged in either commercial or noncommercial activities must issue invoices, and monthly or quarterly income tax reporting is required depending on the tax regime elected by the individual. In additional, self-employed individuals must pay VAT and file monthly VAT returns.

The ordinary tax year runs from 1 January to 31 December. Returns must be filed, and any tax liabilities due must be paid within three months after the end of the tax year (31 March). Interest and penalty charges are imposed on late payments.

Nonresident individuals with income subject to tax at a fixed withholding rate are not subject to further taxation and are not required to file an annual income tax return.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Guatemala has signed a tax treaty with Mexico, but Congress has not yet approved the treaty. As a result, the treaty is not yet in effect.

F. Temporary visas

Depending on their country of citizenship, individuals may be required to apply for and obtain an entry visa before traveling to Guatemala. A Guatemalan consulate overseas grants the visa. Because the rules indicating the countries of citizenship of individuals who are required to obtain an entry visa before entering Guatemala and requirements for obtaining a visa often vary, it is necessary to check the entry visa requirements on a case-by-case basis.

G. Work visas (and/or permits)

Before obtaining a work permit in Guatemala, an applicant must request a temporary residence permit (see Section H). An application for a work permit is filed by the employer with the General Direction of Employment of the Labor Ministry and must include the following documents:

- A certified copy of the employee's passport (all pages including the blank ones)

- Proof that a temporary residence permit has been applied for or granted
- A certified copy of the applicant's appointment, registered with the corresponding authorities
- A sworn statement given by the employer that assumes full responsibility for the employee's conduct
- Accounting certification stating the number of Guatemalan and foreign employees employed by the entity
- A certified copy of the designation of the foreigner by the employer to execute the job in Guatemala
- A certified copy of the company's tax identification
- A certified copy of the nomination of the legal representative of the company
- A certified copy of the identification of the legal representative of the company
- A certified copy of the business license of the company issued by the Registry of General Commercial Affairs
- A certified copy of the incorporation license of the company issued by the Registry of General Commercial Affairs
- A certified copy of the form for the temporary residence filing application
- For an employee who comes from a non-Spanish-speaking country, a sworn statement indicating that he or she is fluent in Spanish

For each work permit requested, the employer must pay a fee to the Guatemalan Learning and Training Department. This payment serves as evidence of the employer's commitment to the training policies for Guatemalan employees.

The work permit is valid for renewable periods of one year. A request for an extension must be filed 15 days before the expiration of the period for which the work permit is issued.

H. Residence visas (and/or permits)

The government of Guatemala may grant residencies to nationals of other countries who are interested in residing at Guatemala as foreign workers, renters, retirees or relatives of nationals. An application for a temporary residence permit for a foreign individual in Guatemala must be submitted to and processed by the immigration authorities in Guatemala. It must include the following items:

- A form filled out with the personal data of the applicant and the members of the applicant's family who wish to reside in Guatemala
- A recent photograph
- Certified copy of the passport
- Certification stating the validity of the passport and term (in Spanish or in the original language translated into Spanish by a Guatemalan authorized translator) issued by the embassy or consulate in the applicant's country or a birth certificate for persons from countries with which Guatemala does not have diplomatic relations
- Proof stating that the applicant does not have a criminal record in the country or countries where he or she has lived during the last five years (or, for countries that do not issue these certificates, a certificate stating the country's refusal)

- Proof of a Guatemalan guarantor, whether an individual or an entity (see next paragraph)

If the guarantor for an applicant is a legal entity, the following documents are required:

- Financial statements
- Legalized copy of the incorporation license
- Legalized copy of the legal representative's personal identification document
- Legalized copy of the power of attorney granted to the legal representative
- Offer of employment letter

Application requirements may vary from case to case. Consequently, the requirements need to be checked in advance.

When the temporary residence permit is granted, the applicant's passport is sealed. A temporary residence permit is valid for up to two years and may be renewed for equal periods. In addition, after a temporary residence permit is granted to an individual, he or she can request permanent residence, which, if granted, guarantees the domicile of the person in the country.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Guatemalan law does not automatically grant work authorizations to family members of foreign workers. Family members wanting to work in Guatemala must apply independently for work authorizations.

Marital property regime. The following marital property regimes apply under the Guatemalan Civil Code:

- Absolute community: All assets brought into the marriage by the spouses or assets acquired during the marriage belong to the conjugal estate and are divided in half in the event of a divorce.
- Absolute separation: Each spouse keeps the ownership, management and income of his or her own assets. Each spouse owns the salaries, wages, emoluments and profits obtained by his or her own personal services.
- Community property: The husband and wife each keep the ownership of assets they had before the marriage and certain assets acquired during the marriage. In the event of a divorce, they each own half of the following assets:
  - — The profits of the assets owned by each of the spouses, from which the production, repair, conservation expenses and tax and municipal burden of the corresponding assets are deducted.
  - — Assets purchased with such profits, even if the acquisition is made in the name of only one of the spouses.
  - — Assets acquired by each one of the spouses through his or her work, employment, profession or industry.

A marital property regime that was adopted outside Guatemala is valid in Guatemala if such regime is expressly provided by the Guatemalan Civil Code (absolute community, absolute separation and community property) and if the regime does not infringe on the public order.

Forced heirship. If an individual dies without leaving a will, the beneficiaries of the individual's assets and patrimony according to the law are in the following order:
- First: Descendants and spouse
- Second: Ascendants and spouse
- Third: Any other family members up to the fourth degree of relationship

The decedent's estate must respect the maintenance and monetary obligations of the deceased.

Driver's permits. To obtain a driver's permit in Guatemala, a foreign person must submit the following documents:
- Request addressed to the Chief of the Department of Transit indicating a phone number and address to receive correspondence.
- Original and certified copy of a valid driver's license from the applicant's country.
- Sworn translation of the driver's license if the document is not in Spanish.
- Two identity-card-size photographs.
- Original and legalized copy of the passport.
- Migratory certification of the local status of the foreign person.
- Eye test by an authorized ophthalmologist or optometrist.
- Proof of a Guatemalan guarantor certified by a notary public (affidavit). The guarantor must prove that he or she is a Guatemalan national and that he or she has sufficient financial means to pay for any potential damages caused by the nonresident.
- Legalized copy of the guarantor's personal identification document.
- Payment for the driver's permit.
- Bank statement of the guarantor for the last three months that shows a monthly balance of at least USD700.

Depending on the circumstances, the Transit Department may request technical and practical driving tests.

A driver's license is granted for a period of one year to four years and may be extended on request. After a temporary residence permit is requested, the foreigner must obtain a local driver's license.

The tax sections in this chapter cover Guernsey, including the island of Alderney, but do not cover the island of Sark, which operates its own tax system.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals who are solely resident or principally resident in Guernsey are subject to Guernsey income tax on worldwide income. Individuals who are resident but not principally or solely resident in Guernsey may instead choose to pay the standard charge (see Standard charge).

Individuals are considered resident in Guernsey in any fiscal year, which is the calendar year, if they satisfy either of the following conditions:
- They spend 91 days or more in Guernsey in that year.
- They spend 35 days or more in Guernsey in that year and have spent 365 days or more in Guernsey in the preceding four years.

Individuals are treated as solely resident if, in a fiscal year, they are resident in Guernsey and not resident elsewhere. Individuals are considered resident elsewhere if they spend 91 or more days in that place.

Individuals are considered principally resident in Guernsey if any of the following conditions are satisfied:
- In a fiscal year, they spend 182 days or more in Guernsey.
- In a fiscal year, they spend 91 days or more in Guernsey, and during the four preceding years they spent 730 days or more in Guernsey.
- They take up permanent residence in Guernsey.

Married persons and partners in civil partnerships are taxed jointly on all types of income. Married persons and civil partners may elect to be assessed separately, but separate assessment apportions the joint income tax liability according to the income of each spouse and does not generally change the total overall tax liability of married persons and civil partners.

A move toward independent taxation has begun. Each individual's entitlement to allowances is considered separately, but joint assessment currently remains. Further developments are expected, with full separate assessment currently expected from 1 January 2023.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Taxable employment income includes salaries, wages, bonuses, gratuities, benefits in kind, directors' fees and pensions.

Wages, pensions and salaries paid by Guernsey-resident companies to nonresident employees whose duties are carried on outside Guernsey are exempt from Guernsey income tax.

Benefits in kind are taxed as part of payroll and are subject to social security contributions and Employees Tax Instalment (ETI) payroll tax deductions (see Section D).

The tax-exempt limit for redundancy payments is GBP30,000. A payment instead of notice is not considered to be a termination payment and is fully taxable. The excess over the GBP30,000 exemption is subject to ETI scheme deductions (see Section D).

Benefits in kind. Benefits in kind paid to employees are assessed to income tax and social security, subject to a GBP450 annual exemption. The exemption does not apply to accommodation, share options or motor car benefits, which are fully taxed.

Various benefits are also exempt from tax, such as medical insurance, if the scheme is open to all employees.

All benefits paid for through "salary sacrifice" are chargeable to tax, regardless of whether the benefit would have been exempt.

Any discount on the market value at the grant of an employer-provided stock option is taxable in full in the year of the grant. If it is demonstrated that the option will never be exercised (for example, if the employee waives the option or the option lapses), the tax paid in the year of grant is refunded.

Self-employment and business income. All self-employed persons carrying on a trade, business or profession in Guernsey or partly in Guernsey are subject to income tax on their taxable income.

Taxable income consists of accounting profits, subject to certain adjustments.

Investment income. Dividends, interest, royalties and income from the rental of real property are included in taxable income and taxed at a rate of 20%. The first GBP50 of bank or savings interest for an individual is exempt from Guernsey income tax (doubled for married couples to the extent that each spouse receives interest).

A credit may be available with respect to tax paid at source in another jurisdiction.

Interest payable by Guernsey banks to nonresidents is exempt from Guernsey income tax.

Distributions from Guernsey companies. Guernsey-resident individuals are taxable at a rate of 20% on all distributions from Guernsey companies. A credit is given for tax suffered or withheld by the distributing company.

The standard tax rate for Guernsey companies is 0%. A higher rate of 20% applies to Guernsey property income, regulated utilities, the importation and/or supply of hydrocarbon oil or gas in Guernsey and large retail business carried on in Guernsey (if the retail company has a taxable profit of more than GBP500,000), income from the cultivation and/or use of the cannabis plant, and income from the business of the prescribed production or prescribed use of controlled drugs. An intermediate rate of 10% applies to income from banking business, domestic insurance business, fiduciary business, insurance intermediary business, insurance manager business, fund administration business, custody services provided by banks, investment management services provided to individual clients, income from the operation of an investment exchange, regulatory compliance business and income from the operation of an aircraft registry.

Deemed distributions. The deemed distribution provisions were repealed, effective from 1 January 2013. However, the use of "pooled" income sources continues.

Distributions to shareholders must initially be made from untaxed pools, before income that has been taxed. Capital gains are not taxed in Guernsey.

Loans from Guernsey companies to Guernsey-resident shareholders are taxable if the loan is made when the company has pooled profits that have suffered tax at a rate of less than 20%. They are taxable on the grossed-up amount of the loan when the loan is made.

Companies incorporated outside Guernsey are treated as resident in Guernsey if their ultimate shareholder control is in Guernsey (tracing through any intermediary structures) or if they are centrally managed and controlled in Guernsey. A company may be treated as nonresident if it is managed and controlled elsewhere and certain criteria are met.

Nonresident shareholders are not taxable on company distributions.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. Guernsey operates a system of allowances and deductions.

For 2022, the personal allowance is GBP12,175 (2021: GBP11,875).

There are restrictions on the availability of allowances, mortgage interest relief and pension deductions for higher earners. Allowances and deductions are withdrawn at a rate of GBP1 for every GBP5 of assessable income above GBP100,000. The first GBP1,000 of pension deductions is not withdrawn.

Interest paid on a mortgage on a Guernsey principal residence is deductible in the calculation of the annual tax liability, limited to the interest charged on the first GBP400,000 of the mortgage.

This is subject to an interest cap per borrower of GBP3,500 for 2022 (2021: GBP5,000) (subject to any restriction for higher earners). This deduction is being phased out over time.

Deductible business expenses. To be deductible, expenses must be incurred wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the business. Depreciation is not deductible, but capital allowances may be claimed on the cost of plant and machinery. The rate of capital allowances is generally 20% of the reducing balance. Allowances are also granted for buildings.

Relief for losses. Business losses may be carried forward indefinitely for offset against income taxable at the same rate. Terminal losses (balancing allowances) on cessation of business may be carried back two years. No relief is provided for capital losses because no capital gains tax is charged.

Rates. Income is taxable at a flat rate of 20% after deduction of personal allowances and other deductions.

Tax cap. The tax payable on a Guernsey-resident individual's income is restricted to an upper limit, or cap. Individuals may elect either of the following options for the payment of tax:
- They may pay tax on non-Guernsey-source income restricted to GBP130,000, plus tax on Guernsey-source income (excluding Guernsey bank interest).
- They may pay GBP260,000 tax on worldwide income, including Guernsey-source income.

A lower cap of GBP50,000 applies with respect to Alderney. This cap supersedes both caps mentioned in the first and second bullets above.

A lower cap of GBP50,000 also applies for up to four years to new residents of Guernsey purchasing open-market property (see Section H) who have paid a minimum of GBP50,000 in document duty. Certain conditions apply in order to claim the cap.

Income derived from Guernsey land and property is excluded from the tax caps.

Effective from 1 January 2020, a trivial amount of income derived from a Guernsey pension fund or annuity scheme and lump-sum payments above the tax-free limit are excluded from the individual tax cap.

Currently, if married persons or civil partners are taxed jointly, they are classified as one taxpayer. Consequently, only one cap applies per married couple or civil partnership. However, once independent taxation is fully introduced (currently expected to be from 1 January 2023), the cap will be per person, except for the open market tax cap and the Alderney cap, which are expected to be grandfathered for a period of time for those already meeting the criteria.

Standard charge. The standard charge is GBP40,000. It applies to individuals who are resident but not solely or principally resident in Guernsey (see Who is liable). Individuals must either declare and pay tax on their worldwide income or elect to pay the standard charge.

After individuals pay the charge, they can make tax-free remittances to Guernsey. Guernsey-source income remains taxable on the individual, but the liability on the first GBP200,000 is deemed as being met by the standard charge payment. Individuals paying the standard charge are not entitled to claim any Guernsey personal allowances or reliefs. Guernsey-source bank interest is deemed to be a non-Guernsey source of income.

Like the tax cap, taxpayer currently refers generally to a married couple or civil partnership. Consequently, only one charge is payable by both spouses or civil partners jointly. This will change to a per person cap once independent taxation is fully introduced (currently expected to be from 1 January 2023).

B. Other taxes

Guernsey does not impose capital gains tax or inheritance tax. No other significant taxes are levied on individuals in Guernsey.

C. Social security

Contributions. Guernsey has a compulsory social security scheme. Three classes of social security exist.

Employed. Employers must make contributions based on taxable earnings at a rate of 6.7% for 2022 (2021: 6.6%) and employees under pension age (approximately 65 years old) make contributions at a rate of 6.8% for 2022 (2021: 6.6%). Employer and employee contributions are subject to a monthly earnings limit of GBP13,117 for 2022 (2021: GBP12,805). The maximum annual contribution is GBP10,546 for 2022 (2021: GBP10,141) for employers and GBP10,703 (2021: GBP10,141) for employees.

Self-employed. Self-employed individuals under pension age must pay contributions based on their self-employment income level, subject to a 2022 annual upper earnings limit of GBP157,404. The rate is 11.3%.

Non-employed. All insured persons who are not employed or self-employed are in the non-employed class, as well as all persons over pension age, even if they are employed or self-employed.

The rate for non-employed contributions for 2022 is 10.7% of income declared on the tax return, subject to a non-employed allowance of GBP8,904. Individuals over pension age instead pay the health insurance contribution rate of 3.5% based on their taxable income, less the non-employed allowance. The 2022 upper earnings limit of GBP157,404 applies.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Guernsey has entered into totalization agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Austria
Barbados
Bermuda
Canada
Chile
Cyprus
France
Ireland
Isle of Man
Italy
Jamaica
Japan
Jersey
Korea (South)
Malta
Netherlands
New Zealand
Portugal
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
United Kingdom
United States

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

All income is assessed on a current-year basis. The tax year runs from 1 January to 31 December.

Income tax is levied by assessment based on the taxpayer's tax return. Tax is deducted from earned income of employed individuals during the year through the ETI scheme. Employed individuals make payments on account during the year through the ETI scheme and a final balancing payment or repayment may be due following the assessment.

All other taxpayers make two payments on account based on an estimated assessment issued generally around May of each year. The two equal tax installments are due on 30 June and 31 December of the tax year. A balancing payment or repayment is due following the issuance of a final assessment. From 2023, quarterly payments will be introduced.

In general, a Guernsey resident making a payment of Guernsey income (excluding bank interest) to a person resident outside Guernsey is regarded as the agent of the nonresident. The agent may be assessed instead of the nonresident and, consequently, the agent may withhold income tax at a rate of 20% from the payment and remit it to the tax authorities. However, this rule does not apply if the recipient is resident in Jersey or the United Kingdom, receives the payment as business income and does not have a permanent establishment in Guernsey.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Unilateral relief is available to prevent double tax being charged on income from a territory where there is no tax treaty in force.

Guernsey has entered into full or partial double tax treaties with several jurisdictions.

It has entered into full double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Cyprus
Estonia
Hong Kong SAR
Isle of Man
Jersey
Liechtenstein
Luxembourg
Malta
Mauritius
Monaco
Qatar
Seychelles
Singapore
United Kingdom

It has entered into partial double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Australia
Denmark
Faroe Islands
Finland
Greenland
Iceland
Ireland
Japan
New Zealand
Norway
Poland
Sweden

Double tax treaty negotiations have been completed with Bahrain, Gibraltar and the United Arab Emirates. Negotiations with Lebanon are expected to commence in 2022. Discussions on a possible double tax treaty with Argentina are at an early stage.

Guernsey has signed tax information exchange agreements (TIEAs) with 61 jurisdictions, including the United Kingdom and the United States. The TIEAs relate to the exchange of tax information. Under the TIEAs, each jurisdiction may request information from the other, principally to assess and enforce collection of tax.

In June 2017, Guernsey signed the Base Erosion and Profits Shifting (BEPS) Multilateral Instrument, which will result in the revision of the majority of Guernsey's double tax agreements so that they comply with the BEPS minimum standards.

F. Entry visas

An individual may require a visa to travel to and/or work in Guernsey, based on their nationality and length of stay in Guernsey.

Guernsey is part of the Common Travel Area, and the visa requirements are broadly in line with UK visa requirements, but Guernsey has not adopted the UK points-based system. Please refer to the UK chapter in this guide for further information on when a visa is required.

The categories of visas include the following:
- Leave to enter for work permit employment
- Leave to enter as a person intending to establish a business
- Leave to enter as an investor

G. Work permit — immigration

The immigration rules require certain individuals to be granted a work permit in order to work in Guernsey.

However, permit-free workers (who do not require a work permit) include the following:
- British citizens
- Nationals of member states of the European Economic Area (EEA) and Switzerland who have been granted settled or pre-settled status
- Other nationals who have permanent settlement (for example, indefinite leave to remain in the Common Travel Area)

Guernsey has strict rules on who can live and work in Guernsey. In addition to the immigration requirements, a system of permits and certificates controls who can live and work in Guernsey (see Section H).

H. Employment permits and residence certificates or permits

The Population Management Law was introduced on 3 April 2017 and replaced the Housing Control and Right to Work Laws. Individuals working in Guernsey or anyone over the age of 16 need to hold a certificate or permit showing that they have permission to live and work there.

Transitional arrangements apply to those who were already in Guernsey under the previous housing control system when the new rules came into force.

Employment permits (previously referred to as a "right to work") are granted to individuals who possess essential skills and experience that cannot be found locally.

Most employment permits enable the holder to live and work in Guernsey for a fixed period of time but some people, because of their skills, are invited to live in Guernsey long enough for them and their immediate family to become permanent residents.

Employment permits are conditional on the holder undertaking a specific full-time job for a specific employer. If this condition is broken, the permit becomes invalid. The employer makes the application for an employment permit.

Housing is restricted in Guernsey. Housing is divided into what is known as local market (LM) and open market (OM). Approximately 25,500 dwellings are in the LM and 1,600 are in the OM.

In general, anyone may occupy an OM dwelling (by applying for the relevant residence certificate) but the price of an OM dwelling is usually higher than that of a comparable LM dwelling.

Occupation of LM property (regardless of whether owned or rented) is generally restricted to locals and to persons granted employment permits. The type of LM accommodation available to holders of employment permits depends on the duration of the permit.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. If an individual has been granted a medium-term or long-term employment permit, family members may live with them in LM accommodation. Family members generally have a right to work in Guernsey but they need to apply for the applicable family member residence permit. Family members of holders of short-term employment permits cannot live in LM accommodation with the permit holder.

Immediate or extended family members can live in an OM accommodation by applying for the relevant family member residence permit.

Driver's permits. New residents of Guernsey may drive with an overseas license for a maximum duration of one year. Thereafter, they need to apply for a Guernsey license. In many cases, an overseas license can be exchanged for a Guernsey license. This reciprocity applies to Isle of Man, Jersey, European Union countries and EEA countries, as well as certain other jurisdictions including Australia, Canada, the Hong Kong SAR, Japan, New Zealand, South Africa and Switzerland.

In all other circumstances, to obtain a Guernsey driver's license, an applicant must take a practical test and a theoretical exam based on the highway codes.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals resident in Guinea are subject to tax on worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on Guinea-source income only.

Individuals are considered resident if they meet either of the following conditions:
- They maintain a home in Guinea or stay there for more than six months in a year.
- They are engaged in employment or self-employment activities in Guinea, unless they prove that these activities are incidental to activities performed abroad.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Taxable income generally consists of all remuneration received, including, salaries, treatments, indemnities, allowances, premiums and bonuses paid, benefits in kind and benefits in cash. However, the following indemnities, allowances, bonuses or premiums are not taxable:
- Housing
- Transportation
- Meals or food
- Cost of living
- Chalk

Self-employment and business income. In general, self-employed residents are subject to general income tax on their worldwide income from professional and commercial activities. Self-employed nonresidents are subject to general income tax on income derived from activities performed in Guinea.

Taxable income consists of total net income from all categories.

Taxable income from commercial activities includes all receipts, advances, interest and gains directly related to the activities. Generally, taxable income is calculated on an accrual basis; however, taxpayers may elect to calculate taxable income using a deemed-profits system if gross revenue does not exceed a certain amount.

Taxable income from professional activities is determined on a cash basis, meaning the difference between receipts and expenses paid during the calendar year, including gains or losses from the sale of professional assets.

A loss incurred in one category of income may not offset income from other categories. However, the loss may be carried forward for three years to offset income in the same category.

Investment income. Dividends and interest income from investments in Guinea are subject to a withholding tax, which constitutes a prepayment of the general income tax (see Rates). Under certain conditions, this withholding tax is a final tax. The withholding tax rate for dividends is 10%. The withholding tax rate for interest is 10%.

Directors' fees are treated as investment income and are subject to general income tax at a rate of 10%.

If the payer is a resident of Guinea and if the nonresident recipient does not have a business establishment in Guinea, the payer must withhold the final 15% general income tax on amounts paid to nonresidents for copyrights and for the use of intangible assets. The withholding tax rate on services fees paid to nonresident entities or individuals is 15%.

Capital gains. Gains derived from the transfer of shares are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 10%.

Capital gains related to self-employment activities generally are included with other self-employment income and taxed as described in Self-employment and business income and Rates. However, capital gains from sales of fixed assets may be exempt from tax if reinvested.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. The following expenses are deductible:
- Social security contributions
- Amounts withheld by an employer for a legal pension plan

Personal deductions and allowances. No personal deductions or allowances apply if an employee receives only employment income and does not elect joint taxation of the combined income of all household members. If joint taxation of the household is elected, individuals may take a personal deduction of GNF30,000 for each member of the household, up to a maximum of six persons.

Business deductions. The following expenses are deductible for commercial, professional and agricultural activities:
- Expenses necessary to carry on the activities, including personnel and rental expenses
- Depreciation
- Provisions for losses and expenses if the accrual method of accounting is used

Rates

Employment income tax. The following table presents the progressive tax rates on employment income.

Taxable income		Tax
Exceeding GNF	Not exceeding GNF	rate %
0	1,000,000	0
1,000,000	5,000,000	5
5,000,000	10,000,000	10
10,000,000	20,000,000	15
20,000,000	—	20

Tax withheld by an employer during the year is a final tax if an employee receives employment income only. However, if an employee receives other types of income, the withholding is a prepayment toward the general income tax (see General income tax).

General income tax. General income tax is levied on taxable income. A withholding tax is levied separately on taxable income from commercial, professional and agricultural activities. The applicable rates vary from 25% to 35% for commercial activities (depends on the sector of activities concerned), 25% for professional activities and 15% for agricultural activities. This withholding tax is a final, fixed rate general income tax for self-employed persons who do not elect the taxation of all household members and who have only one source of income that is taxed under a deemed-profits system. For self-employed persons with more than one source of income or for self-employed persons who are taxed on actual profits rather than deemed profits, the withholding tax is a prepayment that offsets the general income tax.

General income tax is levied at the following progressive rates.

Taxable income		Tax
Exceeding GNF	Not exceeding GNF	rate %
0	100,000	0
100,000	1,000,000	10
1,000,000	1,500,000	15
1,500,000	3,000,000	20
3,000,000	6,000,000	25
6,000,000	10,000,000	30
10,000,000	20,000,000	35
20,000,000	—	40

Nonresidents. If a payer is a resident of Guinea and if the nonresident recipient does not have a business establishment in Guinea, the payer must withhold the final 15% general income tax on the following gross amounts:
• Amounts paid for independent professional services
• Amounts paid to inventors
• Amounts paid for services, regardless of their nature, materially rendered in Guinea

The withholding tax rate on services fees paid to nonresident entities and nonresident individuals is 15%.

Nonresidents who perform incidental activities for employers established in Guinea are subject to withholding on their wages related to Guinean activities at the rates that apply to employment income. This withholding tax constitutes only a prepayment of tax. Nonresident employees receiving wages from non-established employers for incidental Guinean activities are subject to general income tax instead of withholding.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

Inheritances and gifts are subject to tax at progressive rates ranging from 1% to 3%, depending on the net value of the inheritance or the gift and on the beneficiary's relationship to the deceased or donor.

C. Social security

The following social security contributions are required.

	Rate (%)
Paid by employers
Family allowances	6
Industrial accidents	4
Medical expenses and disability	4
Old age pensions and death benefits	4
Paid by employees
Medical expenses and disability	2.5
Old age pensions and death benefits	2.5

Contributions are levied on total remuneration paid, up to a monthly ceiling of GNF2,500,000. Employees' contributions are withheld monthly by employers.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year for individuals is the calendar year.

General income tax returns must be filed by 30 April following the close of the tax year. A self-employed individual subject to general income tax must file an income tax return by 30 April.

General income tax computed is payable on receipt of a tax assessment.

E. Tax treaties

Guinea has entered into double tax treaties with France, Morocco, Tunisia and the United Arab Emirates.

F. Entry visas and permits

Foreign nationals, even those classified as residents, must obtain visas to enter Guinea. Visas may be obtained from Guinean consulates and embassies abroad.

Nationals of member countries of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS; the French translation is Communauté Économique des Etats de l'Afrique de l'Ouest or CEAO) and nationals from certain countries that have concluded special agreements with Guinea do not need visas to enter the country.

A short-term visa is issued for initial entry into Guinea and is valid for a period ranging from one day to a maximum of three months.

G. Work permits and self-employment

No visa authorizes an individual to work. A work permit authorized by the national employment and labor office (AGUIPE) must be obtained.

Nationals of member countries of the ECOWAS do not need an authorization to work in Guinea.

The request for an initial work permit is made by a letter from a prospective employer explaining the reasons why the applicant is being hired. It should be accompanied by four copies of the expatriate work contract, two identification photographs, hotel reservations or an invitation letter, and a return flight ticket.

When reviewing work and residence permit applications, the government of Guinea considers the benefit of an individual's presence in the country and his or her anticipated compliance with the laws and regulations of Guinea.

It is possible to change employers after the applicant receives a permit. However, if the employer changes, it should be reported to the AGUIPE.

Foreign nationals may establish businesses in Guinea. In addition, foreign companies may set up subsidiaries headed by foreign nationals.

H. Residence permits

Long-term residence permits are issued to foreign nationals intending to stay in Guinea for periods exceeding three months. These permits must be renewed annually. Permanent residence permits are not available in Guinea.

Residents themselves must take the necessary steps to obtain long-term residence permits and multiple-entry and exit visas.

Embassies or consulates abroad provide applicants with the documentation that must be filled out. An international vaccination certificate for yellow fever must be presented to the embassy or consulate abroad, or at the port of entry in Guinea. Reasons for refusal are indicated by the embassies.

The costs of short-term and long-term permits vary. The prices are published by the Ministry of Economy and Finance (MEF). Both types of permit must be renewed every year.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The spouse of a permit holder automatically receives a residence permit to live in Guinea. If the spouse wishes to work, he or she must apply for a work permit independently of the principal permit holder.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may not drive legally in Guinea using their home-country driver's licenses. However, they may drive legally with an international driver's license for the duration of the license. On the expiration of a foreign national's international driver's license, he or she has the following options:
- To renew the international driver's license
- To request a Guinean driving authorization
- To request a Guinean driver's license

To obtain a Guinean driver's license, individuals must take a written exam similar to the one given in France.

A. Income tax

Who is liable

Territoriality. Individuals who are ordinarily resident or domiciled in Guyana are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Individuals who are not ordinarily resident or domiciled in Guyana are taxable on income accruing in or derived from Guyana, including income from any employment exercised in Guyana, regardless of whether the income is received in Guyana.

In addition, earned income (including employment income) that arises outside Guyana or income that arises to a person not ordinarily resident or domiciled in Guyana is taxable only when it is received in Guyana.

Definition of resident. Individuals are considered resident in Guyana if they reside in Guyana for a period of more than 183 days in the tax year or if they reside or intend to permanently reside in Guyana. The concept of ordinary residence is understood as is applied under common law jurisprudence and examines various factors that determine the individual's habitual place of abode. Domicile is not defined under the Income Tax Act but generally refers to the jurisdiction that the individual regards as his or her permanent home.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable income from employment includes salaries, bonuses and any other allowances granted with respect to employment after allowing for appropriate deductions and exemptions. Taxable income includes the value of employer-provided benefits, including accommodation and transportation.

Emoluments deposited on behalf of an employee into an approved Savings Scheme may be exempt from tax.

Self-employment income. Taxable profits generally consist of business profits as disclosed in the business operation's financial statements, subject to various tax adjustments. Income tax is imposed on net business income.

Investment income. Dividends received by residents of Guyana from Guyana resident companies are not subject to tax. Interest, rental income, dividend income from nonresident companies and royalties or other income arising from property are aggregated with other income and taxed accordingly.

Interest that accrues to an individual during any year on the amount credited to him or her in an approved Savings Scheme established under the Savings Scheme Act is exempt from tax. Also, dividends paid by an approved mortgage finance company are exempt from tax in Guyana.

An individual resident in Guyana is exempt from income tax on interest earned on savings accounts if he or she satisfies both of the following conditions:
- He or she is 60 years or older at the start of the tax year or is incapacitated by illness or infirmity.
- He or she does not earn income exceeding GYD780,000 per year. If the income of the person exceeds GYD780,000, such person is taxed on interest earned on savings accounts.

A final withholding tax at a rate of 20% is imposed on dividends, interest, royalties and management fees paid to nonresident individuals.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options and profit-sharing schemes. No specific provisions in Guyana regulate the taxation of employer-provided stock options. Consequently, the tax treatment is based on general principles and case law. Ordinarily, an option is taxed on the difference between the market value of the shares and the price at which the option is granted at the time when the employee receives an irrevocable right to acquire shares. In general, gains derived from the subsequent sale of the shares acquired under the option may be subject to capital gains tax if the shares are held in excess of 12 months. If the shares are sold within 12 months of acquisition, the gains are subject to income tax. If a vesting period must elapse before the employee obtains an irrevocable right to acquire shares, the taxing date is the date of vesting.

Capital gains. Capital gains tax is payable at a rate of 20% on the change of ownership of property in Guyana as well as in other specific cases if the net taxable capital gain for the tax year is in excess of GYD500,000. Capital gains accruing outside Guyana accruing to a person not ordinarily resident or domiciled in Guyana are taxable in Guyana only if received in Guyana.

A net taxable gain realized on the disposition of certain assets within 12 months after acquisition is subject to income tax as ordinary income.

No capital gains tax is payable on the gains arising from the disposal of the shares or stock of public companies or on the gains arising from the sale of property used as a private residence, if the proceeds of the sale are used for the purchase of a property of equal or greater value within 60 days after the end of the year in which the property is sold.

The following deductions are allowed in calculating capital gains tax:
- Expenditure (other than the purchase price, if any) incurred solely in connection with the acquisition of that property by the person who is the owner of that property immediately before the change of ownership.
- Expenditure incurred by the owner in making improvements, additions and alterations to the property. This is subject to the condition that if any expenditure was allowed as a capital allowance, such amount is not allowed in computing the capital gain or loss.
- Costs incurred in connection with the transaction that results in the change of ownership, such as legal fees and agent's fees.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. The following is a list of allowances and deductible expenses allowable with respect to the 2021 tax year:
- Personal allowance, which is the greater of GYD780,000 per year or one-third of the employee's total income from all sources excluding income subjected to withholding taxes)
- Employee contributions to the National Insurance Scheme (NIS)
- Traveling allowances (deductible only if related to the exercise of employment)
- Station allowance
- Entertainment allowance
- Subsistence allowance
- Meal allowance
- Security and telephone allowance (this is by the current policy of the Guyana Revenue Authority [GRA] and is not provided for in a statute)
- Medical and dental expenses (deductible only for government employees)
- Gratuity (deductible only for government employees)
- Severance pay
- Vacation allowance (up to a maximum of one month's gross salary)

The traveling, subsistence and entertainment allowances are deductible only if it is proven that the allowances were expended for the purposes for which the allowances were granted.

Business deductions. Any expenses incurred wholly and exclusively for the purpose of producing income are deductible.

Reserves or provisions of a general nature are not allowable. Write-offs of specific amounts or balances generally are allowed if the Commissioner General of the GRA is satisfied that they are not recoverable.

In computing taxable profits, depreciation and amortization for financial statement purposes are replaced by capital allowances for tax purposes. Annual allowances at rates ranging generally from 2% to 50% are available. These allowances may be calculated on a straight-line or reducing-balance basis. If calculated on a straight-line basis, allowances are limited to 90% of the cost of the asset.

Rates

Income tax. Personal income tax is imposed at the following rates.

Taxable income	Tax rate (%)
Up to GYD1,560,000	28
Over GYD1,560,000	40

If an individual qualifies as having a small business that is registered with the Small Business Bureau and that is engaged in manufacturing and construction services, income tax is imposed at a rate of 25% on the chargeable income derived from manufacturing and construction services.

Other taxes on income. Payments to resident individual contractors in excess of GYD500,000 are subject to resident individual contractor tax. This tax is imposed as a withholding tax at a rate of 2% on each payment. This tax applies with respect to contracts for providing or supplying independent personal services for reward and includes the supply of labor and the hiring of equipment. Contractor tax must be paid to the Guyana Revenue Authority (GRA) within 30 days after the payment. This is a prepayment of the resident individual's taxes, which is creditable against his or her ultimate tax liability.

The tributor's tax is imposed at a rate of 10% on persons engaged in the gold and diamond mining industry, such as drivers, cooks and sailors, who are rewarded for their labor under the tribute system. This tax is a prepayment of tax, which is creditable against the individual's ultimate tax liability. The employer must deduct and remit the tax to the GRA on or before 1 April, 1 July, 1 October and 31 December in each year of income, and for the purpose of calculating the amount of tax to be withheld, there shall be allowed a deduction of GYD720,000 per year apportioned according to the individual's earning period.

The diamond withholding tax is imposed at a rate of 2% on the value placed by the Guyana Geology and Mines Commission on the amount of diamond declared by an individual. This is a prepayment of tax, which is creditable against the individual's ultimate tax liability.

The gold withholding tax is imposed, on the amount of gold declared by an individual to the Guyana Gold Board, according to a sliding scale which is based on the price of gold. The following is the scale.

Price of gold (per ounce)	Income tax payable
Under USD1,100	2% of gross proceeds
At least USD1,100 but not more than USD1,300	2.5% of gross proceeds
Over USD1,300 but not more than USD1,600	3% of gross proceeds
Over USD1,600	3.5% of gross proceeds

The gold withholding tax is a final tax and not a prepayment of tax by such individuals. The tax is a final tax with respect to income from gold mining that is declared to the Guyana Gold Board. If gold withholding tax is applied with respect to gold mining income that is not declared to the Guyana Gold Board, the withholding tax represents a prepayment of tax only.

Relief for losses. Losses may be carried forward and offset against future taxable income until it is completely recouped. The losses to be offset in future years may not exceed one half of the amount of the tax payable had the offset not occurred. Losses may not be carried back.

B. Property Tax

Property Tax is payable on net "property" (see below) of every individual as of the end of the fiscal year. The net property of a person is the amount by which the aggregate value of the property of the person exceeds the value of any debts owed by him or her, other than the following:
- A debt incurred without consideration or without full consideration in money's worth
- A debt incurred that is not wholly for his or her benefit
- A debt for which a right of reimbursement from any other person exists unless such reimbursement cannot be obtained
- A debt charged or secured by, or incurred in relation to, any property of him or her, which is to be excluded for the purposes of the Property Tax under the Property Tax Act
- Any debt incurred by him or her outside Guyana other than any such debt that is contracted to be paid in Guyana or secured by property in Guyana

The term "property" includes immovable and movable property, rights of any kind and effects of any kind, located in Guyana or elsewhere and the proceeds from the sale of such property and money or investment for the time being representing them (any cash from the sale of property or any property acquired from the exchange of investments). However, "property" does not include the property of a person outside of Guyana if that person is not domiciled in or ordinarily resident in Guyana.

For property acquired before 1 January 2011, the value of property is considered to be the estimated open market price together with the cost of improvements and additions made after that date. The value of property acquired by purchase on or after that date is the cost of purchase and improvements and additions. If acquired other than by purchase, the value is considered to be the open market value. If the property consists of debts, the value is considered to be the nominal value of the debts.

The value of the property is subject to the following deductions:
- If the property is other than debt, wear-and-tear allowances (but not initial allowances) as authorized by the Income Tax Act
- For debts, any deduction from the nominal amount that has been allowed for income tax purposes

The following are the Property Tax rates.

Value of net property	Rate of tax (%)
First GYD40,000,000	Nil
Next GYD20,000,000	0.50
Remaining in excess of GYD60,000,000	0.75

Property Tax returns must be filed by the following:
- An individual who is resident in Guyana and possessed net property of the value of GYD40 million or more at the end of the tax year
- A nonresident who possessed net property located in Guyana valued at GYD40 million or more at the end of the tax year
- Every body of persons (including a company) registered or carrying on business in Guyana with net property valued at GYD40 million or more at the end of the tax year

Property Tax returns must be filed and tax paid on 30 April of the year following the tax year.

C. Social security

Contributions. Contributions to the NIS must be made at the following rates on maximum monthly insurable earnings of GYD280,000:
- For employees: 5.6%
- For employers: 8.4%
- For self-employed persons: 12.5% (of their declared income up to GYD280,000)

Totalization agreements. Guyana has entered into social security totalization agreements with the Caribbean Community and Common Market (CARICOM) to provide relief from paying double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Guyana is the calendar year. In general, married individuals are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income. Every individual receiving income must file an income tax return by 30 April of the year following the tax year. Every individual receiving income from a trade, business, profession or vocation must file an income tax return for the tax year, even if the business operated at a loss.

Employers must deduct tax from employees under the Pay-As-You-Earn system.

Every self-employed individual receiving income must pay tax in four equal installments on or before 1 April, 1 July, 1 October and 31 December in each tax year. Each installment must equal one-quarter of the tax on taxable income for the preceding year. The balance of tax due, if any, must be paid no later than 30 April of the following year.

Nonresidents must file tax returns for any year in which they derive income from Guyana sources. For the filing of returns, nonresidents follow the administrative rules that apply to residents.

The penalty for the late filing of a tax return is 10% of the tax assessed. In addition, a flat fee of GYD50,000 is payable for a failure to file a tax return regardless of whether tax is payable. Further, if the balance of tax due is not paid by the 30 April deadline, a penalty of 2% per month is payable. Failure to pay tax also attracts interest at a rate of 18% per year.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Unilateral relief. A Guyana taxpayer who proves to the satisfaction of the GRA that he or she has paid income tax on foreign income is entitled to claim a credit for such tax paid against Guyana tax chargeable with respect to that income, as determined under specific rules in the Income Tax Act.

Double tax treaties. Guyana has entered into double tax treaties with the CARICOM member states (Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Belize, Dominica, Grenada, Jamaica, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, and Trinidad and Tobago), Canada and the United Kingdom. In general, the credit available may not exceed Guyana tax payable on the underlying foreign-source income.

The treaty with the CARICOM member states provides for reduced withholding tax rates as well as exemption from tax on income received by the recipient, because the treaty is a source-based treaty.

F. Entry visas

Only Guyana citizens and their dependents have the right to enter the country freely. Nonresidents are subject to varying entry requirements. Depending on the nationalities of the individuals, visas may not be required for entry into Guyana.

G. Work visas and/or permits

In general, foreign nationals employed by companies in Guyana must obtain both entry visas (subject to certain exceptions mentioned above) and work permits. The Ministry of Home Affairs requires specific and detailed information before granting work permits to foreign nationals. The government requires that employment opportunities first be offered to Guyana nationals and residents before nonresidents.

In general, CARICOM nationals may be given up to six months for employment purposes on entry into Guyana. If a CARICOM national has a Certificate of Recognition of Caribbean Community Skills Qualification by virtue of being a university graduate or meeting other specific criteria, the person may enter Guyana for a period of six months or some other indefinite period and work in Guyana. Similar rights are granted to the spouse and dependents of the CARICOM national.

Non-CARICOM nationals may be granted up to three months for employment purposes on entry into Guyana. However, the Chief Immigration Officer may extend the initial period granted to two years.

Work permits are non-transferable. If a work permit holder leaves the employer, the work permit is canceled. The employer must inform the authorities that the employee has left the company.

If a foreign national is entering Guyana for the purpose of employment, a landing permit/employment visa must be obtained prior to arrival in Guyana. Subsequent to his or her arrival, a work permit must be obtained.

The following documents with respect to the employee must be submitted to the Ministry of Home Affairs to facilitate the landing permit/employment visa and work permit application processes:

- Landing permit/visa application form
- Work permit application form
- Copy of the applicant's entire passport, together with the sponsor's, if applicable (the passport must be valid for at least six months)
- Two passport-size color photographs
- Police clearance
- Medical report
- Credentials for the applicant (for example, certificates of qualifications)

In addition to the above, the following documents with respect to the employer must be submitted:

- A letter addressed to the Ministry of Home Affairs requesting landing permission for employment status (the letter must include the expected position within the company, expected date of arrival and duration of stay in Guyana)
- A letter addressed to the Ministry of Home Affairs requesting a work permit
- A letter addressed to the Ministry of Home Affairs providing a brief history on the company and its operations in Guyana
- Employment contract or letter of assignment
- Tax liability statement and National Insurance compliance if applicable
- Certificate of registration or incorporation
- Vacancy advertisement in the newspaper (must be published three months prior to the application)
- Application fee of USD140

Work permits are granted for a two-year period. If a traveling individual requires a visa but is unable to apply at any of Guyana's missions or consulates, visas may be issued on arrival in Guyana.

H. Residence visas and/or permits

An individual who is legally married to a Guyanese individual or who has been living in Guyana legally for more than five years may apply for residency.

An application must be submitted to the Ministry of Home Affairs to obtain residency. To approve a residency application, the authorities must be satisfied that the applicant can support himself or herself and will not be a burden to the country. The individual's qualifications and entitlement to residence status on the basis of marriage or similar criteria are also taken into consideration.

No quota system exists for issuing residence permits. Each application is evaluated on its own merit.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Any family member of a working expatriate who wants to work in Guyana must obtain his or her own work permit to be employed in Guyana or must obtain extensions of stay to reside in Guyana.

Children accompanying work permit holders who are in Guyana for the sole purpose of studying must obtain students visas.

Forced heirship. An individual is allowed to will their property as they wish. In the absence of a will, specific rules govern the distribution of his or her estate. The legislation also provides for family members and dependents to apply for a financial provision to be made for them out of the property left by the deceased, if the property left by the will or through intestacy is deemed insufficient.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals holding a driver's license issued in their home country may be able to obtain a driver's license locally by submitting the following to the GRA:
- Completed application form
- Foreign driver's license
- Taxpayer Identification Number
- Copy of valid identification (passport or national identification)
- Three passport-size photographs
- Application fee of USD20

No medical, physical or written examination is required.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident and nonresident individuals, regardless of their nationality, are subject to tax on their Honduras-source income only.

Individuals are considered resident if they live in Honduras for more than three consecutive months during a tax year.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable employment income includes salary, pensions, bonuses, premiums, commissions and allowances (for example, housing and educational allowances). Payments made to board members, other executives and counselors not included in the payroll are subject to a 12.5% and 1% income withholding tax, respectively. The 12.5% rate applies to various payments, such as professional fees, commissions and bonuses, while the 1% rate applies to payments for goods and services.

Self-employment and business income. Income derived from self-employment or from a trade or business is subject to tax.

Investment income. Dividends paid or credited by local companies to resident and nonresident individuals are subject to a 10% withholding tax. Royalties from franchises are subject to a 10% withholding tax. Technical advice and similar payments are subject to a 10% withholding tax.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees paid to nonresident individuals are subject to a 25% withholding tax. Directors' fees paid to resident directors are taxed at the ordinary individual income tax rates (see Rates).

Capital gains. Capital gains are subject to a tax at a flat rate of 10%.

Capital losses are deductible only if derived from the sale of depreciable assets or from the sale of non-depreciable assets sold in the ordinary course of a trade or business. Occasional (non-habitual) sales of non-depreciable assets are not subject to tax.

Capital gains must be reported and taxes paid within the first 10 days of the month following the month in which the transaction takes place. An annual return must be also be filed by 30 April each year.

Capital gains derived by nonresidents are subject to a 4% withholding tax on the gross proceeds, which is an advance payment of the final 10% tax. The withholding tax must be remitted within the 10 calendar days following the transaction.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. Annual deductions for medical and educational expenses are allowed up to a maximum of HNL40,000 (approximately USD1,638). For people older than 65 years old, the annual deductions for medical and educational expenses are up to the maximum HNL80,000 (approximately USD3,277).

Business deductions. All costs and expenses that are necessary to generate taxable income and protect investments are deductible.

Rates. Employment and self-employment income are taxable at the following rates.

Annual taxable income		Tax
Exceeding HNL	Not exceeding HNL	rate %
0	172,117.89	0
172,117.89	262,449.27	15
262,449.27	610,347.16	20
610,347.16	—	25

The above tax rates are subject to change by the government.

Withholding tax is imposed on nonresidents at a rate of 25% on salaries, commissions and other similar compensation items.

Relief for losses. Self-employed individuals may not carry their losses forward or back.

B. Estate and gift taxes

Honduras does not impose estate or gift taxes. However, estates may be taxed as ordinary taxpayers if they derive income before distributions of assets are made to the beneficiaries.

C. Social security

The information below applies to companies with more than 10 employees.

Sickness and Maternity Contribution. The contribution rates for the Sickness and Maternity Contribution (Enfermedad y Maternidad) are 5% for the employer and 2.5% for the employee. The contribution is calculated on a maximum monthly salary of HNL9,849.70 (approximately USD412.50).

Old Age, Invalidity and Death Contribution. The contribution rates for the Old Age, Invalidity and Death Contribution (Vejez, Invalidez y Muerte) are 3.5% for the employer and 2.5% for the employee.

The contribution is calculated on a maximum monthly salary of HNL10,282.37 (approximately USD430.50).

Professional Risk Contribution. The contribution rate for the Professional Risk Contribution (Riesgo Profesional) is 0.2% and is only applicable for the employer.

The contribution is calculated on a maximum monthly salary of HNL9,849.70 (approximately USD412.50).

Private Contribution Regime — Social Housing Fund. The contribution rate for the Private Contribution Regime – Social Housing Fund (Régimen de Aportaciones Privadas – Fondo Social para la Vivienda) is 1.5% each for the employer and employee.

The contribution is calculated on the employee's salary less the base salary (HNL10,282.37 [approximately USD430.50]). The result is multiplied by 1.5% in order to calculate the contribution for the employer and the employee.

Labor Reserve Contribution. The contribution is only applicable for the employee. The contribution rate is 4%, which is applied to 3 minimum wage salaries. A minimum wage salary is HNL10,021.18 (approximately USD419.50).

If the employee's salary is less than 3 minimum wage salaries (HNL30,063.54 [approximately USD1,258.55]), the labor reserve contribution is calculated on the salary paid to the employee by applying a rate of 4%.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Employers are responsible for withholding income taxes and social security contributions from employees' salaries on a monthly basis. Employees are not required to file an annual income tax return if their only source of income is employment compensation. Nonresidents are not required to file an annual income tax return if their income tax liability has been satisfied through withholding at source.

The ordinary tax year runs from 1 January to 31 December. Returns must be filed and any tax liabilities due must be paid by 30 April of the year following the tax year. However, in certain specified circumstances, taxpayers may elect a special tax year. Self-employed individuals and individuals with a trade or business must make advance income tax payments.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Honduras has not entered into tax treaties with other countries. However, Honduras has entered into tax information and exchange agreements with Ecuador and the United States.

F. Temporary visas

Depending on their country of citizenship, individuals may be required to apply for and obtain an entry visa before traveling to Honduras. The visa may be granted by a Honduran consulate overseas or by the immigration authorities in Honduras, depending on the citizenship of the individual. Because the rules indicating the countries of citizenship of individuals who are required to obtain an entry visa before entering Honduras and requirements for obtaining a visa often vary, it is necessary to check the entry visa requirements on a case-by-case basis.

G. Work visas (and/or permits)

Foreigners must apply for a Special Residence Permit with the immigration authorities. The granting of this permit is subject to specific rules applicable to employers and employees that need to be checked on a case-by-case basis because they often vary. After the required documents are filed with the immigration authorities, it takes approximately four to six months to obtain the Special Residence Permit. Special Residence Permits are valid for terms ranging from one year to five years and may be renewed for up to five years. After five years, a new type of permit request must be filed. In addition, foreign employees must apply for a work permit with the Ministry of Labor.

H. Residence visas (and/or permits)

The government of Honduras may grant migratory statuses that allow foreigners to reside in Honduras under several options, such as renters, investors, retirees and certain family relatives. The residency request must be submitted to and processed by the immigration authorities in Honduras. Because the applicable requirements may vary from case to case, they should be checked in advance.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The legislation of Honduras requires that family members of foreign workers file for a Special Residence Permit as dependents. If a family member wants to work in Honduras, he or she must apply independently for a different type of Special Residence Permit with the immigration authorities and for a work permit with the Ministry of Labor. Children of expatriates must have student visas to attend schools in Honduras.

Marital property regime. Assets obtained by any means, except by donation, after the marriage is commenced are considered to be marital property.

Forced heirship. If an individual dies without leaving a will, the beneficiaries of the individual's assets and patrimony according to the law are the following:
- Descendants
- Spouse
- Ascendants
- Collaterals
- Municipal governments

The priority order is set by the Civil Code according to a series of different combinations. The following must be deducted, paid and/or removed from the deceased's estate before it is distributed among the beneficiaries:
- Funeral expenses
- Mortuary procedural expenses
- Debts
- Taxes
- Maintenance obligations of the deceased
- Marital property

Driver's permits. Foreigners entering the country are authorized to drive vehicles with a current driver's license from their country, subject to the validity of the authorization under which he or she remains in Honduras. When the foreigner obtains a migratory status that allows him or her to reside in Honduras, he or she is required to obtain a local driver's license.

Honduras does not have driver's license reciprocity agreements with any other country.

This chapter relates to the tax jurisdiction of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (SAR) of China.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals earning income that arises in or is derived from a Hong Kong office or Hong Kong employment, or from services rendered in Hong Kong during visits of more than 60 days in any tax year, are subject to salaries tax.

Hong Kong observes a territorial basis of taxation; therefore, the concept of tax residency has no significance in determining tax liability, except in limited circumstances.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable income consists of all cash emoluments, including bonuses and gratuities. Benefits in kind are largely non-taxable, unless they are convertible into cash or specifically relate to holiday travel or the education of a child. The provision of accommodation by an employer creates a taxable benefit equal to an amount ranging from 4% to 10% of the employee's other taxable income, depending on the type of accommodation.

An employee is subject to salaries tax if his or her employment income is sourced in Hong Kong, even if he or she is not ordinarily resident in the territory. However, except for directors' fees, a specific statutory exemption applies if an employee renders all his or her services outside Hong Kong or if an employee renders services in Hong Kong during visits to Hong Kong not exceeding a total of 60 days in a year of assessment. Conversely, if a nonresident engaged in non-Hong Kong employment renders services in Hong Kong during visits totaling more than 60 days in a year of assessment, he or she is taxed on a pro rata basis.

Self-employment and business income. Anyone carrying on a profession, trade or business in Hong Kong is subject to profits tax on income arising in or derived from Hong Kong from that profession, trade or business. Taxable income is determined in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, as modified by the tax code and principles derived from case law.

If an individual receives rental income but the rental activities do not constitute a business, the income is subject to property tax rather than profits tax (see Rates).

Profits tax, salaries tax and property tax are assessed separately. If beneficial, a permanent or temporary Hong Kong resident individual may elect to be assessed under personal assessment (that is, under the salaries tax method; see Rates) on the aggregate of his or her income or losses from all sources.

Investment income. Interest income not derived from investing the funds of a business and all dividend income are exempt from taxation.

No withholding taxes are levied in Hong Kong on dividends or interest paid to nonresidents. However, royalties paid to nonresident individuals for the use of intellectual property rights in Hong Kong are deemed to arise from a Hong Kong business and are subject to withholding tax at an effective rate of 2.25% (for the first HKD2 million of their royalty income) and 4.5% (for the remainder of their royalty income), if the individuals have elected to be subject to the two-tiered profits tax rates regime discussed in Rates. The withholding tax rate is increased to 7.5% (for the first HKD2 million of their royalty income) and 15% (for the remainder of their royalty income), if the recipient is related to the payer and if the intellectual property rights for which the royalties are paid were previously owned by a person carrying on a profession, trade or business in Hong Kong (subject to the application of the two-tiered profits tax rates regime referred in Rates below).

Directors' fees. Directors' fees derived from a company that has its central management and control in Hong Kong are subject to salaries tax in Hong Kong. Otherwise, directors' fees are not taxable.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Employer-provided stock options are generally taxable at the time of exercise. However, for an individual who has non-Hong Kong employment and is taxed on a pro rata basis by reference to the number of days of his or her services in Hong Kong only, part or all of the option gain may be excluded from taxable income. The amount excluded depends on various factors including whether the option is granted conditionally or unconditionally, and, if granted conditionally, the number of days on which the individual performed Hong Kong services during the vesting period.

Taxation of employment-related share awards. Employment-related share awards are generally considered to be perquisites from employment and taxed as part of the remuneration. In general, they become taxable when an employee is entitled to the full economic benefit of the shares awarded. If the employee has a non-Hong Kong employment, proration of the income by reference to the number of days of his or her services in Hong Kong that is similar to the proration applicable to stock option benefits may also be allowed.

Capital gains. Hong Kong does not tax capital gains.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. To be deductible for purposes of salaries tax, expenses must be incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the production of a taxpayer's assessable income. Depreciation allowances (capital allowances) may also be claimed on plant and machinery used in the production of assessable income.

Personal deductions and allowances. For salaries tax, certain education expenses paid to specified institutions are deductible up to HKD100,000 per year. Approved charitable donations are deductible up to 35% of assessable income. Home mortgage interest is deductible, up to HKD100,000 per year for a maximum of 20 years. Mandatory contributions to "recognized retirement schemes," as defined, are deductible up to HKD18,000 per year. Effective from 1 April 2019, qualifying premiums paid to a Qualifying Deferred Annuity Policy and/or tax-deductible Mandatory Provident Fund contributions are deductible, up to the aggregate of HKD60,000 per taxpayer per year. Premiums paid into a Voluntary Health Insurance Scheme are deductible, up to HKD8,000 per qualified insured person per year.

Personal allowances are also available under salaries tax to individuals with an income level at below the "break-even" point (that is, the point where the standard rate of 15% applies, see Rates). For the 2021-22 tax year, the following are the amounts of personal allowances available.

Personal allowances	HKD
Prescribed allowances
Single (a)	132,000
Married (b)	264,000
Child allowance for
First child to ninth child (each)	120,000
Each child born during the year (additional)	120,000

Personal allowances	HKD
Dependent parent/grandparent allowance (each)
Aged 60 and above
Residing with taxpayer	100,000
Not residing with taxpayer	50,000
Aged 55 to 59
Residing with taxpayer	50,000
Not residing with taxpayer	25,000
Elderly residential care expenses (c)	Up to 100,000
Personal disability allowance	75,000
Disabled dependent allowance	75,000
Dependent brother and sister allowance	37,500
Single-parent allowance	132,000 (d)

(a) Granted to a single person or a married person who has not elected joint assessment.
(b) Granted to a married person whose spouse does not have assessable income or to a person who, together with his or her spouse, has elected to be jointly assessed.
(c) Those claiming this deduction are not eligible for a dependent allowance for the same dependent.
(d) Granted to a person who is single, widowed, married but separated from his or her spouse or divorced throughout the year and who is the sole or predominant care provider for a child. The person must be entitled to a child allowance as well.

Business deductions and capital allowances. To be deductible, expenses must be incurred in the production of taxable profits. Certain specified expenses are not deductible, including domestic and private expenses, expenditure of a capital nature or any loss or withdrawal of capital, the cost of improvements and tax paid or payable. The deductibility of interest is determined in accordance with detailed rules.

Subject to the satisfaction of certain conditions, capital expenditure for the acquisition of computer hardware or software, plant and machinery used for manufacturing, eligible environmental-protection installation forming part of a building or structure, eligible environmental-protection machinery, and environment-friendly vehicles qualifies for an immediate 100% deduction in the year in which the expenditure is incurred. Capital expenditure for most other plant and machinery qualifies for an initial 60% allowance and an annual allowance on the reduced balance at a rate of 10%, 20% or 30%, depending on the relevant class of the asset.

An initial allowance of 20% is granted on new industrial buildings in the year in which the expenditure is incurred, and annual depreciation allowances are 4% of qualifying capital expenditure beginning in the year the building is first put into use. No initial allowance is granted on the purchase of used buildings, but annual depreciation allowances may be available. An annual allowance of 4% of the qualifying capital expenditure each year is available on commercial buildings.

All of the above capital allowances may be subject to recapture if the assets are sold for amounts in excess of their tax-depreciated values.

Rates. Three separate income taxes are levied in Hong Kong instead of a single unified income tax. The following rates are the applicable rates for the three taxes for the period from 1 April 2021 through 31 March 2022:

- Profits tax: Under the two-tiered profits tax rates regime, the rate of tax for the first HKD2 million of profits of unincorporated businesses is reduced by half (that is, reduced from 15% to 7.5%). The remainder of the profits continue to be taxed at the normal rate of 15%. However, each group of "connected entities" can only elect one entity in the group to benefit from the two-tiered regime for a given year of assessment. In this regard, an entity is a defined to include a natural person and a "connected entity" of another entity if any of the following circumstances exist:
  - — One of them has control over the other.
  - — Both of them are under the control of the same entity.
  - — If the first entity is a natural person carrying on a sole proprietorship business, the other entity is the same person carrying on another sole proprietorship business.

  "Control" generally refers to one entity holding directly or indirectly of more than 50% of the issued share capital, voting rights, capital or profits of another entity.
- Property tax: levied at a flat rate of 15% on rental income, after a standard deduction of 20%.
- Salaries tax: levied on net chargeable income (assessable income less personal deductions and allowances) at progressive rates ranging from 2% to 17%, or at a flat rate (maximum rate) of 15% on assessable income less personal deductions, whichever calculation produces the lower tax liability.

The following are the progressive rates for salaries tax for the period from 1 April 2021 through 31 March 2022.

Taxable income HKD	Tax rate %	Tax due HKD	Cumulative tax due HKD
First 50,000	2	1,000	1,000
Next 50,000	6	3,000	4,000
Next 50,000	10	5,000	9,000
Next 50,000	14	7,000	16,000
Remaining	17	—	—

Tax rebate. A one-off tax rebate is granted for the 2020-21 tax year. This rebate equals 100% of the final tax payable with respect to salaries tax and tax under personal assessment, subject to a ceiling of HKD10,000 in each case.

Relief for losses. Business losses of an individual are calculated in the same manner as profits and may be carried forward indefinitely against future income in the same business or may be offset against the individual's other sources of income under personal assessment. In both cases, losses cannot be carried back.

B. Estate tax

Estate duty was abolished, effective from 11 February 2006. Estates of persons who pass away on or after that date are not subject to estate duty.

C. Social security

Hong Kong does not impose any social security taxes. Employers and employees are each required to contribute the lower of 5% of the employees' salaries or HKD1,500 per month to approved mandatory provident fund schemes unless the employees are covered by other recognized occupation retirement schemes.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Hong Kong runs from 1 April to 31 March. Penalties apply for breaches of time limits in filing returns. Individual taxpayers are usually issued composite tax returns and are required to report all income from the various sources subject to profits tax, salaries tax or property tax. Salaries tax is automatically levied separately on the employment income of married couples and is paid separately by each spouse. However, a married couple not wishing to be assessed separately may elect joint assessment on their salaries, or, if beneficial, elect a combined assessment of their income from all sources under personal assessment.

No payroll or withholding tax requirements apply for purposes of salaries tax, except for a taxpayer who is about to leave Hong Kong for over one month (other than in the course of his or her employment). Profits, property and salaries tax all operate under a system of prepaid tax, known as provisional tax. The provisional assessment for a tax year is an estimate, normally based on the preceding year's assessment, and is payable in two installments: one equal to 75% of the preceding year's tax liability, usually payable in the final quarter of the relevant tax year, with the remaining 25% payable three months later. When the actual income for the tax year is determined, a final tax assessment is issued, giving credit for provisional tax already paid. The final tax assessment is combined with a provisional tax assessment for the following year. The final tax is payable at the same time as the 75% installment of provisional tax for the following year.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Employment income derived from services rendered outside Hong Kong is exempt from salaries tax if the person is chargeable to and has paid tax of substantially the same nature as salaries tax with respect to that income.

Effective from the 2018-19 tax year, for employment income derived from services rendered outside Hong Kong in a territory that has entered into a double tax agreement with Hong Kong, any relief from double tax is by way of a tax credit rather than an income exemption.

The income exemption or tax credit allowable must not exceed the relief that would be allowed if the taxpayer had taken reasonable steps to minimize the foreign tax payable. Subsequently, if the relief is excessive, the taxpayer has an obligation to inform the Hong Kong tax authority to have the Hong Kong salaries tax correctly adjusted.

Hong Kong has entered into double tax agreements with Austria, Belarus, Belgium, Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Canada, China Mainland, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Finland, France, Guernsey, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Jersey, Korea (South), Kuwait, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, the Macau SAR, Malaysia, Malta, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, the Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Serbia, South Africa, Spain, Switzerland, Thailand, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom and Vietnam.

F. Visitor status

Most people may easily enter Hong Kong for visiting purposes with their passports. The length of time one is permitted to stay in Hong Kong under visitor status depends on the jurisdiction that issued the passport. For example, a US passport holder is allowed to stay in Hong Kong as a visitor for 90 days. However, for passport holders of some Asian jurisdictions the period may be as short as one week. Visitor status does not permit the passport holder to undertake employment in Hong Kong.

However, as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, even if a traveler would be allowed to have a visitor visa-free period in Hong Kong based on the jurisdiction that issued the passport, the traveler must check whether there are any entry restrictions set by the Hong Kong government for the jurisdiction where the traveler stayed before the travel.

G. Work and self-employment visas

To work in Hong Kong, a foreign national must obtain an employment visa.

Because of the change of sovereignty on 1 July 1997, the immigration policies relating to British subjects have been revised. Under the new law, British subjects may obtain a 180-day visitor visa free period for visiting Hong Kong, and must obtain employment visas to work in Hong Kong. The procedures for obtaining visas are the same for British subjects as for other foreign nationals.

Work visas. The Immigration Department recommends that foreign nationals apply for work visas from their home jurisdictions or where they reside prior to their arrival in Hong Kong. The entire process takes four to six weeks. However, an employee urgently needed by his or her employer in Hong Kong may enter Hong Kong with a visitor visa, then apply for a work visa while in Hong Kong. This method is not encouraged by the Hong Kong Immigration Department. If the applicant is applying for a work visa in Hong Kong while still holding a visitor visa, he or she must extend the visitor visa periodically until his or her work visa is granted. An applicant is not allowed to take up any employment in Hong Kong under a visitor visa. He or she will generally be required to re-enter Hong Kong to activate the work visa.

Work visas are granted for a particular job with a particular employer. Generally, the employer must demonstrate that the applicant has recognized professional qualifications, has relevant work experience, and is uniquely qualified for the job.

A work visa is generally valid for an initial period of up to two years and may be renewed. The first extension is granted for a maximum period of three years and followed by a second extension for a maximum period of three years.

If an applicant has been allowed to take up employment as a professional in Hong Kong for not less than two years and had assessable income for salaries tax of not less than HKD2 million in the previous tax year, the applicant may apply at any time for an extension of stay for a maximum period of six years under the top-tier employment stream.

After seven consecutive years of employment in Hong Kong, an individual may apply for permanent residence. This enables him or her to work in Hong Kong without a work visa.

Applying from the home jurisdiction. A prospective employee should complete application Form ID990A, and send it, with a photograph attached, to the local sponsor in Hong Kong or directly to the Hong Kong Immigration Department. This application should be sent with specified documents, including, but not limited to, the following:

- A photocopy of the applicant's travel document containing its date of issue, date of expiration and details of the re-entry visa (if applicable).
- The name, contact address and telephone number of the applicant's local sponsor in Hong Kong.
- An up-to-date résumé of the applicant's qualifications and work experience. This must be accompanied by certification of the applicant's academic qualifications by a university, as well as by proof of the applicant's previous working experience.
- A copy of the applicant's service contract or letter of appointment with a detailed description of the position, salary and assignment period.
- A letter, with supporting proof from the applicant's employer (if possible), stating the reason why the post cannot be filled locally.
- The most recent financial statements of the employer.
- Form ID990B completed and signed by the local sponsor.
- A copy of the local sponsor company's business registration certificate.
- Copies of the marriage certificate and birth certificates of the children, if dependent visas are sought.

Application forms and sponsorship forms can be obtained from the Hong Kong Immigration Department.

If an application is approved, an entry visa is issued to the local sponsor who is asked to send it to the applicant. The applicant must present this visa together with his or her passport or travel document to the immigration officer on arrival in Hong Kong. At the port of entry in Hong Kong, the official work visa is endorsed on the applicant's passport or travel document with the effective period stated on a landing slip. Extensions of the visa may be obtained subsequently if applied for before the expiration date.

Applying in Hong Kong. If an employee enters Hong Kong initially with a visitor visa and then applies for a work visa in Hong Kong (this is not encouraged by the Immigration Department), the employee should submit specified documents to the Immigration Department, including, but not limited to, the following:

- Forms ID990A and ID990B (completed by the applicant and local sponsor, respectively)
- Original of certification from the applicant's employer regarding the terms of his or her employment
- The applicant's résumé detailing qualifications and work experience
- A company staff list of the local sponsor (optional)

- Copies of the applicant's academic qualifications, for example, a university diploma
- Photocopies of the applicant's and the dependents' passports, if applicable (personal particulars page and page with entry visa landing slip)
- The applicant's detailed job description from his or her employer
- The most recent annual financial statement of the employer
- A copy of the business registration certificate from the applicant's local sponsor
- Original of the marriage certificate and the birth certificates of the children if dependent visas are sought
- The local sponsor's company ordinances listing the directors and the shares of allotment (optional)
- A copy of the local sponsor's office lease (optional)

The applicant must submit the above documents together with his or her travel document and the dependents' travel documents to the Hong Kong Immigration Department's entry visa section. The original travel documents and certificates are required and are generally returned to the applicant within one day. After the Immigration Department approves the work visa and dependent visas, the applicant is notified for endorsement. The applicant and the dependents will generally be required to re-enter Hong Kong to activate the work visa and dependent visas.

Extensions. To obtain an extension of a work visa, a month before the expiration date of the visa, the applicant must obtain an employment letter from his or her employer certifying that the applicant's employment with that employer will extend beyond the expiration date. The letter, together with Forms I.D. 91, 481A and 481B (if dependent visa extension required), the applicant's and the dependents' original travel documents and copies of applicant's and the dependents' Hong Kong identity cards must be submitted to the Immigration Department's extension section approximately one month before the expiration date. Additional documents are required for the applicant under the top-tier employment stream, such as the notice of salaries tax assessment for the preceding tax year, which was issued by the Inland Revenue Department, or relevant tax documents. It normally takes 14 to 21 working days for the Immigration Department to process the visa extension application. This extension is usually valid for an additional three years (or six years if under the top-tier employment stream). If the work visa holder receives an extension, all dependents should also be granted extensions.

Self-employment visas. A foreign national wishing to invest in or start a business in Hong Kong must apply for an employment (investment) visa. To obtain this type of visa, the applicant must demonstrate that the business that he or she proposes to invest in and carry on will benefit the Hong Kong economy. Because the application procedure for the employment (investment) visa is more complicated than for other visas, it generally requires from four to eight weeks for the Immigration Department to process.

Capital Investment Entrant Scheme. In January 2015, the government announced that the Capital Investment Entrant Scheme was suspended, effective from 15 January 2015, until further notice. The Immigration Department will continue to process applications received on or before 14 January 2015, whether already approved (including approval-in-principle and formal approval) or still being processed.

H. Residence visas

In addition to work visas, other visas permitting residence in Hong Kong include the following:

- Training visas: Issued to foreign nationals coming to Hong Kong for training purposes. This visa is granted for the period of training or for 12 months, whichever is shorter.
- Student visas: Issued to foreign nationals coming to Hong Kong to study. They are granted for the normal duration of the post-secondary program, subject to a maximum period of 6 years, or for up to 12 months in accordance with the duration of their studies for those studying other courses. The visa generally does not allow its holder to take up employment in Hong Kong.
- Dependent visas: See Section I.
- Admission Scheme for the Second Generation of Chinese Hong Kong Permanent Residents (ASSG): See Section I.

Residence visas and the procedures for obtaining visas are the same for British subjects as for other foreign nationals. All visa applications are subject to being reviewed on a case-by-case basis and are approved by the Immigration Department at its own discretion.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members

Dependent visas. If an applicant wants to bring his or her family to Hong Kong, the family members (that is, his or her spouse or the other party to a same-sex civil partnership, same-sex civil union, "same-sex marriage," opposite-sex civil partnership or opposite-sex civil union entered into by him or her in accordance with the local law in force of the place of celebration and with such status being legally and officially recognized by the local authorities of the place of celebration, and unmarried children under age 18) may apply together with the applicant as his or her dependents for dependent visa status. Dependent visas are normally granted for the same time period as the work visa. A dependent visa holder (except a dependent of a person who has been admitted to study unless prior permission is obtained from the Immigration Department) is allowed to work in Hong Kong without prior approval from the Immigration Department under current Hong Kong immigration policy. Dependent visas may be granted to other close relatives who are fully supported by the applicant or who are handicapped, subject to the approval of the Immigration Department.

Identity cards. Within one month after the activation of the work visa and residence visas, the applicant and his or her family must apply for Hong Kong identity cards from the Immigration Department if they are 11 years old or older and are permitted to stay in Hong Kong for more than 180 days. All Hong Kong residents are required by law to carry with them at all times identity cards or their passports for identification purposes.

Second Generation of Chinese Hong Kong Permanent Residents. Persons who are the second generation of emigrated Chinese

Hong Kong permanent residents from overseas may apply to return to work in Hong Kong under the Admission Scheme for the Second Generation of Chinese Hong Kong Permanent Residents (ASSG). The following are the key requirements:

- Aged 18 to 40 and born overseas
- At least one parent holding a valid Hong Kong permanent identity card at the time of the ASSG application who was a Chinese national settled overseas at the time of the applicant's birth
- Good educational background, technical qualifications or proven professional experience
- Proficient in written and spoken Chinese (Putonghua or Cantonese) or English
- Sufficient financial means and ability to meet the living expenses for maintenance and accommodation in Hong Kong without recourse to public funds

No quota applies under the ASSG, and applicants are not required to have secured an offer of employment before entry. Persons admitted under the ASSG are normally granted an initial stay of 12 months.

Persons admitted under the ASSG may apply for extension of stay in Hong Kong within four weeks before their visas expire. Although applicants are not required to have secured an offer of employment in Hong Kong on application for entry under ASSG, when applying for extension, applicants are required to have secured an offer of employment (which is at a level commonly taken up by degree holders and has a remuneration package that is at market level). For individuals who have established or joined in business in Hong Kong, they are required to produce proof of their business. Successful applicants for extension of stay are normally permitted to remain in Hong Kong on the 2-2-3 years' extension pattern.

Marital property regime. No community property or other marital property regime applies in Hong Kong.

Forced heirship. Hong Kong law does not provide for forced heirship.

Driver's permits. A foreign national may drive legally in Hong Kong using his or her valid home jurisdiction driver's license or an international driving permit issued outside Hong Kong for up to one year or until the approval of his or her Hong Kong work visa if the individual currently holds a visitor visa.

After a foreign national obtains a work visa from the Immigration Department, his or her home jurisdiction driver's license becomes invalid in Hong Kong; therefore, he or she must obtain a Hong Kong driver's license immediately.

A person is eligible for the direct issuance of a Hong Kong driver's license without a test if all of the following conditions are satisfied:

- The person possesses a driver's license issued by one of the following jurisdictions (not an international driving permit) during the past three years.

Australia	Ireland	Norway

- The person is applying for driving privileges comparable to those authorized by the issuing jurisdiction.

- The overseas license is valid or has not been expired for more than three years.
- One of the following circumstances exists:
  - The driver resided in the issuing jurisdiction for a period of not less than six months and the license was issued during the period of residence.
  - The individual has held the license for five years or more preceding the date of the application.

The following documents (copies and/or originals) are necessary for the direct issuance of a Hong Kong driver's license:

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are subject to income tax on worldwide income, regardless of whether the funds are transferred into Hungary. Nonresidents are taxed on income from Hungarian sources only. However, tax treaty provisions may override the domestic rule.

Hungarian citizens are considered tax residents. A dual citizen is not a Hungarian tax resident if he or she does not have either a permanent home or habitual abode in Hungary.

The following individuals are also considered Hungarian tax residents:
- European Economic Area (EEA) nationals who spend at least 183 days per calendar year in Hungary
- Third-country (non-Hungarian and non-EEA) nationals who have permanent residence status, or are stateless persons with a permanent residence permit
- Foreign individuals who have a permanent home in Hungary only

Individuals who have permanent homes in Hungary and another jurisdiction or do not have a permanent home anywhere are deemed resident if their center of vital interests is located in Hungary. If tax residency cannot be determined by either the "permanent home test" or the "center of vital interest test," the individual is deemed to be a Hungarian tax resident if he or she stays in Hungary at least 183 days in the calendar year.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Gross employment income includes all compensation items that relate to the employment relationship of the individual. Most benefits in kind are taxed at the company level.

Rent and other housing allowances provided to an expatriate can be exempt from Hungarian taxes, under certain circumstances.

Education of the employee and in-kind health care benefits from the Hungarian state system, as well as ordinary and necessary employee business expenses borne by the employer, are not considered income for income tax purposes.

The "benefit in kind" category was replaced by two new categories, effective from 1 January 2011. These categories are "certain specific benefits" and "fringe benefits" and are taxable according to the following rules:

- For "certain specific benefits," the tax base is 1.18 times the arm's-length value that was not reimbursed by the individual, and the tax rate is 15%. In addition, "certain specific benefits" listed in the Hungarian personal income tax legislation (for example, telephone services for private purposes, business travel-related meals and representation and business gifts that are not exempt from tax) are also subject to a 15.5% social tax. Consequently, the effective tax rate for these benefits is 35.99%.
- However, "fringe benefits" (for example, the Széchenyi Recreation Card) are subject to a 15.5% social tax in addition to the personal income tax of 15%. Consequently, the effective tax rate for "fringe benefits" is 30.5%. As a result of COVID-19, "fringe benefits" are exempt from the social tax from 22 April 2020 to 31 December 2020.

Both the personal income tax and social tax are borne by the Hungarian employer. In general, benefits provided in the context of an employment relationship are taxed as regular employment income.

Non-Hungarian tax residents who work in Hungary are generally subject to personal income tax on their income relating to their Hungarian workdays.

Foreign individuals are generally taxed on their wages, salaries and other remuneration for services performed in Hungary.

Income from independent activities. All activities that are not included in employment (dependent) activities and for which an individual receives income are considered to be independent activities (for example, activities of private entrepreneurs and agricultural producers).

Investment income. Dividend income from a Hungarian source is subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 15%. Interest and capital gains are subject to the same tax rate.

Royalty income is included in ordinary taxable income, and is taxed, after the deduction of expenses, at the normal rate (15%).

Income derived from the renting out of real estate is considered part of the consolidated tax base. Depreciation of the property is deductible for tax purposes.

Non-Hungarian residents who are residents of treaty countries are subject to Hungarian withholding tax at the reduced treaty rate (certain treaties provide for no withholding tax) if specified administrative requirements are met (for example, certificate of residence).

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are generally subject to tax at the same rate as employment income. Directors' fees are sourced in the country in which the payer company is resident. Tax treaty provisions covering directors' fees generally state that if a resident of one treaty country receives a director's fee from a company resident in the other treaty country, the fee may be taxable in the other country.

Other income. Other income includes certain types of income listed in the Hungarian tax law, such as amounts paid by a voluntary or a private pension fund as a taxable benefit (excluding pension payments), and interest, dividends or capital gains paid by an entity located in a low-tax country that does not have a valid double tax treaty with Hungary.

Taxation of employment-related stock options. Employment-related stock options are taxed at the time of exercise. The taxation of the option income is determined by the relationship of the provider and the recipient and the circumstances of the acquisition.

The following are the applicable rules:

- If the employee of a Hungarian company receives his or her other employment income directly from abroad, the employee is subject to tax on a quarterly basis at the regular income tax rate of 15% on the market value of the stock at the exercise date, less the strike price and the acquisition and transaction costs, if any. Foreign-source stock option income is also subject to social tax at 15.5%, payable by the employee. If the social tax is paid by the employee, the tax base is 87% of the fair market value of the options at the exercise date. However, the income tax and social tax may be assumed by the Hungarian employer. In this case, the tax base is 100% of the fair market value of the options at the exercise date.
- If the employee's stock option income is paid through a local Hungarian company, the local company must withhold personal income tax and employee social security contributions and pay employer social tax on the income.

Capital gains. Capital gains are taxed at a flat rate of 15%. In determining taxable capital gains, substantiated transaction expenses may be deducted. Fifteen percent of the capital losses derived from transactions carried out on controlled capital markets can be offset against capital gains arising from other transactions conducted on such capital markets in the previous or next two years. The following are transactions that fall into this category:

- Transactions regulated by the Hungarian National Bank
- Transactions performed in other EEA member states or in states with which Hungary has entered into a tax treaty, and a mutual agreement on information exchange has been entered into by the Hungarian National Bank and the other country's respective financial supervisory body

Deductions

Personal tax credits and deductions. The most significant personal tax benefit is the family tax allowance. The family allowance applies without an income limit, even for one dependent. The allowance reduces the tax base. Effective from 1 January 2019, it results in a monthly reduction of tax of HUF10,000 per dependent for families with one dependent, HUF20,000 per dependent for families with two dependents and HUF33,000 per dependent for families with three or more dependents. It is possible to take into consideration the fetus as an eligible dependent from the 91st day of pregnancy. The utilized family tax allowance may not exceed the total tax base. The tax-base allowance can be shared between spouses or cohabitants.

The number of tax credits is low and their amounts are insignificant. Total tax credits claimed may not exceed the total tax payable (that is, credits are not refundable).

Business deductions. An individual may deduct a 10% standard deduction, or the actual and documented deductible expenses recognized by the income tax law, from income from independent activities.

Rates. The taxation of Hungarian residents and foreign individuals is described below.

A 15% flat personal income tax rate applies to both the consolidated tax base and investment income.

Nonresidents are subject to tax on income derived from Hungarian sources at the rates that apply to residents.

B. Inheritance and gift duty

Resident foreigners and nonresidents are subject to inheritance and gift duty on assets located in Hungary at rates of up to 18%. Assets transferred between lineal descendants are not subject to inheritance and gift duty.

C. Social security

As a result of Hungary's accession to the European Union (EU) on 1 May 2004, the EU's social security coordination regulations apply to citizens of the EEA and expatriates from outside the EEA, effective from that date.

Coverage. In Hungary, social security contributions cover health, pension and unemployment insurance. Participation in the Hungarian social security system is mandatory for all individuals who work in Hungary under an employment contract, regardless of their nationality. A third-country national (non-Hungarian, non-EEA and non-totalization agreement country national) seconded to Hungary, by a foreign employer not registered in Hungary, is not required to participate in the social security system. Effective from 1 January 2012, this exemption applies for two years and can be extended up to three years. If an individual qualifies for exemption, and if he or she leaves Hungary but then returns, this exemption applies again only if at least three years have elapsed between the end of the individual's previous stay in Hungary and his or her return.

Individuals holding a valid A1 certificate of coverage are not required to contribute to the Hungarian social security system.

If income is paid by a non-Hungarian company to persons insured in Hungary for their work performed outside Hungary or if the employee is employed by a non-Hungarian company in Hungary, in general, the non-Hungarian company must meet its social security contribution obligations through a representative (Hungarian branch or financial representative). In the absence of such a representative, the non-Hungarian company must register as an employer in Hungary. If it does not do so, the individual must eventually meet the statutory obligations.

Contributions. Employers must contribute at a rate of 17% (15.5% social tax and 1.5% training fund contribution) of gross salary. In general, the social tax and training fund contribution base equals taxable income. No ceiling applies to the amount of income subject to these dues.

As of 1 July 2020, each employee is subject to an integrated 18.5% social security contribution (previously, the social security contributions consisted of three elements, which were the 10% pension contribution, 8.5% health care contribution and 1.5% labor force contribution) on wages from his or her employment. No employee pension contribution cap applies.

In addition to the above contributions, a 15.5% social tax is payable on capital gains, income from securities borrowing and dividends, until the total amount of these types of income plus employment income reaches 24 times the amount of the minimum wage applicable on 1 January 2021 (HUF161,000) in the current year.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Hungary has entered into totalization agreements, which usually apply for an unlimited time period, with the following jurisdictions.

Albania	India	Montenegro
Australia	Japan	North Macedonia
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Korea (South)	Quebec
Canada	Kosovo	Russian Federation
Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS)*	Moldova	Serbia
	Mongolia	Turkey
		United States

* This agreement applies only to Ukraine and only for limited services.

However, the EU social security rules generally override the totalization agreements that have been entered into with the EEA member states.

Totalization agreement negotiations are underway with Algeria, New Zealand and Ukraine.

Hungary has entered into health care agreements with Angola, Cuba, Iraq, Jordan, Korea (North), Kuwait and Mongolia.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Essentially, Hungary has a self-assessment tax system. However, effective from 2017, the tax authorities compute personal income tax for individuals on the basis of information received by them from Hungarian companies. Residents must declare their worldwide income, compute their tax, file tax returns and pay the tax. Married couples are taxed separately, not jointly.

Employers must withhold the appropriate amount of income tax (personal income tax and social security contributions, if applicable) by taking into account employee allowances and other items that reduce employees' total income.

Expatriates who receive income from foreign employers must make quarterly advance tax payments, calculated on the basis of actual income earned, by the 12th day of the month following the end of the quarter.

The tax year is the calendar year. Tax returns are due by 20 May of the year following the end of the tax year.

If individuals do not possess the required information for preparing their personal income tax returns and, accordingly, are not able to file their tax returns by 20 May and if they are not personally accountable for this lack of information, they have the option of extending the filing deadline until 20 November. The tax authorities must be informed of any extension by 20 May, and the tax return must be filed by 20 November of the same year, together with an excuse letter. In this case, the tax authorities cannot impose a default penalty and late payment interest if the tax return is filed by 20 November.

The Hungarian Trade Office in Taipei and the Taipei Representative Office in Hungary have entered into an agreement on the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion.

Hungary has negotiated new tax treaties with Iraq and the United States. However, these treaties are not yet in force.

Hungary will negotiate double tax treaties (negotiating mandate has been granted) with Algeria, Argentina, Chile, Cuba, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Jordan, Lebanon, Panama and Sri Lanka.

Hungary has entered into tax information exchange agreements with Guernsey and Jersey. Negotiations on tax information exchange agreements are expected with Andorra, Argentina, Barbados, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, Gibraltar and the Isle of Man.

Hungarian residents with foreign-source income from non-treaty countries are entitled to a credit equal to 90% of the foreign taxes paid on the income, but not more than the tax calculated for this income at the relevant tax rate.

F. Entry visas

Foreign nationals entering Hungary must have valid travel documents (for example, passports) and, in certain cases, visas. Citizens of EEA countries and Switzerland can enter Hungary without visas and with a personal identification card instead of a passport. Based on international treaties, citizens of some non-EEA countries may enter Hungary without visas.

Visas may be obtained for official, private or immigration purposes for either short-term (up to 90 days) or long-term (longer than 90 days) periods.

Hungary issues the following types of temporary visas:
- Airport transit visa (Category A), which is for entering the international areas of the airport and remaining there until the departure of the flight to the destination country
- Transit visa (Category B), which is for single or repeated transit through the country, with a maximum stay of five days on each occasion
- Visa for short-term residence (Category C), which is for single entry or multiple entries within 6 months and a maximum of 90 days' presence in Hungary
- Single-entry visa for the purpose of collecting the combined residence permit (see Section H; the visa is valid for 30 days after the entry date)

The Category A, B and C visas are so-called Schengen visas. A visa issued by a member state of Schengen is valid in Hungary. In addition, a Schengen visa issued by Hungary is valid in the entire territory of the Schengen area. Territorial restrictions may apply.

G. Work permits

Short-term work permits. The Hungarian government opened the Hungarian labor market for EEA countries on 1 January 2009. Under the current law, a work permit is not required for EEA and Swiss citizens to work in Hungary. For such citizens, the local sponsoring company must notify the Hungarian Labor Office by the date on which the EEA citizen begins working.

Individuals who are not nationals of EEA countries or Switzerland and who are assigned to Hungary for less than 90 days need to have a valid short-term work permit before beginning working in Hungary even if they are not employed by the local sponsoring company. The sponsoring company is responsible for filing a workforce demand and a separate work permit application at the regional metropolitan labor bureau. A notarized copy of the non-EEA national's qualifications must be attached to the application and must be translated by the Hungarian Office for Translation and Attestation.

The labor bureau grants a work permit to a foreign citizen if the following conditions are satisfied:

- A Hungarian or EEA citizen with appropriate skills and credentials cannot be found to fill the position.
- The foreign citizen's qualifications are appropriate for the requirements of the position.
- The type of work does not fall under the exceptions set out by the Ministry of Labor.

In general, a short-term work permit is issued within approximately 21 calendar days and is valid for a maximum of 90 days. If the work period exceeds 90 days, a combined residence and work permit application must be submitted. For further information regarding the combined permit application, see Section H.

In certain cases, a work permit may not be necessary (see Exempt categories).

Exempt categories. Work permits are not required in the following cases:

- Provisions in treaties that Hungary has entered into with other countries stipulate that a work permit is not required.
- The foreign national is a member of a diplomatic corps or an employee of an entity created by international or interstate agreements.
- The foreign national is pursuing activities connected with starting up an operation or the servicing of equipment under a contract entered into with a foreign supplier, including related services (allowed for no longer than 15 working days at a time).
- The foreign national is an executive officer or member of the supervisory board of a Hungarian company (registered by the Court of Registration) that is wholly or partially owned by foreigners or is in association with foreign nationals.
- The foreign national has been invited by a Hungarian institution of higher education, scientific research or public education to pursue internationally recognized educational, scientific or artistic activities (allowed for no more than five working days in a calendar year).
- The foreign national is engaged in providing church services as a profession in Hungarian-registered churches or their institutions.
- The foreign national's spouse is a Hungarian citizen, and the foreign national and his or her spouse live together in Hungary.
- The foreign national is a professional athlete involved in sport activities.
- The foreign national works in a profession listed in a communication of the Minister of National Economy, including employment by way of temporary agency work, and is a citizen of a country neighboring Hungary.

- The foreign national holds a permit issued by the competent authority of the first EEA member state to the intra-corporate transferee, the employment in Hungary is exercised in a host entity that belongs to the company or the group of companies specified in the permit issued by the competent authority of the first EEA member state, and the employment in Hungary does not exceed 90 days within any 180-day period.
- The foreign national is employed by an employer established in a state that is a party to the Agreement on the EEA, other than Hungary, and is performing working activity within the framework of cross-border services by way of posting or temporary assignment to a Hungarian employer for the purpose of fulfillment of a private contract.
- The foreign national is employed by a temporary work agency established in a state that is a party to the Agreement on the EEA, other than Hungary, for work performed within the framework of temporary work for a Hungarian employer.

Self-employment. Citizens of EEA-member countries may be self-employed in Hungary.

Posted workers. Posted workers performing working activities within the framework of cross-border services are not required to obtain a work permit. In these cases, the home employer must register the posting on the webpage of the Ministry of Finance. The posting fulfills the requirements for cross-border services if the home company is established in an EEA member state other than Hungary.

H. Residence visas and permits

Combined work and residence permits for non-EEA citizens. As of 1 January 2014, Hungary implemented a single combined work permit and residence permit system for non-EEA citizen workers. Under this new system, a single work permit and residence application is filed under one process at the Immigration Office. This also applies to initial, amended and renewal permit applications.

Visa-liable non-EEA citizens intending to stay and work more than 90 days within a 180-day period in Hungary must apply for a combined work and residence permit at the Hungarian embassy or consulate in the country of their permanent or usual residence. The combined permit application process may begin as soon as the Labor Office issues the certificate regarding the workforce demand filed by the Hungarian sponsoring company. In exceptional cases, if a work permit is not required (see Section G), a Letter of Assignment or employment contract and the company's documentation regarding court registration must be submitted to the embassy.

When the combined permit application of the visa-liable non-EEA citizen is approved, the applicant receives a single-entry visa, which entitles the applicant to enter Hungary and pick up his or her residence permit at the local Immigration Office. The single-entry visa is valid up to 30 days after entering Hungary (see Section F).

Visa-exempt non-EEA citizens have the right to stay in the Schengen member states, including Hungary, for up to 90 days in a 6-month period without permission. If they intend to stay and work longer in Hungary, they can apply for the combined permit either from abroad, as described above, or after they enter Hungary.

Family members must prove their family relationship (that is, a marriage certificate for a spouse and birth certificates for children).

Any documents in a foreign language other than English, French or German must be translated into Hungarian. The Hungarian Office for Translation and Attestation is the only approved translation office.

The Immigration Office adjudicates the application within 70 days of a complete submission. The combined permit cannot be issued retroactively, and working in Hungary is not allowed before the combined permit is issued.

An application for a combined permit extension must be submitted no later than 30 days before the expiration of the authorized period of stay and for a period longer than 90 days. In certain cases, a combined residence permit may be valid for a term of three years.

The residence permit for purpose of employment may be granted for a maximum of two years and may be extended for up to two years. The applicant must be a local hire in Hungary. Labor market evaluation is necessary for the residence permit for purpose of employment.

During the residence permit for purpose of employment application process, applicants must prove the following:
• They have valid passports.
• They have the necessary qualification to work in Hungary.
• Their Hungarian employer filed a workforce demand with the Labor Office.
• They receive sufficient income to live in Hungary.
• They have comprehensive health insurance or sufficient funds to use medical services.
• They have a property rental agreement or proof of ownership of property in Hungary.

The intra-corporate transfer (ICT) residence permit applies to non-EEA citizens posted in Hungary from a company established outside the EEA or Switzerland. The home and host companies must be the members of the same company group. The permit can be obtained if the posted employee has been working at the home company for at least three consecutive months. The maximum validity period is three years in the case of executive employees and specialists and one year in the case of interns. Labor market evaluation is not necessary for an ICT residence permit. The ICT residence permits cannot be extended.

Applying for an ICT residence permit is mandatory if the background of the Hungarian working activity is in line with the ICT residence permit requirements. The combined work and residence permit applies only if the ICT requirements are not met.

Non-EEA or Swiss citizens posted to the branch office of the home company may apply for a residence permit for purpose of employment.

The ICT mobility permit applies to non-EEA citizens who have already obtained an ICT permit in one of the EU countries. They may work in a second EU country (Hungary) without the need to apply for a new work and residence permit. A valid ICT permit issued by another EU country can be exchanged for an ICT mobility permit in Hungary. The maximum validity period is three years in the case of executive employees and one year in the case of interns or new joiner employees. Labor market evaluation or work permit approval is not necessary for an ICT mobility permit.

In the ICT permit application process, applicants must prove the following:

- They have valid passports.
- They have the necessary qualifications to work in Hungary.
- The conditions of the assignment are shown in the ICT agreement between the host and the home company.
- The host and the home company belong to the same company group.
- They receive sufficient income to live in Hungary.
- They have comprehensive health insurance or sufficient funds to use medical services.
- They have a property rental agreement or proof of ownership of property in Hungary.

The residence permit for a leading principal performing gainful activity applies to non-EEA citizens working in Hungary as a leading executive in a Hungarian company. If the leading principal will perform only executive tasks and no hands-on work, the maximum validity period is three years. If the leading principal will also perform hands-on work, the maximum validity period is two years.

Residence registration cards for EEA and Swiss citizens. EEA and Swiss citizens and their family members may stay in Hungary for 90 days without any permission. If they intend to stay longer, they must request EEA residence registration cards at the Hungarian Immigration Office before the 93rd day of their stay in Hungary.

EEA citizens must support their residence card application with the following:

- A valid travel document (passport or identification card)
- A completed application form
- Documents confirming the purpose of their stay in Hungary
- Certification of the applicant's financial means
- Official medical certificate or health insurance card or contract (for example, certificate of coverage or EU card)
- A property rental agreement or proof of ownership of a property in Hungary

Family members must prove their family relationship (that is, marriage certificate for spouse and birth certificate for children).

Any documents in a foreign language other than English, French or German must be translated into Hungarian. The Hungarian Office for Translation and Attestation is the only approved translation office.

An application for an EEA residence registration card takes one day to process if all required documents are provided.

The EEA residence registration card is valid until the EEA or Swiss national leaves Hungary permanently without intending to return. In this case, the residence registration card must be given back to the Immigration Office.

I. Deregistration

When foreign citizens leave Hungary permanently without the intention of returning, they should be deregistered at the Hungarian authorities. Accordingly, they should return their residence permits and address cards to the Immigration Office together with a declaration that they are permanently leaving Hungary. The Hungarian employer also must notify the Immigration Office about the termination of the foreign citizen's employment in Hungary. For EEA and Swiss citizens, the Labor Office notification should be made, at the latest, on the following day; for non-EEA citizens, the Immigration Office should be notified within three days after the foreign citizen's employment terminated.

J. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The spouse or children of an expatriate may obtain visas, permits and residence registration cards on the basis of family reunification. If entering the country as dependents, their documents are valid for the same duration as the expatriate's documents. If family members wish to engage in paid employment, they must also follow the procedure outlined in Section G.

Expatriates working in Hungary and their family members may import a car and their personal belongings without paying import duties and value-added tax (VAT). These belongings must be registered with the Customs Office.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally in Hungary with a license issued by an EEA country for as long as it is valid or with their non-EEA home country driver's licenses for up to one year. After one year, a local driver's license must be obtained, unless the foreign person holds an EEA-issued driver's license. It is useful to have an international driver's license for the one-year period.

To obtain a Hungarian driver's license, citizens of countries that have not signed the Vienna Convention on Public Vehicular Traffic must take examinations on traffic rules, technical knowledge and first aid.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents of Iceland are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on their Icelandic-source income only. Wages and remuneration may be considered Icelandic-source even if an employer does not have a permanent establishment in Iceland.

Individuals are considered residents if they permanently reside in Iceland. An individual is deemed to permanently reside where he or she is located, stays during his or her spare time, and maintains a home.

Income subject to tax. Icelandic income tax law distinguishes among several categories of income, including income from employment, self-employment, and a trade or business.

The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Resident and nonresident employees are subject to income tax on remuneration received from employment. Employment income includes wages, salaries, bonuses, directors' fees, pensions and all other compensation for services rendered.

Self-employment and business income. All resident and nonresident individuals who act independently in their own name and at their own risk are taxed on income derived from self-employment or business activities.

In general, taxable income includes all income and capital gains attributable to self-employment or business activities.

If a nonresident conducts business through a permanent establishment located in Iceland, taxable income is computed in the same manner as for resident individuals.

Investment income. Dividend income received by a resident from a resident or nonresident company is generally subject to capital income tax at a rate of 22%. Interest income and royalties are also subject to capital income tax at a rate of 22%. However, individuals are not subject to tax on the first ISK300,000 of interest income. Income received by an individual from the rental of real property is subject to capital income tax at a rate of 22%. Fifty percent of such rental income is tax-free.

Nonresidents are subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 22% (20% for legal entities) on dividends and 12% on interest income. Interest on bonds issued in the names of financial institutions or energy companies is not subject to Icelandic tax. The bonds must be issued in the enterprises' own names and registered at a central securities depository within the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), European Free Trade Association (EFTA) or the Faroe Islands. Interest paid by the Icelandic Central Bank in its own name or on behalf of the Icelandic government is not subject to the 12% withholding tax. If a nonresident has his or her domicile in a country that has entered into a double tax treaty with Iceland, the application of such treaty may result in the expatriate not being subject to tax on such income or being subject to tax at a lower rate. However, the expatriate might have to suffer withholding tax, which would subsequently be reimbursed.

Directors' fees. Payments to managing directors for day-to-day management are considered employment income and are taxed in the same manner as employment income.

If a nonresident is a member of the board of directors of an Icelandic company and bears the tax for his or her fees, the fees are subject to a 20% withholding tax and a municipal tax, which is also withheld at source.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Stock options are generally taxed on the date on which stocks are sold (not on the date of grant or exercise) as employment income. The taxable value is the difference between the exercise price and the fair market value of the shares on the date of exercise. The taxable benefit is treated as ordinary employment income. Social security contribution should be paid by the employer when the option is exercised. Accordingly, under these circumstances, the tax obligation is deferred until the year the shares are sold.

A special tax regime applies to stock options granted under approved employee share schemes. Under the special tax regime, income is taxed when the employee sells his or her shares. The taxable income is the difference between the exercise price and the sale price of the shares and is subject to the capital income tax rate of 22%. The taxable benefit is not subject to municipal tax, social security tax or pension contributions. At the end of the year, the employer must provide the tax authorities with information on employees who have exercised their share options.

Capital gains. Capital gains tax is levied on individuals at a rate of 22%. In general, a withholding tax at a rate of 22% is levied on all capital gains realized by nonresidents.

The taxable gain on shares is the difference between the shares' purchase price and selling price.

Capital gains from real estate. Gains derived from the sale of a principal residence are exempt from tax if the property has been owned for at least two years.

Capital gains on sales of privately owned buildings and land realized by nonresidents is subject to a 22% withholding tax.

Capital gains from personal property. Capital gains derived from transfers of personal property not used in a business, including stamps, jewelry or automobiles, are exempt from tax, unless such sales are considered business activities.

Capital gains realized by a business enterprise. Capital gains derived from investments and from the disposal of real estate that forms part of the net profit of an enterprise are taxable.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Expenses incurred by an employee are generally not deductible. However, proven expenses from work-related travel and upkeep (cost of accommodation, meals and fares, and other travel costs) are allowed to a certain extent. The deductible amount of the expenses is reduced by the amount of car allowances, per diem allowances or similar reimbursements of costs received by the employee. In addition, employee pension contributions up to a maximum of 8% of total employment income are deductible.

Personal allowances. In calculating state and municipal income taxes for 2021, each taxpayer is allowed a personal tax credit of ISK609,509. This tax credit is reduced proportionately if the individual is taxable in Iceland for only part of the fiscal year. The tax credit not fully used by one spouse may be transferred to the other spouse.

Business deductions. In principle, all expenses for earning, securing and maintaining income are deductible, including the following:
- Costs of material and stock
- Personnel expenses, certain taxes, rental and leasing expenses, finance charges, self-employment social security contributions, and all general and administrative expenses
- Depreciation of fixed assets
- Provisions for identified losses and expenses

Rates. Employment income tax is computed by adding a municipal tax rate to the general rate. The income tax rates for 2021 consist of a municipal rate that varies from 12.44% to 14.52%, and a progressive income tax rate (17%, 23.5% or 31.8%), depending on income. The following table sets forth the general income tax rates (income tax rate plus an average municipal tax rate of 14.45%).

Monthly income
Exceeding ISK	Not exceeding ISK	Rate %
0	349,018	31.45
349,018	979,847	37.95
979,847	—	46.25

If the total annual income tax base of a jointly taxed individual is higher than ISK11,758,159 for 2021, the income tax base in excess of that amount can be taxed at the medium progressive income tax rate of 23.5% (plus the municipal tax) instead of the income tax rate of 31.8% (plus the municipal tax), subject to the following limits:

- This applies only if the tax base of the jointly taxed individual that receives the lower amount of income is less than ISK11,758,159 and only as much as the half of the difference between ISK11,758,159 and that tax base of the jointly taxed individual receiving the lower amount of income.
- This rule applies only to a tax base of up to ISK3,784,974.

Nonresidents who carry on business through a permanent establishment in Iceland are taxed at the same rates as residents.

Relief for losses. Business losses may be carried forward for 10 years. Losses may not be carried back and may not be deducted by a successor.

B. Other taxes

Inheritance and gift taxes. The rate of inheritance tax is 10% of the market value of assets at the time of payment, exceeding ISK5 million.

Gifts and donations are subject to income tax.

Media tax and contribution to the Construction Fund for the Elderly. Individuals aged 16 to 69 who have taxable income exceeding ISK2,018,760 must pay a tax of ISK18,300 to the state-owned media in Iceland and an ISK12,034 contribution to the Construction Fund for the Elderly.

C. Social security

Contributions. Social security contributions must be paid by the employer only. These contributions cover health insurance, unemployment insurance, birth leave insurance and bankruptcy insurance. Social security contributions paid by the employer are imposed on the employer at a flat rate of 6.1% of all wages and salaries paid by the employers. Employees do not have to pay any social contribution and no social security contribution are withheld from wages or salaries.

Self-employed individuals must register for social security purposes, and as employers they are subject to the same social security contribution rate.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage (A-1 Certification), Iceland has entered into social security agreements with the following countries, including European Union/European Economic Area (EEA) countries.

Austria	Germany	Netherlands
Belgium	Greece	Norway
Bulgaria	Greenland	Poland
Croatia	Hungary	Portugal
Cyprus	Ireland	Romania
Czech Republic	Italy	Slovak Republic
Denmark	Latvia	Slovenia

Estonia	Liechtenstein	Spain
Faroe Islands	Lithuania	Sweden
Finland	Luxembourg	Switzerland
France	Malta	United Kingdom

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Icelandic tax residents must file annual income tax returns for the 2021 calendar year by 31 March 2022. Employers withhold taxes for salaried individuals. Employers that do not pay the withholding tax have a surety liability for the payment.

Nonresident taxpayers earning Icelandic-source salaries and pensions must file tax returns.

Self-employed individuals must make estimated monthly payments of tax on deemed salaries.

Married persons are taxed separately on all types of income. However, married persons are automatically jointly taxed and are jointly liable for their tax payments and jointly net their credits and debts. Tax liability arising during the marriage continues after the divorce. The above rules also apply to couples in cohabitation that choose to be jointly taxed.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Iceland has entered into double tax treaties with various countries, in addition to a multilateral treaty with the other five Nordic countries. Residents with income from non-treaty countries include the foreign-source income in their taxable income and may apply for a credit for foreign taxes paid, up to the amount of tax imposed by Iceland on the foreign-source income.

Iceland has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Albania	Greece	Norway
Austria	Greenland	Poland
Barbados	Hungary	Portugal
Belgium	India	Romania
Canada	Ireland	Russian Federation
China Mainland	Italy	Slovak Republic
Croatia	Japan	Slovenia
Cyprus	Korea (South)	Spain
Czech Republic	Latvia	Sweden
Denmark	Liechtenstein	Switzerland
Estonia	Lithuania	Ukraine
Faroe Islands	Luxembourg	United Kingdom
Finland	Malta	United States
France	Mexico	Vietnam

F. Temporary visas

Permission to enter Iceland is granted to foreign nationals who wish to visit or stay in the country for up to three months. Citizens of certain Eastern European countries and most African, Asian and Latin American countries must have visas before they may enter Iceland.

Iceland is a member of the Schengen agreement. All persons not holding a valid Schengen visa in their travel document must apply for a visa. Applications for visas may be obtained at embassies and consulates issuing visas on behalf of Iceland (in most cases, the Danish embassy).

A short-stay visa is valid for employed or self-employed persons staying in Iceland for less than three months who do not derive income in Iceland, such as tourists, students enrolled in training courses in Iceland for less than three months and businesspersons on business trips.

In general, renewals are not granted for a longer stay. However, a license to stay for longer than three months without seeking work may be obtained.

A long-term visa may be granted if a foreigner wishes to stay in Iceland for longer than 90 days for a reason not conforming to the residence permit categories and if the foreigner does not intend to reside in Iceland.

G. Work and residence permits and self-employment

Icelandic law regulates the right of foreign nationals to enter, reside and work in Iceland. To take up paid employment in Iceland, a foreign national must satisfy conditions entitling him or her to enter and reside in Iceland and hold a work permit.

For purposes of entry, residence and work in Iceland, foreign nationals are divided into different categories of workers, depending on whether they are Nordic nationals, EEA nationals or nationals of other countries.

Nordic nationals. Nationals from other Nordic countries may stay and work in Iceland without restrictions. However, if they take up residence or work in Iceland, they must register with the National Registration Office.

EEA nationals. Nationals of EEA/EFTA countries may stay and work in Iceland without a permit up to three months after their arrival in the country, or stay up to six months if they are seeking employment. If the individual resides in Iceland for longer than three months (or six months if seeking employment), he or she must register his or her right to residency with the National Registration Office. Residency in another Nordic country is not deducted from the residency period.

Non-EEA nationals. Non-EEA nationals may stay in Iceland for either the time period stated in their tourist visas, or if visa is not requested, for up to 90 days.

Non-EEA nationals who want to extend their stay and work in Iceland must obtain work permits and residence permits. The application must generally be made before entering Iceland.

Temporary work and residence permits. The following are four categories of work and residence permits based on employment:
• Permit for a job that requires expert knowledge

- Permit based on temporary shortage of laborers
- Permit for athletes
- Permit for a qualified professional based on collaboration or service contracts regarding educational, academic or scientific work

A temporary work permit is issued to the employer to allow the employment of a foreign national. A temporary work permit may be revoked if the activities of the permit holder become inconsistent with the conditions for the permit.

The following are the general conditions for the granting of a temporary work and residence permits:
- Qualified persons cannot be found in Iceland or in EEA/EFTA countries or the Faroe Islands, occupational sectors in the country lack workers or athletes, or other special reasons exist for granting such permits.
- The local trade union in the relevant branch of industry, or the appropriate national union, has provided its comment on the application.
- A signed employment contract covers a specific period or task and guarantees the employee wages and other terms of service equal to those enjoyed by local residents.
- The employer takes out health insurance for the foreign employee, which provides the same coverage as the coverage provided under the Social Security Act.
- The employer guarantees the payment of the cost of sending the employee back to his or her home if the employee becomes incapable of working for a long period as a result of illness or accident or if the employment is terminated because of reasons for which the employee is not responsible.
- A satisfactory health certificate for the employee is submitted.

A temporary work permit for a job that requires expert knowledge is granted for an initial period of up to two years. It may be renewed for up to two years at a time.

A temporary work permit based on a temporary shortage of laborers is granted for an initial period of up to one year. It may be renewed for up to one year at a time.

A temporary work permit for athletes is granted for an initial period of up to one year. It may be renewed for up to two years at a time.

A temporary work permit for qualified professionals based on collaboration or service contracts on educational, academic or scientific work is generally granted for a period of up to six months per contract.

Student Work and Residence Permit. A Student Work and Residence Permit is granted to an individual who studies in an Icelandic school. This work permit is limited to jobs connected to the student's studies or jobs during school holidays. The following are the requirements for qualification for the permit:
- A signed employment contract between the parties
- A satisfactory health certificate for the employee
- A residence permit for the student

The work ratio of the foreign national generally may not exceed 40%, with the exception of work that is performed during school vacation or in the course of vocational training. The Student Work and Residence Permit may be granted for periods of up to 12 months at a time.

Au-pair Work and Residence Permit. An Au-pair Work and Residence Permit may be granted if the basic conditions for a residence permit are fulfilled and if the applicant is not younger than 18 years and not older than 25 years when the application is submitted.

Exceptions. The following nonresident individuals do not need work permits to work for up to 90 days per year in Iceland:

- Scientists and scholars, including PhD students and interns, in relation to teaching, academic or scientific work or other similar activities. The foreign individual must hold a university degree in the field of the profession concerned.
- Artists, except musicians performing in restaurants.
- Athletic coaches.
- Representatives of companies.
- Drivers of passenger coaches registered in a foreign country that are used to transport foreign tourists.
- Foreign media reporters working for companies that do not maintain a permanent establishment in Iceland.
- Specialized employees, consultants and advisors working on the assembly, setup, inspection or repair of equipment.

Permanent work permits. Permanent work permits are no longer granted in Iceland. Instead, foreign individuals who have acquired a permanent residence permit have the right to work in Iceland without limitations.

Therefore, if a foreign individual loses his or her permanent residence permit, he or she also loses his or her right to work in Iceland without limitations.

Steps for obtaining work permits. After an employer decides to hire a non-EEA national, the administrative procedures described below must be followed and necessary permits must be obtained, depending on the citizenship of the prospective employee.

To apply for temporary work and residence permits, an employer must complete an application form and request comments from the relevant union. The union must recommend or deny the application within seven days. If recommended by the union, the employer and the employee file an application for temporary work and residence permits with the Directorate of Immigration (DI). If the DI agrees to a residence permit, it sends the application for temporary work to the Directorate of Labour (Vinnumálastofnun, or DL). If the DL agrees to a work permit, it notifies the employer and foreign individual, and sends a copy of its approval to the DI. The DI then issues a certificate for the foreigner as proof of the granted residence and work permits. The employer receives the certificate from the DI.

To apply for a permanent residence permit, the foreigner files an application with the DI. An application for a permanent residence permit must be submitted to the DI at least four weeks before the expiration of the current permit. If the DI agrees to a permanent residence permit, the DI issues a certificate as proof of the unrestricted residence. The foreign individual then receives the certificate from the DI.

To operate a business, a foreign individual must obtain permanent residence and work permits.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Immediate family members of Icelandic nationals, Nordic nationals residing in Iceland or other nationals residing in Iceland, who have one of the following residence permits, can apply for a residence permit for family unification:
- Qualified specialists
- Athletes
- Spouses or cohabiting partners
- On grounds of international protection
- On grounds of humanitarian reasons
- On grounds of special ties to Iceland
- Permanent residence permit
- Graduate or post-graduate students

In general, an application must be filed before arrival in Iceland. The application must meet certain criteria, depending on the kind of residence permit applied for (for example, financial support, health insurance and accommodation are secured). The foreigner's spouse, cohabiting partner or minor children under 18 may be present in Iceland when an application for residence permit is filed, unless the applicant is a spouse, cohabiting partner or a minor child of a student and is required to have a visa.

Immediate family members of EEA/EFTA nationals who are citizens of countries outside of the EEA/EFTA may reside in Iceland if their residence is based on the rights of an EEA/EFTA national residing in Iceland. However, the immediate family member must apply for a residence permit card within three months after arrival in Iceland (or six months if the EEA/EFTA national is seeking employment).

Marital property regime. Under Icelandic law, the marital property regime is community property. Community property includes all property brought into the marriage and all property acquired during the marriage.

Couples may elect out of the regime before or during the marriage by signing a marriage settlement, which is registered at the marriage settlement registration.

Driver's permits. A foreign driver's license is valid in Iceland for those who stay in Iceland on a temporary basis. In principle, a person who has permanent residence in Iceland must hold an Icelandic driver's license. Exceptions to this rule are discussed below.

A driver's license issued in a Nordic or EEA/EFTA country gives the holder the same rights he or she has under the license of the issuing country. The rights are based on the validity of the license, but not beyond the age of 70.

Driver's licenses issued in countries that are not parties to the EEA agreement give the holders rights to drive in Iceland for up to one month after they register a legal domicile in Iceland. After the end of this one-month period, an individual must hold an Icelandic driver's license to drive in Iceland.

In most cases, nationals of non-EEA/EFTA countries must provide a statement about good health or a health certificate issued by a doctor, whichever is appropriate, and undergo a test of qualification. The second requirement may be waived if it is determined that the conditions for a driver's license in the country where the license was issued are not less than the requirements in Iceland.

For a driver's license issued in a Nordic country or EEA/EFTA country, the Icelandic license is usually issued without the applicant needing to undergo a test of qualification or to submit a health certificate or a statement of good health.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals who are resident and ordinarily resident are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Individuals who are resident but not ordinarily resident are taxed only on India-source income, income deemed to accrue or arise in India, income received in India or income received outside India accruing or arising from either a business controlled, or a profession set up in India. Nonresidents are taxed only on Indian-source income and on income received, accruing or arising in India. Nonresidents may also be taxed on income deemed to accrue or arise in India through a business connection, through or from any asset or source of income in India, or through the transfer of a capital asset situated in India (including a share in a company incorporated in India).

Individuals are considered to be residents if they meet any of the following criteria:
- They are present in India for 182 days or more during the tax year (that is, the year in which income is earned; in India the tax year runs from 1 April to 31 March).
- They are present in India for 60 days or more during the tax year and present in India for at least 365 days in aggregate during the preceding four tax years (the 60-days condition is increased to 182 days in the case of a citizen of India who leaves India in any tax year as a member of the crew of an Indian ship or for the purposes of employment outside India or in the case of a citizen of India or a person of Indian origin who, being outside India, comes for a visit to India in a tax year).

For the 2019-20 tax year (1 April 2019 to 31 March 2020), a one-time relaxation has been provided to exclude a period of "forced" stay in India for an individual who had come to India on a visit before 22 March 2020, subject to certain conditions.

Further, effective from the tax year commencing on 1 April 2020, the 60-days condition is replaced by a 120-days condition in the case of a citizen of India or a person of Indian origin who, being outside India, comes for a visit to India and whose total

India-source income exceeds INR1.5 million during the relevant tax year.

Indian citizens whose total India-source income exceeds INR1.5 million during the relevant tax year and who are not liable to tax in any other country or territory by reason of their domicile or residence or any other criteria of a similar nature are deemed to be resident in India. However, this will not apply if an Indian citizen in any way qualifies as a resident of India as per the primary conditions for determination of residency as set out above.

Effective from 1 April 2021, "liable to tax" in relation to a person and with reference to a country is defined to mean that there is an income tax liability on such individual under the law of that country for the time being in force and includes an individual who has subsequently been exempted from such liability under the law of that country.

Individuals who do not meet the above criteria are considered to be nonresidents.

Once an individual qualifies as resident, the next step is to ascertain whether such individual qualifies as resident and ordinarily resident or as resident but not ordinarily resident.

Individuals are considered resident but not ordinarily resident if, in addition to meeting one of the above tests, they satisfy any of the following conditions:
- They were nonresident in India in 9 out of the preceding 10 tax years.
- They were present in India for 729 days or less during the previous 7 tax years.
- They are Indian citizens or persons of Indian origin who, being outside India, come for a visit to India for 120 days or more but less than 182 days and whose total India-source income exceeds INR1.5 million during the relevant tax year.
- They are Indian citizens qualifying as resident in India on account of the deemed residency provision described above.

Residents who do not qualify as not ordinarily resident are considered to be resident and ordinarily resident.

All employees are subject to tax, unless they are exempt under the Income Tax Act, 1961 or applicable tax treaties.

Income subject to tax. In general, all income received or accrued in India is subject to tax.

The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. All salary income relating to services rendered in India is deemed to accrue or arise in India regardless of where it is received or the residential status of the recipient.

Employees of foreign enterprises who are citizens of foreign jurisdictions are not subject to tax if all of the following conditions are satisfied:
- The foreign enterprise is not engaged in a trade or business in India.

- The employee does not stay in India for more than 90 days in the tax year.
- The compensation paid is not claimed by the employer as a deduction from taxable income in India.

Similar exemptions are available under tax treaties if the stay is less than 183 days, but conditions vary. Nonresident foreign citizens employed on foreign ships who stay in India no longer than 90 days in a tax year are also exempt from tax on their salary.

In general, most elements of salary are taxable in India. However, the following benefits may receive preferential tax treatment, subject to certain requirements:

- Company-provided housing. If the accommodation (including a house, flat, farmhouse or accommodation in a caravan, mobile home, ship or other floating structure) is owned by the employer, the amount of the benefit from company-provided housing equals a specified percentage of salary. The percentage is 15% for cities having a population of more than 2,500,000, 10% for cities having a population of more than 1 million but not more than 2,500,000, and 7.5% for other areas. The population that determines the percentage of salary to be considered for the housing benefit is based on the 2001 census. In other words, to determine the population of any city in India for the purpose of computing the taxable value of the housing benefit, the 2001 census needs to be referred to. The benefit computed above is reduced by the amount recovered from the employee. If the accommodation is leased by the employer, the amount of the benefit equals the lower of actual rent paid or 15% of salary, less the amount recovered from the employee. Furniture and appliances provided by the employer in the accommodation are taxed at a rate of 10% per year of the cost of items owned by the employer or the actual hire charges, reduced by any charges recovered from the employee, if the employer hires the items. These provisions do not apply to an accommodation provided to an employee working at a mining site or an onshore oil exploration site, a project execution site, a dam site, a power generation site or an offshore site that meets either of the following conditions:
  - It is of a temporary nature, has a plinth area not exceeding 800 square feet and is located not less than 8 kilometers away from the local limits of a municipality or cantonment board.
  - It is located in a remote area (that is, an area that is located at least 40 kilometers away from a town having a population not exceeding 20,000, based on the latest published all-India census).
- Hotel accommodation. If an employee is provided with hotel accommodation (including licensed accommodation in the nature of motel, service apartment or guest house), tax is imposed on the lower of the actual charges paid by the employer for rent or 24% of salary, reduced by any amount recovered from the employee, unless the accommodation is provided for up to 15 days on transfer. Such accommodation provided for relocation is exempt from tax.
- Interest-free or low-interest loans. The benefit of interest-free loans or low-interest loans exceeding INR20,000 to an employee or to a member of an employee's household is taxable. The taxable value equals the notional interest computed at a prescribed rate on the maximum outstanding monthly balance, reduced by the interest recovered from the employee. However, no amount is taxable if the loan is provided for medical treatment with respect to "specified diseases," subject to certain conditions. The interest rate is the rate notified by State Bank of India as of the first day of the tax year (for the 2021-22 tax year, the first day is 1 April 2021) for loans obtained for the same purpose as the loan provided by the employer.

- Company-provided car. If a car is owned or hired by the employer and is used exclusively for the employee's personal purposes and if the running and maintenance expenses are reimbursed by the employer, the taxable value of the company-provided car equals the actual amount of expenditure incurred by the employer and the normal wear and tear of the car. This computed benefit is reduced by the amount recovered from the employee. If such car is used for both official and personal purposes, imputed perquisite taxation of INR1,800 or INR2,400 per month applies depending on the cubic capacity of the car. An additional imputed perquisite amount of INR900 applies if a chauffeur is provided by the employer. If such car is used wholly and exclusively in the performance of official duties, such benefit is not taxable in the hands of the employee, provided that the employer maintains prescribed documentation.
- Employer-paid taxes on "non-monetary" benefits. In general, the amount of tax paid by an employer on behalf of an employee is grossed up and taxed as additional income. The employer may pay taxes on "non-monetary" benefits without taking into account the gross-up. However, in such a situation, the employer cannot deduct such taxes paid in computing its taxable income.

Contributions to Indian retirement benefit funds, including provident and superannuation funds, paid by employers are not included in an employee's taxable compensation to the extent that they do not exceed specified limits. Effective from 1 April 2020, the aggregate of employer contributions to provident funds, the national pension system and approved superannuation funds in excess of INR750,000 is taxable in the hands of the employee. The annual accretions on employer contributions in excess of INR750,000 are also taxable, as per the prescribed rules.

Effective from 1 April 2021, if the employee's contribution made in a tax year to a recognized provident fund exceeds INR250,000/INR500,000 (as applicable), the annual accretion on such excess contribution is taxable in the hands of the employee. Separate rules have been notified to compute the taxable value of such annual accretion.

Effective from 1 April 2021, separate rules are specified to provide relief from taxation in income from a retirement benefit account maintained in a specified country.

Certain allowances, including house rent allowances and leave travel concessions, are either tax-exempt or included in taxable income at a lower value, subject to certain conditions. A bonus paid at the beginning or end of the employment period is included in taxable salary income.

A standard deduction of INR50,000 or the amount of salary received, whichever is lower, is allowed in computing the income chargeable under the salaries head. The standard deduction was introduced, effective from 1 April 2018, in lieu of the earlier exemption with respect to the transport allowance of up to INR19,200 per year (except in the case of disabled persons) and reimbursement of medical expenses up to INR15,000 per year. This standard deduction needs to be forgone if an individual opts for the new concessional tax regime (see Concessional tax regime).

Any compensation income or related income due or received by individuals in connection with termination or modification of their employment that is not otherwise covered under the specific measure relating to salary taxation is taxed as income from other sources.

In June 2021, tax relief was announced for financial assistance received from employers or other persons for COVID-19 medical treatment or any ex-gratia payment received by the family members on the death of an employee or individual.

Self-employment and business income. All individuals who are self-employed or in business in India are subject to tax.

The computation of an individual's income from a business is similar to the computation of income of a corporation. However, an individual may maintain accounts on a cash or accrual basis if the gross receipts exceed a specified limit.

Taxpayers may generally deduct from gross business income all business-related expenses. Personal expenses and capital expenditure other than expenditure for scientific research are not deductible. Allowable depreciation must be claimed up to the available limit.

Business losses (other than speculation losses) incurred in the current year can be set off against income under any other head except the salaries head. If business losses in the current year cannot be wholly set off, such business losses may be carried forward for eight years if the income tax return for the year of the losses is filed on time. However, the losses carried forward can be set off against business income only. Unabsorbed losses from speculative transactions may be carried forward for four years only and can be set off against profits from speculative business only. Unabsorbed depreciation may be carried forward indefinitely.

Investment income. Effective from 1 April 2020, dividend income that was earlier exempt in the hands of recipients is now taxable in their hands. Dividend income is subject to withholding tax. The withholding tax rate for resident shareholders is 10% (in view of the COVID-19 pandemic, withholding tax is reduced to 7.5% for the period of 14 May 2020 to 31 March 2021). No tax withholding is required if the payment of dividends does not exceed INR5,000 during a given tax year. Nonresidents are subject to a withholding tax rate of 20% (plus surcharge [if applicable] and health and education cess). Nonresidents can opt for the lower tax withholding rate as prescribed under a tax treaty, subject to furnishing of necessary documentation.

Dividends received from Indian and foreign companies are subject to tax in the hands of resident individuals at the normal tax rates. Dividends are taxable in the hands of nonresidents at the lower of 20% (plus surcharge [if applicable] and health and education cess) or the applicable tax treaty rate.

Interest earned on securities, investments, advances and bank deposits in India is taxable. Taxes are withheld at source by the banks, cooperative societies and post offices if the interest exceeds INR40,000 (INR5,000 in other cases) in the tax year except in certain specified cases. The limit of INR40,000 is increased to INR50,000 for resident senior citizen individuals who are age 60 or older. The rate of the withholding tax is 10% (in view of the COVID-19 pandemic, the withholding tax rate is reduced to 7.5% for the period of 14 May 2020 to 31 March 2021). This withholding tax is not a final tax.

The following interest is exempt from tax:
- Interest earned on nonresident external (NRE) accounts of individuals who qualify as persons resident outside India according to the exchange control laws (see Section I) or who are permitted by the Reserve Bank of India (central bank) to maintain such accounts
- Interest payable by scheduled banks (on approved foreign-currency deposits) to nonresidents and to persons who are resident but not ordinarily resident

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are taxed at the progressive rates listed in Rates. Tax is required to be withheld at source at a rate of 10% from directors' fees paid to residents (in view of the COVID-19 pandemic, the withholding tax rate is reduced to 7.5% for the period of 14 May 2020 to 31 March 2021). Expenses incurred wholly and exclusively for earning fees are allowed as deductions.

Transactions above INR50,000. Transactions above INR50,000 are taxable in certain cases. Any sum of money in excess of INR50,000 received by an individual without consideration is taxable in the hands of the recipient.

If the fair market value or stamp duty value of movable or immovable property received from a non-relative without consideration exceeds INR50,000, the fair market value or stamp duty value is taxable as income from other sources.

If movable or immovable property is received for consideration that is less than the fair market value or stamp duty of the property by an amount exceeding INR50,000 and an amount equal to 10% of the consideration (for immovable property), then the difference between the fair market value or stamp duty value and consideration is taxable as income from other sources.

However, exclusions to this rule exist with respect to any sum of money or property received in the following circumstances:
- From a relative (as defined in the Income Tax Act, 1961)
- On the occasion of the marriage of the individual
- Under a will, by way of an inheritance or in contemplation of death of the payer
- From a local authority as defined in the Income Tax Act, 1961

- From a fund, foundation, university or other educational institution, hospital or other medical institution, as defined in the Income Tax Act, 1961
- From a trust or institution registered under the Income Tax Act, 1961
- By way of transactions not regarded as transfers, such as amalgamations or demergers of companies or total or partial partitions of Hindu Undivided Families

Gifts made by persons resident in India to persons resident outside India are taxed in the hands of the recipients, subject to certain exceptions and conditions as may be prescribed.

No person is permitted to receive cash amounting to INR200,000 or more with respect to a single transaction, in aggregate from a person in a day or with respect to a transaction related to one event or occasion from a person. These restrictions do not apply to the government, banking companies, post office savings banks or cooperative banks.

Rental income. Rental income received by an individual from the leasing of house property (including buildings or land appurtenant thereto) is taxable at the value determined in accordance with specific provisions. The following deductions from such value are allowed:
- Taxes paid to local authorities on such property
- A sum equal to 30% of the net value (value after allowing deduction of tax paid to local authorities)
- Interest payable on capital borrowed for the purpose of purchase, construction, repair, renewal or reconstruction of property

An individual owning up to two house properties (subject to conditions) is not required to offer any notional rent (rent that a similar property would fetch) to tax, unless the house properties are actually leased out.

Losses from house property incurred in the current year can be set off against income under any other head of income, up to INR200,000. The balance of losses that cannot be wholly set off in the current year can be carried forward for eight years. However, the losses carried forward can be set off against income from house property only. Losses from house property cannot be set off or carried forward if an individual opts for the new concessional tax regime (see Concessional tax regime).

Capital gains and losses

Capital gains on assets other than shares and securities. Capital gains derived from the transfer of short-term capital assets are taxed at normal rates.

The sales proceeds from a depreciable asset must be applied to reduce the declining-balance value of the class of assets (including additions during the year) to which the asset belongs. If the sales proceeds exceed the declining-balance value of a relevant class of assets, the excess is treated as a short-term capital gain and is taxed at the normal tax rates.

Long-term capital gains are gains on assets that have been held for more than three years. Long-term capital gains are exempt from tax in certain cases, subject to certain limits, if the gains are reinvested in a specified new asset within a prescribed time period. If, within three years after purchase, the new assets are sold or, in certain cases, used as a security for a loan or an advance, the capital gains derived from the sale of the original asset are subject to tax in the year the new assets are sold or used as a security. For purposes of qualifying as a long-term capital asset, the period of holding of immovable property (land and/or building) is two years.

Long-term capital gains (not exceeding INR20 million) accruing to an individual on the sale of a residential house are exempt if the capital gain is invested in two residential house properties in India (at the individual's option). This option can be used by an individual only once in his or her lifetime.

Capital gains on shares and securities listed on a stock exchange in India. Long-term capital gains (gains derived from listed securities held longer than one year) derived in excess of INR100,000 from the transfer of equity shares or units of an equity-oriented fund listed on a recognized stock exchange in India or units of a business trust in India, on which Securities Transaction Tax (STT) has been paid at the time of transfer and acquisition, are taxed at a rate of 10% (plus surcharge [if applicable] and health and education cess). However, the requirement of STT paid at the time of acquisition of equity shares applies only to shares acquired on or after 1 October 2004. In addition, for equity shares or units acquired before 1 February 2018, gains earned are grandfathered as per the prescribed mechanism. Long-term capital gains arising on the transfer of zero-coupon bonds and listed debentures are taxed at a rate of 10% (plus surcharge [if applicable] and health and education cess) without inflation adjustments.

Short-term capital gains derived from the transfer of equity shares or units of equity-oriented funds on a recognized stock exchange in India are taxable at a reduced rate of 15% (plus health and education cess) if STT is chargeable on such transaction.

Inflation adjustments. In calculating long-term capital gains, the cost of assets may be adjusted for inflation. For assets held on or before 1 April 2001, the market value on 1 April 2001 may be substituted for cost in calculating gains. However, this adjustment to market value is not available in the following cases:
- Transfer of shares of an Indian company acquired with foreign currency by nonresidents
- Transfer of bonds or debentures by residents or nonresidents, regardless of the currency with which the acquisition is made
- Transfer of equity shares or units of an equity-oriented fund listed on a recognized stock exchange in India or units of a business trust

For inflation adjustments, the base year is the 2001-02 tax year for which the inflation index is 100. The notified cost inflation index for assets sold during the 2021-22 tax year is 317.

Capital gains on unlisted shares and securities in India. Long-term capital gains (from shares not listed on any stock exchange in India, including shares of a foreign company listed on stock exchange outside India, and other specified securities held longer than two years) are taxable at a rate of 20% (plus applicable surcharge and health and education cess) after inflation adjustments. For nonresidents, the gains are taxable at a reduced rate of 10% (plus applicable surcharge and health and education cess) without inflation adjustments.

Short-term capital gains derived from the transfer of the above shares and securities are taxed at the normal progressive rates (see Rates).

Setting off capital losses. Short-term and long-term capital losses may not offset other income. Short-term capital losses arising during the tax year can be set off against short-term capital gains or long-term capital gains. The balance of short-term losses may be carried forward to the following eight tax years and offset short-term or long-term capital gains arising in those years.

Long-term capital losses arising during the tax year can be set off only against long-term capital gains and not against any other income. The balance of long-term losses may be carried forward to the following eight tax years and offset long-term capital gains arising in those years. To claim a carryforward and the set-off of losses, the tax return must be filed within the prescribed time limits.

Effective from 1 April 2021, proceeds received from a unit-linked insurance policy may become taxable if premiums payable for any of the tax years during the policy term exceed INR250,000. This will apply to unit-linked insurance policies that are issued on or after 1 February 2021. This income is chargeable to tax as capital gains.

Capital gains on foreign-exchange assets. Nonresident Indian nationals may be subject to a 10% withholding tax on long-term capital gains on specified foreign-exchange assets.

Nonresidents are protected from fluctuations in the value of the Indian rupee on sales of shares or debentures of an Indian company because the capital gains are computed in the currency used to acquire the shares or debentures. After being computed, the capital gains are converted into Indian rupees. Inflation adjustments are not permitted for this computation.

Taxation of Long Term Incentive Plans. Income arising from Long Term Incentive Plans (LTIPs) is taxed as salary income in the hands of the employees at the time of the allotment of the shares. The value of the long term incentive (LTI) for tax purposes is the fair market value (FMV) as of the date on which the LTI is exercised by the employee, reduced by the amount of the exercise price paid by the employee. For this purpose, the FMV is the value determined in accordance with the method prescribed under the Income Tax Act, 1961.

In calculating the capital gains arising at the time of sale of shares acquired under schemes referred to in the preceding paragraph, the acquisition cost is the FMV as of the date of exercise that was taken into account to determine the taxable income at the time of allotment of shares.

The Indian government has prescribed the valuation rules to determine the FMV. These rules are summarized below.

Valuation of shares listed on a recognized stock exchange in India. If the shares of a company are listed on a recognized stock exchange in India on the date of exercise of the LTI, the FMV is the average of the opening price and the closing price of the shares on the stock exchange on that date. However, if the shares are listed on more than one recognized stock exchange, the FMV is the average of the opening and closing price of the shares on the recognized stock exchange that records the highest volume of trading in the shares.

If no trading in the shares occurs on any recognized stock exchange on the exercise date, the FMV is the closing price on the closest date preceding the date of exercise of the LTI.

Valuation of unlisted shares or shares listed only on overseas stock exchanges. If, on the date of exercise of the LTI, the shares in the company are not listed on a recognized stock exchange in India, the FMV of the share must be determined by a recognized Merchant Banker (Category 1 Merchant Banker registered with the prescribed authorities).

The FMV can be determined on the date of exercise of the LTI or any date that falls within 180 days before the exercise date.

Effective from 1 April 2020, relief in the form of deferral of tax payment is provided to an employee whose income includes an LTIP benefit granted by an eligible start-up (as defined under the Income Tax Act, 1961). The tax on such LTIP benefit needs to be paid within 14 days of the earliest of the following:
- Completion of five years from the fiscal year in which the LTIP option is exercised
- The date on which the individual ceases to be an employee of the start-up
- The date of sale of such shares by the employee

Deductions. For individuals, a deduction of up to INR150,000 from gross total income may be claimed for prescribed contributions to life insurance, savings instruments and pension funds, such as the National Pension System (NPS).

An additional deduction of up to INR50,000 is allowed for contributions made by taxpayers to the NPS.

A deduction for contributions made by employers of taxpayers to the NPS is also allowed up to a specified limit.

Tax exemption on partial withdrawal from NPS is allowed to the extent of 25% of the employee's contribution, subject to certain conditions. A withdrawal from the NPS, on account of closure or opting out of the NPS scheme, to the extent of 60% of the accumulated corpus (consists of the contributions made to the NPS account and the accretions to such amounts) is not taxable and the balance is also not taxable if it is invested in annuities. In addition, a one-time tax exemption is provided for the transfer of an accumulated balance from the Employees' Provident Fund (EPF; see Section C) to the NPS. An amount received by the nominee (must be an individual) under the NPS, on the death of the taxpayer, is not deemed to be income of the nominee under certain specified circumstances.

Interest paid on loans obtained for pursuing higher education is fully deductible. However, no deduction is available for repayment of the principal amount. Taxpayers are also eligible to claim an additional deduction of up to INR50,000 or INR150,000 for interest paid on loans obtained for the purchase of residential property, subject to certain conditions.

Taxpayers are also eligible to claim an additional deduction of up to INR150,000 on interest paid on loans to purchase electric vehicles, subject to certain conditions.

A deduction of up to INR10,000 may be claimed by individuals (other than resident senior citizens) with respect to interest on deposits in a savings account with a banking company, specified co-operative society or post office. Resident senior citizens (at least 60 years of age at any time during the tax year) can claim a deduction of INR50,000 for interest earned on savings and fixed deposits, interest on post office deposits and interest on deposits held in cooperative societies engaged in the business of banking.

Medical insurance premiums for recognized policies in India may be deducted, up to a maximum of INR25,000 (INR50,000 if the insured is a resident of India and is age 60 or older) against aggregate income from all sources. An additional deduction up to a maximum of INR25,000 is allowed to an individual for medical insurance premiums paid by the individual for his or her parents (INR50,000 if the insured is a resident of India and is age 60 or older). The above limit applies to the total amount paid for both parents. Payments up to INR5,000 made for a preventive health checkup are also eligible for deduction within the above limit. Senior citizens (resident individuals of age 60 or above) are also eligible for a deduction to the extent of INR50,000 with respect to medical expenses incurred by them if they do not have insurance coverage. In the case of single premium health insurance policies having coverage of more than one year, such deduction is allowed on a proportionate basis for the number of years for which health insurance coverage is provided, subject to the specified monetary limit.

Donations to religious, charitable and other specified funds are eligible for deductions from taxable income of up to 50% or 100%, as prescribed. Donations exceeding INR2,000 paid in cash are not eligible for deduction.

All of the above deductions (except the deduction for employer's contribution to the NPS) need to be foregone if a taxpayer opts for the new concessional tax regime (see Concessional tax regime).

Rates

Normal tax regime. The following tax rates apply to resident and nonresident individual taxpayers for the 2021-22 tax year.

Taxable income INR	Tax rate %	Tax due INR	Cumulative tax due INR
First 250,000	0	—	—
Next 250,000	5	12,500	12,500
Next 500,000	20	100,000	112,500
Above 1,000,000	30	—	—

Individuals with income up to INR250,000 do not pay the income tax and health and education cess. The exemption limit is INR300,000 for resident senior citizens age 60 to 80 at any time during the financial year. For very senior citizens (defined as resident individuals at the age of 80 or above), the exemption limit is INR500,000.

For individuals whose total taxable income exceeds INR5 million and is up to INR 10 million, a surcharge applies at a rate of 10% of the total tax payable. If the total taxable income exceeds INR10 million and is up to INR 20 million, the rate of the surcharge is increased to 15% of the total tax payable. If the total taxable income exceeds INR20 million and is up to INR 50 million, the rate of the surcharge is increased to 25% of the total tax payable. If the total taxable income exceeds INR50 million, the rate of the surcharge is increased to 37% of the total tax payable. The increased rate of the surcharge to 25% and 37% is not applicable for dividends, capital gains earned on the sale of specified assets such as equity shares in a company, units of an equity-oriented mutual funds and units of a business trust subject to STT. Marginal relief is allowed to ensure that the additional amount of income tax payable, including surcharge, on the excess of income over the respective limits of INR5 million, INR10 million, INR20 million and INR50 million is limited to the amount by which the income exceeds such limits.

Health and education cess is levied at a rate of 4% on the tax payable and surcharge. The following are the maximum marginal tax rates:

- If total annual income is INR5 million or less, the maximum marginal tax rate is effectively 31.2% (30% + 4% health and education cess).
- If total annual income is more than INR5 million but not more than INR10 million, the maximum marginal tax rate is effectively 34.32% (30% + 10% surcharge + 4% health and education cess).
- If total annual income is more than INR10 million but more than INR20 million, the maximum marginal tax rate is effectively 35.88% (30% + 15% surcharge + 4% health and education cess).
- If total annual income (excluding dividends and capital gains on specified assets) is more than INR20 million but not more than INR50 million, the maximum marginal tax rate is effectively 39% (30% + 25% surcharge + 4% health and education cess).
- If total annual income (excluding dividends and capital gains on specified assets) is more than INR50 million, the maximum marginal tax rate is effectively 42.74% (30% + 37% surcharge + 4% health and education cess).

The following table shows the effective tax rates.

Taxable income INR	Tax rate %	Tax due INR	Cumulative tax due INR
First 250,000	0	0	0
Next 250,000	5.20	13,000	13,000
Next 500,000	20.80	104,000	117,000
Next 4,000,000	31.2	1,248,000	1,365,000
Next 5,000,000	34.32	1,852,500	3,217,500
Next 10,000,000	35.88	3,734,250	6,951,750
Next 30,000,000	39.00	12,304,500	19,256,250
Above 50,000,000	42.744	—	—

Resident individuals with total taxable income up to INR500,000 are allowed a tax rebate equal to the total amount of tax payable or INR12,500, whichever is less.

Concessional tax regime. Effective from the tax year beginning on 1 April 2020, an individual can opt for a new concessional tax regime with reduced tax rates. An individual opting for the new concessional tax regime must forgo certain exemptions and deductions in order to claim the benefit of the following concessional tax rates:

Taxable income INR	Tax rate %	Tax due INR	Cumulative tax due INR
First 250,000	0	—	—
Next 250,000	5	12,500	12,500
Next 250,000	10	25,000	37,500
Next 250,000	15	37,500	75,000
Next 250,000	20	50,000	125,000
Next 250,000	25	62,500	187,500
Above 1,500,000	30	—	—

The above tax rates are increased by a surcharge and health and education cess. The rates of the surcharge and health and education cess are same as those under the normal tax regime (see Normal tax regime).

The option to avail the benefit of the concessional tax regime can be exercised by an individual having no business or professional income each year at the time of filing of his or her tax return.

The option to avail the benefit of the concessional tax regime by an individual having business or professional income if exercised shall also apply to subsequent tax years (subject to specified conditions).

Special rates for nonresidents. For nonresident taxpayers, the tax rate is 10% for royalties and fees for technical services and 20% for dividends.

Nonresident Indian nationals (including persons of Indian origin) may exercise an option to be taxed at a flat rate of 20% on gross investment income (without any deductions) arising from foreign-currency assets acquired in India through remittances in convertible foreign exchange.

Effective from 1 October 2020, a remittance from India of a sum of INR700,000 or more is subject to tax collection at source at a rate of 5% of the amount of the remittance exceeding INR700,000.

B. Other taxes

Net wealth tax. Wealth tax was abolished, effective from 1 April 2015.

Estate and gift taxes. India does not impose tax on estates, inheritances or gifts. However, as mentioned in Transactions above INR50,000 in Section A, any sum of money received by an individual in excess of INR50,000 without consideration is taxable in the hands of the recipient.

Black Money (Undisclosed Foreign Income and Assets) and Imposition of Tax Act, 2015. In 2015, the Indian government enacted the Black Money (Undisclosed Foreign Income and Assets) and Imposition of Tax Act, 2015 (Black Money Act) to tax undisclosed foreign income and assets (UFIA) held outside India by individuals who qualify as resident and ordinarily resident. An individual who has UFIA is taxed at a rate of 30% with a penalty of up to 300% of the tax. In addition, imprisonment of up to 10 years is possible.

If income from any foreign source is not reported on the taxpayer's income tax return, or if a failure to file an income tax return declaring such income occurs, the overseas income is considered to be undisclosed income. Overseas assets include assets, such as financial interests in entities, movable and immovable assets and bank accounts), held directly or beneficially by the taxpayer. The asset is deemed to be undisclosed if the taxpayer is unable to satisfactorily explain the source of investment.

Taxpayers who are ordinarily resident in India have additional disclosure requirements with respect to foreign assets held by them. Failure to comply with such disclosure requirements results in a penalty of INR1 million in addition to tax and a penalty under the Black Money Act.

The 2019 Union Budget has clarified that the taxpayer's residential status in the tax year in which the income is earned or the asset is acquired is the determinative factor for the applicability of the Black Money Act.

C. Social security

Social security in India is governed by the Employees' Provident Funds and Miscellaneous Provisions Act, 1952 (EPF Act). The EPF Act contains the following three principal schemes:
- Employees' Provident Funds Scheme, 1952
- Employees' Pension Scheme, 1995
- Employees' Deposit-Linked Insurance, 1976

Coverage. The EPF Act applies to the following establishments:
- An establishment employing 20 or more persons engaged in a specified industry or an establishment or class of establishments notified by the central government
- An establishment employing less than 20 persons that opts voluntarily to be covered by the EPF Act

Covered employers must make a contribution toward the Employees' Provident Funds Scheme and the Employees' Pension Scheme for their eligible employees including International Workers. Under the EPF Act, the following employees are considered to be International Workers:

- An Indian employee (an Indian passport holder) who has worked or is going to work in a foreign country with which India has entered into a social security agreement and who is or will be eligible to receive benefits under a social security program of that country, in accordance with such agreement
- A person who holds a foreign passport and is working for an establishment in India to which the EPF Act applies

Under a circular issued by the Provident Fund authorities, an Indian employee who returns to work in India after having worked in a country with which India has entered into a social security agreement is not considered an International Worker.

An "excluded employee" is not covered by the EPF Act. An employee is considered to be an "excluded employee" if both of the following conditions are satisfied:

- The employee is an International Worker who is contributing to a social security program of his or her country of origin, either as citizen or resident.
- The employee's home country has entered into a social security agreement with India on a reciprocity basis, and the employee is considered to be a detached worker under the social security agreement and has obtained a Certificate of Coverage from the home country social security authorities.

Social security agreements. India has entered into social security agreements with Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, the Czech Republic, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Hungary, Japan, Korea (South), Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Sweden and Switzerland. It has also signed social security agreements with Brazil and Quebec, but these agreements have not yet entered into force. India has not entered into a social security agreement with Singapore. However, benefits under a social security agreement are sought to be provided through a Comprehensive Economic Cooperation Agreement (CECA) between India and Singapore.

Contributions. Every covered employer is required to contribute 24% (12% each for the employer's and the employee's share) of the employee's "monthly pay" (as defined) toward the Employees' Provident Fund and Employees' Pension Fund. The employer has the option to recover the employee's share from the employee.

For employees who are existing members as of 1 September 2014, out of the employer's 12% share of the contribution, 8.33% of monthly pay is allocated to the Employees' Pension Fund. The balance of the contributions is deposited into the Employees' Provident Fund.

For employees (including International Workers) who become members on or after 1 September 2014 and draw monthly pay exceeding INR15,000, the entire contribution is allocated to the Employees' Provident Fund.

Local employees who draw a "monthly pay" of INR15,000 or more are excluded from the legislation unless they are already covered, but this exclusion does not apply to International Workers. Consequently, contributions are required for International Workers even if the monthly pay of the employee exceeds INR15,000.

The employer contributions are exempt from tax up to 12% of monthly pay.

Withdrawal. An International Worker can make a withdrawal from the Provident Fund only in the following circumstances:
- He or she retires or reaches the age of 58, whichever is later.
- He or she suffers permanent and total incapacitation.

However, in the case of an International Worker covered under a social security agreement entered into between India and the home country, the following rules apply to withdrawals by individuals from the Provident Fund:
- Individuals may withdraw their contributions (and interest) from the Provident Fund on ceasing to be an employee in an establishment covered by the EPF Act.
- The amount due to the individual with respect to his or her Provident Fund contributions is payable to the individual's bank account either directly or through the employer.

For International Workers covered under a social security agreement that contains provisions relating to "totalization of period," the period of coverage in India and the period of coverage under the relevant social security scheme of the other country are aggregated to determine eligibility for pension benefits.

In view of the COVID-19 pandemic, eligible Provident Fund members can claim a non-refundable advance from their Provident Fund account to the extent of lower of the following:
- Three months' monthly pay
- Up to 75% of the corpus in the employee's Provident Fund account (which covers the employer's contributions, the employee's contribution and interest accrued to date)

The facility to apply for a non-refundable advance will be available for as long as it allowed by the appropriate authorities.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Income tax filing and payment. All income is taxed using a tax year from 1 April to 31 March. All taxpayers, including nonresidents, must file returns if their taxable income exceeds the exempt amount. Resident and ordinarily resident individuals who have an asset (including a financial interest in an entity) located outside India, signing authority in an account outside India or income from any source outside India must file a return even if they do not have any taxable income.

The following taxpayers must file returns if any of the following conditions are met during the tax year:
- The taxpayer's deposits in one or more current accounts exceeds INR10 million.
- The taxpayer's expenditure incurred on foreign travel exceeds INR200,000.

- The taxpayer's electricity expenditure exceeds INR100,000.
- Other prescribed conditions are satisfied.

Income tax returns for salary income must be filed by 31 July; returns for self-employment or business income must also be filed by 31 July or, if the accounts are subject to a tax audit, by 31 October.

For the 2020-21 tax year, the due date of tax filing has been extended to 31 December 2021 and 15 February 2022, respectively.

Taxpayers who do not file their tax returns by the due dates may file their tax return within three months prior to the end of the relevant tax year or before completion of a tax audit by the tax authorities, whichever is earlier (for the 2020-21 tax year, the due date is extended to 31 March 2022). A fee of INR5,000 is required to be paid if such return is not filed within the above stated due dates. If the taxable income of the taxpayer is less than INR500,000, the fee payable is INR1,000. Tax returns must be filed electronically by taxpayers who have taxable income exceeding INR500,000 or who are claiming a foreign tax credit or a tax refund on their Indian tax return.

Taxpayers who have filed their tax returns after the due date are eligible to revise such returns at any time within three months prior to the end of the relevant tax year or before completion of a tax audit by the tax authorities (for the 2020-21 tax year, the due date is extended to 31 March 2022).

Taxpayers who are ordinarily resident in India and have additional disclosure requirements relating to foreign assets held by them for the purpose of investment are also required to file their returns electronically.

India does not have a concept of joint filing. As a result, married persons are taxed separately. If an individual directly or indirectly transfers an asset to his or her spouse for inadequate consideration, income derived from the transferee's asset is deemed to be the income of the transferor spouse. If an individual has a substantial interest in a business, remuneration paid by the business to the individual's spouse is taxed to the individual, unless the remuneration is attributable solely to the application of the spouse's technical or professional knowledge and experience. Passive income of minor children is aggregated with the income of the parent with the higher income.

Taxpayers with employment income pay tax through tax withheld by employers from monthly salaries each pay period. Taxpayers with tax liability exceeding INR10,000 must make advance tax payments, after deducting credit for tax withheld, in four installments on 15 June, 15 September, 15 December and 15 March.

Taxpayers are required to quote their Permanent Account Number (PAN), which is the tax identification number, in all correspondence with the Indian Revenue. The PAN is now mandatory. All individuals who are required to file an income tax return are required to obtain a PAN. In addition, the quoting of the PAN is now mandatory for every financial transaction above INR200,000.

The law prescribes a tax withholding at the higher of the prescribed rate or 20% if the taxpayer's PAN is not available. However, effective from 1 June 2016, nonresident taxpayers are exempt from furnishing the PAN with respect to certain specified payments if a specified alternative document is submitted.

The Unique Identification Authority of India on behalf of the government of India issues the Aadhaar Card, which contains a 12-digit unique identification number. Effective from 1 July 2017, the government has mandated the quoting of the Aadhaar Number/ Aadhaar Enrollment Number (an Aadhaar Enrollment Number is provided before the issuance of a final Aadhaar Number) when filing a tax return on or after 1 July 2017. Under a notification dated 11 May 2017, relief from obtaining an Aadhaar Card is provided to the following taxpayers:

- Taxpayer residing in the state of Assam, Jammu and Kashmir or Meghalaya
- A nonresident taxpayer as per provisions of Indian law
- A taxpayer of the age of 80 years or more at any time during the preceding year
- A taxpayer who is not a citizen of India

The primary condition for relief from obtaining an Aadhaar Card is that the individuals do not possess the Aadhaar number or Aadhaar enrollment number. If an individual already has an Aadhaar number, the above stated relief may not apply.

The due date for linking the Aadhaar Number with the PAN is now 31 March 2022. To link these numbers, an individual needs to follow a prescribed procedure.

The PAN and Aadhaar Number can now be used interchangeably. Individuals who are required to furnish, intimate or quote their PAN and who have not been allotted a PAN but possess an Aadhaar Number, may furnish the Aadhaar Number in lieu of the PAN.

Nonresidents are subject to the same filing requirements as residents. However, nonresident citizens (including persons of Indian origin) who have only investment income or long-term capital gains on foreign-exchange assets need not file returns if the required tax is withheld at source. Nonresidents are subject to assessment procedures in the same manner as residents.

Effective from 1 April 2021, a resident senior citizen who is 75 years or older is not required to file a tax return if he or she has only pension income and specified interest income in the tax year, subject to prescribed conditions. For taxpayers whose total income exceeds INR5 million, an additional disclosure of immovable property (land and buildings) and movable assets (for example, archaeological collections, such as drawings and paintings), jewelry, bullion, vehicles, boats, yachts, aircraft and financial assets, including all bank deposits, mutual funds, shares, securities, insurance policies, loans and advances, and cash in hand and similar items, must be made in the income tax return. The taxpayer must also provide the liabilities (if any) with respect to the reported assets as of 31 March of the relevant tax year.

Exit tax clearance. Before leaving the country, any individual not domiciled in India is required to furnish an undertaking to the prescribed authority and obtain a No Objection Certificate if he or she is in India for business, professional or employment activities and has derived income from any source in India. Such undertaking must be obtained from the individual's employer or the payer of the income, and the undertaking must state that the employer or the payer of income will pay the tax payable by the individual. An exemption from obtaining the No Objection Certificate is granted to foreign tourists or individuals visiting India for purposes other than business or employment, regardless of the number of days spent by them in India. At the time of departure of an individual domiciled in India, the individual must provide his or her permanent account number, the purpose of the visit outside India and the estimated time period for the stay outside India to the prescribed authority. However, a person domiciled in India may also be required to obtain a No Objection Certificate in certain specified circumstances.

Quarterly statement of tax withheld at source. Entities must file quarterly statements of tax withheld in a prescribed format with the prescribed authority by the prescribed due dates.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Tax treaties provide varying relief for tax on income derived from personal services in specified circumstances. In certain circumstances, the treaties also provide tax relief for business income if no permanent establishment exists in India. India has entered into comprehensive double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

India has entered into limited double tax treaties with Afghanistan, Ethiopia, Lebanon, Maldives, Pakistan, the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and the Yemen Arab Republic.

If no double tax treaty applies, resident taxpayers may claim a tax credit on foreign-source income equal to the lower of the tax imposed by the foreign jurisdiction or the tax imposed by India on the foreign income.

A foreign tax credit must be claimed in accordance with new prescribed rules and a new Form 67 providing details of foreign tax credit claimed in the return of income must be furnished to the Indian Revenue Authorities before filing the original return of income.

An individual not resident in India who claims exemptions and reliefs from tax under double tax treaties may claim relief under such agreements only if he or she obtains a tax-residency certificate indicating that he or she is a resident of the relevant jurisdiction or territory outside India from the government of that jurisdiction or territory.

F. Visas and other formalities

Visa guidelines issued by the Ministry of Home Affairs (MHA) provide guidance on obtaining the appropriate visa before entering India. The type of visa to be obtained depends on the purpose of the visit and the nature of activities undertaken in India.

Employment visa. Employment visas are granted to foreign nationals who want to come to India for the purpose of employment.

Under the visa guidelines, employment visas may be granted to the following individuals:
- Foreign nationals coming to India as a consultant on contract for whom the Indian company pays a fixed remuneration (this may not be in the form of a monthly salary)
- Foreign artists engaged to conduct regular performances for the duration of an employment contract given by hotels, clubs or other organizations
- Foreign nationals who are coming to India to take up employment as coaches of national- or state-level teams or reputed sports clubs
- Foreign sportspersons who are given a contract for a specified period by Indian clubs or organizations (this does not include foreign nationals who are engaged in commercial sports events in India on contract [including coaches], for whom the appropriate visa is a B-sports visa)
- Self-employed foreign nationals coming to India to render engineering, medical, accounting, legal or other highly skilled Temporary immigration restrictions in view of the COVID-19 pandemic. In view of the COVID-19 pandemic, the temporary immigration restrictions discussed below have been imposed.

Scheduled international commercial passenger flight services shall remain closed until 2359 hours IST of 31 October 2021 other than the following permissible exceptions:
- Travel to or from India for Persons of Indian Origin (PIO) and Overseas Citizens of India (OCI) card holders (see Section I) and for foreign nationals (other than foreign nationals on a tourist visa and e-tourist visa) from certain specified jurisdictions only (including those jurisdictions with which India has entered into bilateral air travel agreements). The e-tourist and tourist visas have been suspended since March 2020. As a result, tourist and e-tourist visa holders are prohibited from entering the country. The government of India has announced that tourist and e-tourist visas will be granted from 15 October 2021 to those arriving through charter flights and that foreign nationals arriving through flights other than charter flights will be granted tourist and e-tourist visas from 15 November 2021 onward.
- Flights operated under the Vande Bharat Mission, which aims to bring back Indians stranded in other jurisdictions.
- In view of the suspension of scheduled international commercial passenger flights, India has made temporary arrangements with 28 jurisdictions known as Air Bubbles. Before making any reservations under these arrangements, the passengers must confirm that they would be permitted to enter into the destination jurisdiction.

All travelers must undergo an RT-PCR test within 72 hours of departure from their home country and submit a self-declaration on the Air Suvidha portal prior to their departure. However, travelers originating from risk jurisdictions (Bangladesh, Botswana, Brazil, China Mainland, Europe, the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region [SAR], Israel, Mauritius, New Zealand, Singapore, South Africa and Zimbabwe) are mandated to undergo an RT-PCR test on their arrival at the airport and seven days of home quarantine. These travelers must also retest on the eighth day and monitor their health for the next seven days if tested negative. Five percent of the travelers from non-risk countries also must undergo an RT-PCR test on arrival. They are selected on a random basis.

G. Residence permits

Foreign nationals are required to register with the local FRRO/ FRO within 14 days after the date of arrival in India if their visas are valid for longer than 180 days or if the visa stamp specifically requires this registration. Certain categories of visitors are also required to register with the police authorities.

Prescribed documentation must be submitted to register with the local registration office. The documentation may vary based on the visa type and location of the local registration office.

Registration is generally valid for the term of the visa or for one year, whichever is less, and may be further extended on application. Failure or delayed registration may result in the immigration authorities' refusal to allow the foreign national to leave the country and a monetary penalty, depending on the duration of delay.

Employment and business visas were previously eligible for a total of five years of extensions by the concerned FRROs/FROs in India on a year-to-year basis. FRROs can now grant such visa extensions for total visa validity of 10 years. Such extensions are granted for a maximum of 10 years on an annual basis, and a foreign national holding an employment or business visa is required to obtain a new visa from his or her home jurisdiction after a period of 10 years (instead of 5 years as applicable earlier).

As per the recent guidelines issued by the Ministry of Home Affairs, all business visa holders are required to register themselves with the FRRO/FRO concerned if the aggregate stay in India on a business visa exceeds 180 days during a calendar year.

Formalities to be observed by registered foreigners. On completion of registration formalities at the FRRO/FRO, foreigners are issued a registration certificate containing his or her photograph, details of residence and certain other information. A foreigner must notify the registration authorities regarding any change in personal particulars, such as his or her passport details and address.

Also, a foreigner must inform the registration officer if he or she proposes to be absent from his registered address for a continuous period of eight weeks or more. Similarly, a foreigner who stays for a period of more than eight weeks in a district other than the district of his or her registered address, must inform the registration officer of that district of his or her presence.

H. Family members

Business Visa-Dependent or Employment Visa-Dependent Visas are issued to accompanying family members of individuals holding valid business or employment visas, respectively. The validity of this visa is coterminous to the validity of the visa of the principal visa holder or for such shorter period as may be considered necessary by the Indian mission.

Spouses or dependents of working expatriates must obtain separate employment visas to be employed in India.

Family members intending to reside with a working expatriate must register separately at the local registration office.

I. Other matters

Exchange controls. Under the prevailing foreign-exchange rules, the following individuals are permitted to remit their salaries (net of retirement plan contributions and Indian taxes) to their home countries for maintenance of close relatives abroad:

- Foreign nationals who are residents but not permanently resident in India and who are regularly employed with Indian firms or companies and receive a monthly salary
- Indian nationals on deputation to an office, branch, subsidiary or joint venture in India of an overseas company

The definition of residential status of individuals under the exchange control law differs from the definition under the Income Tax Act, 1961.

A foreign national, who is an employee of a company incorporated in India, may open an Indian bank account, receive salary in an Indian bank account and remit the salary received in India to a foreign bank account maintained by him or her overseas, if statutory dues are paid on the entire salary in India.

A special rule applies to an expatriate employee (whether a foreign national or an Indian citizen) who is employed by a foreign company outside India and is deputed to an office, branch, subsidiary, joint venture of such foreign company or to a company in the foreign company's group. Such an expatriate employee may receive salary in the foreign bank account outside India, if statutory dues are paid on the entire salary accrued in India. However, if an expatriate employee referred to above is deputed to work in India in an entity that is not related to the foreign employer, specific Reserve Bank of India approval for payment of salary outside India may be required.

India regulates the acquisition, holding, transferring, borrowing, or lending of foreign exchange, and the acquisition of foreign security or immovable property located outside India by persons resident in India. However, a person resident in India may hold, own, transfer or invest in foreign currency, foreign security or an immovable property located outside India if the person acquired, held or owned such currency, security, or property when he or she was resident outside India or such person inherited the currency, security or property from a person who was resident outside India.

Under a liberalized remittance scheme for resident individuals, total remittances of up to USD250,000 per individual per financial year are allowed for permissible current-account transactions and permissible capital-account transactions, subject to certain exceptions. The scheme allows individuals to acquire and hold shares and immovable property and maintain foreign-currency accounts or other assets outside India without Reserve Bank of India approval, subject to the fulfillment of specified conditions.

Until 8 January 2015, a Person of Indian Origin (PIO) card could be obtained by any individual who was in possession of the passport of any other jurisdiction except for Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, China Mainland, Nepal, Pakistan, Sri Lanka or any other jurisdiction specified by the government, subject to satisfaction of certain conditions. Effective from 9 January 2015, this scheme was closed and existing PIO cardholders are deemed to be Overseas Citizens of India (OCI; see Overseas Citizens of India) cardholders and are eligible for the same benefits as OCI cardholders. Currently, all PIO cards are valid until 31 December 2021. After 31 December 2021, the PIO card will be considered an invalid travel document. Consequently, all PIO cardholders should convert the PIO card into a OCI card.

Overseas Citizens of India. The OCI card is a multiple entry, life-long visa for visiting India, which can be obtained by certain categories of individuals. OCI cardholders are exempt from registration with FRRO/FRO and local police for any length of stay in India.

The following individuals are eligible to apply for the OCI facility:
- A foreign national who was a citizen of India or eligible to become citizen of India, as specified in the Citizenship Act, and/or children, grandchildren and great grandchildren of such individual
- Minor children if both of his or her parents are citizens of India or if one of the parents is a citizen of India
- A spouse of foreign origin of an Indian citizen or of an OCI cardholder whose marriage has been registered and subsisted for a minimum of two years, subject to prior security clearance

A person who, or either of whose parents, grandparents or great grandparents, is or has been a citizen of Bangladesh or Pakistan is not be eligible for registration as an OCI cardholder.

OCI card holders are required to obtain prior approval from the competent authority if they wish to perform any of the following activities during their stay in India:
- Undertaking research
- Undertaking any missionary, Tabligh, mountaineering or journalistic activities
- Undertaking an internship in any foreign diplomatic missions or foreign government organizations in India or taking up employment in any foreign diplomatic missions in India
- Visiting any place that falls within the protected, restricted or prohibited areas, as notified by the central government or competent authority (see Protected and restricted areas)

Protected and restricted areas. Advance permission is required from Indian diplomatic missions abroad, the MHA in New Delhi or specified authorities to visit certain states or areas within these states. The areas, which require prior approval are the following:
- The whole of Arunachal Pradesh
- Parts of Himachal Pradesh
- Parts of Jammu and Kashmir
- The whole of Manipur
- The whole of Mizoram
- The whole of Nagaland
- Parts of Rajasthan
- Parts of Uttarakhand
- The whole of Sikkim
- The whole of the Andaman and Nicobar islands

Under instructions issued by the MHA, the entire area of the states of Manipur, Mizoram and Nagaland has been excluded from the protected area regime up to 31 December 2022, subject to conditions.

Personal baggage rules. An expatriate may import into India bona fide baggage (explained in the Customs Act), which includes personal and household effects (except certain specified items, such as alcoholic liquor and wines in excess of two liters) and jewelry up to specified limits, free of customs duty. This is permitted on a bona fide transfer of residence, subject to the satisfaction of certain specified conditions.

A new law, which is effective from 2 November 2020, contains significant changes to the immigration law. For details regarding these changes, see Section J. Because of the recent immigration law changes, readers should obtain professional advice before engaging in actions.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. In general, Indonesian-resident taxpayers are subject to tax on worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on Indonesian-source income only. Diplomats and representatives of certain international organizations are excluded from Indonesian tax if the countries they represent provide reciprocal exemptions.

Indonesian citizens or foreign citizens are considered resident for tax purposes if they are present in Indonesia for more than 183 days within a 12-month period or if, within the calendar tax year, they reside in Indonesia with the intent to stay.

Under a new law, which is effective from 2 November 2020, foreign citizen individuals who are resident taxpayers in Indonesia will be taxed only on Indonesian-source income if they possess certain expertise within four years of becoming a tax resident.

Foreign individuals with certain expertise include the following:
- Foreign workers who are in certain professions and have satisfied the Ministry of Manpower requirement to employ foreign workers
- Foreign researchers as appointed or determined by the Ministry of Research and Technology or the Head of the National Research and Innovation Agency (Badan Riset dan Inovasi Nasional, or BRIN)

Twenty-five professions could be eligible for this exemption, mostly as experts in the areas of science, engineering, and/or mathematics, and include the following:
- Chemical experts (International Standard Classification of Occupation [ISCO] code 2113)
- Geology and Geophysics expert (ISCO code 2114)
- Chemical engineering expert (ISCO code 2145)
- Civil engineering expert (ISCO code 2142)
- Environmental engineering expert (ISCO code 2143)

The possession of certain skills must be proved by a certificate issued by the Indonesian government or the home country of the expatriate, an educational certificate and a minimum of five years of work experience in that field of expertise.

The expatriate will need to request approval from the Director General of Taxation (DGT). The DGT will conduct a verification and must respond to the request within 10 days.

For a qualifying expatriate, foreign-source income is generally exempt. Income earned or received in relation to employment, services or activities carried out in Indonesia that is paid outside of Indonesia is still taxable. The exemption does not apply to foreign citizens who claim benefits under tax treaty provisions.

An Indonesian citizen who resides outside Indonesia for more than 183 days within a 12-month period is considered to be a nonresident taxpayer if they meet certain conditions (place of residency, place of main activity, place of habitual abode and tax subject status [considered as a resident taxpayer in another country that is supported with a certificate of residence in that country and/or other certain conditions; that is, the individual fulfills the tax obligation in Indonesia and obtains a statement letter as a nonresident taxpayer issued by Indonesian tax office]).

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable income of an employee includes wages, salary, commissions, bonuses, pensions, directors' fees and other compensation for work performed. Compensation in kind for work or services is not taxable income for the employee and is not a deductible expense for the employer. However, this treatment does not apply to employees of the following:
- Oil and gas companies under contracts entered into under pre-1984 law
- Representative offices, which are not subject to Indonesian corporate income tax
- Various international organizations and embassies
- Employers who are taxed based on a "deemed profit" basis
- Employers who are subject to final tax

Although fringe benefits provided to employees, including employer-provided housing and automobiles, are not included in an employee's taxable income, they are allowable deductions for the employer if the employee works in a remote area. Approval for remote area status must be obtained by the employer. Benefits received in the form of cash allowances are taxable.

Termination pay and lump-sum pension payments are subject to final withholding tax at the rates set forth in Rates.

An Indonesian national who works overseas for more than 183 days within a 12-month period is not subject to tax on his or her employment income that is earned overseas and that is subject to tax overseas if he or she has obtained the statement letter as a nonresident.

Self-employment and business income. Members of partnerships, firms and associations, as well as other individuals, may be subject to tax on self-employment or business income.

Taxable income includes trading profits, profits from the sale of property connected with a business, annuities and waivers of debts (except a certain amount of waivers of debts as stipulated by government regulation).

Self-employment and business income is combined with other income and taxed at the rates set forth in Rates.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are included in taxable employment income.

Investment income. Dividends paid to individuals, rents, royalties and certain interest are subject to withholding tax at various rates. These types of investment income generally are combined with other income and taxed at the rates set forth in Rates. However, the 20% withholding tax on interest derived from the following investments is a final withholding tax:
- Time deposits, including time deposits placed abroad through a bank established in Indonesia or through a branch of a foreign bank
- Certificates of deposit
- Savings accounts

Income from the rental of land and buildings is subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 10%.

Under the new law, which is effective from 2 November 2020, the following dividends are exempted from income tax for individual taxpayers:
- Dividends paid by domestic companies to resident taxpayers in Indonesia, if such dividends are invested in Indonesia for a certain time period
- Dividends paid by offshore companies and from after-tax profits of offshore permanent establishments if such income is invested in Indonesia or used to support other businesses in Indonesia for a certain time period and satisfy certain conditions

The Minister of Finance will issue the implementation regulations for the specific criteria, procedures and time period for the investment in Indonesia and the procedures for the tax exemption.

Individual income taxpayers must make the investment in Indonesia by the end of the third month, and corporate taxpayers must make the investment in Indonesia by the end of the fourth month.

The period of investment is at least three years, calculated from the tax year the dividend was received.

Taxpayers need to report the investment realization to the tax office periodically, by the end of the third month. The report should be submitted up to the third year from the tax year in which the dividend was received.

Final income tax regime for small and medium-size business taxpayers. Effective from 1 July 2018, a new final tax regime applies to the business income of certain individuals and corporate taxpayers, excluding permanent establishments, with a gross turnover of less than IDR4,800,000,000 per year. Qualifying taxpayers are subject to income tax at a rate of 0.5% of their monthly gross turnover, and the income tax is considered to be final. The gross turnover includes a local branch's gross income, except for income from outside Indonesia.

The following taxpayers are excluded from this final tax:
- Individual taxpayers performing trading and/or service activities who use assembled infrastructure and public facilities that are not intended for commercial use
- Corporate taxpayers who have not yet begun commercial operations
- Corporate taxpayers that generate annual turnover in excess of the IDR4.8 billion threshold within a year after beginning their commercial operations

The business income covered by the final tax regime does not include income from independent personal services, such as services provided by lawyers, accountants, medical doctors and notaries.

Taxpayers qualifying for a different final tax regime (for example, construction companies) are not eligible for this 0.5% final tax.

Income derived by qualifying taxpayers other than business income that is subject to this 0.5% final tax, is taxed according to the prevailing tax rules.

The maximum period of imposition of the final income tax is the following:
- Seven tax years for individual taxpayers
- Four tax years for taxpayers in the form of cooperative bodies, partnerships or firms
- Three tax years for corporate taxpayers in the form of a limited liability company

The period referred to in the paragraph above begins in the tax year when the taxpayer is registered for taxpayers who registered since the applicable government regulation was issued. For taxpayers who registered before the issuance of the government regulation, the period begins in the tax year of issuance of the government regulation.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Employer-provided stock options are not taxable to an individual at the time of grant or exercise. Income tax at the individual's marginal tax rate is imposed at the time of sale on the difference between the sale price of the shares and the strike price. Sales of stock on the Indonesian stock exchange are also subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 0.1% on the gross sale value of the stock.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains are taxed at the same rates as business income and income from employment (see Rates). Capital gains are added to income from other sources to arrive at total taxable income.

The transfer of shares listed on the stock exchange is subject to withholding tax at a rate of 0.1% of the gross value of the transfer if the transferred shares are ordinary shares. An additional tax at a rate of 0.5% of the share value is levied on sales of founder shares associated with a public offering. Both withholding taxes are final. Founder shareholders must pay the 0.5% tax within one month after the shares are listed. Founder shareholders who do not pay the tax by the due date are subject to income tax on the gains at the ordinary income tax rates.

Income tax on land and building transfer. A transfer of land and buildings is subject to final income tax on the deemed gain resulting from the transfer or sale. The tax is charged to the transferor (seller). The tax rate is 2.5% of the gross transfer value (tax base). However, for transfers of simple houses and simple apartments conducted by taxpayers engaged in the property development business, the tax rate is 1%. This tax must be paid on receipt of some or all payments for the transfer of rights to land and buildings. The income tax is calculated based on the amount of each payment received including the down payment, interest, collection fees and other additional payments made by the buyer with respect to the transfer of the land and building.

The tax base is the higher of the transaction values stated in the relevant land and building right transfer deed or tax object sales value (Nilai Jual Objek Pajak, or NJOP). However, for transfers to the government, the tax base is the amount officially stipulated by the applicable government officer in the relevant document. In a government-organized auction, the gross transfer value is the value stipulated in the relevant deed of auction.

The transfer of rights deed can be signed by a notary only if the income tax has been fully paid.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. To determine the taxable income of regular employees, gross income is reduced by the following amounts:
- Standard deduction at a rate of 5% of gross income, up to a maximum of IDR6 million a year
- Contributions to a pension fund approved by the Minister of Finance and to TASPEN (Pension Insurance Saving Agency), as well as old-age savings or old-age allowance contributions to TASPEN and to the Worker Social Security program (BPJS Ketenagakerjaan), paid by employees

To determine the taxable income of a pensioner, the gross pension is reduced by a deduction of 5% of the gross pension, up to a maximum of IDR2,400,000 a year.

Personal allowances. Annual personal allowances are deductible from taxable income.

The following are the amounts of the personal allowances.

Type of allowance	Amount of allowance IDR
Personal allowance	54,000,000
Married persons' additional allowance	4,500,000
Wife's additional allowance if receiving income not related to husband's or other family member's income	54,000,000
Additional allowance for each dependent family member in direct bloodline and for adopted children, up to a maximum of three individuals	4,500,000

Business deductions. A self-employed businessperson may deduct from gross income ordinary expenses connected with earning income, including costs of materials, employee remuneration, bad debts, insurance premiums and administrative costs. Taxes other than income tax are deductible. If employee income taxes are borne by an employer, a grossing-up calculation must be made to claim the expense as a deduction from gross profit.

A business may also deduct the following expenses:
- Depreciation and amortization, in accordance with specified rates
- Contributions to approved pension funds
- Losses from the sale of assets or rights used in a business
- Foreign-exchange losses
- Costs of research and development performed in Indonesia
- Scholarship, apprenticeship and training costs
- Fifty percent of the cost of automobiles provided to employees
- Fifty percent of the cost of mobile phones provided to employees
- Office refreshments provided to all employees

The following expenses may not be deducted:
- Provisions or reserves, with exceptions for certain industries
- Premiums for employees' life and health insurance, unless paid by the employers and treated as income taxable to the employees

Taxable income IDR	Tax rate %	Tax due IDR	Cumulative tax due IDR
First 50,000,000	0	0	0
Above 50,000,000	5	—	—

Nonresident taxpayers are subject to tax at a flat rate of 20% on all Indonesian-source income.

If the resident individual does not have a required Tax Identification Number, the tax rates for withholding tax on employment income are increased by 20%. As a result, the rates range from 6% to 36%.

Credits. If non-employment income is also taxed in the country in which it arises, a foreign tax credit is allowed in computing the Indonesian tax. The credit equals the lesser of the foreign tax or the Indonesian tax applicable to that income.

Relief for losses. In general, losses may be carried forward for up to five years.

A spouse's business losses may be offset against the business profits of the other spouse.

B. Other taxes

Duty on the acquisition of land and building rights. In general, a transfer of land and building rights is subject to duty on the acquisition of land and building rights (Bea Pengalihan Hak Atas Tanah dan Bangunan, or BPHTB). The duty is payable by the buyer or the party receiving or obtaining the rights. Qualifying land and building rights transfers include sale-purchase and trade-in transactions, grants, inheritances, contributions to corporations, rights separations, buyer designations in auctions and executions of court decisions with full legal force. Acquisitions of land and building rights in certain nonbusiness transfers may be exempt from BPHTB.

The tax base for the BPHTB is the Tax Object Acquisition Value (Nilai Perolehan Objek Pajak, or NPOP), which in most cases is the higher of the market (transaction) value or the NJOP of the land and building rights concerned. The tax due on a particular event is determined by applying the applicable duty rate of 5% to the relevant NPOP less an allowable nontaxable threshold. The nontaxable threshold amount varies by region. The maximum is IDR60 million, except in the case of inheritance, for which it may reach IDR300 million. The government may change the nontaxable threshold through regulation.

BPHTB is normally due on the date that the relevant deed of land and building rights transfer is signed before a public notary. The deed of rights transfer can be signed by a notary only if the BPHTB has been paid.

C. Social security

The institution called Badan Penyelengara Jaminan Sosial (BPJS) administers the Indonesia social security program. BPJS has the following two categories:

- Worker Social Security (BPJS Ketenagakerjaan)
- Health Care (BPJS Kesehatan)

Both BPJS Ketenagakerjaan and BPJS Kesehatan are mandatory.

Expatriates are required to participate if they work in Indonesia for more than six months. Indonesia has not entered into a totalization agreement with any country.

The following percentage contributions of monthly salary are required for employers and employees under the Worker Social Security program.

Type of program	Percentage of contribution Employer %	Employee %
Accident benefit (a) (Jaminan Kecelakaan Kerja)	0.24 to 1.74 (b)	0
Life insurance benefits (a) (Jaminan Kematian)	0.3	0
Old-age benefit (a) (Jaminan Hari Tua)	3.7	2
Pension benefit (c) (Jaminan Pensiun)	2	1

(a) There is no salary cap to calculate the contribution.
(b) The rate depends on the type of industry of the company.
(c) The salary is capped at IDR8,754,600 per month, effective from March 2021. The maximum monthly contribution amount is IDR175,092 for the employer and IDR87,546 for the employee. The salary cap is adjusted each year by a factor of one plus the previous year's gross domestic growth. An expatriate is not required to participate in the pension benefit.

The following percentage contributions of monthly salary are required for employers and employees under the Health Care program.

	Percentage of contribution (%)
Employer	4
Employee	1

For the contributions under the Health Care program, the salary is capped at IDR12 million per month, effective from 1 January 2020. Consequently, the maximum employer contribution is IDR480,000 per month, and the maximum employee contribution is IDR120,000 per month.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Indonesia is the calendar year.

Married persons can separately file their own income tax returns even if they did not enter into a prenuptial agreement.

Employee taxes are withheld by the employer. The employer must file a monthly return by the 20th day of the following month. The monthly tax return for December serves as the annual return because it also reports the cumulative income and related tax for the respective calendar year.

Individuals are required to file individual income tax returns by 31 March following the end of the tax year. Individuals earning income only from employment are not required to file monthly tax returns.

Withholding tax is levied on a variety of payments to residents. A self-employed professional, including an accountant, lawyer, architect or consultant, has tax withheld at source on the settlement of invoices. The withholding tax rate is 2% of the gross amount. Withholding tax is an advance payment of income tax.

Self-employed individuals must make monthly advance tax payments. The monthly payment amount is based on the previous year's tax liability, reduced by tax withheld at source during the preceding year. The payment is due on the 15th day of the month following the income month.

Nonresident foreign taxpayers are not required to file tax returns in Indonesia, unless they conduct business or activities in Indonesia through permanent establishments.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

A taxpayer who has income derived outside Indonesia that is subject to taxation abroad is entitled to a credit, not to exceed the Indonesian tax payable on the foreign income.

F. Free visa jurisdictions and visas

Several types of visas are available for a foreigner coming to Indonesia as a visitor. Under Presidential Regulation No. 21 Year 2016, the number of jurisdictions whose nationals are exempted from the obligation to obtain a Visit Visa in advance to enter Indonesia is increased to 169. This exemption is subject to the following terms and conditions:

- The exemption can be applied to carry out various activities such as for tourism, transit, family visits, social, art and cultural activities, government visits, giving lectures, attending business meetings, seminars and conferences, and certain other activities.
- The exemption cannot be used for journalistic purposes.
- The duration of the stay in Indonesia is limited to 30 days.
- The exemption cannot be renewed, extended or converted into another type of visa.
- Nationals of foreign jurisdictions eligible for the exemption may only enter Indonesia through certain immigration checkpoints.

Visitors from other jurisdictions must apply for a visa at an Indonesian embassy or consulate abroad.

Foreign visitors wishing to conduct business meetings or non-commercial activities that have governmental, tourism, social and cultural aspects may obtain one of the following entry visas from an Indonesian embassy or consulate abroad:
- Visa Kunjungan (VK) (Single Entry Visit Visa)
- Visa Kunjungan Beberapa Kali Perjalanan (VKBP) (Multiple Entries Visit Visa)

A VK is issued for a visit of up to 60 days. The company or sponsor must provide a valid reason for requesting the visa, which may be renewed for additional one-month periods, subject to a maximum duration of the visa of six months (may be renewed four times). A VK application may be submitted directly to the Indonesian embassy or consulate in the home country or through the Directorate General of Immigration (DGI) in Indonesia. A holder of a VK or VKBP is not eligible for a work permit. A VK becomes invalid on exit from Indonesia, and another similar visa is required for any subsequent similar visits.

The VKBP application must be made by a sponsor to an office of the DGI in Indonesia. The DGI is now issuing an electronic visa (e-Visa) when the visa application is approved. An applicant can directly enter Indonesia with an e-Visa and is no longer required to endorse the visa at the Indonesian Embassy overseas.

A VKBP is valid for a maximum period of 12 months. Under this type of visa, each visit may not exceed 60 days. A VKBP is recommended for people who regularly visit Indonesia to conduct business meetings and who do not establish residency in Indonesia.

Entry restrictions during COVID-19 pandemic. Indonesia's border is still closed to foreigners. Exemptions apply to the following visa and stay permit holders:
- Official/Diplomatic Visa
- Official/Diplomatic Stay Permit
- Temporary/Permanent Stay Permit
- Active crew member

Effective from 15 September 2021, Indonesia also allows the following visa holders to enter Indonesia:
- Visit Visa
- Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) Card
- Limited Stay Visa

The Visa on Arrival and Visa Exemption (Free Visa) are still suspended until the COVID-19 pandemic is declared over by the Indonesian government.

G. Work permits and self-employment

The Indonesian government prefers that expatriates be employed in Indonesia only in positions that cannot currently be filled by Indonesian nationals. Companies that wish to hire expatriates must provide the necessary education and training programs for Indonesians who will replace the expatriates within a reasonable time period.

In addition, employers must appoint Indonesian employees as the counterpart of the foreign workers and implement education and training for Indonesian employee as part of a transfer-of-knowledge program. The employer also is obliged to facilitate education and training of and the teaching of Indonesian language to the foreign workers.

Employers must require their expatriate employees to obtain work and stay permits. Obtaining the necessary visas and work permits in Indonesia can be a protracted and complex process. It is strongly recommended that a prospective employer work with a local agent to obtain the permits and visas necessary to employ expatriates. Work permits are usually issued for a maximum period of 12 months and may be extended, subject to approval from the government.

Application procedure. An employer or sponsor must submit the Foreign Manpower Utilization Plan (Rencana Penggunaan Tenaga Kerja Asing, or RPTKA) to the Ministry of Manpower (MoM). A manpower plan must be approved before the submission of a work notification application (an application to get approval from the MoM for the local sponsor company to hire a foreign worker in Indonesia).

For the renewal of a permit, the following documents are also required:
- Color copy of Tax Registration Number (Nomor Pokok Wajib Pajak, or NPWP)
- Color copy of the Indonesia social security program registration certificate from both the employer and the employee

Under Ministry of Manpower Regulation No. 34 Year 2021, the employer must pay in advance the DKPTKA in the amount of USD100 per month for each foreign person employed.

After the DKPTKA payment is made, the MoM will forward the process to the DGI for the issuance of the VITAS and ITAS.

On arrival in Indonesia with the VITAS, the immigration authority grants the ITAS, which includes the multiple re-entry permit, at the immigration checkpoint on completing the biometric. The ITAS is valid as the stay permit for working purpose for foreign workers.

The expatriate and all of his or her family members must register with the local authorities after the ITAS is issued to obtain a Police Report Certificate (Surat Tanda Melapor, or STM), Residence Card (Surat Keterangan Tempat Tinggal or SKTT), and Report of Presence (Laporan Keberadaan).

On the expiration of the work permit, a final exit permit, known as the Return on Immigration Document (RID), is required. The RID is valid for seven calendar days after the submission date. The expatriate is required to leave the country within this period.

Self-employment. Only Indonesian citizens may conduct business in Indonesia as self-employed persons. Citizens of other countries must obtain the sponsorship of employers in Indonesia.

H. Residence visas

The residence visa, known as a Limited Stay Visa (VITAS; see Sections F and G) is valid for up to 12 months. It is issued exclusively to expatriates who are working in accordance with the prevailing government regulations. An expatriate working in Indonesia on a work permit must obtain an ITAS (see Sections F and G) and other relevant stay permits.

The family members' VITAS applications can be submitted after the assignee's VITAS is obtained. The ITAS and other stay permits may also be applied for dependents who accompany the expatriates to reside in Indonesia.

An ITAS is renewable up to five times. Each extension is valid for one year.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. A foreign national possessing an ITAS and a work permit may apply for his or her spouse and children (maximum age of 18 years old) to reside in Indonesia if they fulfill the necessary requirements. A copy of the marriage certificate and a complete copy of the passport are required for the spouse, and birth certificates and complete copies of the passports are required for the children.

The spouse of a foreign national who wishes to work in Indonesia must obtain a separate work permit sponsored by the employer.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may not drive legally in Indonesia using their home country driver's licenses. International driver's licenses are acceptable. Indonesia provides no driver's license reciprocity with other countries.

To obtain an Indonesian driver's license, foreign nationals must take a written and a physical exam. Photocopies of the passport, the ITAS and the SKTT must be attached to the driver's license application.

In view of the driving conditions and commuting time, it is recommended that foreign nationals hire Indonesian drivers. The base salary for drivers is about USD170 per month.

J. Recent immigration law changes

A new law, which is effective from 2 November 2020, contains significant immigration law changes, which are discussed below.

The new law states that a visa and stay permit can be issued manually or in the form of an electronic visa (e-Visa).

A Visit Visa can also be granted for pre-investment activity.

A VITAS can also be granted for foreigners who have their second home in Indonesia. Further provisions regarding the VITAS are regulated in the Government Regulation.

A guarantor requirement for a foreigner does not apply to a foreign investor who invests in Indonesia in accordance with the investment laws and regulations, and this exemption also applies to a citizen of a jurisdiction that applies this rule reciprocally.

The manpower law has provided an exemption from the RPTKA requirement for representatives of foreign jurisdictions who use foreign workers as diplomatic and consular employees, and a regulation provided an exemption for directors or commissioners with certain ownership or shareholders in accordance with the provisions of laws and regulations. In the new law, there is an additional exemption for foreign workers who are required by the employer in the production activity in the case of emergencies, vocational skills (specific skills required for the production activity), technology-based startups, business visits and research for a certain time period.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Iraqi nationals and foreigners working in Iraq are subject to tax on their income derived from Iraq (including the Kurdistan Region of Iraq). In addition, Iraqi nationals residing in Iraq are subject to tax on income earned from all sources (Iraqi and foreign-source income).

Iraqi nationals are considered residents of Iraq for tax purposes if they reside in Iraq for only one day. Non-Iraqi nationals (including nationals of other Arab countries) are considered residents of Iraq for tax purposes if they meet certain residency criteria.

The concept of residency as described above is important to residents of Iraq when determining the availability of certain personal allowances (see Deductions).

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Income tax is assessed on all remuneration and benefits earned in Iraq (including the Kurdistan Region of Iraq), except for sources of income that are explicitly exempt under the Income Tax Law No. 113 of 1982 (as amended). Remuneration and benefits include directors' fees and employer-paid rent, school fees and relocation expenses, after taking into consideration applicable deductions (see Deductions).

Self-employment and business income. Individuals must pay tax on income earned from all taxable self-employment and business activities in Iraq (including the Kurdistan Region of Iraq) at the personal income tax rates described in Rates.

Investment income. Dividends paid out of previously taxed income are exempt from tax. Interest is subject to income tax at the normal personal income tax rates (see Rates).

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from the sale of fixed assets are taxable at the normal personal income tax rates (see Rates). Capital gains derived from the sale of shares and bonds not in the course of a trading activity are exempt from tax. Capital gains derived from the sale of shares and bonds in the course of a trading activity are taxable at the normal personal income tax rates (see Rates).

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. In Iraq (excluding the Kurdistan Region of Iraq), individuals are granted the following personal deductions and allowances:

- Personal allowances equal to the following (available to residents of Iraq only):
  - IQD2,500,000 for an employee who is single
  - IQD4,500,000 for a nonworking wife
  - IQD200,000 per child (under 18 years of age or a student under 25 years of age)
  - IQD3,200,000 for persons over 63 years old
  - IQD300,000 for a widow or divorcee
- Employee contributions to the Iraqi social security system
- Delegation or overseas allowances received by foreign employees, up to 25% of the basic salary (available to residents of Iraq only)
- General allowances, up to 30% of the basic salary

In the Kurdistan Region of Iraq, individuals are granted the following personal deductions and allowances:

- First IQD1 million of employee's monthly income
- Employee contributions to the Iraqi social security system
- General allowances, up to 30% of the basic salary

Business deductions. Business expenses incurred in generating income are generally deductible. However, certain limitations apply to certain expenses, including entertainment expenses.

Rates. Personal income tax rates for individuals working in Iraq are levied according to the following scale.

Annual taxable income
Exceeding IQD	Not exceeding IQD	Rate %
0	250,000	3
250,000	500,000	5
500,000	1,000,000	10
1,000,000	—	15

In the Kurdistan Region of Iraq, an employee's taxable income is subject to a flat personal income tax rate of 5%.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

Iraq (including the Kurdistan Region of Iraq) does not impose inheritance and gift taxes.

C. Social security

Rates of social security contributions are applied to the salaries of Iraqi and foreign employees as of the date of hire, or the January salary, whichever is earlier. The salary subject to social security is equal to total salary less general allowances. General allowances of all types, whether cash or non-cash and whether received by Iraqis or foreigners, may not exceed 30% of basic salary. The general rates of social security in Iraq (including the Kurdistan Region of Iraq) are 12% for employers and 5% for employees. For oil and gas companies in Iraq (excluding the Kurdistan Region of Iraq), the rates for social security contributions are 25% for employers and 5% for employees.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

In Iraq, employers are responsible for and should guarantee the payment of tax to the General Commission for Taxes, which is the Iraqi tax authority. Tax is withheld from the employees' income for each month of the fiscal year. The withheld tax must be sent monthly to the General Commission for Taxes by the 15th day of the month following the month of withholding. An annual filing is also required by 31 March of each year.

In the Kurdistan Region of Iraq, employers are responsible for and should guarantee the payment of tax to the General Directorate of Taxation, which is the Kurdistan Region of Iraq tax authority. Tax is withheld from the employees' income for each month of the fiscal year. The withheld tax must be sent quarterly to the General Directorate of Taxation by the 21st day of the month following the end of the calendar quarter. An annual filing is also required by 1 March of each year.

If the tax is not paid by the due date, a penalty of 5% of the tax amount is imposed on the employer after the lapse of 21 days from the due date. This percentage is doubled if the amount is not paid within 21 days after the expiration of the first 21-day period. Interest is also imposed.

E. Entry visas

Foreign nationals who intend to visit Iraq (including the Kurdistan Region of Iraq) must obtain an entry visa. The most common form is a single-entry visit visa from the Ministry of Interior. The typical single-entry visit visa allows the visitor to enter Iraq within three months of the visa's issuance. A visa typically allows the person to remain in Iraq for 30 days. Multiple-entry visas are also available. The procedures for entry into the Kurdistan Region of Iraq may vary.

F. Residence permits

Foreign nationals who intend to stay or work in Iraq for longer than 10 consecutive days (whether they are assigned to Iraq indefinitely or are commuters or rotators) must apply for a residence permit. An Iraqi limited liability company or Iraqi branch of a foreign entity established to undertake work in Iraq must take the following steps to apply for a residence permit with respect to each foreign employee:

- Within the first 10 days from the date of entering Iraq, the employee must complete a blood test and obtain a sticker on his or her passport (this sticker shows that the foreigner has informed the concerned authorities of his or her arrival to Iraq), which is effective for three months.
- The company must apply for the employee's residence permit through a request letter from the governmental entity with which the company deals (for example, the Ministry of Transportation) that is addressed to the Department of Immigration and Residency, together with the passports of the employees containing the arrival stickers.
- If the application is approved, the Department of Immigration and Residency informs the company that the request is accepted and that a residence permit valid for one year is granted to the employee.

The procedures for residence permits in the Kurdistan Region of Iraq may vary.

G. Work permits

Work permits are required for foreigners to work in Iraq. The Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs issues work permits in accordance with Article 30 of the Iraqi Labor Law No. 37 of 2015 and the procedures set forth in Labor Instructions No. 18 of 1987, which are still in force and provide specific rules for the employment of foreigners in Iraq.

For the employer to apply for work permits with respect to its foreign employees, it must ensure that its foreign employees have valid entry visas for Iraq (evidenced by a sticker affixed to each employee's passport or any other valid alternative method acceptable to the Iraqi authorities) and that it meets Iraq's minimum local employment threshold, among other requirements.

A work permit is valid for a period of one year, subject to renewal. The renewal of the work permit must be initiated a month in advance of its expiration date. The renewal process requires the employer to follow the same procedure as the procedure used for applying for the initial work permit with the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs.

Noncompliance with the work permit requirement carries a risk of the employees and their employers being subject to monetary penalties and legal action.

The procedures for work permits in the Kurdistan Region of Iraq may vary.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Income tax liability in Ireland depends on an individual's tax residence and domicile.

The tax year is the calendar year. For the 2021 tax year, an individual is regarded as an Irish tax resident if he or she meets any of the following conditions:

- He or she spends 183 or more days in Ireland during the period from 1 January 2021 to 31 December 2021.
- He or she spends an aggregate of 280 or more days in Ireland during the two-tax-year period from 1 January 2020 to 31 December 2021, with more than 30 days in Ireland in each tax year.

- He or she elects to become tax resident for the tax year in which he or she comes to Ireland with the intention to be tax resident in the following tax year, and is tax resident under one of the tests listed above in that following tax year.

An individual is considered as present for a day if he or she is present in Ireland at any time during that day.

Tax concessions may apply in the year in which an individual becomes, or ceases to be, Irish tax resident.

An individual becomes ordinarily tax resident in Ireland after being tax resident for three consecutive tax years. An individual who is ordinarily tax resident and who ceases to be tax resident in Ireland is treated as continuing to be ordinarily resident for three tax years after the tax year of departure.

Domicile in Ireland is not defined in the tax law but is a legal concept based on the location of an individual's permanent home. Irish law treats domicile as acquired at birth (usually it is the domicile of the father) and retained until an individual takes positive steps to change to another domicile.

Individuals who are tax resident in Ireland are normally subject to tax on worldwide income, including employment income, regardless of whether the employment is carried on in Ireland or abroad. However, exceptions can apply to the following individuals:
- Foreign-domiciled individuals
- Individuals who commute to work outside Ireland and pay tax on the income from the employment outside Ireland

Individuals domiciled outside Ireland are entitled to a remittance basis of assessment in Ireland on investment income arising outside Ireland and on income from employment duties performed outside Ireland, to the extent that the employment income is paid outside Ireland under a foreign employment contract.

If an individual is on Irish payroll, Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) withholding must be accounted for on all employment earnings, including benefits. If an individual is on a payroll outside Ireland, PAYE withholding is required on the amount of employment earnings (including benefits) attributable to duties performed in Ireland. An exemption may apply if the employee is resident in a treaty jurisdiction and spends less than 60 workdays in Ireland during the relevant tax year. There may also be an exemption from PAYE if the employee spends more than 60 workdays but less than 183 days in Ireland. Certain strict conditions must be met for these exemptions.

Advance approval may be granted by the Irish Revenue on the proportion of the earnings to which PAYE should be applied if earnings are paid outside Ireland and if the proportion is unclear and only a portion of the earnings is likely to be assessable in Ireland.

Tax relief is available to certain non-domiciled employees who are assigned to work in Ireland.

The Special Assignee Relief Programme (SARP) is available to employees who are assigned to Ireland by a relevant employer. For this purpose, a relevant employer is a company incorporated and resident in a country with which Ireland has entered into a double tax treaty or an information exchange agreement, or an associated company of such a company. Originally the relief was only available if the assignment began in 2012, 2013 or 2014. However, this has been extended to include assignments commencing up to the end of 2022.

Under SARP, a relief from income tax on 30% of employment income in excess of EUR75,000 is granted for up to a maximum of five consecutive years. Effective from 1 January 2019, a ceiling of EUR1 million applies to the income eligible for relief. In addition, the cost of one return trip to certain home locations per year for the employee and his or her spouse and children can be provided tax-free. Also, the employer can pay or reimburse tax-free education costs of up to EUR5,000 per year per child. The relief is available to individuals who earn a base gross salary of at least EUR75,000 per year and who perform their employment duties in Ireland for a minimum period of 12 consecutive months. The employee must not have been resident in Ireland for the five years immediately preceding the year of arrival and must have worked for the foreign employer for at least 6 months before arrival (12 months for individuals who arrived in Ireland before 1 January 2015). In addition, employees who arrived in Ireland before 2015 were required to be tax resident in Ireland in the year in which relief was claimed and must not have been tax resident elsewhere. Employees arriving in Ireland in the period of 2015 through 2022 can be tax resident in another jurisdiction if they are also tax resident in Ireland.

Under an application procedure for the relief, the employer must certify within 90 days of the employee arriving in Ireland to first perform duties that the employee meets the conditions for SARP relief. The Irish Revenue has advised that because the 90-day deadline is provided for in legislation, they will not accept applications after the deadline. SARP relief applies to income tax only and does not apply to the Universal Social Charge (USC) or social security. An individual is regarded as a chargeable person for any tax year in which SARP relief is claimed and the individual must file an income tax return through the self-assessment system for that year.

Nonresidents are generally subject to Irish tax on income arising in Ireland, unless they are protected by the provisions of a double tax treaty.

The Foreign Earnings Deduction (FED) applies to individuals employed by companies expanding into emerging markets who assign Irish-based employees to perform their employment duties in these markets. The relief applies to employees assigned to the following jurisdictions for the years 2012 to 2022.

Algeria	India	Qatar
Bahrain	Indonesia	Russian Federation
Brazil	Japan	Saudi Arabia
Chile	Kenya	Senegal
China Mainland	Korea (South)	Singapore

Colombia	Kuwait	South Africa
Congo (Democratic Republic of)	Malaysia	Tanzania
Egypt	Mexico	Thailand
Ghana	Nigeria	United Arab Emirates
	Oman	Vietnam
	Pakistan

The relief reduces the income tax liability of the relevant individual by allowing a deduction of up to EUR35,000 against employment income. It is claimed through the annual tax return. To qualify for the relief, the individual must spend 30 (previously 40) qualifying days in a tax year or in a continuous 12-month period in the relevant countries. To count as a qualifying day, a day must be one of three consecutive days throughout which the individual is working in the relevant countries. Days spent traveling to and from the work location count as qualifying days for the purposes of the relief. The deduction does not apply to employees paid out of state revenue, such as civil servants, Gardaí (members of the Irish state police) and similar employees.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Most payments made by an employer, including salary, bonuses, benefits in kind, certain equity income and expense allowances, are subject to income tax.

In general, noncash benefits are taxable and are valued at the cost incurred by an employer in providing the benefits. However, special measures govern the valuation of the following taxable benefits:
- Car: The assessable benefit is up to 30% of the original market value of the car. The taxable benefit is reduced if the employee makes a financial contribution to the employer or if the employee has business mileage in excess of 24,000 kilometers in a year. From 2023 onward, the assessable benefit will be determined by reference to the vehicle's CO2 emissions.
- Loans: 13.5% of the amount of the loan, with a reduction for interest paid by the employee. The rate is 4% for a home loan.
- Housing: The annual market value of the rent (the amount a landlord would charge an unconnected tenant to use the property) plus utilities paid by the company (employer-owned accommodation) or rent plus utilities paid by the company (accommodation not owned by the employer).

Employee benefits that are incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of employment duties, are not taxable. Travel expenses from home to work and from work to home may be an exception to this rule.

Education allowances provided by employers to their employees' children 18 years of age and under are taxable for income tax and social security tax purposes.

Employers must withhold Pay Related Social Insurance (PRSI; see Section C) and the USC (see Section B) and apply the PAYE system (see Section D) with respect to the value of benefits in kind provided to employees during the tax year. Employers' PRSI at a rate of 11.05% also applies to any benefits provided to employees.

In general, nonresidents are subject to income tax on employment income, regardless of their domicile, if their duties are carried on and if their salary is paid in Ireland.

Self-employment and business income. Individuals resident in Ireland are subject to tax on income from trades and professions carried on in Ireland and abroad. Nonresidents are taxed on income from trades and professions carried on in Ireland only.

Taxable profits normally consist of net business profits as disclosed in the financial accounts and adjusted to account for deductions not allowed or restricted by tax legislation.

Except for years when a business begins or terminates, taxable profits generally are those for the tax year ending 31 December or for the 12-month accounting period ending in that year.

Investment income. An individual resident and domiciled in Ireland is taxed on worldwide dividend and interest income. If resident but not domiciled, an individual is taxed on all investment income arising in Ireland and on income remitted to Ireland from other countries. A credit for foreign taxes paid may be available if a double tax treaty applies. A nonresident and not domiciled individual is taxed on Irish-source income only.

Dividends received by individuals from Irish tax-resident companies are taxed in full, subject to relief being available under a relevant double tax treaty. Dividends may be subject to withholding tax at a rate of 25%, which is creditable against a resident individual's income tax liability.

Interest on Irish government securities is subject to income tax and is generally not taxed at source, but may not be taxable if received by nonresident individuals.

Interest credited on or after 1 January 2020 on most bank and building society deposits is taxed at source at a rate of 33%, unless it is paid or credited to nonresidents. A credit is given for tax withheld if the person is taxed on the interest. The final income tax on deposit interest taxed at source is 33%.

Losses from Irish rental properties may be offset against other Irish-source rental income or may be carried forward indefinitely and offset against rental income in future years.

Nonresidents are subject to a 20% withholding tax on nonexempt interest, royalties and rental income.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees paid by companies incorporated in Ireland are taxable in Ireland, regardless of the tax residence of the director or the place where duties are performed. Directors' fees paid by non-Irish companies to Irish residents are taxable in Ireland. Non-domiciled individuals do not pay tax on directors' fees received from foreign companies if all of the duties are performed outside Ireland unless that income is remitted to Ireland.

Directors are regarded as employed for tax purposes and as either self-employed or employed for social insurance purposes, depending on the circumstances. Tax is withheld under the PAYE system (see Section D) on the basis of income earned during the tax year.

Directors must submit personal tax returns by 31 October following the tax year.

Exempt income. A portion of income from the following sources is exempt from income tax:

- For tax-resident individuals only, income derived from writing books and plays, composing music, painting and sculpting. This exemption is limited to profits or gains of EUR50,000. Such income is liable to the USC and PRSI.
- Profits or gains from forestry activities. Such income is liable to the USC and PRSI.
- Shares provided to an employee under an Approved Profit Sharing Scheme, up to a value of EUR12,700 in a tax year. Such income is liable to the USC and employee PRSI.

An individual may use the first two reliefs mentioned above to reduce the tax liability, subject to restrictions. An individual effectively pays income tax at a minimum rate of 30% if his or her total income exceeds EUR400,000 and if sufficient specified tax reliefs are claimed. The effective tax rate for individuals with total income between EUR125,000 and EUR400,000 is lower because the restriction applies on a tapering basis. For individuals whose total income is less than EUR125,000, the restrictions to the tax relief do not apply.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Employer-provided share options are subject to income tax, Universal Social Charge (USC; see Section B) and employee PRSI at the date of exercise on the market value of the shares at the date of exercise, less the sum of the option and exercise prices. Effective from 5 April 2007, a gain arising on the exercise, assignment or release of certain share options granted on or after 1 January 2006 is subject to income tax and employee PRSI in Ireland by reference to the number of workdays spent in Ireland during the vesting period. The employee is required to account for income tax PRSI and USC within 30 days of exercise. Effective from 1 July 2012, the responsibility for payment of employee PRSI rests with the employee (before this date, the employer was required to withhold employee PRSI on share option gains through the payroll).

For gains arising after 1 January 2004, an individual may claim a tax credit for foreign taxes paid on the same option gain in a jurisdiction with which Ireland has entered into a double tax treaty. If an income tax charge arises in a non-treaty country, Ireland reduces the gain subject to Irish income tax by the tax payable in the other jurisdiction.

On the disposal of shares, capital gains tax is charged on the difference between the market value of the shares at the date of exercise and the market value at the date of disposal.

If the option is capable of being exercised in a period exceeding seven years after the date of grant, income tax may be charged at the date of grant in addition to a charge at the date of exercise.

Restricted stock units (RSUs) are generally taxed at the date of vesting. Individuals are liable to Irish tax on RSU gains by reference to their tax residence on the date of vesting. As a result, the full gain is liable to Irish tax if the individual is tax-resident in Ireland on the date of vesting and no charge to Irish tax arises if the individual is nonresident in Ireland at the date of vesting. A credit for foreign tax payable is allowed against the Irish liability. RSUs are liable to PAYE, USC and employee PRSI, and are taxable through payroll.

Employers must withhold the following from payroll:
- The USC on the taxable value of all share awards (excluding share option schemes; the employee is required to account for USC within 30 days of exercise)
- Employee PRSI contributions (excluding share option schemes; the employee is required to account for PRSI within 30 days of exercise)
- PAYE on share schemes that are not Revenue approved (excluding share option schemes; the employee is required to account for tax within 30 days of exercise)

Capital gains and losses. Individuals resident in Ireland generally are subject to tax on worldwide capital gains. Non-domiciled individuals are not taxed on gains arising outside Ireland unless the proceeds are remitted to Ireland. Capital gains are taxed at a rate of 33% for disposals on or after 6 December 2012.

Nonresidents are taxable on capital gains derived from the following assets located in Ireland:
- Land and buildings
- Mineral rights
- Exploration or exploitation rights on the Continental Shelf
- Assets used by a trade carried on in Ireland through a branch or agency
- Shares that derive the greater part of their value from the first three items listed above

Gains are calculated by deducting from the proceeds the greater of the cost of the asset or, if the asset was owned by the seller on 6 April 1974, its value on that date. Cost (or the 1974 value) is increased by an index factor to adjust for inflation up to 31 December 2002. The value of the asset cannot be increased for inflation beginning 1 January 2003. Indexation relief is also restricted on land situated in Ireland that is held for development and on shares that derive the greater part of their value from such land.

Exemptions are available for the following capital gains:
- The first EUR1,270 of taxable gains derived during the 2021 tax year
- Capital gains derived from the taxpayer's principal residence
- Assets transferred on death
- Wasting chattels if the consideration is EUR2,540 or less (that is, tangible movable property with a useful life of less than 50 years)

Retirement relief or entrepreneurial relief for capital gains may be available, subject to certain conditions.

Capital losses may be offset against capital gains derived in the same year or carried forward to offset against capital gains in future years.

Income tax deductions

Deductible expenses. Few deductions are allowed for employees. To claim a deduction, an employee first must show that the expense was incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of the duties of the employment. Tax deductions for expenses incurred by employees are granted only for exceptional items, including purchases of protective clothing.

Personal credits and allowances. The principal credits for the 2021 tax year are listed in the following table. Credits are deducted from the individual's income tax liability.

Credits	Amount (EUR)
Married persons/civil partners (jointly assessed)	3,300
Single person	1,650
Widowed person/surviving civil partner	2,190
Widowed person/surviving civil partner in year of bereavement	3,300
Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) allowance (if salary is subject to tax at source)	1,650
Medical and dental insurance	20% of the gross premium*

* The relief with respect to premiums is restricted to EUR1,000 per adult policy and EUR500 per child policy.

The principal allowances for the 2021 tax year are listed in the following table. Allowances reduce the amount of income of the individual that is taxable at the top income tax rate.

Allowance at top rate	Amount
Pension contributions to approved schemes (a)(b)	Varies from 15% to 40% of earnings, depending on age of individual
Employment and Investment Incentive	EUR250,000/EUR500,000 (c)
Startup relief for entrepreneurs	EUR100,000 (d)
Employee Approved Profit Sharing Scheme	EUR12,700

(a) Effective from 1 January 2014, the maximum allowable pension fund for tax purposes is set at EUR2 million. Higher thresholds may apply if the value of the pension fund, as of 1 January 2014, exceeds EUR2 million, but does not exceed EUR2,300,000. Any excess is subject to a one-off charge of 40% on drawdown.
(b) Pension contributions are subject to an earnings cap of EUR115,000.
(c) The allowance is EUR250,000 for a minimum four-year holding period and EUR500,000 for a minimum seven-year holding period.
(d) The allowance can be used to reduce taxable income in one or more of the preceding six tax years.

In general, a nonresident is not entitled to tax credits or personal allowances, but exceptions may apply under Irish income tax law or the provisions of a double tax treaty.

Business deductions and capital allowances. Expenses incurred wholly and exclusively for the purposes of a trade or profession are generally deductible. Entertainment expenses for staff functions are deductible if they are reasonable in amount. All other entertainment expenses are not deductible. Deductions for automobile expenses are restricted.

Rates. The following table presents the 2021 income tax rates for single or widowed individuals, or a surviving civil partner.

Taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	amount EUR	excess %
0	35,300	0	20
35,300	—	7,060	40

The following are the 2021 income tax rates for a married couple or civil partners (jointly assessed).

Taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	amount EUR	excess %
0	44,300*	0	20
44,300	—	8,860	40

* If both spouses or civil partners have income, married couples or civil partners may have more of their income taxed at the 20% rate. The income bracket is increased by EUR1 for every EUR1 received by the other spouse or civil partner, up to a maximum additional EUR26,300. Consequently, for a married couple or civil partners, the maximum amount of taxable income potentially subject to the 20% rate is EUR70,600.

Nonresidents are taxed at the same rates as residents.

Relief for losses. A loss arising from a trade or profession, as calculated for income tax purposes, may be offset against all income for the tax year in which the loss is incurred, or may be carried forward indefinitely and offset against income from the same trade or profession in future years; however, the loss must be used as early as possible in the years when a profit arises. A loss incurred in the final 12 months of a trade or profession may be carried back and offset against profits from the same trade or profession for the three tax years prior to the year of cessation.

B. Other taxes

Universal Social Charge. The Universal Social Charge (USC) is charged at the following rates and income thresholds.

Income		Rate
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	%
0	12,012	0.5 (a)
12,012	20,687	2
20,687	70,044	4.5
70,044	—	8 (b)
100,000	—	11 (b)

(a) This income is exempt if income does not exceed EUR13,000.
(b) The 11% rate applies to "relevant income," excluding employment income that exceeds EUR100,000. Consequently, the 8% rate applies to employment income exceeding EUR100,000.

The USC applies to all income, including noncash benefits-in-kind and equity compensation under an unapproved scheme, subject to certain exceptions. It applies to all income before relief for pension contributions and deductions for capital allowances. Chargeable persons are required to pay the USC as part of preliminary tax (see Section D). Employers deduct the USC from payments to employees at the rates shown above.

Inheritance and gift tax. Capital Acquisitions Tax (CAT) includes both gift and inheritance tax and is primarily payable by the beneficiary of a gift or an inheritance.

CAT is payable if any of the following conditions are met:

- The disponer is resident or ordinarily resident in Ireland. If the disponer is not domiciled in Ireland, he or she is not regarded as resident or ordinarily resident for CAT purposes unless he or she has been resident in Ireland for five consecutive years immediately preceding the year of the gift or inheritance.
- The beneficiary is resident or ordinarily resident in Ireland. If the beneficiary is not domiciled in Ireland, he or she is not regarded as resident or ordinarily resident for CAT purposes unless he or she has been resident in Ireland for five consecutive years immediately preceding the year of the gift or inheritance.
- The gift or inheritance consists of Irish property.

CAT is imposed at a rate of 33% for gifts and inheritances received on or after 6 December 2012. It is payable on the amount exceeding the relevant tax-free threshold. Three tax-free thresholds exist. The thresholds vary depending on the relationship between the disponer and the beneficiary. The following are the relevant thresholds.

Group	Threshold EUR	When applicable
A	335,000	If the beneficiary is a child (including certain foster children), or minor child of a deceased child of the disponer; parents also fall within this threshold if they receive an inheritance from a child
B	32,500	If the beneficiary is a brother, sister, niece, nephew or lineal ancestor or lineal descendant of the disponer
C	16,250	All other cases

Any benefit received since 5 December 1991 within the same group threshold is aggregated for the purposes of determining whether any CAT is payable on the current benefit.

An exemption from CAT applies to gifts or inheritances received by a spouse or civil partner. Gifts of EUR3,000 or less are also exempt. Relief from CAT is available on gifts or inheritances of agricultural property and business property.

Ireland has entered into inheritance tax treaties with the United Kingdom and the United States.

Local Property Tax. Effective from 1 July 2013, an annual Local Property Tax (LPT) is charged on all residential properties in the Republic of Ireland. The LPT is due with respect to residential properties on a specific ownership date in any given year. For 2013, the ownership date was 1 May 2013. Residential property valuations for 2014 to 2020 remain similar to the valuations used for 2013 (even if improvements are made to the property). The next valuation date for LPT is 1 November 2021. The standard rate of LPT is 0.18% for property up to a market value of EUR1 million and 0.25% on the excess over EUR1 million. The rates can be increased or decreased by 15% by the relevant local authorities.

C. Social security

Rates. Ireland imposes payroll taxes for Pay Related Social Insurance (PRSI) on all employment income, including most benefits. The following are the rates of social security contributions for 2021.

Social security taxes	Contribution rate (a)
PRSI; paid by
Employee	4% on gross income (no maximum income)
Employer	11.05% on gross income (no maximum income) (b)
Self-employed	4% on gross income (no maximum income) (c)

(a) If weekly earnings are EUR352 or less, employee contributions are nil.
(b) If weekly earnings are EUR398 or less, employer PRSI is calculated at 8.7%.
(c) The minimum annual PRSI contribution is EUR500.

A PRSI credit, which reduces the amount of PRSI payable, is available for employees earning between EUR352.01 and EUR424 per week. The credit is calculated by subtracting one-sixth of the employment income over EUR352.01 from the maximum credit of EUR12.

Social insurance. Employed persons between the ages of 16 and pensionable age (currently 66) must pay PRSI. A contribution is also payable by employers. Self-employed persons between the ages of 16 and pensionable age (currently 66) with earnings of EUR5,000 or more per year must pay PRSI.

Self-employed persons pay PRSI on total income, including unearned income. Employed persons pay PRSI on income from employment, including benefits in kind. Employed persons also pay PRSI on unearned income if they are regarded as chargeable persons. An employed person is regarded as a chargeable person if they have non-employment income and if he or she meets either of the following conditions:
- His or her net assessable non-employment income is more than EUR5,000 on the year.
- His or her total gross non-employment income is EUR30,000 or more in the year.

The payment of PRSI contributions may secure the following benefits:
- Contributory old-age pension (for employees and self-employed persons)
- Unemployment benefits (now known as Jobseekers Benefits; for employees only)
- Sickness benefits (for employees only)
- Limited dental benefits (for employees only)
- Limited medical (optical and hearing) benefits (for employees only)

PRSI is payable by individuals employed in Ireland. However, non-European Economic Area (EEA) nationals, other than individuals from Australia, Canada, Japan, Korea (South), New Zealand, Quebec, Switzerland and the United States, are exempt for the first 52 weeks of their assignment in Ireland if the assignment is temporary and if the employer's principal place of business is outside Ireland, the Isle of Man and the United Kingdom. An application must be made to the Department of Social Protection to exempt such individuals from Irish PRSI.

Individuals from the EEA and nationals from Australia, Canada, Japan, Korea (South), New Zealand, Quebec, Switzerland and the United States may remain covered by their home-country social insurance systems for a specified time period. An application must be made to the relevant authorities to apply for an A1 Certificate/Certificate of Coverage in this regard.

Ireland also has an agreement with the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands (Alderney, Guernsey, Herm, Jersey and Jethou).

Some individuals leaving Ireland on short-term assignments may remain covered under the Irish PRSI system for a limited period, subject to approval from the Department of Social Protection.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Filing. The tax year for individuals runs from 1 January to 31 December. Individuals who are subject to income tax for the tax year must file tax returns for earned and investment income and capital gains under the self-assessment rules. To avoid a surcharge penalty, taxpayers must file their returns by 31 October following the end of the tax year. If a taxpayer files his or her tax return and pays any related tax liability online through the Revenue's Online System (ROS), the deadline is extended until mid-November (the exact date is set by the Revenue at the beginning of each tax year). If a return is filed late but within two months after the filing deadline, the surcharge is 5% of the tax liability due. If a return is filed more than two months after the filing deadline, the surcharge is 10% of the tax liability due. Interest may also be applicable.

Capital gains are included in the tax return or in a separate form for individuals not subject to income tax. Individuals with capital gains in the tax year must declare such gains by the relevant filing date (see Tax administration dates).

Non-domiciled individuals are not required to provide details of worldwide investment income or capital gains. However, they must file tax returns and supply information concerning the following:

- Details of employment earnings subject to Irish income tax
- Remittances of investment income and capital gains to Ireland during the year
- SARP relief being claimed if relevant

Non-domiciled individuals are subject to the filing dates mentioned above.

Married persons are taxed jointly or separately, at the taxpayers' election.

Payment. Tax on salaries and benefits normally is collected through the PAYE system.

Income tax self-assessment applies to self-employed individuals. These individuals include persons receiving rental income and investment income. Ninety percent of the tax due, including the USC (see Section B), for the year or an amount equal to 100% of the final liability of the preceding year must be paid by 31 October in the tax year to avoid an interest charge. Alternatively, income tax may be paid in 12 equal monthly installments throughout the tax year if agreement has been sought from the Irish tax authorities. The aggregate of these installments must equal 105% of the second preceding year's liability, and must be paid by direct debit mandate (under this system, tax payments are deducted monthly from an individual's bank account) if the individual had income tax liability in the second preceding year. Any balance of tax due must be paid by 31 October following the end of the tax year. A limited number of cases are selected for subsequent in-depth examination by the Revenue Commissioners.

Capital gains tax on gains arising on disposals during the period from 1 January to 30 November must be paid by 15 December in that tax year, and the tax on gains arising on disposals during the period from 1 December to 31 December must be paid by the following 31 January.

Tax administration dates. The following table presents important tax administration dates for the year ending 31 December 2021.

	Due date
Pay balance of 2020 income tax liability	31 October 2021
File 2020 income tax return	31 October 2021/ 17 November 2021*
Pay 2021 preliminary tax equal to 90% of the actual income tax liability or 100% of the previous year's final income tax liability	31 October 2021
Capital gains tax due
For period of 1 January 2021 through 30 November 2021	15 December 2021
For period of 1 December 2021 through 31 December 2021	31 January 2022
File 2021 return	31 October 2022
Balance of 2021 tax due	31 October 2022

* If a taxpayer files his is or her 2020 Irish tax return and pays any related tax liability online via the ROS, an extended deadline to 17 November 2021 is available.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Ireland has entered into double tax treaties to avoid double taxation and to establish a right of taxation between Ireland and those countries. In general, the treaties provide for a credit for foreign taxes paid against the individual's Irish income tax liabilities. Some treaties provide rules to determine the country where the individual is considered to be resident for tax purposes.

Ireland has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Albania	Greece	Poland
Armenia	Hong Kong	Portugal
Australia	Hungary	Qatar
Austria	Iceland	Romania
Bahrain	India	Russian

An individual holding a non-visa required passport is not automatically guaranteed entry to Ireland. An immigration officer at Immigration clearance has the authority to grant or deny permission to enter Ireland and also has the authority to decide on the duration of a person's stay in Ireland. Consequently, an individual wishing to enter Ireland must satisfy the immigration officer at Immigration clearance that, after arrival in Ireland, the individual intends to act in accordance with their stated purpose of visit to Ireland (appropriate supporting documents at entry are important).

Non-EU national passport holders and nationals of countries not mentioned above must apply for an entry visa before their arrival in Ireland at any Irish consular office or embassy abroad, or to the Department of Justice and Equality (DJE) in Dublin.

In October 2014, the Irish authorities introduced a change for minors (under the age of 18) who are seeking a visa to enter Ireland. When a visa is issued to a minor, the visa (in his or her passport) identifies whether the minor who holds an Irish visa is traveling in the company of a parent(s), legal guardian(s) or other adult(s), or traveling unaccompanied. The visa with respect to an accompanied minor states the name(s) and passport number(s) of the accompanying adult(s), and the minor must travel into Ireland with the accompanying adult(s) named on the visa. Failure to do so can result in refusal of entry. In addition, the Irish authorities have issued further requirements regarding a minor traveling to Ireland. The immigration officer, at his or her discretion, can request proof of the relationship to a child.

Individuals over the age of 5 years who are applying for Irish visas in China Mainland, India, Nigeria or Pakistan must provide biometric data as part of their visa application.

Although an Irish entry visa affixed to an individual's passport indicates that a person has permission to travel to Ireland during the dates stated on the visa, it does not automatically guarantee entry to Ireland. An immigration officer at Immigration clearance has the authority to grant or deny permission to enter Ireland and also has the authority to decide on the duration of a person's stay in Ireland. Consequently, an individual wishing to enter Ireland must satisfy the immigration officer at Immigration clearance that the individual intends to comply with the conditions of the visa held by them at the point of entry to Ireland (appropriate supporting documents at entry are important).

In the first instance, non-EEA nationals who are traveling to Ireland with a valid employment permit are granted only a single-entry visa. In May 2019, the Irish immigration authorities abolished the re-entry visa requirement that required visa-required nationals to obtain a re-entry visa after they registered their residency in Ireland (see Section H), to travel in and out of Ireland. Going forward after they arrive in Ireland, they must apply for a residence card, which allows them to travel in and out of Ireland while they remain resident without a separate re-entry visa. Non-EU nationals may be required to have employment permits if they intend to take up employment in Ireland. If an employment permit is required, non-EU nationals must have employment permits in their possession at the point of entry to Ireland.

In June 2014, the Irish and British governments issued a joint scheme, the British Irish Visa Scheme, which allows visitors from China Mainland and India to travel freely within Ireland and the United Kingdom on either an Irish or UK visa. As a result, tourists and business visitors may visit both Ireland and the United Kingdom, including Northern Ireland, on a single visa. This scheme applies only to individuals holding a short-stay visa (travel for up to 90 days).

G. Employment permits and self-employment

Employment permits. In October 2014, the Irish government enacted the Employment Permits (Amendment) Act 2014, which created nine categories of Irish employment permits. The following are the categories of employment permits:

- Critical Skills Employment Permit (formerly Green Card)
- Intra-Company Transfer (ICT) Permit
- General Employment Permit (formerly Work Permit)
- Contract for Services Employment Permit
- Dependent/Partner/Spouse Employment Permit
- Internship Employment Permit
- Graduate Employment Permit
- Sports and Cultural Employment Permit
- Reactivation Employment Permit

Each of these categories has their own qualifying requirements and conditions. In general, EEA nationals and Swiss nationals do not require employment permits to live and work in Ireland. The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Employment (DETE) issues employment permits. Employers wishing to hire a non-EEA individual are required to apply for an employment permit on behalf of the applicant. An individual may also apply for an employment permit if he or she has received a job offer that is conditional on the holding of a valid employment permit. A signed copy of the individual's employment contract is required for the application process. In addition to employment permits, depending on their country of origin, non-EU nationals may also need an entry visa (see Section F). The categories of the most commonly used permits in Ireland are summarized below.

Critical Skills Employment Permit. To obtain a Critical Skills Employment Permit, an individual must be employed under an Irish employment contract and paid directly from an Irish payroll. The minimum remuneration requirement is EUR64,000. Effective from 1 October 2014, remuneration can be made up of Basic Annual Salary (equal to at least the Irish National Minimum Wage) and Health Insurance Payments. Individuals in all occupations except those that are contrary to public interest may qualify for a Critical Skills Employment Permit.

A non-EEA national who has been offered an Irish employment contract and will be paid directly from an Irish payroll may be eligible for a Critical Skills Employment Permit if the salary is between EUR32,000 and EUR63,999. The individual must hold a third-level qualification (at least a degree qualification) and the role must be included in the Critical Skills Occupations List.

A Critical Skills Employment Permit applies only if the offer of employment is for a period of at least two years. An initial permit is available for a two-year period (EUR1,000 fee). No more than 50% of employees of an Irish employer may be from non-EEA countries.

An individual who is granted an employment permit for the first time in Ireland is expected to stay with the initial employer for a period of 12 months.

Under a new measure, spouses or recognized de facto partners of Critical Skills Employment Permit holders are entitled to seek permission to work directly from the Immigration Service Delivery (ISD) unit. A preclearance application must be submitted and processed for qualifying de facto partners for Critical Skills Permit holders before they can travel to Ireland (this is not required for spouses). Once the de facto partner or spouse of a Critical Skills Employment Permit holder arrives in Ireland, they can seek a Stamp 1G residence card (see Section H), which allows them to work in Ireland. This has removed the need for the Dependent/Partner/Spouse Employment Permit (but has not abolished this permit type).

De facto partners or spouses who are eligible for this permission have greater ease of access to employment in Ireland and may apply for a role with a remuneration of less than EUR30,000 per year (but not less than the Irish National Minimum Wage). They do not require a full-time position and are not restricted in the type of role in which they can work in (except those in a domestic setting).

Extension of a Critical Skills Employment Permit. Effective from 1 April 2015, Critical Skills Employment permit holders who have completed two years of continuous employment in Ireland must submit a request to the DETE for a letter that confirms their compliance with the terms and conditions of their employment permit. If the DETE is satisfied, it issues a letter confirming this fact, and the individual must present this letter to the Garda National Immigration Bureau (GNIB) with appropriate documentation to apply for an extension of up to 24 months of the duration of their Irish Residence Permit (IRP) card, formerly known as the GNIB card (see Section H).

General Employment Permit. To obtain a General Employment Permit, an individual must be employed in an eligible occupation under an Irish employment contract and paid directly from an Irish payroll. The role must not be an excluded job category contained in the Ineligible Categories of Employment for Employment Permits.

The minimum remuneration requirement is EUR30,000. Effective from 1 October 2014, remuneration can be made up of Basic Annual Salary (equal to at least the Irish National Minimum Wage) and Health Insurance Payments. The remuneration threshold is reduced from EUR30,000 to EUR27,000 with respect to employment permit applications under the General Employment Permit category for the following individuals:

- Non-EEA nationals in a healthcare assistant role if the individual has previously been in employment in Ireland on an employment permit as a healthcare assistant for two years or more and if he or she submits a copy of his or her relevant Level 5 Quality and Qualifications Ireland (QQI) qualification
- Non-EEA graduates of overseas third-level institutions (universities and third-level colleges) who have graduated in the last 12 months that have been offered an Information Technology Graduate position on the Critical Skills Occupations List
- Non-EEA graduates of Irish institutions who have graduated in the last 12 months and have been offered a graduate position on the Critical Skills Occupations List
- Technical or sales support roles with non-EEA language requirements

A minimum salary of EUR27,500 applies to those in boner (meat) roles.

In addition, the employer must advertise the vacancy with the Department of Social Protection's employment services (previously referred to as FAS) in national newspapers and also in local newspapers or on a jobs website, to demonstrate that it was unable to fill the vacancy with an EEA national. Individuals engaged in eligible occupations, except those that are contrary to public interest, may qualify for a General Employment Permit. A General Employment Permit is available for an initial period of either six months (EUR500 fee) or up to two years (EUR1,000 fee). After five years, an indefinite extension may be available for no fee. No more than 50% of employees of an Irish employer may be from non-EEA countries.

An individual who is granted an employment permit for the first time in Ireland is expected to stay with the initial employer for a period of 12 months.

Intra-Company Transfer Permit. To obtain an ICT Permit, an individual must be transferred to a company related to his or her employer in Ireland (that is, sister, parent or subsidiary) and must remain on a foreign employment contract and foreign payroll (full salary must be paid by the foreign employer outside Ireland). An ICT Permit is available only to senior management, key personnel and individuals who are assigned to Ireland for specific training purposes. The relevant transferee must have been working for a minimum period of six months with the overseas company before the transfer.

The minimum remuneration is EUR40,000. Effective from 1 October 2014, remuneration must be made up of Basic Annual Salary (equal to at least the Irish National Minimum Wage), board and accommodation, and Health Insurance Payments. The full Basic Annual Salary must be paid by the individual's home country payroll, but payments with respect to board and accommodation and health insurance can be paid by either the Irish or foreign entity.

An ICT Permit is available for an initial period of six months (EUR500 fee) or two years (EUR1,000 fee). An extension for an additional three years is available (EUR1,500 fee). No further extensions are available. No more than 50% of employees of the Irish entity can be from non-EEA countries.

A Training ICT Permit is available for non-EEA personnel who are in a training program and require a transfer to the Irish entity. This permit is granted for a 12-month maximum period, and the individual must remain on a foreign contract and foreign payroll (the home country entity must pay the full Basic Annual Salary). The minimum annual remuneration is EUR30,000. A detailed training plan must be submitted as part of the application to the DETE.

The relevant transferee (trainee) must have been working for a minimum period of one month with the overseas company before the transfer.

An individual who is granted an employment permit for the first time in Ireland is expected to stay with the initial employer for a period of 12 months.

Atypical Working Scheme. The DJE introduced the Atypical Working Scheme on 2 September 2013. This scheme covers a situation in which an employee would normally require an employment permit to work in Ireland but because of the short-term nature of the employment (15 to 90 calendar days inclusive), the employee is not eligible for a permit under the existing rules of the DETE.

Applications must be made to the DJE in advance of travel to Ireland. Only one application is allowed per individual in a 12-month period. The fee is EUR250.

Van der Elst* ruling. Non-EEA nationals whose normal place of work is in another EU country can seek entry to Ireland under the Van der Elst ruling, which was issued by the Court of Justice of the EU. This ruling allows a non-EEA national who is legally employed by a company in an EU country to perform services in another European country on a project for a short time. The Irish authorities recognize this ruling. As a result, a non-EEA national can seek permission to remain for up to a maximum of 12 months to work in Ireland on behalf of their European employer.

Posted Worker Declaration. A posted worker is an employee sent by his or her employer to carry out a service in another EU member state on a temporary basis. This applies to all nationals residing in the EU. EU Directive 2014/67 EU was adopted in May 2014 and further transposed into Irish law on 28 July 2016 as Statutory Instrument (SI) 412 of 2016 – European Union (posting of workers) Regulations 2016. This legislation requires EU foreign service providers to notify the Workplace Regulations Commission (WRC) when posting workers to Ireland. A prescribed form that requires certain information must be submitted to the WRC with respect to each posted worker. Failure to submit a declaration can result in a fine of up to EUR50,000.

Other work permit exemptions. The following individuals are not required to obtain employment permits in Ireland:

- A non-EEA national who has obtained explicit permission from the DJE to remain resident and employed in Ireland

- A non-EEA national who has been granted international protection (refugee status or subsidiary protection)
- A non-EEA national who holds appropriate permission under the Immigrant Investor/Start-up Entrepreneur Programme
- A non-EEA national who is a registered student working less than 20 hours a week
- Swiss nationals

Self-employment. Arising from an ongoing review of the business-, entrepreneur- and investor-related migration schemes, the Irish immigration authorities decided to suspend the Business Permission Scheme, effective from the close of business on 16 March 2016 until further notice. This does not affect applications received before 16 March 2016 or the status of persons already holding permission under the scheme.

Other immigration programs. The DJE has also introduced the programs described below, effective from April 2012.

Immigrant Investor Programme. The Immigrant Investor Programme is open to non-EEA nationals and their families who commit to an approved investment in Ireland. Approved participants in the program and their immediate family members are granted rights of residence in Ireland, which allow them to enter Ireland on multi-entry visas and to remain in Ireland for a defined period, with the possibility of ongoing renewal. The program will facilitate the establishment over time of a permanent relationship in Ireland for the participants. Investors must have a minimum net worth of EUR2 million. To be considered for the program, an investor must propose an investment in one or more of the following categories:

- Enterprise Investment: minimum investment of EUR1 million in a single Irish enterprise or several enterprises for at least three years that supports the creation of employment.
- Investment Fund: minimum investment of EUR1 million in an Approved Investment Fund for a minimum of three years. Funds must be approved and regulated by the Central Bank of Ireland.
- Real Estate Investment Trust (REIT): minimum investment of EUR2 million for at least three years in an Irish REIT that is listed on the Irish Stock Exchange at which stage the investor may divest no more than 50% of the shares. If the shares are divested during year three, then after four years, the investor may divest no more than 25% of the shares from the date of purchase. After five years from the date of purchase, no requirements on the retention of shares apply to investors.
- Endowment: minimum investment of EUR500,000 in a project to benefit the arts, sports, health, culture or education that is regarded as a philanthropic contribution with clear public benefit.

If the required criteria are met, successful applicants can expect to receive residence permission for five years, with an initial review after the first two years, to ensure conditions are still being met. The investor is not required to establish actual residence in Ireland but must spend at least one day a year in Ireland.

Applications for this scheme are made to the ISD unit.

Start-up Entrepreneur Programme. Under the Start-up Entrepreneur Programme, non-EEA nationals with an innovative business idea for a High Potential Start-up and funding of EUR50,000 for the first founder (and EUR30,000 for any subsequent founders) can acquire residency in Ireland for the purposes of developing their business. No initial job creation targets are set because it is recognized that such a business can take some time to get off the ground. The intention of the program is to support High Potential Start-ups, which are defined as enterprises that satisfy the following conditions:

- They introduce a new or innovative product or service to international markets.
- They are capable of creating 10 jobs in Ireland and realizing EUR1 million in sales within three to four years of starting up.
- They are led by an experienced management team.
- They are headquartered and controlled in Ireland.
- They are less than six years old.

This scheme is not intended for retail, personal services, catering or other similar businesses.

Successful applicants can expect to receive an initial permission of two years. Following a review at this point to ensure that the entrepreneur is continuing to progress with the business proposal, a further three years will be granted. After the initial five-year period, successful entrepreneurs will be free to apply for long-term residence in five-year periods.

Applications for this scheme are made to the INIS.

H. Residence permits and naturalization

Residence permits. In general, EEA nationals and Swiss nationals are not required to apply for an Irish Residence Permit (IRP) card, formerly known as a GNIB card. Non-EEA and non-Swiss nationals who intend to remain longer than 90 days in the Dublin area must register their residency and obtain an IRP card from the centralized registration office in Dublin. In areas outside Dublin, registration takes place at the local police station.

All individuals who are 16 years of age or older must register with the local registration office to obtain their IRP card. The fee is EUR300 per registration.

Long-term residency. To obtain Irish long-term residency, an individual must have been legally resident in Ireland continuously for over five years (60 months) on the basis of holding an employment permit (work permit, spousal permit or working authorization). The fee per application is EUR500.

Under the current policy, ICT Permit holders (those working under assignments and trainees) are not eligible to apply for long-term residency.

Naturalization (citizenship). In general, an individual applying for naturalization must fulfill several requirements, including the following:

- He or she had continuous reckonable residence (qualifying periods of lawful residence) in Ireland for the one year immediately before the date of application.

- During the eight years preceding the year described in the first bullet, he or she had a total of four years reckonable residence in Ireland.

The fee per application is EUR175. If the naturalization is approved, the fee for certification is EUR950.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. If the spouse or dependents of a working expatriate intend to work, they must apply independently for employment permits.

Driver's permits. No time restriction applies to EEA nationals with respect to the use of their home-country driver's licenses in Ireland while the licenses are valid. Non-EEA foreign nationals may drive legally in Ireland using their home-country driver's licenses without restriction for 12 months. After the 12-month period expires, if the individual wishes to continue to drive in Ireland, he or she must apply for an Irish Learners Permit.

To obtain an Irish driver's license, an individual must take written, verbal, practical and vision tests.

This chapter reflects the tax rates that are effective from 6 April 2021.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are subject to tax on worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on income from Isle of Man sources only.

Individuals are considered resident in Isle of Man if any of the following conditions applies:

- They are present for six months or more during the tax year.
- They are present for an average of 90 or more days per tax year over a period of four or more consecutive years.
- The individual's specific circumstances indicate "a view or intent to establish residence." The Assessor of Income Tax considers several factors in determining the applicability of this condition.

Certificates of residence can be provided if the Assessor of Income Tax is satisfied that the conditions of residence are fulfilled.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. An employee is taxed on remuneration and benefits received during a tax year (ending on 5 April). Taxable benefits include company cars and accommodation.

Education allowances provided by the employer to its employees' children 18 years of age and under are taxable for income tax and social security purposes.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employment income includes income from a trade, profession or vocation.

A self-employed individual is assessed on business profits. In general, the assessment for a particular year is based on business profits earned during an accounting period ending in the current tax year. For tax purposes, profits are usually determined in accordance with normal accounting principles, subject to certain adjustments (see Business deductions).

Investment income. For tax purposes, investment income, including dividends, interest, royalties and rental income, is included in an individual's total income. Double tax relief is granted on income subject to withholding tax in another country (see Section E).

Relocation of key employees. If an individual is contractually obligated to take up residence in the Isle of Man to facilitate the process of starting up a new business or the diversification or expansion of an existing one and if the necessary approval is obtained, the individual and his or her jointly assessed spouse can be subject to income tax on Manx-source income only for the first three years of residence. For the company, financial assistance may be granted for any reasonable relocation package that needs to be incurred with respect to the new business.

Personal service companies. Deemed employment provisions apply if an individual provides services to a client and if the services are not performed under a contract between the worker and client, but under an arrangement involving a third-party company. If the services had been provided under a contract directly between the worker and client and if the worker would have been an employee of the client, deemed employment exists. As a result, the worker is treated as an employee of the client and not the third party.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. The Isle of Man has no specific legislation addressing the taxation of employer-provided stock options. In practice, any benefit received is taxable on grant rather than exercise. A capital gain that arises at the exercise of the option is not taxable. Clearance can be obtained in advance with respect to the taxation of specific options in the Isle of Man.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Expenses are deductible if they are incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of employment duties. No allowance is available for travel between home and work or for office attire. Allowable expenses include membership fees of approved professional bodies and contributions by an employee to a personal pension scheme. The maximum deduction in a tax year for contributions to a personal pension scheme is GBP50,000, or 100% of relevant earnings, whichever is less. The Isle of Man does not provide for a lifetime allowance with respect to benefits from personal pension schemes.

Tax relief for the expenses listed below is granted through a 10% reduction of the individual's tax liability. The 10% tax reduction is granted on the lower of the amount paid or the maximum amount permitted. The following are the relevant expenses:

- Mortgage and loan interest payable to an Isle of Man lender, up to a maximum amount of GBP5,000 (GBP10,000 for married couples or civil partners who are jointly assessed).
- Private medical insurance premiums for residents 60 years of age and older, up to a maximum amount of GBP1,800 (GBP3,600 for jointly assessed couples, if both partners are insured and if at least one partner is over 60).

- Charitable donations, up to a maximum amount of GBP7,000.
- Payments made under Educational Deeds of Covenant, up to a maximum amount of GBP5,500. (An Educational Deed of Covenant is an irrevocable covenant for the benefit of a person between 18 and 25 years of age who is undertaking a course of higher education. The covenant must be entered into before 5 April 2011 and made by a parent or grandparent of the donee, and the donee must be within the qualifying age band when the covenant is made and when the payment is made.)
- Nursing expenses incurred in caring for a dependent relative up to a maximum amount of GBP12,500.

Personal deductions and allowances. The following personal allowances apply for the tax year ending 5 April 2022.

Type of allowance	Amount (GBP)
Single allowance	14,250
Married couples' and civil partners' allowance	28,500
Single parent	6,400
Blind person (additional)	2,900
Disabled person (additional)	2,900

Business deductions. Expenses incurred wholly and exclusively in producing self-employment or business income are deductible. The following expenses are not allowed for tax purposes:
- Depreciation
- Costs of a capital nature

Although costs of a capital nature are not deductible, capital allowances (tax depreciation) are deductible in computing taxable profits. Capital allowances include a 100% first-year allowance for plant and machinery and a 25% annual allowance on a reducing-balance basis for cars. The car allowance is limited to an annual maximum of GBP3,000.

A 100% first-year allowance is available for qualifying expenditure incurred to acquire, extend or alter qualifying industrial buildings, agricultural buildings and tourist premises.

Rates. The following are the income tax rates for resident individuals for the tax year ending 5 April 2022.

Taxable income			Rate on
Exceeding GBP	Not exceeding GBP	Tax GBP	excess %
0	6,500	650	10 (lower rate)
6,500	—	—	20 (higher rate)

The 10% rate applies to the first GBP6,500 of income for each individual above their personal allowance (see Personal deductions and allowances). Married couples and civil partners wishing to be taxed jointly must make an election. If an election is made, the 10% rate applies to the first GBP13,000 of joint income in excess of the married couples' and civil partners' allowance (GBP28,500 for the tax year ending 5 April 2022).

A cap on an individual's annual tax liability is available on application. The maximum amount of income tax payable by an Isle of Man resident taxed under the tax cap is GBP200,000

(GBP400,000 for married couples electing to be taxed jointly) for the year ending 5 April 2022, regardless of the amount of his or her worldwide taxable income.

A resident individual or jointly assessed married couple or civil partners must make an election in order for the tax cap to apply. If an election is approved by the Assessor of Income Tax, it will apply for 5 or 10 consecutive tax years at the amount applicable for the first year of election.

Nonresidents are taxed at a rate of 20% on all income arising in the Isle of Man. Nonresidents are not entitled to a personal allowance. The tax liability of nonresidents with respect to certain types of income is limited to the income tax deducted at source, if applicable.

Relief for losses. Business losses may be carried forward and offset against future profits from the same trade or, carried back to the immediately preceding year and offset against profits from the same trade. Business losses can also be offset against other personal income in the current or preceding year. Business losses incurred in the first four years of assessment may be carried back against other income. On the permanent discontinuance of a trade, a terminal loss may be carried back and offset against profits from the same trade in the three preceding years of assessment. Certain restrictions apply.

B. Other taxes

No capital gains tax, inheritance or estate tax, wealth tax, stamp duty or stamp duty land tax is imposed in the Isle of Man.

C. Social security

In general, National Insurance contributions are payable on the earnings of individuals who work in the Isle of Man.

The Isle of Man has a reciprocal agreement with the United Kingdom that permits National Insurance contributions to be paid in either jurisdiction to count toward total payments required.

For the year ending 5 April 2022, an employee's National Insurance contribution is 11% of weekly earnings between GBP138 and GBP823. The annual ceiling on the amount of wages subject to an employee's National Insurance contributions at a rate of 11% is GBP42,796. Any earnings above this amount are subject to National Insurance contributions at a rate of 1% for the year ending 5 April 2022. An employer must pay contributions of 12.8% of an employee's weekly earnings exceeding GBP138 (GBP7,176 a year) for the year ending 5 April 2022, with no ceiling.

A self-employed individual must pay a weekly flat-rate contribution of GBP5.40 per week if annual profits are expected to exceed GBP7,176 for the year ending 5 April 2022. In addition, a Class 4 contribution equal to 8% of profits between GBP7,136 and GBP42,796 is also payable for the year ending 5 April 2022. This contribution is collected together with the individual's income tax. An additional Class 4 contribution equal to 1% of the profits or gains of self-employed individuals above the annual upper profits limit is payable.

Effective from 6 April 2019, the Treasury announced the introduction of a National Insurance Holiday Scheme. The scheme applies to anyone who takes up residence on the Isle of Man on or after 6 April 2019 and who has not been resident on the Isle of Man for tax purposes in the five tax years immediately preceding the year in which they take up residence. The scheme also applies to any Isle of Man student who, on or after 6 April 2019, successfully completes a full-time course of education outside the Isle of Man for a university first degree or comparable course.

To benefit from the scheme, a person needs to commence permanent employment within 12 months after arriving on the Isle of Man. A student needs to commence permanent employment within five years of successfully completing his or her course. Other employment requirements apply. A person who meets these requirements is able to apply for a refund of the Class 1 National Insurance contributions paid by him or her as an employee during the first 12 months of his or her permanent employment on the Isle of Man, up to a maximum of GBP4,000.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year runs from 6 April to the following 5 April. Resident individuals must complete annual tax returns containing details of worldwide income arising or accruing during the tax year. The tax return must be submitted by 6 October following the end of the tax year. An initial GBP100 filing penalty is imposed for late submissions. A second penalty of GBP200 is charged if the return is still outstanding six months after the due date.

Married couples and civil partners may elect to be taxed jointly, enabling the sharing of allowances and lower rate thresholds.

Income tax and National Insurance contributions are deducted at source from employment income by the employer, in accordance with a tax code issued by the tax authorities, which takes into account available allowances, deductions and thresholds. A payment on account may be due by 6 January in the tax year or 30 days after the notice of assessment if income from which tax is not deducted at source (for example, investment or self-employment income) is expected to arise in the tax year. This payment equals 105% of the tax liability for the preceding tax year if greater than GBP250. If less than GBP250, no payment on account is required.

If total income is assessed in accordance with the tax return at the end of the tax year, any tax liability in excess of tax deducted at source or paid on account becomes payable. Any tax payable is due on 6 January following the end of the tax year or within 30 days of the date of the assessment, whichever is later.

A separate assessment is issued for profit-related National Insurance contributions.

For late income tax payments, interest is charged at an annual rate of 5% on the amount of overdue tax, or 10% if the return is not submitted by 5 April following the year of assessment.

Nonresidents must submit a tax return if any Isle of Man-source income is received in the year, unless the income was subject to withholding tax. Withholding tax at a rate of 20% is imposed on rental payments to nonresident individuals, but no withholding tax is imposed on dividends and, in general, interest.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Double tax relief is available for foreign tax paid if evidence of payment is produced. Relief is granted in an amount equal to the lesser of the following amounts:

- The amount of foreign tax paid on the income
- The marginal amount of Isle of Man income tax attributable to the foreign-source income

The Isle of Man has entered into double tax treaties with the following countries.

Bahrain	Luxembourg	Seychelles
Estonia	Malta	Singapore
Guernsey	Qatar	United Kingdom
Jersey

It has also signed a double tax treaty with Belgium, but this treaty is not yet in force.

The Isle of Man has also entered into agreements with the following jurisdictions that allocate the taxing rights of certain income of individuals.

Australia	Greenland	Norway
Denmark	Iceland	Poland
Faroe Islands	Ireland	Slovenia

The Isle of Man has signed tax information exchange agreements (TIEAs) with 39 jurisdictions, including the United Kingdom and the United States. The TIEAs relate to the exchange of tax information. Under the TIEAs, each jurisdiction may request information from the other, principally to assess and enforce collection of tax.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident individuals are subject to tax on their worldwide income and worldwide capital gains. Nonresident individuals are subject to tax on income from Israeli sources, which is income accrued or derived in Israel.

An Israeli resident is defined as an individual whose center of living is in Israel, taking into account the person's family, economic and social links, including the following considerations:
- Permanent home
- Place of residence of the individual and his or her family
- Habitual place of business or permanent place of employment
- Place where assets and investments are located
- Place of membership in organizations, associations and institutions

Under the law, a rebuttable presumption of Israeli residency will apply in either of the following circumstances:
- The individual is present in Israel at least 183 days in a tax year ending 31 December.
- The individual is present in Israel at least 30 days in the current tax year and a cumulative total of 425 days in the current and two preceding tax years.

If an individual is relocating for more than four years, he or she may sever residency under a "foreign resident" definition. This definition states that if during the first two years the individual is not present in Israel for more than 183 days and if the individual does not have a center of vital interest during the next two consecutive years, the individual is considered a nonresident during these four years (from date of departure).

New Immigrants (Oleh Hadash), First Time Residents or Senior Returning Residents (who were considered nonresident for a period of at least 10 consecutive years according to domestic law) are generally classified as residents for Israeli tax purposes since the earlier of the date of repatriation of the individual or the family, a stay over 183 days or the date of classification as a New Immigrant by the Israeli government. They may enjoy significant income tax, capital gains tax and import tax exemptions or benefits for a 10-year period (that is, tax exemption on foreign-source income and exemption from reporting under certain circumstances). New Immigrants and Senior Returning Residents may be considered nonresident for tax purposes during the first 12 months of their stay in Israel if a special notice form is submitted to the Israel Tax Authority (ITA) within 90 days after arrival. It is possible to approach the ITA and obtain a certificate of New Immigrant or Senior Returning Resident through the filing an official application. Such certificate may provide the taxpayer with some assurance regarding his or her tax status and whether he or she is eligible for the associated tax benefits.

A distinctive regime is available for returning residents who spent more than six years outside Israel. The regime includes tax benefits for these individuals on their return to Israel. The ITA is currently aiming to revise the residency definition regulations. As a result, readers should obtain updated information before taking actions.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Taxable employment income broadly covers salary and virtually all cash and in-kind benefits and allowances provided directly or indirectly to employees or for their benefit. If benefits are provided on a net-of-tax basis, they must be grossed up for tax purposes.

Company vehicles at an employee's disposal are taxable to the employee based on their prescribed usage value. The usage value for vehicles registered on or before 31 December 2009 depends on the price group of the model shown on the vehicle registration. The usage value for vehicles registered on or after 1 January 2010 equals a certain percentage of the vehicle's cost as defined in detailed regulations. These values are set forth in tax tables published by the tax authorities.

The use of a cell phone provided by the employer is taxable (attributed income of a specific amount, which is ILS105 per month during 2021).

The usage value of a car or a motorcycle provided to the employee for personal use is taxable (usage value calculated as a percentage of the car's value).

Educational allowances provided by employers to their employees are taxable for income tax and national insurance purposes.

For severance payments, a portion of the granted amount by employers to employees on termination of employment relationships is exempt from tax, regardless of whether the payments are required by law or are voluntary. The exempt portion is the lesser of one month's salary or ILS12,340 (as of 2021) per year of service.

Israeli employers are required to provide social benefits through externally approved provident funds. The social benefits for employees typically include some or all of the benefits shown in the following table.

Benefit	Common contribution as a percentage of salary Employee %	 Employer %
Retirement policy
Comprehensive pension plan	6 (a)	6.5 (a)
Long-term savings plan	6 (a)	6.5 (a)
Severance pay funding	0	6 to 8.33
Disability insurance	0	0 to 2.5
Educational funds (b)	2.5 (c)	7.5 (c)

(a) Employers' contributions up to ILS1,978 per month are exempt from tax. Contributions exceeding this amount are taxable as employment income.
(b) These funds may be used after three years for training in Israel or, after six years, for any reason. Different rules apply to 5% or greater shareholders and to self-employed individuals. These funds are not compulsory funds by law.
(c) These are the maximum rates. Employers' contributions are exempt from tax if contributions are made on monthly salary not exceeding ILS15,712 (2021). Contributions exceeding this amount are taxable as employment income.

As a result of ongoing major amendments to the law, the calculations of the above tax credits and deductions have become very complicated. Readers should seek professional advice before making decisions.

Self-employment income. Residents and nonresidents generally are subject to Israeli income tax on income derived from a business conducted in Israel and on income from one-time commercial transactions. Residents are also subject to tax on overseas income.

Self-employed individuals are subject to tax on business profits at the rates set forth in Rates.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees and related expenses for participating in board meetings are taxable as income from self-employment. A 17% value-added tax (VAT) liability also arises, but if the director derives primarily employment income, the payer company may account for the VAT under a reverse-charge mechanism. The company may recover the VAT as input VAT if it is a VAT dealer. Directors' remuneration for other managerial duties is taxable as employment income.

For private, closely held companies (controlled by five or fewer individuals or their relatives), additional rules apply to the deductibility of payments to employee-shareholders who directly or indirectly control 10% or more of such companies.

Investment income. The following tax rates apply to investment income and gains derived by individuals.

Income	Rate (%)
Real (inflation adjusted) capital gains derived from publicly traded and untraded securities
General rate for individuals on gains accruing from 1 January 2012	25
Individuals who were 10%-or-greater shareholders (material shareholders) in the company concerned at any time within the 12 preceding months	30

Residential rental income derived by an individual landlord from individual tenants, not exceeding ILS5,070 per month (any excess reduces the exemption by the amount of the excess)	Exempt up to ceiling

Double tax relief provisions may apply in certain cases (see Section E).

Taxation of employee share option plans and share purchase plans. Detailed rules apply to employee share option plans and share purchase plans. Capital gains tax treatment is allowed for certain qualified plans called Qualified Section 102 Capital Gain Plans, which are administered by a trustee, if, for options granted on or after 1 January 2006, at least two years have elapsed since the options were granted. Options granted according to the capital gains alternative (see below) before 1 January 2006 are subject to a minimum holding period of 24 months as of the end of the year in which the options were granted or 30 months from the grant date, depending on the election of the employee. Gains derived from nonqualified plans are treated as an ordinary income subject to income tax (up to 50%) and social security tax (12% tax up to a certain cap).

The tax authorities must approve the trustee and receive notice concerning a Section 102 beneficial plan at least 30 days before the implementation of the plan. Individuals who move to another country to work or reside may request tax rulings from the tax authorities to mitigate uncertainty or address double taxation or tax withholding.

Employers may choose between alternative rules for dividing gains between salary income (the employer deducts an option expense and the employee is subject to income tax at rates of up to 50% plus social security; see Section C) and capital gains (the employer receives no deduction and the employee is subject to capital gains tax at a rate of 25%).

Restricted Stock Units (RSU) plans may be qualified in the same manner as Section 102 beneficial plans by filing an application with the ITA and depositing the stock units in the hands of a qualified trustee for a period of at least two years.

Capital gains and losses. Residents and nonresidents are generally subject to Israeli tax on their capital gains relating directly or indirectly to assets in Israel, including Israeli securities, and to rights related to such assets. In certain circumstances, nonresidents are exempt from tax on a sale of securities of an Israeli entity or a foreign entity if most of the entity's assets are rights (directly or indirectly) in assets located in Israel. Under a relevant tax treaty, a resident of the other tax treaty country may be exempt from Israeli tax on capital gains, except for gains derived from transfers of real estate interests or business assets in Israel and transfers by material shareholders. Special rules apply to publicly traded securities (see below). Resident individuals are also subject to capital gains tax on their capital gains derived abroad.

Exit tax. Persons who cease to be Israeli residents are generally liable for capital gains tax as if they sold their assets one day before they ceased to be residents. The tax is payable on departure or on sale of the assets concerned (including shares and options) based on the linear portion of the gain related to the portion of the holding period during which the person was considered an Israeli resident.

Calculation of taxable amount. Capital gains are divided into real and inflationary components. In general, real gains derived before 31 December 2002 are taxed at the regular personal tax rates (30% to 50%). However, real gains derived from foreign publicly traded securities before 31 December 2004 are generally taxed at a rate of 35%. Any capital gains derived after these dates until 2011 are taxed at a rate of 20%; after 2011, the rate was updated to 25% (or 30% if the person is a 10% or greater shareholder [material shareholder]). In certain circumstances, the inflationary component is exempt from tax.

Capital losses may be used to offset capital gains derived in the same tax year or in subsequent tax years. In some cases, they may be offset against interest or dividends from securities if the losses are derived in the same tax year.

Detailed rules relate to deferrals of capital gains tax in certain cases, including mergers, divisions and shares-for-assets exchanges.

Gains attributable to securities. Israeli residents are taxed at a rate of 25% on the real (inflation adjusted) gains derived from sales of traded securities in Israel and abroad, or 15% on the nominal gain on the sale of certain bonds not linked to the consumer price index or a foreign currency (see above). A tax rate of 30% is applied if the individual claimed real interest deductions.

Gains derived from sales of bonds issued by a foreign country or foreign mutual funds are subject to tax at the rate of 25% (or 30% if a material shareholder). Nonresidents are exempt from Israeli tax on capital gains derived on the Tel-Aviv stock exchange or on Israeli securities on an overseas exchange. However, if an Israeli resident owns at least 25% of a nonresident investor company, such exemption does not apply.

Gains attributable to real estate. Gains derived from sales of Israeli real estate or from sales of interests in real estate entities (entities whose primary assets relate to Israeli real estate) are subject to land appreciation tax at the regular rates of up to 50% for the portion of the gain that relates to the period before 7 November 2001. For the linear portion that relates to the period after that date, the applicable rate is 25% from 2007, with the exception of material shareholders who are taxed at a rate of 30%. Assets acquired in 2002 are eligible for a tax rebate of 20%. Assets acquired in 2003 are eligible for a 10% rebate. Various exemptions apply to residential homes. Also, see Real estate tax in Section B.

In addition, the purchaser of real estate must pay transfer fees (acquisition tax) at various rates ranging from 0% to 10%. For an interest acquired in a real estate entity, acquisition tax is imposed on the underlying real estate asset value without offsetting liabilities or borrowings.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Business-related expenses incurred by employees are deductible only in limited circumstances. For example, expenses incurred to update existing professional knowledge are deductible. However, to claim these deductions, employees generally must file annual personal Israeli tax returns, even if they are otherwise exempt from filing.

To complement the tax deductions available to employees for education, only self-employed individuals may deduct payments made to approved education funds that are used for training or education in Israel (or for any purpose after six years). The amount of the payment that may be deducted is limited to up to 4.5% of the taxable income. The annual income limit for 2021 is ILS188,544 (ILS263,000 for self-employed individuals). This limit is adjusted annually.

Personal deductions. In general, tax relief for individuals is in the form of tax credits rather than tax deductions. Consequently, relatively few items are deductible for tax purposes.

As a result of major amendments to the law, the calculation of personal deductions has become complicated. Readers should seek professional advice before making decisions.

Business deductions. Expenses are generally deductible if they are incurred wholly and exclusively in the production of taxable income. Additional rules apply to certain items, including car expenses, travel, entertainment, and research and development. The cash basis is acceptable for certain small businesses, and special inflation-adjustment rules are prescribed for businesses. These adjustments include inflation relief relating to depreciation for certain small businesses.

Special rules for expatriates. If no treaty exemption applies, expatriate nonresidents working in Israel lawfully for an employer may enjoy certain benefits. For the first 12 months in Israel, a "foreign expert" is entitled to a deduction for accommodation expenses incurred and a living expense deduction of up to ILS330 (2021) per day. To be considered a "foreign expert" under the Israeli income tax regulations, the assignee needs to meet the following criteria:

- He or she is legally allowed to work in Israel.
- He or she is working in his or her field of expertise and was invited to work in Israel by a local entity.
- He or she earns a gross salary exceeding ILS13,400 (2021) per month.

Foreign journalists who are members of the Foreign Press Association in Israel and foreign athletes are entitled to a tax rate of 25% and the abovementioned expatriate deductions for the first 36 months of work in Israel for foreign journalists and the first 48 months of work for foreign athletes.

An employer levy at a rate of 20% (or 0% or 15%, depending on the employee's field of employment; the exemption applies for the agriculture field) is imposed on foreign employees' employment income unless the employees are journalists or athletes or unless the employment income exceeds twice the average salary, which equals ILS21,102 (as of January 2021) per month. The levy must be paid by the employer and is not deducted from the employment income.

Rates. The Israeli tax year is the calendar year. In principle, Israeli personal tax liability is computed annually. However, tax is typically withheld from salaries and reported each month. Monthly tax brackets used during a year for payroll and other purposes are updated annually for inflation and are totaled to produce the annual tax brackets. The following table presents the annual taxable income brackets for 2021.

Taxable income ILS	Tax rate* %	Tax due ILS	Cumulative tax due ILS
First 75,480	10	7,548	7,548
Next 32,880	14	4,603	12,151
Next 65,520	20	13,104	25,255
Next 67,800	31	21,018	46,273
Next 261,240	35	91,434	137,707

* These tax rates are restricted to income earned from employment and self-employment and to income derived by persons over 60 years of age. In other cases, a minimum tax rate of 31% applies to the first ILS241,680, a tax rate of 35% applies to income between ILS241,681 and ILS502,920, a tax rate of 47% applies to income between ILS502,921 and ILS647,640, and a tax rate of 50% applies to income above ILS647,640.

Credits. Israeli resident individuals are entitled to personal tax credits, which are known as credit points. These credit points are deducted from the computed income tax liability of individuals. Each credit point is currently worth ILS218 (2021) per month.

The number of credit points granted to an individual reflects family circumstances. For example, an unmarried male resident generally receives 2.25 credit points, and an unmarried female resident generally receives 2.75 credit points. If, for example, both spouses work and opt for separate tax computations, the male receives 2.25 credit points and the female/spouse receives 2.75 points; the female/spouse also generally receives one credit point for each child under 18 years of age and one-half of a credit point for a child born or reaching 18 in the tax year. Effective from 2012, the male spouse is also eligible for certain credit points for infants up to the age of five years.

The following are other significant tax credits granted to individuals:
- Credits with respect to savings fund contributions (see Income subject to tax).
- Tax credit for 35% of charitable contributions to recognized institutions if a taxpayer's annual contributions exceed ILS190. However, no credit is given for annual contributions exceeding 30% of taxable income or ILS9,294,000, whichever is lower.
- Additional credits in various other cases, including new immigrants, returning residents, one-parent families, divorcées, graduates of a higher education institute and residents living and working in various priority areas.

Relief for losses. In general, business losses may be offset against income from any source derived in the same tax year, including salary income. Unrelieved business losses may be carried forward for an unlimited number of years to offset business income or capital gains derived from business activities (see Capital gains and losses).

B. Other taxes

Net worth tax. Net worth tax is not levied in Israel.

Estate and gift taxes. Israel does not impose taxes on inheritances or bona fide gifts. For transfers by inheritance or by gift of assets that would normally be subject to capital gains tax or land appreciation tax, the recipient's tax cost base and date of purchase are generally deemed to be the same as those for the transferor of the property.

Real estate tax. In general, sellers of real estate assets are subject to land appreciation tax on capital gains at a rate of 25% on any appreciation, based on the linear portion, before 7 November 2001, at a rate of 20% on any appreciation after that date until 31 December 2011, and at a rate of 25% after that date, with certain exceptions, including exemption provisions for homes owned by an individual.

Purchasers of real estate interests in Israel pay an acquisition tax at rates ranging from 0% to 10%.

C. Social security

Contributions. National insurance contributions are generally payable on taxable income as calculated for income tax purposes. The table below sets out the rates of national insurance contributions. For residents, these rates include a supplementary health levy. Foreign residents generally arrange comprehensive private health care.

	Contribution as percentage of income (2021)
Category	Employer %	Employee %	Self-employed persons (a) %	Nonworking passive income recipients (a) %
Israeli residents (b)
Monthly income up to ILS6,331	3.55	3.5	5.97	9.61
Monthly income from ILS6,331 to ILS44,020	7.60	12	17.83	12
Nonresidents
Monthly income up to ILS6,331	0.59	0.04	—	—

Nonresidents from a social security treaty country
Monthly income up to ILS6,331	3.55	0.4	—	—
Monthly income from ILS6,331 to ILS44,020	7.6	7	—	—

(a) Fifty-two percent of social security contributions paid during a tax year on unemployment income is deductible for income tax purposes during the year of payment.

(b) Lower contributions may apply to Israeli residents who work abroad as self-employed persons for continuous periods exceeding six months or for non-resident employers, unless they were hired in Israel.

Totalization agreements. Israel has entered into social security totalization agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Austria	Finland	Russian Federation
Belgium	France	Slovak Republic
Bulgaria	Germany	Sweden
Canada (limited)	Italy	Switzerland
Czech Republic	Netherlands	United Kingdom
Denmark	Norway	Uruguay
	Romania

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

In principle, Israeli and foreign employers with personnel in Israel must maintain an Israeli payroll withholding tax file. Income tax and national insurance contributions relating to monthly employment income and benefits must generally be reported and remitted by the 15th day of each following month. Various other monthly or bimonthly filings may also be required from the employer, including company tax advances determined by the tax authorities and supplementary company tax advances of 45% for nondeductible expenses incurred, including car maintenance and depreciation, travel and entertainment.

Capital transactions. Capital gains transactions generally are reportable within 30 days after the transaction date. Land appreciation tax transactions are generally reportable within 30 days. Tax must be settled or paid on account within 60 days.

Annual tax returns. A general obligation to file an annual tax return exists. Nevertheless, as a result of the withholding tax system, individuals may be exempt from filing annual personal tax returns in Israel. If income was not fully and correctly withheld at source, a return should be filed to reflect full salary, income and benefits in kind.

Resident individuals over 18 years of age at the beginning of the tax year are required to file a personal income tax return. However, an exemption from filing may apply if all of the following conditions are satisfied:
- The salary does not exceed the annual ceiling of ILS649,000 per individual.
- Interest in Israel does not exceed the annual ceiling of ILS643,000.
- The amount of each type of other income (rent and foreign income) earned by the individual is less than ILS337,000 for each type of income.

Notwithstanding the above, the following individuals must file annual income tax returns:
- Ten percent or greater shareholders
- Spouses who work together
- Individuals (or their spouses) who receive severance pay or a commuted pension allowed to be spread over several tax years
- Trust settlors for the year in which they settle the trust
- Recipients of a distribution or other transfer of assets from a trust
- Professional athletes and their spouses

- Individuals (or their spouses or children) who had either a lawful right in a non-publicly traded foreign company or other foreign assets worth more than ILS1,872,000 at any time during the tax year or a foreign bank account with a balance exceeding ILS1,872,000 at any time during the tax year
- Individuals required to file returns for the previous year, unless a specific exemption is granted
- Any other person or entity instructed to file a return by a tax assessor

Individuals must also pay half-year advances for capital gains, which must also be reported, if the full amount of the tax was not withheld at source. The payments and reports are due on 31 January and 31 July.

Online filing. Online filing is required for those who have to file a tax return. Failure to file an online tax return by the due date results in a penalty of ILS500 for each full month of delay.

As of the 2017 tax year, Israeli individuals who do not meet the numerical presumptions mentioned above and would like to claim severance of Israeli residency are required to file a return and fill out a residency declaration as an appendix to the return.

Due dates for tax returns. For those who do not have to file an online tax return, the due date is 30 April following the year-end. Taxpayers who are required to file an online tax return must file it by 31 May following the year-end. The tax authorities may grant filing extensions. Individuals represented by an Israeli certified public accountant (CPA) may receive an automatic extension based on the number of tax returns that the CPA must file with the tax authorities. As a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, extensions for filing are available. A tax professional should be consulted regarding the changes.

Assessment. The Israeli tax system is based on the principle of self-assessment. An annual tax return must be accompanied by payment of any balance of tax due computed by the taxpayer for the relevant tax year.

Married persons. Married persons, or the tax assessor, may elect one spouse to be the registered spouse in whose name the couple is assessed. For the election to be binding, the registered spouse's income should be at least 25% of the other spouse's income in the year before the election and in the next five years. If the couple does not elect otherwise, the tax assessor nominates the spouse with the higher taxable income over the two years preceding the assessment as the registered taxpayer. Joint tax computations are allowed. However, if the spouses derive employment or self-employment income from unrelated sources, many couples may benefit by opting to compute tax separately on the second spouse's income.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Unilateral relief. If no double tax treaty applies, Israeli residents may claim relief from double taxation (foreign tax credit) on foreign-source income.

Under Israeli domestic law or applicable tax treaties, foreign capital gains tax on dispositions of foreign assets may be credited by Israeli residents against Israeli capital gains tax on such dispositions. Any excess foreign tax credit may be carried forward for up to five tax years.

Foreign residents who receive little or no relief for Israeli taxes in their home countries may be granted a reduced Israeli tax rate by the Minister of Finance. In practice, the reduced rate is usually at least 25% and applies to capital gains only.

Tax treaties. Israel has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Israel is negotiating tax treaties with several jurisdictions.

F. Visitor visas for tourism or business purposes

All foreign nationals, except those from waiver jurisdictions that do not require entry visas, must obtain valid entry visas to enter Israel. Citizens of certain waiver jurisdictions may obtain visas at the port of entry. Foreign nationals may enter Israel under visitor visas, temporary residence visas or permanent residence visas.

Visitor visas are divided into the following categories:

- B1: For foreign nationals who wish to work in Israel on a temporary basis.
- B2: For foreign nationals who wish to visit Israel, typically for tourism or business purposes.
- B3: For foreign nationals whose entry status is not clear. This visa is of limited duration (one month) until the entry status is clarified and the entry visa is reclassified. The duty of reclassifying the entry status rests on the foreign national granted the B3 visitor visa.
- B4: For foreign nationals who wish to volunteer (work without earnings) in Israel.

Israel has visa exemption agreements with many jurisdictions. Tourist visa exemption applies to national and official passports only, and not to other travel documents. Citizens of the following jurisdictions are exempt from obtaining transit and class B2 visitor visas.

Albania	Greece	Palau

	Norway

* The exemption applies only to citizens of Moldova who hold biometric passports.

In general, all visitor visas, with the exception of B1 and B3 type visas, are valid between 30 and 90 days and may be renewed up to 180 days.

The application takes place at an Israeli consulate or at the local Ministry of Interior.

Each jurisdiction has a unique filing procedure for obtaining a visitor visa.

Both B1 and B4 class visas may be applied for by the employer. A B1 visa may be renewed annually for up to 63 months. A B1 visa may be extended beyond 63 months under very limited circumstances.

Indian and Chinese nationals, under certain circumstances, may be eligible for a B2 visitor visa for business purposes for five years or one year, respectively, if each visit will not exceed 90 days in Israel.

For the period of the COVID-19 pandemic, new immigration restrictions were introduced regarding the entrance of foreign nationals to Israel. Therefore, individuals should consult in advance before making any arrangements to arrive.

G. Work permits

A foreign national may work in Israel only if he or she enters the country with a permanent residence visa or a temporary residence visa or holds a B1 or B4 visa.

An applicant and his or her employer can apply for a work permit valid for 2 years, 1 year, 90 days or 45 days. An applicant and his or her employer must file certain items to obtain a work permit and a B1 work visa. The B1 work visa is always issued for a maximum period of one year and may be renewed annually, assuming that the employer and employee comply with the terms of the work permit.

The following are examples of the items that must be filed (other forms or submissions may be required):
- Employee's certificate of valid medical insurance.
- Salary letter with verification of the expert's salary threshold (twice the average monthly salary in the Israeli market, ILS20,856; amount is subject to annual changes). This salary amount should be met and/or exceeded to avoid the 20% foreign expert levy.
- Evidence of expertise held by the employee, such as academic degree, diploma and training.
- An employer's undertaking that assures the employee's departure on termination of the employment contract.
- The employee's accurate personal data, including his or her passport number, curriculum vitae (CV), diploma, police clearance and medical checks.
- Letter from an Israeli employer or other Israeli party, explaining the reasons why the employee's presence is needed.
- Affidavit on a specified form concerning the above items.

The following can apply for a B1 visa:
- An Israeli-based employer
- A foreign employer that has business ties or has entered into a service agreement with an Israeli-based entity

Detailed rules apply to employers and employees regarding, among other matters, pre-arrival medical examinations, as well as housing and medical care. As of January 2021, the amount of government registration fees for a work permit and B1 work visa application (per principal applicant for one year) is ILS11,150.

For the B1 work visa for non-academic experts, the regulations distinguish between experts whose work activities require academic certification and experts whose work activities do not require academic certification. Requirements for experts whose work activities do not require academic certification, include, among others, payment of the expert's salary to a bank account in Israel and providing proof of salary payments.

B1 visas for 90 days can be utilized continuously or intermittently in the same calendar year, provided that the total number of days in a calendar year does not exceed 90 days. Each visit to Israel will require a new work permit and visa application and a consular process for the applicant to follow in the overseas Israeli consulate. Multiple applications submitted under this visa type, to utilize remaining days, is at the sole discretion of the Israeli immigration authorities. The salary requirement for the B1 visa for 90 days is currently ILS5,300 (subject to annual adjustment), which represents the minimum wage in Israel.

In addition, an alternative option exists for employees who arrive in Israel for a work purpose for a time period not exceeding 45 days. Under this option, the foreign expert can stay and work in Israel for up to 45 days in a calendar year, continuously or intermittently. The counting of the days starts with the first day of arrival in Israel. The procedure is only available for citizens from visa-exempt jurisdictions (see Section F). It applies only to foreign experts who are needed in Israel to perform a temporary expertise assignment, such as advising, supervising, repairing equipment, training or making presentations.

The B1 High Tech work visa allows Israeli companies, which are recognized as "High-Tech Companies" for immigration purposes, to employ foreign experts. This visa is valid for up to 12 months with a possibility for renewal, and offers a streamlined visa process. The expert's salary threshold mentioned above applies. Spouses of the primary visa applicant are granted a B1 work visa and are able to work for an employer of their choice while the visa is valid.

H. Residence visas

Temporary residence visas are divided into the following categories:

- A1: For Jewish foreign nationals only who wish to obtain Israeli citizenship and are eligible under the Law of Return. The A1 class visa is valid for one year and may be renewed twice, for a total of five years.
- A2: For foreign nationals who wish to study in Israel.
- A3: For members of the clergy who are invited to Israel by a religious institute. The institute must apply for the visa.
- A4: For the spouse or children (under 18 years of age) of an A2 or A3 class visa holder.
- A5: For foreign nationals wishing to stay in Israel for any reason other than those listed above.

Unless the individual is staying in Israel for the reasons mentioned in categories A1 to A4 above, a permanent residence visa is granted for an unlimited duration of stay. Applications are considered by the Ministry of the Interior on a case-by-case basis. An application may be filed after several years of temporary residence.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. In certain circumstances, a B2 visa may be granted to the spouse and dependent children of a foreign national who receives a B1 visa. In these cases, the duration of the B2 visa corresponds to that of the B1 visa.

Common law partners. No official regulation specifies the requirements for spouse status. Each case needs to be examined separately. However, proof of the sincerity of the relationship must be supported by documents, including, among others, an affidavit from an attorney declaring that the couple is living together and joint bank account documents.

Driver's permits. Foreign visitors who hold valid foreign or international driver's licenses may drive a car legally in Israel for up to 12 months per visit to Israel. If a visit exceeds 12 months, the visitor must pass a short vehicle control test and receive an Israeli driver's license. Different rules apply to commercial vehicles.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Tax residents of Italy are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Individuals who are not tax resident in Italy are subject to tax on their Italian-source income only.

An individual is considered resident for income tax purposes if, for the greater part of the tax year, he or she satisfies any of the following conditions:

- His or her habitual abode is in Italy.
- The center of his or her vital interests is located in Italy.
- He or she is registered at the Office of Records of the Resident Population in Italy (Anagrafe Popolazione Residente).

Italian citizens who move their residence for tax purposes to countries considered to be tax havens ("black list" countries) are deemed to be tax resident in Italy in all cases, unless they provide specific evidence of their nonresident status.

Income subject to tax. Taxable income for personal income tax purposes consists of income from the following categories:
- Income from employment
- Income from self-employment
- Business income
- Income from real estate
- Income from capital (primarily, dividends and interest)
- Miscellaneous income, including capital gains

Each category, including miscellaneous income, is defined by law. If income falls under a category not specifically mentioned in the law, further investigation is needed to determine the tax treatment. Uncategorized income may not be automatically aggregated with miscellaneous income.

Employment income. Employment income is income derived from work performed for an employer. It includes any compensation, either in cash or in kind, received during a tax period in connection with employment, including any payments received as shares, as acts of generosity or as reimbursement for expenses incurred in the production of the income. Benefits in kind are valued for tax purposes at the "normal value," as defined by the Italian tax code. For certain benefits in kind, the Italian tax code provides specific rules for determining the applicable tax value. All compensation received in connection with employment is considered employment income, even if the compensation is paid by a third party (for example, the legal employer's parent company).

Employment income also includes income known as "income deriving from a collaboration," unless the activity is performed by an individual who is registered for value-added tax (VAT) purposes, and income derived by directors, auditors and contractors.

An Italian employer, which qualifies as a withholding tax agent, must withhold income taxes monthly from payments of gross employment income, including benefits in kind. Employment income is also subject to social security contributions (see Section C). The same rules apply to the determination of the tax base for both income taxes and social security contributions.

The following items are not included in the taxable employment income:
- Mandatory contributions paid by an employer and by an employee for social security as provided by law
- Contributions, up to a ceiling of EUR3,615.20, paid by an employer or an employee to entities or funds for the sole purpose of medical assistance in accordance with collective labor contracts or company agreements and regulations
- Goods provided to and services rendered for the employee if the overall value of goods and benefits does not exceed EUR516.46 per year (for the 2022 tax year and following years, the limit will be EUR258.23)

- Business trip daily indemnity, up to a maximum of EUR46.48 for trips within Italy and up to EUR77.47 for trips abroad if the employer reimburses only the travel expenses
- Certain benefits in kind, including meals in factory cafeterias and transportation services provided to a majority of employees, up to certain amounts and under specified conditions

Additional tax exemptions may be granted for some benefits in kind if the employer sets up welfare plans (so called flexible benefits plans) for all employees or categories of employees.

Nonresidents are subject to tax on income from employment derived from services performed in Italy and pensions paid by the state or by Italian residents.

A special tax regime applies to outbound employees who meet all of the following conditions:
- The individual is resident for tax purposes in Italy.
- The employment activity is rendered in a continuous and exclusive manner outside Italy for more than 183 days in a 12-month period.
- The employee's assignment outside Italy is regulated by an employment contract or by another written agreement signed by the parties.

Under the tax regime mentioned in the preceding paragraph, an individual is subject to tax in Italy on his or her non-Italian employment income on the basis of a notional employment remuneration, as determined each year by the Italian Ministry of Finance.

Effective from 2016, a special tax regime (impatriate tax regime) can be applied to inbound employees provided that the conditions mentioned below are met:

For employees who transferred their tax residency to Italy up to 29 April 2019, the following conditions must be met:
- He or she becomes an Italian tax resident under Italian domestic law.
- He or she was a non-Italian tax resident for the five years before the change in residency status and qualifies as an executive or highly specialized employee, as defined by specific law provisions, or has graduated with at least a bachelor's degree and has been studying or working abroad at least 24 months before moving to Italy and was a non-Italian tax resident in the two tax years preceding the transfer.
- He or she qualifies as an Italian tax resident for the following two years.
- He or she works mainly in Italy under an employment contract with an Italian tax resident employer or with a company of the same group.

If all the conditions listed in the preceding paragraph are met, the Italian-source taxable employment income of the employee who qualifies for this special tax regime is reduced to 50% of the total amount for the tax year in which the employee changes residency and for the following four years.

The impatriate tax regime also applies to income that is considered as assimilated to employment income according to the Italian tax law and to self-employment income (lavoro autonomo).

The 2021 Budget Law introduced the possibility to extend after the fifth year the application of the above impatriate tax regime up to five additional years for Italian individuals who were enrolled with the (Register of Italian population residing abroad [AIRE]) or for EU citizens who transferred their residency to Italy before 30 April 2019 and were beneficiaries as of 31 December 2019 of the impatriate tax regime. The option for the extension can be exercised provided that some conditions are met and that payment is made by the deadline of an amount equal to 10% or 5% of the income on which the impatriate regime exemption was applied in the previous tax year. The percentage of the amount due for the application of the extension and applicable percentage of exemption depends on the meeting of specific conditions (such as the number of minor children and ownership of a real estate in Italy). Employees also have to file a specific request to their Italian employer by the deadline to apply for the extension through the Italian payroll.

Employees who transferred their tax residency from 30 April 2019 are eligible to benefit from the special tax regime, provided that they meet certain conditions. The following are the main conditions:
- The taxpayers qualify as non-tax resident in Italy for at least two years (instead of the previous five years) prior to the transfer to Italy.
- The taxpayers commit to be Italian tax residents for the following two years and to work mainly in the Italian territory.

If all the conditions provided by the new Italian tax law are met, from the 2020 tax year, the Italian-source taxable employment income of the employee who qualifies for this special tax regime is reduced to 30% of the total amount for the tax year in which the employee becomes Italian tax resident and for the following four years. Under a different measure, a 90% reduction applies to taxpayers who transfer their residency to certain regions of southern Italy.

In addition, special extensions of the regime up to an additional five years, with an exemption of 50% of the Italian taxable employment income, are provided for the following:
- Taxpayers with at least one underage child or a dependent child
- Taxpayers who become owners of a housing unit in Italy after their transfer to Italy or in the 12 months preceding their transfer to Italy

Alternatively, a special extension of the regime up to an additional five years, with an exemption of 90% of the Italian taxable employment income, is provided if the taxpayers have more than three underage children or dependent children.

This impatriate tax regime also applies to income that is considered as assimilated to employment income according to the Italian tax law, to self-employment income (lavoro autonomo) and to business income conducted by the individual (reddito d'impresa in forma individuale).

Starting from 2017, a resident regime for high net worth individuals allows taxpayers who have not qualified as Italian tax resident for at least 9 of the past 10 years to opt for a flat tax of EUR100,000 on their foreign-source income, regardless of the actual amount of income and its remittance to Italy. The same favorable tax regime may also be applied to their family members if they also meet the required conditions; in this case, the flat tax equals EUR25,000 for each family member.

To have certainty of the tax regime application, it is advisable to file for an advance ruling with the tax authority (not mandatory), supported by a specific checklist and documentation regarding the previous years' tax resident status.

The Italian tax authority has confirmed that the regime for resident high net worth individuals and the impatriate tax regime are not cumulative.

Directors' fees. For tax purposes, directors' fees are treated as employment income, subject to progressive income tax rates and withholding tax. This tax treatment does not apply if the services are performed by a professional individual who is registered for VAT purposes (see Self-employment income).

Nonresident directors are subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 30% on directors' fees received.

Self-employment income. Self-employment income consists of income from a profession, including accounting, law and medicine. As mentioned in Employment income, income from a collaboration is treated as employment income, unless the activity is performed by an individual who is registered for VAT purposes.

Residents are subject to tax on worldwide self-employment income at the rates described in Rates; a 20% withholding tax applies to income derived from Italian sources. Nonresidents are subject to tax on income from self-employment derived from services performed in Italy. Nonresidents are subject to a final withholding tax of 30% on self-employment income.

For professionals, taxable self-employment income consists of the difference between compensation received during a tax period and related expenses incurred during the same period, subject to certain limits. Self-employment income is determined according to the cash-basis principle. Effective from 2017, the impatriate tax regime mentioned above with respect to inbound employees applies to self-employed individuals who transfer their tax residency status to Italy provided that the required conditions are met.

Professional income is subject to VAT and to regional tax (IRAP) at a statutory rate of 3.9%. Such rate may vary depending on the region of Italy in which the activity is performed (see Business income). Bookkeeping is required.

Professionals taxable as self-employed individuals who meet certain specific conditions and who have total gross earnings lower than EUR65,000 per year can benefit from a special tax regime, which provides for the application of a 15% substitutive tax (or 5% for a limited time period if some specific conditions are met) on taxable income, instead of ordinary progressive tax rates. The tax base is determined according to specific profitability rates approved by the Italian tax authorities, and these taxpayers are also subject to a special (simplified) VAT and bookkeeping regime.

Real estate income. Under certain circumstances, income from unrented real estate located in Italy may be subject to personal income tax. The related tax base equals 50% of a notional income called "cadastral value." Rental income derived from real property is taxed as ordinary income (see Rates). Rental income derived from rented real estate located in Italy may be subject to a fixed tax rate (cedolare secca) of 10% or 21%, if specific conditions are met.

Effective from 1 June 2017, new Italian legislation for short-term rentals gives landlords the option to apply a flat 21% tax to rentals no longer than 30 days, provided that some conditions are met.

Italian tax residents must report income from real estate located outside Italy in their Italian tax return, unless otherwise provided in an applicable double tax treaty.

Real estate is also subject to the tax on Italian real estate (IMU; see Section B).

Business income. Business income consists of income derived from the commercial or industrial activities (entrepreneurial activities) described in the Civil Code.

Taxable business income consists of profits disclosed in the financial statements, adjusted for exemptions, disallowed expenses, special deductions and losses carried forward. Business income is determined using the accrual method.

Taxable business income is subject to personal income tax at the ordinary rates described in Rates. In addition, business income is subject to IRAP, a regional tax on productive activities. IRAP is levied at an ordinary rate of 3.9%. Such rate may further vary depending on the region of Italy in which the activity is performed and on the kind of activity performed. The tax base is the amount of net production income derived from activities carried out in Italy. Net production income is calculated by adding to taxable business income certain costs that are not deductible for IRAP purposes.

Effective from 2020, the impatriate tax regime mentioned above with respect to inbound employees applies to business income produced by self-employed individuals who transfer their tax residency status to Italy, provided that the required conditions are met.

Self-employed individuals who meet some specific conditions and who have total gross business income lower than EUR65,000 per year can benefit from a special tax regime, which provides for the application of a 15% substitutive tax (or 5% for a limited time period if some specific conditions are met) on the taxable income, instead of ordinary progressive tax rates. The tax base is determined according to specific profitability rates approved by the Italian tax authorities, and these taxpayers are also subject to a special (simplified) VAT and bookkeeping regime.

Nonresidents are subject to tax on business income from a permanent establishment in Italy.

Investment income. Starting from 2018, dividends derived from qualified and nonqualified participations that are paid to Italian tax residents by resident and nonresident entities are subject to a separate final withholding tax of 26%.

Dividends derived from qualified participations that are paid out of the company's profits accrued until 31 December 2017 can be partially (58.14%) subject to progressive taxation.

For listed companies, a nonqualified participation is a participation representing no more than 2% of the voting rights in the ordinary shareholders' meeting and representing no more than 5% of the issued capital. For unlisted companies, a nonqualified participation is a participation representing no more than 20% of the voting rights in the ordinary shareholders' meeting and representing no more than 25% of the issued capital.

Dividends received by an Italian tax resident individual deriving (directly or indirectly) from an unlisted company liable in the foreign country (other than EU and European Economic Area [EEA] countries) to a nominal tax rate lower than half of the Italian rate are generally taxed as ordinary income. Dividends received through Italian resident intermediaries by an Italian tax resident individual that are derived from a listed company resident in these countries are subject to a 26% substitute tax.

Dividends paid by Italian resident entities are subject to a 26% withholding tax. Tax treaties may provide for a lower tax rate for dividends paid to nonresidents.

Italian-source interest paid to residents is subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 26%. Consequently, such interest is not aggregated with other taxable income. Foreign-source interest may be included with other income and taxed at the rates described in Rates or taxed separately at a rate of 26%.

Interest paid to nonresidents is subject to a final withholding tax of 26%; tax treaties may provide for a lower tax rate. Interest derived from bank and postal accounts that is paid to nonresidents is exempt from tax.

Residents are subject to tax on royalties derived from patents, trademarks and know-how at the rates set forth in Rates.

Nonresidents are subject to a final withholding tax on these royalties at a rate of 30%.

In some cases, this tax is imposed on 60% or 75% of the amount of royalties received.

Capital gains and losses

Securities—residents. The taxation of capital gains from the sale of securities (including shares representing capital and other similar interests, convertible obligations, stock options and similar rights) not related to business activities are subject to Italian taxation in accordance with the following rules:

- If the transaction involves a nonqualified percentage (see Investment income) of the company's shares, the related capital gain is subject to substitute taxation at a rate of 26%.
- If the transaction involves nonqualified shares of a listed company residing in a country (other than EU or EEA countries) with a nominal tax rate lower than half of the Italian rate, the related capital gain is taxed separately at a rate of a 26%.
- If the transaction involves nonqualified shares of an unlisted company residing in a country with a nominal tax rate that is lower than half of the Italian rate, ordinary rates are applied to 100% of the gain.
- Starting from 2019, if the transaction involves qualified shares, the related capital gain is subject to substitute taxation at a rate of 26%. However, ordinary rates apply to 100% of the gain if the shares sold relate to qualified shares residing in countries (other than EU or EEA countries) with a nominal tax rate lower than half of the Italian rate.
- If a transaction involving qualified shares from non-blacklisted countries occurred up to 31 December 2017, the ordinary rates are applied to 49.72% of the gain.
- If the transaction of qualified shares from non-blacklisted countries occurred during 2018, the ordinary rates are applied to 58.14% of the gain.

In general, the capital gain or loss equals the difference between the sales proceeds and the purchase cost, or the value that has already been subject to taxation. If the taxpayer's losses exceed gains, the difference may be carried forward up to a maximum of four years against future capital gains. The capital gains tax must be paid by the same date as the balance of ordinary tax due shown in the taxpayer's annual income tax return. If the security is held with an Italian resident intermediary (for example, an Italian bank) and if the transaction does not involve a qualified percentage of the company shares, an election may be made under which the tax due is withheld at source by the Italian resident intermediary and the transaction does not need to be reported in the individual's annual income tax return.

Securities—nonresidents. Capital gains derived by nonresidents from the sale of securities (including shares representing capital and other similar interests, convertible obligations, stock options and similar rights) not related to business activities are subject to the tax treatment applicable to residents (see above) if the securities are issued by an Italian entity. However, capital gains or losses arising from nonqualified shares issued by Italian companies listed on the stock exchange are not subject to Italian tax.

Real estate. Capital gains derived by individuals from the sale of real estate are taxable if the sale occurs within five years after the date on which the property was purchased or built and if the property had not been used as a principal abode for the major part of the period of ownership. The gain is subject to tax as ordinary income, unless, in the transfer deed, the vendor asks the Italian Public Notary to apply a separate final tax at a rate of 20%. Capital gains derived from sales of real estate after the five-year period of ownership are not subject to tax.

Deductions

Personal deductions, tax credits and allowances. Tax deductions are allowed for various items, including the following:
- Mandatory social security contributions paid by an individual to the social security authorities
- Social security contributions made to qualified and individual complementary pension funds, within specified limits
- Social security and welfare contributions required by law that are paid on behalf of servants and babysitters
- Alimony payments to a spouse from whom the taxpayer is legally separated or divorced (children's maintenance is not deductible)
- Medical expenses paid to disabled individuals

A tax credit of up to 19% is granted for various items, including the following:
- Interest paid to European entities on mortgage loans for real estate located in Italy that is used as a principal abode, up to a maximum amount of EUR4,000
- Medical expenses, including specialized medical treatment, surgical expenses and prostheses, for the taxpayer or dependents if the expenses exceed EUR129.11
- Life and health insurance premiums, up to a maximum amount of EUR530, EUR750 or EUR1,291.14, depending on the type of insurance contract and the related risks covered
- School fees up to a maximum of EUR800 and university tuition expenses not exceeding tuition charged at state universities
- Funeral expenses, up to a maximum amount of EUR1,550

From the 2020 tax year, the available tax deduction for some of the deductible expenses varies according to the amount of total taxable income.

A tax credit for family members may be claimed by resident taxpayers, regardless of the category of income earned. The following are the amounts of the tax credit.

Type of tax credit	Theoretical amount (EUR)
Dependent spouse (a)	800 (b)
Each dependent child (a)	950 (b)(c)

(a) A taxpayer's spouse or child is considered a dependent if he or she earns less than EUR2,841 (for children under 24 years old, the limit is EUR4,000).
(b) A formula is used to determine the actual tax credit available. The dependent spouse tax credit is not granted for taxpayer income higher than EUR80,000. The child tax credit is not granted for taxpayer income higher than EUR95,000.
(c) For each dependent child under three years of age, the theoretical amount is increased by EUR270. For each handicapped child under three years of age, the theoretical amount is increased by EUR400. If the parents have more than three dependent children, an additional amount of EUR200 for each child is granted. An additional theoretical amount is provided to parents if they have four or more dependent children.

The tax credit for each dependent child can be either shared between the two spouses or claimed by the spouse earning the higher taxable income. However, if one spouse is a dependent of the other spouse, the tax credit for dependent children must be fully claimed by the other spouse.

Foreign taxes paid by resident taxpayers on foreign-source income may be credited against personal income tax. The maximum amount of foreign tax that may be credited is the lower of the amount of foreign taxes and the full amount of Italian tax attributable to the foreign-source income, based on the proportion of the foreign-source income to the aggregate income. However, the foreign tax credit cannot exceed the net income tax due from the taxpayer.

Other deductions. In addition to deductible expenses specifically allowed, other expenses may be deducted from aggregate income for personal tax, depending on the category of income.

Rates. The income tax rates applicable to individuals are described below.

Personal income tax. The following are the rates of the personal income tax (imposta sul reddito delle persone fisiche, or IRPEF).

Taxable income		Rate on
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	excess %
0	15,000	23
15,000	28,000	27
28,000	55,000	38
55,000	75,000	41
75,000	—	43

Additional regional tax. For 2021, additional regional ordinary tax rates may range from 0.7% to 3.33% on taxable income as calculated for income tax purposes.

Additional municipal tax. An additional municipal tax applies at rates up to 0.9% on taxable income as calculated for income tax purposes.

Additional income tax on variable remuneration earned by employees working in the financial sector. Additional income tax of 10% is imposed on employees and collaborators (self-employed individuals who are not registered for VAT purposes) working in the financial sector on their variable remuneration (which may be represented by cash bonuses, stock options or shares) exceeding the yearly fixed remuneration.

Nonresidents. Nonresidents are taxed on Italian-source income at the rates described above.

B. Other taxes

Tax on real estate held abroad by Italian tax resident individuals. A tax on real estate held abroad for Italian tax resident individuals (imposta sul valore degli immobili situati all'estero, or IVIE) took effect in 2012. The standard tax rate is 0.76%. However, a 0.4% rate may apply if particular circumstances exist. The tax base is the purchase cost or, only for EU and EEA countries, the cadastral value (if applicable) used to calculate and pay the wealth tax. The taxpayer may be entitled to a credit for wealth tax paid abroad on the properties. IVIE is calculated and paid through the Italian tax return filing process.

Tax on financial assets held abroad. A tax on financial assets held abroad by Italian tax resident individuals (imposta sul valore delle attività finanziarie detenute all'estero, or IVAFE) took effect in 2012. The tax rate is 0.20% from 2014 onward. The tax base is generally the market value of the financial asset at the end of the year. In the case of double taxation, it may be possible to deduct the wealth tax paid in the country where the financial asset is held. IVAFE is calculated and paid through the Italian tax return filing process.

Tax on Italian real estate. Starting from 2020, Italian real estate is subject to two different taxes, which are Imposta Municipale Unica (IMU) and Tassa sui Rifiuti (TARI).

IMU is a tax on Italian real estate that is due to the municipality where the real estate is located. The tax base is calculated starting from the cadastral value attributable to the real estate. To calculate the tax base, the cadastral value is multiplied by a coefficient that varies depending on the nature and characteristics of the real estate. The standard tax rate is equal to 0.86%. Each municipality can decide whether to increase (within a cap of 1.06%) or decrease the standard rate.

TARI is a municipal tax for garbage. The tax rate depends on the Municipal Decree.

Inheritance and gift taxes. Inheritance and gift taxes apply to residents and nonresidents. The tax base is related to the value of the assets. The following are the applicable tax rates:
- 4% for recipients in a direct relationship (spouse and children) with the deceased or the donor, to the extent that the assets have a taxable value of greater than EUR1 million
- 6% for brothers, to the extent that the assets have a taxable value of greater than EUR100,000
- 6% for other relatives, with no assets exclusion
- 8% for recipients who are not related to the deceased or the donor, with no assets exclusion

For disabled recipients, the same rates apply to the extent that the assets have a taxable value of greater than EUR1,500,000.

In addition to the above taxes, an additional fixed amount of EUR200 is due for each gift.

Cadastral and mortgage taxes apply if immovable properties are inherited or given as a gift. The applicable tax rate is 3%. However, if the real estate inherited or gifted is classified as a primary home, the cadastral and mortgage taxes are imposed at a fixed amount of EUR200 each.

To prevent double taxation of estates, Italy has entered into estate tax treaties with Denmark, France, Greece, Israel, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States. In the absence of a treaty, a tax credit may be available for foreign taxes paid on assets located abroad.

C. Social security

Coverage. Italian law provides for a comprehensive system of social insurance covering the following:
- Disability, old age and survivorship

- Illness and maternity
- Unemployment and "mobility"
- Family allowances
- Health care
- Labor injuries
- Professional diseases

The system is controlled by the government, with various sections administered by separate public institutions, most notably, the National Institute for Social Security (Istituto Nazionale Previdenza Sociale, or INPS).

Collective labor agreements provide for compulsory additional coverage through pension and health funds. Both employers and employees usually make contributions to these funds.

Contributions

Employees. In general, social security contributions are payable at varying percentages of gross remuneration, depending on the employee's qualification level and the employer's activity sector.

In general, employees' social security contributions range from approximately 9% to 10% of their gross remuneration.

Employees must make an additional 1% contribution on the part of gross remuneration exceeding the threshold of EUR47,379 for 2021.

The employers' part of the contributions ranges from approximately 27% to 32%.

Employees with no record of social security contributions before 1 January 1996, are subject to pension contributions on gross income up to a maximum of EUR103,055 for 2021.

Self-employed individuals. Self-employed individuals, directors and consultants must enroll with the so-called Gestione Separata (INPS), unless other specific rules apply (for example, certain professionals, such as lawyers, engineers and accountants, are required by law to enroll in specified pension plans). The contributions to the INPS are calculated at a flat rate of 25.98% for self-employed persons or consultants and at a flat rate of 33.72% for directors. If the individual already contributes to another mandatory social security system or if he or she is retired, the applicable flat rate is 24%. In all of the above-mentioned cases, the flat rates apply on annual income up to a maximum of EUR103,055 for 2021.

In addition, foreign citizens, such as nonresident directors, must enroll with the INPS.

Under certain circumstances, a totalization agreement may provide an exemption from the abovementioned contributions.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Italy has concluded totalization agreements with various jurisdictions. In addition, an EU regulation on social security applies to all of the EU countries, including all of the new member states (plus Switzerland).

Italy has entered into totalization agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Argentina	Croatia	Turkey
Australia	Israel	United States
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Korea (South)	Uruguay
Brazil	Monaco	Vatican City
Canada and Quebec	North Macedonia	Venezuela
Cape Verde	San Marino	Yugoslavia (former) (b)
Channel Islands (a)	Tunisia

(a) The Channel Islands consist of Alderney, Guernsey, Herm, Jersey and Jethou.
(b) This treaty applies to Montenegro and Serbia.

Most of Italy's totalization agreements allow an employee temporarily seconded abroad to remain covered under the social security scheme in the employee's home country for a two-year period that may be extended to five years or more. The agreement with the United States does not provide a time limit. Italy's totalization agreements with the United States and a few other countries do not cover all the mandatory social security contributions payable in Italy. As a result, US and other foreign companies must pay minor contributions in Italy.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

In Italy, the tax year is the calendar year. Income tax returns for the preceding year must be filed by 30 November (ordinary deadline). Married persons may be required to file their own tax returns separately (not jointly).

A failure to make a filing is subject to a penalty ranging from EUR250 to EUR1,000 (if no income tax is due) or ranging from 120% to 240% of the tax due, plus interest (if a tax liability arises). If a tax return is filed within the filing deadline for the following year, the penalty ranges from EUR200 to EUR500 (if no income tax is due) or ranges from 60% to 120% of the tax due, plus interest. The penalties increase by one-third with respect to income taxes due on foreign-source income.

If the tax return is filed within up to 90 days after the due date, under a special procedure to reduce penalties called ravvedimento operoso, the ordinary penalties mentioned above may be reduced to EUR25.

Income tax must be paid by 30 June for income earned in the preceding calendar year. Advance tax payments equal to 100% of the preceding year's tax liability are due. Advance tax payments may be reduced if the individual has a lower estimated tax liability in the current year. Forty percent of the advance tax payments must be paid by 30 June, and the remaining 60% must be paid by 30 November (for self-employed individuals who apply Tax Compliance Indicators [ISAs] and those who come under the flat-rate scheme, the advance payments are equal to 50% by the end of June and 50% by the end of November). Individuals who make tax payments during the period of 1 July to 30 July must pay 0.4% additional interest calculated on the tax amount due. If a late payment is made on or after the 30 July deadline, ordinary penalties and interest apply. However, under the special procedure to reduce penalties called ravvedimento operoso, it is possible to avoid the application of the ordinary penalty (30%) by paying a reduced penalty, which ranges from 0.1% to 5%, depending on the length of the delay.

Monitoring of foreign investments. Italian tax resident individuals must declare in Italy their investments held outside Italy during the tax year for monitoring purposes. Persons with a proxy (in this context, a person with a proxy is a person who is not the owner of the assets but has the right to dispose of them) are subject to the same filing obligations. This declaration is made through the filing of the foreign investment return (RW Form).

The purpose of the RW form is to report the following:
- All foreign investments
- All foreign bank accounts held outside Italy if they exceed EUR15,000 during the tax year

The RW form is filed jointly with the Italian income tax return.

Penalties ranging from 3% to 15% apply in the case of omitted or incorrect filings of the RW Form. The penalties may increase to rates ranging from 6% to 30% in the case of assets held in a non-cooperative country as indicated in the list published by the Italian tax authorities.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

A tax credit for taxes paid abroad on foreign-source income is available; however, it is limited to the portion of Italian tax due based on the ratio of foreign-source income to total income.

Italy has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

(a) The treaty has been ratified, but it is not yet in force.
(b) Italy honors the USSR treaty with respect to the republics of the Commonwealth of Independent States.
(c) This treaty applies to Bosnia and Herzegovina, Montenegro, and Serbia.

The above treaties generally follow the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) model treaty. In general, the treaties provide that employment income is taxable only in the employee's country of residence, unless it is derived from work performed in Italy. Income derived from work performed in Italy, however, is not taxed if all of the following conditions apply:
- The recipient is present in Italy for a period not exceeding 183 days in the relevant fiscal year (a different time frame applies under certain treaties).
- The remuneration is not paid by, or on behalf of, an employer in Italy.
- The remuneration is not borne by an employer's permanent establishment or fixed base in Italy.

Self-employment income is generally taxable only in the country of residence of the recipient, with the following exceptions:
- Professional income produced in Italy by a fixed base
- Directors' fees paid by an Italian company (see Section A)

F. Temporary visas

Visas for temporary stays in Italy include transit visas, Schengen Type C Visas, tourist visas, student visas and business visas. They entitle non-EU citizens to spend up to 90 days in Italy and the other Schengen countries.

Foreign nationals must apply for temporary visas at the Italian consulates or embassies in their country of residence.

International travelers, who are nationals of Visa Waiver Program countries, do not require a visa to enter Italy for short-term visits. However, their stay in the whole Schengen area cannot exceed 90 days within any 180-day period.

G. Visas for employment and self-employment

EU, EEA and Swiss nationals do not need permits to work in Italy. An EU, EEA or Swiss national who intends to reside and work in Italy must enroll with the Office of Records of the Resident Population in Italy if his or her stay exceeds 90 days.

Non-EU nationals must enter Italy with a National Type D Visa if they intend to carry out professional activities. In this context, a professional activity is intended as "work" and differs from travel to Italy under a "business" status. In particular, if a foreign worker comes to Italy to perform work activities, he or she needs a National Type D Visa even if the duration of the stay does not exceed 90 days. Determining whether an activity falls within the "professional/work" category or "business" category typically requires a case-by-case assessment.

The type of permit and visa required, as well as the procedures to obtain the immigration clearances, differ depending on the nature of the work to be performed (for example, as a self-employed worker or a subordinate worker).

The procedure for obtaining an employment visa for a foreign national is initiated by the prospective Italian employer (or the Italian entity for which the employee is assigned to work), which must first submit an application to the Italian Immigration Office (Sportello Unico per l'Immigrazione) for a Work Permit (Nulla Osta al Lavoro). The approval and issuance of such authorization usually takes up to 3 months (90 days). As result, expedited procedures exist for intracompany transferees under which the Work Permit is approved within 45 days of the request. Italian Work Permits are typically issued subject to the availability of the quotas, which are released on a yearly basis by the Ministry of Internal Affairs. However, some immigration permits are exempted from this numerical limitation.

Workers who can be exempted from the entry-quota limit and for whom a Work Permit can be requested any time during the year are primarily the following:

- Executives, highly skilled workers or trainees in the framework of an Intra-Company Transfer
- Highly skilled workers assigned to an Italian company in accordance with a Service Level Agreement in place between the foreign employer and the Italian host

Other categories of workers, such as translators and interpreters, university lecturers, trainees and health care assistants, can apply for a Work Permit out of the quota limit. Each situation needs to be assessed on a case-by-case basis.

In addition, Italy is one of the countries that has implemented the EU Blue Card directive, which enables companies to locally hire executives and high-skilled workers, avoiding the quota system. To obtain the EU Blue Card, an individual must prove at least three years of university education through a Declaration of Value (Dichiarazione di Valore), which is issued by the Italian consulate in the country where the university was attended. In addition, some restrictions are imposed on the employment contract with the Italian company. This contract must have a minimum validity of one year and grant a minimum annual gross compensation of approximately EUR25,500.

As soon as the Immigration Office issues the Work Permit, the document is automatically sent to the competent Italian consulate abroad. The employee is then allowed to request the employment visa at the Italian consulate in his or her last country of residence.

After the employment visa is obtained, the individual must sign the Residence Contract within eight days after his or her arrival in Italy; the signature of the Residence Contract allows the individual to start the work activity. Subsequently, a Permit of Stay (Resident Permit; Permesso di Soggiorno) for employment reasons must be requested.

Under certain conditions, a holder of a residence permit for employment reasons may engage in self-employment activities and vice versa, if the activity for which the Permit of Stay (Resident Permit) was requested remains the predominant activity.

Foreign nationals may engage in the following self-employment activities in Italy:
- They may be directors of companies (that is, members of boards).
- They may pursue freelance or other professional activities.

In both cases, foreign nationals must obtain a Self-employment Visa (Visto di Lavoro Autonomo).

H. Permits of Stay (Resident Permits)

Within eight days after arrival in Italy with the proper visa, a non-EU foreign employee must request a Permit of Stay (Resident Permit; Permesso di Soggiorno).

A simplified registration process applies to non-EU citizens entering Italy for short-term reasons (business or tourism). These individuals are not required to apply for a Permit of Stay but only have to report their presence in Italy at the local police station.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family members who accompany a non-EU foreign national to Italy or wish to join a foreign national in Italy must request special visas from the Italian consulate in their last country of residence. These visas (Visto per Familiare al Seguito or Visto per Ricongiungimento Familiare) allow family members to work in Italy after the relative residence permit for family purpose is obtained (see below).

After the competent consulate abroad issues the visa, within eight days after their arrival in Italy, family members accompanying a foreign national must report to the police in the area where they will live to request their Permits of Stay (Permesso di Soggiorno per Motivi Familiari).

A special rejoining procedure (coesione familiare) can be favorable for family members who legally entered Italy and hold valid residence permits or visas (even for tourism).

Family Permit applications can be filed by the following categories of relatives:
- Spouses (same-sex marriages are currently not recognized in Italy)
- Children younger than 18
- Parents, provided that they are older than 65 and are not able to financially support themselves in their home country

Permits of stay for study reasons are convertible into permits for employment reasons within the quota limits. However, if a foreigner graduates from an Italian university, the conversion is not subject to the quota restriction.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally in Italy using their home country driver's licenses if they also possess international driver's licenses. If the individual resides in Italy, he or she should carefully investigate if he or she may continue to drive legally without any action (specific rules apply depending on the country that issued the driver's license). Italy has driver's license reciprocity with all EU member countries and certain non-EU countries, but not, for example, with the United States.

To obtain an Italian driver's license, foreign nationals must take a driver education course, undergo written, physical and medical examinations, and register with the Office of Records of the Resident Population in Italy.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals who are resident and domiciled in Jamaica are taxed on worldwide income. Individuals who are resident but not domiciled in Jamaica are generally taxed on their Jamaican-source income and on foreign-source income that is remitted to Jamaica. However, if the individual is present in Jamaica in a tax year for a total of three months or more, any foreign employment income that relates to work done in Jamaica or elsewhere in relation to Jamaica, is subject to tax in Jamaica regardless of where it is received. Nonresidents are taxed only on Jamaican-source income and on remittances of foreign income to Jamaica.

In general, individuals are considered resident if they stay in Jamaica for six months or longer. Other factors that may be considered include whether they (or their spouses) have a place of abode available for their use in Jamaica, and if they habitually visit Jamaica for substantial periods. The tax authorities are likely to regard periods totaling three months as substantial and visits as habitual if the individual is present in Jamaica for approximately three months annually for four consecutive years.

For an individual who is in Jamaica for a temporary purpose only and not with an intent to establish residence, and who has not actually resided in Jamaica in any tax year for a period of six months (or periods aggregating to six months), income arising outside Jamaica is not subject to income tax in Jamaica.

All resident employees with annual income exceeding JMD1,500,096 for the 2021 tax year are subject to tax. Nonresidents are generally not eligible for the JMD1,500,096 exemption available to Jamaican residents. To benefit from the income tax threshold of JMD1,500,096, a person must be in Jamaica for 183 days or more in the tax year.

Nonresidents are subject to tax on all Jamaican-source employment income (unless specifically exempted under applicable double tax treaty provisions). A nonresident employed by a resident employer is treated as resident from the first day of employment.

A nonresident employed in Jamaica by a foreign employer for less than three months is taxed on remittances to Jamaica only. However, if the employee performs the work over a period of three months or longer in the tax year he or she is taxable in Jamaica, regardless of whether the payment is received in Jamaica.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. All compensation arising in Jamaica or accruing to any person from an office or employment in Jamaica is subject to tax. This includes salaries, wages and bonuses. Benefits in kind and allowances are taxable, but the Tax Commissioner may allow a portion to be exempt.

Accommodation supplied by an employer to an employee is a benefit that is fully taxable to the employee.

The taxable value of the personal-use portion of a company car is determined in accordance with the following table.

Cost of motor vehicle		Value of car benefit
		Up to five years old		Over five years old
Exceeding JMD	Not exceeding JMD	(a) JMD	(b) JMD	(a) JMD	(b) JMD
0	300,000	40,000	48,000	30,000	36,000
300,000	700,000	50,000	60,000	40,000	48,000
700,000	1,000,000	75,000	80,000	60,000	65,000
1,000,000	1,500,000	90,000	100,000	72,000	80,000
1,500,000	—	120,000	140,000	98,000	100,000

(a) Up to 50% private use during the year.
(b) More than 50% private use during the year.

Self-employment and business income. Residents are subject to tax on profits from self-employment and business activities as ordinary income at the rates described in Rates.

Investment income. Interest paid by specified entities (called "prescribed persons") to individuals is subject to withholding tax at a rate of 25%. Prescribed persons include financial institutions, licensed securities dealers, life insurance companies, building societies, issuers of commercial paper, unit trust management companies, certain industrial and provident societies, the Ministry of Finance and certain other entities specified under the Income Tax Act.

Income tax of 15% is imposed on ordinary dividends paid by Jamaican resident companies to Jamaican resident shareholders, effective from 1 April 2013. Preference dividends paid to Jamaican residents that qualify for income tax deduction are subject to tax in the hands of the recipients. Ordinary dividends or preference dividends paid by Jamaican resident companies to nonresident individuals are subject to tax at a rate of 25% or at a lower rate prescribed by an applicable double tax treaty.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are treated as taxable income for the tax year to which they relate and are subject to tax with other income at the rates described in Rates. Payments made to directors as directors' fees by an employer fall in the category of emoluments (because these individuals are holders of office) and are consequently subject to deduction of income tax at the current rate of 25%. If these directors are employed by the companies (organizations) for which they serve as board members, they are also subject to other statutory deductions.

Concessionary loans. Directors and employees who, by reason of their employment in a specified financial institution, receive concessionary loans (loans at a rate of interest lower than the prescribed rate), are taxable on the cash equivalent of the benefit of the loan, that is, the difference between the interest at the prescribed rate and the interest actually paid at the concessionary rate.

Exempt income. If received from a superannuation or pension scheme approved by the Commissioner of Tax Administration Jamaica, lump-sum payments up to the prescribed limit specified by the Income Tax Act may be exempt from income tax. Lump sums paid from the government's Consolidated Fund are not subject to income tax.

Individuals receiving a pension from an approved superannuation fund or from a pension or retirement scheme approved by the Tax Commissioner are exempt from tax on up to JMD80,000 of the income. The exemption is restricted to the lower of the pension income or JMD80,000 if the pensioner is under 55 years of age. Individuals 65 years of age and older enjoy an additional age exemption of JMD80,000.

Individuals classified as handicapped under the Income Tax Act are exempt from tax on all salary and pension income.

The above exemptions are available to both residents and nonresidents.

Resident self-employed individuals are entitled to an income tax exemption for the first JMD1,500,096 of their income. This exemption does not apply to nonresidents.

Capital gains. Jamaica does not impose tax on capital gains.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. In practice, employer-provided stock options are taxable only at grant on the difference between the actual grant price and the market price at the grant date.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. Pension contributions of up to 10% of an employee's annual remuneration to approved pension schemes and contributions to the national insurance scheme are deductible for the employee. However, if an employer contributes less than 10% of the employee's annual remuneration, the employee may contribute the difference between the employer's actual contribution and the maximum contribution payable by the employer (that is, 10%). The difference contributed by the employee is also deductible for income tax purposes.

Business deductions. All expenses incurred wholly and exclusively in producing self-employment or business income are deductible. In addition, individuals who are self-employed and who make charitable donations to charities may deduct these expenses, up to a maximum of 5% of taxable income.

Rates. A flat income tax rate of 25% applies to the annual statutory income of individuals earning up to JMD6 million for the year. Individuals who earn annual statutory income over JMD6 million must pay an additional 5% tax on the statutory income in excess of JMD6 million. As a result, statutory income in excess of JMD6 million is subject to a 30% income tax rate instead of the 25% rate.

Withholding tax is levied on overseas payments that include, but are not limited to, management and technical service fees, dividends, interest, royalties, directors' fees and insurance premiums.

Minimum business tax. The Minister of Finance and the Public Service, in his National Budget Presentation in March 2019, announced the abolishment of the Minimum Business Tax (MBT), effective from 1 April 2019.

Relief for losses. Tax losses from trading may be carried forward for offset against trading profits generated in subsequent years, but the tax losses that are deductible in any tax year may not exceed 50% of the aggregate amount of income of the taxpayer from all sources for that year, after allowing the appropriate deductions and exemptions. However, this limitation does not apply for the first five years of trade. It also does not apply if the taxpayer's gross revenue from all sources for the relevant tax year is less than JMD10 million. No carryback is permitted.

B. Other taxes

Effective 1 April 2020, General Consumption Tax (GCT) is imposed on certain goods and services at a standard rate of 15%. Effective from 1 April 2019, any person who carries on a taxable activity and whose annual turnover exceeds JMD10 million must be registered as a "registered taxpayer" for GCT purposes. This threshold was JMD3 million before 1 April 2019.

Some goods and services that are zero-rated for GCT purposes, and others are exempt for GCT purposes.

GCT on imported services. Effective from June 2014, the reverse-charge mechanism applies to services that are supplied by nonresidents to persons resident in Jamaica (referred to as imported services).

The GCT applies to imported services if all of the following conditions are satisfied:

- The service is supplied by a nonresident to a resident of Jamaica.
- The service is intended to be or is used, consumed or enjoyed in Jamaica.
- The supply of the service would have been a taxable supply if it was made in Jamaica by a registered taxpayer in the course or furtherance of the taxpayer's taxable activity.

If the above conditions are satisfied, the law requires the Jamaican recipient of the service to account for and report the 15% on top of the agreed invoice price for the services. If the recipient is a registered taxpayer that has taxable supplies for GCT purposes, the recipient may claim a GCT credit (for the applicable GCT) subject to any restrictions that are contained in the GCT Act.

The reverse-charge mechanism does not apply if the recipient of the service is an individual who uses the service for his or her private use.

Transfer tax. Although Jamaica has no estate tax, transfer tax is payable on the transfer or other disposal of Jamaican property and interests in or rights in or over property. For purposes of the transfer tax, property includes land, leases of land and shares in Jamaican companies. The following are the rates of transfer tax.

	Rate (%)
Transfer by an individual while alive	2*
Transfer on death
On the first JMD10 million	0*
On the balance	1.5

* Effective from 1 April 2019, the transfer tax rate applicable to property transfers (land and shares) was reduced from 5% to 2%. Also, the transfer tax threshold applicable to the estate of deceased persons increased from JMD100,000 to JMD10 million.

Wills are probated in accordance with the laws of the country of domicile of the deceased, and real property is transferred according to the laws of the country where the property is located.

Stamp duty. If a mortgage is refinanced for an equal or lesser amount, stamp duty is payable at a rate of JMD100. If the refinancing is for a greater amount than the original amount, a stamp duty rate of 1.25 cents per JMD200 or part thereof applies to the additional amount secured (the difference between the refinanced amount and the original amount secured). Effective from 1 April 2019, the ad valorem stamp duty applicable to certain transactions was removed, and a flat rate of stamp duty was introduced. In particular, the ad valorem stamp duty that was imposed on documents and documented transactions was replaced by a flat rate of JMD100 per document or parcel relating to transactions valued below JMD500,000 and JMD5,000 per document or parcel relating to transactions valued at JMD500,000 or more. The flat rate applies to the transfer or other disposal of shares and real estate.

Withholding tax on specified services. Effective from 1 September 2015, recipients of specified services (as defined in the legislation) are required to withhold a 3% tax from payments made to suppliers of these services. The tax must be withheld in either of the following circumstances:

- The gross payment relates to a single transaction with an invoice value of JMD50,000 or more (before application of GCT).
- A series of gross payments of less than JMD50,000 (before GCT) aggregating to JMD100,000 or more are made to the same service provider in a 30-day period.

For the tax year in which the tax is withheld, the service provider from whom the tax is withheld may claim a tax credit for the withholding tax against any quarterly income tax obligation or tax due in the annual income tax return. Any excess credit for that tax year may be claimed as a refund or carried forward to be used in a future tax year.

Tax compliant service providers can apply for an Exemption Certificate from Tax Administration Jamaica that allows them to benefit from an exemption from the 3% withholding tax. This would exempt persons who make payments to them in relation to the specified services from withholding the tax.

C. Social security

Contributions. The applicable social security contributions and other payroll taxes are described in the following paragraphs.

Until 31 March 2020, the National Insurance Scheme (NIS) rates were 5.5% for employed and self-employed workers, other than domestic workers, on annual earnings of up to JMD1,500,000. For employees, the 5.5% was payable one-half by the employee and one-half by the employer. For domestic workers, the employer and the employee each paid JMD100 a week. Effective from 1 April 2020, the Ministry of Labour and Social Security announced an increase in the NIS rate from 2.75% each (employer and employee) to 6% (employer pays 3% and employee pays 3%). However, the maximum annual insurable wage ceiling of JMD1,500,000 remained in effect. In addition, the contribution rate for domestic workers was increased from JMD150 to JMD200 per week, effective from 1 January 2020. Effective 1 April 2021, the maximum insurable wage ceiling was increased from JMD1,500,000 per year to JMD3 million per year. These contributions are mandatory. The maximum insurable wage ceiling is expected to further increase (from JMD3 million) to JMD5 million, effective 1 April 2022. The NIS rate is expected to remain at 6%.

National Housing Trust contributions are made at a rate of 5% of salary, borne 2% by the employee and 3% by the employer. Self-employed persons contribute at a rate of 3% of gross taxable income. Contributions by employees and self-employed persons, together with a bonus, are refundable to the contributor on an annual basis after seven years of contribution or in full after retirement at 65 years of age.

An Education Tax is payable at a rate of 5.75% of salary, borne 2.25% by the employee and 3.5% by the employer. Self-employed persons are subject to Education Tax at a rate of 2.25% of net taxable income (after deduction of pension and NIS contributions).

Totalization agreements. To prevent double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Jamaica has entered into totalization agreements with Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Canada, Dominica, Grenada, Guyana, Montserrat, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago and the United Kingdom.

For purposes of the UK totalization agreement, the United Kingdom is defined to include Alderney, the Channel Islands of Guernsey, Herm, Jersey and Jethou, England, the Isle of Man, Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The income tax year in Jamaica is the calendar year. The relevant payroll taxes (income tax, national insurance contributions, education tax and national housing trust contributions) are required to be withheld by employers from the wages of employees monthly under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system. Taxes withheld must be paid to the Collector of Taxes by the 14th day of the following month or the last working day before the 14th of the month if the 14th falls on a weekend. The Jamaican government has proposed that all employees be required to file income tax returns. However, this change will be implemented in phases. If required, annual income tax returns must be filed, and the final income tax paid, by 15 March following the tax year.

Nonresident employees must file tax returns if requested by the Tax Commissioner or if tax is overpaid and a refund is requested. Nonresident self-employed persons who engage in business in Jamaica must file tax returns.

To prevent double taxation of the income, an individual may obtain a tax credit in Jamaica if tax is deducted at source from investment income. Prescribed persons such as banks and other financial institutions as described by the Income Tax Act normally withhold tax at a rate of 25% from investment income.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Jamaica has entered into double tax treaties with Canada, China Mainland, Denmark, France, Germany, Israel, Japan, Mexico, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, the United States and CARICOM nations (Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Belize, Dominica, Grenada, Guyana, Jamaica, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, and Trinidad and Tobago are signatories to this treaty). These treaties generally provide for reduced rates of withholding tax on dividends, interest, royalties, and technical or management fees.

In January 2018, Jamaica signed a double tax treaty with Italy, which was ratified on 5 August 2020.

F. Temporary visas

Foreign nationals from certain specified countries may visit Jamaica without a visa depending on the landing options available to them. The specified countries are the CARICOM member states and British Commonwealth countries except for the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Nigeria, Pakistan and Sri Lanka. A visa is required for all foreign nationals coming to Jamaica to work except for CARICOM member states and British Commonwealth countries specified above. As a result of COVID-19 pandemic measures, all foreign nationals traveling to Jamaica are also required to obtain pre-authorization for entry at the www.visitjamaica.com web site.

G. Work permits and self-employment

The right to work in Jamaica is relatively restricted. The Ministry of Labour and Social Security and the Ministry of National Security are responsible for ensuring that employment opportunities are made available to Jamaican citizens and permanent residents before being offered to foreign nationals.

Foreign nationals coming to Jamaica to work are required to have both valid work permits and visas if they are not citizens from specified CARICOM and British Commonwealth countries. Work permit exemptions may be available to citizens from CARICOM member states who have obtained CARICOM Skills Certificates. Foreign nationals married to Jamaican citizens may also obtain Marriage Exemption Certificates from the Ministry of Labour and Social Security to obtain exemption from work permit requirements. If a work permit exemption is obtained, a visa is then required for foreign nationals who are not British Commonwealth or CARICOM citizens.

No legal restriction is imposed on the employment of foreign nationals in Jamaica. However, the Work Permit Review Board must be satisfied that the category of employment for which application is made is not available locally.

The duration of the work permit period can be based on the employment contract and may be granted for a maximum of three years. Work permits are renewable but are not transferable. The Ministry of Labour and Social Security requires 8 to 12 weeks to process a work permit application. The Ministry of National Security requires three working days to process a resident permit and a visa.

The work permit process requires the Jamaican employer to submit the work permit application on behalf of the foreign national to the Ministry of Labour and Social Security prior to the national commencing an assignment in Jamaica. If approval is granted, the foreign national, depending on his or her nationality, must apply to a Jamaican consulate abroad to obtain a visa before arriving in Jamaica. An application to the Immigration Department and the Ministry of National Security must be completed to register the foreign national for employment in Jamaica, on arrival.

A self-employed person must apply to the Ministry of Labour and Social Security for a work permit and then apply to the immigration department of the Ministry of National Security for a visa and registration.

H. Residence permits

Spouses and children are dependents of a work permit holder, and an application for temporary residence must be submitted to the Immigration Services, Ministry of National Security for spouses and children under 16 years old. Children who are 16 or older and who are students must obtain students' visas.

An alien registration is also required for foreign nationals (non-British Commonwealth and CARICOM citizens) over 16 years old whose stay in Jamaica exceeds six months.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. A foreign national married to a Jamaican citizen or person born in Jamaica may be exempt from the requirement for a work permit. All other family members, however, must obtain work permits.

Marital property regime. The Family Property (Rights of Spouses) Act recognizes the union of a single man and single woman who have lived together continuously for a five-year period. The act grants the same property rights to common law unions as those granted to married couples.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally in Jamaica using their home-country driver's licenses for up to one year. Jamaica has driver's license reciprocity with the United States and most British Commonwealth countries. To obtain a local Jamaican driver's license, an applicant is required to take a written examination and a road test.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. In Japan, the tax liability of individuals is determined by their residence status. Individual taxpayers are classified into the following three categories:

- A permanent resident is an individual who is a Japanese national or a non-Japanese national who has been present in Japan for at least 5 years within the past 10 years.
- A nonpermanent resident is an individual of non-Japanese nationality who has not resided or maintained his or her domicile in Japan for 5 years or more within the past 10 years.
- A nonresident is an individual who does not meet the requirements for qualification as a permanent resident or a nonpermanent resident.

Foreign nationals arriving in Japan are considered to have established residence in Japan, unless employment contracts or other documents clearly indicate that they will stay in Japan for less than one year.

Permanent residents are subject to income tax on their worldwide income, regardless of source. Nonpermanent residents are subject to tax on income earned in Japan (for example, employment income from services performed in Japan, regardless of payroll location) plus any non-Japan source income that is paid in or remitted to Japan. Also, for securities acquired on or after 1 April 2017 and within the period in which the individual was a nonpermanent resident in the past 10 years, the capital gains derived from such securities are included in the scope of taxable income for the nonpermanent resident, even if the transaction is made via a foreign stock exchange. Nonresidents are subject to tax on their Japanese-source income only.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income and deductions. Individuals with employment income are subject to income tax. Employment income includes salaries, wages, directors' fees, bonuses and other compensation of a similar nature. Benefits in kind provided by the employer, including the private use of an employer-provided automobile, tuition for dependent children, private medical insurance premiums and private pension contributions, are included in employment income. However, certain employer-paid benefits, including moving expenses and home-leave expenses, are excluded from taxable income.

Favorable tax treatment is available for employer-provided housing if the following conditions are satisfied:
- The lease is in the employer's name.
- The employer pays the rent directly to the landlord.
- The individual pays to the employer an amount equal to the "legal rent" for the premises from after-tax monies.

For purposes of the last condition above, the legal rent is computed using different formulas for directors and employees. For directors, the legal rent is the greater of one-half (35% if also used for business purposes) of the monthly rent paid by the employer or an amount computed by a formula involving the area and assessed value of the rented property. If the private living space exceeds 240 square meters, if amenities are located on the premises such as a swimming pool, tennis courts or other similar facilities, or if luxury amenities are provided that cater to the director's personal tastes, the favorable tax treatment does not apply, and the director's housing is taxed at full value. For other employees, the legal rent equals one-half of an amount computed by a formula involving the area and assessed value of the rented property. Experience indicates that this amount is approximately 5% to 15% of the rent actually paid by the employer.

Taxable employment income equals gross receipts minus an employment income deduction, which is progressive. The maximum amount of such deduction is JPY1,950,000 for income exceeding JPY8.5 million.

Self-employment and business income. Individuals who derive income from business and professional activities are subject to income taxes at the rates set forth in Rates. Taxable income consists of gross receipts, minus reasonable and necessary expenses incurred in connection with the business. Certain advantages are available to individual taxpayers filing a "blue form" tax return if they meet the necessary bookkeeping requirements.

Investment income. Dividends from unlisted shares and dividends received by shareholders who own 3% or more of listed shares are included in taxable income and taxed at progressive rates (see Rates). Dividends from listed shares are taxed at a flat rate of 20% (15% national tax plus 5% local inhabitant tax). For dividends from listed shares that are received through a Japanese paying agent (securities company or trust company in Japan), a withholding tax is deducted by the Japanese paying agent. A taxpayer does not need to report the dividends as income on the tax return if the dividends are from listed shares and are received through a Japanese paying agent.

Interest income includes interest on public bonds, corporate debentures, deposits and postal savings, as well as interest on distributions of earnings of joint operation trusts, public bonds and debenture investment trusts. No deductions are allowed for expenses. Interest on public bonds, corporate debentures and deposits paid in Japan is generally taxed separately from other income and is subject to a 15% withholding tax (plus a 5% local withholding tax) at source. Interest from "specified bonds" is taxed separately from other income through a tax return if received through a paying agent outside Japan. "Specified bonds" include, but are not limited to, Japan government bonds, local government bonds, foreign government bonds, listed or publicly offered corporate bonds, and bonds issued on or before 31 December 2015. Interest from deposits and "general bonds" is taxed at progressive rates through a tax return if received through a paying agent outside Japan. "General bonds" are bonds that are not specified bonds, such as privately placed bonds.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees paid by a Japanese corporation to nonresidents are considered Japanese-source income and are subject to tax in Japan, even if the services are performed outside Japan.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from the sale of shares are generally taxed at 20% (15% national tax plus 5% local inhabitant tax).

Capital gains derived from the sale of land and buildings are taxed separately from other income and at different rates. Gains from the sale of land and buildings held for no longer than five years are considered short-term, and gains from the sale of similar assets held for longer than five years are treated as long-term gains. Long-term gains are defined as income from the transfer of land and buildings that have been owned for more than five years as of 1 January of the year of transfer.

Short-term gains are taxed at a rate of 30%, plus a 9% inhabitant tax on taxable gains. Long-term gains are taxed at a rate of 15%, plus a 5% inhabitant tax on taxable gains.

Losses from the sale of listed shares and specified bonds (see Investment income) can offset gains from the sale of listed shares and specified bonds. In addition, losses from the sale of listed shares and specified bonds through a securities company or bank in Japan may offset dividends from listed shares and interest from specified bonds. The net loss remaining after using all available losses to reduce dividends from listed shares and interest from specified bonds may be carried forward for three years by a taxpayer filing a tax return.

Losses from the sale of unlisted shares and general bonds (see Investment income) can only offset gains from the sale of unlisted shares and general bonds.

Deductible expenses. Typically allowable deductible expenses include the expenses listed in the following table.

Expenses	Deductible amount
Casualty losses	The greater of (amount of loss, including expenditure incurred in relation to the casualty) – (insurance reimbursement) – (10% of adjusted total income), or (expenditure incurred in relation to the casualty – JPY50,000)
Medical expenses	(Medical expenses) – (insurance reimbursement) – (the lesser of 5% of adjusted total income or JPY100,000); maximum deduction is JPY2 million

Insurance premiums. Social insurance premiums are fully deductible. Life insurance premiums are deductible, up to a maximum JPY40,000. Individual pension premiums are deductible, up to JPY40,000. Nursing care insurance premiums are deductible, up to JPY40,000. For casualty insurance premiums, the maximum deductible amount is JPY50,000 for earthquake insurance contracts and JPY15,000 for long-term insurance contracts entered into by 31 December 2006. The maximum total deduction for earthquake and long-term casualty premiums is JPY50,000.

Contributions. Contributions to the government or local authorities, to institutions for educational, scientific or other public purposes designated by the Ministry of Finance, and to institutions for scientific study or research specifically provided for in the tax law are deductible. The deductible amount is the lower of total contributions, or 40% of adjusted total income reduced by JPY2,000.

Personal deductions and allowances. The following personal deductions are available for national income tax purposes.

	JPY
Spouse	380,000 (a)
Senior spouse (70 years of age or older)	480,000 (a)
Dependent (16 years of age or older)	380,000 (b)
Basic deduction	480,000 (c)

(a) This is the maximum amount. The amount of the spousal deduction varies in accordance with the taxpayer's income and the spouse's income.
(b) For eligible dependents who are at least 19 years of age but less than 23 years of age, an additional education deduction of JPY250,000 is allowed.
(c) This is the maximum amount for the basic deduction. If the total income exceeds JPY24,000,000, the basic deduction is reduced gradually and individuals with total income exceeding JPY25 million are not allowed to utilize the basic deduction.

Other personal deductions are available if some conditions are met.

Personal deductions for inhabitant tax purposes are lower than those for national income tax purposes.

Rates. Individual income taxes consist of national income tax and local inhabitant tax.

Normally, a 20% withholding tax is levied on nonresidents, with no deductions available; however, depending on the type of income, tax may be levied at progressive rates through self-assessment. Dividends and salaries paid by Japanese companies, interest income, annuities and prizes are subject to a 20% withholding tax if paid to nonresidents.

National individual income tax rates. National income tax rates are progressive. The rates range from 5% (on taxable income of up to JPY1,950,000) to 45% (on taxable income exceeding JPY40 million), as shown in the following table.

Taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding JPY	Not exceeding JPY	amount JPY	excess %
0	1,950,000	0	5
1,950,000	3,300,000	97,500	10
3,300,000	6,950,000	232,500	20
6,950,000	9,000,000	962,500	23
9,000,000	18,000,000	1,434,000	33
18,000,000	40,000,000	4,404,000	40
40,000,000	—	13,204,000	45

Special surtax for reconstruction assistance. A special surtax for reconstruction assistance with respect to the Tohoku earthquake disaster is imposed from 2013 to 2037. The surtax at a rate of 2.1% is applied to the amount of national income tax. As a result, the effective tax rate for the highest bracket is 45.945%.

Local inhabitant tax rates (prefectural and municipal). Local inhabitant tax consists of prefectural tax (a flat rate of 4% plus JPY1,500 of per capita levy) and municipal tax (a flat rate of 6% plus JPY3,500 of per capita levy). Local inhabitant tax is imposed on individuals who are registered at a municipality as of 1 January.

B. Other taxes

Inheritance tax. Inheritance tax is levied on heirs and legatees who acquire properties by inheritance or bequest. Because the determination of taxability is a complicated issue, professional advice should be sought.

Gifts made within three years before death are treated as inherited property and are included in taxable property for purposes of inheritance tax. Certain exemptions and allowances are permitted in the computation of total net taxable property. A basic exemption of JPY30 million, plus JPY6 million multiplied by the number of statutory heirs, is deductible from taxable properties. The inheritance tax is calculated separately for each statutory heir. The aggregate of the calculated tax is then prorated to those who actually receive the property.

Inheritance tax rates range from 10% to 55%, with a 20% surtax on transfers to heirs, other than the spouse, parents and children of the decedent, as shown in the following table.

Taxable amount		Tax on lower amount	Rate on excess
Exceeding JPY (millions)	Not exceeding JPY (millions)	JPY (millions)	%
0	10	0	10
10	30	1	15
30	50	4	20
50	100	8	30
100	200	23	40
200	300	63	45
300	600	108	50
600	—	258	55

Japan has entered into an estate tax treaty with the United States.

Gift tax. Gift tax is levied on individuals receiving gifts from other individuals. Because the determination of taxability is a complicated issue, professional advice should be sought.

The following table presents the gift tax rates.

Taxable amount		Tax on lower amount	Rate on excess
Exceeding JPY	Not exceeding JPY	JPY	%
0	2,000,000	0	10
2,000,000	3,000,000	200,000	15
3,000,000	4,000,000	350,000	20
4,000,000	6,000,000	550,000	30
6,000,000	10,000,000	1,150,000	40
10,000,000	15,000,000	2,750,000	45
15,000,000	30,000,000	5,000,000	50
30,000,000	—	12,500,000	55

C. Social security

Social security programs in Japan include health insurance, nursing care insurance (for employees who are 40 to 64 years of age), welfare pension insurance, unemployment insurance and workers' accident compensation insurance. The rates described below are the applicable rates as of 1 May 2021.

The premium for health insurance is 9.84% of the monthly remuneration and bonus, up to a maximum premium of JPY136,776 (bonus ceiling of JPY563,832 per year). The premium for nursing care insurance is 1.8% of the monthly remuneration and bonus, up to a maximum premium of JPY25,020 (bonus ceiling of JPY103,140 per year). For welfare pensions, the premium is 18.3% of the monthly remuneration and bonus, up to a maximum premium of JPY118,950 (bonus ceiling of JPY274,500 per month). Costs are borne equally by employers and employees for the types of insurance mentioned in this paragraph.

The premium for unemployment insurance is 0.9%, of which 0.6% is borne by the employer and 0.3% by the employee. The premium for workers' accident compensation insurance is borne entirely by the employer at a rate of 0.3% of total compensation paid to employees (for general office workers).

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Individual income taxation in Japan is based on the principle of self-assessment. In general, taxpayers must file tax returns to declare income and deductions and to pay the tax due. However, national income tax liability of individuals compensated in yen at gross annual amounts not exceeding JPY20 million is settled through employer withholding if income other than employment income does not exceed JPY200,000. If tax is withheld from payments to nonresidents and if the amount withheld satisfies the Japanese tax liability, the nonresidents need not file income tax returns.

Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

Income tax returns must be filed, and the final tax paid, between 16 February and 15 March for income accrued during the previous calendar year. For those taxpayers who filed tax returns for the preceding year and who reported tax liabilities of JPY150,000 or more after the deduction of withholding tax, prepayments of income tax for the current year are due on 31 July and 30 November. Each prepayment normally equals one-third of the previous year's total tax liability, less amounts withheld at source. To the extent that prepaid and withheld payments exceed the total tax due, they are refundable if a return is filed.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

A foreign tax credit is allowed, with limitations, for foreign income taxes paid by a resident taxpayer if the income is taxed by both Japan and another country. The credit is generally limited to the lesser of foreign income tax paid or the Japanese tax payable on the foreign-source income. If the foreign tax paid exceeds the limit, the excess may be carried forward for three years. A taxpayer may elect to deduct foreign tax from taxable income under certain conditions.

If a nonresident is resident in a country with which Japan has entered into a tax treaty, income may be either exempt from tax or subject to a lower tax rate. Japan has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Most of the above treaties reduce the tax rates on Japanese-source interest, dividends, royalties and similar income, and also provide relief from double taxation through tax credits.

F. Entry into Japan

If the foreign national is not intending to work in Japan, he or she may enter Japan for the purposes listed in Section G.

For foreign nationals who intend to engage in activities that are for a duration of 90 days or less and that do not directly involve remuneration, see Section G for temporary visitor visa status.

If the activities are longer than 90 days or have remuneration involved, see Section H for mid- to long-term resident visa status.

G. Visitor visas

"Temporary visitor" status allows foreign nationals to stay in Japan for a short period without a residence card. The following activities that do not directly involve remuneration are allowable under "temporary visitor" status:

- Sightseeing
- Recreation
- Sports
- Visiting relatives
- Participating in observation tours
- Participating in lectures or meetings

- Liaison activities
- Any activities similar to the above

If the foreign national is listed as an executive in the Japanese company registration certificate while receiving remuneration, he or she needs to obtain a work visa status regardless of the period of stay.

To obtain a "temporary visitor" visa, the foreign national must apply at a Japanese embassy or consulate overseas before entering Japan if he or she is not from one of the 68 jurisdictions with a visa exemption agreement, as listed in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Japan website (www.mofa.go.jp/j_info/visit/visa/short/novisa.html).

H. Work visas and self-employment

Residence status, as defined by the Immigration Control Act, refers to the status of the foreign national under which he or she is permitted to conduct certain activities while residing in Japan. The following are the three steps to obtain a work-type, mid- to long-term residence visa status for foreign nationals who intend to work in Japan:

- Step 1: The foreign national applies for a Certificate of Eligibility (CoE) from the Japanese Immigration Services Agency in Japan that meets the criteria of a certain type of residence status. The standard processing time of the Immigration Services Agency is 4 to 12 weeks. However, in many cases, the processing time usually is 2 to 3 weeks.
- Step 2: Once the CoE is obtained, the foreign national needs to apply for a visa at the Japanese embassy or consulate with the original CoE. The processing time of the Japanese embassy or consulate is usually two to seven business days.
- Step 3: Once the visa is issued, the foreign national must enter Japan with the visa and the CoE before the expiration date (in general, within three months from the CoE's issuance). The applicant will be given landing permission at the border of entry, and the residence card corresponding to the approved residence status on the CoE will be issued.

Obtaining a work visa status under self-employment is also possible with additional considerations.

I. Residence permits

No separate process is required for the residence permits in Japan if the foreign national obtained residence by following the steps outlined in Section H. However, the foreign national will be required to register his or her permanent address at his or her local municipality within 14 days from the date such address is obtained.

Categories of residence. The categories of the typical statuses of residence and the activities in which the individuals in each category are authorized to engage in are summarized below.

Engineer/Specialist in Humanities/International Services. Individuals in this category are authorized to engage in activities that require skills or knowledge in the field of physical science, engineering or other natural science fields, or in the field of jurisprudence, economics, sociology or other humanities fields, or in duties that require ways of thinking or sensitivity founded on foreign culture, based on a contract entered into with a public or private organization in Japan.

Intra-Company Transferee. Staff members transferred to a business office in Japan for a limited period of time from a business office established in a foreign country of a public or private organization that has a head office, branch office or other business offices in Japan are authorized to engage in activities listed in the Engineer/Specialist in Humanities/International Services section.

Business Manager. Individuals in this category may engage in activities to operate a business of international trade or other businesses, or to engage in the management of those businesses, in Japan.

Highly Skilled Professional. The Highly Skilled Professional (HSP) category is an upgraded version of the other categories of residence. The following are the are three types of HSP:
- "Advanced academic research activities" for researchers and professors
- "Advanced specialized/technical activities" for general foreign workers
- "Advanced business and management activities" for business managers.

Depending on the nature of the activities, points are allocated according to academic background, employment background and annual income. Because the ways of calculations are different, an individual may pick the type that best fits his or her ability to earn points according to his or her background. To promote the acceptance of highly skilled foreign professionals to Japan, preferential immigration treatment is granted if a person scores 70 points or higher.

Dependent. Individuals in this category may engage in daily activities of a spouse or child supported by the foreign national staying in Japan with the status of residence. De facto/same-sex spouses, adopted children/stepchildren and parents might fall into a different residence depending on the specific cases.

Other rules. Foreign nationals with a valid passport and residence card may leave and return to Japan without holding a re-entry permit if the period of absence from Japan is less than one year.

The period of stay granted for those with a residential status is a maximum of five years.

Extension

Process. If a foreign national wants to remain in Japan beyond the authorized period of stay, he or she must apply for the extension to their local immigration office within three months prior to the expiration date. A maximum grace period of two months will be given automatically once the application is submitted. The decision will be made within this period.

Eligibility. The Immigration Services Agency grants permission only under reasonable grounds based on the strength of documents submitted by the applicant. Applications are not approved if the applicants have already attained the purposes of their visit or if the applicants' continuous stay in Japan is found to be detrimental to the interest of Japan.

Other. Anyone who stays in Japan beyond his or her authorized period of stay may be subject to punishment and/or deportation.

Permanent residence. The Minister of Justice may grant permanent residence if a foreign national fulfills all of the following conditions:
- The applicant is of good conduct.
- The applicant has sufficient assets or ability to make an independent living.
- The applicant's permanent residence is regarded to be in accord with the interests of Japan. This is established by the following:
  - In principle, the applicant has stayed in Japan for more than 10 years consecutively. It is also required that during his or her stay in Japan, the person has had a work permit or the status of residence for more than 5 years consecutively.
  - The applicant has never been sentenced to a fine or imprisonment and adequately fulfills public duties (duties such as the payment of taxes, the public pension contribution and the public health insurance contribution, as well as notification to the Immigration Services Agency).
  - The applicant has held a stay of three years or longer with his or her current status of residence.
  - There is no possibility that the applicant could do harm from the viewpoint of protection of public health.

  The first and second above requirements do not apply to spouses and children of Japanese nationals, special permanent residents or permanent residents.

Special requirements for 10-year residence are, in principle, the following:
- The applicant is a spouse of a Japanese national, special permanent resident or permanent resident and has been in a real marital relationship for more than three years consecutively and has stayed in Japan more than one year consecutively.
- The applicant is a true child of a Japanese national, special permanent resident or permanent resident and has stayed in Japan more than one year consecutively.
- The applicant has stayed in Japan for more than five years consecutively with the status of long-term resident.
- The applicant has been recognized to have made a contribution to Japan in diplomatic, social, economic, cultural or other fields and has stayed in Japan for more than five years.
- With respect to the points calculation system for the HSP visa status, the applicant could certify a minimum total score of 70 points or more within three years of the application, or the applicant could certify a minimum total score of 80 points or more within one year of the application.

J. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Residence card holders may sponsor a dependent visa status that allows their legal spouse and unmarried minor children to live together with them in Japan. The period of stay would be similar to that of the sponsor, and they may not engage in work activities without a part-time work permit issued from the Immigration Services Agency.

The following family members may not be eligible for dependent visa status:
- De facto/same-sex spouses
- Adopted children/stepchildren
- Parents

However, they may be eligible for another visa status depending on the situation.

Driver's permits. To legally drive in Japan, an individual needs either a valid Japanese license or needs to adhere to the first two requirements below. Individuals who fulfill the third and fourth requirements may convert their current license to a Japanese license without starting the process from scratch. The following are the requirements:
- If the individual has an international driver's license issued by a signatory jurisdiction of the Geneva Treaty, driving is allowed for one year from the date the individual obtained landing permission in Japan or for one year from the issuance date of the international driver's license, whichever is earlier.
- If the individual has a driver's license issued from Belgium, Estonia, France, Germany, Monaco, Switzerland or Taiwan, driving is allowed for one year from the date the individual obtained landing permission in Japan or until the expiration of the driver's license, whichever is earlier. He or she must also carry a valid translation issued by a designated organization, such as the Japan Automobile Federation (JAF).
- For the conversion process, the individual is exempted from tests and only documentation is required if the individual has a driver's license issued from Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, the Czech Republic, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Korea (South), Luxembourg, Monaco, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Taiwan, the United Kingdom or the United States (Hawaii, Indiana [an Indiana driver's license holder is exempt only from the driving test, not the written test], Maryland, Ohio, Virginia and Washington).
- If an individual has a driver's license issued from a jurisdiction not listed above, a simplified written test and a driving test is required for the conversion process.
- If an individual does not have a driver's license, he or she must complete the full procedure and complete the same requirements as any other resident in Japan, including the written and driving tests. The written test may be available in English or in the simple hiragana script (the simplest writing method in Japanese, which does not contain Chinese characters), depending on location.

A driver's license is valid for a maximum of five years. Renewal is possible within one month of the expiration date.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individual income taxation in Jersey is based on residence. Taxpayers are categorized as resident and ordinarily resident, resident and not ordinarily resident, or nonresident.

Individuals are considered resident in Jersey in any year of assessment if they meet either of the following qualifications:
- They are present in Jersey for more than six months.
- They have accommodation available in Jersey and stay there for a minimum of one night during the year.

Individuals are considered ordinarily resident in Jersey in any year of assessment if they meet any of the following qualifications:
- They normally spend all of their time in Jersey other than periods spent away on holiday or business.
- They are physically present in Jersey for an average of more than 90 days each year over a consecutive four-year period.
- They are expecting to permanently reside in Jersey for a period of five years or more.

Persons moving to Jersey who are on employment contracts may be considered ordinarily resident in Jersey if their employment contract exceeds four years. This may be affected by several factors, such as whether they have available accommodation and the intended length of their stay.

Resident and ordinarily resident individuals are subject to Jersey income tax on their worldwide income.

Resident but not ordinarily resident individuals are subject to Jersey income tax on their Jersey-source income and their non-Jersey-source income remitted to Jersey.

Nonresident individuals are subject to tax on Jersey-source income only. Nonresidents are exempt from tax in Jersey on the following types of income:
- Interest on Jersey bank deposits

- Cash and stock dividends issued by a company resident in Jersey that is taxable at a rate of 0%
- Income from a purchased life annuity
- Interest received from a company resident in Jersey
- Earnings from serving as director of a Jersey company
- Royalties or other amounts paid with respect to the use of patents
- Jersey state pensions

Jersey residents receiving pension income from a country that has entered into a double tax agreement with Jersey may be exempt from tax in that country, depending on the terms of the double tax agreement. Nonresidents receiving income from a Jersey pension may be exempt from income tax in Jersey on such pension income. Professional advice should be obtained if necessary.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Taxable income includes salaries, wages, directors' fees, bonuses, gratuities, pensions and benefits in kind. The first GBP250 of taxable benefits in kind from all sources is exempt from tax, and several specific exemptions exist, including but not limited to, health insurance.

Education allowances provided by employers to their employees' children aged 18 years and under are taxable for income tax purposes. Housing benefits are also subject to tax. Shareholder benefits (for example, loans) may also be subject to tax.

Termination payments paid by, or on behalf of, an employer to an employee are chargeable to Jersey income tax. The first GBP50,000 of a termination payment is exempt from income tax. However, if a termination payment is made as a result of injury, death or disability, it is completely exempt from tax.

Self-employment and business income. All self-employed individuals carrying on a trade, business or profession are subject to tax on business profits.

Tax on self-employment and business income is imposed on the accounting profits, adjusted for tax purposes, of non-corporations at a rate of up to 20%. Adjusted profits are assessed on a current year basis.

The general corporate income tax rate is 0%. A 10% rate applies to certain regulated financial services companies, certain insurance businesses and to companies providing credit facilities. In addition, the 20% rate applies to income derived from the rental of Jersey land and property, development profits derived from Jersey land, and income from extraction trades relating to Jersey land. Jersey-based retailers with profits exceeding GBP500,000 are also subject to tax at a rate of up to 20%.

Investment income. Dividends, interest, royalties and income from property are taxed on an actual-year basis at a rate of 20%. Property rental expenses are fully deductible.

Additional shareholder taxation rules exist for Jersey-resident individuals who are shareholders of Jersey tax-resident companies. The rules are complex, and professional advice should be obtained. Broadly, the rules impose income tax on a Jersey-resident shareholder with respect to any extraction of value from a Jersey company. This can include income tax on share redemption proceeds and the advancement or repayment of loan capital.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. A Jersey tax liability generally arises at the time an option is granted to an employee. The liability is based on the fair market value of the option. If the individual cannot exercise the option for a period of three years or more, the following discounts may be applied:
- Three years: 30%
- Four years: 40%
- Five years or more: 50%

No additional tax is levied at the time the option is exercised. The sale of the stock is not taxed because Jersey does not tax capital gains. Stock options fall under the benefit-in-kind rules (see Employment income) and, accordingly, the GBP250 exemption can be claimed. Employers can apply for an alternative tax treatment whereby options are taxed based on the value at exercise rather than grant. In all cases, agreement on the tax treatment of a new employee share option plan should be obtained from the Comptroller of Revenue in advance. No certainty regarding the taxation of employer-provided stock options can be obtained without a ruling.

Scrip dividends are exempt from income tax in Jersey by concession.

The taxation of employer-provided stock options is an area currently under review; therefore, current professional advice should be sought.

Capital gains. Jersey does not impose tax on capital gains.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Deductible expenses must be incurred wholly and exclusively for the purpose of employment. These include amounts incurred on subscriptions to approved professional bodies.

Personal deductions and allowances. All taxpayers may deduct payments made to an approved superannuation fund or pension scheme and premiums paid under a retirement annuity contract, with certain restrictions. The total amount of pension scheme contributions that are deductible is limited to the lower of GBP50,000 and the related earnings of individuals during the year of assessment. The relief available to individuals whose income is GBP150,000 or more is restricted by a phasing-out process. Under this process, GBP1 of relief is withdrawn for each GBP1 of income over GBP150,000.

Life insurance premium payments are not deductible for income tax purposes.

In addition to the personal deductions discussed above, marginal-rate taxpayers (see Exemptions limits and marginal relief) may claim a deduction of GBP3,060 for each child of the taxpayer who is under 16, or over 16 and in full-time education. Child allowances are reduced if the child's own income exceeds GBP3,060.

Interest paid on personal loans and debts is not a deductible expense unless the loan was obtained for an allowable purpose, such as for buying into a business. Qualifying interest payments are deductible for all taxpayers.

Medical insurance premium payments are not deductible for income tax purposes.

If an individual is not taxed on the basis of being fully resident in Jersey throughout the year of assessment, allowances, deductions and exemption limits to which he or she is entitled may be reduced to reflect the proportion of the year the individual is present in Jersey.

Exemption limits and marginal relief. The following are the income tax exemption thresholds for 2021:
- Single person: GBP16,000
- Single person (age 65 and over): GBP16,000
- Married or civil partnership: GBP25,700
- Married or civil partnership (age 65 and over): GBP26,100

For taxpayers earning less than the applicable exemption threshold, no tax liability arises.

For taxpayers whose total income exceeds their exemption threshold (including the additional allowances described below plus some of the allowances described above), two tax calculations are required. The amount of income that exceeds the exemption threshold is subject to tax at a rate of 26%. This is compared with the tax position if no exemption is applied and total income is taxed at 20%. The calculation method producing the lower liability is then applied. This allows low- and middle-income earners to benefit from an additional deduction, namely "marginal relief," which is the difference between the two calculations when the calculation using the exemption limits is lower than the standard calculation.

In addition to the exemption thresholds, a marginal-rate taxpayer can add certain additional allowances to the allowances and reliefs discussed above. The following are the allowances that may be added to the exemption thresholds:
- Childcare tax allowance (maximum of GBP6,273, which can be increased to GBP16,320 for children below school age).
- Second earner's allowance (100% of wife or civil partner's earnings, up to a capped amount of GBP6,300).
- Additional allowance for children of GBP4,500. This is available for single parents or couples if one parent is wholly incapacitated through illness or injury.
- Qualifying interest payments (including interest payments on a loan taken out to purchase a taxpayer's main residence), restricted to interest on capital of GBP300,000 and maximum relief of GBP7,500.

Business deductions. Disbursements or expenses incurred wholly and exclusively for the purpose of trade are allowable. Capital allowances are granted for machinery and equipment at an annual reducing-balance rate of 25% and for greenhouses at an annual rate of 10%.

Rates. Income tax is imposed on taxable income either at a rate of 20% or on the marginal-rate basis explained in Exemption limits and marginal relief.

Tenants paying rent to nonresident landlords are required to withhold Jersey income tax at a rate of 20%. Landlords can apply to the Taxes Office for permission for the rent to be paid gross.

Relief for losses. Noncorporate business losses may be carried forward indefinitely if the business continues to operate. In some cases, current year losses can be utilized against other income arising in the year or can be carried back and utilized against profits derived from the same trade in the preceding year.

Different rules for the use of business losses apply to companies.

B. Other taxes

Wealth tax and estate tax. No wealth tax or estate tax is levied in Jersey. For probate to be granted on death, stamp duty may be payable. The amount payable depends on the domicile of the deceased, the situs of property and whether the property is immovable or movable.

Land transaction tax. Land transaction tax applies to the sale of shares in a company that give the owner of the shares the right to occupy a dwelling. The rates range from 0% to 10.5%. Land transaction tax is equal to the stamp duty levied on the sale of freehold property.

C. Social security

Contributions. Jersey has a compulsory social security scheme. Everyone between school-leaving age and pension age is insurable in either Class 1 (employed persons) or Class 2 (self-employed or unemployed individuals).

Class 1. Employers and employees must make contributions based on salaries at rates of 6.5% (secondary contributions) and 4% between January to June and then 6% between July to December (primary contributions), respectively, with a standard earnings limit (SEL) of GBP4,610 per month. These limits are updated on 1 January of each year.

In addition, an upper earnings limit (UEL) of GBP21,030 per month exists.

A 2.5% rate also applies only to employer (secondary) contributions on earnings above the SEL (GBP4,610 per month) and up to the UEL (GBP20,030 per month).

Class 2. Self-employed individuals are required to pay Class 2 contributions at a rate of 10.5% between January to June and then 12.5% between July to December on earnings up to the SEL (GBP4,610 per month). This rate equals the combined total of the employer's and employee's Class 1 maximum contribution amounts. A 2.5% rate also applies to earnings above the SEL and up to the UEL (GBP20,030 per month). The maximum Class 2 contribution is GBP894.55 per month.

A Class 2 individual can make an application to pay reduced rate contributions during 2021, based on the 2019 and 2020 income tax assessments and business accounts if income for 2019 and 2020 was between the lower earnings limit (GBP980 per month) and the UEL (GBP20,030 per month). Individuals who recently established businesses may be eligible to pay a deferred rate of contribution on application to the Social Security Department. For 2021, the rate is GBP161.35 per month between January to June and then GBP 192.09 from July to December 2021.

Long-term care charge. The Taxes Office collects contributions to the long-term care fund on behalf of the Social Security Department. The fund provides financial support to Jersey residents who are likely to need long-term care for the rest of their lives, either in their own home or in a care home. Contributions are payable at a maximum rate of 1.5% on taxable income, subject to a cap based on the social security UEL. The cap for 2021 is GBP3,785.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Jersey has entered into totalization agreements, which usually apply for a maximum of 12 months. However, it may be possible to obtain an extension if agreed to by the Social Security Department. Totalization agreements are currently in effect with the following jurisdictions.

Austria
Barbados
Bermuda
Canada
Cyprus
France
Guernsey
Iceland
Ireland
Isle of Man
Italy
Jamaica
Japan
Korea (South)
Netherlands
New Zealand
Norway
Portugal
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
United Kingdom
United States

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Income tax is assessed on a calendar-year basis (termed the year of assessment). Married persons and persons in a civil partnership are assessed jointly, not separately, on all types of income, unless they elect otherwise. Separate assessment does not provide a financial advantage. Returns are required to be filed by midnight on 31 May if filed on paper and by midnight on 31 July if the return is filed online or if an agent has been appointed. Tax returns are due in the year following the year of assessment. A penalty of GBP300 is imposed for returns not submitted by the deadline. A further penalty of GBP50 per month (up to GBP450) applies if the return remains outstanding three months after the relevant filing deadline.

Employers in Jersey are required to operate a pay-as-you-earn system for employees called the Income Tax Instalment System (ITIS).

Under the ITIS, income tax and long-term care payments for persons registered for income tax on or after 1 January 2006 are deducted from an employee's salary and applied toward settlement of the current year's tax liability. Persons registered for income tax in Jersey prior to 1 January 2006 are taxed on a prior year basis; that is, income tax payments under ITIS are applied against the preceding year's tax liability.

From 2020, prior-year basis taxpayers were transitioned to a current-year basis with their 2019 tax payments allocated to their 2020 tax liability. From 2021, they will become current-year basis taxpayers with their 2019 tax liability being frozen. Their frozen 2019 tax liability will be required to be paid in the future with the following two options available:

- Payment plan with payment commencing 2025 (registration is required by 30 September 2024)
- Commit to pay on retirement with the full amount to be paid within 12 months of reaching State Pension Age (registration is required by 30 September 2024)

Taxpayers are normally notified of tax assessments in the year following the year of assessment. Any shortfall in tax for employees is collected through a change in the employee's ITIS rate. For individuals generating 75% or more of their income from non-employment income, tax is payable in two installments, with 50% of the prior year tax liability due by 30 November in the year of assessment and a further 50% due by the following 31 May. A balancing payment for any shortfall is due by 30 November following the relevant year of assessment. A 10% surcharge is levied on any tax unpaid by 30 November following the year of assessment. For individuals who owe tax under the ITIS, it is not usually necessary to make a balancing payment if more than 70% of the tax due was paid under the ITIS.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Foreign tax paid is allowed as a deduction from taxable income.

Jersey has entered into double tax treaties with Australia, Cyprus, Denmark, Estonia, the Faroe Islands, Finland, France, Germany, Greenland, Guernsey, the Hong Kong SAR, Iceland, Isle of Man, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malta, Mauritius, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Qatar, Rwanda, Seychelles, Singapore, Sweden, the United Arab Emirates and the United Kingdom.

The majority of these treaties are limited in scope. The treaty with France addresses only the exemption of air transport and shipping profits. The treaties with Australia, Germany, Liechtenstein, Mauritius and New Zealand address only the avoidance of double taxation on individuals. The treaties with Denmark, the Faroe Islands, Finland, Greenland, Iceland, Norway, Poland and Sweden address the avoidance of double taxation on individuals and the exemption of air transport and shipping profits. The treaties with Estonia, Guernsey, the Hong Kong SAR, Malta, Qatar and the United Kingdom provide a credit for tax levied on all sources of income, excluding dividends and debenture interest in the UK treaty.

Jersey has entered into tax information exchange agreements (TIEAs) with the following jurisdictions.

Argentina	Germany	New Zealand
Australia	Greenland	Norway
Austria	Hungary	Poland
Belgium	Iceland	Portugal
Brazil	India	Romania
Canada	Indonesia	Slovenia
Chile	Ireland	South Africa

China Mainland
Czech Republic
Denmark
Faroe Islands
Finland
France
Italy
Japan
Korea (South)
Latvia
Mexico
Netherlands
Sweden
Switzerland
Turkey
United Kingdom
United States

Several double tax treaties and TIEAs are currently under negotiation.

F. Work permits and self-employment

Non-European Economic Area (EEA) nationals wishing to work in Jersey must obtain work permits through their intended employers. The Jersey Customs and Immigration Department issues permits to employers who demonstrate that they are unable to fill a vacancy locally, or to foreign persons who are free of permit restrictions. A visa or entry certificate is also required and is available from the British high commission, embassy or consulate in the country where the person lives.

Work permits may also be issued to people with specialist skills if their appointment is of particular benefit to the island or to foreign nationals who are free of work permit restrictions in the United Kingdom.

In addition, under the Control of Housing and Work (Jersey) Law 2012, an employer must apply for a license to engage any person who has not worked in Jersey for at least five years to fill a vacancy within an existing undertaking.

British subjects and nationals of the member states of the EEA, which includes the EU, do not require work permits (although employers on the island are required to obtain licenses to employ them) and, in the majority of cases, may enter and exit Jersey freely.

Self-employed individuals are subject to the same visa, work permit and residential permit guidelines outlined in this chapter. Additional restraints may also apply.

G. Residence permits

Economic grounds. The Housing Minister may grant individual permission to a high-value resident to reside in Jersey if the permission can be justified on social or economic grounds. Consent is not granted unless the Housing Minister is satisfied that the applicant would make a major contribution to the island's tax revenues while residing in Jersey. Each application is considered on its individual merits.

High-value residents are subject to a different tax regime than other residents in Jersey. Tax is charged at 20% on the first GBP725,000 of worldwide income, generating GBP145,000 of tax, and a further 1% tax is charged on all income in excess of the GBP725,000 limit. High-value residents are expected to make a minimum tax payment of GBP145,000, which can be offset against the person's tax liability, thereby ensuring all such residents pay a minimum amount of GBP145,000. The GBP725,000 threshold may increase every five years from 2018 in line with inflation.

As a guideline, residents admitted on economic grounds are expected to purchase freehold property with a value in excess of GBP1,750,000 (or GBP900,000 for an apartment). It is also possible that an individual may be allowed to rent property with a market value of approximately GBP1,750,000.

After a high-value resident admitted on economic grounds emigrates from Jersey, he or she loses his or her residence status.

Employment grounds. The Regulation of Undertakings and housing laws were combined into a new Control of Housing and Work (Jersey) Law 2012. This law, which took effect on 1 July 2013, introduced registration cards. An individual moving to Jersey must obtain a registration card before he or she can begin to work or lease a property. This allows employers and landlords to confirm an individual's work and housing status before the individual relocates or begins employment.

It is possible to take up residence in Jersey as an essentially employed individual. This status was commonly known as a "J cat," but is now referred to as a "licensed" employee.

Employers are granted licenses for a certain number of employees if the Housing Minister deems that this is in the best interests of the community. Employers can then issue these licenses to suitable employees or recruits.

Licensed employees are granted permanent residential status after completing a continuous period of 10 years of essential employment in Jersey.

Other possibilities to take up residence in Jersey exist for individuals who are in neither of the above categories, including living in a guest house or hotel, lodging in a private dwelling, or occupying certain unqualified residences. After 10 years of continuous residence in Jersey, such persons gain permanent residential status.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. If a non-EEA national wishes to enter Jersey as the fiancé or spouse of either a person settled in Jersey or a person free from immigration controls who is coming to settle on the same occasion, he or she must first obtain an entry clearance, which is in the form of either a visa or an entry certificate. Application for an entry clearance should be made to the British high commission, embassy or consulate in the country where the person lives. If the fiancé or spouse is in Jersey, he or she should contact the Jersey Customs and Immigration Department for further advice and to arrange an interview.

The child of a person granted residential status under either economic grounds or Licensed status is granted residential status in his or her own right after he or she has completed a continuous period of 10 years' residence, provided the residence commenced when the child was a minor.

Driver's permits. A non-Jersey driver's license must be exchanged for a Jersey license within seven days if the holder's intention is to stay in Jersey longer than 12 months.

Jersey has driver's license reciprocity with the following jurisdictions.

Alderney
Australia
Austria
Barbados
Belgium
British Columbia
British Virgin Islands
Croatia
Cyprus
Czech Republic
Denmark
Falkland Islands
Finland
France
Germany
Gibraltar
Guernsey
Hong Kong SAR
Iceland
Ireland
Isle of Man
Italy
Latvia
Liechtenstein
Malta
Monaco
Netherlands
New Zealand
Norway
Poland
Portugal
Romania
Singapore
Switzerland
United Kingdom

Jersey also accepts driver's licenses from the following jurisdictions for exchange, but no reciprocal agreements are in force with these countries.

Andorra
Bulgaria
Canada
Estonia
Faroe Islands
Greece
Hungary
Japan
Korea (South)
Lithuania
Luxembourg
Slovak Republic
Slovenia
South Africa
Spain
Sweden
Zimbabwe

To obtain a driver's license in Jersey, an individual should take driving lessons from a qualified instructor on the island. The driving test includes a vision test, a short drive and a touch screen PC theory test.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Jordanian nationals and foreign individuals working in Jordan are subject to tax in Jordan on their income earned in, or derived from, Jordan, regardless of their residency status.

An individual is considered a resident of Jordan for tax purposes if he or she resides in Jordan for a period of at least 183 consecutive or non-consecutive days per calendar year. Residents may claim personal allowances.

Income subject to tax

Ordinary income. Income tax is assessed on all income earned by residents and nonresidents of Jordan from taxable activities performed in Jordan, including employment income and rental income. The income tax is levied at the graduated rates set forth in Rates. In addition, a national contribution tax of 1% is levied on the taxable income of natural persons exceeding JOD200,000.

Interest income. For natural persons, interest income is subject to withholding tax at a rate of 5%. Banks are required to withhold at source the tax from the interest.

Other income. Net income realized by a resident of Jordan from foreign sources is taxable in Jordan at a rate of 10% if such income is generated from Jordanian monies or deposits.

Capital gains. Capital gains resulting from the sale of shares in Jordan are taxable at different rates.

For the sale of shares on the Amman Stock Exchange by natural persons, general partnerships, limited partnerships and nonresidents in Jordan, the buyer and seller are subject to income tax at a rate of 0.08% of the shares' sales price for each sales transaction. For other direct sales of shares by natural persons in

Jordan, capital gains tax is calculated based on either of the following:

- Graduated tax rates ranging from 0.5% to 5% applied to the gross sale consideration
- The domestic personal income tax rates, set forth in Rates, applied to the capital gains

For other direct sales of shares transactions by nonresident natural persons in Jordan, the Jordanian Income and Sales Tax Department (ISTD) may apply a withholding tax rate of 10% to the capital gains arising to the nonresident natural person from the transaction.

A tax rate of 10% applies to the capital gains from the sale of shares outside Jordan, provided that such gain is generated from Jordanian monies or deposits.

A national contribution tax of 1% may also be applicable if the capital gains exceed JOD200,000.

For residents, the capital gains tax should be due as part of the normal annual tax return filing process for the period in which the transaction occurs for residents.

For nonresidents, prior to the closing date of the transaction, a tax clearance certificate must be obtained from the ISTD, and the capital gains tax must be paid.

Deductions

Personal and family allowances. The following annual allowances are granted from 2020 onward.

	JOD
Personal allowance	9,000
Dependents allowance	9,000
Additional allowances for payments of medical expenses, educational expenses, rent, home loan interest or murabaha (interest paid by banks applying Islamic banking principles), technical services, engineering services and legal services	1,000 for individuals, 1,000 for spouses, and 1,000 for each child up to 3,000

Business deductions. In general, business expenses incurred in generating income are deductible. However, certain limitations apply.

Rates. Ordinary income earned by individuals in Jordan is subject to tax at the following graduated tax rates.

Annual taxable income Exceeding JOD	Not exceeding JOD	Rate %
0	5,000	5
5,000	10,000	10
10,000	15,000	15
15,000	20,000	20
20,000	1,000,000	30
1,000,000	—	30

For payments made by resident taxpayers to nonresidents for taxable services in Jordan, taxpayers must withhold 10% of gross payments. In addition, for payments made to corporate nonresidents, taxpayers must withhold a national contribution tax at the rate applicable to the sector of the service provider ranging between 1% and 7%. For payments made to individual nonresidents that are in excess of JOD200,000, taxpayers must withhold a 1% national contribution tax. The withholding tax and national contribution tax must be remitted to the tax authorities within 30 days after the due date or payment date, whichever is earlier, and are final taxes.

For payments made by resident taxpayers to certain resident individual and corporate service providers, such as engineers, auditors or lawyers, taxpayers must withhold 5% of gross payments and remit this withholding tax to the tax authorities within 30 days after the due date or payment date, whichever is earlier.

Relief for losses. Taxpayers may carry forward losses up to five years to offset profits if the losses are supported by proper accounting records, are acknowledged by the tax assessor and relate to taxable sources of income.

B. Other taxes

Jordan does not levy net worth tax, inheritance tax or gift tax.

C. Social security

Social security contributions are levied at a rate of 21.75% on gross salary except overtime. The employer's share is 14.25%, and the employee's share is 7.5%. The social security system provides retirement and death benefits as well as certain benefits for work-related injuries.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year is the calendar year. Tax returns must be filed in Arabic using a prescribed form within four months after the end of each fiscal year. The total amount of tax due must be paid at the time of filing.

Married individuals are taxed jointly or separately, at the taxpayers' election, on all types of taxable income.

E. Tax relief

Under the law, foreign income tax is considered a deductible expense for income tax purposes. However, if a double tax treaty exists between the foreign country and Jordan, the provisions of the treaty may apply.

F. Temporary visas

All visitors must obtain entry visas to visit Jordan.

The following temporary visas are available to foreign nationals who want to enter Jordan:

- Transit visa, which is valid for a maximum of 48 hours.
- Business visit visa, which is granted to foreign nationals who intend to attend meetings and training courses in Jordan. The visa is valid for one to three months and may be renewed once.

- Student visa, which is valid for the period that the foreign national is attending an educational institution in Jordan.
- Medical visa, which is valid for the time required to complete the medical treatment.
- Tourist visa, which is valid for three months.

Nationals of Australia, Canada, the European Union, the United Kingdom and the United States may obtain a business visit visa and a tourist visa on entry. Other nationalities are required to obtain the approval of the Ministry of Interior before entry.

In general, these visas may be applied for either in the foreign national's home country or in Jordan. Temporary visas may be renewed once for three additional months.

G. Work and residency permits

Individuals of all nationalities must apply for work and residency permits if they want to work in Jordan, with a priority given to Arab nationals. Work and residency permits are issued with the approval of the Ministry of Labor and the Ministry of Interior.

An applicant may not begin working in Jordan before obtaining work and residency permits. Work and residency permits may not be transferred from one employer to another; therefore, if an employee changes his or her employer, the previous work and residency permits must be canceled, and the employee must apply for new work and residency permits.

The work and residency permits are valid for one year and may be renewed on an annual basis.

As a prerequisite to obtain work and residency permits, the Ministry of Labor requires the employer to submit a bank letter of guarantee to the order of the Ministry of Labor for each expatriate employee seeking work and residency permits in Jordan.

Under the Jordanian Labor Law, certain occupations are exclusively reserved to Jordanians and may not be filled by non-Jordanians, such as those in the fields of medicine, engineering, accounting and administration, as well as clerical work, such as data entry and secretarial work, warehousing, hairdressing, teaching, and mechanical and car repair type of work.

Foreign investors may engage in almost any type of economic activity. In general, Jordan does not impose limitations on foreign investments. Except for certain sectors, including construction and trade, in which foreign ownership may not exceed 50%, non-Jordanians may have full ownership in any economic project in Jordan. Full ownership by a foreign investor is permitted in the following sectors:
- Agriculture
- Hotels
- Health care
- Mining
- Industrial
- Telecommunications

H. Family members

The spouse of a foreign national who has a work permit in Jordan does not automatically receive the same type of work permit as the spouse holding the work permit. He or she must file independently of the primary work-permit holder if he or she also wants to work in Jordan.

Because the legislative system of Kazakhstan is in a state of development and is subject to frequent and not always predictable changes, readers should obtain updated information before engaging in transactions.

The average exchange rate for the first half of the 2021 calendar year was KZT427 = USD1.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are taxed on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxed on Kazakhstan-source income only, regardless of where it is paid. Income is deemed to be from a Kazakhstan source if it is derived from work performed in Kazakhstan. Kazakhstan-source income also includes, but is not limited to, interest income from residents and nonresidents having a permanent establishment in Kazakhstan and dividends from resident legal entities.

For tax purposes, individuals are considered residents if they are present in the country not less than 183 days in any consecutive 12-month period ending in the current tax year.

There is a separate investment residency program offered by the Astana International Financial Centre (AIFC; a hub for foreign and local investors and various financial, market and ancillary service providers that establishes a common law as the governing law within the AIFC as well as a legal framework similar to those of well-known international financial centers, such as the Dubai International Financial Centre) whereby individuals may qualify as AIFC investment residents if they meet the program requirements and if they are present in Kazakhstan for not less than 90 calendar days (including the days of arrival and departure) in any consecutive 12-month period ending in the current tax period.

Kazakhstan citizens or residence permit holders are always considered residents of Kazakhstan if their center of vital interests is located in Kazakhstan. The center of vital interests is deemed to be located in Kazakhstan if all of the following conditions are fulfilled simultaneously:
• The individual is a Kazakhstan citizen or has permission to live in Kazakhstan on a permanent basis (residence permit).
• The spouse and/or close relatives of the individual reside in Kazakhstan.
• The individual and/or his or her spouse and/or his or her close relatives own, or otherwise have at their disposal, immovable property in Kazakhstan permanently available for residence.

Double tax treaties may provide different rules to determine tax residency.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Income from employment consists of all compensation, whether received in cash or in kind (including shares), subject to minor exceptions, regardless of the place of payment of such income.

Self-employment and business income. The income of Kazakh citizens engaged in self-employment activities (individual entrepreneurs) is subject to income tax.

Tax is levied on an individual's annual business income, which consists of gross income (less adjustments and deductions) less expenses incurred in earning such income. However, to deduct expenses, individual entrepreneurs must be specially registered with the tax authorities and provide supporting documentation for such expenses. The tax rates for self-employment income are the same as those applicable to employment income as set forth in Rates, except for individual entrepreneurs using a special taxation regime.

Investment income. In general, investment income is included in taxable income. The tax rates are set forth in Rates.

Certain investment income is exempt from tax (see Exempt income).

Exempt income. Certain items are exempt from tax, including but not limited to, the following:
• Business trip per diems within established norms and reimbursement of certain business trip expenses.
• Accommodation and meal expenses within established norms for rotators while they are at the work site.
• Transportation expenses incurred by the employer connected with the delivery of employees from their residing place (place of stay) in Kazakhstan to their workplace.
• Employee-related expenses (including reimbursement of employees' expenses) aimed at laboratory examination, provision of personal protective equipment, medical examinations, preventive vaccinations, medical supervision, treatment, isolation and hospitalization as a result of the introduction of restrictive measures and recognition of the disease as a pandemic by the decision of the Emergency Committee of the World Health Organization.

- The excess of the market value of the underlying shares covered by a stock option at the time of exercise over the exercise price of the option.
- Alimony.
- Medical expenses within established norms.
- Dividends and interest on securities if, at the time of the accrual of such dividends and interest, the securities are on the official list of a stock exchange operating in Kazakhstan (that is, the Kazakhstan Stock Exchange [KASE] and the Astana International Exchange [AIX]).
- Dividends received from a resident legal entity if all of the following conditions are satisfied simultaneously:
  - The shares or participating interests have been held for more than three years.
  - The resident legal entity is not a subsurface user for the period for which the dividends are paid.
  - At the date of payment of the dividends, not more than 50% of assets of the legal entity paying the dividends is attributable to the assets of a company that is not a subsurface user.

  If a resident legal entity paying dividends reduces its corporate income tax by 100% for activities, including those carried out under an investment contract, for which such reduction is provided, the exemption shall apply in the following order:
  - If the share of corporate income tax reduced by 100% in the total amount of calculated corporate income tax in general for a resident legal entity paying dividends is 50% or more, the exemption does not apply.
  - If the share of corporate income tax reduced by 100% in the total amount of calculated corporate income tax in general for a resident legal entity paying dividends is less than 50%, the exemption of dividends paid by such legal entity applies to the entire amount of dividends.
- Capital gains derived through the open-bidding method from the sale of securities or participating interests in resident legal entities or consortiums if all of the following conditions are met simultaneously:
  - At the date of disposal, the shares or participating interests have been held for more than three years.
  - The legal entity or consortium that is the issuer of the shares or participating interests sold is not a subsurface user.
  - At the date of disposal, no more than 50% of the value of assets of the legal entity or consortium that is the issuer of the shares or participating interests sold is attributable to the assets of a subsurface user entity (entities).
- Capital gains derived from the securities that are listed on a stock exchange operating in Kazakhstan (the KASE or the AIX) at the date of realization.
- Interest income on deposits paid to tax resident individuals by licensed organizations in Kazakhstan.
- Income from Kazakhstan state securities.
- Ninety percent of the taxable income of the employee, if the income is less than 25 Monthly Calculation Index (MCI [KZT72,925 or approximately USD172]) per month.

Taxation of stock options. In general, income received in connection with employment (including stock received for free or at a discount) is taxable. However, there is a general tax code provision stating that the positive difference between the fair market value of share and option cost at the date of stock option execution is not considered taxable income (see Exempt income). Therefore, employer stock option plans require detailed analysis.

Capital gains. According to the Kazakhstan Tax Code, a capital gain is the difference between the sale price (disposal value) and the acquisition price (base cost) supported by documents.

Income derived from the disposal of shares acquired through the exercise of a stock option equals the positive difference between the sale price and the acquisition price. The acquisition price includes the exercise price of the option and the option premium.

In the case of sales of property located in blacklisted low-tax jurisdictions, the taxable amount is determined to be the full sale price (that is, the acquisition cost is nondeductible).

Capital gains are subject to tax at the rates set forth in Rates.

Capital transactions of individuals are not currently sufficiently addressed by Kazakhstan tax legislation. Consequently, it is not possible to deduct capital losses from capital gains for tax purposes, and capital losses may not be carried backward or forward to other tax periods. Also, modern financial instruments or digital assets, such as cryptocurrencies, are not envisaged by the current Tax Code, leading to the tax authorities' position that taxable income equals gross proceeds not allowing to deduct even proven cost basis. Further, no expenses are allowed for calculating taxable income even for basic financial instruments as shares or bonds. Therefore, income for tax purposes may significantly exceed income shown in financial statements prepared by a financial institution.

Controlled foreign companies. Individual tax residents who directly, indirectly or constructively control nonresident legal entities and/or other types of organizations subject to certain conditions have a 10% personal income tax obligation regarding the controlled foreign companies' retained earnings and separate tax reporting obligations.

Deductions. The minimum monthly salary (MMS), which amounts to KZT42,500 (approximately USD100) per month for 2021 for an employee who is tax resident, is deductible from an employee's monthly salary. If an employee's taxable income for a particular month is below the minimum monthly wage, the unused part of the deduction may be carried over to later months within the year. This does not apply when an individual changes his or her workplace during a tax period; that is, the individual may not offset an excess arising at the previous workplace against income earned at the new workplace except in cases of reorganizations.

The total amount of the standard deduction of 1 MMS for a calendar year may not exceed 12 times MMS (KZT510,000 or approximately USD1,200).

Other deductions include, but are not limited to, the following:
- Obligatory pension fund contributions
- Obligatory employee social medical insurance contributions
- Voluntary pension fund contributions made by the individual for his or her own benefit or by a tax agent under the Kazakhstan legislation on pension coverage
- Medical expenses supported by documents within the set limits
- Premiums on mortgage loans in specified banks

Rates. The following withholding tax rates apply to resident and nonresident individuals for various types of income.

Type of income	Rate (%)
Employment income of residents and nonresidents taxed by the local employer or host company	10
Income of residents who receive income under a service agreement	10
Income of advocates and private notaries	10
Capital gains, interest and winnings of residents	10
Dividends received by residents from Kazakhstan companies	5
Capital gains, dividends, interest and royalties paid to nonresidents by Kazakhstan legal entities	15
Any other Kazakhstan-source income paid to nonresidents that is not received from a tax agent (local legal entity)	20

Income received in foreign currency is converted into tenge at the market exchange rate determined on the last business day preceding the date of payment.

B. Other taxes

Property tax. Individuals are subject to property tax at rates ranging from 0.05% to 2% of the residual value of the property owned by them.

Vehicle tax. Individuals are subject to vehicle tax on vehicles owned by them, either up to a maximum annual tax of 200 MCI (KZT583,400 or approximately USD1,370), or 1% to 4% of MCI for each kilowatt of power for specific types of vehicles (aircraft and railway vehicles).

C. Social security

Social tax. A social tax is payable by employers. This tax is an additional direct tax imposed on employers that is not reserved for the payment of social benefits to employees.

The tax base for social tax equals the employer's expenses related to employees' income.

Exemptions from social tax include, but are not limited to, the following:
- Payments made through grants
- Obligatory employee contributions to the Social Medical Insurance Fund
- Obligatory pension fund contributions

Employers must pay social tax at a flat rate of 9.5% of gross income, less allowed exemptions. The minimum tax base for social tax per employee is 1 MMS.

Monthly social tax liability is reduced by the monthly amount of obligatory social insurance contributions (see Obligatory social insurance contributions).

Social tax must be remitted to the state budget on a monthly basis by the 25th of the month following the tax period.

Obligatory pension fund contributions. Obligatory pension fund contributions of 10% of the gross salaries of employees (Kazakhstan citizens, citizens of the Eurasian Economic Union and foreign citizens holding a Kazakhstan residence permit) must be withheld and remitted to the Unified Accumulative Pension Fund by the employer on a monthly basis. For 2021, income received in excess of 50 MMS (KZT2,125,000 or approximately USD5,000) per month is not subject to obligatory pension fund contributions. Obligatory pension fund contributions are deductible for personal income tax and social tax purposes.

Under the Kazakhstan Law on Pension Coverage, employers must also make at their own expense professional pension fund contributions at a rate of 5% of the gross salaries of employees of certain professions in 17 industry sectors, including, but not limited to, mining, oil and gas, pharmacy, and consumer good manufacturing.

Tax agents who pay income to individuals under civil contracts must, in addition to 10% personal income tax, withhold and pay 10% pension fund contributions on the gross amount of that income.

Obligatory social insurance contributions. Employers must make social insurance contributions, which is a part of the social tax, at a rate of 3.5% on income paid to employees (Kazakhstan citizens, repatriated ethnic Kazakhs, citizens of the Eurasian Economic Union and foreign citizens holding a Kazakhstan residence permit).

In 2021, social insurance contributions are not charged on monthly income in excess of 7 MMS (KZT297,500 or approximately USD700). The minimum monthly tax base for social insurance contributions per employee is the MMS. Social insurance contributions are expected to be charged at a flat rate of 5% starting from 2025.

Obligatory social medical insurance contributions

Employers. Employers must make, at their own expense, employer contributions to the Fund of Social Medical Insurance on a monthly basis (applicable to Kazakhstan citizens, repatriated Kazakhs, citizens of the Eurasian Economic Union and foreign citizens holding a residence permit) in the following amounts:

- From 1 January 2020: 2% of the income paid by the employer to its employees
- From 1 January 2022: 3% of the income paid by the employer to its employees

Employees. Employers must withhold employee contributions to the Fund of Social Medical Insurance from income paid to employees (Kazakhstan citizens, repatriated ethnic Kazakhs, citizens of the Eurasian Economic Union and foreign citizens holding a Kazakhstan residence permit) and individuals receiving income under civil contracts at the rate of 2% of the employee's income.

These employee contributions are deductible for personal income tax and social tax purposes.

In 2021, income subject to employer and employee contributions to the Fund of Social Medical Insurance is capped at 10 MMS (KZT425,000 or approximately USD1,000) per month.

"Independent payers," including Kazakhstan citizens who left Kazakhstan, will also be liable to pay contributions in the amount of 5% of 1 MMS, starting from 1 January 2020. According to the legislation, "independent payers" are individuals who pay obligatory social medical insurance contributions by themselves (that is, in cases in which the contributions are not administered by an employer), including Kazakhstan citizens who left Kazakhstan.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Kazakhstan is the calendar year.

Tax filing by a tax agent. A tax agent is responsible for withholding and remitting income tax from payments made to resident and nonresident individuals.

If employment-related, Kazakhstan-source income is paid outside Kazakhstan, the local tax agent is generally still required to run a shadow payroll. Income is generally considered to be from a Kazakhstan source if it is paid for work performed in Kazakhstan and, accordingly, regardless of where it is paid, it is subject to tax in Kazakhstan.

Under the withholding mechanism, a tax agent withholds actual personal income tax on a monthly basis no later than the date on which the income is paid and remits the tax to the Kazakhstan state budget not later than 25 calendar days after the end of the month in which income was paid. The tax agent must file a personal income tax and social tax report, which includes pension fund contributions, professional pension fund contributions and social and medical insurance contributions, on a quarterly basis by the 15th of the second month following the reporting quarter.

There is also a special set of rules regulating the taxation of foreign travelers when the foreign service provider sends its employee to a Kazakhstan customer for a short period of time. The local legislation states that, for up to 183 calendar days, each foreign individual must report the salary attributed to the working days in Kazakhstan, even for several days. For this purpose, the individual is required to get an Individual Identification Number in Kazakhstan and file a personal income tax return with the possibility of treaty exemption (if a double tax treaty with Kazakhstan is available). If that threshold is met (that is, the foreign individual spent 183 or more calendar days in Kazakhstan), the local customer would become liable for taxation of the foreign employee's salary and run shadow payroll (that is, the local company takes the salary payment outside Kazakhstan and processes it via local payroll for Kazakhstan tax purposes). In this case, the local customer would need to get all the supporting documents. If the local customer fails to get these documents, the local customer would be required to apply personal income tax to 80% of the service fee charged by the foreign service provider whose employees are coming to Kazakhstan.

Tax filing by individuals. If there is no tax agent in Kazakhstan, or if specifically provided by law, resident and nonresident individuals are responsible for the calculation of personal income tax liabilities and filing a Kazakhstan tax return. The filing deadline for a Kazakhstan tax return is 31 March of the year following the reporting year, and the income tax liability, if any, must be settled within 10 calendar days after the filing deadline.

Kazakhstan tax returns must be filed by tax resident individuals, including but not limited to, the following:
- Individual entrepreneurs
- Individuals engaged in private practice, such as notaries, lawyers and enforcement officers
- Individuals who receive property income
- Individuals who receive income not taxed at the source of payment in Kazakhstan, including income outside Kazakhstan
- Kazakhstan citizens, repatriated Kazakhs and individuals with a residence permit having the following types of property:
  - Real estate, which is subject (or the rights to which are subject or the transaction of which is subject) to state or other registration (reporting) with the competent authority of a foreign state in accordance with the laws of that foreign state
  - Securities whose issuers are registered outside Kazakhstan
  - Shares in the authorized capital of legal entities registered outside Kazakhstan

Individuals who are tax nonresidents of Kazakhstan are not required to file a Kazakhstan tax return if their Kazakhstan-source income is subject to withholding in Kazakhstan.

The law provides for late payment interest for the late payment or nonpayment of tax due on taxable income.

Administrative sanctions for individuals. Administrative sanctions for individuals are discussed below.

The following are the sanctions for a failure to submit personal income tax returns by the deadline:
- First time: warning
- Repeated violation within a year: a fine of 15 MCI (KZT43,755 or approximately USD105)

The following are the sanctions for the concealment of taxable items:
- First time: a fine of 200% of tax payable for each concealed taxable item
- Repeated violation within a year: a fine of 300% of the tax payable for each concealed item

The following are the sanctions for the concealment of information about property outside Kazakhstan:
- First time: a fine of 100 MCI (KZT291,700 or approximately USD685)

- Repeated violation within a year: a fine of 200 MCI (KZT83,400 or approximately USD1,370)

Administrative responsibility for the abovementioned violations is imposed separately for each item of property. Failure to submit the personal income tax return in accordance with the Tax Code equals the concealment of the information about property outside Kazakhstan.

Depending on the amount of tax underpayment, certain violations may lead to criminal liability.

Administrative sanctions for payroll violations. The sanction for the understatement of taxes in tax returns is up to 80% of the understated amount of personal income tax and social tax.

The sanction for the non-withholding or underwithholding of taxes is up to 50% of the personal income tax that was not withheld.

The sanction for the non-remittance or underremittance of withheld taxes is up to 20 MCI (KZT58,340 or approximately USD140).

The following are the sanctions for a failure to submit personal income tax returns by the deadline:
- First time: warning
- Repeated violation within a year: fine of up to 70 MCI (KZT204,190 or approximately USD480)

The following are the sanctions for a failure to remit, untimely calculation and/or undercalculation, underwithholding and/or underpayment (underremittance) of obligatory pension contributions and obligatory professional pension contributions to the Unified Accumulative Pension Fund:
- First time: warning
- Repeated violation: up to 50% of the amount of non-remitted, untimely calculated and/or undercalculated, underwithheld and/or underpaid (underremitted) obligatory pension contributions and obligatory professional pension contributions

The following are the sanctions for the nonpayment (non-remittance) and untimely and/or underpayment (underremittance) of social contributions:
- First time: warning
- Repeated violation: up to 50% of the unpaid (non-remitted) and untimely and/or underpaid (underremitted) social contributions

The following are the sanctions for concealing taxable items:
- First time: a fine of 200% of tax payable for each concealed taxable item
- Repeated violation within a year: a fine of 300% of tax payable for each concealed item

Tax registration of foreign nationals in Kazakhstan. The following are the most common cases in which a foreign national must be registered as a taxpayer in Kazakhstan:
- When opening accounts with local banks
- On receiving Kazakh-source income not taxed at source in Kazakhstan
- On acquiring Kazakh tax resident status

- When appointed as the head of a resident legal entity in Kazakhstan or the head of a branch of a nonresident legal entity

Tax registration must take place at the foreigner's location of residence. By law, tax registration should take three business days. Tax registration can also be done online.

Universal declaring. Starting from 2021, Kazakhstan is gradually introducing universal declaring (UD) for certain categories offered to all Kazakhstan citizens, gradually adding different groups of people, starting with public officials. A major part of the population will participate in the UD starting in 2025. Declaration on assets and liabilities should be submitted by Kazakhstan citizens by the established deadline indicating, among other items, the following information:
- Immovable property (land, house and apartment)
- Vehicles (car, air transport and sea transport)
- Participation interest in the authorized capital of a legal entity
- Money on foreign bank accounts registered outside of Kazakhstan exceeding approximately EUR5,800 in total
- Participation in agreement on equity participation in the construction of real estate (mostly applicable within Kazakhstan)
- Investment gold
- Securities or derivative financial instruments
- Shares in open-end funds
- Objects of intellectual property and copyrights
- Accounts receivable or accounts payable (amounts due to the individual and/or financial institution specified in the respective document and that have not been paid yet)
- Property transferred to trust management
- Cash up to approximately EUR58,100
- Other property

On submission of declaration of assets and liabilities, income tax returns will have to be filed on an annual basis justifying changes in net wealth of the declarant.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Under the Tax Code, income tax paid outside Kazakhstan by tax residents may be credited against the income tax payable in Kazakhstan on the same income, but may not exceed the amount of Kazakhstan tax accrued. To apply for a foreign tax credit, a document confirming income received and income tax paid or withheld must be enclosed with the Kazakhstan tax return. The document must be issued and/or verified by the foreign tax authorities.

An individual receiving Kazakhstan-source income who meets the conditions of a double tax treaty may apply a treaty exemption if the individual provides one of the following types of documents confirming the residency status of an individual in a double tax treaty country issued by the competent tax authority:
- Original of the document verified by the competent state authority and legalized as per Kazakhstan legislation.
- Duly notarized copy of the document mentioned in the first bullet above. The notary signature and stamp should be legalized as per Kazakhstan legislation.

- Paper copy of the electronic document confirming the residency status published on the internet resource of the competent state authority.

F. Visas

Kazakhstan authorities issue the following categories of visas:
- Category A: diplomatic, official and investor
- Category B (for short-term stay): visa for business trips; visa for international road trips; visa for crew members of air, sea, and river vessels, and for train crews; visa for religious activities; visa for practical training or internships; visa for permanent residence in Kazakhstan; visa for private trips; visa for adoption of Kazakhstan citizens; tourist visa; transit visa and exit visa to leave Kazakhstan
- Category C (for long-term stay): visa for permanent residence in Kazakhstan of ethnic Kazakhs, visa for reuniting family, work visa, visa for missionary activity, visa for humanitarian reasons, education visa, visa for private trips (ethnic Kazakhs), visa for minors and visa for treatment

The visas under the categories listed above may be issued for a single or multiple entry, depending on the category and the type of visa. Exit visas may be issued only as a single visa.

Work visas (Category C) are issued to foreign individuals entering or located in Kazakhstan to perform work duties, as well as members of their families. In general, a work visa is issued based on a work permit. See Section G.

Business visas (Category B) are issued to foreign individuals arriving in Kazakhstan for business purposes (for example, negotiations, concluding contracts, provision of consultancy or audit services, provision of installation, repair or maintenance services and attending conferences, symposiums, forums, exhibitions and concerts).

In Kazakhstan, visas are issued by the Ministry of Internal Affairs (MIA) in Kazakhstan and, abroad, by Kazakhstan consulates (for example, the Consular Department of the Embassy of Kazakhstan). Business and work visas are issued based on a letter of invitation issued by a local host entity. The state duty for the execution of invitations is 0.5 of the MCI (KZT1,458.5 for 2021). The fee for issuing a visa ranges between USD20 to USD1,000, depending on the country of residence of the invited party and the type of visa sought. A visa should be issued within five business days.

An individual may obtain certain types of official business and private trip visas allowing single entry without a letter of invitation by submitting a written application to the Kazakhstan consular establishment in the respective country if he or she is a citizen of one of the following countries.

Under this visa-free regime, citizens of the above countries may enter and transfer in Kazakhstan without a visa for a period not exceeding 30 calendar days from the date of crossing Kazakhstan's border. If a foreign individual needs to stay in Kazakhstan for a longer period for business purposes, he or she should apply for a business or an investor visa. The investor visa is issued to certain categories of business immigration applicants and provides certain privileges.

Starting from 2020, temporary stay of foreign individuals arriving in Kazakhstan under the visa-free regime (including the above 57 jurisdictions) should not exceed 30 calendar days from the day of crossing the border of Kazakhstan and in total not more than 90 calendar days in each 180-calendar day period if other rules are not envisaged by the agreement concluded by Kazakhstan with the foreign country or the Government of Kazakhstan. This rule does not apply to those individuals who have a permit for temporary stay in Kazakhstan as described above. As a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, the visa-free regime with the above listed 57 jurisdictions is suspended until 31 December 2021.

Currently, as a result of pandemic and quarantine measures, the entry into Kazakhstan for foreigners is more challenging and complex, and a separate written approval from the Interdepartmental Commission (IC) chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister of Kazakhstan is required for foreign individuals who enter Kazakhstan for work purposes. Therefore, if the foreign individuals enter Kazakhstan for work or business or other purposes, the inviting company should first prepare an official request to the attention of the head of the administration of the respective city (city governor). Such request must contain a justification as to why the company needs the foreign employee. The letter will then be forwarded to the special IC for further consideration. Each request will be considered on a case-by-case basis by the special IC within five working days (in practice, it may take more time). If it is a positive decision, the IC issues the protocol containing the name of the company and foreign individual, and he or she will be able to enter Kazakhstan based on this protocol, provided all other visas and work permits are in place.

Post-arrival registration. Before 10 January 2020, as a general rule, foreign individuals arriving in Kazakhstan for more than five calendar days had to register at the MIA. However, this requirement has been replaced by the requirement of the inviting party obtaining a permit for temporary stay of a foreign citizen.

In addition, the inviting party must notify the MIA within three working days of arrival of the foreign individual in Kazakhstan and notify the MIA if the foreigner changes his or her temporary place of residence in Kazakhstan.

The records of immigrants are currently kept by the MIA based on the information provided by the inviting parties and the National Security Committee of Kazakhstan, and information from the border control of Kazakhstan.

A permit for temporary stay will allow the foreign individuals to stay for the certain period (for example, the length of the labor agreement), and it should be obtained by the inviting party. The permit for temporary stay is formalized based on the applications from the following:

- Individuals inviting foreign individuals for family reunion
- Individuals or legal entities having concluded labor agreements with the foreign individuals
- Education organizations
- Medical organizations
- Religious organizations
- Local authorities inviting individuals (business immigrants) for the performance of entrepreneurship activities

However, foreign individuals in possession of a visa issued after 1 July 2018 do not need to obtain a permit for temporary stay in Kazakhstan. Separately, the relevant data should be automatically recorded in the Berkut electronic database, based on the information provided in the letter of invitation. If foreign individuals enter Kazakhstan under a visa-free regime, the above described new rule should apply. The period of stay in Kazakhstan ends upon the expiration of the visa, after 30 calendar days under the visa-free regime or upon the end of the period indicated in the permit for temporary stay in Kazakhstan. Kazakhstan legislation provides for several sanctions for noncompliance with the immigration requirements. For further details, see Section H.

G. Work permits

Types of work permits. The following are the two types of permits allowing foreign individuals to work in Kazakhstan:

- A work permit for attraction of foreign labor force (the Work Permit).
- A permit issued to a foreign individual who independently arrived in Kazakhstan to work in a particular specialty (the Permit for Employment). The government approves the list of such specialties.

The employer obtains the Work Permit through the submission of the documents to the local authorities under two main procedures, which are the general regime and intra-corporate transfer.

General regime

Work Permit quota. Work Permits are issued by the local authorities within the quota allocated by the Ministry of Labor and Social Protection on an annual basis. The quota is the maximum number of foreign individuals who can be hired to work in Kazakhstan for different regions. The quota is mainly formed based on the annual applications of employers due by 1 October.

Ratio requirement. For the purpose of obtaining a Work Permit under the general regime, all foreign individuals are classified into the following categories:

- Category 1: Chief-executive officers (CEOs) and deputy CEOs of companies
- Category 2: Leaders of business divisions/departments
- Category 3: Professionals
- Category 4: Qualified workers
