There is a restriction on the number of foreign employees that can be hired by a Kazakhstan employer/local host entity, which is the so-called "ratio requirement." Currently, the total number of foreign employees of a Kazakhstan employer/local host entity should not exceed the following:

- 30% of the total number of the Category 1 and Category 2 employees.
- 10% of the total number of Category 3 and Category 4 employees.

An exemption from the ratio requirement applies to small business enterprises, government enterprises and agencies, self-employed foreign individuals, work permits issued within the limits of a quota by countries of origin if international agreements on cooperation in labor migration and social protection of working migrants ratified by Kazakhstan are in place, and representative offices and branches of foreign legal entities with at most 30 employees.

State duty. When obtaining or extending work permits, an employer is charged a state duty for the issuance or extension of the work permit. The amount of the duty is established by the government of Kazakhstan and depends on the type of business of the employer and the category of the foreign employee. The amount of state duty ranges from approximately USD950 to USD3,600, depending on the sector of the economy, category of the employee and validity period of the Work Permit.

Other conditions. To obtain a work permit, each foreign individual must meet the qualification requirements set by the rules.

A Work Permit under the general regime is issued for the following durations:

- Category 1: for one, two and three years with an annual extension for one, two or three years
- Category 2: for 12 months, with an annual extension for 12 months, but no more than 3 times
- Category 3: for 12 months, with an annual extension for 12 months, but no more than 3 times
- Category 4: for 12 months with no extension

Intra-corporate transfer. An intra-corporate transfer (ICT) is a temporary transfer of a foreign individual from a legal entity established in the territory of a member state of the World Trade Organization (WTO) other than Kazakhstan to its Kazakhstan branches, subsidiaries or representative offices.

A foreign individual engaged under an ICT remains employed by the home company, but should comply with the requirements of the host employer in terms of work schedule and health and safety requirements. The foreign individual should meet the respective qualification requirements and should have at least one year of work history in the entity established in a member state of the WTO.

Work Permits under ICT are issued free of state duties and separately from the quota for foreign labor.

Ratio requirement. For the purpose of obtaining a Work Permit under ICT, all foreign individuals are classified into the following:

- Specialists
- Managers
- Executives

Under the ratio requirement for ICT, the number of foreign employees should not exceed 50% of the total number of managers and specialists. No ratio requirement applies with respect to executives.

Other conditions. The local authorities issue the work permit under ICT for the transfer period, but for no more than 3 years (36 months) with a right of a one-time extension for 1 year (12 months).

However, before hiring a foreign specialist to Kazakhstan under ICT, the local host entity should complete a search for suitable candidates on the Kazakhstan labor market and obtain a work permit only if no candidates are found.

For each work permit for a manager or specialist received under ICT, the employer should fulfill one of the relevant special conditions (for example, creation of a new job for Kazakhstan citizens and retraining of Kazakhstan citizens). When hiring executives, no special conditions are imposed on the host company.

Work Permit exemptions. Certain categories of individuals are not required to obtain Work Permits. These include, among others, the following:

- Nationals of member countries of the Eurasian Economic Union, regardless of their position or the duration of their employment in Kazakhstan
- Individuals arriving in Kazakhstan on a business trip for a cumulative period not exceeding 120 calendar days per calendar year
- Business immigrants arriving in Kazakhstan to do business
- CEOs of local branch offices or representative offices of foreign companies as well as CEOs and deputy CEOs of local wholly foreign-owned companies
- CEOs of companies that have entered into agreements with the government of Kazakhstan to invest more than USD50 million in the country and CEOs of local companies running investment projects in key industries under agreements with the local state authority on investment
- Crew members of sea and river vessels, aircraft and railroads, and automobile transport
- Artists, film directors, conductors, choir masters, choreographers, sportspersons and coaches
- Foreign nationals engaged by participants or bodies of the International Finance Center of Astana
- Individuals working in the Astana Hub International technology park or hired by its participants in the positions of managers and specialists with higher education
- Managers and professionals with higher education working with either local companies that have entered into contracts to implement investment projects in priority areas or companies in the architecture, city planning and construction industry contracted by such investors, for a period until the end of the first year after the commissioning date of the project's facility, or as qualified workers in accordance with the list of occupations and employee numbers approved as part of investment contracts

- Employees of companies registered in one of Kazakhstan's 10 Free Economic Zones (FEZs) to implement projects worth more than KZT2,917,000 (in 2021) or companies contracted by a FEZ resident, for the period of construction and installation work in the FEZ and during the first year after the commissioning date of the project facility, in accordance with the list of employee categories and numbers adopted by a special committee of competent authorities
- Individuals working for a national managing holding (state-owned company) in positions not lower than the heads of structural units, having completed higher education and with supporting documents as required by legislation of Kazakhstan, and individuals hired by a national managing holding in the capacity of members of the board of directors

H. Sanctions for noncompliance with the immigration legislation

Kazakhstan legislation provides severe sanctions for inviting parties and foreign citizens for noncompliance with the migration legislation. The upper end of administrative sanctions applied to a company can reach USD6,900 (per foreign individual per violation). The worst-case scenario can include administrative custody for up to 15 days or administrative deportation of the individual from the country and a company being banned from engaging any foreigners for up to one year (that is, no issuance of a Work Permit and no acceptance of a letter of invitation from the company for a visa application). Foreign individuals are not allowed to enter Kazakhstan for five years after the administrative deportation from Kazakhstan.

I. Residence permits

Kazakhstan issues residence permits. No quota system is in effect for immigration into Kazakhstan under residency permits.

J. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The spouse of a holder of a Kazakhstan Work Permit does not automatically receive the same type of Work Permit. If he or she wishes to undertake employment, a Work Permit application must be filed independently.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally in Kazakhstan with their international driver's licenses. Foreign country driver's licenses are valid in Kazakhstan if they comply with 1968 Vienna Convention on road traffic. However, an official Russian or Kazakh translation of the foreign driver's license by a confirmed translator is required; therefore, it is advisable to have an international driver's license.

Kazakhstan has driver's license reciprocity with some of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) countries, including, but not limited to, Belarus, Kyrgyzstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and Uzbekistan.

A foreign individual may obtain a Kazakhstan driver's license after passing written, practical and medical examinations.

This chapter refers to changes brought about by the enactment of the Finance Act, 2021, which was assented on 29 June 2021.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals are subject to income tax on employment earnings if they meet either of the following conditions:

- They are resident during the time of employment, regardless of whether their duties are performed within or outside Kenya.
- For nonresidents, their employer is resident or has a permanent establishment in Kenya.

An individual is considered resident in Kenya if he or she has no permanent home in Kenya and is present in Kenya for 183 days or more during a fiscal year or for an average of more than 122 days in that year and in the two preceding years. If an individual has a permanent home in Kenya and spends any time in Kenya, he or she is considered resident.

It is irrelevant for tax purposes where an employment contract is signed or remuneration is paid.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Employment income includes directors' fees and almost all cash and noncash remuneration, allowances and benefits arising from employment. Taxable benefits arising from employment include the following:

- Housing. The taxable benefit from employer-provided housing equals the higher of rent paid by the employer or 15% of employment income excluding the value of housing premises. If the premises are provided under an agreement with a third party that is not at arm's length, the benefit is valued at the higher of the fair market rental value of the premises or the rent paid by the employer. If the employer owns the premises, the benefit is taxed at the fair market rental value of the premises.
- Education. Education fees paid by employers for their local or expatriate employees' relatives are taxable for income tax purposes if the employer has claimed the fees as a tax deduction.
- Motor vehicles. The value of the benefit of an employer-provided motor vehicle is the higher of 2% per month of the initial capital expenditure by the employer on the car or prescribed rates provided by the Commissioner of Income Tax, depending on the engine capacity. If an employee is provided with a leased or hired car, the taxable benefit is the cost of lease or hire of the vehicle. For employees who have restricted use of motor vehicles, the Commissioner determines a lower rate of the benefit depending on the usage of the motor vehicle if the Commissioner is satisfied based on proof provided by the employer that use of the motor vehicle is restricted.

- Furniture. The taxable value of a furniture benefit provided by an employer equals 1% of the cost to the employer.
- Loans. The benefit from employer loans is taxable to the employer as fringe benefit tax for loans granted after 11 June 1998 and for loans granted before that date if the terms or conditions of the loan have been changed since 11 June 1998. The tax is imposed on the benefit at the resident corporate tax rate of 25% (from 25 April 2020) and 30% (for subsequent years) and is payable by the 10th day of the month following the imposition of the tax by the employer. For loans granted on or before 11 June 1998, the benefit is taxable to the employee as a low interest rate benefit. The benefit is valued at the difference between the interest rate on the employer's loan and the rate prescribed by the Commissioner of Income Tax.
- Employer-provided stock options. The value of the benefit from employer-provided stock options under a scheme that is registered with the Commissioner of Income Tax as a collective-investment scheme, as defined by the Capital Markets Authority Act, is the difference between the market value per share and the offer price per share on the date on which the option is granted by the employer. The benefit is deemed to accrue to the employee at the end of the vesting period. If the equity scheme is not registered, the taxable benefit is the higher of the cost to the employer or the fair market value.

Specific exemptions include the following:
- The cost of medical services or medical insurance borne by the employer on behalf of full-time employees or their beneficiaries. Medical insurance should be provided through an insurance company that is approved by the Commissioner of Insurance in Kenya.
- Employer contributions to accredited pension or provident fund schemes if the employer is subject to tax in Kenya.
- Withdrawal benefits from a pension or provident fund. The limit is KES60,000 for each year worked, up to a maximum of KES600,000.
- The first KES300,000 of annual pension income.
- Refunds from National Social Security Fund contributions plus interest. The limit is KES60,000 for each year worked, up to a maximum of KES600,000.
- For non-citizens recruited outside Kenya and their families, the cost of passage on joining the company, for annual leave and for departure.
- The first KES2,000 paid to an employee per day as an allowance while on official duty. This amount is deemed to be a reimbursement and, consequently, not taxable.
- Noncash benefits, up to a maximum of KES36,000 per year.
- Meals served in canteens and cafeterias operated by an employer or provided by a third party that is a registered taxpayer (regardless of whether the meals are in the employer's or the third party's premises) if the value of the meals does not exceed KES48,000 per employee per year.

Income earned by an individual who is registered under the Ajira Digital Program for three years, beginning 1 January 2020, is exempt from tax on payment by such individual of a registration fee of KES10,000 per year.

An amount withdrawn from the National Housing Development Fund to purchase a house by a contributor who is a first-time homeowner is exempt from tax.

The first KES150,000 per month for persons with disabilities is not taxable. In addition, up to KES50,000 per month of costs relating to health care services and facilities for persons with disabilities are allowable deductions for tax purposes.

Self-employment and business income. All income accrued in or derived from Kenya is subject to income tax. For a resident, this includes profits from a business carried on both inside and outside Kenya.

Business income includes income derived from any trade, profession or vocation, as well as from manufacturing or other related operations. A partnership is transparent for tax purposes, with the individual partners taxed on their shares of partnership profits.

Business profits and losses are determined using normal commercial methods, matching expenses with income from similar activities and using the accrual method of accounting.

Initially, a business may select any accounting period, but generally must continue using the same accounting date thereafter. The Domestic Taxes Department must be notified of a change in the accounting date. All individuals and unincorporated businesses must have a 31 December year-end.

Effective from 1 January 2021, digital service tax (DST) is applicable on income accruing from business carried on over the internet or an electronic network, including through a digital marketplace, at a rate of 1.5% of the gross transactional value. Tax agents for the collection of DST will be appointed by the Commissioner-General. Effective from 1 July 2021, income from business carried out over the internet by a resident is excluded from DST because this is taxed as business income. A person subject to DST is required to submit a return and pay the tax due to the Commissioner on or before the 20th day of the month following the end of the month in which the digital service is offered.

Investment income. Dividends and interest income from investments in Kenya are subject to a withholding tax in the year received. For residents, the tax rates are 5% on dividends and 15% on interest.

The Tax Laws (Amendment) Act, 2020 expands the definition of interest to include all interest received by a resident individual.

The principal sources of exempt investment income are the following:

- Interest derived from savings accounts held with the Post Office Savings Bank

- For each resident individual, up to KES300,000 of gross interest derived from investments in housing bonds, except for a 10% withholding tax deducted at source
- Interest and dividend income accruing to a resident from investments outside Kenya
- Interest income from Infrastructure Bonds with a maturity of at least three years

Residential rental income tax. Effective from January 2016, landlords earning annual gross residential rental income of more than KES144,000 per year (KES12,000 per month) and not exceeding KES10 million per year (KES833,333 per month) must pay residential rental income tax at a rate of 10% of gross receipts. (Also, see the last paragraph of this section.) However, a person may make an application in writing to the Commissioner of Domestic Taxes to be excluded from this tax, at least three months before the end of the year of income. If the exclusion is granted, the net rental income is taxable at the graduated tax rates (see Rates). The exclusion from residential rental income tax takes effect in the subsequent year of income. Effective from 1 January 2021, the thresholds for income qualifying for residential rental income tax increase to between KES288,000 (KES24,000 per month) and KES15 million per year (KES1,250,000 per month).

Capital gains. Effective from 1 January 2015, Capital Gains Tax applies to gains realized by companies and individuals on the transfer of property located in Kenya. The general tax rate is 5%. The gain equals the amount by which the transfer value exceeds the adjusted cost of the property. The adjusted cost equals the sum of the acquisition cost of the property and other costs incurred subsequently to enhance or preserve the property, if such costs had not been previously allowed for tax purposes. Effective from 1 January 2016, gains on transfers of securities traded on a securities exchange are not taxable.

Also, see Stamp duties in Section B.

Deductions and reliefs. An individual not resident in Kenya for tax purposes is not entitled to any tax relief. Expatriate employees of accredited regional offices of foreign corporations who spend at least 120 days during the fiscal year working outside Kenya may deduct one-third of their total income.

Deductible expenses. Individuals may deduct the following expenses in computing taxable income:

- Contributions to a registered pension or provident fund, up to a maximum of KES240,000 per year
- Interest, up to a maximum of KES300,000 per year, on borrowings to finance the purchase of owner-occupied residential property

Reliefs. Resident taxpayers are granted the following reliefs against tax payable:

- Personal relief in the amount of KES28,800 per year.
- Insurance relief (including education and health insurance) in the amount of 15% of premiums paid, up to a maximum relief of KES60,000 per year. Effective from 1 January 2022, National Hospital Insurance Fund (NHIF) contributions will also qualify for insurance relief.

- Affordable housing relief of 15% of an employee's contribution, up to a maximum relief of KES108,000 per year. This applies to individuals who are saving for a purchase under an approved affordable housing scheme, have applied and are awaiting the allocation of a house.

Business deductions. In general, expenses are not deductible unless incurred wholly and exclusively to produce taxable income.

Accounting depreciation is not deductible, but capital allowances are available. A first-year investment deduction of 50% of qualifying expenditure on the following is allowed:
- Manufacturing premises
- Plant
- Electric power generating projects with capacity to supply the national grid or to transform and distribute electricity through the national grid
- Hotel buildings
- Farm works

The Finance Act, 2021 revised the investment deduction to 100%, effective from 1 January 2022. The following are the conditions for the revised deduction:
- The cumulative investment in the preceding three years for investment outside Nairobi and Mombasa Counties is worth at least KES2 billion. If the cumulative value of the investment for the preceding three years of income was KES2 billion on or before 25 April 2020 and the applicable rate of investment deduction was 150%, that rate shall continue to apply for the investment made on or before the 25 April 2020.
- The investment value outside Nairobi City County and Mombasa County in the year of income is at least KES250 million.
- The person has made an investment in a special-economic zone.

An accelerated investment deduction of 150% also applies on capital expenditure of at least KES5 billion incurred on the construction of bulk storage and handling facilities for supporting Standard Gauge Railway operations. This deduction is extended to individuals who incur the expenditure on or before 31 December 2022.

Capital allowances are available under the straight-line method for other industrial buildings and hotels on the amount remaining after subtracting the investment deductions, at the following rates:
- 25% for manufacturing
- 10% for commercial buildings, which include buildings used as an office, shop, showroom, godown (warehouse), storehouse or warehouse used for storage of raw materials for the manufacturing of finished or semi-finished goods
- 25% for hotel buildings
- 10% for hostels and buildings used for educational and training purposes

A first-year deduction of 50% applies to capital expenditure on farm works and machinery used for manufacturing and the residual value is to be claimed at 25% in equal installments in the subsequent years, effective from 1 January 2022. The rates for plant and machinery are 10% or 25%, according to the type, using the straight-line method, effective from 1 January 2022. The rate for software is 25%, and the rate for telecommunication equipment is 10%, both using the straight-line method. The rate for the irrevocable right to use fiber optic cable is increased from 5% to 10%. A deduction may be claimed with respect to concessionary arrangements using the straight-line method over the period of the concession.

The rate for motor vehicles and heavy, earth-moving equipment is 25% claimable using the straight-line method. The claimable value is restricted to KES3 million except for commercial vehicles, which have no restrictions. The rate for computers and peripherals, computer hardware and software, calculators, copiers and duplicating machines is 25% using the straight-line method. The rate for furniture and fittings is 10% using the straight-line method. The rate is 10% for other machinery using the straight-line method.

Other deductible capital expenditure includes expenses incurred for scientific research and development, the prevention of soil erosion by a farmer, the development of agricultural land and structural alterations to rental premises. Realized foreign-exchange losses on capital borrowings are also deductible.

Deductions are allowed for employer and employee contributions to registered pension and provident funds, with certain restrictions.

Rates. The following tax rates apply for employment, self-employment and business income (sole proprietors and partnerships), effective from 1 January 2021.

Taxable income KES	Tax rate %	Tax due KES	Cumulative tax due KES
First 288,000	10	28,800	28,800

Income category	Rate (%)
Reinsurance premiums (except for reinsurance premiums with respect to aircraft)	5

* This ordinarily refers to the sale of equity in companies operating in the extractive (mining or petroleum) industry. The amount of taxable gain is usually based on the value of immovable property held by the company.

Relief for losses. Tax-adjusted profits and losses from the following specified sources must be categorized separately:

- Agricultural activities
- Rental or other use of immovable property
- Services rendered (including employment)
- A wife's employment and professional income (including self-employment, rent, dividend and interest income)
- Surplus funds withdrawn or refunded to an employer from a registered pension or provident fund
- Other business activities

Profits are aggregated. Losses may be carried forward to offset future profits from the same specified source without monetary limits. The Finance Act, 2021 removed the 10-year limit for the tax-losses carryforward for losses incurred from the 2021 year of income.

B. Other taxes

Property tax. Kenya does not levy property tax.

Stamp duties. Property transfers are subject to stamp duties at a rate of 4% on urban property and a rate of 2% on rural property.

C. Social security

The only social security tax levied in Kenya is the National Social Security Fund (NSSF). The NSSF is a statutory savings scheme to provide for retirement. The rate of contribution is 5% of an employee's salary, with employers and employees each required to pay up to a maximum monthly amount of KES200.

New NSSF legislation (the NSSF Act 2013) was enacted on 24 December 2013 to replace the NSSF Act Cap 258. The new legislation was scheduled to take effect on 31 May 2014, but the effective date for the legislation was delayed. The employer and the employee will each be required to contribute 6% of the employee's monthly pensionable earnings, subject to defined limits. Contributions into the scheme are divided into Tier I and Tier II categories. All Tier I contributions will be remitted to NSSF while Tier II contributions will be made to either the NSSF or a registered private pension scheme of which the employee is a valid member. A transitional arrangement will be in place in the lead-up to the full implementation of the Tier 1 contributions.

Before 1 April 2015, individuals earning more than KES1,000 per month were required to contribute to the National Hospital Insurance Fund (NHIF). The monthly contributions depended on the level of income and ranged from KES30 per month to KES320. Effective from 1 April 2015, individuals are required to contribute NHIF at rates on a graduated scale with the lowest contribution being KES150 and the highest contribution being KES1,700.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Employee withholding. For employees, tax is withheld at source under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system.

Installment tax. Individuals who have income other than employment income must pay estimated tax in four equal installments during the financial year. The payments are due on the 20th day of the fourth, sixth, ninth and twelfth months.

Individuals with no income other than employment income that is taxed at source are not required to pay installment tax. Individuals whose total annual tax payable does not exceed KES40,000 are also exempt from paying installment tax, but are required to pay the tax balance.

Final returns. Individuals subject to employment tax in Kenya are required to file a self-assessment return by 30 June following the end of the preceding calendar year.

Assessment. A taxpayer may be assessed further after a self-assessment return is filed. However, for most taxpayers, the self-assessment is final.

Married couples. Married women have an option to file self-assessment returns with respect to their income from all sources or to aggregate their income with the income of their husbands.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Foreign taxes are deductible from taxable income as an expense. Kenyan citizens working outside Kenya are allowed a tax credit for foreign tax paid on the following types of income earned outside Kenya:

- Income from employment
- Income earned by artists and sportsmen

Kenya has entered into double tax treaties with the following countries.

Canada
Denmark
France
Germany
India
Iran
Korea (South)
Norway
Qatar
Seychelles
South Africa
Sweden
United Arab Emirates
United Kingdom
Zambia

In general, the treaties above provide that foreign income taxes may be offset against equivalent Kenyan taxes payable on the same income.

F. Temporary visas and passes

All visitors other than East African citizens must have visas to enter Kenya, unless they are from a country for which visa requirements have been eliminated. These countries include, among others, most of the British Commonwealth countries, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guyana, Namibia and San Marino. Visitors from these countries are issued visitors' passes at the point of entry. In addition, visas are not required for holders of a re-entry pass to Kenya as well as transit passengers continuing their journey by the same or first connecting aircraft if they hold valid onward or return documentation and do not leave the airport.

Visas must be obtained by applying online via the e-visa portal before entry into Kenya. Foreign nationals wishing to visit Kenya are advised to confirm the entry requirements before departing from their home countries.

Visas are usually granted without delay. They are issued for a maximum period of three months and may be extended for an additional three months on application. A foreign national wishing to stay in Kenya for longer than six months must have an entry permit (see Section G).

The types of temporary visas and passes issued by the government of Kenya are described below.

Visas. The following types of visas are issued:
- Transit visa, which is issued to individuals in transit whose nationalities require visas to enter Kenya. It is valid for a maximum of three days. A fee of USD20 is payable on application.
- Ordinary visa, which is issued for single or multiple entries to persons whose nationalities require visas to enter Kenya for visits or residence. A fee of USD50 is payable for a single journey visa and USD100 for a multiple journey visa.
- Diplomatic visa, which is issued free of charge to holders of diplomatic passports on official business.
- Courtesy/Official visa, which is issued free of charge to holders of official or service passports on official visits.
- East Africa Tourist visa, which is a joint tourist visa entitling holders multiple entries to and between Kenya, Rwanda and Uganda for the purpose of tourism. It is valid for 90 days. A fee of USD100 is payable on application.

Passes. The following types of passes are issued:
- Visitors' pass, which is issued to foreign nationals who wish to enter Kenya for the purpose of holiday, visit or other temporary purpose as may be approved by the immigration officer.
- Dependents' pass, which is issued to accompanying family members of foreign nationals with work/entry permits.
- Students' pass, which is issued to foreign students who wish to study in Kenya.
- Internship or research pass, which is issued to individuals seeking to enter or remain in Kenya for the purposes of internship or academic research.
- Prohibited immigrants' pass, which is issued to foreign nationals who do not have valid entry documents or to foreign nationals who have contravened certain immigration rules. These individuals must make an application before arriving at the point of entry.
- Transit pass, which is issued to individuals in transit to a destination outside Kenya.
- Re-entry pass, which is issued to dependent pass holders to allow them multiple entries into the country.
- Special pass, which is issued to foreign nationals wishing to work in Kenya on a short-term assignment. A special pass is valid for three months and may be extended once.

G. Work permits and self-employment

Certain classes of entry permits allow foreign nationals to work in Kenya and are generally referred to as work permits. An entry permit that allows a foreign national to work in Kenya is obtained by an employer on behalf of a foreign national. Employers are required to justify employment of a foreign national instead of a Kenyan. If the foreign national changes employment, his or her new employer is responsible for obtaining a new work permit.

Individuals requiring entry permits will enter Kenya on visas or visitors' passes while their applications for the permits are being processed, but they cannot engage in any work-related or income-generating activities. Foreign nationals who are over 18 years of age and stay in the country for more than 90 days are required to register as foreigners.

Different classes of entry permits are issued in Kenya including permits for the following categories of expatriates:

- Class A, which is issued to a person engaged in prospecting for minerals and mining in Kenya.
- Class B, which is issued to a person who intends to engage, alone or in partnership, in the business of agriculture or animal husbandry in Kenya.
- Class C, which is issued to a member of a prescribed profession who intends to practice that profession in Kenya, alone or in partnership.
- Class D, which is issued to a person who is offered specific employment by a specific employer.
- Class F, which is issued to a person who intends to engage, alone or in partnership, in specific manufacturing in Kenya.
- Class G, which is issued to a person who intends to engage, alone or in partnership, in a specific trade, business or profession (other than a prescribed profession) in Kenya.
- Class I, which is issued to a person who intends to engage, alone or in partnership, in approved religious and charitable activities.
- Class K, which is issued to a person who is not less than 35 years of age; and has in his or her own right and at his or her full and free disposition an assured annual income of not less than USD24,000.
- Class M, which is issued to a refugee recognized by the government of Kenya. The permit is issued gratis, and a recognition letter from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the Department of Refugee Affairs is required.

The permits are issued only to persons whose employment, business or presence will benefit the country.

A foreign national wishing to carry out business in Kenya must obtain the necessary licenses and registrations required and must have sufficient capital or resources for investment.

H. Residence permits

Foreign nationals wishing to reside permanently in Kenya must apply for permanent residence. To obtain permanent residence, foreign nationals must satisfy the requirements contained in the Kenya Citizenship and Immigration Act.

The Permanent Residence section of the Kenya Department of Immigration issues residence permits.

I. Family and personal considerations

Vaccinations. Individuals entering Kenya must have International Immunization Certificates. They should also present negative COVID-19 results from tests taken within 96 hours of their travel to Kenya.

Family members. Family members of entry permit holders are entitled to dependents' passes. Any dependent wishing to take up employment must obtain a separate work or entry permit.

Marital property regime. Kenyan law does not provide for a community property or a similar marital property regime.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals with international driver's licenses or driver's licenses issued in a British Commonwealth country may drive in Kenya for a maximum period of 90 days. Foreign nationals living in Kenya for longer than 90 days must obtain Kenyan driver's licenses.

Holders of international driver's licenses or licenses issued in British Commonwealth countries may obtain Kenyan driver's licenses on application.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are subject to income tax on worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to income tax on Korean-source income only. A resident is a person who maintains a domicile or residence in Korea for 183 days or longer.

A foreign national who is a tax resident in Korea and who has resided in Korea for 5 years or less during the preceding 10 years as of the end of the tax year is regarded as a nonpermanent resident and only taxed on Korean-source income unless any of the foreign-source income is paid in Korea or remitted into Korea.

Income subject to tax. Personal income is divided into the following categories:

- Composite Income, which includes employment income (wages, salaries and similar income), interest income, dividends, business income (including rental income), pension income and other income
- Severance income
- Capital gains

Employment income. Employment income includes the following payments in addition to basic monthly payroll:

- Reimbursement for personal expenses, entertainment expenses and other allowances provided to the employee that are not considered legitimate business expenses of the employer
- Various allowances for family, position, housing, health, overtime and other similar payments made to the employee
- Insurance premiums paid by the company on behalf of the employee

The following are nontaxable items:

- Automobile allowances up to KRW200,000 a month, paid to employees for business use of their own cars, instead of reimbursements of actual automobile operating expenses
- Meal allowances up to KRW100,000 a month, paid to employees who are not provided meals or other food through internal meal services or similar methods

- Salary paid for providing labor abroad up to KRW1 million a month (or KRW3 million a month for providing labor on a pelagic fishing vessel or a vessel serving overseas routes, in an overseas construction site or in certain other circumstances)
- Premiums for group term life insurance up to KRW700,000 per year if either of the following conditions is satisfied:
  - The insurance proceeds are paid as a result of an employee's death, injury or disease; the employee is both the insured party and beneficiary of the insurance contract; and the paid-in premiums are not refundable at the maturity of the policy or the amounts that are refundable do not exceed the amount of the paid-in premiums at the maturity.
  - The insurance proceeds are paid as a result of a claim for damages caused by business activities of employees that are not willfully (grossly) negligent.
- Qualified housing benefits paid to employees who are not executives or executives who are not shareholders if all of the following conditions are satisfied:
  - The company made a contract directly with the landlord.
  - The company made a housing payment directly to the landlord.
  - All of the rents are paid by the employer, and no portion is borne by the assignee.
  - The housing provided is not a serviced residence or a hotel.

Employment income is classified into two different types; the reporting method differs for each type.

The first type of employment income is the earned income that is paid and deducted by a Korean entity for corporate tax purposes. Salaries paid by a foreign entity but charged back (or to be charged back under a prior agreement) to the Korean entity fall under this category. A Korean entity has monthly income and social tax withholding and reporting obligations with respect to such income.

The second type of income is the earned income that is paid by a foreign entity but not claimed as a corporate deduction in Korea by any Korean entities. The individual recipient, not the payer, is responsible for declaring the income on a Composite Income tax return annually or through a registered taxpayers' association on a monthly basis. For income declared through a registered taxpayers' association in a timely manner, the individual taxpayer is entitled to a tax credit of 5% of the adjusted tax liability (see Section D).

Previously, the above types of income were known as Class A income and Class B income, respectively, under the Korea tax law. However, this terminology has been abolished. Other than the terminology change, the reporting method remains the same.

Foreign employees' employment income earned under the following conditions is exempt from personal income taxes:

- Foreigners assigned to Korea under bilateral agreements between governments are exempt from taxes on employment income received from either government without limitation.
- Certain foreign technicians who render services to domestic companies or persons are exempt from 50% of taxes on the relevant employment income for five years, from the date on which they began to render employment services in Korea up to the month in which five years have passed. The 50% exemption applies to foreign technicians who render employment services in Korea for the first time on or before 31 December 2021. The following are the technicians who qualify for the 50% exemption:

— A person who provides technology in Korea under engineering technology license agreements prescribed by the Ministerial Decree of the Tax Incentives Limitation Law (TILL).
— A person who works as a researcher at a specified research institution subject to the requirements prescribed by the Ministerial Decree of the TILL.
— A person who specializes in materials, parts and equipment sectors designated by Presidential Decree is exempt from 70% of taxes for the first three years from the date on which he or she began to render employment services in Korea up to the month in which three years have passed and is exempt from 50% of taxes for the remaining two years. This exemption applies to a foreign technician who renders employment services in Korea for the first time on or before 31 December 2022.

To enjoy the tax exemption mentioned above, foreign engineers must submit an application for the tax exemption to the tax authorities by the 10th day of the month following the month in which the services are first rendered.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employment and business income is income derived from the continuous operation of a business by an individual and includes all income derived from businesses and personal services, including services provided by the following individuals:

- Entertainers
- Athletes
- Lawyers, accountants, architects and other professionals
- Persons with expert knowledge or skills in science and technology, business management or other fields

Business income is combined with the taxpayer's other Composite Income and taxed at the progressive tax rates (see Rates).

Financial income. Interest income and dividends are generally categorized as Composite Income and are taxed at the rates set forth in Rates. However, dividends paid by domestic companies to minority shareholders and interest income are subject to a 15.4% (including local income tax) withholding tax, and no additional tax reporting is required if the total annual amount of the dividends and interest income is KRW20 million or less.

Korean-source interest income and dividends of nonresidents that are neither substantially related to any domestic place of business nor attributable to such domestic place of business are subject to a 22% (including local income tax) withholding tax, and no additional tax reporting is required regardless of the income amount. However, a reduced rate under a tax treaty between the taxpayer's tax residency country and Korea may apply if the taxpayer prepares an application form for entitlement to the reduced tax rate and submits the form to the withholding agent.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains are taxed separately from Composite Income and Severance Income.

Preliminary capital gains tax returns must be filed within two months after the end of the month of the sale transaction (or within two months after the end of the half calendar year in which the transaction took place if the transaction involves sale of shares). Penalties are assessed for a failure to file a preliminary return by the due date. In addition to the preliminary returns, taxpayers must file final annual capital gains tax returns based on the preliminary returns filed and pay any additional taxes by 31 May of the year following the tax year during which the capital gains are earned. However, if only a single sales transaction occurs during the tax year, the reporting obligation with respect to the capital gain can be satisfied through the filing of a preliminary return. Capital gains arising from the sale of foreign shares and designated derivatives are not subject to the capital gains preliminary tax return obligation.

In general, capital gains derived from the transfers of the following are taxable in Korea:
- Land
- Buildings
- Rights related to real estate
- Goodwill transferred with fixed assets for business
- Rights or membership for the exclusive or preferential use of installations (for example, facilities)
- Transactions or activities involving derivatives prescribed by the Presidential Decree of the Individual Income Tax Law (IITL)
- Shares of unlisted companies

Although capital gains derived from the transfer of shares in a company listed on the Korean stock market are not taxable, the shareholder of a listed company is subject to capital gains tax on gains derived from the transfer of the shares if the shareholder, together with related parties, owned at least 1% (2% for Korean Securities Dealers Automated Quotations [KOSDAQ]-listed companies and 4% for Korea New Exchange [KONEX]-listed companies) of the total outstanding shares or at least KRW1 billion worth of the shares based on the market value at the end of the preceding year for shares transferred by 31 December 2022. The transfer of unlisted shares is subject to capital gains tax, regardless of the quantity or value of the shares.

Capital gains derived from specified assets are taxed at the rates set forth in the table below. If a property is subject to two or more of the tax rates listed in the table, the highest rate among them is applied.

Capital asset	Rate (%) (a)
Land, buildings and rights related to real estate
Held by the seller for at least one year, but less than two years (excluding houses and association occupation rights)	40

Capital asset	Rate (%) (a)
Held by the seller for less than one year (excluding houses and association occupation rights)	50
Houses and association occupation rights held by the seller at least one year but less than two years	60
Houses and association occupation rights held by the seller for less than one year	70
Land not used for business or securities of a corporation of which more than 50% of the value of the total assets of the corporation is attributable to land that is not used for business activities	16 to 55 (depending on the tax base)
Securities or shares
Securities transferred by a majority shareholder
Securities of companies that are not small or medium-sized and held for less than one year	30
Securities or shares not covered in the above category	20 or 25 (b)
Securities that are transferred by a non-majority shareholder
Securities of small and medium-sized corporations	10
Securities or shares not covered in the above category	20
Derivatives prescribed by the Presidential Decree	20 (c)
Assets not registered with the court in the seller's name	70
Others including business rights transferred with fixed assets for business and rights or memberships for the exclusive or preferential use of installations	Progressive rates listed in Income tax rates

(a) In addition, local income taxes are imposed as surtaxes to the income tax at progressive rates as discussed in Local income tax rates.
(b) Effective from 1 January 2020, the rates (20% for capital gains tax base up to KRW300 million and 25% for the tax base above that amount) are only applied to capital gains from securities or shares of specific unlisted small or medium-sized corporations.
(c) Capital gains on specific derivatives as prescribed in the Presidential Decree of the IITL are taxed at an income tax rate of 10%.

Special deductions are generally available to reduce the amount of capital gains. These deductions are designed to eliminate the effects of inflation and to encourage long-term possession.

Capital losses may be offset against capital gains derived from transferring assets within the same categories, which are the following:
- Domestic and foreign securities and shares (applied to those who transfer shares from 1 January 2020)
- Land, buildings, rights related to real estate and other assets specified in the IITL
- Derivatives prescribed by the Presidential Decree of the IITL

Capital losses may not be carried forward.

Gains derived from the disposal of foreign assets are taxable if the transferor has been a Korean tax resident for five consecutive years or more at the time of sale. Foreign nationals or Korean nationals residing abroad who are transferring ownership of domestic property must submit a Certificate of Real Estate Transfer Reporting issued by the Chief Tax Officer to the Chief Local District Officer.

Deductions

Earned income deduction. The following table sets forth the amounts of the earned income deduction.

Gross employment income
Exceeding KRW	Not exceeding KRW	Amount of earned income deduction
0	5,000,000	70% of gross employment income
5,000,000	15,000,000	KRW3,500,000 plus 40% of the amount exceeding KRW5,000,000
15,000,000	45,000,000	KRW7,500,000 plus 15% of the amount exceeding KRW15,000,000
45,000,000	100,000,000	KRW12,000,000 plus 5% of the amount exceeding KRW45,000,000
100,000,000	—	KRW14,750,000 plus 2% of the amount exceeding KRW100,000,000

The earned income deduction is capped at KRW20 million.

Personal deductions. The personal deductions described below are available in determining the tax base.

Taxpayers receive a basic deduction of KRW1,500,000 each for themselves, their spouses and each eligible dependent who are financially supported by the taxpayer and do not have a certain level of income in the relevant tax year. For purposes of this basic deduction, the following are qualified dependents:
- Parents and grandparents (aged 60 or older and including the remarried parent’s spouse after the death of the parent).
- Children including adopted children (aged 20 or less).
- Siblings (aged 20 or less or aged 60 or older).
- Children aged 20 or less who were “raised” for 6 months or more during the tax year (including the immediately preceding year if a basic deduction was not claimed for the children concerned in that preceding year) by the authorized taxpayer and who have been financially supported by the taxpayer and have had income less than a certain amount (depending on income type) for the relevant tax year. For this purpose, "raised" means bringing up a child who is not a person's own child (for example, a foster child).

Additional deductions. An additional deduction of KRW1 million each is available for persons aged 70 or older. An additional deduction of KRW2 million for disabled persons is available. An additional deduction of KRW500,000 is available for a working woman who has KRW30 million or less of adjusted Composite Income, who is the head of a household with dependents or who has a spouse. For a taxpayer who does not have a spouse but has dependent children, including adopted children, a deduction of KRW1 million is allowed (that is, a single-parent deduction). However, if the taxpayer is simultaneously eligible for both the additional deduction of KRW500,000 available for a working woman with dependents or a spouse and the single-parent deduction of KRW1 million, only the single-parent deduction of KRW1 million can be claimed.

Itemized deductions. A taxpayer who has employment income in the tax year is eligible for the following itemized deductions:

- Insurance premiums paid according to the National Health Insurance law, Unemployment Law, or Long-Term Care Law are fully deductible from the employment income of the relevant tax year.
- Forty percent of the deposits made to certain housing fund savings by 31 December 2022 by a taxpayer who is the head of household, has taxable employment income of KRW70 million or less and does not own a house is deductible up to KRW2,400,000 per year (housing fund savings deduction).
- Principal and interest payments made by a taxpayer who obtained a loan to lease a house that is limited to the size defined by the Presidential Decree of the IITL are deductible up to 40% of the amount of the principal and interest payments (house lease deduction). The sum of the housing fund savings deduction and the house lease deduction are deductible up to KRW3 million per year.
- Interest payments on a long-term (that is, 15 years or longer) housing mortgage to purchase a house that has a standard value announced by the Korean authorities at the time of purchase of no more than KRW500 million are fully deductible if the taxpayer owns no more than one house at the time of purchase and owns one house at the end of the applicable tax year (long-term housing mortgage loan deduction). The sum of the housing fund savings deduction, the house lease deduction and the long-term housing mortgage loan deduction are deductible up to KRW5 million (up to KRW18 million if the interest on the long-term mortgage loan is paid at a fixed interest rate stipulated by the Presidential Decree of the IITL and if the principal or principal and interest are repaid in installments without any grace period stipulated by the Presidential Decree of the IITL, or up to KRW15 million if the interest on the long-term mortgage loan is paid at a fixed interest rate or if the principal or principal and interest are repaid in installments without any grace period). A deduction for a 10-year or longer long-term housing mortgage loan is available up to KRW3 million if the interest is paid at a fixed interest rate or the principal or principal and interest are repaid in installments without any grace period. For the purposes of the above, the grace period is the period during the life cycle of the loan when repayment of the principal amount is not required (that is, only interest is payable during the grace period).

The sum of certain deductions cannot exceed KRW25 million. Those deductions include, but are not limited to, itemized deductions (excluding the social security contribution deductions), investments in venture investment associations deductions, housing fund savings deduction and credit card usage deductions.

Business deductions. Most legitimate business-related expenses are deductible, including depreciation and bad debts, provided that they are booked in a manner stipulated in the law.

In addition to deductions for business expenses, taxpayers engaged in small and medium-sized businesses are allowed an exemption equal to the tax amount computed by applying the following exemption ratios to income tax on income accruing from the relevant business for the tax year to the extent of KRW100 million (less KRW5 million multiplied by the number of reduced full-time employees compared to the previous tax year, if any):
- 10% for small enterprises prescribed by the Presidential Decree of the Tax Incentives Limitation Law (TILL) that are engaged in wholesale business, retail business or medical service business
- 20% for small enterprises located in the Seoul metropolitan area that are engaged in a qualified business stipulated under the TILL, except for businesses listed in the first bullet above
- 30% for small enterprises located outside of the Seoul metropolitan area that are engaged in a qualified business stipulated under the TILL, except for businesses listed in the first bullet above
- 5% for medium-sized enterprises located outside the Seoul metropolitan area that are engaged in a business listed in the first bullet above
- 10% for medium-sized enterprises located in the Seoul metropolitan area that are engaged in a knowledge-based business that is prescribed by the Presidential Decree of the TILL
- 15% for medium-sized enterprises located outside of the Seoul metropolitan area that are engaged in a qualified business stipulated under the TILL, except for businesses listed in the first bullet above

Taxpayers engaged in small and medium-sized businesses meeting the criteria outlined in the TILL may be able to claim additional exemption for the items listed above. Such income tax exemption benefits are granted for the income generated at the relevant business site until the tax year ending on or before 31 December 2022.

Flat tax rate. Foreign employees and executive officers who do not have a special relation with the company as per the Presidential Decree of the TILL (excluding the case of a tax-exempt foreign-invested company) and who begin working in Korea between 1 January 2014 and 31 December 2021 may elect to apply a 20.9% flat tax rate (including local income tax) without any exemptions, deductions or credits with respect to their employment income received for their services in Korea until the end of the tax year within the fifth year of their first day of working in Korea if this provides a more favorable result than the progressive tax rate system (see Rates). However, for foreign employees and executive officers who began working in Korea before 1 January 2014 and were working in Korea as of 1 January 2014, the flat tax rate election will not be subject to the five-year limitation but can only be claimed on employment income earned until 31 December 2018 (that is, the sunset expiration date). Foreigners who work for a qualified regional headquarters in Korea can apply the flat tax rate until the end of the tax year within five years since the start of Korea assignment or employment regardless of the sunset expiration date.

To elect the flat tax rate system, a foreign employee must file an application to apply the flat tax rate. This application must be filed at the time of the year-end true-up settlement of the tax on employment income with the withholding agent by the date on which salaries for the month of February in the following year are paid. Alternatively, he or she can file such application with the competent tax office, together with the Composite Income tax return, in May following the close of the calendar tax year.

The flat tax rate can also be elected for the monthly withholding tax calculation. To elect the flat tax rate system for monthly withholding tax reporting, an application must be submitted to the tax office by the 10th day of the month following the month of services rendered.

Severance income tax rates. The income tax on the severance income of resident taxpayer is calculated in accordance with the following steps:
- Step 1: Apply the progressive income tax rates for Composite Income to the severance income tax base of the relevant tax year.
- Step 2: Divide the result of Step 1 by 12.
- Step 3: Multiply the result of Step 2 by the number of years of service.

Credits

Earned income tax credits. The tentative tax calculated on employment income may be reduced by an earned income tax credit of 55% up to the tentative tax of KRW1,300,000 and by 30% on any excess. The tax credit is capped at the following amounts:
- KRW740,000 if taxable employment income is KRW33 million or less
- The greater of KRW740,000 less 0.8% of the amount of taxable employment income over KRW33 million, and KRW660,000 if taxable employment income is more than KRW33 million but not more than KRW70 million
- The greater of KRW660,000 less 50% of the amount of taxable employment income over KRW70 million, and KRW500,000 if taxable employment income is more than KRW70 million

Child tax credits. The following are the child tax credits:
- KRW150,000 for one child
- KRW300,000 for two children
- KRW300,000 plus KRW300,000 per each child exceeding two children

The above child tax credits apply only for a child aged 7 or older.

For each child born or adopted in the tax year, the following child tax credits also apply:
- KRW300,000 for a first child
- KRW500,000 for a second child
- KRW700,000 for each additional child

Pension fund tax credits. Twelve percent of pension premiums paid by residents to the pension fund (excluding the income for which taxation was deferred, such as severance income from which tax was not withheld or a payment made as a result of a transfer between pension funds) are creditable up to KRW480,000 (12% of the premium threshold of KRW4 million). The premium threshold is reduced to KRW3 million for a total credit of KRW360,000 for taxpayers who have taxable employment income in excess of KRW120 million or adjusted Composite Income in excess of KRW100 million. Taxpayers who only have taxable employment income of KRW55 million or less or have adjusted Composite Income of KRW40 million or less are allowed to claim up to 15% of the contributions as tax credits, capped at KRW600,000. If the payment for the pension savings account exceeds KRW4 million per year or if the sum of the payments to the personal pension savings account (up to KRW4 million) and company-enrolled retirement pension account exceeds KRW7 million per year, the excess is not eligible for the tax credits.

Special tax credits. A taxpayer who has employment income in the tax year can claim the following special tax credits against the tentative income tax:

- Tax credit for insurance premiums paid: a tax credit is available for 12% of insurance premiums paid if the refunds of the premiums at the maturity of the insurance policy do not exceed the amount of the paid-in premiums. The tax credit for premiums paid for the taxpayer and dependents apply up to KRW120,000 (12% of the premium threshold of KRW1 million). A tax credit for 15% of insurance premiums paid is available to disabled individuals, which applies up to KRW150,000 (15% of the premium threshold of KRW1 million).
- Tax credit for medical expenses: a tax credit is available for 15% of medical expenses (20% for medical expenses related to infertility treatments) paid by the taxpayer for himself or herself or on behalf of qualified dependents (not subject to the limitation of age and income level) in accordance with the following rules:
  - — Medical expenses paid by the taxpayer on behalf of qualified dependents, other than disabled persons and elderly persons aged 65 or older, are eligible for a tax credit. The tax credit is granted to the extent that the expenses exceed 3% of total taxable employment income of the taxpayer and is available up to KRW1,050,000 (15% of the KRW7 million threshold exceeding the 3% of total taxable employment income).
  - — Medical expenses paid for the taxpayer and on behalf of disabled persons, elderly persons aged 65 or older, designated intensive-care patients and certain other individuals are eligible for a tax credit. If the medical expenses described in the item above are less than 3% of the taxpayer's taxable employment income, the difference between the two amounts would decrease the total amount of medical expenses eligible for a tax credit.
  - — Medical expenses for infertility treatment are eligible for a tax credit. If the sum of medical expenses described in the two items above is less than 3% of the taxpayer's taxable employment income, the difference between the two amounts would decrease the total amount of medical expenses eligible for a tax credit.
  - — Medical expenses paid by a taxpayer whose total taxable salary income is KRW70 million or less to a maternity care center for the cost of postpartum care and treatment less than KRW2 million per child are eligible for a tax credit.
- Tax credit for education expenses: a credit is available for 15% of education expenses (primarily tuition, including tuition for graduate school for taxpayers, related registration fees, costs for school meals and textbooks, fees for extracurricular activities and school uniforms [up to KRW500,000 per middle school and high school student]) are available for credit. However, other fees, such as bus fees, do not qualify for the credit. Education expenses (excluding expenses for graduate school) for each qualifying student, which includes the spouse, dependent children and siblings, are available for the following credits:

  - University or college: KRW1,350,000 (15% of the expense threshold of KRW9 million)
  - Kindergarten, and elementary, middle and high school: KRW450,000 (15% of the expense threshold of KRW3 million)
- Tax credit for donations: A credit is available for 15% of donations (30% of the excess donations over KRW10 million) made to the government and designated schools and organizations (Legal Donations) by the taxpayer, spouse or dependents who meet the income level criteria for personal deductions. Other specified donations are eligible for tax credit to the extent of 30% of the amount of adjusted Composite Income less Legal Donations. However, if the taxpayer makes donations to religious organizations, the donations are eligible for tax credit to the extent of the sum of the following:
  - 10% of the amount of adjusted Composite Income less Legal Donations
  - The lesser of non-religious donations and 20% of the amount of adjusted Composite Income less Legal Donations

A taxpayer with employment income who does not claim any special tax credits can apply a standard tax credit of KRW130,000 (KRW120,000 for a good-faith, self-employed taxpayer designated in the tax law) against the tentative income tax for the year, while a taxpayer without employment income can apply a standard tax credit of KRW70,000 against the tentative income tax for the year.

Nonresident taxation. A nonresident with a place of business in, or employment income derived from, Korea is generally taxed at the same rates that apply to a resident. Nonresidents satisfying certain conditions may use a flat tax rate (see Flat tax rate). However, nonresidents are not eligible for personal deductions for the spouse and dependents, itemized deductions, child tax credits and special tax credits.

The Korean-source income of a nonresident without a place of business in Korea is subject to withholding tax at the rates indicated in the following table.

Income category	Rate
Business income and income from leasing ships, airplanes, registered vehicles, machines, and similar items	2%
Income from professional services, technical services or services of athletes or entertainers performed in Korea	20%
Interest, dividends, royalties and other income (excluding income generated from bonds issued by governments and domestic companies)	20%
Income from professional services or technical services performed overseas, but deemed to be sourced in Korea as prescribed in any relevant tax treaties	3%

Income category	Rate
Income generated from bonds issued by governments and domestic companies	14%
Capital gains	Lower of 10% of sales price or 20% of capital gains
Other income listed as taxable for nonresidents	15% or 20%

In addition, local income tax is imposed as surtax at a rate of 10% of the above income withholding taxes.

Reduced rates may apply, depending on tax treaty provisions (see Section E).

Relief for losses. Business losses of a self-employed person (including losses arising from a business of renting residential properties) can be used to offset other business income, as well as other sources of Composite Income, such as employment income, pension income, interest income, dividends and other income. However, business losses from rental activities (other than rental losses from residential properties) can be used only to offset other rental income. Business losses can be carried forward for 10 years and can also be carried back to the preceding year if the self-employed person's business qualifies as a small or medium-sized company.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

Heirs and donees who are Korean tax residents are subject to inheritance and gift taxes on assets received worldwide. Nonresident inheritors and donees are subject to inheritance and gift taxes on assets located in Korea only.

The following rates apply after the deduction of exempt amounts (see below) for the purposes of both inheritance and gift taxes.

Tax base KRW	Tax rate %	Tax due KRW	Cumulative tax due KRW
First 100,000,000	10	10,000,000	10,000,000
Next 400,000,000	20	80,000,000	90,000,000
Next 500,000,000	30	150,000,000	240,000,000
Next 2,000,000,000	40	800,000,000	1,040,000,000
Above 3,000,000,000	50	—	—

C. Social security

National pension. Under the National Pension Law, an ordinary workplace with at least one employee must join the national pension program. The contribution to the national pension fund is 9% of an employee's salary. The 9% contribution is shared equally at 4.5% between the employee and the employer. The maximum amount for both the employer's and employee's share of the monthly premium for the national pension is KRW235,800 per employee from 1 July 2021. This amount is computed based on an average monthly salary of KRW5,240,000. The premium must be paid by the 10th day of the month after the month in which the salary is paid.

National health insurance. Under the National Health Insurance Law, an ordinary workplace with at least one employee must join the national health insurance plan. The rate for the National Health Insurance is 3.43% each by employer and employee (6.86% in total) with a monthly contribution capped at KRW7,047,900. The long-term care insurance is additionally charged at 11.52% on the National Health Insurance.

The premium must be paid by the 10th day of the month after the month in which the salary is paid. If an employee who is participating in the National Health Insurance scheme through his or her workplace also has additional employment income not subject to payroll withholding and/or has personal income of KRW34 million or more, the employee is subject to an additional contribution for the additional employment income not subject to payroll withholding and pension income at a rate of 2.2951% (30% of 7.6503%, including long-term care insurance), while an additional contribution at a rate of 7.6503% to the National Health Insurance must be made for additional income that is neither employment income nor pension income (for example, investment income). However, the sum of the additional contribution per month is capped at KRW3,929,909, including the long-term care insurance contribution per employee.

Foreigners may be exempt from the mandatory National Health Insurance requirement on application and approval if they are covered by their home country's statutory insurance or by a company-provided foreign medical insurance program that provides a level of medical coverage equivalent to the coverage provided under the Korean National Health Insurance or if their employer guarantees to pay all medical expenses incurred in Korea. Documents required for the exemption differ according to the types of existing insurance plans.

Unemployment insurance. A company with at least one employee must pay unemployment insurance premiums and employee ability development premiums. Annual unemployment insurance premiums are payable at a rate of 1.6% of an employee's salary. These premiums are shared equally at a 0.8% rate by the employer and employee. Employee ability development premiums are payable by employers only at a rate ranging from 0.25% to 0.85%, depending on the number of full-time employees.

Unemployment insurance does not apply to chief executive officers (CEOs) or representatives (in Korean companies, equivalent to CEOs or presidents) of Korean entities. It is optional for foreign nationals, but foreigners with certain visa types, such as D-7, D-8 or D-9, may be exempt on a reciprocity principle, while F-2 or F-5 visa holders must pay for unemployment insurance.

Accident insurance. Under the Industrial Accident Compensation Insurance Law, an ordinary workplace with at least one employee must join the workmen's accident compensation insurance program and pay the premium annually. The premium, which is paid by the employer only, is normally calculated at a rate ranging from 0.6% to 18.5%, depending on the industry.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The income tax year in Korea is the calendar year.

For employment income (salary payments to the employees) eventually borne and deducted by a Korean entity (including salaries paid by a foreign entity but charged back to the Korean entity), taxes on such employment income should be withheld by the Korean entity. Taxpayers who receive other types of income, such as interest, dividends or business income (including rental income), must file a Composite Income tax return between 1 May and 31 May of the year following the tax year. Taxes due must be paid when the return is filed. No extensions of time are granted for the filing of Composite Income tax returns.

Taxpayers reporting employment income eventually borne by a foreign entity have the following options:

- They may file a Composite Income tax return and pay relevant taxes in the month of May of the year following the income tax year.
- They may join an authorized taxpayers' association through which monthly tax payments are made to the tax authorities. In return for timely payments made through a registered taxpayers' association, taxpayers receive a 5% credit on the adjusted income tax liability (the adjusted income tax liability is computed based on a complicated formula provided in the law).

A representative office established in Korea has payroll withholding and reporting obligations if the salaries are paid to employees through a bank account of the representative office.

Married persons are taxed separately, and no joint tax returns are allowed.

In principle, a resident who has a Composite Income tax return filing obligation should make the filing at least one day before departing from Korea.

Self-employed persons operating certain types of businesses must make interim tax payments during the tax year.

Foreign financial account reporting. Residents, including foreigners who have resided in Korea for 5 years or more during the past 10 years as of the year-end, must report their financial assets held in foreign countries (such as bank accounts, stock brokerage accounts including, but not limited to, unvested restricted stock units, derivatives accounts and other accounts) to the Korean tax authorities. This rule applies only if the aggregate value of the foreign financial accounts exceeds KRW500 million at the end of any month during the calendar year. The report for the preceding calendar year must be filed with the relevant tax office during the period of 1 June to 30 June of the year following the calendar year.

Failure to file the reporting in a timely or truthful manner or to comply with tax authorities' requests to submit or supplement the reporting triggers penalties.

Foreign real estate reporting. Residents who have acquired, leased or sold real estate located outside Korea or have a right to such real estate of which the acquisition price or sale price was KRW200 million or more must report their foreign real estate acquisition and operation to the competent tax authorities by the statutory deadline of the Composite Income Tax return, which is 30 June in the year following the year of the acquisition. Failure to file the reporting in a timely or truthful manner or to comply with tax authorities' requests to submit or supplement the reporting triggers penalties. However, a foreign-national who is a tax resident in Korea satisfying certain conditions (whose total period of stay in Korea is less than 5 years during the preceding 10 years at the end of the tax year) is regarded as a nonpermanent tax resident and is exempted from the foreign real estate reporting obligation.

Proxy withholding. Korean entities that meet certain revenue- and industry-type conditions must withhold payroll taxes of 20.9% (including local income tax) on the fees paid to foreign entities that hire inbound expatriates to provide services in Korea and pay the taxes withheld to the tax office. Like employment income subject to payroll withholding, the withheld fees must be settled on an annual basis through the year-end payroll true-up settlement under which the obligation to file falls on the foreign entity that hired the inbound expatriates. A Korean entity can also assume this obligation.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

A credit for foreign income taxes paid is available, up to the ratio of foreign-source adjusted taxable income, to worldwide adjusted taxable income.

Korea has entered into double tax treaties with the following 94 jurisdictions as of July 2021.

As of June 2021, qualified nationals of the 108 jurisdictions listed below, which have a reciprocal visa exemption agreement with Korea, may enter Korea without visas for, in general, a period of up to 90 days. G. Work permits and self-employment

Korean authorities are relatively restrictive in granting working rights to foreign nationals. As a result of the degree of difficulty in obtaining permits, readers should obtain appropriate professional assistance.

A foreign national may engage only in the activities related to the working status of his or her sojourn. A foreign national in Korea who intends to engage in activities other than those relating to his or her status of sojourn must obtain a permit from the Ministry of Justice. A foreign national who does not hold a working status of sojourn may not be employed in Korea.

Categories of working status of sojourn. The maximum sojourn periods for the various categories of working status of sojourn range from 90 days to five years. However, depending on individual circumstances and the discretion of relevant immigration offices, the duration of the period is often one to two years per application for initial sojourn or extension.

As a result of the amendment of the Korean Immigration Act on 10 October 2013, the sojourn period is extended up to five years for various jobs and visa types.

Five years. The following categories of individuals have a maximum five-year period of sojourn:
- E1 – Professor: foreigners qualified by the Higher Education Act who are seeking to give lectures or conduct studies in educational facilities, and individuals who have expertise in science and high technology
- E3 – Research: individuals engaged in the fields of natural science or high technology, scientists that are engaged in a study at an institute that is operated by the Special Treatment Law as to Defense Industry Company, and individuals who have expertise in science and high technology
- E4 – Technological Guidance: individuals who offer special technology or expertise at a public or private organization and individuals who offer special technology or expertise not available in Korea
- E5 – Professional Employment: aircraft pilots, medical doctors, interns or residents at hospitals, individuals invited by businesses approved for the Geumgang Mountain tourism development business and individuals seeking work as essential staff of shipping services hired by Korean transportation corporations
- D8 – Corporate Investment: indispensable professional workers seeking to engage in the administration and/or management of foreign investment companies prescribed by the foreign investor promotion law (excluding workers hired domestically)

Three years. The following categories of individuals have a maximum three-year period of sojourn:
- E7 – Specially Designated Activities
- E9 – Non-professional Employment
- F4 – Overseas Koreans
- F6 – Spouse of a Korean national
- H2 – Working Visit

Two years. The following categories of individuals have a maximum two-year period of sojourn:

- D1 – Cultural Arts: individuals who perform not-for-profit artistic or academic activities.
- D3 – Industrial Training: individuals fulfilling conditions set by the Minister of Justice and individuals seeking industrial training.
- D4 – General Training: Individuals who obtain education or training as an intern or engage in research at a foreign-investment company or at a company that made an investment abroad.
- D5 – Journalism: journalists.
- D6 – Religious Affairs: individuals who are dispatched to a chapter registered in Korea by a foreign religious body or social welfare organization, individuals who are engaged in missionary work or social welfare and are invited by medical or educational facilities operated by their organization, individuals who practice asceticism or train or study at a Korean religious body on the recommendation of that body and individuals who are invited by a Korean religious body or social welfare organizations that are engaged only in social welfare.
- D7 – Intra-Company Transfer: individuals who have worked for foreign public institutions or the main office, branch office or other establishments of a company for more than a year, and individuals who are dispatched as indispensable professional workers to the branch office, subsidiary, supervising office or an interrelated company established in Korea that is approved and processed by the Minister of Justice.
- D8 – Corporate Investment: Individuals who wish to invest. They must report in advance to the head of the Korean trade and investment promotion agency or the head of the foreign-exchange bank.
- D9 – Treaty Trade: individuals who are engaged in company management, trading, or profit-making business, individuals who are engaged in the installation, operation or repair of equipment (machines) to be exported and individuals engaged in the supervision of shipbuilding and the manufacturing of equipment.
- E2 – Foreign Language Teaching: individuals seeking positions as foreign language instructors at foreign language institutions or educational facilities.
- E6 – Arts/Entertainment: individuals seeking to profit from performances related to music, fine arts, literature, or similar fields and individuals seeking to profit through performing arts, such as entertainment, music, play, sports, advertisement, fashion modeling and similar activities.
- F1 – Family Visitation: Sojourn for the purpose of visiting relatives, family or dependents, organizing household and other similar activities.

Six months. Individuals in Category D10 – Job Seeking have a maximum six-month period of sojourn. This category consists of individuals seeking jobs or vocational training programs for employment in the relevant field as a professional.

Ninety days. The following categories of individuals have a maximum 90-day period of sojourn:

- C1 – Temporary Journalism: sojourn of journalists or representatives of foreign media seeking to cover news.

- C3 – Short Term General: sojourn for the purpose of business meetings, business communication, tourism, transit or visiting relatives.
- C4 – Short Term Employment: sojourn for the purpose of short-term employment activities or provision of services. Effective from March 2017, in accordance with Korean immigration law, individuals who wish to travel to Korea to conduct installation, repair, operation of machinery or supervision of shipbuilding and industrial facilities are required to obtain the C-4 visa. Effective from July 2018, C-4 visa approval is required for a short-term assignment performed under any type of contract that provides for compensation, such as the cost of staying.

Procedure. In general, Korean immigration law requires a foreign national who wants to obtain a work permit to submit an application together with a résumé, a copy of his or her passport, an employment agreement or assignment letter, a diploma, and corporate documents of the visa-sponsoring company to the Korean immigration office. However, the supporting documents to obtain a work permit may differ by type of visa. The work permit includes the applicant's visa type and period of sojourn.

Foreign nationals may be self-employed in Korea if they obtain the appropriate trade licenses or registration.

H. Residence permits

A foreign national who wishes to enter Korea must obtain a permit, which specifies the status and period of sojourn, from the Ministry of Justice. A foreign national who plans to stay in Korea for longer than 90 days must apply for an Alien Registration Card at the district immigration office within 90 days after the date of entry. Under the Immigration Control Law, individuals who are aged 17 or older must register their biometric details (fingerprinting) to apply for an Alien Registration Card.

Foreign nationals who intend to change their status of sojourn or diplomatic status must obtain permits to change the status of sojourn from the Ministry of Justice prior to commencing new activities.

A foreign national who intends to extend the sojourn period must obtain a permit of extension or a renewal of sojourn from the Ministry of Justice before expiration of the Alien Registration Card.

I. Korean Electronic Travel Authorization

Effective from September 2021, the new electronic travel authorization (ETA) policy will be in force. ETA is a travel permission granted to foreign nationals who wish to enter Korea without a visa. Compared to a visa application, the ETA application is very simple and processed very quickly. Also, it is valid for two years from the issuance date so that eligible foreign nationals will not be required to file an ETA application for each travel to Korea within this period. All visa-free entry and visa-waived foreign nationals with the following travel purposes are subject to ETA application:

- Individuals who do not have a valid Korean visa at the time of filing

- Individuals who plan to visit Korea for a short-term visit (less than 90 days) for the purposes of tourism, family visits, meetings, seminars or events (that is, not related to work) under visa waiver or visa-free agreements

See Section F for lists of visa waiver agreement and no-visa-entry jurisdictions.

ETA does not grant a foreign national the right to work. Therefore, if a foreign national wishes to work in Korea, he or she must obtain a work permit, not an ETA.

J. Changes resulting from COVID-19

As of 1 June 2020, alien registration card holders, except for A-type and F4 visa holders, must apply for a re-entry permit before departure to keep the visa and alien registration card valid because the exemption for re-entry permit application for less than a one-year trip abroad has been suspended as a result of COVID-19.

As of 1 July 2021, all foreign nationals traveling to Korea must obtain the following three negative PCR test certificates:
- First negative PCR test certificate issued within 72 hours prior to the departure to Korea
- Second negative PCR test certificate issued on arrival in Korea (at the government facility)
- Third negative PCR test certificate issued within six to seven days from the arrival date (at the district health center)

If a foreign national does not obtain any one of the above, he or she will not be able to enter Korea or will be subject to quarantine at the government facility.

K. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family members need separate permits and visas to accompany expatriates. These permits may be applied for jointly with an expatriate's permits.

A family member of a working expatriate must obtain a separate work permit to be employed legally in Korea. This permit may be applied for independently with the working expatriate.

Children of working expatriates do not need student visas to attend schools in Korea.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may not drive legally in Korea with their home country driver's licenses. However, an expatriate may drive for up to one year in Korea with an international driver's license. After one year, the expatriate must apply to have the license converted to a Korean license.

If an individual wishes to obtain a Korean driver's license, he or she must take a written exam and a standard physical exam.

- Other training expenses, not including amounts equivalent to wages and salaries that are paid to beginners or apprentices
- Income received, including income in cash or in kind for non-business natural persons, for expropriations made by the state for public interest
- Mandatory contributions paid by employers for health insurance for employees
- Compensation received through final decisions by courts and certain compensation for court costs
- Income in the form of remuneration from state institutions for achievements in science, sports and culture
- Income in the form of financial compensation to former political prisoners and other compensation for similar categories
- Income in the form of grants, subsidies and donations in accordance with the terms and conditions of the benefits
- Income subject to tax holidays and other special facilities for new businesses

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. No specific rules in Kosovo govern the tax treatment of employer-provided stock options. Stock options are subject to personal income tax at the moment of exercise.

Capital gains and losses. Income is realized through the sale or disposition of capital assets including real estate and securities. The tax base equals the amount by which the sale price exceeds the acquisition cost. The sales price of the capital asset is the sum of money received, plus any other compensation received for the sale, and is adjusted to the open market value if the parties are related persons and if the sale price is lower than the open market price. The cost of the capital asset is the amount that the taxpayer paid for the acquisition of the asset, increased for the cost of improvements and reduced by depreciation and other allowable expenditures.

Capital gains are recognized as business income and capital losses as business losses.

A capital gain is not recognized on the involuntary alienation of property to the extent that the consideration received for the alienation consists of either property of the same character or nature or that money is invested in property of the same character or nature within a replacement period of two years.

Gross income from capital gains does not include capital gains realized from the sale of assets of the Kosovo Pension Savings Trust or any other pension fund defined under the legislation on pensions in Kosovo.

If the price of a capital asset is to be paid in installments and if ownership is retained until the settlement of the price, the capital gain must be amortized on a straight-line basis over the life of the installment agreement. The amount of the gain attributable to a tax year must be reported on the tax declaration as income in that tax year.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. Individuals may deduct pension contributions.

Business deductions. The following are considered to be business deductions:

- Expenses paid or incurred during the tax period that are wholly, exclusively and directly related to the generation of gross income from intangible property, rents or business activities, including premiums for health insurance paid on behalf of an employee and those dependents eligible to be included on the insurance policy of the employee
- Pension contributions paid by an employer provided they do not exceed the amount of pension contributions allowed by the applicable law
- Bad debts provided that certain criteria provided in the law are met
- For businesses with annual gross income of EUR50,000 or more and businesses that have opted to maintain books and records, expenses that are allowed and paid or accrued during the tax period
- Expenses, including the expenses of depreciation, related to operations and financial leasing
- Representation costs, limited to 1% of annual gross income
- Costs of advertising and promotion made through different forms of media
- Expenses for travel, meals, lodging and transportation limited to the amounts specified in a normative act by the Minister of Finance
- Compensation or emoluments paid to a related person, limited to the lesser of the actual salary or the open market value
- Interest, rent and other expenses paid to a related person, limited to the lesser of the actual amount and the open market value
- Depreciation expenditures, other than expenditures for land, works of art and certain other assets, owned by the taxpayer and used for the taxpayer's economic activity

- Depreciation of livestock, only if such animals are used in the course of economic activity
- Repair or improvement expense of EUR1,000 or less for any asset (may be deducted as an expense in the year that it is paid or incurred)
- Amortization of expenditures on intangible assets that have a limited useful life, including but not limited to patents, copyrights, licenses for drawings and models, contracts, and franchises (if the term of use is not defined by an agreement, amortization expenses are allowed up to 20 years)
- Amortization of research and development costs with respect to natural reserves of minerals and other natural resources and interest on amounts borrowed to finance such research and development, if they are added to a capital account

Deduction for charitable contributions. Contributions that are made for humanitarian, cultural, health, religious, scientific, sport and environmental purposes are allowed as deductions up to a maximum of 10% of taxable income computed before the charitable contributions are deducted.

Rates. Taxable income is subject to tax at the following rates.

Annual taxable income EUR	Tax rate %	Tax due EUR	Cumulative tax due EUR
First 960	0	0	0
Next 2,040	4	81.6	81.6

Credits. Resident taxpayers may credit the foreign income tax paid in other countries on the income realized in such countries. The amount of the foreign tax credit may not exceed the amount of Kosovo tax calculated on the foreign income.

Relief for losses. Business losses may be carried forward for up to six successive years and claimed as a deduction against any income in those years. If the business has an ownership change of more than 50% or if a personal business enterprise is changed to any other form of business (for example, legal entity or partnership), the tax loss is forfeited.

B. Other taxes

Property tax. Annual property tax is imposed on land and construction. The property tax is assessed every year and is determined by multiplying the taxable value of the property by the applicable tax rate. The tax rate ranges from 0.05% to 0.1% of the taxable value of the property. The taxable value is the appraised value of property after the principal residence deduction. The appraised value is determined every three to five years through a survey and is affected by the building area in square meters, value category, value zone and quality. An individual may deduct EUR10,000 from the appraised value if the property is established as the principal residence. The annual property tax rates for principal residences in Pristina and Peja are 0.11% and 0.09%, respectively.

Taxation of gifts. Kosovo does not impose estate, specific inheritance or gift taxes. However, as described below, gifts may be included in income.

The amount of monetary gifts or gifts in kind that exceed a value of EUR5,000 in a tax period is included in income and is subject to income tax. Gifts between spouses, from a parent to a child, or from a child to a parent are exempt from income tax, regardless of the amount or value of the gift. In addition, gifts given for educational purposes are exempt from tax if the gift is in the form of tuition paid directly to an educational institution recognized by the law, regardless of the relationship between the donor and recipient.

C. Social security

Employers and employees must each make pension contributions at a rate of 5% of the gross monthly salary, which cannot be lower than the minimum salary. The minimum base for the calculation of the pension contribution is the minimum national wage set by the Social Council of Kosovo. Currently, the minimum wage is EUR130 for employees under the age of 35 and EUR170 for other employees. Employers must pay the total amount of the contribution by the 15th day of the month following the month of the salary payment.

Employers and employees may each make voluntary contributions up to a total of 10% of monthly salary, resulting in a total maximum contribution of 15% of salary.

If wages are paid substantially in kind, employers and employees must each pay 5% of the market value of the payments in kind.

Self-employed individuals must make a contribution of 10% to 30% of the net amount of income (gross income less allowable deductions). Self-employed individuals must file quarterly statements of individual pension contributions and make quarterly payments of contributions within 15 days after the end of each calendar quarter.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Kosovo is the calendar year.

Employers must submit a statement of tax withholding to the tax authorities by the 15th day of the month following the month of withholding. Each employer must provide to each employee a certificate of tax withholding in the form specified in a normative act issued by the Minister of Finance by 1 March of the tax year following the year of the withholding.

All taxpayers, including partnerships and groupings of persons, must submit an annual tax declaration on or before 31 March of the following tax year. Taxpayers who receive or accrue income from only the following sources are not required but may opt to submit an annual tax declaration:
- Wages
- Interest
- Rent if full payment of quarterly tax on rent has been made
- Lottery gains
- Income from intangible property
- Economic activities for which tax is paid quarterly
- Income for special categories (farmers, collectors of recycling materials, berries, herbs and similar categories)

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Kosovo has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Albania	Hungary	Switzerland
Austria	Luxembourg	Turkey
Belgium (a)	Malta	United Arab Emirates
Croatia	North Macedonia	United Kingdom
Finland (a)	Saudi Arabia (b)
Germany (a)	Slovenia

(a) Kosovo is applying these treaties, which were entered into by the former Republic of Yugoslavia.
(b) The agreement entered into force on 1 January 2021.

Kosovo has signed double tax treaties with the Czech Republic, Ireland, Italy, Latvia and Lithuania, but these treaties have not yet been ratified by the parties to the treaties and, therefore, are not yet effective. Kosovo is negotiating a double tax treaty with Ireland.

The Kosovo government has introduced temporary international measures. Under these measures, if the existing laws relating to the international taxation of income and capital of persons in Kosovo do not address such taxation, they must be supplemented by application of the principles the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development Model Tax Convention of Income and Capital to avoid double taxation. However, after Kosovo enters into a mutual tax convention with another state, such temporary measures no longer apply.

F. Entry visas

In general, foreigners must obtain a visa before entering Kosovo. The government has provided a list of jurisdictions that are exempt from the visa requirements for entry into and travel and stay in Kosovo for up to 90 days for every six months. Citizens of European Union (EU) states, the Schengen area, Albania, Andorra, Monaco, Montenegro, San Marino, Serbia and Vatican City may enter into and travel and stay in Kosovo by presenting a valid biometric identification card.

Citizens who hold diplomatic and service passports issued by China Mainland, Egypt, Indonesia, the Russian Federation and Ukraine may enter Kosovo and stay for up to 15 days.

Citizens of jurisdictions subject to the Kosovo visa regime who hold a valid residence permit or multi-entry visa issued by jurisdictions of the EU, the Schengen area, Australia, Canada, Japan, New Zealand and the United States can enter into or travel or stay in Kosovo for up to 15 days.

Holders of travel documents issued by Taiwan are exempt from the visa obligation if they preliminarily notify the Diplomatic or Consular Mission of the Republic of Kosovo at least two weeks in advance.

Holders of valid travel documents issued by Hong Kong and Macau are exempt from the obligation to obtain a visa to enter Kosovo.

Holders of travel documents issued by EU member states, Schengen zone states, Australia, Canada, Japan and the United States, based on the 1951 Convention on Refugee Status or the 1954 Convention on the Status of Stateless Persons, as well as holders of valid travel documents for foreigners, may enter, pass through the territory and stay in Kosovo for up to 15 days without a visa.

Holders of travel permits issued by the Council of Europe, the EU, the North American Treaty Organization, the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe or UN organizations are exempt from the visa requirement, regardless of nationality.

G. Work permits

Foreigners can work in Kosovo on the basis of a work registration certificate if the work period does not exceed 90 days within a one-year period. Foreigners who intend to stay for work purposes for a longer period also need a residence permit. The competent authority responsible for the issuance of work registration certificates is the Department of Labor and Employment within the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare.

To obtain a work registration certificate, the applicant must submit the following documentation:
- Application form
- Employment contract
- Certificates of education and other training
- Business registration certificate of the employer
- Evidence of payment of the relevant administrative fee

H. Residence permits

Foreigners may stay in Kosovo for up to three months in a six-month period without a residence permit. If the individual intends to stay for more than three months in Kosovo, an application for a residence permit must be made at the Department of Citizenship, Asylum and Migration under the Ministry for Internal Affairs of Kosovo. Temporary residence permits are issued for a period of up to one year. Foreigners who have been residents of Kosovo for an uninterrupted five-year period may obtain a permanent residence permit. For a permanent residence permit for the purpose of family reunification on the grounds of marriage, an uninterrupted three-year stay is required. The applicant's presence is required at the moment of application, registration and obtaining the residence permit. To obtain a temporary or permanent residence permit, the applicant must submit the following documentation:
- Application form
- Passport
- Bank account statement or other evidence certifying the possession of sufficient means for living
- Evidence of appropriate housing such as a lease contract or property-ownership certificate
- Health insurance policy
- Criminal record certificate issued from the last place of residence
- Employment contract and certificates of education and training or certificate of enrollment from the relevant educational institution

- Family or marriage certificate, as applicable
- Business extract from the commercial register
- Certificate issued by the Kosovo tax administration that certifies the settlement of tax liabilities by the company

Notification of the approval or rejection of a temporary or permanent residence permit request is given 30 days or 60 days, respectively, from the application date.

I. Family and personal considerations

Work visas for family members. A foreigner resident in Kosovo on the basis of a temporary residence permit for the purpose of family reunification may apply for a work permit.

Marital property regime. The marital property regime in Kosovo is based on the principle of the joint ownership of subsequently acquired property. In accordance with this principle, property acquired after the marriage is deemed to be jointly owned by the spouses in equal parts, unless otherwise stated in a written agreement complying with the formal requirements of the property law. The law distinguishes separate properties from the joint property of spouses even after a civil marriage.

The following are considered to be the separate property of spouses:
- Property that belonged to the spouse before entering into marriage and that remains his or her property
- Property acquired during marriage through inheritance, donation or other forms of legal acquisition
- Product of art, intellectual work or intellectual property, which is the separate property of the spouse who created the product
- Property belonging to the spouse based on the proportion of common property

Each spouse independently administers and possesses his or her separate property during the course of the marriage.

The following are considered to be the joint property of the spouses:
- Property acquired through work during the course of the marriage and income derived from the property
- Intangible and obligatory rights of the spouses
- Property acquired jointly through gambling games

The apportioning of joint property can be carried out when spouses determine or request a determination of their shares in their joint property. In the absence of an agreement between the spouses, the share of each spouse is decided by the court. The decision is based on an evaluation of all circumstances, including the personal income and other revenues of each spouse and assistance provided by one spouse to the other spouse, such as children's care, conduct of housework, care and maintenance of property and other forms of work and cooperation pertaining to the administration, maintenance and increase of the joint property.

Forced heirship. Kosovo succession law provides for forced heirship with respect to compulsory heirs. The following are compulsory heirs:
- Decedent's spouse, parents, descendants and adopted children
- Descendants of decedent's descendants and adopted children

- Decedent's grandparents and siblings, but only if they suffer from permanent and total disability that prevents them from working and if they lack means for living

The compulsory heirs have the right to the part of the hereditary property that the decedent cannot dispose of. This is called the compulsory share. The compulsory share of the descendants and of the spouse is one-half, and the compulsory share of other compulsory heirs is one-third of the share that the compulsory heir would have obtained as heir at law, according to the provisions on inheritance by rank.

Driver's licenses. Foreign citizens may drive legally in Kosovo with their valid home-country driver's licenses for a term of one year from their date of entry into Kosovo.

A. Income tax

No income taxes are currently imposed on individuals in Kuwait.

B. Other taxes

Net worth, estate and gift taxes are not imposed on individuals in Kuwait.

C. Social security

For Kuwaiti employees, contributions are payable monthly by both the employer and employee under the Social Security Law. The employer's social security contribution is 11.5%, up to a salary ceiling of KWD2,750 per month. Consequently, the maximum employer contribution is KWD316.25 per month. The employee social security contribution rate is 10.5%. For calculation purposes, the cap amounts vary. For 2.5%, the cap amount is KWD1,500 and for 8%, the cap amount is KWD2,750. Consequently, the maximum employee's contribution is KWD257.50.

As a result of COVID-19, the Kuwait cabinet decided as of 1 April 2020 to postpone the employers' share in private and oil sectors (not fully owned by the state) of the monthly contributions due to the social security institutions for a period of six months.

The employer's contribution for the period from 1 April 2020 to 30 September 2020 needs to be paid from 1 October 2020 in 24 installments. This is a temporary change.

Benefits provided, which are generous, include pensions on retirement and allowances for disability, sickness and death.

For employees who are nationals of other Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) member countries, contributions are payable monthly by both the employer and the employee at varying rates, which are applied to the employee's monthly salary.

A health insurance scheme applies for all expatriate residents of Kuwait. The annual premium is payable at the time of initial application or renewal of the expatriate's residence permit. The premium is KWD50 for expatriates working in Kuwait, from KWD30 for their children, KWD40 for the spouse and KWD50 for children who are more than 18 years old. No other social security obligations apply to expatriates. However, expatriate employees are entitled to end-of-service benefits, which are described in End-of-service benefits.

End-of-service benefits. End-of-service benefits for expatriate employees are described below.

Employees who are paid on daily, weekly, hourly or piecework basis are entitled to 10 days' remuneration for the first five years of service and 15 days' remuneration for each year thereafter.

Employees who are paid on monthly basis are entitled to 15 days' remuneration for each of the first five years of service and one month remuneration for every year thereafter. However, for employees whose work contract has an indefinite term, in case of resignation, they are entitled to half of the end-of-service benefits for a period of service not less than three years and not more than five years. If the period of service is more than 5 years but not more than 10 years, the employee is entitled to two-thirds of the benefit. For a period of service above 10 years, the employee is entitled to the entire end-of-service benefit. In case of a termination, the employee receives the end-of-service benefits even if the service period is less than three years.

Many employers choose not to follow the above rule of providing half or two-thirds of the entitlement.

D. Tax treaties

Kuwait has entered into double tax treaties with approximately 70 countries. In addition, double tax treaties have been signed or initialed, but not yet ratified, with several other countries.

Note: Sections E through H below do not reflect any COVID-19 measures. As a result, readers should contact the persons listed at the beginning of this chapter for the latest information.

E. Entry visas

Nationals of GCC member countries do not require visas to visit Kuwait.

Nationals of certain specified countries, which are Canada, the United States, several European countries and a few Far Eastern countries, are given entry visas on arrival at the Kuwait airport. Nationals from other countries must arrange for entry permits before traveling to Kuwait.

The tourist permit obtained on arrival enables a visitor to stay for a maximum of 90 days in Kuwait. A fine of KWD2 per day is imposed for staying in the country after the expiration of the visa, and violators may also be imprisoned.

All visas in Kuwait are issued for a definite time. Visas for short visits, usually one month, are issued to business visitors and to certain family members of residents (see Section H).

Commercial visit visas are issued to employer-sponsored or business-sponsored applicants. These may be obtained by a sponsor or host in Kuwait (for example, local hotels, local agents or partners in joint ventures) from the Department of Immigration or the Ministry of Interior before travel. To obtain a business visa, photocopies of a passport showing the personal information of an applicant (validity not less than six months from expiration date) and the applicant's university degree, as well as an application form signed by a company, are normally required. After the visa is obtained by the sponsor, it may be collected by the visitor at the Kuwait International Airport. In certain conditions, in some countries it is also possible to obtain a commercial visit visa through the nearest Kuwait embassy or consulate, assuming all the prerequisite documents are available.

F. Work permits and self-employment

Procedures. Under Kuwait labor law, work permits are issued by the Public Authority of Manpower. A large part of the workforce in Kuwait is made up of non-Kuwaiti Arabs, Europeans, Americans and Asians. It is expected that the employment of expatriate workers will continue for the foreseeable future, but the country is revisiting its demand for a foreign workforce.

Employers must obtain work permits from the Public Authority of Manpower for foreign, nationals, GCC nationals and Kuwaitis. Foreign nationals, other than the GCC nationals, get residency in Kuwait based on the period of the work permit, to take up employment. All expatriates must have a Kuwaiti sponsor to obtain work permits. Expatriates meeting the prescribed salary criteria can also sponsor domestic workers subject to satisfaction of specific conditions.

Work permits are issued by the Public Authority of Manpower after the authority considers various factors, including an employer's requirement for the labor, the availability of labor in the country and the composition of the population of the country. Issuance of work permits is sometimes banned temporarily based on the aforementioned factors. It usually takes one month to obtain a work permit if no ban is in effect. Work permits must be activated by employers when employees arrive to take up residence in Kuwait, with a fee of KWD125, KDW195 or KDW265 for one, two or three years, respectively. The permits are valid for a maximum of three years from the date of issuance.

To obtain a work permit, an employer must submit a copy of the employee's passport (not less than two years from the expiration date) and sign an application form. In certain cases, authenticated copies of the educational certificates of the employees must also be submitted. After the work permit is issued, it is sent by the employer to the country of origin of the foreign national for embassy attestation and for conducting the mandatory pre-arrival medical checkup, as well as for presentation at the point of entry into Kuwait.

As a result of the COVID-19 pandemic situation, the Kuwait government is currently allowing the transfer or conversion of a visit visa to a work permit. The employee must have a work visa to enter Kuwait. The employer arranges for the work visa. The employee is required to obtain attested copies of his or her university degree and police clearance certificate from his or her country of residence, attest them through the Kuwait embassy in the country of issuance and provide these to the employer after he or she arrives in Kuwait. After the employee enters Kuwait on a work visa, the employer will have the work visa processed into a work permit. Medical examination is required twice, in the home country of the employee and before getting the residency on the passport.

Payment of salaries through local bank accounts. The Public Authority of Manpower has announced that it will impose stiff penalties if companies fail to comply with the requirement to pay salaries to employees through local bank accounts in Kuwait by the 10th of the subsequent month.

Noncompliance with such regulations may also affect the ability of the companies to obtain or renew work permits for workers in Kuwait.

G. Residence permits

On arrival in Kuwait, an employee with a work permit must apply to the Department of Immigration for a residence permit. The residence permit, which costs KWD10 per year, is usually arranged within one month after arrival in Kuwait. Residence permits can be issued for up to three years at a time, with renewal for maximum additional three-year periods available at the request of the employer. All residents in Kuwait (employees and workers in the private sector) must take government medical insurance, which costs KWD50 per year.

All residents in Kuwait must obtain identity cards (Civil ID), which must be carried at all times. The Civil ID is obtained from the Public Authority for Civil Information after a residence permit is issued. Recently, the Public Authority for Civil Information has developed an application called “My Kuwait Mobile ID” to enable access to the information of the civil ID through a mobile device.

Foreign nationals with resident status in Kuwait may travel in and out of the country without restriction if the stay outside of Kuwait does not exceed six consecutive months. Resident status is canceled if a resident stays outside Kuwait longer than six consecutive months. As a result of the COVID-19 pandemic situation, the Kuwait government is currently not enforcing this rule on a temporary basis. No exit permit is required.

Procedures for obtaining a residence permit include a medical examination, which costs KWD10 and this includes tests for HIV antibodies and for tuberculosis. The procedures also involve fingerprinting. International vaccination certificates are not required for entry into Kuwait.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Expatriates with residence permits in Kuwait may obtain visit or dependent visas for their spouses and dependent children, and visit visas for certain family members. Dependent visas may be issued for a period of up to one year and are renewable for additional periods. Family visit visas for the spouse and children are issued for a period of three months. The family visit visa for parents is issued for a period of one month. The family visit visa for parents is granted only if the age of the parent is less than 60 years.

A person who enters Kuwait on a dependent visa may not take up employment until they complete one year under the sponsorship of family.

Family visit visa. Family visit visas may be obtained by residents of Kuwait for certain family members. These visas are valid for one month from the date of issuance and allow visitors to stay in Kuwait for a maximum period of three months. The following documents are normally required to apply for a family visit visa:
- Copy of the passport of the prospective visitor
- Affidavit in Arabic stating the relationship of the prospective visitor to the resident (sponsor) applying for the visa, attested to by the embassy of the sponsor's home country and by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Kuwait
- Marriage certificate if the visa applicant is a spouse, attested to in the same way as the affidavit mentioned above
- Copies of the work permit and Civil ID of the sponsor
- Application form signed by the sponsor

Dependent visa. Spouses and dependent children 18 years of age or younger may obtain family or dependent visas if the monthly salary of the employee is at least KWD500 (this amount could be higher in some cases) for private-sector employees (female children who are older than 18 years and not married may also obtain dependent visas). Persons holding dependent visas may not take up employment in Kuwait until they complete one year under the sponsorship of family.

Education. Kuwait places great emphasis on providing schools at all levels for its population. Education is compulsory for children 6 to 14 years of age. The free government schools are for Kuwaiti nationals, nationals of Somalia and Yemen, and the children of the foreign nationals' teachers who are working in the Ministry of Education; however, a wide range of private schools is available. These come under the inspection program of the Ministry of Education, but are otherwise self-governing. Private education is relatively expensive, with normal fees ranging from KWD700 per year at the kindergarten level to KWD3,800 per year for high school. British, American, French and other curricula are available.

Children on dependent visas may study in any of the private schools. Admission to Kuwait University is restricted to Kuwaitis, dependent children of Kuwait University professors and members of diplomatic missions in Kuwait. For other expatriate residents, special permission is required from the Minister of Education for admission to Kuwait University. Such permission is given in rare cases. A quota of 10 to 15 students is being given to each embassy in Kuwait.

Driver's permits. Holders of foreign driver's licenses, except for driver's licenses issued by GCC countries and the other countries mentioned below, may not drive in Kuwait. Holders of visitors' visas may drive with international driver's licenses, which should be endorsed at the Traffic Department after local third-party liability insurance is obtained.

Kuwait has driver's license reciprocity with GCC countries, most European Union (EU) countries, Australia, Canada, Japan, Korea (South) and the United States. Nationals and residents of these countries may drive in Kuwait with driver's licenses from the countries.

Holders of resident visas must obtain Kuwait driver's licenses. Unless specific criteria is met, the vast majority of applicants must apply for learner's permits and then take driving tests. In these instances, unless a person has a driver's work visa, driver's licenses are restricted to certain categories of professionals, including medical professionals, engineers and accountants.

To obtain a learner's permit, an applicant must have his or her eyesight tested at one of the government hospitals. Copies of the person's home country driver's license and a certificate of salary and qualification are required. These documents must be translated into Arabic and, only if the visa designation identification is DRIVER, must be attested to by the embassy in the expatriate's home country and by the Ministry of the Interior in Kuwait.

After a learner's permit is obtained, a computer examination is administered at the Traffic Department. A practical driving test is then given. Private driving schools are available to help prepare for these tests. The whole process of obtaining a driver's license usually takes one to two months.

To obtain a driver's license, the conditions mentioned below need to be fulfilled. Exceptions to these conditions exist in some cases and vary on a case-by-case basis. The following are the conditions:
- The gross monthly salary of the applicant must be a minimum of KWD600.
- The designation mentioned on the residence permit should be in the qualifying list for a driver's license (for example, engineers, accountants and medical professionals).
- The applicant must have a minimum stay of two years in Kuwait. For certain visa designations (for example, managers, accountants and doctors), this requirement may be waived through official approval. An attested degree certificate is required for waiving the two-year restriction on obtaining driving permits.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are subject to Latvian personal income tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on their Latvia-source income.

Under the Latvian law, an individual is considered to be a resident of Latvia if any of the following conditions are satisfied:

- The individual's registered (declared) place of residence is located in Latvia.
- The individual stays in Latvia for 183 days or longer in a 12-month period beginning or ending during the tax year.
- The person is a citizen of Latvia and is employed abroad by the government of Latvia.

If a convention for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income and on capital is concluded between Latvia and another jurisdiction, its provisions prevail over the local regulations when defining residency status.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Progressive personal income tax is imposed on employment income earned by individuals at the following rates.

- Up to EUR20,004 per year (EUR1,667 per month): 20%
- From EUR20,004.01 to EUR62,800 per year (from EUR1,667.01 to EUR5,233 per month): 23%
- More than EUR62,800 per year (more than EUR5,233 per month): 31%

For employees who are subject to the Latvian social security system, the employer withholds tax at 20% and 23% rates from total employment income. The 20% tax rate can be applied only by an employer to which the employee submitted a salary tax book (an electronic set of data summarizing information that affects the application of personal income tax). For employees who are subject to a foreign social security system (in possession of a valid A1 Certificate or Certificate of Coverage), the employer is responsible for withholding and payment of personal income tax at rates of 20%, 23% and 31%.

In general, employment income subject to tax consists of salary, premiums, single and regular remuneration, and any other payments or benefits received directly or indirectly in cash or in kind by the employee from the employer based on existing or previous employment relationships. Fringe benefits, including employer-provided lodging and car usage, are also taxable.

Self-employment and business income. The income of individuals engaged in self-employment activities is subject to personal income tax at the following progressive rates:
• Up to EUR20,004 per year: 20%
• From EUR20,004.01 to EUR62,800 per year: 23%
• More than EUR62,800 per year: 31%

For purposes of determining income tax on self-employment income, taxable income equals gross income minus eligible expenses. As of 1 January 2018, business expense deductions are limited to 80% of earned income, except specific expenses that, according to the legislative acts, are fully deductible.

A specific group of individuals (generally pensioners or people with a disability) performing business activities in certain specified areas (for example, florists and those engaging in manufacturing or repair of clothing and footwear) may choose to pay the fixed reduced patent fee instead of paying personal income tax and social security contributions based on the amount of income. The amount of the reduced patent fee is EUR17 per year or EUR9 per half year.

Investment income. For residents and nonresidents, the following investment income is taxed at a rate of 20% as income from capital other than capital gains:
• Dividends and income related to dividends, if exemption criteria are not met
• Interest income and income related to interest
• Income from contributions in private pension funds
• Income from concluded life insurance contracts with the accumulation of funds
• Income from individual management of financial instruments according to the investor's mandate
• Income from investment account

Dividends are exempt from taxation if one of the following criteria is met:
• Dividends are distributed from profit earned after 1 January 2018 that is subject to corporate income tax according to Corporate Income Tax Law.

- Dividends are distributed from profit subject to corporate income tax abroad or a tax equivalent to corporate income tax or personal income tax, or a tax equivalent to personal income tax is withheld from dividends abroad.

Directors' fees. Board members of resident and nonresident companies are subject to personal income tax at progressive rates, regardless of whether the fees are paid by Latvian-registered companies or foreign companies. The personal income tax rates are the same as those for employment income.

Rental income. Income from rent of own property is subject to personal income tax at a rate of 10% if the individual registers the rent agreement with the tax authorities within five business days from the day on which the rent agreement is concluded and does not incur a substantial amount of business-related expenses.

Lotteries and gambling. Lotteries and gambling wins are subject to personal income tax at progressive rates if the amount (value) of the prizes during the tax year exceeds EUR3,000. The personal income tax rates are the same as those for employment income.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Under Latvian laws, employee income from employer-provided stock options is exempt from tax if the following conditions are met:
- The minimum period for the holding of the stock options (period from day when the stock options are granted until the day when the employee is entitled to exercise the stock options) is not less than 12 months.
- During the period for the holding of the stock options, the employee is in an employment relationship with a capital company that granted the share acquisition rights to the employee (or related group company).
- The employer (Latvian local entity) has provided to the Latvian tax authorities information (informative report) regarding the stock option plan and its participants.
- The stock options are exercised not later than within six months from the date of termination of the employment relationship between the employee and the employer that has granted the stock options (or related group company).
- The capital company (or related group company) that granted stock options to the employee did not issue a loan to the employee that was not repaid until the exercise of the stock options.

If the abovementioned conditions are not met, income derived from the exercise of employer-provided stock options is subject to personal income tax at progressive rates (social security contributions also need to be paid). The personal income tax rates are the same as those for employment income. Income derived from the exercise of employer-provided stock options is calculated as the difference between the market value at the time of exercise and the acquisition value.

Income from a substantial participation in a foreign entity. Income from a substantial participation in a foreign entity that is registered in a low-tax country is subject to income tax, regardless of whether the profit is distributed to the individual.

Benefit from use of company's car. The use of an employer's car for private purposes is considered to be a benefit to the employee that is subject to personal income tax, unless the employer has paid tax on the use of its vehicles. The amount of tax for the use of vehicles registered after 2005 ranges from EUR31 to EUR82, depending on the vehicle's engine capacity.

Capital gains. Capital gains are taxed at a rate of 20% in Latvia.

Capital gains equal the difference between the disposal price of a capital asset and the acquisition price of that capital asset. In the event of the liquidation of a company, the capital gains on investments in share capital equal the difference between the liquidation quota and the investment value.

The following are considered to be capital assets:
- Shares, investments in partnerships and other financial instruments
- Investment fund certificates and other transferable securities
- Debt securities (promissory notes, certificates of deposit and short-term debt instruments issued by companies) and other money instruments
- Real estate (with certain exceptions)
- Investment in cryptocurrency
- A company within the meaning of the commercial law
- Intellectual property
- Investment gold and other precious metals, and transaction objects in currency trading exchanges or goods' exchanges

Capital gains derived from the sale of real estate are not taxable if any of the following circumstances exist:
- The individual has owned the real estate for more than 60 months, and the address of the real estate had been the person's declared place of residence for at least 12 months before the sale.
- The individual has owned the real estate since it was registered in the Land Register for more than 60 months, and the real estate had been the only real estate possessed by the individual.
- The individual had owned only the real estate declared in the Land Register and the income from the property sale is invested in functionally similar property within 12 months after the sale of the real estate.

Sales of other types of personal property in one-off transactions that are not part of a commercial activity are not subject to personal income tax.

Income, including sales income, from government promissory notes is not subject to personal income tax.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Individuals may deduct the employees' portion of social security contributions from the income reported on their tax returns. They also may deduct the employees' portion of payments in other European Union (EU)/European Economic Area (EEA) member states that are essentially similar to social security contributions and that are determined by legislative acts of such states if the respective payments have not been deducted in the other state.

Personal deductions and allowances. Individuals may deduct the following expenses from the income reported on their tax returns:

- Contributions to private pension funds and to life insurance schemes with the accumulation of contributions. However, the deduction for the sum of both types of contributions is limited to 10% of annual taxable income, but not more than EUR4,000 per year.
- Contributions to life insurance schemes without the accumulation of contributions and to health or accident schemes. However, both types of contributions are limited to 10% of annual taxable income but not more than EUR426.86 per year.
- Medical expenses, expenses for professional education and donations to acceptable charitable organizations and governmental institutions. However, such expenses are limited to 50% of annual taxable income, but not more than EUR600 per year.

The current differentiated nontaxable minimum (used to reduce the amount of taxable income) ranges from EUR0 to EUR300 per month, depending on an individual's income. For an individual whose monthly income does not exceed EUR500, the full amount of the nontaxable minimum applies. However, for income between EUR500 and EUR1,800 per month, the nontaxable minimum decreases, and if the income exceeds EUR1,800 per month, the nontaxable income minimum equals EUR0.

A parent may deduct EUR250 per child per month.

The above tax allowance in the amount of EUR250 cannot be applied for parents, grandparents and other family members, unless these persons have a disability status and do not receive a state pension. Effective from 1 July 2018, the allowance in the amount of EUR250 applies to an unemployed spouse if any of the following conditions are satisfied:

- He or she has a dependent child under the age of 3.
- He or she has three or more children under the age of 18 or 24 and at least one child is under 7 years old, until the children pursue basic, professional, higher or special education.
- He or she has five children under the age of 18 or 24, until the children pursue professional, higher or special education.

Income tax paid abroad may be credited against tax payable in Latvia. The amount of the credit is limited to the amount of the tax paid on the income in Latvia.

If a Latvian resident earns employment income for work in the EU, EEA or in a country with which Latvia has entered into a double tax treaty, and if the respective income is subject to income tax in the work country, the income is non-taxable in Latvia. As a result of the automatic exchange of information between tax authorities, Latvian tax residents who work in EU countries are exempt from the submission of an annual personal income tax return in Latvia. However, Latvian tax residents who work in other countries must declare the foreign employment income in their annual personal income tax returns in Latvia and must attach a document issued by the foreign tax administration stating the type, amount of income received and amount of tax paid.

Personal deductions for medical and educational expenses may not be claimed by nonresidents, except for nonresidents who are residents of another EU/EEA member state and have derived more than 75% of their total income from Latvia in the tax year.

Business deductions. Costs for materials, goods, fuel and energy, salaries, rent and leases, repairs and depreciation on fixed assets, and other costs may be deducted from the taxable income of a self-employed individual.

Expenses incurred to obtain intellectual property rights are deductible, subject to limits set forth in rules of the Cabinet of Ministers.

Rates. The following progressive personal income tax rates are imposed on taxable income earned by individuals at the following rates:
- Up to EUR20,004 per year: 20%
- From EUR20,004.01 to EUR62,800 per year: 23%
- More than EUR62,800 per year: 31%

Relief for losses. Self-employed individuals may carry losses forward for three years.

B. Other taxes

Property tax. Property tax is imposed on individuals, legal entities and nonresidents that possess or hold Latvian land, buildings and engineering constructions. The property tax rate, which is set by the municipalities, ranges from 0.2% to 3% of the cadastral value of land, buildings and constructions (however, see below the rates for houses and flats not used for commercial purposes). A municipality can apply a rate exceeding 1.5% of the cadastral value only if the property is not maintained in accordance with the required standards. Agricultural land that is not cultivated (except for land that has an area not exceeding one hectare and land subject to limitations on its use for agricultural activities), collapsed buildings that are environment-degrading and buildings hazardous to personal safety are subject to 3% real estate tax. Engineering constructions that are owned by natural persons and that are not used for commercial activities and ancillary buildings (if certain conditions are met) are exempt from property tax.

The following are the property tax rates for houses and flats not used for commercial purposes:
- 0.2% of the cadastral value below EUR56,915
- 0.4% of the cadastral value exceeding EUR56,915 but below EUR106,715
- 0.6% of the cadastral value exceeding EUR106,715

For immovable property located in Riga, the owner of the property must pay property tax at a rate of 1.5% to the municipality if no person is registered (declared) for the immovable property.

Estate and gift taxes. Estate and inheritance taxes are not imposed in Latvia. Gifts above EUR1,425 received from non-relatives are taxed as personal income. Royalties received by legal successors of deceased persons are taxable as personal income. State authorities may impose duties on the value of inheritances at rates ranging from 0.125% to 7.5%.

Microenterprise tax. On meeting certain requirements, an individual performing business activities in specific areas determined by law may apply for the microenterprise tax payment procedure. Under this procedure, the company pays microenterprise tax at a rate of 25% of turnover not exceeding EUR25,000 and at a rate of 40% of turnover exceeding EUR25,000. If turnover or the applicable tax amount does not exceed EUR50, the microenterprise must pay a tax of EUR50. The microenterprise tax payment includes state social insurance contributions and personal income tax. The microenterprise tax regime applies only to the income of an individual performing business activities. If such an individual employs employees, employment income of the employees is taxable as standard employment income.

C. Social security

The base for mandatory social security contributions is employment income, which is subject to personal income tax in Latvia. In general, employers (or in certain cases, employees) make social security contributions on a monthly basis. As of 1 July 2021, the minimum base for social security contributions equals the minimum monthly salary (EUR500 for 2021). If an employee's monthly base for social security contributions is lower than the minimum monthly salary, the employer covers the difference between minimum social security contributions and the employee's calculated social security contributions. The legislative acts provide some specific exemptions from the application of the minimum base for social security contributions.

Employers and employees make social security contributions on monthly salaries at general rates of 23.59% and 10.5%, respectively.

Foreign employees, who do not have a permanent place of residence in Latvia, but who remain in Latvia for more than 183 days in any 12-month period and who are employed by a non-EU company, pay quarterly social security contributions at a rate of 31.83%.

The income cap for social security contributions is EUR62,800. However, solidarity tax is imposed on income that exceeds the cap at the same rates as the social security contributions. Part of solidarity tax covers the highest rate of personal income tax (that is, used as credit against personal income tax imposed at a 31% rate).

The annual rate of solidarity tax equals 25%, which consists of the following:
- 1% health insurance contributions (0.5% employee part; 0.5% employer part)
- 10% transferred to personal income tax to cover highest rate of 31% (payable by employee)
- 14% state pension insurance (payable by employer)

The employee's part of solidarity tax goes to the personal income tax budget, state pension special budget and financing of health care services, but the employer receives a refund of overpaid solidarity tax (difference between 23.59% and 14%) by 1 September of the year following the tax year.

If a company from an EU/EEA member state employs citizens of Latvia, it must register with the State Revenue Service in Latvia for the purpose of social security contributions or the employee can register as a social security contribution payer. Regulation (EC) No. 883/2004 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 2004 on the coordination of social security systems applies to nationals of a member state, stateless persons and refugees residing in an EU member state who are or have been subject to the legislation of one or more of the EU member states, as well as to the members of their families and to their survivors.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Latvia is the calendar year.

Employers must withhold taxes and social security contributions on personal salary and then remit the withheld amounts to the fiscal authorities monthly on the same day the salary is paid.

Every taxpayer receives a tax code number from the fiscal authorities. Individual taxpayers must submit an annual tax return, but they may authorize a certified auditor to submit the return on their behalf. In general, the tax return must be filed during the period of 1 March to 1 June of the year following the tax year. However, if income for the tax year exceeds EUR62,800, the tax return must be filed during the period of 1 April to 1 July of the year following the tax year.

A nonresident who permanently leaves Latvia before year-end must file an annual tax declaration within 30 days after he or she stops receiving income.

If the tax payable exceeds EUR640, the tax may be paid in three equal installments. These installments are due on 23 June, 23 July and 23 August of the year following the tax year if the filing deadline is 1 June. If the filing deadline is 1 July, the installments must be paid by 23 July, 23 August and 23 September.

The following are the rules for the filing of a capital gains tax return:

- If capital gains do not exceed EUR1,000 per quarter, a capital gains tax return must be filed by 15 January of the year following the tax year.
- If capital gains exceed EUR1,000 per quarter, a capital gains tax return must be filed for the quarter by the 15th day of the month following the respective quarter.

If an individual realized capital gains and incurred capital losses during the tax year, he or she can submit an annual capital gains tax return by 1 March of the year following the tax year to calculate tax on capital gains based on a summary procedure.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

F. Entry visas

All member states of the Schengen Agreement have unified procedures and conditions for issuing Schengen visas. The Schengen visa is a visa that provides to a foreigner the right to stay in Latvia and in other Schengen member states for a period indicated in the visa sticker.

Types of visas. The types of Schengen visas are described below.

Airport transit visa (Category A). An airport transit visa (Category A) may be issued for a stay in an international transit zone at the airport of a Schengen member state. An airport transit visa is required for nationals of certain countries who need to change an airplane at the airport of a Schengen member state or whose airplane lands in the airport of a Schengen member state on the way from one non-Schengen member state to another non-Schengen member state.

Short-term visa (Category C). A short-term visa (Category C) is issued for a short-term visit to Schengen member states or for transit through such states. Depending on the purpose of the visit, it may be issued for one, two or multiple entries. An entry means crossing the border between a Schengen member state and a non-Schengen member state. A foreigner holding a C visa may stay in Schengen member states for up to 90 days in a half-year period after the first crossing of the border between a Schengen member state and a non-Schengen member state.

Long-term visa (Category D). Depending on the circumstances, a foreigner who needs to stay in Latvia more than 90 days in a half-year period can apply for a long-stay visa (or a residence permit).

Visa with a limited territorial validity. If a third-country national needs to enter a Schengen member state, but circumstances forbid such person from having a uniform visa that is valid in all Schengen member states, he or she may be granted a visa with a limited territorial validity. This means that visa is valid for entering only those Schengen member states that are indicated on the visa. If a visa states that it is valid only for Latvia, a foreigner is barred from entering other Schengen member states.

G. Work and residence permits

A residence permit is required if a foreigner wants to reside in Latvia for a time period exceeding 90 days within a half year, beginning from the date of first entry. EU citizens are not required to obtain a residence permit. However, they must register and obtain a residence card or permanent residence card (with the exception of an EU citizen who works in Latvia but travels back to his or her residence country on a weekly basis).

Residency permit for non-EU citizens. Non-EU citizens can obtain five-year residency permits in Latvia, which allow unrestricted travel within the territory of Schengen member states. An individual can apply for a residency permit if he or she makes the following investments in Latvia and complies with certain criteria provided by law:
• Investment in a company
• Purchase of real estate
• Investing in a bank's subordinate capital (deposit)

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Spouses and dependents of expatriates may apply jointly with the expatriate for residence permits as well as work permits. They must provide legalized copies of marriage and birth certificates to obtain Latvian visas or residence permits.

Marital property regime. The default marital property regime in Latvia is one of community property. Spouses may establish, alter or terminate their property rights by marital contract before or during the marriage. Under the community property regime, property owned by a spouse prior to marriage and property acquired during the marriage is community property, unless specifically reserved as separate property by contract.

Forced heirship. Forced heirs in Latvia include a surviving spouse and any descendants, or the most closely related ascendants. The amount of their legal portion varies, according to the number of forced heirs surviving.

Driver's permits. Latvia recognizes foreign driver's licenses in accordance with the European Convention on Road Transport, including international driver's licenses. In other cases, if a foreign national resides in Latvia longer than 12 months, he or she must exchange the foreign driver's license for a Latvian driver's license. To obtain a Latvian license, the foreign national must take a driving test. Licenses issued by EU-member countries are valid in Latvia.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. All resident and nonresident individuals are subject to income tax on their income derived in Lebanon. However, certain individuals, such as agricultural workers, nurses and clergymen, are exempt from tax.

Income subject to tax. The following are the three categories of taxable income:
- Profits of sole traders from industrial, commercial and non-commercial professions
- Salaries, wages and pensions
- Income from movable capital (dividends, interest and other types of investment income)

Employment income. Individuals are subject to tax on their salaries and wages earned in Lebanon.

Gross employment income includes total salaries and allowances, wages, indemnities, bonuses, gratuities and other benefits in cash and in kind.

In determining net employment income, the following deductions may be claimed:
- Representation allowances up to 10% of basic salary
- Transportation allowance provided under the Labor Law
- Personal allowances
- Schooling allowances allowable by the Labor Law
- In general, all allowances granted to cover disbursements incurred in connection with the performance of employment duties if they are supported by invoices or similar documents

The maximum allowed per diem is LBP50,000 for national trips and LBP150,000 for international trips.

Net employment income is taxed at progressive rates ranging from 2% to 25%. For a table of the rates applicable to employment, see Rates.

Self-employment income. Sole traders are taxed on the basis of lump-sum profits, which are equal to a specified percentage of gross income.

Sole traders must submit to the Ministry of Finance before 1 February of each year a statement showing their total gross income and sales during the preceding year. They are taxed at progressive rates ranging from 4% to 25% (for a table of rates applicable to self-employment income, see Rates).

Gross income is defined as the total gross proceeds from all operations concluded by the taxpayer during the year preceding the year of assessment. It includes the value of commodities, goods, instruments or materials sold or hired, commissions, brokerage fees, interest, exchange differences and fees.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. Resident individuals are entitled to the following family exemptions, which are deducted from taxable income.

Status	Annual exemption (LBP)
Taxpayer	7,500,000
Spouse	2,500,000
First child	500,000
Second child	500,000
Third child	500,000
Fourth child	500,000
Fifth child	500,000

If both parents work, the allowance of LBP500,000 per child for the taxpayer's first five children is granted equally.

Rates. The following tax rates apply to employment income.

Taxable income LBP	Tax rate %	Tax due LBP	Cumulative tax due LBP
First 6,000,000	2	120,000	120,000
Next 9,000,000	4	360,000	480,000
Next 15,000,000	7	1,050,000	1,530,000

Next 105,000,000	20	21,000,000	34,830,000

The following tax rates apply to the lump-sum profits of sole traders derived from industrial, commercial and noncommercial professions.

Lump-sum profits LBP	Tax rate %	Tax due LBP	Cumulative tax due LBP
First 9,000,000	4	360,000	360,000
Next 15,000,000	7	1,050,000	1,410,000
Next 30,000,000	12	3,600,000	5,010,000

Nonresident persons and entities that do not have a workplace to conduct business in Lebanon and that earn income subject to income tax in Lebanon or generate revenues by themselves in Lebanon are taxed on a deemed profit of the amounts received from Lebanon. The deemed profit percentage is 50% on services and 15% on products, and the tax rate is 15%. Consequently, the effective tax rate is 7.5% for income derived from services and 2.25% for income derived from the supply of products. The tax must be withheld by the resident party and paid to the tax authorities.

B. Other taxes

Built property tax. Built property tax is generally imposed on rental income, including fees for services provided by the landlord to the tenant. However, it is imposed on estimated rental income determined by the Department of Built Property Tax if any of the following conditions apply:
- No rent contract exists.
- The property is occupied by the owner.
- The property is occupied by another party for no rent (free of charge).

Tax is calculated on the net income from property, which equals the gross rental income subject to Built Property Tax, as described above, less allowable expenses as stated in the rent contracts. These expenses are specified by law and are limited to a certain percentage of income.

To qualify unoccupied property for exemption from the Built Property Tax, the owner must file the relevant declaration to the competent authorities within a month from the date on which the property was vacated.

The following tax rates are applied to the net income from each property to determine the Built Property Tax.

Taxable income		Tax
Exceeding LBP	Not exceeding LBP	rate %
0	40,000,000	4
40,000,000	80,000,000	6
80,000,000	120,000,000	8
120,000,000	200,000,000	11
200,000,000	—	14

Built property tax can be waived if the property is used by its owner who is conducting commercial or industrial activities subject to corporate income tax.

Inheritance and gift tax. Inheritance and gift taxes are imposed in Lebanon and consist of a flat tax and a proportional tax.

The flat tax is imposed at a rate of 0.5% of the gross inheritance or gift amount less an exemption of LBP40 million.

The net amount of the inheritance, after the deduction of the flat tax, is distributed among the various heirs in accordance with the law. Each heir, depending on his or her relationship with the deceased, may claim deductions ranging between LBP24 million and LBP120 million. The following inheritance tax rates apply to the amount of the inheritance, reduced by the deduction.

Gift tax rates are the same as the inheritance tax rates.

Stamp duty. Under the Lebanese Stamp Duty Law, fiscal stamps at a rate of 4 per 1,000 must be affixed to all deeds or contracts. Payment of stamp duty is due within five days from the date of signature of the deed or contract. A fine equal to five times the duty is imposed if the stamp duty is paid after the deadline or if it is not paid at all.

If the value of the contract or subcontract is not determined or will be determined at a later stage, a fixed stamp duty of LBP5,000 (USD3.3) must be affixed on the contract. In addition to the fixed stamp duty, the beneficiary must settle a proportional stamp duty of 4 per 1,000 on raising an invoice.

Rent contracts must be registered each year and are subject to stamp duty at a rate of 4 per 1,000 of the rent.

Capital Gain Tax. Gains on the disposal of real estate properties are subject to Capital Gain Tax at a rate of 15% if either of the following circumstances exists:

- They are realized by persons who are not subject to income tax or who previously benefited from permanent, special or exceptional exemptions from this tax.
- They are realized by persons who are subject to income tax, but the real estate property is not part of their profession.

The taxable gain equals the difference between the disposal value and the cost of the asset, and taxpayers (meeting the above definition) may deduct 8% of the gain per year for every full year between the date of acquisition and the date of disposal of the property. An owner as classified above is exempt from tax on the sale of a real estate property if the owner holds the asset for at least full 12 years. Otherwise, the owner must pay Capital Gain Tax on the difference described above in the year of disposal.

C. Social security

Lebanon operates a compulsory social security scheme that requires contributions from both employers and employees. The social security scheme in Lebanon covers the following areas:

- Sickness and maternity
- Family allowance
- End-of-service indemnity

Contributions. All companies that have at least one employee must register with the Social Security National Fund within one month of beginning operations. New employees must be registered within 15 days from the date of their employment.

Contributions to the social security scheme are calculated as percentages of monthly salaries and wages including overtime, gratuities and fringe benefits. For the sickness and maternity and family allowance schemes, the maximum amounts on which contributions are calculated are LBP2,500,000 and LBP1,500,000, respectively.

For the sickness and maternity scheme, the contribution rates are 8% for employers and 3% for employees. Only employers make contributions to the family allowances and end-of-service indemnity schemes. The contribution rates are 6% and 8.5%, respectively.

Non-Lebanese employees need not be registered with the Social Security National Fund if their contracts are signed outside Lebanon with foreign entities and if they can prove that they enjoy social security benefits in their home country similar to the benefits granted in Lebanon.

Totalization agreements. Lebanon has entered into totalization agreements with Belgium, France, Italy and the United Kingdom to prevent double payment of social security contributions by expatriates working in Lebanon.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Under the Lebanese income tax law, employers are responsible for withholding payroll tax and employees' social security contributions from employees' salaries on a monthly basis and remit the withholdings to the tax authorities every three months. Employees are not required to file tax returns. Social security contributions by employers are payable on a quarterly basis for companies with fewer than 10 employees and on a monthly basis for larger companies. Employee contributions are withheld by the employer and paid to the authorities together with the employer's contribution.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Lebanon has signed double tax treaties with the following countries.

Algeria	Iran	Romania
Armenia	Italy	Russian Federation
Bahrain	Jordan	Senegal
Belarus	Kuwait	Sudan*
Bulgaria	Malaysia	Syria
Cuba*	Malta	Tunisia
Cyprus	Morocco	Turkey
Czech Republic	Oman	United Arab Emirates
Egypt	Pakistan	Ukraine
France	Poland	Yemen
Gabon*	Qatar

* These treaties are not yet being enforced.

A double tax treaty between Lebanon and Saudi Arabia is currently under negotiation; however, its content is not yet available, and there is no information regarding its expected date of entry into force.

F. Entry visas and work permits

All expatriates working in Lebanon must have a work permit and a residence permit. Such permits may be issued only at the request of an employer.

To obtain a work permit, the following items must be submitted:

- A special work permit application completed and signed by the applicant and the employer.
- A list of the names of the foreign employees (if any) at the office of the employer that must be signed and sealed by the employer.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Citizen residents and permanent residents are taxable on worldwide income, except for employment income if it is sourced and taxed abroad.

Tax-resident expatriates are taxed on worldwide income. However, expatriates are not taxed on property income derived from foreign sources or on income derived from disposals of investment assets generating foreign-source income.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. All compensation from sources within or deemed to be within Lesotho is taxable. Compensation includes salaries, wages, overtime or leave pay, commissions, directors' fees, bonuses, gratuities, certain benefits in cash or in kind, allowances, gifts, pensions and retirement benefits. Compensation does not include fringe benefits, and employers are subject to tax on them.

War and disability pension benefits and amounts received from agricultural activities are tax-exempt.

Self-employment and business income. Any individual who earns self-employment or business income from a source within Lesotho or a source deemed to be within Lesotho is subject to tax in the year the income is earned.

To be taxable, self-employment or business income must arise from a source in Lesotho or a source deemed to be within Lesotho. Business income is defined as all profits or gains arising from a business, including capital gains. Business income is calculated by subtracting exempt income and allowable deductions from gross income.

Investment income. Interest is taxable. The first LSL500 of interest income received by a resident individual from a single savings account is exempt from tax.

Resident individuals are not subject to tax on dividends.

Other investment income, including the profit or loss on the sale of an investment asset, is taxed with other income at the rates described in Rates.

Foreign-source income from employment in a foreign country derived by a resident individual is exempt from income tax if the income is chargeable to tax in the foreign country.

Capital gains and losses. Gains or losses derived from the sale of business and investment assets are included in the normal taxable income of an individual. Gains or losses derived from the sale of personal assets are not included in taxable income, provided they are not used in the production of income subject to tax.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Expenses directly related to employment are deductible, but no deductions are allowed for personal expenses, including clothing and commuting, income tax, expenses incurred that are capital in nature, gifts, fines and insurance premiums paid to nonresident insurers.

Business deductions. In general, expenses incurred in earning taxable income are deductible, except for expenses of a capital nature.

In general, interest is taxed with other income at the rates set forth in Rates.

Tax credit. The law provides for an individual to be granted a nonrefundable tax credit. A tax credit is a rebate or relief granted by law to individuals who have taxable income for the income tax year. It is directly subtracted from the tax amount after applying the applicable marginal tax rates to the chargeable income. The nonrefundable tax credit is currently LSL840 per month or LSL10,080 per year.

Foreign tax relief. A resident taxpayer is entitled to a foreign tax credit against his or her liability to Lesotho income tax with respect to any foreign income tax borne directly or indirectly by the resident on foreign-source income subject to Lesotho tax.

Rates. The tax rates for residents are set forth in the following table.

Taxable income
Exceeding LSL	Not exceeding LSL	Rate %
0	64,200	20
64,200	—	30

The following categories of income derived by nonresidents are subject to withholding tax.

Type of income	Withholding tax rate (%)
Dividends, interest, royalties, natural resource payments and management fees	25
Payments for services	10
Payments to resident contractors	5
Interest paid to residents	10

Relief for losses. Losses may be carried forward indefinitely and offset against income of a similar nature in subsequent years.

B. Other taxes

Lesotho does not impose net worth, estate or gift taxes.

Fringe benefit tax. Fringe benefit tax is imposed on the employer, based on the employer's fringe benefit taxable amount (the value of non-monetary benefits provided to employees). A fringe benefit is a monetary or non-monetary benefit derived from employment that does not form part of an employee's normal salary or wage. Non-monetary fringe benefits are also referred to as benefits in kind. In summary, benefits in kind refer to earnings, other than in cash, that are received or due to an employee by virtue of his or her employment relationship with the employer. If fringe benefits are received or enjoyed by an associate of an employee, the fringe benefit tax applies.

C. Social security

Lesotho does not impose any social security taxes.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The income tax year in Lesotho runs from 1 April to 31 March for individuals. Tax returns must be filed within three months after the end of the tax year or of the financial year if the financial year is different from the tax year.

Employers are required by law to withhold taxes from remuneration paid to their employees on a monthly basis and to remit these taxes to the tax authorities.

Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Double tax relief in the form of a tax credit is available in the absence of an applicable double tax treaty.

Lesotho has entered into double tax treaties with Botswana, Eswatini, Mauritius, South Africa and the United Kingdom.

After the period of validity for a work authorization or work permit expires, an individual may reapply for such items.

H. Residence permits

Residence permits are granted to foreigners on the basis of employment. They are granted on the application of the employing company. A residence permit is regarded as temporary and is not issued until it has been determined that a similarly qualified national is not available. A national must be employed and trained to replace the foreigner, and some occupations are restricted to nationals (for example, secretarial and clerical).

Employed foreign nationals who reside in Libya for more than 15 years may obtain a 5-year residence permit, which is renewable every 5 years.

The following documents must be submitted with the application for residence permit for workers:
- Application form containing family details
- Detailed curriculum vitae and copies of qualifications
- Passport and a copy of the passport
- Copy of the work visa
- Work authorization issued by the Manpower Department
- Twelve passport-size photos

Requirements and documentation are subject to frequent change.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Dependent relative visas are usually granted automatically to family members of a foreign national who holds a valid work authorization or permit. However, an expatriate's spouse must file an application for a residence permit through the expatriate's employer and may not undertake employment.

Marital property regime. The default marital property regime in Libya is based on Islamic law. Under Islamic law, a legal share of the estate automatically devolves to the surviving spouse and children.

Driver's permits. Expatriates may drive legally in Libya using their home-country driver's licenses for up to three months. Holders of residence permits must apply for local driving licenses.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Under Liechtenstein's tax system, the national government and regional communities levy income and net worth taxes. The regional communities levy surcharges on the taxes of the national government. Income tax is levied on all forms of income. As a result of the tax reform that entered into force on 1 January 2011, the net worth tax is no longer calculated separately but is integrated into the income tax.

All resident or domiciled individuals are subject to income tax on worldwide income, with the exception of income from real estate located abroad and income from either a fixed place of business or a permanent establishment located abroad. In addition, all resident or domiciled individuals are subject to income tax based on the standardized return level of worldwide net assets other than real estate and business premises located abroad.

Nonresidents are subject to tax if they are employed in Liechtenstein, if they own real property in Liechtenstein or if they have business premises in Liechtenstein. Nonresidents are subject to tax on income derived from Liechtenstein sources, including Liechtenstein real estate, owned or leased, and business premises. In addition, nonresidents are taxed on income from self-employment and business activities carried out in Liechtenstein.

Individuals are considered resident or domiciled in Liechtenstein if they meet any of the following conditions:
- They maintain a legal residence in Liechtenstein.
- They have a "customary place of abode" in Liechtenstein. This means that they are present in Liechtenstein for at least six consecutive months.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Taxable income includes compensation from employment, self-employment and income from secondary employment.

In general, retirement benefits in Liechtenstein are also included in taxable income. Retirement benefits are derived from the following sources:

- Mandatory social security system (old-age and survivors' insurance). Pensions are based on premiums paid and on the number of years employed. Benefits generally satisfy minimum cost-of-living requirements.
- Company pension plans.
- Individual savings.

At least 30% of old-age and survivors' pension benefits and disability insurance benefits is taxable.

Self-employment and business income. In general, income taxes are levied on individuals who earn self-employment or business income in Liechtenstein. However, for nonresident partners of companies domiciled in Liechtenstein, the companies are subject to taxes on profits.

Self-employment and business income is taxed with other income at the rates set forth in Rates.

Investment income. Rental income and investment income from dividends, interest, royalties and licenses are not taxed based on the amount of effective income. Instead, they are taxed based on the application of the standardized return rate to the net market value of all movable and immovable assets (see Section B).

Directors' fees. Resident directors are subject to tax on directors' fees from companies in Liechtenstein together with other income at the rates described in Rates. A 12% withholding tax is imposed on directors' fees paid by companies in Liechtenstein to nonresident directors.

Capital gains and losses

Movable assets. Capital gains derived from transfers of participations (business assets) and personal movable assets are generally exempt from income tax. For capital gains derived from the transfer of participations (business assets), Liechtenstein introduced anti-avoidance rules, applicable from the 2019 tax year (for entities, the 2019 tax year is the reporting period ending in the 2019 calendar year). Under these anti-avoidance rules, capital gains deriving from the sale of a foreign participation are no longer tax exempt from tax if the revenue from the participation mainly results from passive sources and if the net profit of that participation is low-taxed.

Immovable assets. Capital gains derived from transfers of personal and business immovable assets are subject to a separate capital gains tax on real estate. The gains are taxed at the same rates as the income tax rates applicable to unmarried persons, which are progressive rates with a maximum rate of 24%. Recapture of depreciation of immovable business assets is treated as ordinary income and taxed at the ordinary tax rates (not at the rates applicable to capital gains).

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Employees may deduct necessary expenses incurred in connection with their employment, including travel expenses, meals and education.

Premiums for old-age and survivors' insurance, disability insurance and unemployment insurance are fully deductible from taxable income. Contributions and premiums payable to pension funds are deductible, up to a maximum of 18% of taxable income.

Personal deductions and allowances. A limited amount may be deducted for premiums paid for life, accident and health insurance, for expenditure for medical and dental treatment, and for costs related to children's education.

No specific personal allowances are granted to individual taxpayers.

Business deductions. Individuals may deduct all business expenses and 4% (standardized return rate) of the amount of their business working capital (anti-avoidance rules applicable as of the 2019 tax year should be considered). Income taxes and net worth taxes are not deductible.

Rates

Income tax. The progressive income tax rates for 2021 range from 2.8% to 22.4% (for a commune applying a communal surcharge of 180%, which is the maximum surcharge in 2020). Income from foreign assets, including real property and business premises, and other foreign income is considered in calculating the progressive tax rate.

The tax levied by the state consists of income tax and the surcharge. Communities impose an additional surcharge on the state tax at rates ranging from 150% to 180% (for 2020), resulting in a maximum income tax rate of 22.4%.

Lump-sum taxation. Instead of net worth and income tax, lump-sum taxation may apply to individuals who meet all of the following conditions:
- They are domiciled or reside in Liechtenstein and they are not citizens of Liechtenstein.
- They are not employed in Liechtenstein.
- They live on income from assets or other payments received from sources abroad.

Lump-sum tax is assessed on the living costs of the taxpayer. For the sake of convenience, the living costs are usually a multiple of the annual rent. The taxable amount results from multiplying the living costs by the applicable tax rate of 25%. According to the practice of the tax administration of Liechtenstein, the lump-sum tax must be a substantial amount. Otherwise, the regular tax regime applies.

Relief from losses. Business losses of self-employed individuals may be carried forward for an unlimited period. However, the offsetting loss is limited to 70% of taxable income (even if unused loss carryforwards exist). Consequently, at least 30% of the positive taxable income is taxed. No carrybacks are allowed.

B. Other taxes

Net worth tax. Because the net worth tax is integrated into the income tax through the calculation of the standardized return, wealth is not taxed separately. The determination of the amount of the taxable assets is relevant only for the purpose of determining the standardized income that is subject to income tax. The annually determined standardized return rate, which is applied to the net market value of all movable and immovable assets, is 4% in 2021. In addition, the surcharges described in Rates may apply. Real estate and business premises abroad are not subject to taxation. Liabilities and any increase in assets during the year may be deducted.

Inheritance and gift taxes. As part of the 2011 tax reform, the inheritance and gift tax was abolished.

C. Social security

Contributions

Employees. Liechtenstein's contribution rate for old-age and survivors' insurance and for family pension funds for 2021 is 11.89% of total (unlimited) salary. The employer pays 7.19%, and the employee pays 4.7%. The employer withholds the employee's share monthly. In addition, contributions of 1%, on annual salary of up to CHF126,000, must be made to the unemployment insurance fund. The cost is divided equally between the employer and the employee.

All employees who pay into the Liechtenstein social security system must contribute to a pension plan. The employer's contribution must equal at least the employee's mandatory 4% contribution, resulting in total contributions of at least 8% for each employee.

Self-employed. In 2021, self-employed individuals must make social security contributions at a rate of 11.79% of their income from a business or profession. The 11.79% rate also applies to partnership profits. Self-employed persons are not required to be members of a pension plan.

Totalization agreements. Liechtenstein has adopted European Regulation 883/04 concerning the application of social security schemes. The regulation applies to all European Union (EU) and European Free Trade Association (EFTA) countries.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Liechtenstein corresponds to the calendar year.

Liechtenstein has a self-assessment tax system. All taxpayers must prepare and file tax returns in April of the year following the tax year. Employers must withhold income from their employees' salaries and wages.

Married individuals are taxed jointly on all income (individual tax assessment may be requested).

E. Double tax treaties

Liechtenstein has entered into comprehensive double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Andorra	Hungary	Singapore
Austria	Iceland	Switzerland
Czech Republic	Jersey	United Arab Emirates
Georgia	Lithuania

Germany
Guernsey
Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (SAR)
Luxembourg
Malta
Monaco
Netherlands
San Marino
United Kingdom
Uruguay

It has initialed double tax treaties with Bahrain, Croatia, Greece, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Poland, Romania and Ukraine.

Liechtenstein's treaties follow the draft model of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

F. Residence visas

The government has limited immigration to Liechtenstein, making it difficult for foreign nationals to immigrate to the country. Limited exceptions are made for citizens of Switzerland and of EU and European Economic Area member countries.

- Income from distributed profits
- Rent received for real estate located in Lithuania
- Income on sales of immovable property and movable property subject to mandatory registration in Lithuania

Overview of income tax rates. Starting from 1 January 2020, the following income tax rates apply:
- A 5% rate applies to income from the sale or other disposal of waste.

- A 15% rate applies to illness, maternity or paternity allowances.
- A 15% tax rate applies to dividends.
- Progressive income tax rates up to 15% apply to self-employment income.
- A 20% or 32% tax rate applies to employment income. Annual employment income up to 60 average monthly salaries (AMS) is taxed at a 20% rate. Annual employment income exceeding 60 AMS is taxed at a 32% rate. AMS represents the average monthly salary of Lithuania calculated based on a specific formula, and it is set by Lithuanian legislation. The AMS applicable for calculating income tax and social security contributions for 2021 equals EUR1,352.70.
- A 15% or 20% rate applies to certain types of income other than employment income, such as interest income, royalties, capital gains and other types of income. For 2020, annual income other than employment income up to 120 AMS is taxed at a 15% rate, and such income exceeding that threshold is taxed at a 20% rate.

For further details regarding income tax rates, see the subsections of Income subject to tax below.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Residents employed by Lithuanian companies are subject to income tax on income earned from employment in Lithuania and abroad. Nonresidents employed by Lithuanian companies are subject to income tax on income earned from employment in Lithuania. Residents of Lithuania employed by foreign companies and nonresidents employed by foreign companies to work in Lithuania are subject to income tax on their employment income.

Taxable employment income is all income in cash and in kind, including wages and salaries, bonuses, fringe benefits including free lodging, and other incentive payments.

Directors' fees. An annual management bonus received from a Lithuanian company by a board member that is not payable under the individual's employment contract is treated the same as miscellaneous income and is taxed at the same rates as employment income (a rate of 20% or 32%).

Self-employment and business income. Income from self-employment is taxed the following rates:

- Income not exceeding EUR20,000 is subject to a 5% income tax rate.
- Income from EUR20,000 to EUR35,000 is taxed by applying the income tax credit formula and taxed at a progressively increasing rate (until reaching the income tax rate of 15%).
- Income exceeding EUR35,000 is subject to a 15% income tax rate.

A self-employed person that obtains a business certificate pays a fixed income tax depending on municipality. Municipalities are allowed (if certain conditions are met) to reduce the fixed income tax on income received from self-employment. Income derived from self-employment exceeding EUR45,000 during a tax period is taxed at progressive rates up to 15%.

Investment income. Dividends received from Lithuanian and foreign companies (with certain exceptions) are taxed at a rate of 15%.

Annual interest income not exceeding 120 AMS is taxed at a rate of 15%. The amount exceeding the 120 AMS threshold is subject to a 20% income tax rate. However, the following types of interest are exempt from taxation:
- Interest income from non-equity government and company bonds, interest from deposits held in banks and other credit institutions, provided that the total amount of interest does not exceed EUR500 during a calendar year and that the bonds were acquired or the deposit agreement was concluded on or after 1 January 2014
- Interest from government securities issued by European Economic Area (EEA) countries that were acquired before 31 December 2013

- Interest from consumer credits granted via peer-to-peer lending platforms or funds loaned via crowdfunding platforms in Lithuania or in another EEA country, provided that the total amount of interest does not exceed EUR500 during a calendar year

The above exemptions for interest income do not apply to interest received from tax havens.

Royalties paid to resident and nonresident authors and inventors are taxed at a rate of 15% on the amount up to 120 AMS and 20% on the amount exceeding 120 AMS.

Exempt income. The following amounts are excluded from taxable income:
- Death allowances to the spouse, children (including adopted children) and parents (including foster parents)
- Allowances paid from state and municipal budgets
- Life insurance payments (in certain cases)
- The difference between annual proceeds received from the sale of property not requiring legal registration and its acquisition price, not exceeding EUR2,500
- Income received from the sale of movable property legally registered in Lithuania or immovable property located in Lithuania (in certain cases)
- Income from the sale of securities, provided that the amount of total capital gains received from sale of securities (difference between the sales price and the acquisition price of all securities) during the tax year does not exceed EUR500 (additional criteria apply)
- Shares received under stock option plans (provided that the agreement is concluded after 1 February 2020) if the right to the shares is exercised not earlier than after three years from the grant date
- Certain other income listed in the Law on Personal Income Tax

Capital gains. Capital gains are generally taxable at a rate of 15% on the amount up to 120 AMS or 20% on the amount exceeding 120 AMS. Exceptions are mentioned in Exempt income.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. Residents and nonresidents may deduct the general nontaxable minimum amount, which depends on the income received. The annual nontaxable minimum amount for 2021 may not be greater than EUR4,800 if annual income does not exceed 12 monthly minimum wages in force on 1 January of the current calendar year. If annual income is greater than 12 monthly minimum wages, the nontaxable minimum amount is calculated according to a formula provided in the Law on Personal Income Tax. For specified groups of residents, including disabled persons, the nontaxable minimum amount is greater.

Nonresidents may deduct the general nontaxable minimum amount from Lithuanian-source income at the end of the tax year.

Deductible expenses. The following deductions from a resident's personal taxable income are allowed:
- Cumulative life insurance premiums (these are premiums paid under a life insurance agreement providing that the insurance payments may be received not only in the event of accidents, but also after the expiration of the agreement) paid on the individual's own behalf and on behalf of his or her spouse and minor children.
- Pension contributions to pension funds on the individual's own behalf and on behalf of his or her spouse and minor children.
- Pension contributions to pension funds in EEA or in other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) countries (additional criteria apply).
- Expenses relating to vocational training or studies (if higher education or qualification is obtained on graduation). This includes tuition paid for the spouse and children. If a loan is obtained to pay tuition, only the amount of loan repaid during a tax year may be deducted.
- Expenses incurred for the individual and his or her spouse's benefit for works of finishing and repair of buildings and other structures (excluding renovation [modernization] of multi-apartment buildings), car repair services, and childcare services for children up to 18 years, if the service provider is or should be registered as a Lithuanian taxpayer. These provisions are temporary and apply for the 2019, 2020 and 2021 calendar years.

The total amount of all the deductions mentioned above may not exceed 25% of taxable income (taking into account deductions). In addition, the total amount of deductible expenses regarding life insurance premiums and pension contributions to pension funds may not exceed EUR1,500, while total amount of deductible expenses regarding building finishing and repair, car repair, and childcare services may not exceed EUR2,000.

Rates. For information regarding tax rates, see Overview of income tax rates and the subsections of Income subject to tax.

B. Other taxes

Land tax and state land lease tax. Land tax is imposed on landowners, both individuals and legal entities, at rates ranging from 0.01% to 4% of the estimated value of the land. State land lease tax is imposed on users, both individuals and legal entities, of state land at rates ranging from 0.1% to 4% of the estimated value of the state land.

Inheritance tax. Inheritance tax is applied to both residents and nonresidents, unless international treaties provide otherwise. The tax base for a Lithuanian permanent resident is inherited property, such as movable property, immovable property, securities and cash. The tax base for a nonresident is inherited movable property requiring legal registration in Lithuania (for example, vehicles) or immovable property located in Lithuania. The rate of inheritance tax applied to inheritors is 5% if the taxable value is less than EUR150,000 and 10% if the taxable value EUR150,000 or more. Close relatives, such as children, parents, spouses and certain other individuals, may be exempt from this tax. Inherited property with taxable value of less than EUR3,000 is also exempt from this tax.

Real estate tax. Real estate owned by individuals that is used for business activities (with several exceptions) or given for use to legal persons for a period longer than one month or indefinitely is subject to 0.5% to 3% real estate tax (RET) based on the taxable value of the real estate. Real estate owned by individuals that is not used for the purposes described in the preceding sentence is taxed at the following rates:
- The part of the property value that exceeds EUR150,000 but does not exceed EUR300,000 is subject to a tax at a rate of 0.5%.
- The part of the property value that exceeds EUR300,000, but does not exceed EUR500,000, is subject to a tax at a rate of 1%.
- The part of the property value that exceeds EUR500,000 is subject to at a rate of 2%.

An exception applies to real estate owned by individuals that is used for business activities (with certain exceptions) or given for use to legal persons for a period of longer than one month or indefinitely, which is taxable on the full taxable value.

A concept of the "mass assessment" of real estate is presented in the Law on Real Estate Tax. "Mass assessment" of real estate is a process of assessing similar real estate when the common methodology and technology of the data analysis and assessment are used. On the completion of a mass assessment, only a common assessment report is presented. In certain cases, a taxpayer can apply for an individual assessment. If the value of the individually assessed real asset differs from the value determined in the course of mass assessment by more than 20%, the taxpayer is allowed to use the individually determined value as the RET base.

Legal entities, as opposed to individuals, must pay advance installments on a quarterly basis. The legal entities should provide an annual RET return to the State Tax Inspectorate by 15 February of the following year. Individuals should provide an annual RET return to the State Tax Inspectorate by the following dates:

- By 15 February of the following year for real estate of commercial purpose
- By 15 December of the current year for other real estate, if the taxable value of the immovable property owned exceeds EUR150,000

C. Social security

Social security contributions. As of 1 January 2021, the employer withholds 12.52% (14.92% to 15.52% if an individual participates in a pension accumulation scheme) from the employee's gross salary as the social insurance contribution paid by the employee. Social insurance contributions are not deducted in computing the employee's income tax or his or her health insurance contribution, which are deducted from the gross salary. In the case of a regular employment contract, employers must pay social insurance contributions equal to 1.45% of the gross salary; in the case of a fixed-term employment contract, the rate is 2.17%. However, depending on the number of accidents, the rate of the social insurance contributions might be increased to 3.43%. In addition, the employer must pay 0.16% contributions to the Guarantee Fund and 0.16% contributions to the Long-term Employee Benefit Fund. The ceiling for social security contributions applies for annual gross salary amount exceeding 60 AMS per year for 2021 and subsequent periods, excluding employee's health insurance contributions, employer's part of social insurance contributions, contributions to the Guarantee Fund and contributions to the Long-term Employee Benefit Fund.

Social insurance contributions for part-time employees is calculated based on the minimum monthly salary with some exceptions. The minimum monthly salary is EUR642 for 2021.

Special rules apply to the following persons:
- Sportspersons
- Artists
- Individuals working under authorship agreements
- Self-employed persons (attorneys at law, assistant attorneys at law, notaries, bailiffs and other individuals engaged in individual activities)
- Farmers and their partners
- Owners of individual enterprises
- Members of micro companies
- Partners of partnerships

The rate of social security contributions for self-employed persons is 12.52% (14.92% to 15.52% if an individual participates in a pension accumulation scheme), levied on 90% of the income subject to personal income tax, but not exceeding the amount of 43 AMS per year.

Certain types of employment-related income are exempt from social security contributions, including the following:
- Benefits related to an employee's death paid by an employer to the employee's spouse, children and parents, or paid in the event of a natural disaster or fire, up to the amount of five minimum monthly salary payments

- Benefit received by an employee, when an employer covers the costs for rail or road public transport tickets covering employee's travel to or from work
- Value-added tax calculated for goods supplied and services provided
- Other similar income

Totalization agreements. Foreign citizens, who arrive in Lithuania for work purposes from non-European Union (EU) states or states that are not parties to international treaties and who are employed by a Lithuanian employer are subject to the same rules as Lithuanian citizens. Lithuania is subject to EU regulations providing social security principles for persons migrating between member states.

Foreign employers not registered in Lithuania but having employees working according to employment agreements in Lithuania, who are subject to social insurance in Lithuania, must register as insurers in Lithuania and pay the same social insurance contributions as Lithuanian employers. In addition, Lithuania has entered into bilateral social insurance agreements with Belarus, Canada, Moldova, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and the United States, which contain special provisions regarding social security and welfare.

Health insurance. The employee's gross salary is subject to mandatory health insurance contributions of 6.98%. The employer must withhold this tax. The annual mandatory health insurance contribution of income received by resident authors, sportspersons and artists who do not receive any employment-related income is calculated on 50% of the amount of income received up to the amount of 43 AMS. Individuals engaged in individual business activities pay mandatory health insurance contributions of 6.98% based on the minimum monthly salary. Annual mandatory health insurance contribution on their income is calculated based on 90% of income received, but the tax base cannot exceed 43 AMS per year.

Mandatory health insurance contributions at a rate of 6.98% of the amount that is subject to social insurance contributions is paid by the individual enterprise for the owner, by the micro company for the member and by the partnership for the partner.

Farmers and their partners must pay mandatory health insurance contributions depending on the area (size) of their farm. The following are the rates:

- If the area of the farm does not exceed 2 European area units, farmers and their partners must pay mandatory health insurance contributions of 2.33% based on the minimum monthly salary per month.

- If the area of the farm exceeds 2 European area units, farmers and their partners must pay mandatory health insurance contributions of 6.98% based on the minimum monthly salary per month.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

A Lithuanian tax resident that receives income during a tax year must file an annual income tax return by 1 May of the following year. A Lithuanian tax resident must pay the difference in income tax between the amount specified in his or her annual income tax return and the amount paid (withheld) during the tax year by 1 May of the following year.

A Lithuanian tax resident may elect not to file the annual income tax return if any of the following apply:
- The individual will not exercise his or her right to deduct the annual nontaxable income amount.
- The individual will not exercise his or her right to deduct certain expenses incurred from income.
- During the tax period, the individual received only A class income related to employment and no additional tax is payable.

Tax residents who hold specified positions in certain Lithuanian institutions must file annual tax returns and special asset tax returns.

A person who is engaged in individual activity under a business certificate or who has registered his or her individual activity must submit his or her annual income tax return even if he or she did not earn any income from the individual business activity.

Nonresidents who receive B class income (all income not included in A class) must file a nonresident's income tax return and pay tax due within 25 days after the receipt of income. In addition, nonresidents must file an annual nonresident's income tax return and pay tax due not later than 1 May of the following year, if the annual Lithuanian-source income amount exceeds the foreseen thresholds for progressive taxation. In addition, nonresidents who receive income from self-employment through a permanent base during the tax period must file an annual income tax return and pay the tax due not later than 1 May of the following year.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

The following rules apply to the taxation of foreign-source income received by permanent Lithuanian residents:
- Income (except dividends, interest and royalties) received by a permanent Lithuanian resident and taxed in another EU member state or another state with which Lithuania entered into a double tax treaty is exempt from tax in Lithuania.
- A permanent Lithuanian resident may reduce the Lithuanian income tax applicable to dividends, interest and royalties by the amount of income tax paid in the country where the income was sourced if the source country was an EU member state or a state with which Lithuania has entered into a double tax treaty.
- A permanent Lithuanian resident may reduce the Lithuanian income tax applicable to all types of income by the amount of income tax paid on such income in other states, except for income received from tax havens.

On 11 September 2018, Lithuania deposited its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval of the Multilateral Convention to Implement Tax Treaty Related Measures to Prevent Base Erosion and Profit Shifting (MLI) with the OECD. The MLI entered into force as of 1 January 2019. Accordingly, Lithuania submitted the definite list of 55 tax treaties (all of Lithuania's double tax treaties that are in force and its double tax treaty with Morocco, which is signed but has not yet entered into force) that Lithuania would like to designate as Covered Tax Agreements.

In general, Lithuania allows such citizens to stay in Lithuania for up to three months in a six-month period without obtaining any specific stay document.

An ordinary visa allows an individual to enter and stay in Lithuania for up to three months during a six-month period, which is calculated from the date of arrival in Lithuania or any other Schengen country.

Individuals with a United Nations certificate may stay in Lithuania for up to three months during a six-month period.

G. Work permits

Usually, a Lithuanian-registered enterprise may employ the following foreigners:

- A foreigner who has a valid work permit issued by the Central Employment Services of Lithuania
- A foreigner who has retained the right to Lithuanian citizenship
- A foreigner who is of Lithuanian origin
- A foreigner who marries in Lithuania

Work permits are not required for citizens of the EU or for foreigners holding a permit for permanent residence issued by Lithuania. A permanent residence permit may be issued after five years of legal stay in Lithuania or after five years in an EU member state with at least two years without termination in Lithuania.

A company that intends to employ a foreigner must submit a request to the local Employment Services for a work permit. A company must register a free working place (an available employment position in the company) five days before submitting a request for a work permit.

When the local Employment Services issues a positive decision, the required documents are submitted to the Central Employment Services, which issues a final decision and issues a work permit to the foreigner. The consideration of a request for a work permit may take up to two weeks. A foreigner is issued a work permit valid for up to two years. Based on the work permit, an individual may be eligible for a temporary residence in Lithuania.

In general, a work permit is required for a non-EU citizen before the beginning of work in Lithuania, unless he or she is exempt from the requirement of obtaining a residence permit. The following are a few of the possible exemptions:

- A non-EU citizen who intends to take a job requiring high profession qualification (additional requirements apply)
- An employee who is transferred from a foreign company as a manager, specialist or intern in a group structural unit established in Lithuania (additional requirements apply) (intercompany transfer [ICT])
- An individual who has a permanent residence permit obtained in another EU country
- An employee who arrives in Lithuania for no more than three months during a year to take care of a matter related to the negotiation, conclusion or execution of an agreement, personnel training or installation of equipment
- An individual who is in a profession that is listed among the professions that are in need in Lithuania

Other exemptions are also available.

A foreign employer who temporarily posts its employee for work in Lithuania for more than 30 days must inform the Territorial Division of the State Labour Inspectorate about the employment conditions of the posted employee not later than 1 day before the start date of the posting. The required form must be completed and submitted by the foreign employer to the Territorial Division of the State Labour Inspectorate.

H. Residence permits

To legally enter and stay in Lithuania, in general, a non-EU citizen must have a residence permit and/or a certain visa, unless a visa-free regime is applicable. A visa allows an individual to enter and stay in Lithuania for up to 90 days in a 180-day period. The same length of stay applies to non-EU citizens who fall under the visa-free regime. However, a visa does not allow a foreigner to legally work in Lithuania.

An EU citizen who spends fewer than three months per half-year in Lithuania does not need to have a temporary residence permit.

Temporary residence permits usually are issued to persons who spend more than three months per half-year in Lithuania, most often for business or educational purposes. A foreigner applying for a residence permit for the first time must contact the Lithuanian diplomatic or consular mission abroad. However, citizens of EU member states and foreigners not subject to the visa regime are not subject to this condition. Citizens of EU member states may apply to the Migration Department in Lithuania for an EU certificate, which allows them to temporarily reside in Lithuania. Citizens of EU member states may obtain the EU certificate for a maximum period of five years depending on the purpose of stay. On the expiration of the temporary residence permit, the person must request a new temporary residence permit.

A temporary residence permit for foreigners from third countries is issued for a maximum period of three years.

In addition, new immigration alternatives for foreign employees entered into force as of 1 January and 15 June 2021. A temporary resident permit may be issued to a foreigner who either is or was an employee of an investor or an investor's group of companies that meet the investor's requirements set in the Law on Investments of the Republic of Lithuania. In this case, a temporary residence permit can be issued for up to three years upon providing a justifying document confirming that a foreigner meets the required conditions. Meeting the criteria of qualification for work experience and the labor market test are not required.

I. Electronic resident

A foreigner who wishes to use the administrative, public or commercial services provided electronically (remotely) in Lithuania may submit an application for granting the status of an electronic resident (e-resident) of Lithuania.

A foreigner may start using the opportunities provided by the status of an e-resident when they have been granted the status of an e-resident in accordance with the procedure established by the Law on the Legal Status of Foreigners of the Republic of Lithuania and has been issued an electronic identification and electronic signature means.

A foreigner of at least 18 years old must fill in an application for granting the status of an electronic resident of Lithuania through the Lithuanian Migration Information System and submit it to the Migration Department.

After examining the foreigner's application for granting the status of an e-resident and in the absence of grounds for not granting the status of an e-resident, a foreigner is granted the status of an e-resident for three years.

J. Family and personal considerations

Marital property regime. Marital property relations are regulated by the Civil Code of Lithuania.

Under the law, spouses or future spouses may enter into a notarized marital agreement regulating the legal status of the spouses' property that is registered under an established procedure. If a marital agreement is not entered into, property acquired by spouses during their marriage is considered jointly owned property. Each of the spouses has equal rights to use and dispose of jointly owned property. At any stage of marital life, couples may divide their jointly owned property by a notarized marital agreement.

The jointly owned property regime applies to all officially married couples who have a permanent residence in Lithuania, unless a marital agreement establishing another governing law is concluded. If the spouses reside in different countries, the jointly owned property regime applies only if both spouses are citizens of Lithuania. In other situations, the jointly owned property regime applies only if the couples solemnize their marriages in Lithuania. The law recognizes a concept of family property that may be used for family requirements only, including matrimonial domicile and right to use a matrimonial domicile.

The law applicable to an agreement between the spouses regarding matrimonial property is determined by the law of the state chosen by the spouses in the agreement. The spouses may choose the law of the state in which they are both domiciled or will be domiciled in the future, or the law of the state in which the marriage was solemnized, or the law of the state of which one of the spouses is a citizen. The agreement of the spouses on the applicable law is valid if it is in compliance with the requirements of the law of the selected state or the law of the state in which the agreement is made. The applicable law chosen in the agreement of the spouses may be used in resolving disputes related to real rights in immovable property only if the requirements of public registration of this property and of the real rights therein, as determined by the law of the state where the property is located, were complied with.

Forced heirship. Under the Civil Code of Lithuania, certain heirs and descendants have a right to a legal share of their relatives' estate. Children (including adopted children) of the deceased, as well as a spouse and parents requiring care, are entitled to half of their intestate share, regardless of the provisions of any will, unless the bequeathed share is larger.

The form of the will is determined by the laws of the country where the will is concluded. However, a will, as well as its amendment or revocation, is valid if the form of these items is in compliance with the requirements of any of the following:
- The law of the state of the testator's domicile
- The law of the state of which the testator was a citizen when the relevant acts were performed
- The law of the state of the testator's residence when the relevant acts were performed or at the time of his or her death

Land, buildings and other immovable property located in Lithuania are inherited in accordance with the laws of Lithuania.

Driver's permits. A driver's permit issued to a resident of a foreign country is valid in Lithuania if the person possesses an international driver's license that meets the requirements of the 1968 Vienna Convention or a driver's license issued by an EU member state or a driver's license that Lithuania must recognize under international agreements. A driver's license issued by a non-EU country to a foreigner residing in Lithuania may be changed to a Lithuanian driver's license if certain conditions are met.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents of Luxembourg are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on their Luxembourg-source income only.

Individuals are considered resident if their accommodation indicates that they do not intend to reside only temporarily in Luxembourg or if they spend more than six months in Luxembourg.

Resident married individuals (effective from 1 January 2015, married same-gender couples are included) are jointly taxable. Under the 2017 tax reform, the Luxembourg government has implemented the possibility for married taxpayers to be taxed separately; this option is available, effective from the 2018 tax year. Registered partners (under Luxembourg or foreign law) may claim joint taxation through the filing of a joint income tax return. The eligible partners need to share a common domicile or residence and their partnership must exist during the entire relevant fiscal year.

Income subject to tax. Luxembourg income tax law distinguishes among several categories of income, including income from employment, self-employment, trade and business, and agriculture.

Employment income. Resident and nonresident employees are subject to income tax on remuneration received from employment. Employment income includes wages, salaries, bonuses, employer-provided pension contributions and all other compensation in cash or in kind. Wage tax is withheld at source.

Self-employment and business income. Individuals who act independently in their own name and at their own risk are taxed on income derived from self-employment or business activities. Nonresidents are taxable only to the extent they operate through either a permanent establishment or a fixed place of activity located in Luxembourg.

In general, taxable income includes all income and capital gains attributable to self-employment or business activities, at the rates set forth in Rates.

Investment income. Dividends received by a resident taxpayer from a resident or nonresident company are generally subject to personal income tax. A 50% exemption is granted for dividends received from the following:

- A fully taxable Luxembourg-resident company
- A taxable European Union (EU) resident company that is covered by the EU Parent-Subsidiary directive
- A taxable company resident in a country that has entered into a double tax treaty with Luxembourg and that is subject to comparable corporate taxation

A 15% tax is withheld by a Luxembourg distributing company and can be offset against Luxembourg tax or refunded under certain circumstances. Only 50% of the expenses related to such dividends is deductible.

A final withholding tax of 20% (before 1 January 2017, the rate was 10%) is imposed on interest income paid by a paying agent established in Luxembourg to beneficial owners resident in Luxembourg. Interest income subject to this final withholding tax is no longer required to be reported into the annual tax return. The withholding tax is not considered a final withholding tax if the income derives from business assets (assets used in self-employment or business activities) of the investor rather than from private assets. In addition, the law provides that for certain savings deposits, interest under a threshold of EUR250 per person per paying agent is not taxable.

Individuals resident in Luxembourg may opt for a final tax of 20% on eligible interest income received from paying agents located in the following jurisdictions:

- EU member states
- European Economic Area (EEA) states

The option for a final withholding tax of 20% applies to the same eligible interest income (deriving from private assets only) as defined by Luxembourg law. The annual tax-free ceiling of EUR250 per individual and per paying agent also applies to eligible interest income paid outside Luxembourg. The option for a final withholding tax of 20% is requested through a specific form that must be filed before 31 March of the year following the year of payment.

If the taxpayer is a Luxembourg resident, income excluded from the 20% final withholding tax must be reported in the annual tax return and is taxed at the progressive rates.

A lump-sum deduction of EUR25 is granted for expenses related to both dividend and interest income (excluded from the 20% final withholding tax), unless actual expenses are higher. This lump-sum deduction is EUR50 for spouses/partners subject to joint taxation. In addition, both dividend and interest income (excluded from the 20% final withholding tax) are exempt up to EUR1,500 (the exemption is doubled for spouses/ partners jointly taxable). Expense deductions may not create a loss that could be offset against other sources of income, except in certain limited cases.

Royalties and income from the rental of real estate are aggregated with other income and taxed at the rates set forth in Rates.

Nonresidents are subject to the 15% withholding tax on dividends received from Luxembourg companies. However, if an applicable double tax treaty provides a lower tax rate, nonresidents can claim a refund of the excess tax withheld. Most of the double tax treaties entered into by Luxembourg provide for a maximum tax rate of 15% on gross dividends.

Nonresidents are not subject to withholding tax on royalties.

Directors' fees. Payments to managing directors of Luxembourg companies for day-to-day management are considered to be employment income and are taxed at the rates set forth in Rates. Otherwise directors' fees are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 20%. If a nonresident director's only professional income in Luxembourg amounts to a gross fee of less than EUR100,000 per year, the 20% withholding tax is a final tax and an individual income tax return does not need to be filed. However, the nonresident director may file a tax return at his or her discretion. Individuals who are required to or elect to file an income tax return may credit the 20% withholding tax against their Luxembourg tax liability.

If the company bears the tax on directors' fees, then the tax rate applicable to the net fees is 25%.

Special tax regime for expatriate highly skilled employees. A beneficial income tax regime has been introduced for expatriate highly skilled employees. This regime provides tax relief for certain costs linked to expatriation and is subject to several conditions. The tax regime, which entered into force on 1 January 2011 was amended, effective from1 January 2021. This regime applies to employees who are sent to work temporarily in Luxembourg on an assignment between intragroup entities. It also applies to employees who are directly recruited abroad by a Luxembourg company to work in Luxembourg.

Under certain conditions, various costs directly related to the expatriation are exempt from tax. Under the special tax regime, the following expatriate benefits and allowances are not taxable:
- Moving costs (transportation of goods, transfer travel expenses, furnishing costs and similar expenses).
- Costs related to housing in Luxembourg (rent and utilities if the former accommodation is maintained in the home country or the housing differential if the former accommodation is not maintained), one home-leave trip and tax-equalization costs. The tax exemption is limited to EUR50,000 per year (EUR80,000 for married couples or partners sharing accommodation) or 30% of the fixed total annual remuneration, whichever is less.
- School fees for children in primary and secondary education.
- Fifty percent of the impatriation premium that can be paid to the employee for covering miscellaneous expenses linked to the expatriation. However, this premium cannot exceed 30% of the gross annual remuneration before incorporation of benefits in cash and in kind.

The tax regime applies for the year of arrival, plus the following eight years. A list of employees who benefited from the regime needs to be sent by 31 January of each year.

As a result of 2021 changes, the extension of the duration of the regime from five to eight years is also granted to employees or assignees who benefited from the impatriate tax regime before 1 January 2021, provided that the initial five-year period has not yet ended and they meet the conditions under the revised regime. If employees qualify under the former regime but not under the revised regime, they will keep the benefit of the former regime until it expires.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. If a stock option is freely tradable or transferable, the employee is taxed on the date the option is granted. If the option is not tradable or transferable, the employee is taxed on the date the option is exercised. The taxable benefit is subject to income tax and to social security contributions by both the employer and the employee (up to the ceiling).

Capital gains

Movable property. Substantial shareholdings (more than 10%) in resident or nonresident corporations are fully subject to tax on capital gains in the hands of resident taxpayers. However, half of the average tax rate (a maximum rate of 22.89% and tax relief of EUR50,000 [EUR100,000] for spouses or partners jointly taxable) apply to capital gains if substantial shareholders sell the shares after a six-month holding period. The gain is also subject to the dependence insurance contribution levied at a rate of 1.4%. For the disposal of substantial shareholdings, an adjustment for inflation applies to the acquisition price. In addition, Luxembourg has implemented a step-up mechanism. Under this mechanism, the acquisition price for the purpose of determining the capital gain is the fair market value of the shares on the date of establishing Luxembourg tax residence, rather than the actual acquisition price. Capital gains on non-substantial shareholdings (10% or less) and other securities, such as shares in investment funds, are tax-free if they are realized more than six months after acquisition. Otherwise, the gains are fully taxable at the rates set forth in Rates.

Capital gains derived from the disposal of substantial shareholdings in corporations are taxable in the hands of a nonresident taxpayer if either of the following applies:
- The taxpayer was previously resident in Luxembourg for more than 15 years and became nonresident less than 5 years before the disposal.
- The taxpayer sold his or her shares in Luxembourg companies within six months following the acquisition.

The above rules regarding nonresidents do not apply if an applicable tax treaty does not give Luxembourg the right to tax the gains.

Real estate. Capital gains on sales of privately owned buildings and land realized within two years after purchase are taxable as ordinary income. Gains on real estate sold more than two years after purchase are taxable after adjustment for inflation and application of a standard exemption of EUR50,000. This allowance is EUR100,000 for spouses/partners subject to joint taxation. The exemption is renewed every 10 years (for example, if the exemption is completely used up in one year, the individual must wait 10 years to claim another exemption). In addition, the capital gain is taxed at half of the normal rate (a maximum rate of 22.89%). The gain is also subject to the dependence insurance contribution levied at a rate of 1.4%. An additional allowance of EUR75,000 for each spouse/partner is available for the sale of a home inherited by a direct descendant that was the principal residence of the taxpayer's parents or spouse.

Gains derived from the sale of a principal residence are exempt from tax.

Nonresident taxpayers are taxed on capital gains derived from real estate located in Luxembourg in the same manner as residents.

Realized by a business. Capital gains derived from investments and from the disposal of real estate that forms part of the net asset value of a privately owned business are taxable.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Non-reimbursed expenses incurred by an employee to create, protect or preserve employment income are generally deductible. A standard deduction of EUR540 for employment-related expenses is granted. The standard deduction is doubled for a married couple if both spouses earn employment income.

The following expenses are deductible for tax purposes:
- Alimony paid to a divorced spouse and other specified periodic payments
- Social security contributions levied on salary (however, care insurance is not deductible; see Social security)

In addition, interest on loans contracted to purchase owner-occupied housing is deductible up to a ceiling that decreases with the length of time the housing is occupied, as indicated in the following table.

Year of occupation	Ceiling (EUR)*
After 31 December 2014	2,000
Between 31 December 2009 and 1 January 2015	1,500
Before 1 January 2010	1,000

* This is the ceiling for each member of the household.

Subject to certain conditions, each of the following items is deductible, up to an annual ceiling of EUR672 for each person in the taxpayer's household:
- Premiums paid for voluntary life, accident, sickness, unemployment and third-party automobile insurance, as well as interest on consumer loans
- Contributions to house-saving institutions to finance housing through approved home-ownership plans (the deductible amount can be increased to EUR1,344 if the subscriber is between 18 and 40 years old)

If they meet the conditions required by the law, old-age providence premiums may be deducted up to an annual ceiling of EUR3,200.

Personal deductions and allowances. A deduction may be claimed for the following extraordinary expenses if specified conditions are fulfilled:
- Expenses for hospitalization that are not covered by a sickness fund
- Maintenance of close relatives
- Expenses related to handicapped persons
- Childcare expenses
- Employment of domestic staff

Business deductions. In general, all expenses for business or professional activities are deductible, such as the following:
- Costs of material and stock
- Staff costs, certain taxes, rental and leasing expenses, finance charges, self-employed social security contributions, and all general and administrative expenses
- Depreciation of fixed assets
- Provisions for identified losses and expenses
- Loss carryforwards (within limits)

Rates. Tax rates are progressive with a maximum rate of 45.78% for 2021 (maximum 9% unemployment fund contribution included). The marginal tax rate is 45.78% for income exceeding EUR200,004 for taxpayers in Tax Class 1 (single individuals and married couples taxed separately) and Tax Class 1a (single, separated or divorced individuals with children) and EUR400,008 for taxpayers in Tax Class 2 (married couples or partners jointly taxable).

The following table sets forth the average income tax rates for 2021, taking into account the applicable unemployment fund contribution and the tax credits for professional income.

	Single individual		Married couple
Taxable income EUR	Amount of tax EUR	Effective tax rate %	Amount of tax EUR	Effective tax rate %
20,000	0	0	0	0
40,000	5,163	12.91	1,243	3.11
60,000	13,616	22.69	5,284	8.81
80,000	22,262	27.83	11,526	14.41
100,000	30,608	30.61	19,488	19.49
120,000	39,168	32.64	27,834	23.19
140,000	47,728	34.09	36,180	25.84
150,000	52,008	34.67	40,353	26.90
200,000	74,353	37.18	61,217	30.61

In general, nonresidents are subject to the above rates. For nonresidents, a minimum tax applies to all income other than employment or pension income.

Business profits tax. Net business profit is subject to income tax and municipal business tax.

Certain tax credits, such as the investment tax credit, may reduce the final tax due.

In addition, privately held businesses are subject to municipal business tax on trade profit as computed for income tax purposes, subject to various adjustments, less a standard exemption of EUR40,000. The rate varies depending on the municipality, but generally is approximately 7.5% (6.75% for Luxembourg City).

Nonresidents who carry on business through a permanent establishment in Luxembourg are taxed at the same rates as residents.

Relief for losses. Trading losses, adjusted for tax purposes, incurred in or after 1991 may be carried forward without a time limitation. For losses incurred in financial years closing after 31 December 2016, the use of loss carryforwards is limited to 17 years. The oldest losses are deemed to be used first. Losses may not be carried back.

Losses derived from investments in securities may only offset positive investment income, and not positive income from other categories. However, an exception to this rule may apply if the taxpayer holds a significant shareholding in a company and derives his or her main professional earnings from activities in that company.

B. Other taxes

Net worth tax. The wealth tax for resident and nonresident individuals was abolished, effective from 1 January 2006.

Inheritance and gift taxes. The tax base for inheritance tax is the market value at the time of death of the entire net estate inherited from a person domiciled in Luxembourg. Exemptions apply to real estate located abroad and, under certain conditions, to movable assets held outside Luxembourg. If the decedent was a nonresident at the time of his or her death, death tax is levied only on real estate located in Luxembourg. The inheritance tax rates range from 0% to 48%. The rate applicable to heirs in direct line (for example, a son or daughter, or grandson or granddaughter) is 0%. A 0% rate also applies to any inheritance between spouses or registered partners of more than three years. Death taxes are imposed on real estate located in Luxembourg that is left by a person who was not an inhabitant of Luxembourg, even a person in direct line, at rates that range from 2% to 48%.

Gifts and donations that are required to be registered with the Administration de l'Enregistrement (and therefore subject to registration tax) are subject to gift tax. Gift tax is payable by the resident or nonresident donee on the gross market value of the assets received. The rates range from 1.8% to 14.4%, depending on the relationship between the donor and the donee.

Gifts that are not required to be made in writing (for example, gifts of movable assets transferred by delivery [dons manuels]) are generally accepted without registration. However, such gifts may be subject to registration tax if another registered deed refers to them.

In addition, gifts made by the decedent within the year preceding his or her death are aggregated with the taxable asset base, unless they were subject to gift duties.

C. Social security

Contributions. Social security contributions apply to wages and salaries and must be withheld by the employer. These contributions cover old-age pension and health insurance. Only employers pay contributions for professional accident coverage. The following social security contribution rates for employers and employees apply as of 1 January 2021.

	Employee %	Employer %
Pension (a)	8	8
Illness (a)	3.05	3.05
Accident (a)	N.A.	0.675 to 1.125
Health at Work (a)	N.A.	0.14 (b)
Mutual insurance (a)	N.A.	0.53 to 2.88 (c)

(a) The contribution rates are subject to an annual ceiling of EUR132,941 for 2021.
(b) The Health at Work contribution is payable only by employers that are members of the National Service for Health at Work.
(c) The rate varies according to the risk class of the employer based on the rate of absenteeism of the employees.

In addition, dependence insurance to support the elderly and the disabled is payable by employees at a rate of 1.4% on total gross income with no ceiling, but after an annual deduction of EUR6,647.04 for 2021. Employers are not subject to the dependence insurance contribution.

Self-employed individuals must register for social security purposes. The rates of contribution are approximately the same as those for employers and employees combined.

Totalization agreements. As an EU member state, Luxembourg applies new EC Regulation No. 883/2004 on the coordination of social security systems as well as EEC Regulation No 1408/71. In addition, Luxembourg has entered into bilateral social security totalization agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Albania	India	Quebec
Argentina	Japan	Serbia
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Korea (South)	Tunisia
Brazil	Moldova	Turkey
Canada	Montenegro	United States
Cape Verde	Morocco	Uruguay
Chile	North Macedonia	Yugoslavia (former)
China Mainland	Philippines*

* This social security agreement is applicable from 1 January 2020.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year corresponds to the calendar year.

Taxpayers must file annual income tax returns by 30 June 2021 (the standard deadline is 31 March but was extended due to the COVID-19 pandemic) for income earned in 2020. The filing deadline may be extended at the request of a taxpayer; the ultimate filing deadline was extended to 31 December 2021 for income earned in 2020.

Special rules apply to certain taxpayers. For example, employees who are subject to withholding tax and who do not have another source of income must file tax returns only if their annual taxable remuneration exceeds EUR100,000. The employer must withhold wage tax.

Single nonresident taxpayers earning Luxembourg-source salaries and pensions must file tax returns if their taxable annual income exceeds EUR100,000 and if they have been employed continuously during nine months of the tax year. Married nonresidents who are jointly taxable must file tax returns if their joint salaries and pensions exceed EUR36,000.

Under certain conditions, nonresident taxpayers can elect to be treated as Luxembourg resident taxpayers to qualify for the same deductions and allowances. The request is made in the taxpayer's income tax return.

Self-employed individuals must make quarterly prepayments of tax in amounts that are fixed by the tax authorities based on the individual's most recent final assessment.

E. Tax treaties

Most of Luxembourg's tax treaties provide double tax relief through the exemption-with-progression method. However, interest, dividends and royalties are subject to tax credit rules. Luxembourg has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

* Mongolia denounced the double tax treaty, which no longer applies, effective from 1 January 2014.

Luxembourg has signed tax treaties with Albania, Argentina, Kuwait and Rwanda, but these treaties have not yet been ratified.

Tax treaty negotiations with Australia, Cape Verde, Chile, Egypt, Ethiopia, Ghana, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Mali, New Zealand, Oman, Pakistan and Syria have been announced.

Residents deriving income in non-treaty countries are in principle entitled to a credit for foreign taxes paid, up to the amount of tax imposed by Luxembourg on the foreign-source income.

Frontier workers. Luxembourg has entered into Memoranda of Understanding with Belgium and Germany with respect to frontier workers. Under the memorandum with Germany, Luxembourg maintains full taxation rights for employment income if German frontier workers work less than 20 days during a calendar year outside Luxembourg. The same applies to Belgian frontier workers if they work less than 25 days (35 days as from 1 January 2022) during a calendar year outside Luxembourg. A new comprehensive double tax treaty (to replace the existing treaty) has been signed with France. This treaty provides that French frontier workers remain fully taxable in Luxembourg if they work less than 30 days during a calendar year outside Luxembourg.

As a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, Luxembourg agreed with Belgium, France and Germany to disregard home working days for the purpose of determining applicable social security scheme and for allocating the taxation right on employment income. These agreements apply until 31 December 2021 (unless the social security agreement is with France, which, at the time of updating this guide, expires on 15 November 2021).

F. Temporary visas

Luxembourg offers temporary transit visas and short-stay visas (visa de court séjour). A transit visa is valid for travelers passing through Luxembourg. A short-stay visa is valid for persons (employed and self-employed) who stay in Luxembourg for a short period and do not derive income in Luxembourg, such as tourists, students enrolled in training courses in Luxembourg for less than three months and people on business trips.

The short-stay visa can be issued for a single entry or multiple entries. In the event of multiple entries, the total duration of the stay cannot exceed 90 days over a period of 6 months. The maximum period for a visa during which authorized visits can be made is one year.

The renewal of visas depends on the situation of the visa holder. In general, renewals are granted for one year.

G. Residence authorizations

The law on the free movement of EU citizens and on immigration policies, dated 29 August 2008 and subsequently amended, covers residence authorizations, which are work and stay permits for citizens outside the EU, EEA or Switzerland.

Under Luxembourg law, nationals of EU member states, EEA states (Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway) or Switzerland do not need a residence authorization to perform their professional activities in Luxembourg.

Residence authorizations are not required for spouses (regardless of their nationality) of EEA or Swiss citizens who reside in Luxembourg. This exemption also applies to spouses (regardless of their nationality) of Luxembourg citizens resident in Luxembourg.

Luxembourg immigration requirements vary depending on the citizenship of the individuals and the length of their stay.

Since 1 January 2021, UK nationals establishing residence in Luxembourg require a residence authorization. UK nationals who have established residence in Luxembourg prior to 1 January 2021 must apply for a specific residence authorization. Such application must be filed by 31 December 2021.

Citizens of the EU, EEA or Switzerland

Right to move and reside up to three months. Citizens of the EU, EEA or Switzerland and their family members (regardless of their nationality) may move to and reside in Luxembourg for a period of up to three months without any conditions other than the requirement to hold a valid identity card or passport. An entry visa may be requested for family members who are themselves third-country nationals.

Right of residence for more than three months. Citizens of the EU, EEA or Switzerland have the right of residence in Luxembourg for a period of more than three months if they satisfy either of the following conditions:

- They are workers or self-employed persons.
- They can provide proof of sufficient resources for themselves and their family members, and they have valid health insurance.

If the planned period of residence in Luxembourg exceeds three months, the individuals concerned and their family members must register with the communal administration within three months after the date of arrival. A registration certificate is then delivered. Family members who are themselves third-country nationals must request a residence card from the municipality within three months after the date of arrival. The residence card of a family member is valid for five years.

After a continuous period of five years of legal residence in Luxembourg, citizens of the EU, EEA or Switzerland and their family members (regardless of their nationality) have the right of permanent residence (on request).

Third-country nationals

Conditions of entry, exit and residence up to three months. In principle, the third-country national must personally request the residence authorization and submit it to the competent authorities before entry into Luxembourg.

Third-country nationals may enter and reside in Luxembourg up to three months within a six-month period provided that a valid passport and visa (if applicable), sufficient resources and health insurance are presented. These nationals must declare their entry into Luxembourg with the communal administration within three days after the date of arrival (no declaration is necessary for tourists residing in hotels). If they want to exercise employment or self-employment activities, these nationals need a residence authorization.

However, third-country nationals do not need an authorization if they come to Luxembourg for less than three months within one calendar year for business trips, if they are working for the same group of companies, or if they are working as, among others, artists, sportsmen or academic lecturers.

Conditions of residence for more than three months. Third-country nationals have the right of residence in Luxembourg with a valid passport and visa (if applicable) for a period of more than three months if they obtain a residence authorization before their entry. In addition, these nationals must declare their entry with the municipality within three days after their date of arrival.

Workers with employment contracts. A residence authorization allowing third-country nationals to work in Luxembourg is granted if the individual has entered into an employment contract and if several other conditions are met. However, limited requirements apply to certain sectors of the economy experiencing substantial labor shortages.

The residence authorization is valid for a period of one year in one profession and one business activity but it is valid for any employer. It can be renewed for a two-year period.

Workers temporarily assigned for cross-border services. Companies established in another EU/EEA member state or in Switzerland can freely assign their workers (regardless of their nationality) to Luxembourg for the rendering of cross-border services (these are services provided in Luxembourg by workers for employers established in another EU/EEA member state or Switzerland) if these workers are authorized to work and stay in their home country for the duration of the assignment.

Third-country nationals temporarily assigned to Luxembourg by companies established outside EU/EEA member states or Switzerland for the rendering of cross-border services must have a residence authorization that is issued on request of the home-country company.

Workers temporarily assigned to a company group. On request of the host company, residence authorizations are granted to third-country workers who are assigned between intragroup entities.

Highly skilled workers. The Blue Card Directive for highly skilled workers (2009/50/EC) was transposed into Luxembourg legislation in February 2012. The EU Blue Card is granted to third-country highly skilled workers for a period of two years (renewable on request) if they have concluded an employment contract of at least one year, have a higher education qualification or at least five years of higher professional experience and earn at least 1.5 times the Luxembourg average gross annual salary (EUR78,336 since 2019). This amount is 1.2 times the Luxembourg average gross annual salary (EUR62,668.80 since 2019) for certain professions.

Self-employed persons. Residence authorizations for a maximum period of three years (renewable) are granted to third-country self-employed persons if the following conditions are satisfied:
- They have the professional qualifications and hold a business license or any adequate professional authorization.
- They have sufficient resources and accommodation.
- The exercise of the independent activity benefits the economic interests of Luxembourg.

Other categories of residence authorization. Under certain conditions, residence authorizations are granted to, among others, the following persons:
- Third-country students
- Exchange students
- Unremunerated trainees
- Researchers
- Sportspersons
- Inactive persons
- Other persons for exceptional reasons (for example, medical treatments)

EC long-term resident status. Third-country nationals can obtain long-term resident status if they have five years of legal and continuous residence in Luxembourg before the submission of the relevant application. The EC long-term resident status is valid for a period of five years, and is automatically renewed on request.

Steps for obtaining residence authorizations

General. When hiring foreign and Luxembourg wage earners, employers must notify the Labor Administration (Agence pour le développement de l'Emploi, or ADEM) of all job vacancies within three working days before publication in the press. A special form, called "Job Vacancy Declaration" ("Déclaration de Poste Vacant"), is used to notify the ADEM of the vacancy.

After the decision to hire a person is made, certain administrative formalities must be fulfilled, or a residence authorization must be obtained, depending on the citizenship of the prospective employee, as outlined above.

Employers must inform the Social Security Registration Authority (Centre Commun de la Sécurité Sociale, or CCSS), by use of the "Entry Declaration" ("Déclaration d'Entrée") form, to have an employee affiliated with social security.

Frontier workers. Frontier workers include any employed or self-employed person who pursues his or her occupation in one EU member country and who resides in another member country to which he or she returns daily or at least once a week.

Frontier workers are not required to comply with any special formalities.

Application for a residence authorization. Before arrival, the foreign worker must submit a written request for a temporary residence authorization to the Ministry of Immigration. The request must be sent together with a certified copy of the passport, birth certificate, police record extract, curriculum vitae, diplomas, employment contract and a motivation letter (letter providing information on the foreign worker's motivation to work for a certain employer).

Within 90 days after the date the temporary residence authorization (autorisation de séjour) is issued by the Ministry of Immigration, the foreign worker must either request a visa (if applicable) or enter Luxembourg (if a visa is not required). The entry must be declared with the communal administration within three days after the date of arrival.

Within three months after the date of arrival, the foreign worker must submit a form to obtain a definitive residence authorization called "Issuing Request for a Residence Authorization" ("Demande en délivrance d'un titre de séjour"). The form must be sent to the Ministry of Immigration together with the following:
- A certified copy of the temporary residence authorization
- An arrival declaration to the communal administration
- A medical certificate issued by a Luxembourg doctor and a tuberculosis screening
- Proof of suitable accommodation in Luxembourg
- A recent photo (biometrical)
- Proof of payment of a EUR80 stamp duty, which must be wired to the bank account of the Ministry of Immigration

The validity period of the definitive residence authorization is one year from the date of registration with the municipality. Two months before the expiration of the authorization, the Ministry of Immigration notifies by letter the foreign worker of the formalities to be followed to obtain a renewal of the authorization. The validity period for the first renewal is two years, while the validity period for subsequent renewals is three years.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. An expatriate worker may be accompanied to Luxembourg by his or her spouse and children. The application for the stay permit for each family member is submitted to the Ministry of Justice in Luxembourg jointly with the expatriate worker's request.

Family members who are EEA or Swiss nationals need only request a registration certificate.

Foreigners' identity cards are required for spouses and any children older than 15 years of age.

An expatriate's work permit is not valid for his or her spouse or children. For any family member wanting to work in Luxembourg, an individual work permit is required.

Children accompanying an expatriate worker to Luxembourg may attend any school in Luxembourg.

For some permits, a stay permit for family members can be requested only after a waiting period.

Marital property regime. Three main marital regimes are available in Luxembourg. A marital contract registered with a notary public is required to elect either of the following regimes:

- The universal co-ownership regime (la communauté universelle), under which all assets are owned in common by both spouses, regardless of whether the assets were acquired before or during the marriage
- The separate ownership regime (la séparation de biens), under which each spouse retains sole title to assets and wealth he or she acquires before and during the marriage

The default regime is la communauté réduite aux acquêts, under which assets are owned in common, except assets acquired before the marriage and assets acquired during the marriage through inheritance and donation.

In general, Luxembourg recognizes marital property agreements concluded under foreign law.

Forced heirship. Forced heirship rules apply in Luxembourg to protect the descendants. The forced heirship rules are summarized in the following table.

Number of children	Heirship reserve	Free reserve
3	3/4	1/4

If no descendants exist, the entire legacy can be legated to the surviving parent or other persons.

This chapter relates to the tax jurisdiction of the Macau Special Administrative Region (SAR) of China.

As a result of a general lack of tax practice and precedent, several unresolved tax issues exist in Macau.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals are subject to tax on income arising in or derived from Macau. Macau observes a territorial basis of taxation. Consequently, the concept of tax residency has no significance in determining tax liability, except in limited circumstances.

Income subject to tax. Professional tax is imposed on employment and self-employment income arising in Macau. Complementary tax is imposed on business income arising in Macau.

Employment income. Income from employment is subject to professional tax. For purposes of the tax, taxpayers are divided into employees and professional practitioners (see Self-employment and business income).

In general, all income from employment, including benefits in kind and directors' fees, is subject to professional tax.

Self-employment and business income. Professional practitioners are subject to tax on self-employment income. Sole proprietors are subject to tax on business income.

Rental income. Property tax is levied annually on the owners of real property in Macau. Actual rental income derived from real property is taxed at a rate of 8%. For property that is not rented, the tax is levied at a rate of 6% on the deemed rental value of the property as assessed by the Macau Finance Department. A deduction, by application for rental property, of up to 10% of the rent or rental value of the property is allowed for repairs, maintenance and other expenses.

For 2021, a property tax deduction of up to MOP3,500 is granted for each property unit for Macau residents only.

Exemptions are available under certain circumstances.

Exempt income. Employers' contributions to medical and related schemes and to approved pension schemes are not included in taxable income.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options and share awards. Stock options granted by employers with respect to employees' services in Macau are subject to professional tax. The stock options gains are subject to tax in Macau in the year in which the individual exercises the option. The taxable stock option amount is calculated as follows:

Taxable stock option income = (market value on exercise date – option price) x number of shares exercised

Share awards granted by employers with respect to employees' services in Macau are subject to professional tax. The share awards gains are subject to tax in Macau in the year in which the share award vests to the individual. The taxable share award amount is calculated as follows:

Taxable share award income = (market value on vesting date – consideration for share awards) x number of shares vested

Employers are required to notify the Macau tax authorities within 30 days after granting stock options or share awards.

Capital gains. Macau does not levy capital gains tax.

However, the Macau Complementary Tax Law does not distinguish a "capital gain" from a "revenue profit." Sole proprietorships and companies carrying on commercial or industrial activities in Macau are subject to complementary tax on their capital gains derived in Macau.

Purchasers of real property must pay stamp duty, which is levied on the sales price or assessable value of the property at the rates listed in the following table.

Sales price or assessable value
Exceeding MOP	Not exceeding MOP	Rate %
0	2,000,000	1
2,000,000	4,000,000	2
4,000,000	—	3

For 2021, a first-time purchase of residential property by a Macau permanent resident for a cost of up to MOP3 million is exempt from stamp duty.

Additional stamp duty is charged under certain circumstances.

Deductions. A 25% exemption and a personal allowance of MOP144,000 may be deducted from employment income. Starting from the 2019 tax year, the personal allowance is increased to MOP198,000 for part-time employees, employees who are aged 65 or above, or with a permanent disability level of 60% or higher.

Rates. Professional tax rates are set forth in the following table and apply to both residents and nonresidents.

Taxable income MOP	Tax rate %	Tax due MOP	Cumulative tax due MOP
First 144,000	0	0	0
Next 20,000	7	1,400	1,400
Next 20,000	8	1,600	3,000
Next 40,000	9	3,600	6,600
Next 80,000	10	8,000	14,600
Next 120,000	11	13,200	27,800
Remainder	12	—	—

Tax rebate. For 2021, an additional 30% relief is granted on the total amount of tax payable.

Relief for losses. Employees may not carry back or carry forward losses. However, an individual carrying on a business as a sole proprietor may carry forward and deduct losses from assessable profits in the following three years if he or she is a Group A taxpayer subject to Macau complementary tax or a professional practitioner with proper accounting records who is subject to Macau professional tax.

B. Estate and gift taxes

Effective from 1 August 2001, estate and gift taxes were abolished.

C. Social security

Employers must contribute monthly to a government social security fund in the amounts of MOP60 for every resident worker and MOP200 for every nonresident worker. Resident workers must each contribute MOP30 per month. No ceiling applies to the amount of wages subject to social security contributions.

Macau has not entered into any social security totalization agreements with other jurisdictions.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Tax is levied on income arising in or derived from Macau during the calendar year.

Employers in Macau must withhold professional tax at the rates set forth in Rates from salaries paid to employees. In addition, employers must withhold professional tax at a rate of at least 5% from amounts paid to nonresidents without work permits. Professional tax collected by employers must be remitted quarterly under Article 32 of the Professional Tax Regulations and/or monthly under Article 36 of the regulations to the Macau Finance Department. Employers in Macau must prepare and submit annual tax returns with respect to salaries paid to residents and nonresidents and the professional tax withheld.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Macau has entered into double tax treaties with Cape Verde, China Mainland, the Hong Kong SAR, Mozambique, Portugal and Vietnam. Macau has also signed tax treaties with Belgium and Cambodia, but these treaties are not yet in force.

F. Visitor visas

All travelers entering Macau must hold valid passports or other equivalent travel documents. Nationals from the jurisdictions listed below do not require a visa to visit. The length of time one is permitted to stay in Macau under visitor status depends on the jurisdiction that issued the passport.

These individuals may stay in Macau for 30 days. Visitors from Bangladesh, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Vietnam are required to apply for a Macau visa in advance through a Chinese embassy or consulate.

Foreign nationals staying in Macau under visitor status may not engage in any form of employment in Macau, except for those who qualify for an exemption (see Section G).

G. Work permits

Before a Non-resident Worker's Identification Card (blue card) is granted by the Immigration Department, a work permit must be obtained from the Macau Labour Affairs Bureau (Direcção dos Serviços para os Assuntos Laborais, or DSAL), the government authority that handles the employment of foreign nationals and local workers.

Before a work permit application is made to the DSAL, the employer must register the vacant position with the employment section of the DSAL and must indicate the identity of the employer, title of the position, remuneration, working hours, and qualifications and experience required. Vacancy order forms are available in the DSAL's employment section. An employer that is unable to find a local employee with comparable experience and qualifications to fill a vacancy may apply for a work permit to bring in a qualified nonresident. The employer must prove that the DSAL was notified of the vacant position and was unable to provide a prospective employee.

To obtain work permits from the DSAL for their foreign employees, employers must generally submit the following documents to the DSAL:

- A prescribed application form completed in full with details of the employer, reason for employing the foreign national, and number and positions of existing resident and nonresident employees
- Photocopy of the employer's commercial registration document from the Identification Services Bureau and photocopy of the legal representative's identity card
- Photocopies of the employer's business license, industrial registration or equivalent registration document, and business tax payment record
- Evidence of the employer's contribution to the Social Security Fund
- Photocopy of proof for local recruitment from the DSAL
- Photocopy of the foreign employee's passport or other travel document
- Evidence of the foreign employee's qualification and experience

If an application is approved by the DSAL, a letter of approval is issued to the applicant for submission to the Immigration Department to process the foreign employee's blue card. A foreign national may not undertake employment in Macau until a blue card application is submitted. The work permit and blue card are normally granted for employment with a specific employer.

Applying for a work permit in Macau may be a lengthy process. Applications are considered on a case-by-case basis. In general, it takes approximately three to six months to obtain the work permit after all the required documents have been submitted. No fee is charged for the granting or renewal of a work permit. A fee of MOP100 is charged for the granting and renewal of a blue card.

Work permits are normally granted for a maximum period of two years and are renewable by the DSAL. The application form for the renewal of a work permit, together with other required documents, must be submitted to the DSAL three months before the expiration date of the work permit. The applicant must also apply for renewal of a blue card from the Immigration Department when the work permit is renewed by the DSAL.

An expatriate who wants to work in Macau is exempt from the work permit requirements if either of the following circumstances exist:

- An enterprise with a registered office located outside of Macau and an enterprise with a registered office in Macau enter into an agreement with respect to the performance of specified or occasional guidance, technical, quality control or supervisory duties.
- An individual or collective person with a registered office in Macau invites a nonresident to engage in religious, sports, academic, cultural interchange or artistic activities.

The above work permit exemptions are limited to a maximum period of 45 consecutive or non-consecutive days in each period of six months. The calculation of the work permit exemption period begins from the date of the entry of the nonresident into Macau. The dates of the expatriate's work in Macau should be recorded in documents.

Foreigners who enter Macau to set up their own businesses are also required to obtain a work permit to work in Macau. They must follow the procedures for recruiting nonresident workers and submit the following documents:

- Copy of the applicant's identification document
- Copy of the latest Business Tax Registration or Declaration of Start/Alteration of Activity Form M/1
- Proof of the activities performed by the applicant, such as academic certificates or work reference letters
- Proof of applicant's economic capacity in Macau
- Copy of the contributions to the Social Security Fund
- Personal information of recruited local workers, including positions, remuneration and identity documents

H. Residence permits

The government's policy is to encourage people of financial standing, who will make substantial investment in the territory, to become residents of Macau. To qualify, an applicant must demonstrate his or her financial ability to invest significantly in an enterprise in Macau. Management and/or technical personnel employed or likely employed by a Macau-registered company with qualifications and professional experience that contribute to Macau's economy may also be granted a residence permit on application.

Foreign nationals applying for residence permits must have the prior approval of the Macau Trade and Investment Promotion Institute (Instituto de Promoção do Comércio e do Investimento de Macau, or IPIM). To obtain this approval, the applicant must file with the IPIM an application describing all pertinent information relating to the investment or the foreign national's qualification and experience. An appointment must be made with the IPIM to submit the required documents. After all the required documents have been submitted, the IPIM generally takes more than one year to process the application.

If the IPIM is satisfied that all prerequisites for the grant of a residence permit are fulfilled, the applicant must go to the Immigration Department of the Public Security Police Force with the Approval Notification of Residence Authorization issued by IPIM to apply for the Receipt of Residence Authorization (Residence Receipt). The issuance of the Residence Receipt takes approximately seven working days. After obtaining the Residence Receipt, the applicant can go to the Identification Bureau of Macau to apply for a Macau Non-permanent Resident Identity Card. This process generally takes 15 working days.

The temporary residence permit is normally granted for an initial period of three years, depending on the validity of the applicant's travel document. A residence permit expires 30 days before the expiration of an applicant's travel document.

Temporary residence permits may be extended on application by the permit holders. An application for renewal, together with all documents required, must be submitted to the IPIM for endorsement within 90 days before the expiration date of the temporary residence permit. The granting or renewal of a temporary residence permit is not subject to any fees by the issuing authorities.

In general, a temporary residence permit holder may, after seven years of continuous residence in Macau, apply for permanent residence status.

The Macau SAR government has suspended the application for a residence permit based on an investment in real estate until further notice.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. In general, foreign nationals who hold blue cards or residence permits may be accompanied to Macau by their family members on application. Family members include a spouse, children and parents that are financially supported by the applicant. Unskilled workers may not have dependents accompany them to Macau. Accompanying family members are normally permitted to stay in Macau for the duration of their family member's work permit or residence permit.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally using their home jurisdiction driver's licenses if they hold valid international driving permits. Foreign nationals must register their licenses with the Public Security Police Force if they stay in Macau for more than 14 days. Temporary driver's permits may be obtained by presenting the Public Security Police Force with the foreign nationals' passports or equivalent travel documents, foreign driver's licenses and international driving permits. Temporary driver's permits are generally valid for six months and may be renewed on request. No fee is charged for the issuance or renewal of the permits.

From the date that a foreign national resides in Macau or within one year from the date of his or her first arrival in Macau, a foreign national may apply to exchange his or her foreign driver's license for a Macau driver's license. Foreign driver's licenses issued by certain jurisdictions may be accepted on a reciprocal basis. Macau licensing authorities normally recognize foreign licenses issued by jurisdictions with requirements comparable to those of Macau (passing a practical driving test is essential).

To exchange a foreign license for a Macau one, the applicant must submit the following documents in person or through the person authorized by the applicant to the Transport Bureau:

- Completed prescribed application forms (Form 3A and Form 011/DLC).
- Original and two copies of the applicant's valid foreign driver's license. An official translation of the license into Chinese or Portuguese must be included if the license is in a language other than Chinese, Portuguese, English or French.
- Originals and photocopies of the applicant's Macau SAR Resident Identity Card.
- Medical certificates completed by a local registered medical practitioner confirming the applicant's mental and physical capability of driving.
- Two 1.5-inch recent color photos (with white background).
- Application fee of MOP2,000. An additional fee for urgent pick up is MOP400.

Holders of Korea (South), Philippines and Taiwan driver's licenses are required to submit proof of stay for at least six months in the related jurisdictions.

In general, the Transport Bureau takes about two to six months to process and approve the application. An "urgent service" application is completed within six working days after receipt.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident and nonresident individuals are subject to personal income tax (payroll tax) on their Malagasy-source income, including employment income.

Individuals are deemed to be residents of Madagascar if they meet either of the following criteria:
- They own, use or rent a residential house in Madagascar.
- They have Madagascar as their principal place of residence, regardless of the existence of a residential house.

Individuals who are not nationals of Madagascar are also deemed to be resident if they have a permanent or long-stay visa and a work permit.

The domestic law related to payroll tax does not provide a 183-days' rule. However, this 183-days' rule is mentioned in the application guide of the General Tax Code (GTC), which is an official reference document used by the tax authorities. According to the application guide of the GTC, an individual having his or her habitual residence in Madagascar is considered a taxable person when his or her length of stay in Madagascar exceeds 183 days. This rule is implemented in practice.

Nonresident individuals are also subject to tax on certain specified types of income, such as income allocated to Madagascar by a multilateral or bilateral tax treaty.

Income subject to tax. Income subject to income tax includes the following:
- All types of remuneration received for public or private employment
- Allowances received by employees that are intended to supplement wages, regardless of the names of the allowances
- Indemnities and allowances paid to leaders of companies
- Fringe benefits including the following:
  - — Cars dedicated to personal and professional use, up to 15% of the actual expenses borne by the employer (insurance, fuel, repair and maintenance expenses)

— Accommodation expenses up to 50% of the rent and limited to 25% of the salary
— Telephone expenses up to 15% of the actual expenses incurred by the employer

Canteen expenses are considered to be a fringe benefit (under the payroll tax and the corporate income tax) but their tax treatment is different depending on whether it is provided directly to the employee in cash or whether it is provided as a canteen at the office (lunch). The following are the applicable rules:
- The amount of the canteen expenses is in principle fixed at MGA5,000 per employee per day.
- If the canteen expenses are paid directly by the employer in cash to the employee, it is subject to payroll tax as an indemnity.
- If the canteen service is provided in kind to the employee as a lunch at the office, it is considered to be a fringe benefit exempt from payroll tax.
- The amount of canteen expenses up to MGA5,000 is considered to be a fringe benefit not subject to corporate income tax. The amount exceeding MGA5,000 per day per employee is subject to corporate income tax.

The total amount of fringe benefits taxable is capped at 20% of cash remuneration. Fringe benefits not listed above are fully taxable.

Employers must withhold tax from their employees' wages.

Certain types of income are exempt from income tax, including the following:
- Medical expenses that are duly justified and not exaggerated
- Retirement allowances not exceeding one year's salary
- Family allowances, and military and civil disability pensions
- Military retirement pensions
- Overtime salary limited to 20 hours per month for staff whose salaries are lower than those received by officers in the group of highest professional category (OP3-5B)

Deductions. Certain expenses are deductible, including the following:
- Payments to the National Social Security Fund (Caisse Nationale de Prévoyance Sociale, or CNAPS), the government fund for social security. The deduction is limited to the amount up to 1% of the salary received in cash (gross salary).
- Payments to the main intercompany medical service or private medical insurance. The deduction is limited to the amount up to 1% of the salary received in cash (gross salary).
- Compulsory alimony payments.

Rates. For the determination of the payroll tax, the tax is calculated by applying to the taxable income brackets the rates corresponding to the brackets. The amount of tax payable is equal to the sum of the results of each tranche. The following are the brackets and rates:
- The first MGA350,000 of monthly income is subject to tax of 0%.
- Income bracket from MGA350,001 to MGA400,000 of monthly income is subject to tax of 5%.

- Income bracket from MGA 400,001 to MGA500,000 of monthly income is subject to tax of 10%.
- Income bracket from MGA500,001 to MGA 600,000 of the monthly income is subject to tax of 15%.
- Monthly income exceeding MGA600,00 is subject to a tax of 20%.

The amount of tax to be paid cannot be less than the minimum charge of MGA2,000.

B. Social security

Employers and employees must make contributions to the CNAPS, the government social security fund in Madagascar, which uses the contributions to make payments for various items including pensions and compensation for industrial accidents and occupational diseases. The contribution rates are 13% for employers and 1% for employees. The rates are applied to the "monthly salary cap," which is equal to the new minimum wage (provided annually by decree) multiplied by eight. For 2021, the monthly salary cap is MGA1,600,000. Employers withhold the employees' contributions from the employees' wages.

Employers must also make contributions in accordance with Law No. 2017-025 on the creation of a financial contribution from companies to the development of continuing vocational training and a management fund for this contribution. The contribution rate is 1% of the total earnings and it is paid to the CNAPS (collecting entity that can be replaced) but intended for the Malagasy Fund for Professional Training (Fonds Malgache de Formation Professionnelle, or FMFP). This contribution has no effect on the payroll tax computation and payroll.

Employers and employees must also make monthly contributions to one of the Service Medical Inter-Entreprises (SMIEs), which are entities providing medical insurance. The main intercompany medical services in Madagascar are the Intercompany Health Organization Antananarivo (Organisation Sanitaire Tananarivienne Inter-Entreprise, or OSTIE), Intercompanies Sanitary Space of Antananarivo (Espace Sanitaire Interentreprises d'Antananarivo, or ESIA), Intercompanies Medical Association (Association Médicale Interentreprises, or AMIT) and the Funds Health Center (FUNHECE). The contribution rates are 5% for employers and 1% for employees. In general, the rates are applied to the monthly salary cap of MGA1,600,000. This threshold is valid for all SMIEs, except for AMIT, which applies the rates to the monthly salary without this threshold. Employers may purchase medical insurance from private companies in addition to insurance from SMIEs.

The minimum wage used as a basis for the calculation of the monthly salary cap is increased annually by a decree. Consequently, an increase of the minimum wage also implies an increase of the monthly salary cap subject to social contributions.

C. Tax filing and payment procedures

Employers must remit withholding tax on wages monthly between the 1st and 15th days of the month following the month in which the wages are paid. However, employers subject to the synthetic tax (an income tax for small businesses [companies with annual turnover of less than MGA200 million]) are authorized to remit the payments every two months.

For nongovernmental organizations, associations and projects, regardless of the source of their funding, and for institutions and related bodies and other public or private entities that pay salaries but are not subject to income tax or synthetic tax, the remittance of the payroll tax must be made within the first 15 days of the month of payment. However, if the total of the amounts withheld as payroll tax does not exceed MGA50,000 per month, such entities and organizations are allowed to make the payment per semester (every six months).

D. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Madagascar has entered into tax treaties with Canada, France, Mauritius and Morocco.

E. Entry visas

Foreigners who want to enter Madagascar must obtain a tourism visa or business visa for a stay of less than three months. A tourism visa can be obtained at the airport on arrival in Madagascar. A business visa can be obtained at the Malagasy embassy or consulate in the foreigner's home country. These types of visas do not allow foreigners to work in Madagascar.

Foreigners who want to work in Madagascar must obtain a transformable visa, which is valid for one month. The fee for this visa is MGA140,000. It can be obtained at a Malagasy embassy or consulate in the foreigner's home country. The transformable visa must be changed to a long-stay visa for a foreign worker within one month after he or she enters Madagascar.

If no Malagasy embassy or consulate is located in the home country, an entry visa for workers, called a "boarding agreement," may be obtained from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Madagascar before departure. After the foreigner arrives in Madagascar, the authorities can provide the foreigner with a transformable visa.

The application for a transformable visa and the boarding agreement requires a prior work permit issued by the Ministry of Labor as well as a local labor contract stamped by the Ministry.

F. Work permits

To work in Madagascar, foreign nationals must obtain a work permit from the Malagasy Ministry of Labor. This permit is normally issued within two months following the application.

The following are the requirements for obtaining a work permit:
- A local labor contract mentioning an address in Madagascar must be concluded with a local entity and receive the prior approval of the Ministry of Labor
- Payment of a fee of EUR100

G. Residence permits

A foreigner who wants to stay in Madagascar for a period of more than three months must obtain a long-stay visa and a biometric residence permit from the Ministry of Interior (Home Office). To obtain these documents, the foreigner must submit the following:

- Transformable visa
- Local labor contract
- Police clearance from the home country
- Residence certificate delivered by the local authority (Fokontany) for the location where the foreigner resides in Madagascar
- Passport
- Photos
- Foreigner's census issued by the district of residence of the foreigner in Madagascar
- A work permit delivered in Madagascar by the Department of Labour
- An employment certificate from the employer in Madagascar
- Tax Identification Number Card (Carte de Numéro d'Identification Fiscale, or NIF) of the employer
- Long-stay visa fees ranging from MGA150,000 to MGA250,000, depending on the length of the stay
- Biometric residence permit issuance fees ranging from EUR300 to EUR838.47, depending on the length of stay

After the submission, the foreigner must undergo a morality investigation by the Ministry of Interior and deposit biometric data (picture and digital fingerprint) in person. The long-stay visa and biometric residence permit are issued within three months.

The following additional documents are required for a renewal:

- Police clearance issued by the Court of Madagascar
- A copy of the previous Resident Card
- A payment certificate with respect to the withholding tax on wages for the preceding three months

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident individuals are subject to income tax on their income deemed to be from a source in Malawi. For the income tax rates applicable to resident individuals, see Rates. Nonresident individuals are subject to Malawi income tax at a standard rate of 15% on their Malawi-source income. A person is considered resident for tax purposes in Malawi if he or she is physically present in Malawi for an aggregate period of 183 days in any 12-month period. Income is deemed to be from a source within Malawi if it is derived from the carrying on in Malawi of a "trade." For this purpose, "trade" covers any employment, profession, business, calling, occupation, or venture, including the leasing of property. Foreign-source income is exempt from tax.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. As noted in Who is liable, income derived from employment in Malawi is subject to income tax.

Investment income. A final withholding tax of 10% is imposed on dividends distributed to resident and nonresident individuals.

Interest and rent are included in assessable income.

Amounts received for the right of use or occupation of land and buildings or plant and machinery or for the use of patents, designs, trademarks or copyrights or other property, which in the opinion of the Commissioner General of the Malawi Revenue Authority is of a similar nature, is included in assessable income.

Self-employment and business income. As noted in Who is liable, income derived from the carrying on of self-employment or business activities in Malawi is subject to income tax.

If land is sold and if timber that is intended for sale is growing on the land, the market value of the timber is included in the seller's taxable income. However, a deduction is allowed. If the land was acquired by the taxpayer for valuable consideration, the Commissioner General apportions a reasonable part of that consideration to the timber and this amount may be deducted. If no valuable consideration was given for the land, the Commissioner General sets a reasonable value for the standing timber, which may be deducted.

Foreign-exchange gains and losses. Realized foreign-exchange gains and losses are assessable. Unrealized foreign-exchange gains and losses are not taxable.

Exempt income. Certain income is specifically exempt from tax under the Taxation Act. The following are examples of exempt income:
- Foreign-source income
- Redundancy pay of up to MWK50,000
- All income derived from pension funds, whether received as a lump sum or annuity
- War disability or war widows pensions

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains derived by individuals are included in assessable income and subject to tax at the normal progressive income tax rates. However, capital gains derived from the following transactions are not subject to tax:
- Disposal of the individual's principal residence
- Transfers between spouses or former spouses, or to a spouse from the estate of a deceased spouse
- Capital gains derived from disposal of shares traded on the Malawi Stock Exchange if the shares are held for at least 12 months
- Disposals of personal and domestic assets not used in connection with a trade

Capital losses on assets not qualifying for capital allowances can be offset only against current or future capital gains. However, such capital losses may be set off against other income in the year of the death of the taxpayer or the year in which the business ceases operations. Capital losses with respect to assets on which capital allowances have been granted are fully deductible from taxable income.

For assets qualifying for capital allowances, capital gains and losses equal the difference between the sales proceeds and the written-down tax value of the assets. For other assets, capital gains and losses equal the difference between the sales proceeds and the annual cost or costs adjusted by applying the consumer price index published by the National Statistics Office on the date of disposal of the asset. An asset's fair value can be used as the basis instead of the actual cost if it was determined as of 1 April 1992 and was accepted by the Commissioner General by September 1995.

Deductions. Expenditure and losses are allowable as deductions in determining the assessable income of an individual if they are not of a capital nature and if they are wholly, exclusively and necessarily incurred for the purposes of the trade or in the production of income. For tax purposes, certain expenses are not allowed as deductions, including the following:
- Losses or expenses that are recoverable under insurance contracts or indemnities
- Tax on the income of individuals or interest payable on such tax
- Expenses relating to income that is not included in taxable income

- Expenses for which subsidies have been or will be received
- Rent or cost of repairs to premises not occupied for purposes of trade
- Costs incurred by individuals to maintain themselves and their families
- Domestic or private expenses of individuals including the cost of travel between the individual's residence and place of work
- Fines payable that are charged under the Taxation Act or any other law

Individuals may deduct donations to charitable organizations that are approved and gazetted by the Minister of Finance. However, individual donations in excess of MWK5 million to approved charitable organizations or nonprofit institutions operating solely or principally for social welfare, civic improvement, educational development or other similar purposes as the Minister may approve are not allowable for deduction.

In determining the taxable income derived from farming, expenses with respect to the following are allowed as deductions:
- The stumping, leveling and clearing of land
- Works for the prevention of soil erosion
- Boreholes
- Wells
- Aerial and geophysical surveys
- Water control work with respect to the cultivation and growing of rice, sugar or other crops approved by the Minister of Finance and water conservation work (reservoir, weir, dam or embankment constructed for the impounding of water)

Rates

The following are the income tax rates.

Taxable income
Exceeding MWK	Not exceeding MWK	Rate %
0	100,000	0
100,000	1,000,000	25
1,000,000	3,000,000	30
3,000,000	6,000,000	35
6,000,000	—	40

Withholding taxes. Certain payments are subject to withholding tax. The tax is withheld by the payer and remitted to the Malawi Revenue Authority on a monthly basis by the 14th day of the following month. Recipients of the payments treat the withholding tax as an advance payment of tax that offsets income tax subsequently assessed.

Withholding Tax Exemption Certificates may be issued to qualifying taxpayers whose affairs are up to date. Under the Taxation Act, exemption from withholding tax is not granted for bank interest, rent, royalties, fees, commission, payments for casual labor and payments to contractors and subcontractors.

The Commissioner General may exempt from withholding tax the receipts of certain persons or organizations that are exempt from tax under the Taxation Act.

The following table provides withholding tax rates.

Payment	Rate (%)
Interest	20
Royalties	20
Rents	20
Payments for supplies to traders and institutions	3
Technical fees	20
Commission	20
Payments for carriage and haulage	10
Payments for sales of the first 1,200 kilograms or 10 bales of tobacco sold at auction floors	0
Payments for sales of tobacco in excess of 1,200 kilograms or 10 bales sold at auction floors	3
Payments for sales of tobacco through farmer clubs at auction floors	0
Payments for other farm produce	3
Payments to contractors and subcontractors in the building and construction industries	4
Payments for public entertainment	20
Payments for casual labor up to MWK15,000	0
Payment for casual labor over MWK15,000	20*
Winnings from betting, gambling and lottery activities in excess of MWK100,000	20

* The withholding tax is imposed on the entire amount without deducting MWK15,000.

The income of a nonresident arising or deemed to arise from a source within Malawi that is not attributable to a permanent establishment of the nonresident in Malawi is subject to a final tax at the following rates:
- 15% of management fees
- 10% of income derived from a mining project by way of interest, royalties, payments for independent personal services or dividends
- 15% of the gross amount of other such income

A withholding tax is also imposed on dividends (see Investment income).

Relief for losses. Assessed losses attributable to trading operations may be carried forward to offset assessable income in the following six years. Loss carrybacks are not allowed.

B. Other taxes

Estate duty. Estate duty is a form of inheritance tax in Malawi and is payable by the executors or administrators of estates of deceased. The following are the rates of the estate duty.

Principal value of the estate		Rate
Exceeding MWK	Not exceeding MWK	of duty %
0	30,000	0
30,000	40,000	5
40,000	80,000	6
80,000	140,000	7

Principal value of the estate		Rate
Exceeding MWK	Not exceeding MWK	of duty %
140,000	200,000	8
200,000	400,000	9
400,000	600,000	10
600,000	—	11

Reductions in rates are allowed for quick successions. The value of the estate comprises all assets of the deceased at the date of his or her death less any debts. In addition, any gifts or transfers of property for less than full value made within three years of death must be included in the value of the estate.

Property tax. Property tax is levied by local authorities on the value of industrial, commercial or private properties owned by a taxpayer in the district. The tax is payable semiannually. The rates vary depending on whether the property is located in an urban or rural area and whether it is an industrial, commercial or private property.

Presumptive taxes. Income earned by small businesses are now subject to presumptive taxes at the rates specified in the Amendment Act. This will be enforced through the block management system to make sure that all traders in cities and towns are tax compliant.

Advance income tax on imports. Commercial importers are subject to a 3% withholding tax on the landed cost of imports at the point of entry into Malawi. This is not a final tax because a tax refund will be given if the actual income tax paid by the trader at the end of the year is more than the applicable (assessed) tax on the profits of the business.

C. Social security

Malawi does not require social security contributions.

D. Registration, tax filing and payment procedures

Effective from 1 July 2018, a person who carries on business is liable for registration for income tax from the date the business was registered. Employers are expected to apply for tax registration within 15 days.

The year of assessment is from 1 July to 30 June. For self-employed individuals, financial years ending on or before 31 August are normally treated as relating to the year of assessment ended in June of that calendar year.

Individuals must file an income tax return with the Commissioner General within 180 days after the end of the year of assessment. The balance of tax due is payable when the tax return is due.

Married women have the option of filing their own returns. The earned income of a wife is not aggregated with her other income or the income of her husband when calculating their joint tax liability.

Income of minor children earned in their own right is deemed to be their own income and is taxed accordingly. Income of minor children arising from a trust established or gift made by a parent is deemed to be income of the parent.

Under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system, an employer making payments totaling in excess of MWK540,000 per year to an employee for services rendered is required to withhold income tax from such payments. The tax withheld must be remitted to the Malawi Revenue Authority by the 14th day of the month following the month in which the tax is withheld.

At the beginning of each year of assessment, a business taxpayer must estimate the tax payable in that year. This estimated tax, which is known as provisional tax, must be paid quarterly within 25 days after the end of each quarter. The total installments must be not less than 90% of the actual tax liability for the year of assessment.

If the amount of tax unpaid as a percentage of the total tax liability exceeds 10% but does not exceed 50%, a penalty equal to 25% of the unpaid tax is imposed. If the percentage of unpaid tax exceeds 50%, a penalty equal to 30% of the unpaid tax is imposed.

Interest on unpaid tax after an assessment may be levied at a rate of 20% of the amount of tax that was due to be paid in the first month or part thereof and further interest is charged on the outstanding amount of tax at the prevailing bank lending rate plus 5%.

Under the PAYE system, a penalty of 15% plus a further sum of 5% per month is charged on any amounts not remitted to the Malawi Revenue Authority within 14 days from the end of the month in which the tax was deducted.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Foreign-source income that is taxed in the country of source is eligible for double tax relief either under the existing double tax treaty between the country of source and Malawi, or as unilateral relief. If income that has been taxed in a foreign country that does not have a double tax treaty with Malawi is included in taxable income in Malawi, a tax credit may be available (credit method) to reduce the tax payable in Malawi. To qualify for this relief, the income must be derived from a foreign government, state corporation or local authority. An individual must prove to the Commissioner General that he or she has paid the tax on the income in the foreign country. On receipt of this proof, the Commissioner General grants the relief. If there is a double tax treaty in place between the country of source and Malawi, there is a treaty override and double tax relief under the double tax treaty prevails.

Malawi has entered into double tax treaties with the following countries.

France	South Africa	Switzerland
Norway	Sweden	United Kingdom

F. Entry into Malawi

Foreigners traveling to Malawi require a valid passport from their countries of origin.

Nationals of certain countries need a visa to enter Malawi. They must pay the following fees for their visas.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents and nonresidents are subject to tax on Malaysian-source income only.

Individuals are considered resident in any of the following circumstances:

- They are physically present in Malaysia for 182 days or more during the calendar year.
- They are physically present in Malaysia for less than 182 days during the calendar year, but are physically present in Malaysia for at least 182 consecutive days in the second half of the immediate preceding calendar year or in the first half of the immediate following calendar year. Periods of temporary absence are considered part of a period of consecutive presence if the absence is related to the individual's service in Malaysia, personal illness, illness of an immediate family member or social visits not exceeding 14 days.
- They are present in Malaysia during the calendar year for at least 90 days and have been resident or present in Malaysia for at least 90 days in any three of the four preceding years.

- They have been resident for the three preceding calendar years and will be resident in the following calendar year. This is the only case in which an individual may qualify as a resident even though he or she is not physically present in Malaysia during a particular calendar year.

For the purposes of determining residence, presence during part of a day is counted as a whole day.

Exceptions apply for COVID-19 pandemic-related situations for which travel restrictions were imposed.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Gross income from employment includes wages, salary, remuneration, leave pay, fees, commissions, bonuses, gratuities, perquisites or allowances (in money or otherwise) arising from employment. An individual employed in Malaysia is subject to tax on income arising from Malaysia, regardless of where the employment contract is signed or the remuneration is paid. Gross income also includes income for any period of leave attributable to employment in Malaysia and income for any period during which the employee performs duties outside Malaysia incidental to the employment in Malaysia.

Education allowances provided by employers to their employees' children are taxable for income tax purposes.

Employee benefits and amenities not convertible into money are included in employment income. The cost of leave passages for an employee and the employee's immediate family are also taxable, but the following items are exempt:
- Leave passage within Malaysia, up to three times in a calendar year
- One leave passage in a calendar year from Malaysia to any place outside Malaysia, up to a maximum of MYR3,000

Certain allowances, perquisites and benefits-in-kind are exempt from tax, including, among others, the following:
- Petrol/traveling allowances with respect to travel for official duties, up to MYR6,000 a year
- Meal allowances
- Parking
- Telephone, including mobile phone (effective from 1 July 2020, expanded to include mobile phones, notebooks or tablets, up to MYR5,000)
- Allowances or subsidies for childcare, up to MYR2,400 a year
- Medical benefits (including maternity expenses and traditional medicines such as Ayurvedic medicine and acupuncture) and dental benefits

The above list is not exhaustive and some other tax-exempt benefits may apply if certain circumstances exist or if certain conditions are met.

The cost of moving expenses, approved pension contributions, and the cost of any medical or dental treatment borne by an employer are not taxable to an employee.

Short-term visitors to Malaysia enjoy a tax exemption on income derived from employment in Malaysia if their employment does not exceed any of the following periods:

- A period totaling 60 days in a calendar year
- A continuous period or periods totaling 60 days spanning 2 calendar years
- A continuous period spanning two calendar years, plus other periods in either of the calendar years, totaling 60 days

Non-citizen individuals working in Operational Headquarters (OHQs), Regional Offices, International Procurement Centres (IPCs) and Regional Distribution Centres (RDCs) are taxed only on that portion of income attributable to the number of days that they were in Malaysia until the expiration of the incentive (generally 10 years) granted by the Malaysian Investment Development Authority. The incentive is granted to the company and begins with the year of assessment stipulated in the approval letter issued by the Malaysian Investment Development Authority.

Effective 1 May 2015, the new Principal Hub incentive scheme has been implemented to replace these OHQ, IPC and RDC incentives. This new scheme allows multinational companies to enjoy several benefits including hiring expatriates based on their business requirements.

Self-employment and business income. All profits accruing in Malaysia are subject to tax. Remittances of foreign-source income into Malaysia by tax residents of Malaysia are not subject to Malaysian income tax.

Income from any business source is subject to tax. A business includes a profession, a vocation or a trade, as well as any associated manufacture, venture or concern.

Contract payments to nonresident contractors are subject to a total withholding tax of 13% (10% for tax payable by the nonresident contractor and 3% for tax payable by the contractor’s employees).

Income derived in Malaysia by a nonresident public entertainer is subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 15%.

Investment income. Interest income received by individuals from monies deposited in approved institutions is exempt from tax.

Withdrawals of contributions from an approved Private Retirement Scheme (PRS) by an individual before the age of 55 (other than by reason of death or permanent departure from Malaysia or for the purpose of health care or housing) are taxed at a flat rate of 8%. For other withdrawals made from 30 April 2020 to 31 December 2020, an exemption applies up to a maximum of MYR1,500 withdrawn from each PRS provider.

Other interest, dividends, royalties and rental income are aggregated with other income and taxed at the rates set forth in Rates. As a result of the introduction of the single-tier tax system, dividends received by individuals are exempt from tax, effective from the 2008 year of assessment. For the 2018 year of assessment, a 50% exemption applied to rental income received from residential homes if the following conditions are met:

- Rental income does not exceed MYR2,000 per month for each residential home.
- The residential home must be rented under a legal tenancy agreement between owner and tenant.

For the 2020 and 2021 years of assessment, property owners who offer at least 30% rental discounts to small- and medium-enterprise tenants from April 2020 to June 2021 are entitled to a special deduction for the rental reduction.

Certain types of income derived in Malaysia by nonresidents are subject to final withholding tax at the following rates.

Type of income	Rate (%)
Special classes of income
Use of movable property	10
Technical advice, assistance or services	10
Installation services on the supply of plant, machinery and similar assets	10

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are considered employment income; therefore, fees derived from Malaysia are taxable. Fees are deemed to be derived from Malaysia if the company is resident in Malaysia for the year of assessment. If the fees are derived from a country other than Malaysia, they are not taxed. Remittances of foreign-source income into Malaysia by tax residents of Malaysia are not subject to Malaysian income tax.

Employer-provided stock options. Tax legislation governs the taxation of employer-provided stock options. Under the tax legislation, employer-provided stock options are subject to tax as employment income. The taxable income is calculated based on the difference between the fair market value of the underlying stock at the exercise date or exercisable date, whichever is lower, and the option price. This amount is recognized at the time the option is exercised, and is taxed as current-year income (that is, it is no longer related back to the year of grant).

Capital gains. In general, capital gains are not taxable. However, gains derived from the disposal of real property located in Malaysia and gains derived from the sale of shares in closely controlled companies with substantial real property interests are subject to real property gains tax (RPGT).

Effective from 1 January 2014, capital gains derived from disposals of chargeable assets by individuals who are Malaysian citizens and permanent residents are subject to tax at the following rates:
- 30% for a holding period up to three years
- 20% for a holding period exceeding three years and up to four years
- 15% for a holding period exceeding four years and up to five years

- 5% for a holding period exceeding five years

Malaysian citizens and permanent residents are entitled to elect a one-time RPGT exemption on the disposal of a private residence.

Effective from 1 January 2020, individuals who are not Malaysian citizens are subject to RPGT at a rate of 30% for a holding period up to five years and 10% for a holding period exceeding five years.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Although provisions are made for the deduction of all expenditures incurred wholly and exclusively to produce income, the terms of the provisions tend to limit deductibility in practice. Deductions for employees usually cover specific travel and entertainment costs as well as professional subscriptions. The cost of traveling from home to work is not deductible.

No general deduction is allowed for interest costs, but interest on borrowings used to finance the purchase of income-producing property or investments may be deducted from the income received.

Donations of cash to the government, a local authority, a social enterprise or an institution or organization approved by the tax authorities are deductible. From the 2020 year of assessment, the cap on the tax deduction for donations is 10% of aggregate income.

Personal deductions and allowances. In determining taxable income, an individual resident in Malaysia may subtract from total income the following personal deductions. These deductions are not available to nonresidents.

Business deductions. The deductions and expenditure allowable against business income are those incurred wholly and exclusively in the production of gross income from the same source.

Depreciation charged in the financial accounts is not a deductible expense. However, straight-line capital allowances based on cost may be claimed on qualifying assets used in a business. In addition, an initial allowance of 20% of the cost of the asset is granted in the year of acquisition.

Nonresidents are subject to withholding taxes on certain types of income. Other income is taxed at a rate of 30%.

If a Malaysian or foreign national "knowledge worker" resides in the Iskandar Development Region and is employed in certain qualifying activities by a designated company and if his or her employment commences on or after 24 October 2009 but not later than 31 December 2015, the worker may apply to be subject to tax at a reduced rate of 15%. The employee must not have derived any employment income in Malaysia for at least three years before the date of the application.

Malaysian professionals returning from abroad to work in Malaysia would be taxed at a rate of 15% for the first five consecutive years following the professional's return to Malaysia under the Returning Expert Programme (REP).

Employment income received by women who return to the workforce after being unemployed for at least two years as of 27 October 2017 may be exempted from tax for up to 12 consecutive months. An application for the tax exemption can be submitted to Talent Corporation Malaysia Berhad from 1 January 2018 to 31 December 2023.

Preferential tax treatment at a flat rate of 15% is available for up to five non-citizens who are employed by a company and hold key positions or C-suite positions for five consecutive years. The company must be granted a relocation tax incentive under the Pelan Jana Semula Ekonomi Negara (PENJANA) initiative, while the employees must be receiving monthly salary of not less than MYR25,000 and qualify as Malaysian tax residents for the years throughout the preferential tax treatment period. Applications can be submitted to the Malaysian Investment and Development Authority from 7 November 2020 until 31 December 2021.

Separately, non-citizen resident employees in a company that carries on a business with respect to a qualifying activity under an incentive scheme is subject to tax at a rate of not more than 20% from the 2021 year of assessment. Qualifying activities include any high-technology activity in the manufacturing and services sector and any other activities that would benefit Malaysia's economy.

Relief for losses. Individuals may carry forward business losses indefinitely.

B. Other taxes

Malaysia does not impose estate, gift or net worth taxes.

C. Social security

Employer and employee contributions to the SOCSO of Malaysia are compulsory for Malaysian citizens only. Various rates are specified for these contributions. Effective from 1 January 2019, employers that hire foreign workers (excluding domestic servants) are required to register their employees with SOCSO and contribute to the Employment Injury Scheme. The employer incurs a 1.25% charge calculated on the worker's salary and other compensation, capped at MYR49.40 for wages exceeding MYR4,000. The contributions for a month are due by the 15th day of the following calendar month.

The Employment Injury Scheme provides protection to an employee against an accident or an occupational disease arising out of and in the course of their employment as well as accidents that occur when commuting to and from work.

Employees who are Malaysian citizens are required to contribute to the Employees' Provident Fund (EPF). The EPF is a statutory savings scheme to provide for employees' old-age retirement in Malaysia.

Under the Employees' Provident Fund Act 1951, all employers and employees are required to make monthly contributions to the EPF. The statutory contribution rate is 23% or 24% of monthly wages. Employers pay at a rate of 12% if the employee's monthly wages are above MYR5,000 per month or 13% if the employee's monthly wages are below MYR5,000 per month. Employees contribute at a rate of 11% of monthly wages. As announced in the 2021 Malaysian Tax Budget and the Third Schedule for 2021 of the EPF Act 1991, the employee contribution rate is changed to 9% for salaries and wages from January 2021 to December 2021. For employees aged 60 years and above, employers are required to contribute at a rate of 4% of the employee's monthly wages while no contribution is required from the employee.

Employers may increase their contributions up to 19% without restrictions by the Malaysian tax authorities, and still deduct the amounts for corporate tax purposes. Employees' contributions are deducted at source. No ceiling applies to the amount of wages subject to EPF contributions. Non-Malaysian citizens and non-Malaysian permanent residents are not required to contribute to the EPF, but may elect to contribute to take advantage of the available tax relief.

Self-employed persons may elect to contribute to the EPF. The individual may make voluntary contributions at a fixed monthly rate of any amount from up to MYR5,000.

EPF contributions and interest credited are not subject to Malaysian tax on withdrawal. The contributions may be withdrawn by an employee on reaching 55 years of age or at an earlier time if the employee leaves Malaysia permanently with no intention of returning. Contributions may also be withdrawn on the death of an employee or if he or she is physically or mentally incapacitated and is prevented from further employment. Employees may make partial withdrawals to purchase a house or to finance medical treatment or education, or when they attain 50 years of age. Employees may also apply for partial withdrawals to tide over the economic impact from the COVID-19 pandemic if conditions are met.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The year of assessment in Malaysia is the calendar year. The base year for assessing tax is the calendar year coinciding with the year of assessment. An individual carrying on a business in Malaysia is assessed tax on the business income for the calendar year coinciding with the year of assessment, regardless of the accounting period adopted by the business.

A self-assessment system of taxation for individuals is in effect in Malaysia. Under the self-assessment system, an individual must submit his or her tax return to the tax authorities and settle any balance of tax payable by 30 April in the year following the year of assessment if he or she has employment and/or passive income only or by 30 June in the year following the year of assessment if he or she has business income. A notice of assessment is deemed served on the submission of the tax return to the tax authorities. An appeal must be filed within 30 days from the date of the deemed notice of assessment (that is, within 30 days of the date of submission of the tax return).

An individual arriving in Malaysia who is subject to tax in the following year of assessment must notify the tax authorities of chargeability within one month after arrival. Nonresidents who are subject to final withholding taxes do not need to file tax returns unless required to do so by the tax authorities.

For employees, tax payment is made through mandatory monthly withholdings under the Monthly Tax Deduction Scheme (MTDS). All employers must deduct tax from cash remuneration, which includes wages, salaries, overtime payments, commissions, tips, allowances, bonuses and gratuities, based on tax tables provided by the Inland Revenue authorities. Effective from 1 January 2015, benefits-in-kind (BIK) and the value of living accommodation (VOLA) are subject to the MTDS. The date for payment of the taxes withheld to the tax authorities is the 15th day of the following calendar month. Employers must withhold tax at a rate of 30% from wages, BIK and VOLA paid to nonresident employees.

Effective from 2014, taxpayers have the option to treat the amount of the monthly tax deduction as the final tax paid. If they exercise this option, they are not required to submit their annual income tax returns. However, this applies only if certain conditions are fulfilled.

Married persons are taxed as separate individuals. Each spouse is assessed on his or her own income and is given tax relief through his or her own tax deductions and allowances. An individual may elect to have his or her income aggregated with the income of the spouse and to be jointly assessed in the spouse's name. This election enables the individual to utilize all allowances if his or her own income is insufficient to make full use of the available deductions and allowances.

Under the above treaties, a foreign tax credit is available for the lesser of Malaysian tax payable on the foreign income or the amount of foreign taxes paid. For non-treaty countries, the foreign tax credit available is limited to one-half of the foreign tax paid.

Under most of Malaysia's tax treaties, a business visitor to Malaysia for varying periods of up to 183 days is exempt from Malaysian income tax if the services performed are for, or on behalf of, a nonresident person and if the remuneration paid for the services is not directly deductible from the income of a permanent establishment in Malaysia.

Agreements with some countries provide for reduced withholding taxes under certain conditions.

F. Visas

A visa is defined as the document issued (in the form of a stamp or endorsement sticker) that allows entry into Malaysia for certain nationalities. Applications for visas may be made to Malaysian foreign missions abroad (subject to conditions) with or without supporting documents from the Malaysian immigration authorities.

The Malaysian government issues the following three types of visas:
- Single Entry Visa
- Multiple Entry Visa
- Transit Visa

These visas are described below.

Single Entry Visa. A Single Entry Visa (SEV), which is only valid for one entry, is issued for one of the following purposes to foreign visitors who require a visa to enter Malaysia:
- Social visit: for a stay period of up to 90 days (depending on nationality of visitor) at the discretion of immigration officers at the entry checkpoint.
- Short-term business: for a stay period of up to 90 days (depending on nationality of visitor) at the discretion of immigration officers at the entry checkpoint.
- On obtaining approval for a long-term pass application: for a stay period of up to 90 days (depending on nationality of visitor) at the discretion of immigration officers at the entry checkpoint. The visitor must proceed with endorsement of approved long-term pass as soon as possible on entry into Malaysia.

Multiple Entry Visa. A Multiple Entry Visa (MEV) is issued to foreign nationals who require a visa to enter Malaysia multiple times for purposes of social, business or government matters. The validity period of the MEV ranges from 3 months to 12 months. The MEV must be activated within its validity period after issuance, for a stay period of up to 90 days per entry (depending on the nationality of visitor) at the discretion of immigration officers at the entry checkpoint.

Transit Visa. A Transit Visa is issued for foreign visitors who are passing through Malaysia before continuing their flight route to the next destination. This visa is valid for a maximum duration of 120 hours. Foreign visitors who do not leave the airport vicinity do not need a visa.

Recently introduced facilities. Effective from 1 March 2016, the Malaysian government introduced the following facilities for nationals of selected countries traveling to Malaysia:
- e-Visa
- Electronic Travel Registration and Information (eNTRI)

e-Visa. Selected foreign nationals may apply for the SEV online and are not required to personally visit a Malaysian foreign mission abroad. This facility is only available for selected nationalities approved by the Ministry of Home Affairs. The e-Visa is valid for 3 months, and holders are entitled to a stay period of up to 30 days (at the discretion of the immigration officers at the entry checkpoint) for each visit into Malaysia. A foreign national can apply for the visa from anywhere around the world, except from Malaysia and Singapore.

Electronic Travel Registration and Information. The eNTRI facility is available for China Mainland and Indian nationals. It is designed to facilitate the entry of select China Mainland and India nationals visiting Malaysia for tourism purposes under the Visa-Waiver Program. The eNTRI note is only valid for a single journey to Malaysia for the purpose of tourism, with a maximum stay of 15 days.

G. Business visitors

All business travelers must apply for the necessary visa from Malaysian foreign missions abroad (if applicable) and are issued a Social Visit Pass (SVP), which has a validity of up to 90 days, at the entry point, subject to the discretion of the immigration officers at the checkpoint.

Business visitors must have a valid return ticket and may be requested to show proof of sufficient funding to support their stay period in Malaysia.

Facilities for business travelers have been introduced to ease the movement of business travelers to Malaysia during the COVID-19 pandemic, subject to strict conditions. Individuals should check with immigration professionals for further information and advice.

H. Work permit for professionals

A Malaysian work permit is required for any non-Malaysian person who wishes to enter Malaysia for work purposes, regardless of duration. A work permit for these individuals can be granted for a duration from 1 month to 60 months depending on, among other factors, the applicable type of work permit, merits of the applicant and the type of role. Renewals are allowed with sufficient justification to retain the employment of an employee for a role.

Employment Pass. The Employment Pass (EP) is the work permit required for any non-Malaysian person who is taking up employment with a Malaysian company or firm. It is issued by the Malaysian Immigration Department (MID). An EP is issued with the MEV for a duration of up to five years, subject to justification and consideration by the MID.

An EP is granted on a case-by-case basis for positions that require special technical knowledge or experience not available locally or for positions that cannot be filled by Malaysian citizens. In general, to obtain an EP, an applicant must have the following:

- Relevant academic qualifications and work experience.
- A passport with a validity of at least 15 months or ideally for the full duration of the EP.
- A contract from the Malaysian employer with a minimum monthly salary of MYR5,000. Exceptions to this condition apply if the employment is in selected industries or if certain conditions are fulfilled with the necessary support from the authorities. Payroll can be administered by the home or host company.

- Passport (3.5 cm x 5 cm) photograph with blue background.

Also, the Malaysian company applying for the EP must fulfill certain requirements including, but not limited to, the following:
- Industry-specific requirements apply because different industries are governed by different ministries from which pre-approvals may need to be obtained before the application can be submitted to the MID. For certain industries, the approving authority for the initial stage of the EP application may also be a Malaysian ministry or appointed body with differing application processes and requirements.
- Malaysian companies involved in selected industries are also required to provide necessary licenses in order to submit EP applications. These licenses include the Wholesale, Retail and Trade License or the Unregulated Services License from the Ministry of Domestic Trade and Consumer Affairs and the G7 Grade License issued by the Construction Industry Development Board.
- Malaysian companies that wish to apply for an EP must meet the minimum paid-up share capital requirement, which is MYR500,000 for wholly foreign-owned companies, MYR350,000 for foreign companies in a joint venture with local companies and MYR250,000 for 100% Malaysian-owned companies. The authorities for the applicable license may increase the minimum paid-up share capital requirement as a condition for the license.
- The Malaysian sponsoring company of an EP in West Malaysia must be registered with the Expatriate Services Division of the MID to which applications are submitted electronically. The only exception is for companies whose approving authority is the Malaysian Investment Development Authority or the Malaysia Digital Economy Corporation.

Under the Malaysian Immigration Act 1959/63 (amended 2002), Immigration Regulations 1963 and Employment (Restriction) Act 1968 (Revised 1988), it is illegal to work without a valid work permit endorsed in an individual's passport. The consequences of noncompliance include monetary fines, a jail term and caning. Other possible consequences include the blacklisting of the employee or the Malaysian company by the Malaysian government for up to five years.

To obtain an extension, individuals must submit an application for extension ideally three months before the expiration of their passes.

Individuals who have not completed their contract terms but wish to take up employment with other companies in Malaysia must shorten their current EP and obtain an official Release Letter from the current employer.

Professional Visit Pass. A person who intends to enter Malaysia for short-term assignments, such as to conduct training, attend training, or perform assembly, maintenance, repair or installation of machinery purchased from an overseas company, may apply for a Professional Visit Pass (PVP). A PVP is usually valid between 1 to 6 months and is renewable for a total maximum period of 12 months. No extensions are granted beyond the maximum duration allowed. The maximum duration allowed for a person who intends to do a student internship or serve as a trainee is six months and is non-renewable.

To qualify for a PVP, the individual's salary must be paid by an overseas company.

Residence Pass-Talent. The Residence Pass-Talent (RP-T) is issued to highly qualified expatriates seeking to continue living and working in Malaysia on a long-term basis. Holders of the RP-T are eligible for many benefits, including the ability to live and work in Malaysia for up to 10 years. RP-T holders may change employers without having to apply for a new work permit. The spouse and children (under 18 years old) of the recipient are also awarded the RP-T and are allowed to work (spouse) or study (children) without having to apply for an EP or Permission to Study. In general, a foreign individual who has been living and working in Malaysia for at least three years on a continuous basis with a basic monthly salary of MYR15,000 may apply for the RP-T if all of the other requirements are met. Applicants need to be approved by the RP-T panel before they are recommended for the granting of the pass. Preference is given to applicants who qualify as experts and are able to contribute to key Malaysian industries in a significant way.

I. Labor Market Testing

Labor Market Testing (LMT) is a process to understand the labor market and workforce situation in Malaysia. In West Malaysia, LMT is a mandatory requirement. It is overseen by the Ministry of Human Resources (MOHR) and involves an employer posting advertisements for a position on the national Social Security Organization (SOCSO) employment portal — MyFutureJobs — for a minimum duration of 30 calendar days, and screening and interviewing eligible candidates, before submitting applications to hire non-Malaysian employees.

LMT is performed on a specific target group to ascertain the availability of suitable talents with specific skills, who meet the criteria for a role.

From an immigration standpoint, mandatory LMT generally aims to make sure that foreign talents are only hired after employers have considered local employees for open positions.

Automatic and conditional exemptions may apply should the foreign candidate meet certain prerequisites.

J. Long-term stay

The Malaysia My Second Home Program (MM2H Program) allows people from all over the world who fulfill certain criteria to reside in Malaysia as long as possible on a Long Term Social Visit Pass (LTSVP) issued with an MEV. The LTSVP is granted for an initial period of 10 years (subject to the validity of the applicant's passport) and is renewable. The program is open to all citizens of countries recognized by Malaysia, regardless of race, religion, gender or age. Applicants may bring along their spouse and their unmarried children below 21 years old as dependents.

To qualify for the program, individuals who are aged 50 years or older must show proof of liquid assets worth a minimum of at least MYR350,000 and an offshore income of MYR10,000 per month. Individuals who are less than 50 years old are required to show proof of liquid assets worth a minimum of MYR500,000 and offshore income of MYR10,000 per month.

The applicant must satisfy either of the following conditions:

- Individuals aged 50 years or older must open a fixed-deposit account of MYR150,000 in an approved financial institution. After a period of one year, the participant can withdraw up to MYR50,000 for approved expenses relating to a house purchase, education for children in Malaysia and medical purposes. A letter from the participant to the MM2H Centre, Ministry of Tourism Malaysia is required before any withdrawal is made from the fixed-deposit account. Beginning with the second year, the participant must maintain a minimum balance of MYR100,000 throughout his or her stay in Malaysia under the program. Individuals aged below 50 years must open a fixed-deposit account of MYR300,000 in an approved financial institution. After a period of one year, the applicant can withdraw up to MYR150,000 for the above approved expenses. Beginning with the second year, they must maintain a minimum balance of MYR150,000 throughout his or her stay in Malaysia under this program.
- They must show proof of monthly offshore income, such as pension income, of MYR10,000 or more. Only applicants who are drawing from government-approved funds may satisfy this condition. If the individuals are unable to meet this condition, they may submit proof of monthly offshore income from their spouses to support the applications. However, the applicants' income should exceed the spouses' income by a ratio of 7:3.

MM2H visa holders aged 50 years old and above (who are specialized in certain approved sectors) can work part-time for up to 20 hours a week. The application for part-time employment is processed by the MID and approval is at their discretion.

All participants in the MM2H Program and their dependents (spouse and children) must submit a medical report from a private hospital or registered clinic in Malaysia on approval or on the receipt of the Conditional Letter of Approval. Approved participants and dependents (spouse and children) must possess a valid medical insurance policy that applies in Malaysia. However, exemptions may be given for participants who face difficulty in obtaining medical insurance as a result of their age or medical condition.

Foreign citizens may apply for participation in the MM2H Program directly, without going through a third party, or they may use the services of MM2H agents licensed by the Ministry of Tourism, Malaysia.

The LTSVP described above is not a permanent residence permit.

K. Entry and re-entry exemptions due to COVID-19 situations

As a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, the Malaysian government has tightened restrictions across Malaysia's international borders and imposed additional requirements and procedures for non-Malaysians traveling to Malaysia. Entry into Malaysia for foreigners is currently restricted to individuals who hold valid long-term passes in Malaysia, or approvals for valid long-term passes in Malaysia, subject to additional pre-travel requirements.

Travel bans, additional entry approvals, mandatory swab tests and quarantine measures have been introduced to manage the COVID-19 pandemic and are updated frequently.

The MID has also issued updates on stay rights and exit requirements. As the cross-border requirements are being updated regularly by the authorities, please check with immigration professionals for the latest requirements prior to any travels in or out of Malaysia.

L. Family and personal considerations

Family members

Working spouse. The spouse of an EP holder must cancel his or her Dependent Pass and obtain an EP from the MID to work legally in Malaysia. The MID does not provide a procedure for a DP holder to obtain a Permission to Work while retaining the DP.

Unmarried partner. A female unmarried partner of a male EP holder for certain nationalities are allowed to apply for the LTSVP with a maximum validity of one year if all conditions are fulfilled. The LTSVP is renewable.

Studying children. The child of an EP holder is allowed to study in Malaysia without having to change his or her Dependent Pass to a Student Pass if he or she obtains the necessary Permission to Study approval from the MID.

Children from 18 to 25 years old. The MID has set special rules regarding an application for the LTSVP for children from 18 to 25 years old only. For such children, the maximum validity of the LTSVP is one year, which is renewable. An additional document to be provided is a letter from Commissioner of Oaths to confirm that the child is single, unemployed and in the custody of the EP holder.

Accompanying parent or parent-in-law. The parent or parent-in-law of an EP holder can be granted a LTSVP with a maximum duration of one year. The LTSVP is renewable.

Marital property regime. In Malaysia, the distribution of marital assets is administered by the courts at the time of a divorce or legal separation. No strict rules govern the distributions, and courts have considerable flexibility in adjusting the property rights of the parties. The court-adjudicated distribution applies to all married persons in or domiciled in Malaysia. However, the regime does not apply to Muslims or persons married under Muslim law.

Marriages contracted outside Malaysia are recognized as valid if carried out in accordance with the laws of the relevant country and if the parties had the capacity to marry under the laws of their country of domicile.

A distinction is made between marital property acquired during the marriage by "joint efforts" and marital property acquired during the marriage by "the sole effort of one party." With respect to marital property acquired by joint efforts, the courts incline toward equal division after taking into account the extent of the contributions made by each party in acquiring the property, any debts owed by either party that are for their joint benefit and the needs of minor children. For marital property acquired by the sole effort of one party, the courts may arrive at a reasonable distribution after considering the extent of contributions made by the other party to the welfare of the family; however, the distribution must give a greater proportion of the property to the person who acquired the property.

Assets acquired by one party before the marriage and assets received during the marriage by gift from third parties are not distributed under this regime. However, if during the marriage, a non-matrimonial asset is sold and another asset is purchased with the sale proceeds, the new asset may be regarded as marital property subject to distribution.

Prenuptial agreements between the parties regarding property rights are irrelevant. The courts are not bound by these agreements in adjusting the respective rights of the parties.

The regime for distribution of property for Muslims and Muslim marriages varies from state to state. In general, a divorced party is entitled to one-third of all property acquired during the marriage.

In parts of Malaysia where the matriarchal system is followed, distribution of property follows the customary law. Under this system, at the time of divorce, property acquired by each party before the marriage is generally restored to the respective party, and property acquired during the marriage is generally divided equally.

Inheritance rules. Individuals are free to provide for the distribution of their property in a will. However, if a testator is domiciled in Malaysia, the courts have the power to intervene to provide adequate maintenance to dependents of the deceased. In addition, a Deed of Family Arrangement can alter the terms of a will or the application of intestacy laws by agreement among the beneficiaries.

In general, the provisions of wills regarding the disposal of immovable property located in Malaysia are construed in accordance with Malaysian law, whether the testator is a Malaysian or a foreigner. Wills disposing of movable or immovable property located outside Malaysia are governed by the laws of the country where the property is located.

However, in the absence of a will, the law provides for the distribution of the property of the deceased. If a non-Muslim dies without making a will, the property left behind by the individual is distributed among his or her family members according to the Distribution Act 1958. The same law applies to male and female deceased persons. In general, the estate is distributed among the deceased's immediate family, which are his or her parents, spouse and issue (descendants). A person's issue includes his or her children and the descendants of his or her children who died before him or her.

Muslim persons are subject to a separate regime of distribution.

Under customs prevalent in certain areas of Malaysia, land devolves on the female issue only, and the widower and sons take nothing.

Driver's licenses. Malaysians holding foreign driving licenses and participants in the MM2H Program can convert their foreign licenses to Malaysian driving licenses, effective from 1 November 2019.

Foreign driving license holders must use an International Driving Permit together with their respective domestic driving license to drive in Malaysia. Alternatively, it is advisable for them to apply for a Malaysia driving license via authorized driving schools based on existing procedures.

To obtain a new Malaysian driving license, the applicant must first pass a written examination on simple road signs and basic driving regulations and then apply for a temporary license, which is obtained by paying the fixed fee to the Road Transport Department of Malaysia. The relevant authority then conducts a practical test on basic driving skills.

The government of Maldives has implemented the Income Tax Act, which is effective from 1 January 2020. With the implementation of this act, the Business Profits Tax, the remittance tax and certain provisions of the land sales tax have been repealed and individual income tax and employee withholding tax was introduced.

A. Income tax

Individual income tax. Under the Income Tax Act, effective from 1 January 2020, individuals must pay tax on their business income and all other forms of income received by them. If an individual receives business income, he or she can deduct expenses incurred with respect to that business in a manner prescribed in the act. Individuals must file an annual individual income tax return. However, individuals earning only employment income are required to pay only employee withholding tax (see Employee withholding tax) and are not required to file an annual individual income tax return.

The following are the income tax brackets and rates for individuals.

Annual taxable income (MVR)	Tax rate (%)
720,000 or less	0
More than 720,000 but less than or equal to 1,200,000	5.5
More than 1,200,000 but less than or equal to 1,800,000	8
More than 1,800,000 but less than or equal to 2,400,000	12
More than 2,400,000	15

Employee withholding tax. With the introduction of employee withholding tax, effective from 1 April 2020, employers are required to withhold and pay tax from the remuneration paid to employees. Remuneration subject to employee withholding tax is total remuneration received by an employee in a month, after the deduction of the amount contributed to the Maldives Retirement Pension Scheme by the employee. Remuneration also includes allowances and benefits received by the employee, whether received in cash or in-kind. The following are the employee withholding tax brackets and rates:

Remuneration subject to withholding tax (MVR)	Tax rate (%)
60,000 or less	0
More than 60,000 but less than or equal to 100,000	5.5
More than 100,000 but less than or equal to 150,000	8
More than 150,000 but less than or equal to 200,000	12
More than 200,000	15

Business income tax. With the introduction of the Income Tax Act, the Business Profits Tax Act has been repealed and business income tax is now included in the Income Tax Act. Business income tax is imposed at a rate of 15% on profits. All persons, excluding individuals accruing profits from businesses, are subject to the tax on their taxable profits. The first MVR500,000 (USD32,425) is exempt from tax. Specified payments, such as management fees, technical services fees, royalties and rent for immovable property paid to nonresidents, are subject to nonresident withholding tax (NWHT) at a rate of 10%. Reinsurance payments made to nonresidents are subject to NWHT at a rate of 3%.

Certain expenses are allowed or disallowed for business income tax purposes. For example, receipts that have been subject to withholding tax are deductible, while private expenses are not deductible.

Losses incurred in a tax year can be carried forward and deducted against profits of the subsequent five tax years.

Companies that are registered with Maldives Inland Revenue Authority are required to file the following business income tax returns and make the following payments:

- First interim return due on 31 July of the tax year: one-half of the total tax paid in the preceding tax year
- Second interim return due on 31 January of the following tax year: one-half of the total tax paid in the preceding tax year
- Final return due on 30 June of the following tax year: any balance of tax due

If a company has reasonable grounds to expect that its tax payable for a tax year will be less than the tax payable for the preceding year, the company may make a reasonable estimate of the tax payable for that year when calculating the interim payments. However, if the actual tax payable exceeds more than 20% of the estimated interim liability, fines and penalties will apply to the unpaid interim liability.

B. Goods and services tax

Goods and services tax (GST) is levied at a rate of 6% on general goods and services supplied in the Maldives. The rate of GST for the tourism sector is 12%. A green tax of USD6 per occupying guest is levied. A GST return must be filed by the 28th day of the month following the end of the tax period.

C. Work permit

Foreigners going to the Maldives for employment are required to obtain a work permit from the employer. Work permits are issued by Maldives Immigration, which requires that employers deposit a sum of money as a work permit deposit for each employee. A monthly visa fee of MVR250 applies for foreign workers.

Business visas also can be obtained from a Maldivian sponsor for a maximum of 90 days.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Persons who are both ordinarily resident and domiciled in Malta are subject to tax on their worldwide income and chargeable capital gains. Persons who are either not ordinarily resident in Malta or not domiciled in Malta are subject to tax only on Maltese-source income and on foreign income that is remitted to or received in Malta.

In practice, individuals generally are considered resident in Malta if they spend more than 183 days in a calendar year in Malta. Individuals are considered ordinarily resident if Malta is their habitual residence.

Individuals are deemed to be domiciled in Malta if they settle in Malta with the purpose of living in Malta for good and consider Malta to be their permanent home.

An individual cannot apply the remittance basis of taxation if any of the following circumstances exists:

- His or her spouse or partner in a registered civil union is ordinarily resident and domiciled in Malta.
- He or she is a long-term resident as defined in the Status of Long-Term Residents (Third Country Nationals) Regulations.
- He or she is the holder of a permanent residence certificate or a permanent residence card issued in accordance with the Free Movement of European Union (EU) Nationals and their Family Members Order.

Individuals applying the remittance basis of taxation may be liable to pay a minimum tax liability. See Rates for further details.

Article 29 (2) of the Income Tax Act (ITA) provides that income derived by an owner, lessor or operator of an aircraft or aircraft engine engaged in the international transport of passengers or goods is deemed to arise outside Malta, regardless of the fact that the aircraft may have called at or operated from an airport in Malta.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable employment income consists of gains or profits from any employment or office, including directors' fees and fringe benefits provided because of an employment or office, such as the granting of the following:
- The private use of a motor vehicle
- The use of immovable and movable property
- Other benefits granted as a result of the nature of the employment or office

Article 56 (17) of the ITA provides for favorable tax treatment of employment income derived under an employment contract requiring the performance of work or of duties mainly outside Malta. At the taxpayer's option, income arising from such an employment contract is taxable at a rate of 15%. The scheme is available to any individual. Specific conditions must be satisfied for the system to apply.

The beneficial tax treatment described in the preceding paragraph does not apply to income derived from services rendered on ships, aircraft or road vehicles owned, chartered or leased by Maltese companies and to government services.

Income taxed under Article 56 (17) of the ITA is deemed to constitute "the first part of that individual's total income for that year" for computational purposes. Under this measure, if the individual derives income from other sources, such income is taxed at the progressive rates applicable to the portion of the income in excess of the income taxed at 15% (that is, any surplus income is not taxed at the progressive rates beginning at 0%; instead, it is taxed at the higher progressive rates applicable to the subsequent tax brackets).

Highly Qualified Persons Rules. The Highly Qualified Persons Rules provide a beneficial tax system for persons who receive emoluments payable under a qualifying employment contract. This measure provides for a potentially favorable tax rate of 15%, which can be applied at the option of the taxpayer. The 15% rate may be used with respect to income derived both from work duties carried out in Malta and from work duties performed outside Malta in connection with work duties in Malta. Persons who may benefit from these rules are highly qualified individuals who receive employment income of a minimum of EUR86,938 (exclusive of the annual value of any fringe benefits and as adjusted annually in line with the Rental Price Index) from an eligible office.

The tax benefit consists in the right to elect to pay tax at a rate of 15% on income from a qualifying employment contract. No further Malta income tax at the prescribed rate of 15% is chargeable on the income earned by individuals from a qualifying employment contract exceeding EUR5 million. The rate of 15% applies without the possibility to claim any relief, deduction, reduction, credit or setoff.

To benefit from the tax system described above, an individual must meet all of the following conditions:

- He or she must derive income subject to tax under Article 4(1)(b) of the ITA, which are emoluments payable under a qualifying employment contract.
- He or she is protected as an employee under Maltese law and has the required adequate and specific competence, as proven to the satisfaction of the Malta Financial Services Authority (in the case of financial services), the Malta Gaming Authority (in the case of gaming services), Transport Malta (in the case of aviation services), or the office of the Chief Medical Officer to the Government (in the case of medical services).
- He or she proves to the satisfaction of the Malta Financial Services Authority (in the case of financial services), the Malta Gaming Authority (in the case of gaming services), Transport Malta (in the case of aviation services) or the office of the Chief Medical Officer to the Government (in the case of medical services) that he or she possesses professional qualifications and has at least five years of professional experience.
- He or she has not benefitted under Article 6 of the ITA, which provides for certain fringe benefit exemptions.
- He or she fully discloses for tax purposes and declares emoluments received with respect to income from a qualifying employment contract.
- He or she proves to the satisfaction of the Malta Financial Services Authority (in the case of financial services), the Malta Gaming Authority (in the case of gaming services), Transport Malta (in the case of aviation services) or the office of the Chief Medical Officer to the Government (in the case of medical services) the following:
  - He or she performs activities of an eligible office (see below).
  - He or she receives stable and regular resources that are sufficient to maintain himself or herself and the members of his or her family without recourse to the social assistance system in Malta.
  - He or she resides in an accommodation that is regarded as normal for a comparable family in Malta and that meets the general health and safety standards in force in Malta.
  - He or she possesses a valid travel document.
  - He or she possesses sickness insurance with respect to all risks normally covered for Maltese nationals for himself or herself and the members of his or her family.
  - He or she is not domiciled in Malta.

For purposes of the above beneficial tax system, the following offices with companies licensed and/or recognized by the Malta Financial Services Authority (in the case of financial services), the Malta Gaming Authority (in the case of gaming services) or Transport Malta (in the case of aviation services) are considered eligible offices:

- Chief Executive Officer, Chief Risk Officer (including Fraud and Investigations Office), Chief Financial Officer, Chief Operations Officer (including Aviation Accountable Manager), Chief Technology Officer and Chief Commercial Officer

- Aviation Continuing Airworthiness Manager, Aviation Flight Operations Manager, Aviation Ground Operations Manager and Aviation Training Manager

The benefit is also available to individuals employed as a Chief Executive Officer with an entity holding an aerodrome license and individuals employed in the Assisted Reproductive Technology sectors as embryologists, responsible persons or lead quality managers.

The benefit applies for a specific number of years (five years with respect to European Economic Area [EEA] and Swiss nationals and four years with respect to third-country nationals) from the date of first election, and it may be clawed back retrospectively if the expatriate's stay in Malta is not in the public interest.

On submitting an application, the person is eligible for two further extensions of four or five years, as the case may be, for the qualifying period, subject to the continued adherence to the other provisions of these rules.

The Maltese tax authorities will not issue a determination regarding the above after 31 December 2025, and any such determination issued must refer to any employment in respect of which the benefit provided by these rules commences by 31 December 2026 and ceases to apply by 31 December 2030.

Qualifying employment in aviation rules. The qualifying employment in aviation rules provide that if an individual derives income of at least EUR45,000 from a qualifying employment contract, such income may be subject to tax at a flat rate of 15%. The rate of 15% applies without the possibility to claim any relief, deduction, reduction, credit or setoff.

However, the Maltese tax authorities will not issue a determination regarding the above after 31 December 2025, and no benefit may be availed after the 2030 year of assessment.

Qualifying employment in maritime activities and the servicing of offshore oil and gas industry activities. The rules provide that if an individual derives income of at least EUR65,000 from a qualifying employment contract, such income may be subject to tax at a flat rate of 15%. The benefit applies for a specific number of years from the date of first election, and it may be clawed back retrospectively if the expatriate's stay in Malta is not in the public interest.

Self-employment and business income. Taxable self-employment and business income is based on accounting profits, adjusted for tax purposes. Tax adjustments include the addition of disallowable expenses, such as accounting depreciation, amortization of goodwill, movements in certain corporate-related provisions, donations, stamp duty expense and startup expense.

Taxable self-employment and business income is aggregated with other income and taxed at the rates set forth in Rates.

Investment income. Malta operates a full imputation system under which dividends paid by a company resident in Malta out of its taxed profits carry a tax credit equal to the tax paid by the company on the profits out of which the dividends are paid. Shareholders are taxed on the gross dividend at the regular rates, but are entitled to deduct the tax credit attaching to the dividend against their total income tax liability. The full imputation system applies to both residents and nonresidents. If a dividend is paid out of the Untaxed Account (the difference between tax and accounting profits), a 15% withholding tax is imposed. In general, this withholding tax does not apply to nonresidents. Dividends paid out of profits exempt from tax, which do not fall in the Untaxed Account, are not taxable in the hands of the shareholders.

Resident individuals may choose to pay a 15% withholding tax on bank interest and other forms of investment income. Interest, royalties, premiums and discounts paid to nonresidents are exempt from tax in Malta unless such income is effectively connected with a permanent establishment in Malta through which the nonresidents engage in a trade or business.

In general, rental income is taxed with other income at the rates set forth in Rates. Limited deductions are available against rental income in the determination of chargeable income (see below). However, individuals deriving rental income from the leasing of residential and certain commercial tenements may choose to pay a 15% final tax on the gross rental income received. This 15% rate is considered a final tax and is not available for credit or setoff.

A person who, in the year immediately preceding the year of assessment, derives rental income from a registered private residential lease with a duration of two years or more and opts to charge that income to tax by applying the 15% final tax on gross rental income, is entitled to a tax rebate. The applicable rebate is determined by reference to the duration of the registered private residential lease and the number of bedrooms of the leased premises and ranges from EUR200 to EUR500 per lease.

A special withholding tax rate of 5% applies if an individual rents immovable property to the Housing Authority for a period of not less than 10 years. The 5% tax is applied to the gross rental income received. It is considered a final tax and is not available for credit or setoff. The tax is withheld by the Housing Authority from payments made and remitted to the Commissioner for Revenue by the 14th day following the end of the month in which the rent is paid.

A special final tax rate of 10% may also apply with respect to particular rental income.

If the rental income is not subject to a final tax, bank interest, license fees and rents payable may be deducted if incurred in the production of passive rental income. An additional 20% maintenance allowance, calculated on the difference between rents receivable and rents and license fees payable, may be taken. Each property is treated as a separate source of income. Losses from one property may not offset income from another.

Tax schemes for high-net-worth individuals. Non-Maltese individuals who meet several conditions may benefit from a special tax status. Special tax status implies the right to pay tax at 15%. The 15% tax rate does not apply to local-source income and capital gains. An obligation to pay minimum tax applies.

Residence program for EU/EEA and Swiss nationals. An EU/EEA or Swiss national may benefit under this system if such person proves to the satisfaction of the Commissioner for Revenue the following:

- He or she holds a qualifying property with the following value thresholds:
  - Owned property of not less than EUR275,000 for a property located in Malta (EUR220,000 for a property located in Gozo or in the south of Malta)
  - Rented property of not less than EUR9,600 per year for a property located in Malta (EUR8,750 per year for a property located in Gozo or in the south of Malta)
- He or she does not benefit under any other scheme.
- He or she is neither a Maltese national nor a third-country national. The special law contains a special definition of this term. For the purposes of this law, EEA and Swiss nationals are not considered third-country nationals.
- He or she is in receipt of stable and regular resources that are sufficient to maintain himself or herself and his or her dependents without recourse to social assistance in Malta.
- He or she is in possession of a valid travel document.
- He or she is in possession of sickness insurance with respect to all risk across the whole of the EU that is normally covered for Maltese nationals for himself or herself and his or her dependents.

- He or she can adequately communicate in one of the official languages of Malta.
- He or she meets a fit and proper test.

Beneficiaries under the scheme have the right to pay tax at 15% on their foreign-source income, that is received in Malta, subject to a minimum tax of EUR15,000 per year.

The law prescribes the following circumstances that would result in loss of status:
- The individual has a lack of holding of qualifying property.
- The individual becomes a Malta or a third-country national.
- The individual becomes a permanent resident of Malta.
- The individual does not possess sickness insurance for himself or herself and his or her dependents after the appointed date.
- The individual's stay is not in the public interest.
- The individual stays in another jurisdiction for more than 183 days in a calendar year.

Beneficiaries are subject to reporting obligations.

Global residence program for non-EU/EEA and non-Swiss nationals. The conditions and characteristics of the global residence program for non-EU/EEA and non-Swiss nationals are almost identical to those applicable to EU/EEA or Swiss Nationals, subject to some exceptions.

Beneficiaries under this scheme can also benefit from a 15% tax rate on income arising outside Malta, including foreign-source income that is received in Malta. Beneficiaries are liable to a minimum tax of EUR15,000 per year.

The law prescribes the following circumstances that would result in a loss of status under the scheme:
- The individual becomes a Maltese, EU, EEA or Swiss national.
- The individual has a lack of holding of qualifying property.
- The individual becomes a long-term resident of Malta.
- The individual does not possess sickness insurance for himself or herself and his or her dependents after the appointed date.
- The stay is not in the public interest.
- The individual stays in another jurisdiction for more than 183 days in a calendar year.

The Maltese Citizenship by Naturalisation for Exceptional Services by Direct Investment. This program is regulated by the Granting of Citizenship for Exceptional Services Regulations (S.L. 188.05), which allows for the granting of citizenship by a certificate of naturalization to foreign individuals and their families who contribute to the economic development of Malta. These regulations are being administered by a newly founded government agency, the Community Malta Agency. Like the Malta Individual Investor Programme, every application is subject to a stringent due diligence process, including thorough background checks.

Individuals interested in pursuing a Maltese Citizenship Application must go through the following three main stages:
- Residency Stage

- Citizenship Eligibility Stage
- Citizenship Stage

Applicants have the option of choosing a three-year residence route or a one-year residence route before submitting the citizenship application. The applicant's option must be made clear when applying for residence permit. Prospective applicants are only eligible to apply for citizenship under the new program as main applicants only if the following requirements are satisfied:

- They must be at least 18 years of age.
- They must meet the application requirements, which include the purchase of property in Malta with a minimum amount of EUR700,000 or lease a property in Malta with a minimum amount of EUR16,000, as provided under the new regulations (to be retained for a minimum period of five years from the date the Certificate of Naturalisation is issued).
- They must commit to provide proof of residence for a period of 12 months or 36 months before becoming eligible to apply for citizenship, as provided under the new regulations.
- They need to invest EUR750,000 (after one year of residence) or EUR600,000 (after having three years in Malta).
- They must commit to donate a minimum of EUR10,000 to a registered philanthropic organization, as provided under the new regulations.

If the applicant goes for the one-year residency route, the following investment requirements need to be met:

- Main contribution: EUR750,000 for main applicant, and EUR50,000 per dependent individual
- Real estate investment: EUR700,000 (purchase of property) or minimum EUR16,000 annually (in the case of a lease of property)
- Donation to a registered philanthropic organization: minimum of EUR10,000

If the prospect goes for the three-year residency route, the following investment requirements need to be met:

- Main contribution: EUR600,000 for main applicant, and EUR50,000 per dependent individual
- Real estate investment: EUR700,000 (purchase of property) or minimum EUR16,000 annually (in the case of a lease of property)
- Donation to a registered philanthropic organization: minimum of EUR10,000

Repatriation of Persons Established in a Field of Excellence Rules. The Repatriation of Persons Established in a Field of Excellence (RPEFE) Rules prescribe that an individual who is established in a field of excellence and returns as an ordinary resident in Malta may elect to have his or her income from employment exercised in Malta charged to tax at a flat rate of 15%.

A person may benefit under this system if all of the following conditions are satisfied:

- His or her income is derived from a qualifying employment contract.
- He or she is an eligible person who receives employment income and emoluments (exclusive of the annual value of any fringe benefits) of EUR75,000 or more and is the beneficiary of such items.

A qualifying contract is an employment contract approved in writing by the Malta Enterprise Corporation.

An eligible person is an individual who is established in a field of excellence and returns as an ordinary resident in Malta if he or she had been ordinarily resident in Malta for at least 20 years but has not been ordinarily resident in Malta for the 10 consecutive years before his or her return to Malta.

A field of excellence is an area of professional competence in which an eligible person has excelled that is relevant for the manufacturing and research and development sectors, as defined in guidelines that may be issued by Malta Enterprise Corporation in accordance with the Malta Enterprise Act.

A beneficiary is an eligible person who, to the satisfaction of the Malta Enterprise Corporation, meets all of the following conditions:

- He or she is an individual who derives income subject to tax under Article 4(1)(b) of the ITA, which consist of income and emoluments payable under a qualifying employment contract and received with respect to the following:
  - Work or duties carried out in Malta.
  - A period spent outside Malta that is related to such work or duties.
  - Leave during the carrying out of such work or duties.
- He or she proves to the satisfaction of Malta Enterprise Corporation that he or she possesses educational and/or professional qualifications that are relevant in the profession or sector specified in the binding job offer or in the qualifying employment contract, as may be further defined in guidelines issued by the Malta Enterprise Corporation in accordance with the Malta Enterprise Act.
- He or she is protected as an employee under Maltese law, regardless of the legal relationship, for the purpose of exercising genuine and effective work for, or under the direction of, someone else, is paid, and has the required adequate and specific competence, as proven to the satisfaction of the Malta Enterprise Corporation.

United Nations Pensions Programme Rules. Under the United Nations (UN) Pensions Programme Rules, following the granting of the special tax status, a beneficiary's UN pension income or widow's/widower's benefit received in Malta is exempt from income tax. In addition, under this scheme, a 15% tax is levied on all income excluding the UN pension or widow's/widower's benefit arising outside of Malta in the year immediately preceding the year of assessment in which it is received in Malta by the beneficiary and the beneficiary's spouse and dependents, provided that the minimum amount of income subject to tax is EUR10,000 with respect to the beneficiary (this amount is increased by EUR5,000 if both spouses are in receipt of a UN pension). A 35% tax is imposed on all other income of the beneficiary and the beneficiary's spouse and dependents that is not chargeable in accordance with the preceding two rules. A beneficiary is an individual who is not a permanent resident nor a long-term resident of Malta and who proves to the satisfaction of the Commissioner for Revenue the following:

- The individual is in receipt of a UN pension or a widow's/widower's benefit, of which at least 40% is received in Malta.
- He or she is not a person who benefits under any other scheme.
- He or she is not a Maltese national.
- He or she holds a qualifying property holding.
- He or she is in receipt of stable and regular resources that are sufficient to maintain himself or herself and his or her dependents without recourse to the social assistance system in Malta.
- He or she is in possession of a valid travel document.
- He or she is in possession of sickness insurance with respect to all risks across the whole of the EU that are normally covered for Maltese nationals, and such insurance covers himself or herself and his or her dependents.
- He or she can adequately communicate in one of the official languages of Malta.
- He or she is a fit and proper person.

An individual ceases to possess special tax status under these rules after the appointed day for such status if any of the following circumstances arise:

- The individual becomes a permanent resident or a long-term resident of Malta.
- The individual becomes a Maltese national.
- The individual does not hold a qualifying property holding, including a case in which the individual lets or sublets the qualifying property holding.
- The individual fails to receive in Malta at least 40% of the UN pension or widow's/widower's benefit as indicated in documentary evidence submitted to the Commissioner for Revenue.
- The individual is not in possession of the sickness insurance referred to above.
- The individual's stay is not in the public interest.
- The individual stays in any other jurisdiction for more than 183 days in a calendar year.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. The exercise by an employee of a share option is taxable as a fringe benefit. When an employee exercises the option to acquire shares in a company in which the employee is employed, the taxable value of the fringe benefit equals 15% of the excess, if any, of the market value of the shares on the date of the exercise of the option over the option price of such shares.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from the transfer of the following capital assets are taxable:

- Immovable property
- Securities
- Business
- Goodwill
- Business permits
- Copyrights
- Patents
- Trademarks and trade names
- Beneficial interests in trusts
- A full or partial interest in a partnership

In certain cases, share dilutions and degroupings result in deemed transfers of securities in a company and are subject to tax.

In addition, if a person acquires or increases a partnership share, a transfer of an interest in the partnership to that partner from the other partners is deemed to occur and accordingly is subject to tax.

Taxable capital gains, other than on immovable property subject to property transfer tax (see Property transfer tax), are included with other income and taxed at the rates set forth in Rates.

Capital losses may not offset trading profits; however, capital losses may be carried forward for offset against future capital gains. Trading losses may offset capital gains.

Individuals who are not ordinarily resident in Malta are exempt from tax on gains derived from disposals of shares in Maltese companies and partnerships, other than Maltese property companies or property partnerships.

In the course of a winding up or distribution of assets of a company, the transfer of property by a company to a shareholder who owns 95% of the share capital of the company, or to an individual related to the shareholder, is exempt from tax, provided certain conditions are satisfied.

Property transfer tax. In general, the transfer of immovable property in Malta is taxed at a rate of 8% on the higher of the consideration or market value of the immovable property at the date of the transfer. No deductions may reduce the tax base, except for agency fees subject to value-added tax (VAT). However, different tax rates apply in certain circumstances, which are described below.

If the property transferred was acquired before 1 January 2004 or if the property is a Grade 1 or Grade 2 scheduled property or property located in an urban conservation area, the seller is taxed at a rate of 10% of the transfer value.

A 5% tax rate applies in either of the following circumstances:
- The property does not form part of a project and is transferred before five years from the date of acquisition.
- The transferred property is a restored or rehabilitated property that is located in an urban conservation area or is scheduled by the Malta Environment and Planning Authority.

A 2% rate applies to a transfer of property owned by an individual (or co-owned by two individuals) that was deemed to be the transferor's sole ordinary residence. The transfer must be made not later than three years after the date of acquisition of the property.

For a transfer of immovable property acquired through a donation made more than five years before the date of the transfer, a 12% rate applies on the difference between the relevant transfer value and the relevant acquisition value.

For a transfer of property that was acquired by the transferor by inheritance before 25 November 1992 or a transfer of property by inheritance after 25 November 1992 by means of a judicial sale by auction, the tax equals 7% of the transfer value. If the property was acquired by the transferor by inheritance after 25 November 1992, the tax equals 12% of the difference between the transfer value and the value declared when the property was inherited by the transferor.

For the transfer of property that is not part of a project, the tax rate is 5% of the transfer value if the transfer is made before five years after the acquisition date.

Nonresidents may opt out of the 8% final withholding tax regime if they produce a statement signed by the tax authorities of their country of residence confirming that they are resident in that country and that any gains or profits derived in Malta are being taxed in their country of residence. In such circumstances, the tax on the capital gain derived from the sale of immovable property in Malta is calculated by reference to the difference between the consideration and the cost of the property. Tax is calculated at the nonresident rates. However, these nonresidents must pay a 7% provisional tax payment on the transfer of property, which is not available for refund.

Deductions

Deductions from employment income. The following deductions from employment income are expressly allowed:

- Individuals may deduct certain alimony payments including alimony payments ordered by the courts of an EU or EEA member state or the courts of another jurisdiction as the Commissioner for Revenue may approve.
- School fees paid to schools specified by the Minister of Finance and fees with respect to a registered private kindergarten are deductible to persons paying such fees on behalf of their children. The maximum amounts deductible are EUR2,600 for each child attending secondary school and EUR1,900 for each child attending primary school plus EUR1,600 for kindergarten. Fees paid to one of the specified schools for a facilitator with respect to a child with special needs may be deducted up to an amount of EUR9,320 if a board established by the Minister of Finance for this purpose determines that a facilitator is necessary.
- Individuals who prove to the satisfaction of the Commissioner for Revenue that they have paid fees for child care services for their children who were below the age of 12 to bona fide child care centers may claim a deduction for such payments confirmed by official receipts, up to a maximum deduction of EUR2,000.
- Fees paid for the use of school transport are deductible to persons paying such fees on behalf of their children younger than 16. Up to a maximum of EUR150 for each child may be claimed as a deduction.
- Individuals who prove to the satisfaction of the Commissioner for Revenue that in the year preceding a year of assessment they have paid fees on their own behalf or on behalf of family members with respect to a residence in a private home for the elderly and/or disabled may deduct such fees up to a maximum amount of EUR2,500. The proof must consist of information provided by the operator of the private home for the elderly.

- Individuals may claim a deduction for fees paid on behalf of their children younger than age 16 for attendance at sports activities organized either by a person registered under the Sport Persons (Registration) Regulations or approved by the Kunsill Malti ta' l-Isport, up to a maximum deduction of EUR100 for each child. Individuals may also claim a deduction for fees paid on behalf of their children younger than 16 for cultural activities, also up to a maximum of EUR100 per child.
- Individuals who prove to the satisfaction of the Commissioner for Revenue that they have paid fees with respect to their studies at recognized tertiary education institutions, located in Malta or abroad, may claim a deduction against their income with respect to such fees in such manner and subject to such conditions as may be prescribed. The deduction is capped at EUR10,000, but any amounts above that threshold may be carried forward and set off against income for subsequent years.

Business deductions. Self-employed individuals may deduct all expenses incurred wholly and exclusively in the production of income, including capital allowances (tax depreciation) at specified rates. In addition, a deduction of up to EUR935 per child may be claimed for payments by an employer to a licensed or registered child care center with respect to child care services rendered to children of employees.

Rates

Residents. The following tables present the progressive tax rates for the 2021 basis year for married persons filing jointly and single persons and married persons filing separately.

Married persons filing jointly

Taxable income EUR	Tax rate %	Tax due EUR	Cumulative tax due EUR
First 12,700	0	0	0
Next 8,500	15	1,275	1,275
Next 7,500	25	1,875	3,150

Individuals who are EU/EEA nationals may also qualify for the above rates even if a spouse is not resident in Malta, provided that other specified conditions are satisfied and that the Commissioner for Revenue is satisfied that at least 90% of the couple's worldwide income is derived from Malta.

Single persons and married persons filing separately

First 9,100	0	0	0
Next 5,400	15	810	810
Next 5,000	25	1,250	2,060
Next 40,500	25	10,215	12,275

Persons applying either the single tax rates or the married tax rates who receive pensions exceeding EUR9,100 or EUR12,700, respectively, are allowed a pension tax rebate.

For persons applying the single tax rates with pension income exceeding EUR9,100, the pension tax rebate is calculated as follows:

Pension tax rebate = (Pension income – EUR9,100) × 0.15

However, the maximum tax rebate cannot exceed EUR705.

For persons applying the married tax rates with pensions exceeding EUR12,700, the pension tax rebate is calculated as follows:

However, the maximum tax rebate cannot exceed EUR165.

In addition, a further pension tax rebate is granted to persons applying the married tax rates. The further pension tax rebate is calculated as follows:

Further pension tax rebate =
[(Taxable income – EUR12,700) × 0.15] –
Original rebate (maximum of EUR165)

However, the maximum rebate cannot exceed EUR300.

Individuals who have not yet reached the statutory retirement age and who return to employment after having been absent from any gainful occupation for at least five years immediately preceding the date of the income tax return (30 June) benefit from a tax credit of EUR2,000. This tax credit is set off against the tax on income from the employment and may be claimed for two consecutive years beginning in the year of assessment in which the employment begins.

Women who have a child and continue in employment, including women who have a child or children who are under 16 years of age and return to employment after having been absent from any gainful occupation for at least five years immediately preceding the date of the income tax return (30 June), also benefit from the tax credit of EUR2,000 referred to in the preceding paragraph. At their option, these women are able to claim (as an alternative to the tax credit of EUR2,000) a tax credit of EUR5,000, which may be claimed against the tax on income from employment derived in the year in which the employment resumes.

In certain cases, a tax exemption for employment income in the year of the beginning of employment may be claimed.

Individuals must be subject to a tax liability amounting to not less than EUR5,000 in Malta on their income if, during any year preceding the year of assessment, they meet all of the following conditions:

- They are ordinarily resident in Malta but not domiciled in Malta.
- They are not taxed in accordance with any structured scheme that provides for a minimum annual tax payment.
- They derive income arising outside of Malta amounting to not less than EUR35,000, and the income is not received or fully received.

In certain cases, the remittance base charge may be capped to an amount lower than EUR5,000. Relief for double taxation is allowed in certain cases.

Individuals who qualify as full-time employees for the purposes of the law or are married to full-time employees may elect to have their part-time income taxed at a flat rate of 15% instead of at the progressive rates listed above. The maximum income to which this special rate may be applied is EUR10,000 (EUR12,000 for income derived from a self-employment activity).

Individuals who are employed on a full-time basis in a post that is not a managerial post and who carry out qualifying overtime may be taxed on their qualifying overtime income at a flat rate of 15%. The applicability of this flat rate is subject to a cap.

Nonresidents. Nonresidents, regardless of whether they are married or single, are subject to tax at the following rates on income arising or received in Malta.

First 700	0	0	0
Next 2,400	20	480	480
Next 4,700	30	1,410	1,890
Above 7,800	35	—	—

However, for individuals who are EU/EEA nationals, if the Commissioner for Revenue is satisfied that at least 90% of the individual's worldwide income is derived from Malta, the income tax rates applicable to residents, which are specified above, apply.

In general, if taxable income is paid to a nonresident (other than a company), a 25% withholding tax must be deducted at source and remitted to the Commissioner for Revenue within 30 days. Any tax withheld is credited to nonresident taxpayers in full against their final tax liability for the year. This withholding tax does not apply to dividends paid out of previously taxed profits (see Investment income), to income previously subject to withholding under the FSS (see Section D), or to interest and royalties.

Parental rates. Parental computation applies to a parent who maintains under his or her custody a child, or pays maintenance in respect of his or her child, and such child is not over 18 years of age (or not over 23 years if receiving full-time instruction at a tertiary education establishment) and not gainfully occupied, or if gainfully occupied did not earn income in excess of EUR3,400. Under parental computation, parents are entitled to be taxed at the following rates:

First 10,500	0	0	0
Next 5,300	15	795	795
Next 5,400	25	1,350	2,145

Persons qualifying for parental tax rates who are over 61 years of age and are entitled to a pension of more than EUR10,500, are allowed a pension tax rebate, which is calculated as follows:

Pension tax rebate = (Pension income – EUR10,500) × 0.15

However, the maximum rebate cannot not exceed EUR495.

Tax credits with respect to personal retirement schemes. Maltese residents who save for their pensions by investing in personal retirement schemes may benefit from a tax credit that is set off against the individuals' income tax chargeable in Malta for the year. Such credit applies to persons who make contributions to qualifying personal retirement schemes or pay premiums on private long-term insurance policies.

Qualifying Maltese resident persons over 18 years of age may claim a tax credit of 25% of the total contributions paid during the year to personal retirement schemes. The maximum amount that can be claimed as a tax credit is EUR500.

The Voluntary Occupational Pension Scheme Rules. The Voluntary Occupational Pension Scheme (VOPS) Rules provide for a special tax credit applicable to qualifying employees making qualifying contributions to qualifying schemes, subject to several conditions. This tax credit amounts to the lower of 25% of the amount of qualifying contributions paid during a year and EUR500 or any other amount prescribed by the Minister of Finance from time to time.

Any payments made by a qualifying employer for the benefit of a qualifying employee are not deemed to be a benefit provided by the qualifying employer to the qualifying employee by reason of employment or office for the purposes of the Fringe Benefit Rules.

For purposes of the VOPS Rules, a qualifying scheme is a retirement scheme or a long-term contract of insurance that fulfills certain requirements and that is approved by the Commissioner for Revenue, and a qualifying contribution is a contribution or payment made to a qualifying scheme with respect to which the provisions of the VOPS Rules apply.

Tax Credit (Educational Qualifications) Rules. The Tax Credit (Educational Qualifications) Rules grant an individual who has obtained a relevant qualification on the completion of a course or program of studies on a full-time basis that commenced in 2017 or later a tax credit equal to the tax chargeable for the relevant year of assessment on the income from the individual's full-time employment. The maximum amount of the income that can be relieved by such credit is EUR60,000. The tax credit is also available to courses commenced before 2017, with the tax credit being calculated using a formula prescribed by the Tax Credit (Higher Educational Qualifications) Rules.

Commutation of pensions. An exemption from Malta tax applies to a capital sum received by way of commutation of pension amounting to up to 30% of the total pension, retirement or death gratuity or consolidated compensation for death or injuries. In the case of recognized retirement schemes, this exemption applies regardless of whether the capital sum is paid in one lump sum or in a series of payments within one year from an individual's retirement day as prescribed by issued regulations.

Relief for losses. Individuals may offset any losses incurred in a trade, business, profession or vocation against other income. These losses may be carried forward for offset against future years' income. Losses may not be carried back. Unabsorbed capital allowances may be carried forward indefinitely to offset income from the same source.

B. Estate and gift taxes

Malta does not impose estate or gift taxes. However, duty on documents is imposed on heirs upon inheritance of immovable property at a rate of 5% and on shares at a rate of 2%. The same rates of duty apply to transfers of real immovable property and shares, including transfers through gifts. Duty on documents at a special rate of 5% is imposed on the transfer of shares of a company if 75% or more of the company's assets consist of immovable property or rights over immovable property.

C. Social security

Social security is provided by a system of social insurance and a system of social assistance regulated by the Social Security Act.

Contributions. All employed and self-employed persons must pay social security contributions.

Employed persons. Employers make social security contributions at a rate of 10% of the basic wage paid to their employees, subject to a minimum amount of EUR18.11 and a maximum amount of EUR37.24 for persons born up to 31 December 1961 or EUR48.57 for persons born from 1 January 1962 onward, per week per employee. Employees are also required to make a 10% contribution, subject to the same minimum and maximum amounts.

Employees aged 18 years and older earning less than EUR181.08 per week should pay EUR18.11 per week. However, employees may elect to pay 10% of their weekly gross wage. If the employee makes such an election, he or she is entitled to pro rata contributory benefits.

The minimum amount for social security contributions to be paid by persons under 18 years old is EUR6.62 per week.

Employers deduct the social security contributions before paying the net salary to the employee. The employer must remit the amount due to the Commissioner for Revenue by the end of the following month in which the wages or salaries are paid.

Self-occupied and self-employed persons. The Social Security Act defines the following two categories of persons that are required to pay Class Two contributions:

- Self-occupied persons are those who earn income in excess of EUR910 per year from a trade, business, profession, vocation or any other economic activity.
- Self-employed persons are those who receive income from rents, investments, capital gains or any other income.

Rates for Class Two social security contributions are based on the annual net profit or income for the year preceding the contribution payment year.

For self-employed persons whose income during the calendar year immediately preceding the contribution year was less than EUR10,757, a weekly contribution of EUR31.03 applies.

For persons born on 31 December 1961 or earlier, and whose income in the preceding year was at least EUR10,758 but did not exceed EUR19,362, the weekly contribution is 15% of annual net earnings. If income in the preceding year exceeded EUR19,362, the weekly contribution is EUR55.85.

For persons born 1 January 1962 or later, and whose income in the preceding year ranged from EUR10,758 to EUR25,258, the weekly contribution is 15% of annual net earnings. If income in the preceding year exceeded EUR24,258, the weekly contribution is EUR72.86.

A separate rate applies to single persons who are self-employed but not self-occupied (self-occupied individuals are individuals rendering independent personal services). For these persons, if income in the preceding year ranged from EUR1,006 to EUR9,296, the weekly contribution is EUR26.82.

Coverage. Maltese citizens receive free services and financial aid benefits for unemployment, illness, work injury, disability, old age, early retirement (at 61 years of age), marriage, maternity, children, widowhood and medical care. All employees who pay a minimum amount of social security contributions are entitled to a basic pension on retirement.

Totalization agreements. To prevent double taxation and assure benefit coverage, Malta has entered into social security totalization agreements with Australia, Canada, Libya, New Zealand and the United Kingdom.

As a member of the EU, Malta is governed by EU Regulations 883/04 and 987/09 regarding the social security exemption system.

Social security matters with the United Kingdom are now dealt with under the trade agreement between the EU and the United Kingdom, which came into force on 1 January 2021. It specifically includes a protocol on social security coordination and is transposed for UK and EU nationals resident in the United Kingdom.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The year of assessment (tax year) is the calendar year. In the year of assessment, income tax is charged on income earned in the preceding calendar year (the basis year). Recipients of specified types of income are not required to file regular tax returns, but they receive a tax statement with respect to the basis year in question. The taxpayer needs to review the tax statement. If the taxpayer does not agree with the amount, a form attached to the tax statement must be completed and sent to the Commissioner for Revenue. Subsequently, the taxpayer may be asked to file a special tax return by 30 June of the year following the basis year. The following are the specified types of income subject to the above rule:

- Employment income subject to withholding under the final settlement system
- Pensions and other social benefits
- Dividends from resident companies
- Investment income on which final tax is withheld at a rate of 15%

- Income of up to EUR10,000 per year from part-time employment activities on which tax is withheld at a rate of 15%

All other individuals must file a self-assessment tax return and pay all tax due by 30 June of the year following the basis year.

In addition, if a person has received a tax refund that is not wholly or partly due to him or her, repayment must be made to the Commissioner for Revenue within 30 days from the date of the receipt of the refund. Interest is charged if such payment is not made within the stipulated time.

Tax liability for employees is paid through the Final Settlement System (FSS) of withholding on salaries and wages.

Self-employed individuals make advance payments of tax, known as provisional tax, in three installments on 30 April, 31 August and 21 December. The three installments must equal specified percentages of the total tax liability shown on the last return submitted to the Commissioner for Revenue. The following are the percentages:
- First installment, 20%
- Second installment, 30%
- Third installment, 50%

The provisional tax payments are credited against the total tax liability for the year in which they are paid.

Married persons may elect separate taxation, but must nonetheless appoint one spouse to be the responsible spouse for income tax purposes. Any investment or other passive income is included in the taxable income of the spouse with the higher earned income, regardless of which spouse is designated as the responsible spouse.

Effective from the 2021 year of assessment, certain married couples are able to make a separate return election. Once the separate return election is made, the income of each spouse is charged to tax in the name of the respective spouse separately from the income of the other spouse, and each spouse is responsible for complying with the provisions of the ITA relating to the submission of returns of his or her income and the ascertainment of that income. Certain computational rules apply, and the spouses are required to tax rental income and investment income at the final tax rates, when applicable.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Most of Malta's treaties are based on the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) model convention. The treaties with Qatar and the United Arab Emirates (UAE) incorporate elements of the UN's model. Malta's double tax treaties eliminate double taxation through the credit method.

(b) The visa exemption applies only to holders of a Macau passport.
(c) Nationals of Serbia holding a biometric passport are exempt from the visa obligation. Holders of Serbian passports issued by the Serbian Coordination Directorate are excluded.
(d) The exemption from the visa requirement applies only to holders of passports issued by Taiwan that include an identity card number.

The exemption mentioned in the preceding paragraph also applies to British citizens who are not nationals of the United Kingdom for the purposes of EU law, which are British nationals (overseas), British overseas territories' citizens, British overseas citizens, British protected persons and British subjects.

Types of visas. Single-entry visas are normally granted for one month to those who require visas either for tourist purposes or to attend specific events. They entitle a single uninterrupted stay during the period stipulated in the visa, which may not exceed three months.

Double-entry visas entitle two stays during the period stipulated in the visa, but the sum of the lengths of stay may not exceed three months within half of a year.

Multiple-entry visas are issued for periods of 3, 6 or 12 months. Similar permits are normally granted by the Commissioner of Police to individuals who come to Malta frequently, including individuals trying to establish businesses in Malta. They entitle multiple stays during the period stipulated in the visa. The sum of the periods of stay may not exceed three months within a half-year.

Students are issued visas if the Commissioner of Police is confident that they are attending school full-time in Malta. The visa is issued for the length of the academic year.

A short-stay "C" visa (Schengen) allows the holder to transit through or remain in the territory of Malta and all other Schengen member states for a maximum of 90 days within a period of 183 days from the entry into the Schengen zone.

The National Visa (long stay/D-visa) allows the holder to transit through or remain in the territory of Malta for a period exceeding 90 days but no longer than 365 days.

Transit visas are issued to nationals of states that require visas if the nationals have confirmed tickets to another destination and if they remain in Malta no longer than 24 hours. Such visa allows the holder to cross the international transit zone of Malta's International Airport.

Application procedure. A visa application form may be obtained from Malta's diplomatic missions and consular posts or downloaded online, and must be completed and submitted to the Principal Immigration Officer of the home country at the earliest six months before the planned trip. When lodging an application, the applicant must appear in person, unless this requirement has been waived. Applications are in most cases reviewed within 7 to 15 days (period may vary depending on the jurisdiction in which the visa application is submitted). In individual cases, the review period can be extended up to 30 days and in exceptional cases up to 60 days. It is advisable that a visa application not be filed later than 15 days before the planned trip. The following items are required with the submission of an application:

- A valid passport
- Two passport-size photographs that are in color and taken against a white background, with the face clearly visible
- The visa fee
- Type of visit

The above list provides a general guideline, but it is not conclusive.

Visas are granted at the discretion of the consulate or the Principal Immigration Officer in the jurisdiction where the applicant resides, who evaluates any special circumstances at the time of application. Ownership of assets in Malta is not a determining factor when a foreign national applies for a visa but, at the discretion of the Principal Immigration Officer, may be considered an advantage.

Visas are issued on the condition that applicants do not engage in any professional activity in Malta.

G. Work permits

To take up employment in Malta, a third-country national must obtain either a work permit (which would cover a residence permit, to be applied for separately) or employment license (a residence permit would need to be applied for if employment exceeds three months). Identity Malta Agency issues combined work and residence permits in Malta for non-EU and EU/EEA/Swiss nationals. From 2019, employment license applications for "service providers" are handled directly by Jobsplus (one of the stakeholders of Identity Malta) while employment license applications for intra-corporate transferees (ICTs) are handled directly by Identity Malta.

EEA and Swiss nationals and their third-country family members or dependents are required to apply for a work permit or an employment license to work in Malta. The individuals need to have their employment registered with Jobsplus on the first day of employment by the local employer. If the stay of these individuals in Malta will exceed a minimum period of three months, a residence permit application must be filed with Identity Malta Agency. For non-EU citizens, work permits are normally granted only to individuals who are able to provide skills or expertise not available in the local market.

Identity Malta Agency launched its online portal in 2020, whereby it started accepting single permit applications (applications for a combined permit) and applications for ICTs submitted electronically. Once the applications are submitted, vetted and consequently approved, applicants will be called to visit Identity Malta Agency offices so that their biometrics and photograph are taken. On the day of this appointment, an interim permit will be issued that will allow the individual to reside legally (and in some cases, work legally for the local employer) until the official work or residence document is issued. With respect to employment licenses, those third-country nationals who are not eligible for a single-permit would need to apply for an employment license. Those third-country nationals who fall under this category and whose stay in Malta will exceed a minimum period of three months need to apply for a residence permit with Identity Malta Agency. The residence permit will be issued on presentation of the residence application following the approval of the employment license (as indicated above, if the duration of the stay in Malta is longer than three months).

Applications for work permits are considered on a case-by-case basis. Work permits are generally valid for one year and are renewable thereafter. It takes approximately two to six months for a work permit to be issued and four to six weeks for an employment license to be issued.

In 2017, the Maltese government introduced a new scheme, known as the Key Employee Initiative (KEI) scheme, which processes work permit applications for non-EU nationals within five working days. The application can be submitted while the applicant is still abroad. The KEI scheme applies to employees who satisfy the following conditions:
- They earn an annual gross salary of at least EUR30,000 per year.
- They provide certified copies of their relevant qualifications, warrants (certificates provided to accountants in Malta) or documents showing the necessary work experience.
- They provide a declaration by the employer stating that the applicant has the necessary credentials to perform the assigned duties.

Other documentation is required to complete the application.

H. Residence permits

An EU citizen may enter, remain and reside in Malta and seek and take up employment or self-employment in Malta.

Subject to limitations based on the grounds of public policy, public security or public health, an EU citizen may enter and exit Malta on the production of a valid identification document and move freely within Malta for a period of three months (or such other period, as may be prescribed), beginning on the date of entry.

If the period of residence of an EU citizen exceeds three months, or if during such period, he or she takes up employment in Malta, he or she must apply for a residence document. Subject to certain exceptions, the Principal Immigration Officer must issue to the citizen and his or her dependents a residence document.

A national of a state that is not a member of the EU or the EEA may not enter Malta for a visit with a duration exceeding one month unless he or she satisfies all of the following conditions:
- He or she holds a valid passport.
- He or she holds a valid visa, as required by the Common Consular Instructions.
- Before entry into Malta, he or she submits documents substantiating the purpose and the conditions of the planned visit.
- He or she has sufficient means, both for the period of the planned visit and the return to his or her country of origin, or for traveling to a third state into which his or her admission is guaranteed, or is in a position to acquire such means legally.
- He or she has not been reported as a person to be refused entry.
- He or she is not considered to be a threat to public policy or national security.

Exceptions to the above rules apply if any of the following circumstances exist:
- The Principal Immigration Officer considers it necessary to admit the individual on humanitarian grounds, in the national interest or in honor of international obligations of the government of Malta.

- A third-party national holds a uniform residence permit or a re-entry visa, or both as may be required, issued by an EU member state. In such case, he or she is permitted to enter Malta for the sole purpose of transit.
- An individual holding a Schengen visa when entering Malta from a Schengen state is returning to a Schengen state, and the validity of the visa covers the period to be spent in Malta and the period for his or her return to the Schengen state from which he or she arrived.
- An individual not returning to a Schengen state has sufficient means and documents to cover his or her stay in Malta and his or her onward journey.

A residence document is valid for a period ranging from one to five years from the date of issuance. Residence documents are renewable on submission of an application.

A residence document must specify whether the individual is taking up residence in Malta for a long-term or permanent stay in Malta, work, study or another purpose.

The provisions of the Immigration Regulations do not override the provisions of any law regulating the acquisition of property in Malta by non-Maltese nationals, and a residence document does not, by itself, grant rights to the holder to acquire or own property in Malta over and above the rights granted by the Immovable Property (Acquisition by Non-Residents) Act.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The spouse and dependents of a working expatriate must obtain separate work permits to be employed legally in Malta if they are third-country nationals and are not dependents of EU/EEA or Swiss nationals.

Family members of a working expatriate do not need work permits to reside in Malta, unless they want to take up employment in Malta if they are third-country nationals and are not dependents of EU/EEA or Swiss nationals.

Family members of an expatriate residing in Malta need to apply for a residence permit in Malta as dependents.

Marital property regime. Couples married in Malta are subject to Malta's community property regime, unless they elect otherwise in an agreement by public deed. Couples who marry outside Malta and subsequently establish a marital domicile in Malta are subject to the community property regime with respect to property acquired after their arrival in Malta.

Under the regime, property acquired before marriage remains separate property, although proceeds from the sale of property acquired before marriage are community property.

Forced heirship. Under Malta's succession law, a testator who has no ascendants, descendants or spouse may freely dispose of his or her estate. Other testators are required to leave a specified portion (one-fourth, one-third or one-half, depending on the relationship between the deceased and beneficiary and on the number of the heirs) to the abovementioned heirs.

Driver's permits. Expatriates may drive legally in Malta with their home country driver's licenses for 12 months since their last entry into Malta.

Malta has driver's license reciprocity with all countries signatory to the Geneva Convention on Road Traffic, 1949.

Licenses issued in the EU/EEA, Australia, Switzerland or the United Arab Emirates (only in the case of Maltese or UAE nationals) can be exchanged for a Maltese driver's license after the applicant has been a resident of Malta for 185 days. Holders of valid driving licenses issued in EU member states can drive in Malta without the need to obtain additional permits.

Holders of valid driving licenses issued in non-EU countries (excluding the countries specified above) can drive up to one year in Malta, after which they need to obtain a Maltese driving license.

All other foreigners must have work permits, residence permits and freedom of movement to obtain driver's licenses. A license is granted after the applicant passes a physical driving test and a verbal test.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents of Mauritania are taxed on worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxed on their Mauritanian-source income only.

Mauritanian and foreign individuals are considered to be residents for tax purposes if they meet any of following criteria:
- They maintain a home in Mauritania as owner or leaseholder.
- They have their vital interests in Mauritania.
- They have their primary residence in Mauritania.
- They perform a professional activity in Mauritania, unless such activity is accessory (not the principal source of income).

Foreign-source income is not taxable in Mauritania if the recipient can prove that such income has been taxed in the source country.

Income subject to tax. Resident individuals (natural persons) are subject to several types of income tax depending on the nature of their income. The following are the various categories of taxable income:
- Employment income
- Pensions
- Commercial and industrial income
- Noncommercial income
- Investment income
- Rental income
- Capital gains

The taxation of the various categories of income is described below.

Employment income. Employment income is taxed at progressive rates (see Rates). Gross employment income includes public and private wages, salaries, perquisites, bonuses, fringe benefits and supplement salaries (payments made in addition to salary, such as rental subsidies and overtime pay).

The following types of income are exempt from tax:
- Compensation and allowances relating to governmental or local representative duties
- A fixed amount of MRU6,000
- Up to MRU1,000 per month for all compensation and allowances except those relating to housing, transportation, liability and office (allowances relating to liability or office are allowances paid to employees with administrative or financial responsibilities, such as those who are on call or must remain late at the office)

In addition, fringe benefits that do not exceed 20% of the salary received are exempt from tax. Otherwise, they are taxed up to 40% of their total amount. For this purpose, the salary received is taxable remuneration, excluding fringe benefits, including allowances and premiums having the nature of salary supplements.

Family allowances, family assistance allowances and all other allowances added to the base salary that are paid depending on the family situation are also exempt from tax.

Pensions. Public and private pensions as well as life annuities are taxable at progressive rates (see Rates) if any of the following circumstances exist:
- The beneficiary is domiciled in Mauritania.
- The beneficiary is domiciled outside Mauritania, and the debtor is established in Mauritania.

The following types of pensions are exempt from tax:
- Legal payments for war disability
- Legal payments paid to war victims as well as their successors
- Allowances for professional accidents (allowances for accidents caused by working tools or the handling of products in the workplace)
- Combatant retirement benefits

Commercial and industrial income and noncommercial income. Individuals who usually perform a gainful activity for their own account are subject to a single personal income tax, "Impot sur les Bénéfices d'Affaires des Personnes Physiques" (IBAPP), covering commercial and industrial income as well as noncommercial income.

This personal income tax includes the following three tax schemes:
- Two schemes based on the actual income that are similar (the normal regime and the intermediary regime)
- A lump-sum tax scheme

The normal tax regime applies to taxpayers who realize an annual turnover exceeding MRU5 million, and the intermediary regime applies to taxpayers realizing an annual turnover between MRU3 million and MRU5 million.

The lump-sum tax regime applies to taxpayers who realize annual turnover of less than MRU3 million.

For the tax regimes based on the actual income (normal and intermediary regimes), the tax due corresponds to 30% of the tax base or to 2.5% of the taxable revenues, whichever is higher. However, the minimum tax payable depends on the type of tax regime (MRU125,000 for the normal tax regime and MRU75,000 for the intermediary tax regime).

The tax base corresponds to profits less expenses. However, taxpayers are not allowed to do the following:
• Deduct or take into account exchange gains and losses
• Deduct headquarter expenses
• Deduct donations and subsidies
• Deduct deemed deferred depreciation
• Use accelerated or decreasing methods of depreciation
• Deduct provisions

It is possible for the individuals subject to the intermediary tax regime to opt for the normal tax regime before 1 February of each year. The option becomes effective from 1 January of the year of the opting for the normal tax regime and should be applied for at least two fiscal years.

However, an individual subject to the normal tax regime cannot opt for the intermediary tax regime or for the lump-sum tax regime.

Taxpayers subject to the lump-sum tax regime are liable to pay a tax of 3% of their annual turnover.

Under the lump-sum tax regime, for individuals who perform simultaneous activities in the same location or several activities in different locations, each business will be considered a different activity taxable on a separate basis, assuming that the total turnover is less than MRU3 million.

Investment income. Investment income, which includes dividends, directors' fees and interest on bonds, debentures, and bank deposits, is subject to proportional tax at a rate of 10%.

Rental income. Rental income includes rentals of houses, office buildings, factories and real estate without buildings. Rental income is subject to proportional tax at a rate of 10%.

In addition, a tax is imposed on built property, which is borne by the owner. This tax is applied to the rental value at a rate ranging from 3% to 10%. However, in practice, an 8% rate is applied.

Capital gains. Capital gains realized in the performance of professional, commercial and agricultural activities are taxed as ordinary income, with certain relief available.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. The tax law does not provide specific rules applicable to the taxation of employer-provided stock options.

Rates. The following are the progressive tax rates for employment income and pensions.

Taxable income
Exceeding MRU	Not exceeding MRU	Rate %
0	9,000	15
9,000	21,000	25
21,000	—	40

A nonresident individual is taxable on income derived from services performed in Mauritania.

Employers withhold tax from salaries monthly.

Relief for losses. Losses may not be deducted from income from other categories, but they may be carried forward for five years to offset income in the same category.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

The Mauritanian tax law does not contain an inheritance tax. However, donations and inter vivos gifts are subject to registration fees. The rates of these fees vary according to the type of assets transferred. For example, donations and inter vivos gifts of real estate and goods are subject to a 2% registration fee.

C. Social security

Social security contributions are withheld monthly by employers for nationals and expatriates and are payable to the National Social Security Fund. They are computed on the basis of gross remuneration paid that is capped at MRU7,000. The rate of social security contributions is 15% of gross wages for employers. This consists of a 2% contribution for medical contributions and a 13% contribution for social contributions. Employees are required to pay 1% of gross remuneration capped at MRU7,000 for social contributions. Such amount is withheld by the employer and paid to the relevant authorities.

Social security benefits relate to sickness, maternity, retirement, disability, invalidity, professional sickness and industrial sickness. The amount of benefits depends on the total amount of contributions made on behalf of the employee.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Commercial and industrial income and noncommercial income. Individuals subject to personal income tax based on actual revenues should file the annual tax return by 31 March of the year following the end of the fiscal year.

They should pay the tax due in in the following three installments:
- 40% by 31 March
- 30% by 30 June
- The balance by 30 September

Individuals subject to the lump-sum personal income tax regime will be required to declare and pay the tax due by 31 March of the year following the end of the fiscal year.

Employment income and social security contributions. Employers must withhold individual income tax from wages and fringe benefits, if any, and pay the tax withheld to the tax authorities by the 15th day of the month following the month of the payment of the compensation.

Employers must make payments each quarter for both nationals and expatriates to the National Social Security Fund. For details regarding the calculation of the payments, see Section C.

Rental income tax. The rental income tax on rents received in the preceding year is payable before 1 March of each year, and the tax return must be filed before the same date.

The tax on built property is due for the full year. In principle, the tax on built property must be paid by the owner after receipt of a tax notice.

However, tax must be withheld by the renter under a lease of premises at an 18% rate (corresponding to 10% of rental income tax and 8% of tax on built property) and paid by the 15th day of the month following the month of the payment of the rent if the renter is a legal entity or an individual subject to commercial and industrial income tax or noncommercial income tax and subject to an actual scheme tax on business profits (normal or intermediary regime).

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Foreign taxes paid may be deducted as an expense from taxable income.

Mauritania has entered into double tax treaties with France, Senegal and states of the Arab Maghreb Union (Algeria, Libya, Morocco and Tunisia).

The treaties generally provide the following relief:

- Commercial profits are taxable in the treaty country where a foreign firm performs its activities through a permanent establishment.
- Interest is taxable in the state of residence of the beneficiary, but the state of source may withhold tax at source if provided by its domestic law.
- Employment income is taxed in the treaty country where the activity is performed, except in the case of a short assignment.

The treaty between Mauritania and France provides that royalties and remuneration paid to a nonresident for services rendered in Mauritania are taxable in the state of residence of the beneficiary of the sums paid. However, the state of the revenue source has the right to levy tax according to its tax legislation if the beneficiary of the sums paid has a permanent establishment in the other country and if the royalties are linked to this permanent establishment.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. In general, individuals resident in Mauritius are taxed on their worldwide income. Income derived from outside Mauritius is taxed on a remittance basis. Nonresidents are taxed on Mauritian-source income only.

Individuals are considered resident if they meet any of the following conditions:

- They are present in Mauritius for at least 183 days during the tax year.
- They are present in Mauritius for an aggregate period of 270 days or more during the current tax year and the two preceding tax years.
- They are domiciled in Mauritius, unless their permanent place of abode is outside Mauritius.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. All income derived from employment is taxable, including salary, bonuses, commissions and fringe benefits. Housing, educational and other allowances are also taxable.

Any expenditure that is wholly, exclusively and necessarily incurred by an individual to perform the duties of an office or employment are deductible from gross emoluments. Passage benefits provided under an employment contract are not taxable to the extent that they do not exceed 6% of the basic salary of the individual. Exempt emoluments on termination payments received are restricted to an aggregate amount of MUR2,500,000 (MUR2 million before 14 June 2018) with respect to the following:

- Severance allowances determined in accordance with the Employment Rights Act
- Compensation negotiated under Section 42 of the Employment Rights Act, limited to 3 months for every period of 12 months of continuous remuneration

- A lump-sum payment that results from the commutation of a pension or from a death gratuity or that represents consolidated compensation for death or injury, paid as a result of any Mauritian laws
- Payments from superannuation funds or personal pension schemes approved by the Director-General of the Mauritius Revenue Authority
- Lump-sum payments under the National Savings Fund Act
- Retirement allowances

An invalid's basic pension, contributory invalidity pension and caregiver's allowance payable under the National Pensions Act is exempt from income tax.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employed individuals carrying on a trade, business or profession are subject to tax on their business profits. Expenses are deductible to the extent they are exclusively incurred to produce gross income.

An artist who is a member of the Mauritius Society of Authors with yearly gross income of MUR500,000 or less may opt to have his or her allowable expenses computed at an amount equal to 50% of his or her gross income from his or her artistic works, other than literary works.

All income derived from business is taxed with other income at the rates set forth in Rates.

Investment income. Interest income is taxable at a rate of 15%. Interest derived by nonresidents on deposits held with Mauritian banks is exempt from tax. Residents and nonresidents are exempt from tax on the following types of interest:

- Interest on savings or fixed deposit accounts with Mauritian registered banks or nonbanking institutions authorized to accept deposits
- Interest on government securities and Bank of Mauritius Bills
- Interest on debentures and sukuks quoted on the stock exchange
- Interest on debentures or bonds issued by a company to finance renewable energy projects, the issuance of which has been approved by the Director-General, on such terms and conditions as the Director-General may determine
- 80% of interest on money loaned through the peer-to-peer lending platform operated under a license issued by the Financial Services Commission under the Financial Services Act

Dividends paid by resident companies are exempt from tax.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees paid to residents are taxed in the same manner as employment income, regardless of whether the services are rendered in or outside Mauritius. Excessive remuneration is considered a distribution, which is fully taxable in the hands of the individual. Directors' remuneration is taxed in the year the remuneration is charged in the company's accounts.

Other income. A withholding tax at the rate of 10% is imposed on payments made by individuals to nonresident entertainers and sportspersons and to management fees paid to individuals.

Under the Mauritius Diaspora Scheme contained in the Investment Promotion Act, Mauritian and foreign-source income of a member of the Mauritius Diaspora is exempt from tax for 10 income years beginning with the income year in which the individual returns to Mauritius. The exemption on the Mauritian-source income is limited to the specific employment, business, trade, profession or investment of the individual.

Emoluments of seafarers employed on vessels registered in Mauritius or on foreign vessels are exempt from tax. A tax holiday of 10 years applies to individuals employed by a corporation with an asset manager certificate or an asset and fund manager certificate, licensed by the Financial Services Commission and managing a minimum asset base of USD50 million, as well as to foreign ultra-high-net-worth individuals investing a minimum of USD25 million in Mauritius.

Capital gains. Capital gains are generally not taxable.

Deductions. Resident individuals can benefit from an Income Exemption Threshold (IET). The IET is deductible in determining chargeable income. The IET depends on the number of the individual's dependents. The following table shows the IET as from the income year ended 30 June 2021.

Category	Number of dependents	Amount of IET MUR
A	0	325,000
B	1	435,000
C	2	515,000
E	4	680,000

As from the income year ended 30 June 2021, a "bedridden next of kin" may also be considered as a dependent. For this purpose, a "bedridden next of kin" means the bedridden father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, brother or sister of the individual or his spouse, provided that the bedridden next of kin is eligible for the carer's allowance payable under the National Pensions Act (NPA) and is under the care of the individual. Furthermore, the benefits of the bedridden next of kin under the NPA is ignored to determine whether the individual is a dependent and is also not considered to be taxable income for the individual. Any contribution by an individual to the National COVID-19 Vaccination Programme Fund is deductible as from the year ended 30 June 2021. Any unrelieved contribution may be utilized in the subsequent two years.

A retired individual who has reached age 60 before the start of the income year is eligible to deduct an additional amount of MUR50,000 if he or she does not derive any taxable income from emoluments exceeding MUR50,000 or business. The deduction of MUR50,000 also applies to an individual with a physical or mental disability.

An individual is entitled to deduct the actual premium paid in connection with a medical or health insurance policy for himself or his dependent in addition to the IET. The maximum deductible premium is MUR20,000 for the taxpayer. The amount of MUR20,000 is also the maximum deduction for the first dependent. The maximum deduction is MUR15,000 each for the second, third and fourth dependents. The relief is not allowed if either of the following circumstances exists:

- The premium or contribution has been paid by the employer of the person.
- The premium is paid under a combined medical and life assurance scheme.

If the dependent is a child pursuing a non-sponsored full-time undergraduate course at a recognized tertiary educational institution, the individual is entitled, in addition to the IET, an exemption of MUR225,000 for each child pursuing an undergraduate course in a recognized tertiary educational institution. The additional exemption does not apply if either of the following circumstances exists:

- Annual tuition fees, excluding administration and student union fees, are less than MUR34,800 for a child pursuing an undergraduate course in Mauritius.
- The exemption was granted for the same child for more than six consecutive years.

The above exemption may be granted to a maximum of three dependents.

If the total of the taxable and exempt income of an individual's dependent exceeds the amount of the increase in the IET, the individual may not claim the IET. Any taxable income derived by the individual's dependent must be added to the taxable income of the individual.

Interest relief is available with respect to housing loans that are secured by a fixed charge on the immovable property of the taxpayer, effective from the tax year ended 31 December 2011. Like the IET, only resident individuals can claim the interest relief. Interest relief cannot be claimed in the following cases:

- The taxpayer is the owner of a residential building at the time the loan is obtained.
- The aggregate of the net taxable income, dividends from Mauritian resident companies and cooperative societies registered under the Co-operatives Act, interest on a savings or fixed deposit accounts from Mauritian banks or nonbank deposit-taking institutions under the Banking Act and interest on government securities and Bank of Mauritius bills of the individual or his or her spouse, as the case may be, exceeds MUR4 million.
- The taxpayer benefits from the new housing scheme, which is to be set up on or after 1 January 2011. At the time of writing, the housing scheme had not yet been set up.

An individual may benefit from a solar investment allowance based on the amount invested in a solar energy unit, including photovoltaic kits and batteries for the storage of electricity. For a couple, the allowance may be apportioned equally if neither spouse is a dependent spouse. Any unrelieved amount is carried forward to the next tax year.

Investment in a rainwater harvesting system qualifies for an investment allowance. Any unrelieved amount can be carried forward indefinitely. In the case of a couple, the relief may be taken either by one spouse or in equal portions by each spouse. For this purpose, expenditure on a rainwater harvesting system includes consultancy, design works, excavation works, gutters and specialized water tanks. Expenses on a fast charger for an electric car qualify for a 200% deduction against the gross taxable income of the individual.

Expenses incurred on a fast charger are eligible for a deduction in the year of acquisition; any unrelieved amount can be utilized against the net income of the subsequent years. The deduction is not available if the expense has been subject to the 200% deduction against his or her gross taxable income.

An individual is eligible for relief on any contribution made to the COVID-19 Solidarity Fund after deducting any IET, interest relief, relief for medical or health insurance premiums and deduction for household employees made during the income year ended 30 June 2020 and the income year ending 30 June 2021. Any excess contribution may be used in the subsequent two income years.

Donations to charitable institutions is deductible up to a maximum amount of MUR30,000 from the year ending 30 June 2022 (2022 fiscal year). From the 2022 fiscal year, an individual is also allowed a yearly deduction for contributions to approved personal pension schemes that have been approved by the Financial Services Commission for the provision of a pension for himself or herself up to a maximum of MUR30,000.

Income of a person holding a premium visa for work performed remotely from Mauritius. From 1 November 2020, the income of an individual holding a premium visa for work performed remotely from Mauritius is deemed to be Mauritian-source income only if such income is remitted in Mauritius. For this purpose, the remittance basis does not apply if the individual spends money in Mauritius through his or her foreign credit or debit card. If the individual deposits money in a bank account in Mauritius, such income is taxable in Mauritius, unless the individual declares that the appropriate amount of tax has been paid on that income in his or her country of origin or residence.

Negative income tax allowance. Citizens of Mauritius with monthly earnings of MUR9,900 or less are entitled to a negative income tax allowance that depends on their monthly earnings. The allowance ranges from MUR100 to MUR1,000 and is subject to several conditions, such as the annual net income of the individual and his or her spouse.

Rates. An individual's income tax liability is determined using a tax rate of 15%. From the year ended 30 June 2019, individuals with yearly net income of less than MUR650,000 are subject to tax at a rate of 10%. However, the net rental income of a nonresident individual continues to be taxable at a rate of 15%.

A solidarity levy applies to resident individuals. The levy is computed at a rate of 25% of the excess of the aggregate of the chargeable income of the individual and its Mauritian-source dividends over MUR3 million from the income year ended 30 June 2021. From the income year ended 30 June 2020, the leviable income includes the share of the Mauritian dividends of an individual in any resident partnership or succession (estate of a deceased person). From the income year ended 30 June 2020, the solidarity levy is restricted to 10% of the aggregate of the net income and Mauritian-source income of the individual. The tax base for the solidarity levy does not include any lump sums received with respect to a commutation of pension or a death or injury gratuity, paid as the result of any enactment, or from a superannuation fund or a personal pension scheme approved by the Director-General.

Presumptive tax on small enterprise. A small enterprise may, by irrevocable notice, on or before the submission date for the submission of its tax return elect to pay a presumptive tax at the rate of 5% on its gross income. The yearly gross taxable income should not exceed MUR10 million, and taxable income from sources other than those listed in the bullets below should not exceed MUR400,000. To qualify for the presumptive tax, the person must be engaged in the following activities:

- Agriculture
- Forestry
- Fishing
- Manufacturing

Restaurants and the retailing and wholesaling of goods are excluded.

Tax credit for certain employees. The net income attributable to emoluments is eligible to a tax credit of 5% of the relevant portion of the chargeable income in the first month of an income year if the basic salary does not exceed MUR50,000 and if the total annual net income does not exceed MUR700,000. The tax credit does not apply if the annual net income is less than MUR650,000.

Relief for losses. Losses in any amount may be offset against any source of income, except employment income. Losses may be carried forward to the following five income years. Losses that arise as a result of annual allowances for capital expenditure incurred on or after 1 July 2006 can be carried forward indefinitely.

B. Estate and gift taxes

No estate tax is levied in Mauritius.

C. Social security

Employees in Mauritius must contribute to the National Pension Fund, which provides for employees' old-age retirement. Effective from 1 July 2020, the contribution rate for employees is 3% of gross salary, up to a maximum monthly contribution of MUR597. For employers, the rate is 6% of gross salary, up to a maximum monthly contribution of MUR1,194 per employee. The contribution rate to the National Solidarity Fund is 2.5% for the employer, with a maximum of MUR498, and 1% for the employee, with a maximum of MUR199. The contribution rate for the National Solidarity Fund is applied to the basic salary of the employee. The employer must contribute to a levy computed at 1.5% of the total salary of the employee. Foreign nationals, other than those who work in export manufacturing enterprises, are within the scope of the social security obligations, regardless of their length of stay, effective from January 2014. However, foreign nationals who work in export manufacturing enterprises are within the scope of social security obligations following a period of two years of continuous residence in Mauritius.

From September 2020, the National Pension Fund is being replaced by a contribution sociale généralisée (CSG). The CSG is based on the remuneration of the participant. Remuneration for this purpose is the basic wage or salary, as defined in the Worker's Rights Act, and includes any additional remuneration payable. The rate of CSG for a participant, other than a public sector employee, is 1.5% and 3% for the employee and employer, respectively, if the monthly remuneration does not exceed MUR50,000; otherwise, the rate is 3% and 6% for the employee and the employer, respectively. For a participant who is a public sector employee, the rate is 4.5% of the remuneration of the employee if the monthly remuneration does not exceed MUR50,000 and is payable by the employer; the rate is 9% for a public sector employee with a monthly remuneration of more than MUR50,000. The rate is 3% for an employee engaged in domestic service with a remuneration of less than MUR3,000. The CSG for a self-employed individual with a net monthly income of less than MUR10,000 is computed at MUR150 per month. If the net monthly income of the individual is more than MUR10,000 and less than MUR50,000, the minimum CSG is computed at 1.5% of 90% of the net income of the individual. Otherwise, the minimum CSG is computed at 3% of 90% of the net income of the individual. For this purpose, the net income has the same meaning as the net income for income tax purposes but excludes any passive income.

For the purposes of the CSG, a part-time employee is considered to be a participant and it is irrelevant if the employment is of a permanent nature or a contract for fixed duration. A foreign national, a person aged 65 and above, and an executive director are each also considered to be a participant. The following individuals are not considered to be a participant:

- A non-citizen employee of an export manufacturing enterprise who has resided in Mauritius for a continuous period of less than two years, including any period of absence that does not exceed nine consecutive weeks or during which he or she maintains a residence in Mauritius
- A non-citizen who holds a work permit and is employed by a foreign contractor engaged in the implementation of a project that is funded by a foreign state in an amount that is not less than 50% of the estimated project value, from grant or concessional financing, as determined by the Finance Minister
- An individual training in a training scheme set up by the government or under a joint public-private initiative with a view to facilitating the placement of job seekers in gainful employment
- A non-citizen employee who is not tax resident in Mauritius
- A non-executive director

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Employers must withhold taxes on employees' emoluments. Individuals with self-employment or business income must make quarterly tax payments based on their income for the preceding quarter.

Every taxpayer must file a return electronically by 15 October, stating the amount of all income received during the preceding year ending 30 June. Taxpayers must pay any tax due when they file the return. They may claim a refund on the annual return for any overpayment of tax. Regardless of their level of taxable income, the following individuals should submit an annual tax return:

- An individual who derives emoluments that have been subject to tax under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system
- An individual who derives business income exceeding MUR2 million in an income year
- An individual who derives a yearly net income of more than MUR325,000
- An individual who derives Mauritian-source income that has been taxed at source
- An individual who has chargeable income or is subject to the solidarity levy

Married persons are taxed separately. Joint taxable income can be shared in any manner chosen by the couple.

An individual with a yearly total of net income and exempt income of more than MUR15 million or with assets exceeding MUR50 million must submit a statement of assets and liabilities at the time he or she files his or her annual tax return. This requirement does not apply to a nonresident or a resident who is a foreign national. The requirement also does not apply if the individual has submitted his or her tax returns for the last five years.

An amended tax return cannot be submitted after three years from the end of the year of assessment to which it relates. The time limit does not apply in the following cases:

- The non-declaration of the taxable income or understatement of the taxable income of the individual
- The emoluments of an individual
- The IET, interest relief and medical or health insurance premiums of an individual

Voluntary disclosure income scheme on income from foreign assets. No interest and penalties apply on any foreign-source income underdeclared up to the 2019-20 year of assessment. This scheme applies to undisclosed income derived from Mauritius but held in offshore bank accounts or used to purchase foreign assets. The applicable tax rate is 15%. If the tax is not paid in full on or before 31 March 2020, interest is imposed at a rate of 0.5% per month. The scheme does not apply in certain cases (for example, when any civil or criminal proceedings are pending).

The treaties provide the following relief:
- Dividends are taxed at a 0% to 15% rate.
- Royalties are taxed at a 0% to 15% rate.
- Income from shipping and air transport operations of enterprises resident in a treaty country is not taxed in Mauritius.
- Business profits of a nonresident are taxed only if the nonresident operates through a permanent establishment or a fixed base in Mauritius.

Mauritius is negotiating double tax treaties with Algeria, Burkina Faso, Canada, the Czech Republic, Greece, the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (SAR), Iran, Lesotho (revised treaty), Mali, Montenegro, Portugal, St. Kitts and Nevis, Saudi Arabia, Senegal (revised treaty), Spain, Sudan, Tanzania, Turkey, Vietnam, Yemen and Zambia (revised treaty).

Residents receive a credit for foreign tax paid on foreign-source income. The foreign tax credit also takes into consideration underlying taxes if the recipient owns, directly or indirectly, at least 5% of the shares of the company paying the dividends. The Mauritian tax law also provides for a tax-sparing credit.

Mauritius and the United States have entered into an intergovernmental agreement (IGA) for the implementation of the Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act. The IGA entered into force on 29 August 2014.

On 29 October 2014, Mauritius signed the Multilateral Competent Authority Agreement on the Automatic Exchange of Financial Account Information so that the Common Reporting Standard may apply to Mauritian financial institutions.

A foreign investor applying for permanent residence status (see Section H) may be issued a multiple-entry visa valid for up to one year pending the grant of the permanent resident status.

G. Work permits and self-employment

Work permits and residence permits are required for all foreign nationals who wish to work in Mauritius. The permits are valid for one year and are renewable. Work permits are usually granted to foreign nationals who possess professional and technical qualifications in fields for which locally qualified candidates are not available. Work permits may also be granted to foreign workers in industries for which labor is in short supply.

With the implementation of the E-Work Permit System, applications for work permits can only be made electronically through www.workpermit.mu. To avoid duplication, the portal is shared between the Prime Minister's Office, the Passport and Immigration Office, and the Ministry of Labour, Industrial Relations, Employment and Training; only one application form is now required for all the relevant permits.

Application for work permits should be made in Mauritius by the employer and must indicate the exact title and duration of the position sought. The employer must submit the following documents with the completed application form before the foreign national arrives in Mauritius:
- Job profile
- Birth certificate
- Four passport-size photographs
- Copies of the relevant parts of the passport showing the name, date of birth, place and date of issuance of passport, photo, passport number, and movement
- Documentary evidence of academic and professional qualifications and experience
- For skilled workers, a copy of the contract between the employer and the employee together with documentary evidence demonstrating that the employee will earn a minimum of MUR30,000 per month
- A full medical report on the expatriate from his or her home country
- A completed application form
- Evidence that appropriate advertising has been made in two leading newspapers for the position

All documents provided must be in English or otherwise translated and authenticated by an authorized authority in the home country of the foreign employee.

A processing fee of MUR700 must be paid on submission of each completed application form. Applications submitted without the fee are not considered.

In general, an applicant may not work while his or her work application and other papers are being processed, except if married to a Mauritian citizen. Application must be made at least three months before the projected date of employment.

If the foreign national wants to stay in Mauritius for more than five years, an application must be made for a residence permit, and a bank guarantee of MUR20,000 must be provided. The individual must also swear in an affidavit that he or she will not apply for Mauritian citizenship.

Changing employers usually is not permitted. If an employee changes employers, a new application for a work permit must be submitted by the new employer.

Application for renewal of a work permit should be made three months before expiration of the current work permit, and full justification for the continued employment of the expatriate should be given. Even an individual who has worked legally in Mauritius for several years must renew his or her work permit every year.

Any non-citizen investor, self-employed person or employer of a professional may, through the Economic Development Board (EDB), apply for an occupation permit so that such person or professional may engage in business or take up employment in Mauritius. To obtain the occupation permit from the EDB, the following conditions must be satisfied:

- An investor with a project value of more than MUR20 million is generally eligible for an occupation permit. A higher or lower threshold may apply depending on the nature of the business activities, initial investment, cumulative turnover for the past three years and other conditions. An investor must make an initial investment of USD50,000 or its equivalent in freely convertible foreign currency. For an existing business and an inherited business, the net asset value should be at least USD50,000 or its equivalent in freely convertible currency and a cumulative turnover of at least MUR12 million during the three years preceding the application. Alternatively, a minimum transfer of at least USD25,000 is required and the equivalent amount in high-technology machines and equipment, as may be determined by the Chief Executive Officer (CEO) of the EDB. For a renewal, a minimum gross income of at least MUR4 million per year as from the third year of registration is required. No minimum amount is required for an investor in the context of startups. This is subject to the submission of an innovative project to the EDB, or if the project is registered with an incubator, it must be accredited with the Mauritius Research and Innovative Council. Any renewal is determined by the CEO of the EDB. Investment made by a company incorporated on or after 8 June 2017 for the operation of a food processing plant for food processing activities and for the manufacturing of products from agricultural and medicinal plants and herbs either as intermediate goods or finished products, is also not subject to a minimum amount of investment. The goods must be produced by a process involving a value addition of not less than 20% of the ex-factory cost of the finished product, and any goods intended for export must comply with the rules of origin of preferential markets. At least 50% of the final products manufactured by the company should be exported after two years from the date the company starts its operation. A company investing in the setup of a film studio in Mauritius is required to invest at least MUR1 billion or its equivalent in freely convertible foreign currency, and the investor should provide facilities to film production companies.

- A self-employed person must have an initial investment of USD35,000 or its equivalent amount in freely convertible foreign currency at the time of issuance of the occupation permit and be engaged in the services sector only. For renewal, the cumulative business income should have been at least MUR800,000 from the third year of registration.
- A professional must have a monthly salary exceeding MUR60,000. For a professional working in the information and communication technology sector or the business outsourcing (BPO) sector, the minimum salary is MUR30,000 per month.
- A young professional should complete at least an undergraduate degree in a local tertiary education institution recognized by the Tertiary Education Commission in any field listed in Part II of the Schedule to the Immigration Act. Financial services and information technology are examples of the fields that are listed on Part II of the Schedule to the Immigration Act.

The spouse of the holder of an occupation permit may be granted an occupation permit.

The following table provides the initial fees for an occupation permit application.

Period of employment	MUR
Less than 9 months	10,000
Between 9 months and 2 years	15,000
Between 2 years and 3 years	20,000

The holder of an occupation permit as a professional or the holder of a residence permit as a retired non-citizen may invest in any business provided that the following conditions are satisfied:

- He or she is not employed in the business.
- He or she does not manage the business.
- He or she does not derive any salary or employment benefits from the business.

A non-citizen may apply for a family occupation permit that authorizes the non-citizen, his or her spouse, dependent child, parent, other dependent or such other person working exclusively for the family unit to become a resident for a period of 10 years provided that the criteria specified in Part II of the First Schedule to the Economic Development Board Act are satisfied. Such a permit may allow the individual or his or her spouse to carry out any occupation in Mauritius for reward or profit or take up employment in Mauritius and any person working for the family unit as may be approved by the immigration officer to take up employment with the applicant for the purpose of attending to the needs of the family.

The Premium Investor Certificate is issued by the EDB and has the objective of promoting emerging sectors, pioneering industries, innovative technologies and any other approved targeted economic activities. The minimum investment is MUR500 million. The holder of a Premium Investor Certificate may benefit from the following:

- Rebates, exemptions and preferential rates on taxes, duties, fees, charges and levies under any laws
- Facilities, grants and exemptions on land and buildings, infrastructure and public facilities, and utilities and labor requirements, which are approved by the Minister

H. Residence permits

To obtain a residence permit, an applicant must be able to show sufficient economic means to live in Mauritius. Residence permits are issued for one-year periods and are renewable.

The permanent residence permit allows a foreign national to work and live in Mauritius for a period of 10 years. The following individuals are eligible for a permanent resident permit:

- An investor holding an occupation permit, if the aggregate turnover of his or her company exceeds MUR45 million for any consecutive period of three years
- An investor who has invested at least USD375,000 in a qualifying business activity, which includes agro-based industry, audiovisual, cinema, banking, construction, manufacturing and marina development
- A self-employed individual holding an occupation permit for three years, if his or her annual income was at least MUR3 million for the three consecutive years prior to the application
- A professional with an occupation permit, if his or her monthly basic salary was at least MUR150,000 for three consecutive years preceding the year of application
- A retired foreign national who has held a residence permit for three years and has transferred USD54,000 annually to a Mauritian bank during the three-year period
- An individual who holds a family occupation permit
- An individual who purchases or otherwise acquires an apartment used, or available for use, as a residence in a building of at least two floors above ground floor, provided that the purchase price is at least USD375,000 or its equivalent in any other hard convertible currency, and the exchange rate to calculate the USD equivalent is the selling rate in force at the time the title deed is signed

A retired non-citizen should make an initial transfer of a minimum of USD2,500 to a local bank account and should transfer at least USD2,500 monthly or a sum by installments amounting to at least USD30,000 annually during a period of three years.

Any person who has been a holder of an occupation permit or residence permit for at least three years before 1 September 2020 may be granted the status of permanent resident if he or she satisfies any of the following conditions:

- He or she is an investor with a cumulative turnover of at least MUR12 million during the three years preceding the application.
- He or she is self-employed with a cumulative business income of at least MUR2.4 million during the three years preceding the application.
- He or she is a professional in the ICT sector and BPO sector with a monthly basic salary of at least MUR30,000 during the three years preceding the application.
- He or she is a professional in any sector with a monthly basic salary of at least MUR60,000 during the three years preceding the application.
- He or she is a retired non-citizen who has transferred a monthly amount of at least USD1,500 or equivalent in freely convertible foreign currency during the three-year period preceding the application and his or her cumulative transfer is at least USD54,000 or its equivalent in freely convertible foreign currency during the three-year period.

An investor, professional or self-employed person holding the status of a permanent resident may apply for a permanent residence permit under the category of retired non-citizen in replacement of his or her status as permanent resident for the remaining period of its validity if he or she has a monthly disposable income of USD1,500 or its equivalent in any other hard convertible foreign currency.

No permit will be granted if an expatriate is found to suffer from a contagious or transmittable disease.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The working spouse of a work permit holder must file an application independently of the expatriate to obtain a work permit.

Marital property regime. At the time of their civil marriage, couples may elect between the community property regime and the separate property regime. They may change regimes during the marriage if they meet certain conditions.

Driver's permits. Expatriates may drive legally in Mauritius with their home country driver's licenses if they have the licenses validated by the traffic authorities. Mauritius does not have driver's license reciprocity with any other country.

To obtain a driver's license in Mauritius, a foreign national must take verbal and practical driving tests.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident individuals are taxed on worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxed on Mexican-source income only.

Individuals who establish their home in Mexico are considered residents of Mexico. If individuals also have a home in another country, they are considered residents of Mexico if their center of vital interests is located in Mexico. An individual’s center of vital interests is considered to be located in Mexico in the following circumstances:

- More than 50% of the individual’s income in a calendar year is derived from Mexican sources.
- The center of the individual’s professional activities is located in Mexico.

Individuals who break residency ties with Mexico must notify the tax authorities within 15 business days before such change in their status and no later than a month following the change of residency. For this purpose, they must designate a legal representative in Mexico.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable employment income includes salaries, wages, directors' fees, bonuses, gratuities, allowances, certain fringe benefits, benefits in kind and statutory employee profit-sharing distributions.

Education allowances provided by employers to their expatriate or local employees are taxable for income tax and social security purposes if the allowances are not generally provided to all the employees under the applicable rules for fringe benefits.

Nonresidents who receive salaries paid by resident employers or by employers with permanent establishments in Mexico are subject to withholding tax at source as described in Rates. Salary income and income for personal services paid by a nonresident individual or company are exempt from tax if the services are not related to the nonresident payer's permanent establishment in Mexico (or the nonresident payer does not have a permanent establishment) and if the services are provided for fewer than 183 days (including Saturdays, Sundays, holidays and vacations). For purposes of this rule, the 183 days need not be consecutive in a 12-month period. If services are provided for more than 183 days, individual tax calculated using nonresident tax rates must be paid from the first day the individual begins to work in Mexico.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees received by residents of Mexico from Mexican or foreign resident companies are subject to income tax at the rates set forth in Rates. The paying companies may deduct these fees if certain requirements are met.

Self-employment and business income. A self-employed individual who earns income from business activities or professional services is subject to tax at the applicable rates established in the law and published by the tax authorities. The tax is calculated on the net income derived by the individual for each month corresponding to the period to which prepayment applies (see Section D). Self-employed individuals also must pay other taxes, such as value-added tax.

Business income related to services rendered through internet platforms is subject to an income tax withholding to be performed by the company, resident or nonresident, for Mexico tax purposes, that provided the platform to perform such services. The income categories and tax withholding rates comprised under this section are the following:
- Ground transportation passenger services and delivery of goods or services: 2.1%
- Accommodation services: 4%
- Sale of goods: 1%

These withholdings can be considered as definitive payments if some requirements are met.

Professional fees paid by a Mexican resident to a nonresident for services rendered in Mexico are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 25%. If the services are rendered only partially in Mexico, income tax is payable on the portion of the income related to the services rendered in Mexico.

Investment income. A company resident in Mexico that distributes dividends to its resident and nonresident shareholders is subject to a 30% corporate tax to the extent that such company has not already paid the tax on the underlying income. Dividends must be included in a resident's taxable income. The corporate tax paid is credited against the resident's final tax liability. Dividends paid by foreign resident entities to Mexican resident individuals are included in the individuals' taxable income and taxed at the rates set forth in Rates.

An additional 10% withholding tax applies to dividends. For dividends paid by Mexican companies, the tax withheld by the paying company is final. Accordingly, individuals are required to declare the dividend income in their annual tax return and cannot claim a credit for the 10% withholding tax, thereby incurring an incremental tax cost. For dividends paid by foreign companies, individual resident taxpayers must pay the 10% tax by filing a monthly tax return by the 17th day of the month following the dividend distribution. They are also required to declare the dividend income in their annual tax return and cannot claim a credit for the 10% tax paid, thereby incurring an incremental tax cost.

For 2021, interest on time deposits with Mexican banks and on publicly issued debentures is subject to a provisional 0.97% withholding tax on the capital invested that originated the interest. Interest derived from investments in other entities (other than publicly issued debentures) is subject to a 20% provisional withholding tax on the nominal interest. Gains derived from the sale of publicly issued debentures are also subject to this tax. Other interest income is included in taxable income and taxed at the rates set forth in Rates. Individuals include in taxable income the real interest received during the fiscal year; for interest derived from investments held abroad or loans granted to foreign residents, the real interest income is taxable on an accrual basis. Real interest equals the amount by which interest exceeds the inflationary adjustment effects of the tax year. For 2021, interest income received by nonresidents from Mexican banks is subject to a 4.9% withholding tax. Lower rates may apply under certain tax treaties. Real interest income derived from investment returns and/or the foreign-exchange gains generated on investments abroad are also considered taxable income in Mexico. Income tax paid abroad on these items may be credited against Mexican income tax provided that the requirements for claiming the credits are met.

Income received by nonresidents from the rental of real estate and personal property is subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 25%, with no deductions allowed. For real estate rental income derived by residents, taxpayers are subject to tax on their rental income even if it is derived from real estate located in foreign jurisdictions.

In general, individuals who receive rental income may deduct the following expenses:
• Property taxes and local taxes paid
• Maintenance expenses

- Real interest paid on mortgage loans (restrictions apply)
- Salaries, professional fees and commissions paid
- Property insurance premiums
- Depreciation of the property and of property additions and improvements
- Water usage rights

Taxpayers with real estate rental income can opt for a flat deduction of 35% of the rental income.

Taxpayers who earn real estate rental income must meet the following requirements:
- Register in the Mexican taxpayer registry for rental income activity.
- Maintain accounting records on the Mexican Tax Administration Service (Servicio de Administración Tributaria, or SAT) website that are prepared based on the requirements of the federal tax regulations (tax law and code), except for taxpayers who opt to apply the 35% standard deduction applicable to rental income.
- Issue official digital invoices for the rental income received, indicating the property's registration number.
- File monthly and annual tax returns for the rental income.
- Inform the Mexican tax authorities through electronic filings established by the SAT by no later than the 17th day of the month following the receipt of monthly rental income, if it was received in cash, gold or silver and if such payments exceed MXN100,000. This requirement is part of anti-money laundering provisions. If the rental income is received in check, wire transfer or some other means that was recorded through the financial system, this informational reporting requirement does not apply.

If the taxpayer opts to claim an itemized deduction, all of the above conditions must be fulfilled.

If the taxpayer opts to claim the standard deduction equal to 35% of the rental income, all of the above conditions, except for the for the second condition must be fulfilled.

With respect to the fourth condition above, the taxpayer should make the monthly tax payments by no later than the 17th day of the month following the month that the rental income was earned.

As of 2020, in the case of a real estate rental judgment related to overdue rents, the judge may require the lessor to prove the issuance of the corresponding digital invoices (third condition above) to issue a payment order from the lessee to the lessor.

Royalties received by nonresidents for the use of trade names, trademarks, patents or certificates of invention are subject to a 35% withholding tax. Fees received by nonresidents for technical assistance and royalties for know-how are subject to a 25% withholding tax. Lower rates may apply under certain tax treaties.

Exempt income. The following items, among others, are excluded from taxable income:
- Indemnities for accidents and illnesses
- Retirement benefits and pensions provided by public institutions and Mexican private retirement plans (partially exempt)

- Reimbursement of medical, dental, hospital and funeral expenses incurred in Mexico
- Social security benefits granted by Mexican public institutions
- Savings funds established by employers to which the employees contribute up to 13% of their salaries (Mexican funds only), capped at 1.3 times the Unit of Measure and Update index (UMA; approximately MXN42,501)
- Travel expenses properly reported by the employee
- Social welfare and fringe benefits received from Mexican government institutions

Certain exemptions are subject to limitations and specific requirements.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Employer-provided stock options are taxed as salary income for the employee. They are taxed at the time of exercise on the difference between the exercise price and the fair market value of the stock. The income is taxed at the tax rates set forth in Rates. Gains derived from the subsequent sale of the shares are subject to tax as capital gains (see Capital gains and losses).

Capital gains and losses. In general, gains derived from the sale of shares and real estate are treated as capital gains. Capital gains are taxed as ordinary income at the rates set forth in Rates. The gain calculation includes adjusting the cost basis for inflation. Gains derived from the sale of shares of Mexican or foreign companies listed on Mexico's stock exchanges are subject to a 10% income tax (before 2014, these sales were exempt from tax). The tax payment is considered final and cannot be credited on the annual taxpayer's income tax return. The taxpayer calculates this 10% tax on the net gain at the end of the year by using information provided by brokers. Capital losses can be carried forward 10 years.

A gain derived from the sale of a personal residence is exempt from tax if the amount of the proceeds does not exceed 700,000 investment units (UDIs; equal to MXN4,623,918). As of 31 December 2020, a UDI equaled MXN6.605597. Banking and credit institutions use UDIs to grant loans at a fixed rate. Gains derived from the sale of a primary residence are exempt from tax if the taxpayer demonstrates that he or she had not sold another home for which the exemption had been claimed during the preceding three years and if the title transfer is done through a notary public.

Capital gains derived from transfers of shares and real estate are taxed using an income-averaging method. The taxable gain is calculated separately for each asset and then divided by the number of years the asset was held, up to a maximum of 20 years. The resulting amount is added to other taxable income. After the graduated marginal tax rates are applied to the total income, the average rate is then applied to the balance of the capital gain. Income averaging does not apply to capital gains derived from transfers of real property used in a trade or business. These gains are added to ordinary taxable business income.

Although computed the same way, capital losses are treated differently. The tax benefit for the year in which a loss is incurred is limited to the tax attributable to the loss, divided by the number of years the underlying asset was held, up to a maximum of 10 years. The amount of the loss equivalent to one year is deductible from the individual's gain on the sale of other assets or from other income derived in that year, except salary, self-employment and business income. The remaining loss in the relevant calendar year may be carried forward three years and can be used only to offset the tax on capital gains derived from the sale of shares or real estate.

Nonresident taxpayers deriving capital gains from the disposal of shares or real estate may elect to pay tax on the gross amount at a rate of 25% or to be taxed at a rate of 35% on the net gain. An individual electing the second alternative must designate a legal representative who is a tax resident of Mexico.

Deductions

Personal deductions and tax credits. Resident individuals are granted the following personal deductions:

- Fees and other payments for medical services; professional services in psychology and nutrition provided by persons who have legally issued professional qualifications and who are registered by the competent educational authorities; dental services and hospitalization services, if these services are provided for the taxpayer and his or her dependents and if the fees and payments are paid by personal checks of the taxpayer; electronic transfers from the taxpayer's Mexican bank account or by personal credit, debit or service cards
- Funeral expenses limited to an amount equal to the UMA (approximately MXN32,693)
- Certain donations to public works or utilities, charitable or welfare institutions, and promoters of the arts or culture, capped at 7% of the preceding year's taxable income
- Real interest paid on mortgage loans obtained from Mexican financial institutions with respect to the principal residence, if the credit does not exceed 750,000 UDIs (approximately MXN4,954,198)
- Voluntary contributions made to an individual retirement account, limited to five times the Unit of Measure and Update (UMA; five times the UMA equals approximately MXN163,467) and not exceeding 10% of the taxpayer's current year taxable income
- Insurance premiums for medical coverage paid to Mexican insurance institutions for the taxpayer and his or her dependents
- Payments for the school-bus transportation of dependent children if it is mandatory for all the students in the school and if it is paid by personal checks of the taxpayer, electronic transfers from the taxpayer's Mexican bank account or by personal credit, debit or service cards
- School fees paid with checks or electronic transfers, except materials and registration fees, up to the following amounts:
  — Preschool: MXN14,200
  — Elementary school: MXN12,900

— Junior high school: MXN19,900
— Technician school: MXN17,100
— High school: MXN24,500

The total amount of personal tax deductions listed in the first, second, fourth, sixth and seventh bullets above is subject to a cap equal to five times the UMA or 15% of the taxpayer's total income, whichever is lower.

Business expenses. Ordinary expenses, including salaries, fees, rent, depreciation, interest and other general items, may be deducted from the amount of gross business revenue to compute taxable net income, if business activities are carried out.

Taxpayers are encouraged to retain all digital invoices (CFDIs) related to these expenses because the tax authorities may require the taxpayer to submit these receipts for review. Payments should be made by check, wire transfer, debit or credit card. The CFDIs must meet all requirements established under Mexican law, including, among others, they must contain the following:
• Name, business name, tax address and tax identification (RFC) of the issuer
• Invoice number and digital stamp
• Date and place of issue
• RFC of the taxpayer to whom the invoice is being issued
• Description and amounts of the services and goods acquired
• Form of payment (check, wire transfer, debit or credit card)

In general, only personal deductions incurred in Mexico are deductible. Expenses that were reimbursed to the taxpayer are not deductible.

Employment subsidy. The employment subsidy is calculated on a monthly basis. It is a tax credit that is subtracted from the monthly tax due. No employment subsidy applies when calculating tax in the annual tax return. The following table provides the resident individual monthly employment subsidy for 2021.

Relief for losses. Losses incurred in business or professional activities may be carried forward for 10 years against future earnings of the same type of income, restated by inflation.

B. Estate and gift taxes

No estate or inheritance tax is levied except for a local real estate property tax.

Gifts or donations from direct line family members (ascendants or descendants) are exempt from income tax if certain requirements are met.

C. Social security

Contributions

Social security. The maximum rate of the social security contribution payable by employees is approximately 2.775% of the integrated salary. The contribution is withheld by the employer from wages. The maximum rate of the social security contribution payable by employers can reach 36.69% (including the percentages for job hazard and the Federal Retirement and Housing Funds). The maximum amount of salary that may be used to compute the social security contribution equals 25 times the UMA. These contributions are all subject to caps that are determined based on a multiple of the UMA. For 2021, the maximum annual social contributions per employee are approximately MXN138,840 for the employer portion (this figure includes Housing Fund and mandatory pension costs) and MXN22,301 for the employee portion.

Housing Fund. Employers must contribute 5% of salaries (limited to 25 times the UMA) to the Housing Fund, which provides funds for the construction of housing for workers.

Mandatory pension plan. Employers' contributions to a pension plan that is managed by a bank in the employee's name equal 2% of an employee's compensation. The maximum amount of salary that may be used to compute the pension plan contribution equals 25 times the UMA.

Coverage. The social security system in Mexico provides the following benefits:

- Medical assistance in cases of illness, maternity care and accidents
- Indemnities in cases of temporary disability
- Pensions for disability, old age and death

Medical-assistance benefits extend to the members of an employee's family, including the spouse, parents and children.

Totalization agreements. Mexico has entered into totalization agreements for social security purposes with Canada and Spain. Under such agreements, employees from these countries may generally work in Mexico and qualify for certain exemptions related to social security taxes. Restrictions apply and certain requirements must be observed.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

For individuals, the fiscal year in Mexico is the calendar year. Annual tax returns must be filed during April, but no later than 30 April of the following year. Filing extensions are not granted. Taxpayers who receive income from salaries and interest not exceeding MXN400,000 are not required to file annual tax returns. However, if real interest exceeded MXN100,000 and if taxes were withheld on such interest, the individual must file an annual return.

Personal income taxes of employed residents and nonresidents are withheld at source. A resident individual taxpayer may elect to pay the remaining tax due either when the annual return is filed or in installments with interest over a six-month period.

Resident individuals must report in their annual tax returns information regarding loans, prizes, and gifts obtained during the calendar year if such items exceed MXN600,000, in aggregate or separately.

Taxpayers with income in excess of MXN500,000 in the calendar year are required to report exempt income and nontaxable items (such as employer-reimbursed travel expenses, income derived from the sale of a principal residence, inheritance or legacy income and revenue from prizes), regardless of their amounts. This rule also applies to Mexican resident individuals earning taxable income who are not required to file an annual tax return.

Self-employed individuals must make monthly tax payments on account of their annual tax. Individuals filing monthly tax returns must open a Mexican bank account and make their advance tax payments through electronic transfers via the Internet.

Resident employees of foreign resident companies who work in Mexico must make monthly estimated payments on account of their annual tax if their companies do not have permanent establishments in Mexico or if their compensation is not reflected on a Mexican company's payroll. For such purpose, they must open a Mexican bank account and make their advance income tax payments through electronic transfers via the Internet.

Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

An individual resident in Mexico with foreign-source income may take a credit for foreign tax paid in the source country to the extent that the foreign tax paid does not exceed the individual's Mexican tax liability on the foreign-source income.

Mexico has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

F. Entry into Mexico

Foreign nationals entering Mexico are classified under the following immigration categories:
- Visitor
- Temporary resident
- Permanent resident

These categories are discussed below.

Visitor. The visitor category has two subcategories, which are visitor without authorization to perform remunerated activities in Mexico and visitor with authorization to perform activities remunerated in Mexico.

Visitor without authorization to perform activities remunerated in Mexico. The immigration category for the visitor without authorization to perform activities remunerated in Mexico category applies to foreigners who intend to stay in Mexico up to 180 days, but are not entitled to receive remuneration in Mexico. Individuals of certain nationalities are required to apply for a visa of this immigration category at a Mexican consulate or embassy before traveling to Mexico.

Individuals of nationalities without restrictions may enter Mexico under this category by filling out a Multiple Immigration Form (Forma Migratoria Múltiple, or FMM) on arrival.

Individuals of nationalities with restrictions may also enter Mexico by filling out an FMM at their ports of entry into Mexico if they are holders of any of the following:
- A proof of permanent residence in Canada, Japan, the United Kingdom, the United States, a country that is part of the Schengen area or a country that is a member of the Pacific Alliance (Chile, Colombia and Peru)
- Valid visa issued by Canada, Japan, the United Kingdom, the United States or a country that is part of the Schengen Area
- A valid Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation Business Travel Card approved by Mexico

Tourists or businesspersons are considered visitors without permission to perform activities remunerated in Mexico.

Visitor with authorization to perform activities remunerated in Mexico. A visa for a visitor with authorization to perform activities remunerated in Mexico allows foreigners to stay in Mexico up to 180 days, with permission to be remunerated in Mexico for activities carried out in the country.

The application for this type of visa must be submitted through the National Immigration Institute (Instituto Nacional de Migración, or INM) in Mexico.

* Nationals of the Russian Federation, Turkey and Ukraine can apply for electronic approval for entry as visitors, without having to request an entry visa.

Temporary resident. The temporary resident category applies to foreigners who intend to stay in Mexico more than 180 days, but less than four years. If the activity that the person will perform will not be remunerated in Mexico, the application can be processed at a Mexican consulate or embassy. Otherwise, it must be approved directly by the INM in Mexico.

After temporary resident status is granted, it is renewable for an additional three years.

Temporary residents are eligible to apply for the same status for family members. This application may be processed either at a consulate abroad or at the INM in Mexico.

Permanent resident. The permanent resident category applies to foreigners staying in Mexico for an indefinite time period. Permanent residents may work and receive remuneration in Mexico.

Permanent residents are also eligible for family reunification status if they meet the requisites established in the applicable regulations and rules.

G. Other immigration considerations

Authority to question foreigners on entry into Mexico. Immigration agents now have the formal authority to carry out a review and request additional information from foreigners entering Mexico with respect to the purpose of their visit. The immigration authority may ask for the hotel reservation in Mexico, as well as the return flight ticket.

In addition, for business visitors, the immigration authority can request a letter of invitation from a Mexican company, stating the length and purpose of the trip. Accordingly, all business travelers coming to Mexico should bring an invitation letter meeting the above requirements for each entry into the country.

The immigration officer may ask questions such as the following:
- What is the purpose of your trip?
- Are you going to receive any salary from the Mexican entity?
- How long are you going to stay in Mexico?
- Have you visited Mexico before?

Change of immigration status. A foreigner may not request a change of immigration status from visitor to temporary or permanent resident when the petitioner is already in Mexico, unless the foreigner has family ties to a Mexican citizen or another temporary or permanent resident.

Presence in Mexico. Foreigners who are working or living in Mexico must be aware of the expiration date of their immigration status. In general, renewal requests must be submitted within 30 calendar days before the expiration date of the immigration document.

If the immigration status expires while the foreigner is abroad, a renewal can be processed on arrival in Mexico if the foreigner re-enters Mexico within 55 days after the immigration document's expiration date and submits the renewal request within 5 days after the date of entry into the country. This grace period is only granted for renewal requests, not for change of immigration status applications.

Foreigners who are in Mexico with an expired immigration status must file a request for reinstatement of their status within 60 calendar days of the date of expiration of the immigration document. The foreigner must appear before the INM to justify the reason for his or her irregular immigration status, pay an administrative fine and remain in Mexico until his or her immigration status is reinstated.

If these time frames for immigration status renewals and reinstatements are not observed and if the foreigner does not have any ties to a Mexican citizen or a temporary or permanent resident, the INM may deny the renewal or reinstatement request and order the foreigner (as well as the accompanying family, assuming they are also out of status) to leave Mexico. After the issuance of this order, the foreigner may be required to wait a minimum of six months before he or she can reapply to enter the country.

Obligations of employers and employees. Individuals or companies that intend to hire or have foreigners under their responsibility must request a mandatory employer registration from the immigration authority.

All registered employers are required to formally notify the INM regarding changes in, among other items, their articles of incorporation, address and legal representative. Any reportable change must be disclosed within 30 calendar days. In addition, companies are required to annually update their employer registration file at the INM after filing their annual Mexican corporate income tax return.

Temporary and permanent residents must notify the INM of any changes regarding residence, marital status, nationality and employer. Notifications by residents must be filed with the INM within 90 calendar days following such a change; otherwise, the resident may be subject to monetary fines.

- Capital losses to the extent of capital gains

Personal deductions and allowances. The amount of income from all sources is reduced by personal deductions and allowances. Each taxpayer whose annual taxable income does not exceed MDL360,000 is granted a personal deduction of MDL25,200 per year against taxable income. Certain listed individuals are entitled to a personal deduction amounting to MDL30,000 per year. These individuals include disabled veterans, parents and spouses of war veterans, and individuals disabled in childhood.

An individual may also benefit from an additional deduction of MDL18,900 per year if the spouse is a disabled war veteran, has a certain disability due to war or has a disability since childhood and if the individual's spouse does not benefit from the individual's personal deduction. A deduction of MDL4,500 per year is granted for each dependent, and a deduction of MDL18,900 per year is granted to support individuals with a permanent disability.

Business deductions. Expenses incurred in business activities may be deducted from revenue earned, excluding personal and family related expenses.

Rates. The standard personal income tax rate in Moldova is 12%.

For farms, the income tax rate is 7%.

Relief for losses. Income received for substitution of property for similar property lost under a force majeure event is not taxable.

Tax losses may be carried forward for five years.

B. Other taxes

Wealth tax. A wealth tax of 0.8% is imposed on residential immovable property located in Moldova (except for land) that is owned by individuals if both of the following conditions are met:
- The total estimated value of the property is equal to or greater than MDL1,500,000.
- The total size of the surface of the property is equal to or greater than 120 square meters.

This wealth tax must be paid by 25 December of the reporting year.

Property tax. Tax is imposed on property, including land, buildings, apartments and other real estate. The rate of property tax on buildings, apartments, constructions and other types of premises ranges from 0.05% to 0.4% of the tax base, depending on the type and location of the real estate.

Inheritance and gift taxes. Moldova does not impose taxes on gifts or inheritances.

C. Social security

The rate of social contributions payable by employers is 24% of the gross payroll of individuals.

For employers whose principal activity is software development and that fulfill certain requirements stated in the Moldovan Tax Code, the social contribution is 18% of two average monthly salaries per employee (for 2021, the average monthly salary per employee is MDL8,716).

In addition, employees are liable to pay a mandatory medical insurance contribution on salary and other labor remuneration at a rate of 9%.

Salary provided to employees of companies that are residents of information technology parks is subject to a unique 7% tax (that includes income tax, social security contributions and medical insurance contributions due from the employer and employees).

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Moldova is the calendar year. Annual tax returns must be filed by individuals whose total annual income tax exceeds the amount of income tax withheld during that year. The annual tax return must be filed with the tax authorities by 30 April of the year following the reporting year. Entities must withhold income tax on a monthly basis.

G. Work permits

Foreign nationals may work in Moldova based on a special decision issued by the Moldovan immigration authorities with respect to such matter.

H. Residence permits

A residence permit may be permanent or temporary. In general, temporary residence permit is issued for a one-year period and can be extended for consecutive one-year periods.

Notwithstanding the above, a residence permit may be issued or extended for a longer period if the foreign citizen is holding a managerial position within a Moldovan company and if the foreign citizen has created the following workplaces or made any of the following investments in the company:

- Made investments exceeding 4,000 average monthly forecasted salaries (MDL34,864,000) or created at least 50 workplaces: the residence permit may be issued or extended for up to eight years.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Priority for migration is given to minors who are joining their parents, as well as to the elderly or parents who need assistance if they have no children or guardian abroad.

Children and parents under the immigrant individual's care may also apply for migration to Moldova.

Marital property regime. All assets acquired by spouses during a marriage are subject to the marital regime of joint ownership. The legal regime of the assets of spouses may be modified by a marriage settlement, which may be concluded before the marriage is registered or anytime during the marriage. In this case, the regime will apply only to the extent it does not contradict the marriage settlement.

Forced heirship. There are five categories of legal heirs to whom the property left by deceased persons can be allocated based on some complex and specific rules provided by the Moldovan Civil Code.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive international vehicles in Moldova only if they hold national and international driver's licenses that adhere to the requirements of the United Nations (UN) Convention on Road Traffic.

Foreign individuals entering Moldova for a six-month stay may use their home countries' driver's licenses in Moldova. Foreign individuals who live in Moldova or stay in the country for more than six months should exchange their home countries' driver's licenses for a Moldovan license.

National and international driver's licenses from countries that are signatories to the UN convention may be exchanged. In such circumstances, the drivers are exempt from statutory exams. Driver's licenses issued by other countries may be exchanged for a Moldovan license after passing the required exams.

A. Income tax

Monegasque nationals and foreign nationals residing in Monaco, with the exception of French nationals, who are regulated by the 1963 bilateral tax treaty between France and Monaco, are not liable for income tax.

However, the absence of income tax for individuals only relates to activities carried out and persons who are genuinely established in Monaco. Foreign-source income is subject to the domestic rules of the state in which the source of the income is located and is not subject to Monegasque tax.

B. Other taxes

Wealth tax. Wealth tax does not apply in Monaco, except for French assets.

Property tax. Property tax is not levied in Monaco.

Inheritance and gift taxes. Inheritance and gift taxes apply only to assets located in Monaco or with a situs in Monaco, regardless of the domicile, residence or nationality of the deceased person or donor (subject to the provisions of the tax treaty between France and Monaco of 1 April 1950).

The standardization of international succession rules applicable in the European Union (EU) were introduced by Regulation (EU) No. 650/2012, dated 4 July 2012, which entered into force on 17 August 2015 (except in Denmark, Ireland and the United Kingdom, which have not ratified this regulation), appears to have served as a catalyst for the promulgation on 28 July 2017 of Monegasque Law No. 1448 on private international law.

Monegasque Law No. 1448 provides numerous specifications concerning, among other items, the following:
• The criteria for determining nationality and domicile
• The jurisdiction of the Monegasque courts
• The rules of recognition and performance of foreign judgments and foreign public deeds
• Provisions on the scope and recognition in Monaco of trusts established outside of Monaco

One of the important measures of the Monegasque private international law reform is the possibility to choose the law applicable to the succession, which facilitates new ways to organize the succession from both a civil law and a tax law standpoint.

The principle of a single law applicable to an entire succession has replaced the dual regime, which distinguished immovable succession, governed by the law of the state in which the property is located, and movable succession, which is attached to the deceased and governed by the law of the state of his or her last domicile or by the law of the state of which the deceased was a citizen.

The tax rates depend on the nature of the relationship between the deceased person or donor and his or her heir or donee. The following are the rates:
• Between spouses or for children: no tax
• Between partners of a civil union agreement: 4%
• Between siblings: 8%
• Between uncles and aunts, and nephew and nieces: 10%
• Between other relatives: 13%
• Between unrelated persons (including charities and corporate entities): 16%

On 4 December 2019, the Monaco government and the National Council voted to adopt Law No. 1.481 of 17 December 2019, relating to civil union agreements. This law recognizes the following two forms of civil union agreements:
• For couples living together: a shared life agreement applicable regardless of sexual orientation
• For family members cohabiting together: cohabitation agreement

This law provides for a new rate of 4% applicable to transfer by gift or inheritance between partners of a shared life agreement, subject to certain conditions.

The law entered into force on 27 June 2020, six months after its publication in the Official Journal of Monaco on 27 December 2019.

Transfer tax. Sales of real estate located in Monaco, shares in a Monegasque Société Civile Particulière (SCP) and shares in other types of companies are subject to transfer tax.

The sale of real estate located in Monaco is subject to a 6.5% transfer tax on the sale proceeds (or the fair market value if the sale is for less than the fair market value). If the sale is realized for the benefit of persons who meet the criteria of transparency provided by law, property sales are now subject to proportional duty of 4.5% (instead of 6.5%). In other cases, these transactions are subject to proportional duty of 7.5%.

The sale of shares in a Monegasque SCP is subject to the following rates of transfer tax:

- 6.5% transfer tax assessed on the sale proceeds relating to the underlying real estate
- 1% transfer tax on the portion of the sale proceeds relating to other assets

The sale of shares in other types of companies is subject to a 1% transfer tax. The sale of shares in foreign companies is exempt from transfer tax in Monaco.

Trusts. Trust incorporation (setting up of a trust) or trust transfer in Monaco (transfer of an existing trust from a jurisdiction in which it was originally set up) is subject to a proportional rate of registration duty, varying according to the number of effective beneficiaries of the trust.

The capital of the trusts represented by Monegasque securities is subject to a reduced proportional duty, depending on the number of effective beneficiaries of the trust. The following are the rates of the duty:

- One beneficiary: 0.05%
- Two beneficiaries: 0.25%
- More than two beneficiaries: 0.45%

Tax on change of a beneficial owner. Under Monegasque Law No. 1381 of 29 June 2011, any foreign entity owning Monegasque property must appoint a Monegasque tax representative (authorized in a specific list by Monegasque authorities) and file a yearly declaration of change (or non-change) of beneficial owner.

A change of a beneficial owner requires the payment of a 4.5% transfer tax assessed on the fair market value of the Monegasque property.

Various questions have arisen with respect to the scope of the law. The Monegasque tax authorities have provided an official position regarding the application of law and the definition of "change of a beneficial owner." The following is a summary of this position:

- Any change (regardless of how minor) in the beneficial ownership of a Monegasque property requires the payment of the 4.5% transfer duty on the entire fair market value of the property (no prorated taxation). For example, if a shareholder transfers a 1% stake to a new shareholder, the offshore entity is nevertheless liable for the transfer duty on 100% of the value of the underlying assets.
- The addition or withdrawal of a beneficial owner is considered to be a change in the beneficial ownership of the property and consequently requires the payment of the 4.5% transfer duty.
- If the identity and percentage of ownership of the ultimate beneficial owners is not modified and if he legal personality of the owning entity is not changed, changes in the intermediary structure (such as between the ultimate beneficial owners and the property holding company), the transfer duty is not payable.

Monegasque Law No. 1462 of 28 June 2018, which amended the provisions of Law No. 1362 of 3 August 2009 on the fight against money laundering, the financing of terrorism and corruption, has imposed a new obligation on companies and economic interest groups registered in Monaco.

Under the amended version of Article 22 of the law, the above-mentioned entities must "communicate the beneficial ownership information to the Minister of State, for registration in a specific register entitled register of beneficial owners, annexed to the trade and industry directory and update them regularly."

This communication is mandatory and must be repeated on each change of beneficiary.

The following are disclosure obligation's deadlines:

- For the incorporation of a company, the form must be submitted to the Economic Development Department (Direction de l'Expansion Economique) when applying for registration in the Trade and Industry Register (Répertoire du Commerce et de l'Industrie) or within 15 days after the issuance of the receipt.
- For companies that are operating, the form must be filed no later than two years after the date of publication of the law (that is, on 28 June 2020) or within 30 days of any fact or act requiring the revision of or addition to the information mentioned in the form.

C. Social security

Contributions. Individuals' social security taxes are withheld monthly by employers. Monegasque social security tax contributions are due on compensation, including bonuses and benefits in kind, earned from performing an activity in Monaco and paid in Monaco. However, this rule may be modified by a social security totalization agreement. The total charge for 2018 (the 2019 rates will be available in October 2019) is approximately 10% to 14% (depending on retirement fund contributions and level of remuneration) of gross salary for employees and 28% to 40% for employers.

Some of the contributions are levied on wages up to certain ceilings. The following are the rates of these contributions and the amounts of the ceilings for 2018 (the 2019 rates and ceilings will be available in October 2019):

- Sickness contribution and family allocation: employee share of 0% and employer share of 15.05% (monthly ceiling of EUR8,600)
- Basic state pension contribution: employee share of 6.55% and employer share of 8.03% (monthly ceiling of EUR4,896)
- Unemployment contribution: employee share of 2.40% and employer share of 4.05% (monthly ceiling of EUR13,508)

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Monaco has entered into totalization agreements with France and Italy.

D. Double tax treaties and other agreements

Double tax treaties. Monaco has entered into double tax treaties with the following countries.

France	Luxembourg	Qatar
Guernsey	Mali	St. Kitts and Nevis
Italy	Malta	Seychelles
Liechtenstein	Mauritius

Other agreements. Monaco has ratified the Convention on Mutual Administrative Assistance in Tax Matters, implemented the Standard for Automatic Exchange of Financial Account Information in Tax Matters developed by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) and G20 countries as well as automatic exchange of Country-by-Country Reports under the OECD/G20 Base Erosion and Profit Shifting Project. The convention entered into force for Monaco on 1 April 2017.

The agreement on the automatic exchange of information signed on 12 July 2016 between Monaco and the EU enables Monaco to comply with international standards on tax transparency that are in accordance with the OECD Common Reporting Standard. Consequently, Monaco and the EU member states are collecting information on the financial accounts of nonresidents from 1 January 2017 and will automatically exchange this information from 2018.

Monaco has also negotiated with partner jurisdictions regarding movement to automatic exchange. A partner jurisdiction is a jurisdiction with which Monaco had not yet undertaken to exchange information. The list of partner jurisdictions is published by ministerial decree and is updated as new jurisdictions become partners. Currently, 20 jurisdictions are considered partner jurisdictions.

The Multilateral Competent Authority Agreement, signed on 15 December 2015, confirms the commitment of Monaco to implement automatic exchange of financial account information in time to commence exchanges in 2018. Monaco was the 76th jurisdiction to sign this agreement.

For financial information that was collected from 1 January 2016 with respect to approximately 50 jurisdictions, automatic exchange between authorities began in 2017.

F. Work and residence permits

Anyone who is more than 16 years of age and wishes to reside in Monaco for more than three months in a year, must apply for a residence permit issued by the Monegasque authorities.

An identity card or valid passport is sufficient for European Economic Area nationals. No visa is required.

Before making an application for a resident permit in Monaco, the applicant must apply for a long-term visa for Monaco, issued by the French authorities. Minors also require a visa.

In both cases, the applicant must fulfill a certain number of other conditions.

Applications for residence permits are handled by the Residents Section of the Police Department. The application process varies depending on the plans and the background of the applicant.

Under the Sovereign Ordinance No. 8.372, dated 26 November 2020, an individual can apply for a residency certificate with the Monegasque authorities to complete a tax formality, particularly in the framework of the reporting obligations put in place by Sovereign Order No. 6.208, dated 20 December 2016 (automatic exchange of tax information on financial accounts). The issuance of such residency certificate for an individual of foreign citizenship is subject to specific conditions, depending on the purpose of the request.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. A resident taxpayer of Mongolia is taxable on his or her worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on their income earned in Mongolia or sourced from Mongolia.

Persons are considered tax residents of Mongolia if the following criteria are met:
- They reside in Mongolia for 183 or more days in a given consecutive 12-month period.
- Their income earned in Mongolia and/or their Mongolian source income is more than 50% of their worldwide income.

The first of the above criteria needs to be checked first.

The tax year in Mongolia is the calendar year.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable compensation under the Personal Income Tax Law of Mongolia includes wages, salaries, bonuses, incentive and similar employment income. Benefits and gifts provided to an employee and/or an employee's family members are subject to employment tax to the employee. Awards and/or incentives received from foreign or local legal entities and from individuals also fall into this category. Remuneration received in the capacity as a supervisory board member or a committee member of a company is treated as employment income.

Investment income. Dividends, interest and royalties received by residents are subject to a 10% withholding tax on a gross basis.

Self-employment income and business income. Individuals undertaking business activities independently (such as manufacturing, trade, rental and services, including professional services) without establishing a legal entity are subject to income tax at a rate of 10% on net income (after allowable deductions). Professional services include services provided by doctors, lawyers, advocates, architects, accountants and teachers. Individual business persons are entitled to deduct business expenses in the same manner as corporate taxpayers. Commonly allowed deductible expenses include cost of goods sold, salaries and wages, depreciation allowances, interest, rent, and advertisement expenses. However, if the expenses are not documented, are not related to the business activities or used for the personal use of the taxpayer, the expenses are considered nondeductible expenses.

Income from non-regular business activities are also subject to income tax under these same rules.

Directors' fees. Remuneration received by individuals in their capacity as supervisory board members or committee members of a company is treated as an employment income (see Employment income).

Other income. Income derived from the creation of scientific, literary, and artistic works and inventions, product designing, organizing and participating in sports competitions or art performances and other similar income is taxed at flat 5% rate on a gross basis. Income derived from gambling, quizzes and lotteries is taxed at a rate of 40% of gross receipts.

Transfers of land possession and land-use rights are treated as sales of rights and are subject to a 10% tax on the gross transfer value (certain transfers between immediate family members are subject to exemptions).

Tax-exempt income. The following income received by individuals is exempt from income tax in Mongolia:

- Pensions, allowance, payments, discounts, reimbursements, benefits, compensation and one-time grants provided in accordance with the legislation of Mongolia
- Income of an individual with disability
- Assistance provided by international organizations, foreign governments, legal entities and citizens to the government of Mongolia and local organizations, legal entities and citizens in the event of a disaster
- Income of herder households and persons with livestock, only per head of livestock
- Interest income on treasury bonds
- Transfer of land possession and usage certificates free of charge between certain family members
- Salary, benefit and income earned in a foreign country of a foreign citizen or his/her family member who is permanently residing in Mongolia and is assigned to a foreign diplomatic mission or consulate in Mongolia, the United Nations or its specialized branch

Other exemptions may apply.

Taxation of nonresidents. Nonresidents are subject to 20% tax on income earned in Mongolia or sourced from Mongolia on a gross basis.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Employer-provided stock options are taxed at the time of actual exercise and not at the time of grant. Share awards are taxable at the time of award or, if a vesting period is imposed, at the time of vesting. The taxable amount is the generally the market value of the shares at the time of exercise, award or vesting. This income is included in the employee's taxable income as part of ordinary employment income and taxed accordingly at 10%. Any gain from a subsequent disposal of shares or other instruments is taxable at 10% at the time of the disposal.

Capital gains and losses. Gains derived from the sale of shares, securities or movable properties are subject to tax at a rate of 10% on a net basis. The sale of immovable property by a tax resident is taxed at 2% on a gross basis.

Deductions. Statutory social and health insurance contributions paid by employees are the only tax deductions permitted in Mongolia and no other deductions are allowed for employment tax purposes. For details regarding statutory social and health insurance contributions, see Section C.

No deductions are allowed for personal expenses. For details regarding deductions for business expenses, see Self-employment income and business income.

Rates. Residents' employment income is subject to a standard tax rate of 10%.

Other income, including business income, investment income and capital gains, is subject to a standard tax rate of 10%. A resident individual entrepreneur may elect a 1% gross tax instead of a 10% tax on the taxable income from business operations if annual turnover is under MNT50 million. See exceptions in Other income, Taxation of nonresidents and Capital gains and losses.

Credits. The following annual credit is provided to all resident taxpayers for employment income.

Annual employment income
Exceeding	Not exceeding	Annual tax credit
MNT	MNT	MNT
0	6,000,000	240,000
6,000000	12,000,000	216,000

24,000,000	30,000,000	144,000
30,000,000	36,000,000	120,000
36,000,000	—	—

Relief for losses. No measures exist for the carryover of tax losses in Mongolia.

B. Other taxes

Wealth tax or net worth tax. No wealth or net worth tax is imposed in Mongolia.

Immovable property tax. Immovable property tax (capital duty) is imposed annually on the value of property at a rate ranging from 0.6% to 1%, depending on the location of property in Mongolia. No immovable property tax is imposed during the development process of a property. This tax is not imposed until the property certificate is issued by the government.

The value of the immovable property is defined in accordance with the following sequence:
- The value of property that is registered with the property rights registration authority is the tax base.
- In the absence of a registered value, the insured value is the tax base.
- In the absence of an insured value, the value in the financial records is the tax base.

The owner of immovable property calculates the amount of tax due on the immovable property based on the valuation as of January of each year.

Inheritance and gift taxes. Mongolia does not impose tax on inheritances or gifts.

C. Social security

Contributions. In general, Mongolian citizens and foreign citizens employed on a contract basis by an economic entity undertaking activities in Mongolia are subject to a compulsory social and health insurance contribution that is required to be withheld by employers. This contribution is imposed at a flat rate of 11.5%. However, the employees' portion of the obligation is capped at MNT483,000 per month. The rate for the employers' portion of the contribution ranges from 12.5% to 14.5%, depending on the economic sector. No cap applies to employers. Social and health insurance covers pension insurance, unemployment insurance, health insurance, benefits insurance (provided if the employee loses his or her working capability for a short time period, goes on maternity leave or passes away), and industrial accident and occupational disease insurance.

Self-employed individuals may register as voluntary social and health insurance payers.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social and health insurance and assure benefit coverage, Mongolia has entered into totalization agreements with a few countries, including Korea (South) and the Russian Federation.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year is the calendar year in Mongolia. Spouses are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

An employer (the withholder) is responsible for the filing and payment of personal income tax imposed on employment income. The withholder must file quarterly provisional withholding personal income tax returns by the 20th day of the month following the end of each quarter and an annual return by 10 February of the following year. The withholding tax payments are due by the 10th day of the following month.

Employees or other individuals are responsible for the filing and payment of the tax imposed on all income during the tax year. A tax return must be filed on an annual basis by 15 February of the following year. Tax withheld by the employer on employment income is available as a credit against the overall tax obligations.

Taxes on investment income (for example, dividends, interest and royalties) and certain other types of income are paid through a withholding system. Under this system, the payer is the withholding agent. Any other income not paid through the withholding agent must be included in the annual return and tax must be paid before the filing deadline.

Employers also must withhold monthly with respect to social and health insurance and submit a report by the fifth day of the following month on a monthly basis. Employers must transfer to the government each month the withheld amounts and their contributions.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Mongolia has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Austria	Hungary	Russian Federation
Belarus	India	Singapore
Belgium	Indonesia	Switzerland
Bulgaria	Kazakhstan	Turkey
Canada	Korea (North)	Ukraine
China Mainland	Korea (South)	United Kingdom

F. Temporary visas

In general, 64 different types of Mongolian visas can be issued to foreign citizens by authorized Mongolian organizations. These visas enable such persons to enter Mongolia for different purposes. In addition, since 1 June 2021, Mongolia is issuing online visas to visitors. A single-entry temporary visa for touristic and business purposes may be granted for up to 30 days for a fee that varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. Additional fees are charged for urgent visas.

G. Work visas and residency visas (and/or permits)

Note: The information below is subject to further changes.

For traveling to Mongolia for the purpose of business, the following types of visas are available:
- B visa (investor visa)
- C visa (work visa)

The above visas should be obtained from a Mongolian embassy or consul before traveling to Mongolia.

Under the newly enacted regulation for granting a Mongolian visa, the investor and work visa types are classified into different purposes. There are 11 general different types of work visas depending on the field in which the visa applicant wishes to work. There are three types of investor visas that can be granted to the applicant. For example, a B1 visa can be issued to foreign investors while a B1-1 visa can be issued to a dependent person of the foreign investor of a foreign-invested legal entity. If the visa applicant is a representative of a foreign investor or executive management of the foreign-invested legal entity, the applicant can apply for a B2 visa.

Under the general framework of 11 types of work visas, there are 20 types of detailed work visas that can be issued to an applicant. An applicant who wishes to work in Mongolia can only work in a field in which the specific work visa type is granted. For example, if an applicant who obtains a C8 visa that is specified as "work in a health sector" works in the agriculture field, that will be considered a breach and subject to sanction. In addition to the C visa, a work permit from the Ministry of Labor and a long-term residency permit must be obtained to work in Mongolia. A single-entry C visa and a temporary work permit must be obtained before traveling to Mongolia.

A temporary visitor can stay in Mongolia up to 90 days. In addition, for the purpose of encouraging tourism, a daily tourism visa can be obtained at the border only for tourists who are in the border zone.

In summary, under the new regulation for Mongolian visas, the individual applies with respect to the dedicated field in which he or she wishes to work in Mongolia.

H. Family and personal considerations

Dependent person. Family members and other affiliated people may accompany an employee by obtaining dependent-person visas simultaneously with the main applicant. For investor and work visas, there are specific types to be granted to a dependent of the main applicant. For example, if a dependent person of a foreign investor wishes to enter Mongolia, such dependent person will apply for a B1-1 visa. According to a newly enacted amendment to the immigration law of Mongolia, a dependent person includes a foreign citizen's husband, wife, partner, father, mother, grandparents and children.

Marital property regime. Mongolia has a community property regime, which applies only to the property of spouses acquired during the marriage. Property acquired before the marriage is considered the separate property of the respective spouse.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may not legally drive in Mongolia using their home country driver's licenses. However, such persons may convert their home country driver's licenses to Mongolian licenses by applying to the road policy department.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are subject to tax in Montenegro on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on Montenegrin-source income.

Individuals are considered to be residents for tax purposes if they have a domicile, residence or center of business and vital interests in Montenegro or if they spend more than 183 days in Montenegro within a tax year, which corresponds to the calendar year. In addition, Montenegrin individuals seconded abroad by a resident employer to operate in the name and on behalf of the employer or an international organization are also considered resident.

Income subject to tax. Tax is levied on the types of income described below.

Employment income. Salary tax is payable at a rate of 9% on income from permanent or temporary employment, benefits received in money and in kind, paid leave and other employment remuneration.

Self-employment income. Tax is levied on the net earnings of self-employed individuals at a rate of 9%. For this purpose, taxable income is accounting profit adjusted in accordance with the tax regulations. Lump-sum tax is levied if self-employed individuals realize or plan to realize turnover below EUR18,000. If an individual realizes income from self-employment that is not his or her principal business activity, a standard deduction in the amount of 30% of realized income is allowed in calculating the income tax (unless actual expenses are documented).

Investment income. Tax is imposed at a rate of 9% on the following types of investment income derived by residents and nonresidents:
- Interest (interest paid to nonresidents is taxed at a rate of 5%)
- Dividends and profits participations
- Participation in profits of employees and board members (monetary payments or payments in shares)
- Use of a company's property or services by its owners and co-owners for personal purposes

Income from property leasing derived by residents and nonresidents is taxed at a rate of 9%. A standard deduction of 30% may be claimed with respect to this income. As an exception, a 50% deduction is allowed for income received from leasing apartments, rooms and beds in the tourism industry if the sojourn tax has been paid, and a 70% deduction is allowed for income received from leasing apartments, rooms and beds in the tourism industry to tourist agencies and local tourist organizations if an average capacity utilization was achieved for a period of 60 days per year.

The income payer withholds at source the above taxes on investment income.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived by individuals are taxed at a rate of 9%.

Rates. For Montenegrin tax resident individuals, a 9% rate applies to worldwide income. The same rate applies to income realized in Montenegro by nonresident individuals.

Surtax. Municipalities are entitled to impose a surtax on salaries, self-employment income, income from property and property rights, as well as on investment income of individuals residing in their territory. The surtax is imposed at a rate of 15% in the cities of Cetinje and Podgorica, and at a rate of 13% in other municipalities.

Relief for losses. Losses incurred in self-employment activities may be carried forward for up to five years.

B. Other taxes

Real estate tax. Each legal entity or individual owning real estate in Montenegro on 1 January is considered to be a taxpayer for that calendar year with respect to the real estate located in Montenegro. Real estate tax rates range from 0.25% to 1%.

Transfer tax. Transfers of ownership of land and buildings located in Montenegro are subject to a 3% transfer tax, which is payable by the acquirer. This tax rate also applies to inheritances and gifts of real estate.

C. Social security and other contributions

Contributions. Social security tax is imposed on salaries received by individual employees. The employee and the employer each pay contributions to the following funds and organizations at the rates indicated.

Fund or organization	Employer %	Employee %
Pension and Disability Fund	5.5	15
Health Care Fund	2.3	8.5
Unemployment Fund	0.5	0.5
Work Fund	0.2	—
Montenegrin Chamber of Commerce	0.27	—
Labor union	0.2	—

Contributions to the Pension and Disability Fund at a rate of 20.5% and contributions to the Health Care Fund at a rate of 10.8% (for individuals without any other insurance) are payable by individuals on income received under contracts relating to royalties, services, additional work, agency and sports, as well as under similar contracts involving the payment of remuneration for services performed.

The maximum annual social security contribution base is set at EUR53,858 for 2020 (the maximum base for 2021 has not yet been published).

Expatriate employees must pay social security contributions if they are not insured in their home countries or if provided in totalization agreements applied by Montenegro.

Coverage. An employee who pays Montenegrin social security contributions is entitled to various benefits, including health insurance for the employee and dependent family members, disability and professional illness insurance, unemployment allowances, pension payments and other benefits.

Totalization agreements. To prevent double taxation and to assure benefit coverage, the Republic of Montenegro currently applies social security totalization agreements with the jurisdictions listed below. The following is a list of the signatories of the totalization agreements that Montenegro currently applies.

Austria
Belgium
Bosnia and Herzegovina

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year is the calendar year.

Annual tax returns must be filed by the end of the April of the year following the tax year. Residents should file the annual tax return for self-employment income (unless the tax is payable as a lump sum), income from property and property rights, capital gains and income from abroad. Nonresidents are required to file annual tax returns for the income that is not subject to tax withholding. Withholding tax is levied on most types of income, including salaries. Individuals who receive income from abroad should submit the tax form and pay tax within five days after receiving the income.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

The Montenegrin government has rendered a decision providing that Montenegro recognizes tax treaties signed by the former Republics of Yugoslavia and Serbia and Montenegro until new tax treaties are signed. Although Montenegro professes to honor the tax treaties entered into by the former states of which it had been a part, the full applicability of these treaties must be confirmed by the other contractual state because Montenegro applies these treaties unilaterally. The following is a list of the jurisdictions with which Montenegro has tax treaties in force.

F. Temporary visas

Valid passports and visas are required to enter Montenegro for foreign nationals of many countries.

Foreign nationals from countries with which Montenegro has a visa-free regime (for example, citizens of the European Union [EU], Australia, Canada, the United Arab Emirates and the United States) may remain in the country for 90 days in a six-month period if they have a valid passport. All other foreign nationals need to obtain a visa prior to entering Montenegro.

Travelers with a valid Schengen visa, a valid visa from the Republic of Ireland, the United Kingdom or the United States, or a residence permit in those countries may enter and stay or cross the territory of Montenegro for up to 30 days or until the visa expires if the visa validity period is shorter than 30 days.

Holders of travel documents issued by EU member states, Australia, Canada, Iceland, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Switzerland and the United States, pursuant to the 1951 Convention on the Legal Status of Refugees or the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons, as well as holders of travel documents for foreigners, can enter, cross over the territory and stay in Montenegro for up to 30 days without a visa. Such individuals may enter Montenegro for non-work purposes; however, if they need to apply later for a residence and work permit, they would need to first obtain a visa.

G. Residence permits

Temporary residence and work permit. A temporary residence and work permit can be issued to a foreign national who intends to stay in Montenegro longer than 90 days if the foreign national satisfies certain conditions, such as the following:

- He or she has sufficient funds to support himself or herself.
- He or she has health insurance.
- He or she has available accommodations.

The above list is not final and may be adjusted at the authorities' request, based on each specific case.

The issuance of a temporary residence and work permit is subject to the approval of the immigration authority. The permit is granted for a duration of up to one year, and it may be extended. Obtaining a temporary residence permit can take up to 15 days.

Permanent residence permit. A permanent residence permit can be granted to a foreign national if he or she has spent at least five years continuously in Montenegro on the basis of a temporary residence permit (or less than five years under specific conditions).

H. Certificate of confirmation of work

For certain types of work, a work permit is not required. However, the foreign national must obtain a certificate of confirmation of work and may not stay in Montenegro for more than 90 days in a one-year period.

Obtaining a confirmation of work can take up to seven days.

I. Family and personal considerations

Work permits are not automatically granted to the family members of a foreign national who receives a work permit. However, family members have priority in the process of the issuance of new work permits.

- They are present in Mozambique for more than 180 days in a tax year, regardless of whether the days are consecutive.

- They perform functions of a public nature abroad for the Republic of Mozambique.
- They are crew members of a ship or aircraft that are at the service of entities that have their residence, head office or effective management in Mozambique.

Individuals must inform the tax authorities of their residence.

Employment income. Income tax is levied on employment income paid in cash or in kind and is withheld on a monthly basis as a final tax.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are taxed in the same manner as employment income.

Self-employment income. Individuals carrying out business activities independently, providing consulting services or engaging in technical, artistic or scientific projects are subject to tax on income derived from such activities.

progressive rates (see Rates), and a credit is granted for the tax withheld. Investment income derived from shares listed on the Mozambican Stock Exchange, except for debt titles, is subject to a final withholding tax of 10%.

Other income. Other income is subject to withholding tax. Resident taxpayers include other income in their annual taxable income, which is subject to tax at progressive rates (see Rates), and a credit is granted for the tax withheld. Income from gambling is subject to withholding tax at a rate of 10% as a final tax.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Income derived from employer-provided stock options is taxed in the same manner as employment income on exercise of the options.

Capital gains. Capital gains are subject to tax at a rate of 32%.

The tax base for capital gains derived from the transfer of shares by resident taxpayers decreases according to the length of the holding period for the shares. It is taxed in the annual income tax return.

Capital losses may offset capital gains only.

Exempt income. The following items are exempt from income tax:
- Meal subsidies not exceeding the minimum salary in force
- Other allowances and similar payments that do not exceed the legally established limits
- Pensions
- Compensation received within the scope of a dismissal process

Deductions

1,512,000	—	32	141,540

Tax credits. In addition to the personal tax credits (see Personal deductions and credits), advance payments of tax and tax withheld at source may be claimed as a credit against annual tax due, except for income from employment which is subject to a final tax on a monthly basis.

A tax credit is also allowed for foreign taxes paid (see Section E).

Relief for losses. Losses incurred in business or professional activities may be carried forward and offset against profits from the same type of activities in the following five years. Losses may not be carried back.

Nonresidents. Nonresidents are subject to withholding tax on their income derived in Mozambique. The general rate of withholding tax is 20%. However, the rate is 10% for income derived from artistic work or social entertainment, gambling, competitions, lotteries and similar contests. The withholding tax is final for all income except for property income. Capital gains derived by nonresidents are subject to tax at a rate of 32%.

B. Other taxes

Property tax. Municipal property tax is paid on an annual basis and is calculated at rates ranging from 0.2% to 1% of the total value of the property. The transfer of immovable property is subject to property transfer tax (SISA) or municipal property transfer tax at a rate of 2%.

Inheritance and gift taxes. Mozambique imposes inheritance tax and gift (donations) tax. Inheritance and gift tax is payable at rates varying from 2% to 10%, depending on the relationship of the heirs or beneficiaries to the deceased or donor.

C. Social security

Social security contributions are payable monthly on salaries, wages, bonuses and other compensation income that is regular in nature, such as productivity premiums and housing allowances. The contribution rates are 4% for employers and 3% for employees. The employer withholds the employee contributions monthly. Resident foreign employees are exempt from social security contributions provided that they prove that they are contributing to a similar scheme in another country. Foreign employees may not be subject to social security under totalization agreements and according to specific employment conditions.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Mozambique for individuals is the calendar year.

Effective from 2018, residents who received only employment income are not required to file annual tax returns. Residents earning other income may file their tax returns by 30 April of the following year and pay any balance of tax due by 30 May.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Resident individuals who derive income abroad may claim a tax credit for foreign tax paid, up to the amount of the tax due on such income in Mozambique.

Mozambique has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Botswana	Mauritius	United Arab Emirates
India	Portugal	Vietnam
Italy	South Africa
Macau SAR

F. Temporary entry visas

A valid passport and entry visa are required to enter Mozambique. South African and Zimbabwean passport holders are exempt from the visa requirement for entries of up to 30 days.

Mozambique offers the following types of temporary visas to foreign nationals:
- Transit visas, which are valid for a maximum of seven days.
- Student visas, which are valid for 12 months and are renewable.
- Tourist visas, which are single-entry visas valid for 30 days. These visas are renewable for up to an additional 90 days.
- Business visas, which are multiple-entry visas and allow the holder to remain in the country for 30 days. They are extendable up to 90 days.
- Residence/work visas, which are single-entry visas valid for 30 days and are extended for the duration of the work permit. These visas are provided outside Mozambique if the individual wants to enter Mozambique with the intention of residing or working.

A fee is payable for the issuance of each type of visa.

Tourist visas for citizens of countries where Mozambique does not have consular services may be obtained at the point of entry.

G. Work permits and self-employment

Foreign nationals must obtain a work permit to work in Mozambique, which is valid for up to two years and is renewable. Companies may employ foreign nationals who do not require a work permit (through a communication to the Ministry of Labour) for the same period, up to a certain percentage of the total work force.

Foreign nationals who are self-employed individuals, shareholders or representatives of shareholders in Mozambique must also obtain a work authorization in their personal capacity.

After the period of validity for a work authorization or work permit expires, an individual may reapply for such items.

Work visas are valid for the period of duration of the work permit (maximum two years), with multiple entries.

H. Residence permits

Precarious Residence Permit authorization is granted to foreigners who are not tourists, visitors or businesspersons and wish to remain in Mozambique for a period exceeding 90 days. This authorization is renewable annually.

Temporary residence permits are valid for a maximum period of one year and renewable for one-year periods. They are granted to foreigners who have had precarious residence for at least five years and to foreigners who enter the country for residence purposes.

Foreign nationals who reside in the country for more than 10 years may obtain permanent resident status, which is renewable every 5 years.

The following documents must be submitted with the application for residence permit for work:

- Completed application form
- Passport and a copy of the passport
- Medical certificate
- Work authorization issued by the Ministry of Labour
- Deposit with the immigration authorities of an amount equal to the value of the return ticket to the country of origin
- Applicant's criminal record issued within the preceding three months

In addition to the above, foreigners coming to work in the oil and gas and mining sectors require a pre-approval by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, based on the work permit and no objection from the ministry that supervises the respective sector of activity.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Entry visas and residence permits are granted automatically to family members of a foreign national who holds a valid work authorization or permit. However, an expatriate's spouse who is an employee must file an application for a residence permit through his or her employer.

Marital property regime. The default marital property regime in Mozambique is community property for assets acquired during the marriage. A prenuptial agreement may amend the default regime.

Forced heirship. Forced heirship rules apply in Mozambique, and a legal share of the estate automatically devolves to the surviving spouse, descendants, ascendants, brothers and their descendants and other relatives.

Driver's permits. Expatriates may not drive legally in Mozambique using their home country driver's licenses, except for driver's licenses from Southern African Development Community (SADC) member states. Holders of residence permits must apply for local temporary driver's licenses.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals are taxed on employment and self-employment income at progressive marginal rates. Income tax is assessed only on income from sources within or deemed to be within Namibia and is generally not affected by the residence of the taxpayer.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Employment income is taxable in Namibia if it arises from a source within, or deemed to be within, Namibia. The place where the services are rendered generally determines the source of remuneration. Namibia extends to the territorial shelf and includes the exclusive economic zone for income tax purposes. However, income from services related to employment or a profession in Namibia is deemed to be from a Namibian source, regardless of where services are performed or payment is made. For example, income for services rendered during a temporary absence from Namibia by a person ordinarily resident in Namibia is subject to tax if the services are rendered for or on behalf of a Namibian employer.

Taxable employment income consists of salaries and bonuses, in cash or in kind, and fringe benefits, including the use of company vehicles, free housing and interest-free or low-interest loans.

Self-employment income. Capital and exempt receipts and allowable deductions are subtracted from gross income to arrive at taxable self-employment income, which is taxed with other income at the rates described in Rates.

Nonresident individuals who charge service fees (as defined) to Namibian residents are subject to a withholding tax on services at a rate of 10% or 25% of the gross amount paid to the nonresidents. The withholding tax rate may be reduced based on an applicable double tax treaty.

Services that are subject to withholding tax at a 10% rate include consulting fees, management fees, administration fees and technical fees paid to nonresidents.

Fees charged by nonresident entertainers, including artists and sportspersons and other nonresident persons receiving payments with respect to such types of activities, as well as directors' fees paid to nonresidents, are subject to withholding tax at a 25% rate.

Investment income. Interest and dividends from building societies received by a Namibian resident from anywhere in the world are deemed to be from Namibian sources and are taxable with other income at the rates set forth in Rates. An exception is made if the investment originates outside Namibia or is made for a business carried on outside Namibia and if the interest is taxed outside Namibia.

Interest earned by individuals from local commercial banks is subject to a 10% withholding tax. Interest income that is subject to this withholding tax is exempt from normal income tax.

The following types of income, among others, are exempt from tax:
- Interest from stock or securities issued by the government of Namibia or any local authority
- Interest from deposits in the Namibia Post Office Savings Bank
- Worldwide dividends accrued on ordinary and preference shares

The interest portion of distributions received from non-Namibian unit trusts is taxable in the hands of unit holders. Individuals are subject to tax on such portion at the marginal tax rate.

Namibian unit trusts must withhold tax on the interest portion of distributions to all investors other than Namibian companies at a rate of 10% on the interest portion of distributions to individuals and non-Namibian companies.

Rental income is aggregated with other income and taxed at the rates set forth in Rates.

In the absence of an applicable double tax treaty, nonresidents are subject to the following final withholding taxes:
- 20% nonresident shareholder's tax on dividends declared
- 10% tax on royalties, including payments for the use of or the right to use commercial, industrial or scientific equipment, paid to nonresidents
- 10% tax on consulting fees, management fees, administration fees, technical fees or fees of a similar nature
- 25% on entertainment fees or directors' fees
- 10% on interest payments from Namibian residents

Directors' fees. Namibian-source directors' fees are subject to tax with other income at the rates set forth in Rates. The source of the directors' fees is the location of the head office of the company of which the taxpayer is a director. This rule does not apply to remuneration for special services, which may be sourced where the services are rendered.

Directors' fees paid by a Namibian company to a nonresident are subject to a withholding tax of 25%. The withholding tax is a final tax, and the directors' fee income is not part of the recipient's Namibian taxable income.

Restraint-of-trade payments. Restraint-of-trade payments are specifically included in gross income even though the income is of a capital nature.

Other income. Partnerships are not treated as separate taxable entities. Partners are taxed on their share of net partnership income.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Namibian tax legislation does not specifically address the tax treatment of employer-provided stock options. In general, options are taxed at the time of vesting on the difference between the exercise price and the fair market value of the stock at the time of vesting.

Capital gains. Capital gains are generally exempt from tax in Namibia. A gain on the sale of shares in a company that holds a mineral mining or exploration license or shares in a company that holds a petroleum mining or exploration license is subject to tax at the marginal rate of tax that applies to the taxpayer. Similarly, a gain made on the sale of a mineral mining or exploration license or a petroleum mining or exploration license is also subject to tax at the marginal rate of tax that applies to the taxpayer.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Non-capital expenses incurred in the production of income are deductible. An annual deduction of NAD40,000 per person is allowed for total contributions made to approved retirement annuity funds, pension funds and provident funds (essentially Namibian registered funds) and premiums with respect to study insurance policies for children or stepchildren. Donations to registered welfare organizations and approved educational institutions are deductible if the recipient issues to the donor a certificate recording certain specified information.

Business deductions. Non-capital expenses incurred in producing taxable income are deductible.

Rates. The same progressive tax rates apply to all individuals. Income tax is levied at the following rates.

Taxable income NAD	Tax rate %	Tax due NAD	Cumulative tax due NAD
First 50,000	0	0	0
Next 50,000	18	9,000	9,000
Next 200,000	25	50,000	59,000
Next 200,000	28	56,000	115,000
Next 300,000	30	90,000	205,000
Next 700,000	32	224,000	429,000
Above 1,500,000	37	—	—

Relief for losses. A loss may be carried forward to the next year to be offset against income in that year. If a taxpayer carries a loss forward from the previous year and has no trading activities during a year of assessment, the loss is terminated and may not be carried forward into the following year; otherwise, the loss may be carried forward indefinitely. Losses may not be carried back.

Losses from certain trades are ring fenced from income of individuals for years of assessment beginning on or after 1 March 2012 in any of the following circumstances:

- The taxable income of the individual for the year of assessment before taking the loss into account is at least NAD200,000.
- Losses have been incurred by the taxpayer from a trade in at least three of the most recent five years of assessment, including the current year (losses prior to the 2012 year of assessment are ignored).
- The taxpayer carried on a suspect trade listed in the Income Tax Act. Suspect trades include part-time farming, animal showing, rental income from letting property to relatives, sport activities practiced by the taxpayer, dealing in collectibles and betting.

B. Other taxes

Wealth tax or net worth tax. Namibia does not currently impose wealth tax or net worth tax.

Property tax. The local authorities impose property taxes.

Inheritance (or estate) and gift taxes. Namibia does not impose estate tax or duties or donations tax.

Transfer duties. Transfer duties are payable by the transferee on the transfer of fixed property (land). The applicable rates depend on the identity of the transferee and the value of the property transferred. The following table sets out the rates payable by individuals with respect to agricultural land acquired with the assistance of the Agricultural Bank of Namibia under Section 5(a) or Section 5(c) of the Agricultural Bank Act, Act No. 5 of 2003.

Value of land
Exceeding NAD	Not exceeding NAD	Rate
0	1,500,000	No duty payable
1,500,000	2,500,000	1% of the amount in excess of NAD1,500,000
2,500,000	—	NAD10,000 + 3% of the amount exceeding NAD2,500,000

The following table sets out the rates payable by individuals with respect to other land.

Value of land
Exceeding NAD	Not exceeding NAD	Rate
0	600,000	No duty payable
600,000	1,000,000	1% of the amount in excess of NAD600,000
1,000,000	2,000,000	NAD4,000 + 5% of the amount exceeding NAD1,000,000
2,000,000	—	NAD54,000 + 8% of the amount exceeding NAD2,000,000

The transfer duty payable by any person other than a natural person including a trust, when acquiring land is 12% of the value of the property acquired.

C. Social security

Employees under 65 years of age and all employers are subject to social security contributions. Employees must contribute 0.9% of monthly compensation, subject to a minimum of NAD2.70 and a maximum of NAD81 per month. Employers must contribute an amount equal to the employee's contribution. Self-employed individuals must contribute 1.8% of monthly compensation, limited to NAD162 per month.

In addition, a contribution to the Workers' Compensation Fund must be made for each employee earning less than NAD81,300 a year.

Namibia is not a party to any totalization agreement.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Namibia runs from 1 March to the end of the following February. In general, individuals must file annual tax returns by 30 June, unless an extension is granted. Husbands and wives are taxed separately in Namibia.

The Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) wage withholding tax system operates in Namibia. Individuals who earn only remuneration subject to PAYE and who are employed by the same employer throughout the tax year are not required to file tax returns unless requested to do so by the Ministry of Finance. Individuals who earn remuneration that is not subject to PAYE (for example, travel allowances) must calculate their taxable income and tax payable, and must pay the tax owed by 30 June each year.

Individuals deriving annual income of NAD5,000 or more that is not subject to PAYE are considered provisional taxpayers and are required to make two provisional payments each year, one on the last weekday in August and one on the last weekday in February. Half of the year's estimated tax is due with the first provisional return, and the balance is due with the second return. A penalty is imposed for underpayment of the first provisional tax payment if the payment is less than 40% of the finally determined tax payable for the year of assessment and is limited to the amount underpaid. A penalty is also imposed for the underpayment of the second provisional tax payment if the total provisional tax paid for the year is less than 80% of the finally determined tax payable for the year of assessment and is limited to the tax payable. The penalty for late submission of the first or second provisional tax payment is NAD100 per day for each day the form is submitted late. Any tax balance due is payable by 30 June each year if the taxpayer's income is received from employment only, for example, director's fees. If the taxpayer receives income from conducting a business, for example, as a sole trader, the balance of tax due is payable by 30 September each year. The late payment of provisional tax carries a penalty of 10% per month or part of a month of the tax payable in addition to the penalties referred to above. Interest is payable at an annual rate of 20% per year if the final tax payments and the provisional payments are paid after the due dates.

All directors' fees, including fees payable to non-executive directors, are subject to PAYE. Such amounts constitute remuneration and are subject to PAYE under Paragraph 2 of Schedule 2 of the Income Tax Act.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

A tax credit is available for direct tax and withholding taxes paid to foreign jurisdictions. The credit may not exceed the Namibian tax applicable to the underlying income.

Namibia has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Botswana	Malaysia	South Africa
France	Mauritius	Sweden
Germany	Romania	United Kingdom
India	Russian Federation

The treaties follow the model treaties of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD).

Namibia is negotiating double tax treaties with Canada, Liberia, Seychelles, Singapore, Spain, Tunisia, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

F. Temporary visas

All foreign nationals (bona fide tourists or business travelers) must obtain valid entry visas to enter Namibia, with the exception of nationals from the following jurisdictions.

Angola	Iceland	Norway
Australia	Ireland	Portugal
Austria	Italy	Russian Federation*
Belgium	Japan	Singapore
Botswana	Kenya	South Africa
Brazil	Lesotho	Spain
Canada	Liechtenstein	Sweden
Cuba	Luxembourg	Switzerland
Denmark	Macau SAR	Tanzania
Eswatini	Malawi	United Kingdom
Finland	Malaysia	United States
France	Mozambique	Zambia
Germany	Netherlands	Zimbabwe
Hong Kong SAR	New Zealand

* Including the Commonwealth of Independent States.

Persons from the United Nations and the World Service Authority do not require valid entry visas to enter Namibia.

The government of Namibia issues visitors' visas, business visas, work permits and temporary or permanent residence permits.

Visitors' visas. Visitors' visas are issued to foreign nationals who intend to visit Namibia for recreational purposes only and are issued to visitors on arrival in Namibia. These visas are valid for up to 90 days and can be extended at a cost of NAD580 if the extension application is submitted within 14 days (weekends or holidays excluded) of the expiration date.

Business visas. Business visas are required for individuals who enter Namibia for business purposes. The business visa is now granted at the airport to individuals from visa-exempt countries, but the individual must be in possession of a confirmed return air ticket. The business visa in Namibia is required for persons performing the following activities in Namibia:

- Looking for prospects to set up formal businesses in Namibia
- Exploring business opportunities
- Business persons attending meetings at subsidiaries of their parent companies
- Official government visits
- Attending conferences
- Attending corporate events (non-work) and meetings for which no remuneration is received
- Attending short training courses (not more than 90 days per year)
- Participating in sports events, expos and trade fairs

All of the persons performing the activities listed above must apply for a business visa unless they are from countries that have entered into a visa abolition agreement with Namibia.

Traders and street vendors, voluntary workers, and persons hired and remunerated in their countries but performing work in Namibia must obtain work visas.

On application, business visas may be granted for multiple re-entry. However, they must be obtained for each entry into the country for business purposes if a multiple re-entry visa was not originally granted.

The documentation required for a business visa consists of a copy of the passport (showing date of issuance, date of expiration and passport number), a completed visa form and a motivation letter (references from the employer) on a company's letterhead.

The cost of a business visa is NAD1,000 plus a handling charge of NAD80 for individuals from countries that are not visa-exempt.

Work visas and permits. Work visas and permits are discussed in Section G.

G. Work visas (and/or permits) and self-employment

Work visas are issued to persons who intend to work for up to six months in Namibia. Work visas can be issued for a three-month period and can be renewed for an additional three months.

The cost of a work visa is NAD1,000 plus a handling charge of NAD80.

The documentation required for a work visa is the same as the documentation required for a business visa (see Business visas), except for the additional requirement of a police clearance certificate for a work visa.

Foreign nationals may accept employment in Namibia only if they enter the country with work permits and with temporary or permanent residence permits (see Section F).

Work permits are issued to foreign nationals who intend to undertake employment in Namibia and are valid for a period approved by the Ministry of Home Affairs. The cost for a 12-month work permit is NAD2,500. In addition, a handling fee of NAD80 is charged on all applications. The cost for a 24-month work permit is NAD5,000. In addition, a handling fee of NAD80 is charged on all applications. The multiple-entry visa allows an individual to enter and leave Namibia as he or she desires. Applicants may not begin work until they are in possession of valid work permits.

Work permits must be renewed three months before their expiration dates. They are valid only for the employment detailed in the application and are not transferable if the holder changes employment. A Change of Conditions permit must be obtained in these circumstances.

The following items, certain of which are standard forms obtainable from the Ministry of Home Affairs, must be submitted to acquire a temporary work permit:

- An application for a temporary work permit completed by the applicant
- Application for visa (for purpose of multiple re-entry)
- Motivation letter on the company's letterhead that indicates why the applicant's skills are required
- Work references from previous employers
- A copy of a marriage or divorce certificate, if applicable
- A copy of the applicant's passport (showing date of issue, date of expiration and passport number) and two photographs
- Copies of a diploma indicative of higher education or special training
- Completed standard medical certificate and radiological report forms obtained from the Ministry of Home Affairs
- Police clearance certificates from the country of origin and most recent countries where the applicant was previously employed
- A deed of surety completed by the employer promising to reimburse the government of Namibia for all expenses and costs incurred for the repatriation or deportation of the applicant
- Proof of advertisement of the position in two local newspapers for two weeks
- Trade union letter (if applicable)
- A minimum of three CVs from applicants for the position

A foreign national may establish a business in Namibia, but must be in the possession of a work permit or permanent residence permit before entering the country and beginning a business. To speed up the approval process, applications can be submitted through the Investment Centre if the investment will create employment (minimum five persons) that is sustainable. Houses are not considered an investment.

H. Residence visas and/or permits

Temporary residence permits are issued together with work permits and are renewable on the same basis as work permits.

Subject to government approval, permanent residence permits are issued to foreign nationals after they have held a work permit or temporary residence permit for 10 years. The cost of the permanent residence permit is NAD18,000. In addition, a handling fee of NAD80 is charged for all applications.

An applicant for a permanent residence permit must complete a standard permanent residence application, which must be accompanied by the following items:

- A photograph of the applicant
- Police clearances from Namibia, the country of origin and all foreign countries where the applicant previously worked
- A certified copy of the applicant's original birth certificate
- Standard medical and radiological reports from all previous countries of residence for longer than 12 months
- Marriage certificate or a final divorce certificate if applicable
- A death certificate of a late spouse if applicable
- A standard questionnaire form obtainable from the Ministry of Home Affairs detailing the training and experience of the applicant
- Copies of the highest educational, trade or professional certificates obtained
- The employment offer from the employer
- Proof of financial resources if applicants are self-employed or entering into business partnerships

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The spouse of a work permit holder must file an independent application for a work permit if he or she will be employed in Namibia or for a temporary resident permit, which does not allow a person to work, if he or she does not intend to work in Namibia.

Marital property regime. Namibia has abolished the marital power provisions and, as a result, each spouse now has equal marital powers. The regime elected by the spouses at the time of marriage governs their conjugal relationship.

Interest income accruing to a jointly held bank account is deemed to belong one-half to each spouse.

Forced heirship. Namibia does not have a system of forced heirship.

Driver's permits. International driving permits are issued by the Automobile Association of Namibia in accordance with the terms of the International Convention relative to Motor Traffic of 1949 and to holders of valid driver's licenses issued in Namibia.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are subject to income tax in the Netherlands on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on specific Netherlands-source income only.

Residence is determined based on all facts and circumstances. For Dutch residency, it is essential to determine whether the individual has a lasting tie of a personal nature with the Netherlands. For this purpose, specific circumstances (social, economic or legal) are not decisive; all personal ties are relevant. Simply being formally registered in the Municipal Personal Records Database or a similar foreign database is not sufficient. Double tax residence is possible under certain conditions.

Subject to certain conditions, nonresident taxpayers living in the European Union (EU), Switzerland or one of the member states of the European Economic Area (EEA), which are Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway, can be taxed as a resident taxpayer of the Netherlands. Furthermore, the 30% facility (see 30% facility) provides the option for residents of the Netherlands to be taxed as a "partial" nonresident taxpayer.

Income subject to tax. Netherlands income tax is levied on three categories (boxes) of income. Each box has its own rules to calculate taxable income, its own tax rates and exemptions. In general, negative income from one box may not be offset against positive income from another box.

Box 1 income. Box 1 income includes employment income, business profits and income from a primary residence. Profits received from personal business operations, from independent personal services and from certain shares of partnership income are taxed as business profits.

Tax on income in Box 1 is levied at progressive tax rates, with a maximum tax rate of 49.5% on income over EUR68,507 (see Rates). Wage tax is levied throughout the year (pay-as-you-earn) on employment income and directors' fees if a Dutch wage tax withholding agent is available. The wage tax paid serves as an advance payment of the final income tax payable. Penalty taxes for employers can apply for excessive severance payments (rate of 75%) and certain early retirement payments (rate of 52%).

Employment income. Employment income includes salaries, wages, pensions, stock options, bonuses and allowances (for example, home leave and cost-of-living). Housing allowances may be taxable in certain situations. Some allowances for expenses may be paid as a tax-free allowance, subject to certain limitations and restrictions. The system of tax-free employment benefits and allowances is embodied in the work-related costs scheme (in Dutch: werkkostenregeling; see Deductions and allowances). This scheme has a major impact on employment conditions policy as a whole. Expatriates may qualify for a special tax regime, the 30% facility. This facility exempts 30% of certain employment income from taxation (see 30% facility).

Income and gains derived by private equity managers and other individuals from investments in which they are deemed to have a so-called "lucrative interest" is subject to the progressive income tax rates up to a maximum of 49.5% in a manner similar to entrepreneur income (the 30% facility is not applicable).

A nonresident individual receiving income from employment actually carried on in the Netherlands is subject to Dutch income tax. In certain situations involving multinational companies, the so-called 60-days rule applies. Under this rule, the Netherlands gives up its right to levy tax on employment income if the employee works in the Netherlands less than 60 days in any 12-month period. A nonresident who is employed by a Dutch public entity is also subject to Dutch income tax, even if the employment is carried on outside the Netherlands. A nonresident who is employed by a Dutch employer and is working in the Netherlands for part of the time may be liable to tax in the Netherlands on the full remuneration received from the employer.

However, in this situation, tax treaties generally do not allow the Netherlands to tax income related to non-Dutch workdays.

Self-employment income. Annual profit derived from a business must be calculated in a consistent manner and in accordance with sound business practices. Annual profit is reduced by related business expenses, and taxable income is then determined by subtracting the deductions and the personal allowances described in Deductions and allowances.

A nonresident individual earning income from an enterprise carried on through either a permanent establishment or a permanent representative in the Netherlands is subject to Dutch income tax. Profits of a permanent establishment are calculated on the same basis as profits of resident taxpayers.

For the allocation of profit between a foreign head office and a Dutch permanent establishment, the permanent establishment is deemed, in principle, to be a separate entity dealing at arm's length.

Announced but not yet enacted rules, which will likely take effect in 2022, are designed to improve the position of freelancers, other self-employed persons and their clients in the areas of employment law, tax law and social security law, but also to combat "bogus" self-employment. Until then, if the contract with a (assumed) self-employed persons turns out to be a (deemed) labor contract, the clients risk supplementary assessments for wage tax, social security contribution and fines if they deliberately allow a situation of evident "bogus" self-employment to be created or to continue to exist.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are treated as ordinary employment income.

An employee who is a 5% or greater shareholder is deemed to earn a salary of at least EUR47,000 a year. A lower amount may be taken into account for a shareholder who can prove that his or her actual salary at arm's length is less than EUR47,000. However, if the tax authorities can prove that a salary at arm's length would be higher than EUR47,000, the director's salary must equal at least 75% of the salary at arm's length (with a minimum of EUR47,000) and at least as much as 100% of the highest salary of other non-shareholder employees. These rules do not apply if the salary at arm's length of the employee/shareholder does not exceed the amount of EUR5,000 a year.

A nonresident receiving income as a director of a company resident in the Netherlands is subject to Dutch income tax. Tax treaties entered into by the Netherlands generally grant the right to tax this income in the resident country of the company that pays the directors' fees. Exemptions are made, among others, in the tax treaties with Switzerland and the United Kingdom.

For resident taxpayers (subject to income tax on their worldwide income) receiving income as a director of a company that is not resident in the Netherlands, double taxation is eliminated by either the tax exemption method (with progression clause) or the credit method. The applicable method depends on the applicable tax treaty. It has been announced that the Netherlands will withdraw an approval to use the (more advantageous) tax exemption method instead of the credit method, most likely as of the 2022 tax year. As a result, in most cases the credit method will apply to directors' fees.

Approval of foreign pension schemes. Expatriates in the Netherlands often want to continue their foreign pension scheme during the period they work in the Netherlands. The main rule is that the employee contributions to the foreign pension scheme are not tax deductible in the Netherlands and the employer contributions are taxable. However, a "corresponding approval" can be requested from the Dutch tax authorities. When the approval is granted, the employee contributions to the pension scheme are tax deductible and the employer contributions will not be taxable, in general, in the same way as in the country of origin. To receive a corresponding approval, several conditions need to be fulfilled. The approval procedure makes a distinction between EU and non-EU pension schemes. The corresponding approval can be received for the period of employment in the Netherlands but in principle no longer than five years (a longer period can be agreed upon in tax treaties).

Precautionary tax assessment. The Dutch tax authorities impose a precautionary tax assessment on pension entitlements when an individual emigrates and ceases to be tax resident in the Netherlands. The payment of this tax is suspended for a period of 10 years. If certain forbidden transactions take place (for example, receiving the pension in a lump-sum payment) during the 10-year period, the precautionary tax assessment is collected. Otherwise, the tax assessment lapses at the end of this period. The Dutch precautionary tax assessment has the potential to conflict with some tax treaties. In these situations, an appeal could be filed. The Netherlands is increasingly pursuing changes in its tax treaties regarding the taxation of pension income. In a deviation from the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) Model Tax Convention, the state of source rather than the resident state may tax pension income. Readers should always check the applicable tax treaty and corresponding protocols and consult a tax professional.

Income from a primary residence. The owner of a primary residence is taxed on the deemed rental value of the residence which is determined based on the so-called "real estate valuation act," which aims to reflect fair market value. For dwellings with a value exceeding EUR75,000, in general, a rate of 0.5% applies to calculate the deemed rental value. For dwellings with a value exceeding EUR1,110,000, a rate of 2.35% applies on the excess. Besides this taxable income from the primary residency, tax deductions related to the primary residency are available. For a period of up to 30 years, mortgage interest paid for the acquisition, maintenance or improvement of a primary residence is deductible for tax purposes from Box 1 income. Restrictions are imposed on the deduction of mortgage interest. One of the restrictions is that the mortgage should include at least an annuity scheme for paying off the mortgage; that is, there is a prohibition on interest-only mortgages. Annual installments must be made within a maximum of 30 years. Transitional rules apply to mortgages in existence before 2013. In general, the acquisition of a primary residence cannot be fully financed by a mortgage if a capital gain on the previous primary residence was realized within three years before the purchase of the new residence. In principle, income from a second residence is taxed as Box 3 income.

The rate in the top bracket (49.5%), against which mortgage interest is deductible, is lowered yearly as shown in the following table:

Tax rate for negative income from a primary residence

Year	Rate (%)
2020	46.00
2021	43.00
2023	37.05

Box 2 income. Box 2 income includes profits from a substantial shareholding, which is a shareholding of at least 5% of a certain class of shares of a company resident in or outside the Netherlands. Both capital gains and regular income (dividends) are taxed. Tax is levied at a fixed rate of 26.9%.

Nonresidents are taxable on capital gains and regular income from a substantial interest in a company resident in the Netherlands.

Box 3 income. Box 3 income consists of income from savings and investments, including shares and bank accounts (excluding the value of loans with respect to a primary residence) and income from savings accounts maintained outside the Netherlands. Nonresident taxpayers are only taxable on the net value of real estate located in the Netherlands or on profit rights in an enterprise resident in the Netherlands.

The value at the beginning of the calendar year of a taxpayer's savings and investments is deemed to generate a fixed income. This implies that actual income generated from savings and investments is not taxed (for example, the actual rent received from renting out a property). In case of emigration or immigration during the course of the year, the value at the beginning of the year is recalculated on a pro rata basis. The deemed 2021 income in Box 3 is taxed at a fixed rate of 31%. The following table illustrates the taxation of Box 3 income.

Savings and investments	Deemed income percentage	Tax rate	Effective tax rate
EUR	%	%	%
Up to 50,000	1.90	31	0.59
50,000 to 950,000	4.50	31	1.40
More than 950,000	5.69	31	1.76

Specific exemptions apply for certain assets, such as personal goods, art and certain life insurance policies. A general exemption of EUR50,000 applies per resident taxpayer. Any dividend withholding tax serves as an advance payment of the final income tax payable.

A dividend withholding tax is imposed on dividends paid by resident companies to resident or nonresident recipients. The withholding tax rate is 15%, unless reduced or eliminated by an applicable tax treaty. Resident individuals may credit domestic withholding tax against their total income tax due. A credit may be granted against Dutch income tax for foreign taxes paid on dividends and interest.

A 15% withholding tax is levied on dividends derived by nonresidents, unless the rate is reduced by an applicable double tax treaty. Nonresident taxpayers cannot credit the Dutch dividend withholding tax against the final income tax payable. No further tax is imposed unless the shares constitute a substantial interest, in which case, income tax may be levied and dividend withholding tax may be credited.

Interest and royalties derived by a nonresident natural person are not subject to withholding tax. However, interest is included in taxable income if the recipient holds a substantial interest in the payer. As of 2021, other rules apply for legal entities.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. In general, the profit from stock options is taxed at the moment of exercise. The taxable gain arising at exercise is the fair market value of the shares on the exercise date less the exercise price. If the employee worked in more than one state in the period between the grant of the stock option and the vesting of it (became unconditional), the taxable gain is allocated on a pro rata basis.

A benefit gained from a share option scheme awarded by an innovative startup is 25% tax-exempt up to an amount of EUR50,000. Consequently, a maximum of EUR12,500 is excluded from the levying of tax. Certain conditions apply. The government is expected to present new legislation around March 2022.

Cross-border severance packages. The main rule in the guidelines of the OECD Model Tax Convention regarding the taxation of a cross-border severance package is that the severance payment is taxable in the country where the employee worked in the 12 months before the termination of his or her employment contract. If an individual has worked in several countries, the allocation is made on a pro rata basis. The Netherlands explicitly conforms to the OECD guidelines.

Capital gains. Capital gains generally are exempt from tax. However, exceptions apply at the applicable 2021 tax rates indicated in the following table.

Taxable gains	Rate
Capital gains realized on the disposal of business assets (including real estate) and on the disposal of other assets that qualify as income from independently performed activities	Normal rates apply*
Capital gains on liquidation of a company	Normal rates apply*
Capital gains derived from the sale of a substantial interest in a company (that is, 5% of the issued share capital); 2021 rate	26.9%

* For normal rates, see Rates.

Nonresidents are subject to income tax at normal rates on capital gains derived from the disposal of business assets and on capital gains derived from transfers of shares in a domestic corporation if the shares constitute a substantial interest.

Deductions and allowances

Dutch wage tax regulation. Allowances for business expenses are tax-free or taxable, according to the rules of the so-called "work related costs scheme" (werkkostenregeling in Dutch). The principle of this scheme is that fewer rules apply with respect to tax-free allowances and employment benefits, and that all allowances and benefits granted to employees by employers essentially constitute taxable wages. Specific exemptions are provided, such as for certain business expenses and education. The employer is entitled to a tax-free work-related costs budget per year of 1.18% of the total taxable wage bill. If the actual work-related costs exceed this budget, an employer's final levy of 80% on the excess is due. For 2021, the tax-free work-related costs budget of 1.18% is increased to 1.7% of the first EUR400,000 of the total taxable wage bill. Because of the COVID-19 pandemic crisis, the percentage of 1.7% of the first EUR400,000 is increased to 3%, also applicable in 2021.

Deductible expenses and tax-free allowances. Under certain measures, taxpayers may claim the following deductions and tax-free allowances:

- Deduction for mortgage interest for the acquisition, maintenance or improvement of the taxpayer's primary residence (see Income from a primary residence).
- Deduction for certain life insurance premiums that entitle individuals to annuity payments. The amount depends on the available pension rights of the individual.
- Deduction for alimony payments to the ex-partner.
- Deduction for extraordinary expenses exceeding a certain threshold, including medical expenses, support provided to direct relatives, education expenses within a certain range and qualifying gifts.
- A moving allowance, up to a maximum of EUR7,750, may be granted besides reimbursing for the actual cost to transport the goods. If the employer does not reimburse the employee for the moving costs, these amounts are not deductible by the employee.
- An allowance for business travel, including commuting expenses, may be granted for private transportation, subject to certain limitations. Commuting expenses for public transportation may be reimbursed tax-free in full. Business travel and commuting expenses may not be deducted.

The rate in the top bracket (2021: 49.5%), against which expenses are deductible, is lowered as of 1 January 2021 to the following rates.

Tax rate against which expenses are deductible

Year	Rate (%)
2021	43.0
2022	40.0
2023	37.05

The deductions listed above for certain life insurance premiums, alimony payments, extraordinary expenses and gifts are in principle not available to nonresidents. An exception may be applicable for certain residents of the EU, Switzerland or one of the member states of the EEA.

Under certain circumstances, a tax-free allowance for extraterritorial costs may also be available (see 30% facility) for qualifying expatriates.

30% facility. Expatriates in the Netherlands may qualify for a special tax facility, the 30% facility. This facility enables an employer to pay an employee a tax-free allowance of up to a maximum of 30% of present employment income (no upper limit) and a tax-free reimbursement of school fees for children attending international schools. A 30% statement issued by the tax authorities is required.

On request, the employee may be considered a nonresident taxpayer of the Netherlands for certain items of income (partial nonresident status). A nonresident taxpayer is exempt from the tax on income from savings and investments, unless this income relates to the net value of real estate located in the Netherlands or on profit rights in an enterprise resident in the Netherlands (see Box 3 income).

The maximum term for the 30% facility is limited to 60 months as of 1 January 2019 (up to and until 2018: 96 months). Transitional rules apply for existing situations on 31 December 2018. The possibility of paying a tax-free allowance for the extraterritorial costs actually incurred will also lapse after five years. The period of 60 months is reduced if the employee has worked or stayed in the Netherlands for a period of time in the past. Periods of tax liability in the Netherlands as a result of employment without physically being present are also deducted. An example is a director of a Dutch company who lives abroad.

To qualify for the 30% facility, certain conditions must be met, including the following:

- The employee must be recruited or assigned from abroad to work in the Netherlands.
- Dutch wage tax must be withheld.
- In the employment contract (or in an addendum to the contract), the employer and employee must agree that a tax-free allowance for extraterritorial costs up to a maximum of 30% is included in the compensation package.
- The employee must have highly skilled specific expertise that is "scarce or not available" in the Dutch labor market.
- Before employment in the Netherlands, the foreign employee must have resided for more than 16 months of the 24 months prior to his or her Dutch employment in an area more than 150 kilometers from the Dutch border. This distance is measured "as a crow flies." If not, the employee is excluded from the 30% facility. The tax authorities demand strong and extended proof that before the start of his or her employment in the Netherlands, the recruited employee was living outside the range of 150 kilometers.

The requirement that the employee from abroad has specific expertise is solely met with a standard taxable salary (for 2021) of more than EUR38,961 (excluding the 30% allowance). Foreign income may also be included in this salary level. An exception is made for certain groups of employees, such as graduates under the age of 30 holding a master's degree, in which case the taxable salary must exceed EUR29,616. No salary standard applies to certain groups of academics and medical trainees at designated academic institutions. The salary standards will be indexed annually.

If an employee meets the income standard, he or she is deemed to hold specific expertise. In addition, the employee must continue to meet the condition that the specific expertise is either scarce or not available in the Netherlands. The following factors are taken into account in this scarcity criterion:

- The level of education attained by the employee
- The employee's experience relevant to the position
- The remuneration standard of the position in question in the Netherlands relative to the remuneration level in the employee's own country

Bonuses and other emoluments paid after the end of the month following the month in which the Dutch employment ends is excluded from the 30% facility.

The tax-free allowance is intended to cover all "extraterritorial costs." As a result, no additional tax-exempt reimbursements of extraterritorial costs are allowed on top of the 30% tax-free allowance.

Instead of applying the 30% facility, reimbursement of the actual extraterritorial costs free of tax is allowed for a maximum of five years even if this amount is higher than 30% of the present employment income. Consequently, the employer must maintain records of all actual extraterritorial costs reimbursed free of tax.

Rates. The rates applicable to income from Box 1, effective from 1 January 2021 are set forth in the following table.

Taxable income			National Insurance contributions		Total rate
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	Rate of tax %	A %	B %	A %	B %
0	35,129	9.45	9.75	27.65	19.20	37.10
35,130	68,507	37.10	0.00	0.00	37.10	37.10
68,508	—	49.50	0.00	0.00	49.50	49.50

A These rates apply to persons who are entitled to a pension on the basis of the General Old Age Pensions Act (AOW). In 2019, 2020 and 2021, this entitlement starts at the age of 66 years and four months. This age will rise in small steps as of 2022 until it reaches 67 years in 2024.
B These rates apply to persons not included in the category "A" above.

Income from Box 2 is subject to tax at a rate of 26.9% in 2021. Income from Box 3 is subject to tax at a rate of 31%.

Personal tax credits. Personal tax credits are fixed amounts that directly decrease the income tax payable.

The personal tax credits consist of an income-related general credit, an income-related employment credit for recipients of income from profits and employment and other credits, such as for children, single parents and senior citizens. In general, the personal tax credits may not exceed tax payable plus National Insurance contributions, and, consequently, application of the credits cannot result in a refund.

The amount of the general credit and the employment credit differ depending on the age and/or income of the individual. The maximum general credit is EUR2,837 and reduced step by step from an income of EUR21,043, resulting in a general credit of EUR0 for income exceeding EUR68,508. The maximum employment credit is EUR4,205 and reduced step by step from an income of EUR35,653, resulting in an employment credit of EUR0 for employment income exceeding EUR105,737.

Approximately 25% of the credits relates to income tax or wage tax. The other 75% relates to National Insurance contributions due (see Section C). The share of the personal tax credits that relates to tax is, in principle, reserved for resident taxpayers and for foreign taxpayers who are resident in Bonaire, St. Eustatius and Saba (BES-Islands), the EU, the EEA or Switzerland, provided that 90% or more of their income is subject to payroll or income tax in the Netherlands. If this income criterion is not met, treatment as a resident taxpayer is only possible for this group if the Netherlands is required to do so under European law or a relevant tax treaty. Taxpayers living in other countries are not entitled to the tax part of the personal tax credits. Employees living abroad who have social security coverage in the Netherlands retain their right to the social security share of the personal tax credits.

Relief for losses. Resident and nonresident individual taxpayers may carry losses related to Box 1 back for three years or forward for nine years. In general, positive income of one box may not be offset by negative income of another box.

B. Other taxes

Net worth tax. The Netherlands does not impose net worth tax.

Inheritance and gift taxes. Inheritance tax and gift tax are levied on all property inherited from or donated by an individual who was a resident or deemed to be a resident of the Netherlands at the time of death or donation. Dutch individuals who emigrate from the Netherlands are deemed to be resident in the Netherlands for 10 years after emigration. A gift made by a former Dutch resident, regardless of nationality, who left the Netherlands less than one year before making the gift is subject to Dutch gift tax. Tax is levied on an heir or a gift recipient, regardless of his or her place of residence.

Inheritance and gift tax rates range from 10%, 20% and 30% to a maximum of 40% of the value of a taxable estate or donation after deductions, depending on the applicable exemptions and the relationship of the recipient to the deceased or donor.

Inheritance tax exemptions. The most important exemptions from inheritance tax are the following:
- Acquisition by the surviving spouse: a maximum exemption of EUR671,910
- Acquisition by the (grand) children: a maximum exemption of EUR21,282

- Acquisition by disabled children: a maximum exemption of EUR63,836
- Acquisition by parents: a maximum exemption of EUR50,397
- Generally, property acquired by an acknowledged charity
- In other cases: EUR2,244

Gift tax exemptions. The most important exemptions from gift tax are the following:
- Gifts from a parent to a child: a general one-off exemption of EUR6,604
- A general one-off gift from the parents to a child aged 18 to 40: EUR26,881, which may be increased in the case of a gift issued for or applied to the payment of the child's education expenses (EUR55,996) or to the acquisition of a primary residence (EUR105,302)
- Other gifts: up to 3,244

Filing obligation and payment. The recipient of an inheritance or gift must file a tax return within eight months from the time of death. For gift tax, the return needs to be filed within two months after the calendar year in which the gift was made. The Revenue imposes a tax assessment stating the tax due after the tax return has been filed.

Nonresidents inheriting assets from an individual who was a resident or a deemed resident of the Netherlands at the time of death are subject to inheritance taxes. To provide relief from double taxation, the Netherlands has entered into inheritance tax treaties.

Inheritance tax treaties. The Netherlands has entered into inheritance tax treaties with Aruba, Austria, Curaçao, Finland, Israel, Sint Maarten, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, and the United States. All treaties cover inheritance tax with respect to bequests. Only the treaties with Aruba, Austria, Curaçao, Sint Maarten and the United Kingdom also cover gift tax. If no tax treaty applies, Dutch unilateral law for the avoidance of double taxation applies, but, in practice, it does not always prevent double taxation completely.

C. Social security

Contributions. The Social Security Acts can be classified into three categories, which are the following:
- National Insurance Acts
- Employee Insurance Acts
- Health Insurance Act

National Insurance Acts provide benefits to all Dutch residents and to persons who work in the Netherlands and are subject to the levy of wage tax. National Insurance contributions are payable on taxable income of up to EUR35,129 and are not deductible for tax purposes. The maximum annual National Insurance contribution payable by an employee is EUR9,713 (before taking into account the social security credit). Employee Insurance Acts provide additional benefits for wage earners. Employee Insurance contributions are EUR0 for the employee and fully paid by the employer with a maximum of EUR9,100 per employee. In addition, the employer must pay an income-related contribution for the health insurance of the employee with a maximum of EUR4,082 per employee. The total maximum employer costs amount to EUR13,182 per employee per year. The employee must pay an insurance premium for his or her health care of approximately EUR1,705.

The following table presents the contribution rates for 2021 for employees under the National Insurance Acts.

	Percentage %	Maximum income for National Insurance premiums EUR	Maximum contribution EUR
General old age pension (AOW)	17.90	35,129	6,228
Survivor benefits (ANW)	0.10	35,129	35
Special health care (WLZ)	9.65	35,129	3,309
Minus credits (general and employment credit)			—*
Total contribution due from the employee only	27.65		9,713

* The social security part of the amounts of these credits differ depending on the age and/or income of the individual. The maximum amount of the general credit is approximately 75% of EUR2,837 and is reduced step by step from an income of EUR21,044 to EUR0. The maximum amount of the employment credit is approximately 75% of EUR3,837 and is reduced step by step from an income of EUR35,653, resulting in an employment credit of EUR0 for employment income exceeding EUR105,737.

The following tables present the contribution rates for 2021 for employers under the Employee Insurance Acts.

Disability	Percentage %	Maximum income liable for contribution EUR	Maximum contribution EUR
Basic employer's contribution (disability; WAO/WIA)	7.03	58,311	4,099
Employer's childcare contribution	0.50	58,311	292
Differentiated return to Work Fund (consists of two components)	1.36	58,311	793
Total due from the employer only	8.89	—	5,184

Unemployment (WW)	Percentage %	Maximum income liable for contribution EUR	Maximum contribution EUR
Employer's contribution, low*	2.7	58,311	1,574
Employer's contribution, high*	7.7	58,311	4,490

* As of 1 January 2020, the employer's contribution for unemployment depends on the nature of the employment contract with a lower contribution for written, signed and dated contracts entered into for an indefinite period, and a higher contribution for all other contracts, such as on-call contracts and minimum/ maximum hour contracts. The difference between the contributions has been set at a fixed 5%. As of 1 August 2021, the unemployment contributions are lowered in order to reduce the employer's costs. As of 1 August 2021, the low contribution is 0.34% and the high contribution is 5.34%, so the difference remains 5%. The maximum income liable for contributions does not change during the calendar year and remains EUR58,311.

An employer must pay 70% of an employee's salary for a two-year period if the employee cannot perform his or her duties because of illness. For this purpose, the maximum salary considered is EUR58,311 per year. To cover its obligations under the act, an employer may obtain private insurance or establish a reserve.

Health Insurance. Every individual who is socially insured in the Netherlands must take out an individual Health Insurance policy. Every individual aged 18 and older pays a standard contribution averaging EUR1,705 per year for Health Insurance. Insurance claims up to EUR385 per year are for the individual's own risk. Any insurance claims in excess of EUR385 are paid by the health insurer, unless the individual has chosen a higher personal risk (in return for lower contributions). In addition to the standard contribution, an income-related contribution is payable at a rate of 7.0% (for self-employed persons, a 5.75% rate applies), capped at an income of EUR58,311. The 7.0% income-related contribution for employees is fully paid by their employers. This employers' contribution is not considered taxable income to the employee. Resident individuals who are not socially insured in the Netherlands must register with a care insurer in the Netherlands to retain their right to medical care in the Netherlands. The following table presents the contribution rates for Health Insurance.

	Percentage %	Maximum income liable for contribution EUR	Maximum contribution EUR
Employer's contribution	7.0	58,311	4,082
Employee's standard contribution*	—	—	1,705
Total	7.0	—	5,787

* The standard contribution for the employee can differ between the various health insurance companies.

The following table presents a summary of the maximum 2021 social security contributions.

	Employer's contribution EUR	Employee's contribution EUR	Maximum contribution EUR
National insurance schemes	0	9,713	9,713
Minus general credit and employment credit		— (a)	— (a)
Health care	4,082	1,705	5,787

	Employer's contribution EUR	Employee's contribution EUR	Maximum contribution EUR
Employee insurance schemes
Disability	5,184	0	5,184
Unemployment, low (b)	1,001	0	1,001

Total
Unemployment, low	10,267	11,418	21,685
Unemployment, high	13,183	11,418	24,601

(a) The social security part of the amounts of these credits differs depending on the age and/or income of the individual. The maximum amount of the general credit is approximately 75% of EUR2,837 and is reduced step by step from an income of EUR21,044 to EUR0. The maximum amount of the employment credit is approximately 75% of EUR4,205 and is reduced step by step from an income of EUR35,653, resulting in an employment credit of EUR0 for employment income exceeding EUR105,737.

(b) These are the combined contributions for the periods of 1 January 2021 to 31 July 2021 and 1 August 2021 to 31 December 2021.

Additional contributions for health care and coverage of risk of paying salary during the first two years of sickness are not covered in the above overview.

Totalization agreements. Nonresidents earning income from Dutch employment are, in principle, subject to Dutch National Insurance, Employee Insurance and Health Insurance contributions. As a result, they may be subject to social security taxes both in their home country and in the Netherlands.

To provide relief from double social security contributions and to assure that an employee is socially insured, the Netherlands has entered into agreements with several countries. As an EU member state, the Netherlands applies EU Regulation 883/04, which entered into force on 1 May 2010 and replaced EU Regulation 1408/71. The Regulation applies to all EU member states and Iceland, Lichtenstein, Norway and Switzerland.

Because the United Kingdom has left the EU (Brexit) as of 31 January 2020, the United Kingdom and the EU entered into a Trade and Cooperation Agreement.

Individuals whose cross-border activities commenced prior to 1 January 2021 and are eligible for the grandfathering provisions of the Withdrawal Agreement will continue to be subject to the previous social security arrangements in place prior to 1 January 2021.

The position of individuals whose cross-border activities commenced on or after 1 January 2021 will fall under the Trade and Cooperation Agreement.

The Netherlands has also entered into social security agreements with the following non-EU jurisdictions.

Australia	Chile	Korea (South)
Bosnia and Herzegovina	China Mainland	Kosovo
Canada (including Quebec)	Egypt	Montenegro
	India	Morocco
	Isle of Man	New Zealand

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in the Netherlands is the calendar year. Income tax returns relating to a calendar year must be filed before 1 May of the following year, unless an extension is obtained. If the income tax return is filed before 1 April of the following year, the Dutch tax authorities respond before 1 July of that year.

Employers withhold tax and National Insurance premiums (combined) on wages from employees under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system. For many people, the wage tax is not only an advance payment of income tax and National Insurance premiums, but it is also the final payment. Any additional income tax and National Insurance premiums due must normally be paid within two months after receipt of an assessment rather than when filing the tax return.

Married persons are taxed separately on employment and business income. Two "partners" (see definition of "partner" below) may elect for the following categories of income and deductions to be attributed to a particular partner:

- Income from home ownership. If this income is negative because of the deduction of mortgage interest, it is advisable to attribute this income to the partner with the highest income.
- Profits from a substantial shareholding.
- Personal deductions.

Nonresidents may not make this election unless they are taxed as Dutch tax residents. Foreign taxpayers who are resident in Bonaire, St. Eustatius and Saba (BES-Islands), the EU, the EEA or Switzerland are taxed as Dutch tax residents, provided that 90% or more of their income is subject to payroll or income tax in the Netherlands. For this purpose, an income declaration from the resident state needs to be obtained to measure the 90% criterion. If this income criterion is not met, treatment as a resident taxpayer is only possible for this group if the Netherlands is required to do so under European law or a relevant tax treaty. If the 90% income criterion is not met, nonresident taxpayers may claim under certain conditions a pro rata deduction of tax-deductible expenses.

The Income Tax Law includes the term "partner." A "partner" is understood to mean the spouse or registered partner of a taxpayer, provided he or she is not permanently separated. Unmarried adults who live together and are registered at the same address with the municipal authorities are treated as partners for tax purposes if one of the following circumstances exists:

- A child was born from their relationship.
- A child of one of the individuals was officially acknowledged by the other individual.
- The individuals are stated as partners in a pension plan.
- The individuals own a primary residence together.

- The individuals have reached the age of majority and an underage child of one of them is registered at the same address.
- The individuals were considered to be partners in the previous calendar year.

Partner status for tax purposes provides the following advantages:

- Eligibility for several business-related facilities (working partners' deduction and transfer of a business or a part thereof without tax consequences).
- The option of allocating to both partners at their discretion the yield assessment base for capital yield tax (Box 3), except for the year of immigration or emigration, and the joint elements of income. Joint elements of income include taxable income from home ownership, taxable income from a substantial business interest, exceptional expenses, and deductible gifts and donations.
- An increase in the personal tax credit for a partner without income or with low income to the aggregate of the general credit, employment credit, and (supplementary) combination credit applying to this partner. As an exception to the general rule, in this case, the tax credit is refundable in part or in full. However, the payment may not exceed tax and National Insurance contributions payable by the other partner.

A nonresident taxpayer may not be a partner, unless he or she elects to be taxed as a resident of the Netherlands.

Inheritance tax returns normally must be filed within eight months after the date of death. Gift tax returns should be filed within two months after the date of donation.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

The Decree for the Avoidance of Double Taxation provides proportional relief from Dutch income tax on foreign-source Box 1 income taxed in the country of source and applies for resident taxpayers in the absence of an applicable tax treaty.

Most double tax treaties concluded by the Netherlands provide for double taxation relief, regardless of whether the income is effectively subject to income tax abroad. The relief is usually calculated in accordance with the following simplified formula.

This relief, known as the tax exemption method with progression clause, must be calculated separately for each box of income. Relief for tax on director's fees may sometimes be calculated according to the less favorable credit method.

It has been announced that the credit method will be mandatory in all cases, most likely as of 1 January 2022.

The Netherlands has entered into double tax treaties with various jurisdictions. The existence of the treaties may affect an application of the national tax law. To determine Dutch individual income tax, residents of the treaty jurisdictions need to refer to the related tax treaty in addition to the general tax provisions. The Netherlands has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Albania	Greece	Panama
Algeria (a)	Hong Kong	Philippines
Argentina	Hungary	Poland
Armenia	Iceland	Portugal
Aruba	India	Qatar
Australia	Indonesia	Romania

	Pakistan

(a) The treaty has been signed but it is not yet in force.
(b) A new tax treaty has been signed and will enter into force on 1 January 2022.
(c) This treaty is withdrawn as of 2022.

F. Visas

Nationals of many foreign countries may not enter the Netherlands unless they have valid passports and visas. Visas may be obtained from the Dutch embassy or consulate abroad.

Individuals coming to the Netherlands for a short term may stay for a maximum period of 90 days in any 180-day period if they have valid passports or other travel documents, as well as visas if required, and if they can prove that they have sufficient financial means to stay in, and to leave, the Netherlands. If these conditions are met, a residence permit (see Section G) is not required.

G. Residence permits

Foreign nationals wishing to stay in the Netherlands for a period of more than 90 days may obtain a residence permit under any of the following circumstances:

- International agreements require the permitting of entry, for example, to nationals of EU countries and to nationals of countries participating in the EEA (the EEA countries are Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway) and nationals of Switzerland.
- The presence of the foreign national is in the national interest.
- Permission is granted on humanitarian grounds.

Before the arrival of a foreign national wishing to stay in the Netherlands for a period of more than 90 days, an Admission and Residence (Toegang-en Verblijf, or TEV) application must be submitted. A fee must be paid for the processing of the application.

A legalized marriage certificate for the spouse and legalized birth certificates for the children are needed with respect to the TEV application for dependents. The legalization procedure depends on the country where the event took place. This procedure can be time-consuming, and applicants should check the requirements at an early stage.

After approval of the TEV application, most nationals must visit the Dutch embassy or consulate in the country of origin or the country of permanent residence to obtain an entry visa (D-visa or MVV).

Nationals of the following jurisdictions do not need to obtain an entry visa from a Dutch embassy or consulate abroad before traveling to the Netherlands for a period exceeding 90 days.

EU member countries	Japan	Vatican City
EEA countries	Korea (South)	United Kingdom
Australia	Monaco	United States
Canada	New Zealand
	Switzerland

After arriving in the Netherlands, a foreign national must visit the Immigration and Naturalization Service (Immigratie- en Naturalisatiedienst, or IND) to collect the residence permit in the Netherlands.

Foreign nationals who want to live in the Netherlands must satisfy all of the following conditions before they are issued residence permits:

- They must have sufficient means of financial support.
- They must not represent a threat to public order or national security.
- They must have already found work for which a work permit has been, or will be, issued. However, employers of European (EU, EEA and Switzerland) employees are not required to obtain work permits.

EU, EEA and Swiss nationals do not need residence permits to stay lawfully in the Netherlands.

If a foreign national has held a residence permit for five consecutive years, he or she may apply for a permanent residence permit. For permanent residence permit applications, integration courses must be completed.

Brexit and residence permits. As of 31 January 2020, the United Kingdom has left the EU. Under the withdrawal agreement, there was a transition period until 1 January 2021. British citizens retained their existing rights during this transition period. During the transition period, British citizens who were registered in the Dutch BRP-registry (in Dutch: Basisregistratie Personen) were invited to apply for a residence permit. After the transition period, a British citizen needs a residence permit and a work permit to continue to work and live in the Netherlands.

Under the EU-UK Trade and Cooperation Agreement (TCA), it is possible for British citizens to travel to the Netherlands for short-term purposes without a visa. Based on the TCA, a work permit exemption can be applicable for short-term travel purposes.

H. Work permits and self-employment

In principle, all non-European nationals (nationals from countries other than EU countries, EEA countries and Switzerland) who wish to be employed in the Netherlands need Dutch work permits. The existing law in the Netherlands seeks to limit the possibilities of Dutch employers' hiring non-European personnel.

Employers who want to hire foreign nationals must obtain work permits from the UWV WERKbedrijf (public employment service) before the start of the employment. If a work permit has not been obtained, the employer is subject to a fine of EUR8,000 per illegal foreign national.

Grounds for refusal. A work permit is not granted if one of the following compulsory grounds for refusal is met:
- A suitable unemployed person with greater priority is located. Top priority is given to qualified unemployed Dutch people and to qualified unemployed individuals in European countries.
- The vacancy has not been registered with the UWV WERKbedrijf for at least five weeks before the work permit request.
- The employer does not make enough of an effort to find labor within the European labor market.
- A residence permit has not been requested or was not granted.
- The conditions of employment are substandard compared to those of other employees in the same position, and consequently, no one from the European labor market is available to work under such conditions.
- The employer does not pay at least the minimum monthly wage for an adult.
- A foreign national performing the labor is not in the best interest of the Netherlands.
- A quota applies for the number of work permits to be granted for the activities performed, and this quota has been reached for the specific period.

Certain exceptions to the above compulsory grounds can be made for specific situations, such as the transfer of an employee within an international group of companies (see Intra Corporate Transferees), highly skilled migrants (see Highly skilled migrants) who will bring their specific expertise to the Netherlands and cross-border workers with a valid residence permit from another EU country.

The work permit application may also be denied on other grounds in addition to the compulsory refusal grounds. These additional refusal grounds include, but are not limited to, the following:

- It is expected that in the foreseeable future suitable unemployed persons with greater priority will be available.
- The foreign national is younger than 18 years of age.
- No suitable accommodation is available for the employee.

Work permits are not required in certain specific situations, including, but not limited to, the following:

- The foreign national (and his or her partner) has a residence permit for a highly skilled migrant (see Highly skilled migrants).
- The foreign national has a residence permit for an intra-corporate transfer. See Intra Corporate Transferees.
- The employee has his or her permanent residence outside the Netherlands and the employee works only occasionally (for a maximum period of 12 consecutive weeks in 36 weeks) in the Netherlands. The employee's employment in the Netherlands must involve installing or repairing machinery delivered by an employer located outside the Netherlands, and installing and amending software, including providing or operating the machinery and software.
- The employee works for no longer than 13 weeks in a period of 52 weeks in the Netherlands for the purpose of attending business meetings or entering into agreements.

Period of validity. After the conditions for the issuance of a work permit are met, the permit may be issued for different time periods. If a work permit is granted after a labor market test, a work permit is issued for one year only. To receive another work permit, a labor market test should be redone near the end of that year. A work permit based on a transfer within an international group of companies can be granted for maximum of three years. After a five-year period, an employee may qualify for an endorsement on his or her residence permit, stating that he or she is allowed to perform labor and is no longer required to have a work permit.

Population Registrar. Each individual who stays in the Netherlands for more than four months in a six-month period must report his or her home address in the Netherlands to the Population Registrar in the town where he or she is residing. An original and translated legalized birth certificate, an original legalized and translated marriage certificate (if applicable) and a rental contract for accommodation are required.

If an individual stays in the Netherlands for less than four months in a six-month period, registration is done at the office for short-term registration (RNI office).

Self-employment. A self-employed person does not need a work permit. However, if a self-employed foreign national applies for a residence permit, the IND asks the Ministry of Economic Affairs whether the self-employed person is allowed to work in the Netherlands.

Highly skilled migrants. To attract highly skilled foreign employees to the Netherlands, a special procedure exists for so-called highly skilled migrants. Employers must be accredited sponsors to use the highly skilled migrant procedure. Accredited sponsors must fulfill certain obligations throughout the period in which the employee is in the Netherlands, and maintain full administration regarding the employee for the five years after the end of employment of the individual. Employers can apply to the IND for the status of accredited sponsor. The application fee is EUR4,125 (2021 amount). For companies with less than 50 employees, the fee is EUR2,062 (2021 amount). The status of accredited sponsor is granted for an unlimited time period.

An employer is not required to apply for a work permit on behalf of the highly skilled migrants. The employer needs only to apply to the IND for a residence permit on behalf of the employee. For 2022, an employee must earn a gross monthly salary of EUR4,840 (excluding 8% holiday allowance) or more to qualify for a residence permit as a highly skilled migrant. Employees under 30 years of age must earn a gross monthly salary of EUR3,549 (excluding 8% holiday allowance) or more to apply. The salary levels are adjusted annually.

A special salary requirement applies to highly skilled migrants after an orientation year for highly educated persons (see Orientation year for highly educated persons). A monthly gross salary of at least EUR2,543 (excluding 8% holiday allowance) applies for these highly skilled migrants.

Salary payments must be made through bank transfers to a bank account in the name of the employee on a monthly basis.

The IND commits itself to grant the residence permit (TEV approval, if applicable) within two weeks. The residence permit is granted for a maximum period of five years under the restriction "highly skilled migrant" and can be renewed.

Football players, spiritual leaders, clerics and individuals performing activities in a sexually related business are excluded from the highly skilled migrant category.

If the individual falls within the scope of the Intra Corporate Transferees (ICT) directive, the ICT permit has priority over the highly skilled migrant permit. See Intra Corporate Transferees.

Orientation year for highly educated persons. Students who obtained a bachelor's or master's degree in the Netherlands or who have graduated from a top university abroad can apply for a Residence Permit Orientation Year for Highly Educated Persons. In addition, scientific researchers may apply for this residence permit.

This type of residence permit can be obtained within three years after completing the studies or after obtaining the PhD. This residence permit is valid for a maximum of one year. The student may work during this year without a separate work permit.

Intra Corporate Transferees. The ICT permit is implemented as of 29 November 2016 and is intended to improve the process by which third-country foreign nationals working for related companies abroad come into the EU to work, and to facilitate the mobility of such transferees within the EU.

An individual falls within the scope of the ICT directive if the following conditions are met:
- The individual does not have the nationality of an EU member state.

- The individual has his or her main residence outside the EU at the moment of application.
- The individual will serve in the position of manager, specialist or trainee.

The following criteria apply to obtain an ICT permit:
- The individual is coming to the Netherlands to work for a related company with operations in the Netherlands.
- The individual must keep his employment contract with the entity outside the EU.
- The individual must have been employed by the group of companies for at least three months prior to the assignment.
- The remuneration must be in accordance with Dutch market levels.

Within the framework of intra-EU mobility, subject to certain conditions, the individual can also be transferred to a branch of this company within another EU member state that has implemented the directive (Denmark, Ireland and the United Kingdom do not participate).

The ICT permit application can be denied on the following grounds:
- The employer or branch in the Netherlands must not have been fined, during the five years immediately before the application, in connection with a violation of Article 2 of the Aliens Employment Act or due to nonpayment or insufficient payment of wage tax, premiums for employee insurance schemes or national insurance premiums.
- There is no existing economic activity between the entity outside the EU and the Dutch entity.
- The employee was resident in the Netherlands immediately before the application based on an ICT permit.

EU Blue Card. The EU Blue Card is intended for employees who perform highly qualified labor within the EU. The EU Blue Card is issued by a certain member state and only gives the right to stay and work in this specific member state. To qualify for the EU Blue Card in the Netherlands, employees must satisfy the monthly gross salary requirement of EUR5,670 (excluding 8% holiday allowance; 2022 amount) or more and must have a diploma showing that the employee has completed a higher education degree program with a duration of at least three years. A foreign higher education diploma must be evaluated. The employee must have an employment contract for a highly qualified position for at least one year.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Dutch law provides for the unification of families. For individuals who plan to bring their spouses and children under 18 years of age to the Netherlands, proof of sufficient means of subsistence and acceptable accommodation is necessary. Depending on the type of permit for the main application, the partner's requirements to work in the Netherlands need to be verified. The partner of a highly skilled migrant or ICT may work in the Netherlands without a work permit. As a result, the partner of a highly skilled migrant or ICT is only required to hold a residence permit.

Marital property regime. As of 1 January 2018, the default marital property regime in the Netherlands is the limited community property regime. On entering into the marriage, only the property that the spouses build up during the marriage falls within the community of goods. All of the property that the spouses had before entering into the marriage, as well as inheritances and gifts, fall outside the community of property. Only property that is acquired through the effort of both spouses during the marriage is therefore shared. In the event of a divorce, the property that is divided is only the property that had been jointly acquired by the spouses during the marriage. Each spouse retains in divorce the property that he or she had before the marriage.

Marriages before 2018 remain under the former marital property regime of community property. The limited property law applies to heterosexual and homosexual married couples. Other couples who are not married may form a "registered partnership," but the consequences are less extensive than for married couples (for example, with respect to heirship). If the marital property regime of expatriates working in the Netherlands becomes relevant, the tax authorities respect the regime or the arrangements in the country where they were married.

In addition to potential gift and inheritance tax consequences, the limited community property law may also affect an individual's personal income tax liability. This is generally the case only for nonresidents who have Dutch-source income taxable in the Netherlands, for example, income from Dutch real estate. If married, this income is allocated between the spouses based on the applicable marital property regime. Under community property, the allocation is 50% to each spouse. If a loss is incurred, it may be carried back or carried forward. If one spouse has no positive income to offset the loss, the carryover does not result in a tax benefit. For tax residents, no personal income tax consequences result from the marital property regime.

Forced heirship rules. Parents may disinherit their children. However, a child may always claim his or her legal portion of the estate.

Driver's permits. In certain cases, a driver's license obtained outside the Netherlands can be exchanged for a Dutch driver's license. However, this is only possible if all of the following conditions are satisfied:

- The individual is a Dutch resident.
- His or her foreign driver's license is still valid.
- He or she has a valid Dutch residence status or permit.

For driver's licenses issued outside the EU, the following two additional requirements must be fulfilled before an exchange is possible:

- The driver's license must have been issued in a year in which the individual was resident in the issuing country for at least 185 days.
- The individual must meet the age limit set by Dutch law regarding the different categories.

To prove that the individual resided for at least 185 days in the issuing country, he or she may provide evidence such as airplane tickets, a copy of the passport, or an employment statement containing salary and tax documents.

Within the EU it is possible to exchange an expired European driver's license. However, for this exception, the individual must obtain a declaration from the issuing authority in which the authority declares that it has no objection to the exchange of the expired driver's license for a Dutch driver's license.

Valid driver's licenses issued in the following jurisdictions can be exchanged.

Alberta (province of Canada) (a)	Greece	Poland
Andorra	Hungary	Portugal (Azores and Madeira)
Aruba	Iceland	Québec (province of Canada) (a)
Austria	Ireland	Romania
Belgium	Isle of Man	Singapore
BES-Islands	Israel (a)	Sint Maarten
Bulgaria	Italy	Slovak Republic
Croatia	Japan (a)	Slovenia
Curaçao	Jersey	Spain (Canary Islands)
Cyprus (b)	Korea (South) (a)	Sweden
Czech Republic	Latvia	Switzerland
Denmark	Liechtenstein	Taiwan (a)
Estonia	Lithuania	United Kingdom
Finland	Luxembourg
France	Malta
Germany	Monaco
	Norway

(a) For these jurisdictions, a valid foreign driver's license can be exchanged only for a Dutch driver's license if the foreign driver's license is valid in a specific category.
(b) It is only possible for the Greek part, not the Turkish part.

It is not possible to exchange an international or European driver's license for a Dutch driver's license. Only the original driver's license issued by the proper authorities from the country of issue can be exchanged. Every driver's license is checked for validity and authenticity. This means that the person may have to prove its soundness by asking the embassy or the consulate of the country where the license was issued for a confirmation for the Dutch authorities. The person may also be requested to have his or her driver's license translated by an attested translator.

Exam to retake the driving test. If the abovementioned conditions are not met or if the 30% tax facility does not apply (see Special rule for driver's license procedure in case of the 30% facility), the individual must take the regular theory and practical test. The exam is administered by the Central Office for Motor Vehicle Driver Testing (in Dutch: Centraal Bureau Rijvaardigheidsbewijzen, or CBR).

Special rule for driver's license procedure in case of the 30% facility. An individual who benefits from the 30% facility and his or her family members can directly apply for a Dutch license at the local Dutch municipal office without taking a driving test. To exchange the foreign driver's license for a Dutch driver's license, the individual must go to the local Dutch municipal office. He or she must at the moment of application pay a fee (the amount varies) and submit the following:

- The completed and signed request form (3 E 0397). A "User manual Application for the exchange of a foreign driving licence for a Dutch driving licence" can be found on the governmental website (www.rdw.nl).
- A copy of the statement issued by the International Tax Office in Heerlen proving that the individuals or another member of his or her family is entitled to benefit from the 30% facility.
- The individual's original, valid foreign driver's license, issued in a country where he or she has been a resident for longer than a period of 185 days (the individual must hand in the license).
- An extract from the municipal register, proving that the individual is registered and stating his or her address in the Netherlands.
- A Certificate of Capability, which is a questionnaire available at the local government office. To obtain a Dutch driver's license, the individual must fill out a personal declaration, which is required by the CBR. A medical team reviews this declaration and decides whether the individual gets the driver's license.
- One passport photograph in a color that meets the demands of the Fotomatrix Model 2020. An overview of these criteria can be obtained from the governmental website (www.rijksoverheid.nl).
- Under certain circumstances, a translation of the individual's driver's license by an attested translator (for example, if written in Chinese characters or in Cyrillic writing). This is needed when the text on the foreign license consists of characters that are not used in the Netherlands.

The individual must hand in his or her foreign driver's license at the moment of application and is not allowed to drive until the Dutch permit is issued. The foreign license will be returned by the municipality to the country of issuance.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individual income taxation is based on residence. Taxpayers are categorized as residents or nonresidents. Treaty rules on tax residence override domestic rules.

Residents. Persons are considered residents for tax purposes if their home, principal place of abode, professional activity or center of economic interest is located in New Caledonia. A resident individual is taxed on his or her worldwide income, subject to applicable treaty exemptions. New Caledonia has entered into a double tax treaty with France. It has also entered into a double tax treaty with Canada to a certain extent, because New Caledonia is included with France for the purpose of the tax treaty between France and Canada.

Nonresidents. Persons not considered resident are taxed on New Caledonian-source income only.

Taxable income

Employment and self-employment income. Taxable income includes employment income and self-employment and business income, and all other payments for remuneration, reimbursements for expenses and allowances. Employment income also includes director's remuneration to the extent that it is deductible for corporate income tax purposes.

Taxable income or profit is total assessable income in cash or in kind, less expenses incurred in acquiring or deriving the income.

Income in New Caledonia is taxed on an annual cash basis.

Taxable income is subject to the progressive tax rates that apply to resident individuals (see Rates), plus an additional contribution (Contribution Calédonienne de Solidarité, or CCS) at a rate of 1%.

Individuals carrying on a business or a self-employment activity in New Caledonia are also subject to a business tax (Patente), which is imposed at various rates.

Capital gains are generally exempt from tax for individuals unless they derive from the sale of a business.

Investment income. Dividends distributed by companies established in New Caledonia are subject to a global withholding tax of 18%. This consists of the Tax on Income Derived from Securities (Impôt sur le Revenu des Valeurs Mobilières, or IRVM) at a rate of 11.5% plus a 2% CCS plus an additional contribution and duties at rates of 2% and 2.5%.

No additional income tax is due.

Interest income is generally subject to the following taxes:
- Withholding Tax on Receivables, Deposits and Guarantees (Impôt sur le Revenu des Créances, Dépôts et Cautionnements, or IRCDC) at 8%
- CCS at 2%

After payment of IRCDC, interest income received from deposits with local banks and from shareholders' loans in local companies, at up to an official published rate, is exempt from income tax but is subject to 2% CCS.

Directors' fees. Under New Caledonian law, directors' fees are treated as dividends.

Rental income. Net income derived from the rental of real estate is taxed as ordinary income.

Benefits in kind. Benefits in kind are not taxable except for benefits deriving from the use of a house or a car belonging to or rented by the employer company. These benefits are normally assessed at their actual value.

This valuation may not be challenged if it is equal to or more than the following:
- Housing benefit: 12% of the gross salary. However, this rule does not apply to Chief Executive Officers.
- Car benefit: XPF6,000 per month for each unit of horsepower of the vehicle.

Reimbursements of expenses incurred by an employee on behalf of the employer are not regarded as taxable benefits in kind.

Exempt income. Relief from income tax is available for foreign-source income that has already been subject to foreign income tax. In such case, the individual is entitled to relief from New Caledonian tax on that foreign income to the extent that foreign income tax has already been imposed. If an individual can prove that foreign income has already suffered foreign income tax, the income is excluded from the tax base for purposes of the individual income tax.

The following are other types of exempt income:
- Profits from the sale of shares and real estate
- Allowances paid to cover necessary employment expenses
- Family allowances and health care reimbursements

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from the disposal of shareholdings and real estate by individuals are not subject to tax in New Caledonia unless the gains are derived by a business.

Deductions and credits

Deductible expenses. Expenses incurred in earning or realizing income are generally deductible from such income, and credits may also be available. The following deductions and credits are specifically allowed:

- Taxpayers may either deduct 10% of net taxable employment income, limited to XPF800,000 as an allowance for unreimbursed business expenses, without providing proof of expenditure, or they may elect to deduct actual expenses and provide a detailed listing.
- Taxpayers may deduct 20% of their net salary (reduced by the 10% business deduction), subject to a maximum deduction of XFP1,800,000.
- Tax deductions are granted for loan interest under certain conditions.
- Tax deductions are granted for childcare expenses and for domestic employees' expenses.
- Tax credits are granted, within certain limits, for charitable donations to recognized charitable institutions.
- Amounts paid for alimony and child support and for limited dependent parent support are deductible under certain conditions.
- Tax incentives and tax credits are granted for certain investments.

Numerous other allowances and deductions may also be available.

Personal deductions and allowances. The family coefficient rules discussed in Rates are used in calculating tax at progressive rates and take into account the size and taxpaying capacity of the household.

Business deductions. In general, deductible expenses for commercial, professional and agricultural activities are similar. They include the following items:
- The cost of materials and stock
- General expenses of a business nature, including personnel expenses, certain taxes, rental and leasing expenses, finance charges and self-employed individuals' social security taxes
- Depreciation expenses

Rates. New Caledonian individual income tax is levied at progressive rates, with a maximum rate of 40%. Family coefficient rules are used to combine the progressive tax rate with the taxpaying capacity of the household. New Caledonia has a regime of joint taxation for married couples and individuals who have contracted a civil union (Pacte Civil de Solidarité, or PACS).

Income tax is assessed on the combined income of the members of the household including dependents. No option to file separately is available.

Family coefficient system. Under the family coefficient system, the income brackets to which the tax rates apply are determined by dividing taxable income by the number of allowances available to an individual. The final tax liability is then calculated by multiplying the tax computed for one allowance by the number of allowances claimed. Available allowances are shown in the following table.

Family composition	Allowances
Single individual	1
Married couple
No children	2
One child	2.5
Two children	3
One child pursuing his or her studies outside New Caledonia (under certain conditions)	1

Limits are imposed on the tax savings resulting from the application of the family coefficient system.

The table below provides the income tax brackets and rates for individuals.

Annual taxable income		Tax
Exceeding XPF	Not exceeding XPF	rate %
1,000,000	1,800,000	4
1,800,000	3,000,000	12
3,000,000	4,500,000	25
4,500,000	—	40

Nonresidents. Wages of nonresident employees who are seconded to New Caledonia by a company established outside New Caledonia are subject to a withholding tax on New Caledonian-source remuneration, after the deduction of statutory employee social security contributions and the 10% and 20% standard deductions (see Deductible expenses).

New Caledonian-source income of nonresident individuals are determined by reference to the rules applicable to revenues of the same nature that are received by resident individuals. However, a XPF1 million tax rebate is applicable to the net amount of pensions.

The following types of income, among others, are considered to be New Caledonia-source income:
- Real estate income derived from real estate in New Caledonia
- New Caledonian-source investment income
- Income derived from professional activities carried on in New Caledonia

A nonresident's tax liability may not be less than 25% of net taxable income. However, if a nonresident can prove that the effective rate of tax computed on his or her worldwide income, according to New Caledonian tax rules, is less than 25%, the progressive income tax rates may apply on request.

Effective rate rule (exemption with progression). If an individual has income exempt from tax under treaty provisions (that is, under the New Caledonia-France/Canada treaty [see Who is liable]), the effective rate rule generally applies. Under this rule, the taxpayer's income tax liability is calculated based on worldwide income using the progressive rates and other New Caledonian tax rules. Total income tax is then divided by worldwide income to yield the effective percentage rate, which is then applied to income taxable in New Caledonia to determine total tax payable in New Caledonia.

Relief for losses. Taxable income is determined for each category of revenue. Expenses incurred in producing income are deductible from the income produced. In general, losses from a category of income may offset profits from the same category and may be carried forward for the following five years.

B. Other taxes

Inheritance and gift taxes. If a decedent or donor was resident in New Caledonia, inheritance tax is payable on gifts and inheritances of worldwide net assets. For nonresident decedents or donors, only gifts and inheritances of New Caledonian assets are taxable.

The following are the inheritance and gift tax rates.

Bequeathed or gifted to	Up to XPF1 million	XPF1 million to XPF3 million	XPF3 million to XPF10 million	More than XPF10 million
Spouse or direct descendent or ascendant	5%	10%	15%	20%
Sibling	30%	30%	30%	30%
Relative up to fourth degree	40%	40%	40%	40%
Others	50%	50%	50%	50%

Many tax reductions and allowances are available, depending on the situations.

C. Social security

Contributions

Employees. The employee's part of social security contributions is withheld monthly by the employer from the gross salary increased by the fringe benefits and allowances. The employee's and employer's contributions are paid quarterly by the employer to the Family Allowance and Work-Related Accidents Office (Caisse des Allocations Familiales et des Accidents du Travail, or CAFAT). The employee contribution equals 9.64% of gross salary. The rate of the employer contribution is approximately 35%, depending on its activity. CCS (see Section A) at a rate of 1% is also payable. A compulsory additional retirement fund contribution also applies.

Self-employed. Self-employed individuals must make social security contributions for the Unified Sickness and Maternity Insurance Plan (Régime Unifié d'Assurance Maladie et Maternité, or RUAMM) at a rate of approximately 6% to 9% of the annual revenue. CCS (see Section A) at a rate of 1% is also payable.

Social security agreements. New Caledonia has entered into a social security agreement with France.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Filing. New Caledonian residents are required to file annual tax returns by 31 March following the end of the relevant tax year (calendar year). This deadline is normally extended for tax returns filled via the internet process.

Married couples and individuals who have entered into a PACS must file a joint return for all types of income.

Payment. New Caledonian income tax for resident taxpayers is payable in three installments with two installment payments equal to one-third of the previous year's tax liability payable on 31 March and 15 July and a balancing payment generally payable by October.

Nonresidents. The filing date for the annual nonresident tax return is generally by the end of June.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

If a double tax treaty does not apply, income that has been subject to a personal tax abroad is exempted from tax in New Caledonia. However, this income less the taxes imposed in the country of origin and for which the payment is the responsibility of the beneficiary must be declared in the New Caledonian tax return. The amount declared is taken into account in determining the effective rate, which applies only to New Caledonian income.

New Caledonia has signed one tax treaty with France.

New Caledonia has also entered into a double tax treaty with Canada to a certain extent, because New Caledonia is included with France for the purpose of the tax treaty between France and Canada.

F. Visas and work authorizations

Although attached to France, New Caledonia is an overseas collectivity with special provisions, in particular with respect to the conditions of entry and residence of foreigners.

Unless expressly exempted by a visa waiver (see below), foreigners wishing to travel to New Caledonia are subject to visa requirements.

Short-stay visas. Nationals of European Union (EU) or European Economic Area member states or Switzerland and holders of a long-duration residence permit issued by France are exempt from the requirement to obtain short-stay visas (duration up to three months). This rule also applies to states associated with the Schengen Area and a large number of other states.

Long-stay visas. Foreigners must hold a long-stay visa for long stays (three months or longer) in New Caledonia. The only exception is EU nationals.

Working in New Caledonia. For non-French citizens, it is necessary to obtain a work authorization in advance in order to work in New Caledonia. The employer must also make representations to various public services to ensure that the hiring of a foreign employee does not harm the local labor market.

If the authorization is granted by the government of New Caledonia, the worker may apply for a residence permit corresponding to his or her situation.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident individuals are subject to income tax on worldwide income. Nonresident individuals pay tax on New Zealand-source income only.

Individuals are considered resident in New Zealand for tax purposes if they meet either of the following conditions:

- They have a permanent place of abode in New Zealand, regardless of whether they also have a permanent place of abode outside New Zealand.
- They are physically present in New Zealand for more than 183 days in any consecutive 12-month period.

Transitional residents' exemption. Resident individuals arriving for the first time in New Zealand after 1 April 2006, or who have been absent for at least 10 years before returning to New Zealand and have never previously claimed the transitional residents' exemption, are considered to be transitional residents and are eligible for an exemption on certain income arising from sources outside New Zealand for the first 48 months of their residence. However, transitional residents can elect to waive the exemption.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Generally, the responsibility for determining the taxability of employment income paid to an employee rests with the employer. Employers are also generally responsible for reporting employment income on behalf of employees and for correctly withholding income taxes through the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) withholding tax system.

For employees without tax file numbers, employment income is subject to PAYE at a rate of 45%. Unless a tax file number is obtained and the employer's reporting is retrospectively amended to reflect the number, this rate is effectively a final liability for the employee.

Gross income includes all salaries, wages, bonuses, retirement payments and other compensation. Employer-paid items, including reimbursing payments, allowances such as hardship allowances, meal allowances and cost-of-living allowances, tuition for dependent children, per diems, and payments made on an employee's account is generally considered gross income as a starting point. The value of employer-provided or reimbursed accommodation is also generally included in an employee's gross income.

There are exemptions for particular employer payments and reimbursements, including for certain meals, accommodation, travel, relocations and other employment-related expenses in limited circumstances. For example, there is an exemption for employer-provided or reimbursed accommodation for up to three months after arrival as a result of a work-related relocation. Other specific exemptions include accommodation provided for out-of-town secondments or capital projects (subject to time limits), multiple-workplace situations, certain mobile or remote workplaces, and some shift worker accommodation.

The provision of benefits in kind to employees is generally subject to New Zealand's fringe benefit tax regime and does not form part of an employee's gross income. Benefits subject to the fringe benefit tax regime rather than the income tax regime include the availability of a motor vehicle for private use, employees' education expenses, medical insurance premiums, certain pension plan contributions, life insurance premiums, imputed interest on below-market rate loans, non-cash gifts or prizes, and other goods and services provided to employees.

Employers are subject to fringe benefit tax on pension or retirement savings contributions that are not otherwise subject to withholding taxes in New Zealand.

New Zealand has a work-based retirement savings initiative called KiwiSaver. Most New Zealand registered employers must make compulsory contributions to a KiwiSaver fund or a complying superannuation fund for all eligible employees who have elected to participate. To be eligible, employees must satisfy all of the following conditions:
- They must be New Zealand citizens or entitled to live permanently in New Zealand.
- They must normally live in New Zealand.
- They are under 65 years old.

Employers are subject to withholding tax on all KiwiSaver contributions.

Participating employees are also subject to minimum KiwiSaver contributions at either default or employee-elected rates, which are withheld from net (after-tax) pay.

Income from personal services (salary and wages) rendered by a nonresident in New Zealand is often not taxable if the nonresident is physically present in New Zealand for 92 days or less within a consecutive 12-month period, if the services are provided for or on behalf of a nonresident employer and if the income is taxable in the nonresident individual's country of tax residence. This period is often extended to 183 days by double tax treaties.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employed persons, including independent contractors, are subject to tax on profits derived from any business or income-earning activity, including the sale of goods, services and commissions. Although New Zealand's tax system does not have a dependent contractor regime, withholding taxes apply to many forms of payments made to individuals in business.

Self-employed persons and other individuals carrying on business activities may be subject to New Zealand's Goods and Services Tax regime.

A partnership must submit an income tax return setting forth the amount of profit or loss shared among the partners, but income tax is not assessed on the partnership. Each partner must file a separate tax return for all income, including his or her share of partnership income. The rules applying to limited partnerships are similar to those applying to general partnerships, but specific provisions may restrict limited partners' ability to claim deductions in any given year for their shares of the partnership's expenditure and losses to their "partner's basis" amounts.

Owners of certain closely held New Zealand resident companies may elect that those companies be treated as look-through companies (LTCs). The income tax treatment of LTCs is generally similar to that for partnerships, with LTC income attributed to owners in proportion to their ownership interests and taxed at their personal tax rates. Until 31 March 2017, the owners' ability to claim deductions for their shares of LTC expenditure and losses in any given year was limited by reference to their "owner's basis" amounts. From 1 April 2017, this "owner's basis" limitation no longer applies for most LTC owners, unless the LTC is in a partnership or joint venture.

Nonresident entertainers are generally subject to withholding tax at a rate of 20%. This tax may be treated as a final tax. Nonresident contractors are generally subject to withholding tax at a rate of 15% for income from contract services. This tax is neither a minimum nor a final tax and is paid on account of any annual income tax liability.

Payers may not be required to withhold tax if either of the following circumstances exists:
- The contractor is eligible for total relief from tax under a double tax treaty and he or she is physically present in New Zealand for 92 days or less in any 12-month period.
- The total amount of contract payments made for the contract activities is NZD15,000 or less in any 12-month period.

Directors' fees. Directors who are not also ordinary employees of a company are generally taxed as self-employed persons. Directors' fees paid by New Zealand companies to nonresident individual directors are generally taxable in New Zealand. No special provisions apply other than a requirement for the payer to deduct withholding tax, generally at a rate of 33%.

Attributed income from personal services. Personal services income earned through an interposed entity, including a company or trust, may be attributed to the individuals performing the services and taxed at their personal tax rates. This attribution may occur if the individual and interposed entity are associated persons and the services are supplied to a single or limited number of clients. Attribution will not apply if both the individual and interposed entity are nonresidents.

Investment income. Dividends received from a New Zealand resident company may have imputation credits attached. The imputation credits represent tax paid by the company on the underlying profit from which the dividends are paid that is passed on to the shareholder. A resident shareholder is assessed on the combined amount of the dividend plus the imputation credits, and receives a tax credit for the amount of the imputation credits. Nonresidents are only assessed on the dividend amount and potentially a supplementary dividend amount and do not receive a tax credit for the amount of the imputation credits.

Income earned on investments in certain unlisted portfolio investment entities (PIEs) may be allocated and taxed at the fund level at individual investor rates, with a maximum rate of 28% and no further tax on distribution. Listed PIE distributions may also be excluded from gross income.

Dividends (other than PIE distributions) and interest paid by New Zealand resident companies to New Zealand resident individuals are generally subject to an interim tax through a resident withholding tax (RWT) deduction.

The RWT rate on dividends is 33%, reduced by any imputation credits attached to the dividends.

Certain types of interest are exempt from RWT, including interest payable on trade debts or interest received under a hire-purchase agreement. Other items that are exempt are payments made to entities or persons holding valid certificates of exemption. These may include banks, building societies, moneylenders, and local or public authorities, and persons whose total gross income is expected to exceed NZD2 million in the next accounting year.

The rates of RWT on interest are elective rates of 10.5%, 17.5%, 30%, 33% or 39% if the interest recipients supply their tax identification numbers. The RWT rate on interest paid to companies is generally 28% if the recipients supply their tax identification numbers. The default RWT rate if interest recipients do not supply their tax identification numbers is 45% for all recipients. The recipients include the gross interest and dividends in their gross income and receive a credit for RWT.

Nonresidents are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 30% on dividends. This rate is reduced to 15% to the extent that cash dividends are fully imputed or to the extent that imputation credits are passed on through the payment of supplementary dividends under the foreign investor tax credit regime. The rate is reduced to 0% to the extent that noncash dividends are fully imputed.

A 0% rate also applies to fully imputed cash dividends paid to nonresidents if the nonresidents have a direct voting interest of at least 10% in the paying entity or if a tax treaty would reduce the New Zealand tax rate below 15%.

Nonresidents are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 15% for interest and royalties. Certain tax treaties may reduce this rate.

Nonresident withholding tax is a final tax on dividends, cultural royalties and interest paid to non-related persons. It is a minimum tax on non-cultural royalties and on interest paid to related persons. Nonresident withholding tax rates may be reduced under New Zealand's double tax treaties. A 0% rate of nonresident withholding tax may apply to interest paid to unrelated nonresidents by transitional residents (see Transitional residents' exemption in section A) in relation to money borrowed while they were nonresidents, so long as the interest does not relate to carrying on a business through a fixed establishment in New Zealand.

As an alternative to nonresident withholding tax on interest, if the borrower and lender are not related persons and if the interest is paid by a person registered as an approved issuer with respect to a registered security, the interest is subject only to an approved issuer levy of 2% of the interest actually paid. The New Zealand government pays the 2% levy on interest paid on its loans from nonresidents that meet these criteria. Nonresident withholding tax and approved issuer levy may be imposed at a rate of 0% on interest paid to nonresident holders of certain widely held corporate bonds and similar securities.

The foreign investor tax credit (FITC) provisions reduce the effective rate of New Zealand tax imposed on dividends received by a nonresident investor from a New Zealand company. To the extent that a New Zealand company is owned by nonresident investors and imputation credits are attached to dividends paid, the company may claim a partial refund or credit of its New Zealand company tax liability. The company then passes on the refund or credit to the nonresident investors through supplementary dividends. The effective rate of tax on fully imputed dividends received by nonresident investors with supplementary dividends under the FITC provisions is 28%, which effectively equates to the company tax rate on the company's underlying profits and the extent of the credits passed to resident investors. However, the residents may need to pay further tax, depending on their individual marginal tax rates. Although the same result could be achieved for nonresident investors through a 0% rate of withholding on imputed dividends, the rather complicated FITC mechanism is intended to allow nonresident investors to claim a full tax credit in their home countries for New Zealand nonresident withholding tax.

The FITC provisions generally apply for dividends paid to nonresidents only if they hold less than 10% direct voting interests and if the New Zealand tax rate, after any tax treaty relief, is at least 15%.

Attributed income from controlled foreign investments. Under the controlled foreign company (CFC) regime, New Zealand residents may be taxed on passive income attributed to them that is derived by foreign entities in which they hold an interest if either of the following circumstances exists:
- Five or fewer New Zealand residents own over 50% of the foreign entity.
- New Zealand residents have de facto control of the company.

Exemptions from CFC attribution may apply if the CFC is resident in Australia and meets certain criteria or if the CFC's income meets a 95% active income test.

Under the foreign investment fund (FIF) regime, New Zealand residents may be taxed on income attributed to them that is derived by foreign entities in which they hold an interest not meeting the conditions for the applicability of the CFC regime. The FIF regime may apply to interests in the following:
- Companies and unit trusts
- Foreign superannuation schemes (however, different rules apply to some schemes, effective from 1 April 2014; see Foreign superannuation scheme interests)

- Foreign life insurance policies that have an investment component

Several exceptions apply, including exemptions for the following:
- Shares held in certain Australian companies listed on the Australian Stock Exchange
- Certain Australian unit trusts or superannuation schemes
- Individuals holding FIF investments that cost less than NZD50,000 in total
- Certain interests in employment-related foreign superannuation schemes and qualifying foreign private annuities
- Holdings of transitional residents

Investors who own interests of less than 10% in foreign companies, unit trusts, superannuation funds and life insurance policies can calculate their FIF income under the fair dividend rate method (FDR). Under the FDR method, investors are taxed on 5% of the market value of investments held at the beginning of the year and up to 5% of gains made as a result of the purchase and subsequent resale during the same tax year. Dividends and capital gains are not separately taxed under this method.

An active income exemption and approach, similar in some respects to that applying for interests in CFCs, may apply with respect to direct income interests of at least 10% in FIF companies and unit trusts.

Transitional residents (see Transitional residents' exemption) are exempt from the attribution of CFC or FIF income.

Foreign superannuation scheme interests. In certain circumstances, individuals who have applied FIF treatment to foreign superannuation scheme interests in previous returns of income may continue to apply FIF treatment to those interests. Otherwise, effective from 1 April 2014, the FIF rules do not apply to interests in foreign superannuation schemes that were first acquired by individuals when they were nonresidents. Interests that were first acquired by individuals when they were New Zealand resident remain subject to the FIF rules.

In general, no New Zealand income tax liability arises on lump-sum withdrawals or transfers in the first four years of an individual's New Zealand residence. After the end of that period, the extent to which lump-sum withdrawals or transfers to Australian or New Zealand superannuation schemes are taxed in New Zealand under the "schedule method" in the new rules generally depends on how long individuals have been New Zealand residents. Alternatively, individuals may use a "formula method" to determine any New Zealand income tax liability for such lump-sum withdrawals or transfers from defined contribution schemes if they have sufficient information to carry out the required calculations. Transfers between foreign superannuation schemes, other than to Australian schemes, are exempt from New Zealand income tax.

The government recognized that the pre-1 April 2014 rules were complex and taxpayers may not have dealt with lump-sum withdrawals or transfers appropriately for New Zealand income tax purposes. Transitional relief provisions allowed taxpayers to pay tax (at their marginal personal income tax rates) in either their 2013-14 or their 2014-15 returns on a flat 15% of the amounts of lump-sum withdrawals or transfers between 1 January 2000 and 31 March 2014 (or on lump sums for which appropriate applications to withdraw or transfer were made by 31 March 2014) if those lump-sum withdrawals or transfers had not been dealt with appropriately in their previous New Zealand income tax returns. Otherwise, any reassessment of their past year treatments is based on the rules that applied for the relevant years, with potential penalty and interest charges for any increased income tax liabilities resulting for those previous years.

Specific rules apply to interests in certain Australian superannuation schemes. Effective from 1 July 2013, taxpayers moving between Australia and New Zealand may elect to transfer their superannuation savings between certain Australian and New Zealand superannuation schemes without tax liabilities arising in either country at that time.

Periodic pensions and annuities arising from foreign superannuation scheme interests continue generally to be taxable in full in New Zealand on receipt by residents other than transitional residents (see Transitional residents' exemption).

Trust income. Trust income is generally taxed in New Zealand if it is sourced in New Zealand or if it is derived by a beneficiary who is resident in New Zealand. Foreign-source income derived by a trustee may generally be taxed in New Zealand if a settlor of the trust (generally any person that provides some benefit to the trust) is a New Zealand resident. A beneficiary might be treated as a settlor in certain circumstances. If the income is vested in, paid to or applied for the benefit of a beneficiary within the same income year or within six months after the end of the income year, the income is taxable to that beneficiary at their applicable marginal tax rate. Otherwise, trust income is taxable to the trustee or, if the trustee is not resident in New Zealand, then to any New Zealand-resident settlor at a rate of 33%. If the income of a trust has not been fully liable to New Zealand income tax, certain distributions to New Zealand beneficiaries may be taxable to them at their personal tax rates if the trust is regarded as a "foreign trust" or at a higher rate of 45% if the trust is regarded as a "non-complying trust" even though legally they may be considered distributions of capital. Beneficiary income derived by New Zealand-resident minors (younger than 16 years of age on the trust's balance date) is generally taxable at a rate of 33%.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. In New Zealand, any benefit conferred under an agreement to sell or issue shares to an employee is taxable to the employee as remuneration. The benefit is calculated as the difference between the fair market value of the shares on the day they are acquired and the amount paid for the shares by the employee.

Individuals resident in New Zealand who exercise share options are subject to tax on the difference between the strike price and the fair market value of the shares on the date of exercise. The liability arises in the income year in which the 20th day after the day the options are exercised occurs.

If the employee is a transitional resident (see Transitional residents' exemption) at the time the options are exercised, the value of the benefit is apportioned based on the ratio of the employee's transitional residency period in New Zealand to the total employment period during the sourcing period (the sourcing period is generally from the grant date to the vesting date).

From 1 April 2018, resident individuals, including transitional residents, may apportion the value of the benefit based on the ratio of the time that the individual was a nonresident of New Zealand under New Zealand domestic tax law to the total employment period during the sourcing period.

From 1 April 2017, employers can choose to withhold tax on share options under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system. If PAYE is withheld at the correct extra pay tax rate (up to 39%), an employee should have no further tax to pay with respect to the share-option benefit. If the employer chooses not to withhold at source, employees need to account for tax on the value of the share-option benefit themselves, either through provisional tax installments paid throughout the year, or in one lump-sum payment after the year-end (see Section D).

Employers are required to disclose the share-option benefits received by employees to Inland Revenue (New Zealand's tax authority) through their payroll reporting, regardless of whether PAYE is withheld. This reporting requirement applies from 1 April 2017. Penalties may be payable by employers for under disclosure of share-option benefits.

The same principles apply to most other forms of employee-share schemes, but the taxing point and market value measurement date differs, depending on the terms of the particular scheme.

Capital gains and losses. New Zealand has no general capital gains tax, but profits from the sale of real and personal property may be subject to income tax in certain circumstances, including the following:
- The taxpayer's business consists of dealing in that real or personal property.
- The taxpayer's purpose at the time of acquisition was to sell the property at a later date.

In addition, profits on the disposal of certain residential property (other than a "main home") acquired from 1 October 2015 may be taxable if sold within a two-year period, regardless of the taxpayer's purpose for the acquisition. This two-year period is extended to a five-year period if the taxpayer enters into an agreement to purchase residential property on or after 29 March 2018. The 5-year period is extended to a 10-year period if the taxpayer enters into an agreement to purchase residential property on or after 27 March 2021.

From 1 July 2016, residential land withholding tax (RLWT) applies to the sale of residential property located in New Zealand by "offshore RLWT persons" if the land was acquired on or after 1 October 2015 and is sold within a two-year period. This two-year period is extended to a five-year period if the taxpayer enters into an agreement to purchase residential property on or after 29 March 2018. The 5-year period is extended to a 10-year period if the taxpayer enters into an agreement to purchase residential property on or after 27 March 2021. An "offshore RLWT person" is defined broadly for individuals and other entities, with reference to citizenship, immigration status and physical absence throughout specific time frames for an individual vendor. RLWT is not a minimum or final tax but is deducted on account of any annual income tax liability. Any excess RLWT is refundable.

An accrual taxation system applies to New Zealand resident individuals who are parties to various types of financial arrangements, including debts and debt instruments. Under the accrual system, foreign-exchange variations related to the financial arrangements are included in calculations of income and expenditure. A cash-basis system may be adopted by taxpayers deriving income and incurring expenditure of less than NZD100,000 from financial arrangements in an income year and by taxpayers with financial arrangement assets and liabilities with a total absolute value of NZD1 million or less. For the cash basis to apply, the cumulative difference between the actual income and expenditure and the notional income and expenditure on an accrual basis must be less than NZD40,000.

The accrual taxation regime does not apply to nonresidents, unless the transaction involves a business they carry on in New Zealand, or to transitional residents if the other parties to an arrangement are nonresidents and if the arrangement is not for the purposes of a business carried on in New Zealand by any of the parties.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Employees are not permitted deductions for employment-related expenditure, except for tax return preparation fees and premiums for loss of earnings insurance if the insurance proceeds would be taxable. However, employers are able to reimburse employees on a tax-free basis for certain expenses that relate to the employee's employment.

Personal deductions and allowances. Taxpayers with dependent children may be entitled to family support payments based on family size, income and other circumstances. This assistance is generally not available to nonresidents or transitional residents.

An independent earner tax credit (IETC) may apply to individual tax residents who have annual income between NZD24,000 and NZD48,000 and who do not directly or indirectly receive family support, income-tested benefits, New Zealand superannuation, certain pensions or other amounts. The IETC is a maximum of NZD520 per year and abates at 13 cents per dollar earned over NZD44,000.

Donation tax credits are available for most donations of money over NZD5 made by individuals to registered charities or school boards if receipts are provided.

Business deductions. Expenses necessary to produce gross income (other than employment income) are deductible. However, only 50% of specified business entertainment expenses incurred by self-employed individuals is deductible. Interest deductions may be limited under the thin-capitalization rules in certain circumstances if nonresidents own or control New Zealand entities or assets or if New Zealand residents hold interests of at least 10% in CFCs or certain types of FIFs.

The deductibility of mortgage interest on residential investment property is in the process of being phased out. Different rules are expected to apply depending on when the property was purchased and whether the property is a "new build." Interest incurred in relation to land outside New Zealand is not likely to be affected by these changes. The relevant legislative changes are undergoing public consultation and are expected to be enacted this year, with interest incurred after 1 October 2021 expected to be affected.

Rates. The rates of tax applied to taxable income for both resident and nonresident individuals from 1 April 2021 to 31 March 2022 are set forth in the following table.

Taxable income NZD	Tax rate %	Tax due NZD	Cumulative tax due NZD
First 14,000	10.5	1,470	1,470
Next 34,000	17.5	5,950	7,420
Next 22,000	30	6,600	14,020
Next 110,000	33	36,300	50,320

Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

For withholding tax rates, see Investment income.

Relief for losses. Business losses of individual taxpayers may be offset against the individuals' other net income in the year in which the loss is sustained. The balance of any loss may be carried forward and offset against future net income of the taxpayer. The use of losses may be restricted if they are derived by the following:
- Limited partners through limited partnerships
- Owners of certain LTCs
- Nonresidents deriving income subject to nonresident withholding tax as a final tax

Specific restrictions apply to losses incurred in deriving income from residential land (rental income or land disposal) from 1 April 2019.

B. Estate and gift taxes

Estate duty is not levied in New Zealand, and gift duty has been abolished.

C. Social security

New Zealand does not have a social security system requiring compulsory contributions from employees. However, under the Accident Compensation Act 2001, levies are payable by employers, employees and self-employed persons to fund the comprehensive no-fault accident compensation scheme, which covers all accidents at home and at work. The levies are payable on employment income of up to NZD130,911 for the year ending 31 March 2022. For employers and self-employed persons, the rate of the levy depends on the relevant industry classification.

For employees, the rate of the levy is 1.39% for the year ending 31 March 2022. Employers are responsible for withholding employee levies as part of the PAYE withholding tax system.

New Zealand has entered into reciprocal social security agreements with Australia, Canada, Denmark, Greece, Guernsey, Ireland, Jersey, Malta, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in New Zealand runs from 1 April to 31 March of the following calendar year. Salary and wage earners generally have tax deducted from their salaries at source under the PAYE system. Income tax on other income is generally due on 7 February (7 April if on a tax agency list) following the end of the fiscal year.

Individuals who earn income only from reported sources (for example, employment income, bank interest and dividends) in New Zealand do not generally have a return filing requirement. Instead, these individuals are generally provided with automated assessments. Individuals who have income from reported sources and from unreported sources are required to amend any automated assessment to reflect their unreported income correctly.

If an automated assessment results in a refund, this will be paid by electronic transfer to the individual's nominated bank account. Assessments of tax to pay are written off if under NZD50 (temporarily increased to NZD200 for the 2019-2020 tax year only).

An individual with unreported income may choose (or in some cases, be required) to file an income tax return. Income tax returns are due by the 7 July immediately following the end of the income year, or by the following 31 March if on a tax agency list.

Certain taxpayers must pay advance payments of provisional tax, generally in the 5th, 9th and 13th months following the beginning of their income years. These taxpayers are generally persons whose preceding year's tax liability on income from which no tax was withheld was greater than NZD2,500 (increased to NZD5,000 if the preceding tax year was the tax year ended 31 March 2020 or a future tax year). Interest may be imposed on persons whose tax liability on income from which no tax was withheld was greater than NZD60,000 if the provisional tax paid by each installment date is less than the minimum amounts deemed due at those installment dates.

A nonresident individual must file an income tax return showing all taxable New Zealand-source income, except income subject to a final nonresident withholding tax.

From 1 October 2015, "offshore persons" must generally have a fully functional New Zealand bank account to obtain a tax identification number, which is necessary to meet their tax filing and payment obligations. Individuals without a New Zealand bank account are generally required to satisfy comprehensive due diligence documentation requirements, including providing notarized copies of identification documents and proof of a bank account held in a country with which New Zealand has an exchange-of-information agreement in order to satisfy the Commissioner of Inland Revenue of the applicant's identity and background.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

If a New Zealand resident derives income from a foreign jurisdiction, foreign income tax paid on that income is allowed as a credit against income tax payable in New Zealand. The credit is limited to the amount of tax payable in New Zealand on the same foreign-source income.

New Zealand has entered into comprehensive double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

F. Temporary visas

At the time of writing, New Zealand's borders were closed to most classes of foreign traveler and visa applications were not being processed for individuals outside of New Zealand, in response to the COVID-19 pandemic. Exceptions existed for New Zealand citizens, some classes of residents, critical health workers, other critical workers and individuals traveling within a designated quarantine-free travel zone. It is suggested that businesses and prospective travelers consult with an immigration professional prior to arranging travel.

New Zealand Electronic Travel Authority. All travelers to New Zealand, excluding those who already hold a New Zealand visa or who are a New Zealand or Australian citizen, are required to obtain a travel authorization through Immigration New Zealand's Electronic Travel Authority (NZeTA) system before traveling to New Zealand.

Travelers are encouraged to apply as soon as travel is planned, and it is strongly suggested that they apply no later than 72 hours before travel to New Zealand. An approved NZeTA travel authorization is valid for multiple entries into New Zealand and is generally valid, unless revoked, for up to two years. An NZeTA is not a guarantee of admission to New Zealand; it only authorizes a traveler who does not otherwise hold a New Zealand visa to board a carrier for travel to New Zealand.

Visitors' visas. In general, all visitors to New Zealand must apply for a visa to enter the country. Some exceptions to the general rule exist. Australian citizens and individuals who hold a current Australian permanent residence visa or a resident return visa do not need to formally apply for a New Zealand visa to enter New Zealand. United Kingdom passport holders who produce evidence of the right to reside permanently in the United Kingdom can be granted a visitor visa for up to six months on arrival in New Zealand. Individuals from certain jurisdictions (see below) who will be in New Zealand for no more than three months as a visitor do not need to apply for a visa before traveling to New Zealand. Visitors are not permitted to work in New Zealand. All visitors must provide travel tickets or evidence of onward travel arrangements and evidence of funds to support themselves while in New Zealand. Although visa waiver citizens and permanent residents of Australia are exempt from applying for a visitor visa ahead of their travel to New Zealand, they must still apply for an NZeTA. The following is the list of the "visa-waiver" jurisdictions.

(a) The visa waiver does not apply to people traveling on non-citizens' passports issued by these jurisdictions.
(b) The visa waiver applies to Greek passport holders whose passports were issued on and after 1 January 2006. (Greek passports issued before 1 January 2006 are not acceptable for travel after 1 January 2007.)
(c) The visa waiver applies to residents of Hong Kong traveling on Hong Kong Special Administrative Region or British National (Overseas) passports.
(d) The visa waiver applies to residents of Macau traveling on Macau Special Administrative Region passports.
(e) Portuguese passport holders must also have the right to live permanently in Portugal.
(f) The visa waiver applies to permanent residents of Taiwan traveling on Taiwan passports. A personal identity number printed within the visible section of the biographical page of the Taiwan passport demonstrates that the holder is a permanent resident of Taiwan.
(g) This visa waiver includes US nationals.

Business visitors' visas. Business visitors who are from Australia, the United Kingdom or the visa-waiver countries mentioned above are not required to formally apply for business visitors' visas before traveling to New Zealand. They are granted business visitors' visas on arrival in New Zealand for no more than three months only if they are undertaking one of the following activities:

- A representative on official trade missions recognized by the New Zealand government
- A sales representative from an overseas company
- An overseas buyer of New Zealand goods or services
- A person undertaking business consultations or negotiations in New Zealand with respect to the establishment, expansion or winding up of a business enterprise in New Zealand involving the authorized representatives of an overseas company

Business visitors must not undertake work in New Zealand regardless of where or how they are remunerated. If an individual will be in New Zealand for periods totaling more than three months in any one year or if he or she is not undertaking one of the activities noted above, he or she must apply for a work visa.

Business visitors who are not from Australia, the United Kingdom or the visa-waiver countries mentioned above are required to formally apply for business visitors' visas before traveling to New Zealand.

Business visitors who are from Australia, the United Kingdom or the visa waiver countries mentioned above are not required to formally apply for business visitors' visas before travel. However, visa waiver citizens and permanent residents of Australia must still apply for an NZeTA.

Student visas. Student visas are issued to foreign nationals who intend to undertake studies in New Zealand. The duration of the visa depends on the length of the study program. In general, students are permitted to work part time while studying in New Zealand after seeking authorization from Immigration New Zealand (INZ).

Working holiday visas. Working holiday schemes are open to citizens from the following jurisdictions who satisfy certain conditions.

Argentina	Hungary	Philippines
Austria	Ireland	Poland
Belgium	Israel	Portugal
Brazil	Italy	Singapore
Canada	Japan	Slovak Republic
Chile	Korea (South)	Slovenia
China Mainland	Latvia	Spain
Croatia	Lithuania	Sweden
Czech Republic	Luxembourg	Taiwan
Denmark	Malaysia	Thailand
Estonia	Malta	Turkey
Finland	Mexico	United Kingdom
France	Netherlands	United States
Germany	Norway	Uruguay
Hong Kong	Peru	Vietnam

To qualify for a visa under a working holiday scheme, an applicant must satisfy the following conditions:

- He or she must be aged between 18 and 30 (or 35 in some cases).

- He or she may not bring children.
- He or she must hold a return ticket or sufficient funds to purchase such a ticket.
- He or she must have available funds to meet living costs while in New Zealand, as prescribed by the scheme under which the individual is applying.
- He or she must meet health and character requirements.
- He or she must hold medical and comprehensive hospitalization insurance for the length of the stay if required by the scheme under which the individual is applying.
- He or she must be the holder of a valid temporary visa if applying in New Zealand.
- He or she must not have been previously approved for a visa under a working holiday scheme.

Applicants who apply for a working holiday visa are not required to provide evidence of a job offer. If a scheme has an "ordinarily resident" requirement, the applicant's usual place of permanent residence must be that country. This requirement is considered to be met if the applicant has not been absent from that country for more than two years immediately preceding the application. Successful applicants must not undertake permanent employment unless they apply for, and obtain, a work visa that allows such employment. Successful applicants may also enroll in one or more courses of training or study of up to six months' duration in total during their visit to New Zealand.

Work visas. The New Zealand government began consultations regarding a significant overhaul of the New Zealand temporary work visa framework in September 2019. The proposed changes to the temporary work visa system would see six existing temporary work visas (including the Essential Skills and Talent Visa referenced below) replaced with a single Accredited Employer Work Visa (AEWV). A mandatory accreditation process would also be established for any New Zealand business intending to support a migrant worker for an AEWV temporary work visa. At the time of writing, the final details of this proposed policy change have not been announced, and no implementation date has been confirmed. It is suggested that businesses and prospective work visa applicants consult with an immigration professional.

All work visa applicants must meet the generic temporary entry instructions. This includes health and character requirements.

The Essential Skills instructions generally apply to applicants who have been offered full-time employment with a New Zealand employer. Applicants must provide evidence that they are suitably qualified by training and experience to perform the job offered. The employer may also be required to provide evidence that no suitably qualified New Zealanders can perform the job offered to the applicants (a labor-market test), depending on the employees offered remuneration and employment location. Work visas under the Essential Skills instructions are generally issued for a maximum of either two or three years, depending on whether the remuneration offered is above or below the current national median wage rate.

The Work to Residence (Talent Visa) instructions apply if an applicant has a job offer from an Accredited Employer. The job offer must be for a full-time position (at least 30 hours) for 2 years or longer, the annual salary must be at least NZD79,560 and the applicant must be under the age of 56 years. Work visas under the Work to Residence (Talent Visa) instructions are valid for 30 months from the applicant's first date of entry into New Zealand. The applicant becomes eligible to apply for a residence visa after he or she has worked for an Accredited Employer for two years and if he or she meets the residence instructions. The two other types of Work to Residence categories are Long Term Skill Shortage (for those meeting the requirements in an occupation listed on the current Long Term Skill Shortage List) and Arts, Culture and Sport (for those demonstrating an international reputation in a declared field of arts, culture or sports and meeting all other requirements). The salary thresholds above are subject to change.

The Specific Purpose or Event instructions apply if the applicant is entering New Zealand for a specific purpose or event (for example, a short-term intercompany secondment) for which the applicant has demonstrated skills, expertise or attributes that are likely to benefit individuals and/or New Zealand and if no risk of a negative impact on opportunities for New Zealand citizens or residents exists. Under these instructions, a labor market test is not required, but the employer is required to provide either a support letter or a copy of the job offer or assignment agreement. Work visas under the Specific Purpose or Event instructions are generally valid for the duration of the activity in New Zealand.

Special rules exist for certain categories of applicants, including partners of New Zealand citizens and residents, partners of higher-skilled work visa holders, entertainers, athletes and professional coaches.

In certain cases, applicants may not be granted a visa until they meet the necessary New Zealand registration requirements if New Zealand registration is required by law to undertake employment. Professionals are advised to contact individual professional bodies for information on required registration criteria.

The processing time for a work visa varies with each application, but the process generally takes four to eight weeks from the date of filing if no medical or character issues exist. INZ generally prioritizes the processing of Work to Residence visa applications over other work visa applications.

Health and character requirements for all visa applicants. All individuals who enter New Zealand must meet applicable good health and character requirements. If an applicant is not from a low-tuberculosis incidence country and intends to be in New Zealand for more than six months, he or she must obtain a chest X-ray certificate from a panel radiologist. If an applicant intends to be in New Zealand for longer than 12 months, he or she must obtain full medical and chest X-ray certificates from a panel physician. The panel physician and/or panel radiologist submits electronically the medical and chest X-ray certificates directly to INZ. Once the medical and chest X-ray certificates are submitted electronically, the applicant has three months to file his or her visa application with INZ. If an applicant is applying for a temporary visa and intends to be in New Zealand for 24 months or longer, he or she must also obtain a police clearance certificate from his or her country or countries of citizenship and any country in which he or she has lived for five years or more since the age of 17. If an applicant is applying for a residence visa, he or she must obtain a police clearance certificate from his or her country or countries of citizenship and any country in which he or she has lived for 12 months or more in the last 10 years. Police clearance certificates are only valid for filing within six months after the date of issuance.

General requirements for all temporary visitors (work and holiday) to New Zealand. An applicant coming to New Zealand to work must provide evidence of qualifications and/or work experience, and a job offer. Applicants coming for a visit must provide evidence that they plan on leaving New Zealand and that they have funds to support themselves while in New Zealand. All applicants must also hold a valid passport for the duration of their intended stay.

G. Entrepreneur category visa

Experienced businesspersons who wish to obtain a work visa to enter New Zealand to establish and operate a business can apply under the Entrepreneur work visa category. If certain conditions are met, the applicant can eventually obtain New Zealand residence under the Entrepreneur residence visa category. To apply for an Entrepreneur work visa, applicants must satisfy the following requirements:

- They must have a minimum capital investment of NZD100,000.
- They must meet or exceed the pass mark on a scale that awards points for factors relating to the likely success of the proposed business and its value to New Zealand.
- They must be competent users of English.
- They must have a business plan specific to the proposed business.
- They must all meet health and character requirements.

H. Investor category visa

The Investor category is open to applicants who wish to obtain residence in New Zealand through investment. Under the Investor Plus category, an applicant must invest NZD10 million or more for three years in New Zealand. No age, English language, business experience or settlement funds requirements are imposed. Applicants who want to invest NZD3 million or more but less than NZD10 million can apply under the Investor 2 category if they meet the following requirements:

- They must be 65 years old or younger.
- They must have at least three years of recognized business experience.
- They must be competent users of English.

Under the Investor category, the required amounts must be invested into acceptable investments, as prescribed by INZ.

Like all visa categories, all applicants in the above categories must also meet New Zealand's health and character requirements. Investor applicants must also be physically present in New Zealand for prescribed time periods for each of the investment years.

I. Residence visas

Residence visas and permanent residence visas are issued to foreign nationals who intend to establish permanent residence in New Zealand. Various paths and policies to gain residency are available. Some of the most common paths are through skilled employment, the Investor category or working for an Accredited Employer for at least two years. Although the holder of a residence visa can stay in New Zealand indefinitely, residence visas are subject to travel conditions, which allow the holder to travel in and out of New Zealand for 24 months. After 24 months, a residence visa holder can apply for a permanent residence visa by demonstrating his or her commitment to New Zealand. Permanent residence visas do not have travel conditions and allow the holder to stay and travel in and out of New Zealand indefinitely.

J. Family and personal considerations

Family members. In general, the partner or spouse of a work visa holder can apply for his or her own visa to enter New Zealand based on their relationship. If the primary applicant will be holding or holds a work visa that is valid for more than six months, his or her partner is eligible for an "open" work visa for the same time period as the primary applicant if the relevant partnership requirements are met. This visa allows the partner or spouse to work for any employer in New Zealand. If the primary applicant will be holding or holds a work visa that is valid for less than six months, his or her partner is eligible for a visitor visa that is valid for the same time period as the primary applicant if the relevant partnership requirements are met. A partner holding a visitor visa cannot work in New Zealand. Dependent children of a work visa holder are granted either a student or visitor visa, depending on their age, and may attend primary and secondary schools in New Zealand as domestic students. Essential Skills work visa holders whose employment is classified as lower skilled are not eligible to support dependent family.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally using their home country driver's licenses for up to 12 months. Visitors whose licenses or permits are not in English must carry an accurate translation. Visitors holding international driver's licenses may also drive in New Zealand for up to 12 months. Visitors without overseas or international driver's licenses must apply for a New Zealand license before driving in New Zealand.

Foreign nationals in New Zealand must obtain New Zealand driver's licenses within a year.

Applicants are required to pass a theoretical test and take a practical driving test to obtain a New Zealand driver's license. Applicants with valid driver's licenses from certain European Union (EU) countries, Australia, Canada, Norway, South Africa, Switzerland or the United States may be exempt from the theoretical and the practical test. In general, a physical examination is not required, but eyesight is checked.

K. Other matters

Publicly funded health entitlements. The length of a person's visa determines whether they are entitled to publicly funded health in

New Zealand. In general, a person who holds a work visa that entitles the person to remain in New Zealand for two years or more is eligible for publicly funded health and disability services. Eligibility for all publicly funded health and disability services is determined by the Ministry of Health and not INZ.

Licensed immigration advisors. Anyone who provides immigration advice, both onshore and offshore, must be licensed or exempt from licensing. Immigration advice is defined as "using, or purporting to use, knowledge of or experience in immigration to advise, direct, assist or represent another person in regard to an immigration matter relating to New Zealand, whether directly or indirectly and whether or not for gain or reward." The Immigration Advisers Authority regulates the provision of immigration advice. INZ no longer accepts applications from representatives of applicants, unless they are licensed or exempt.

A person who provides immigration advice who is not licensed or exempt from licensing is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years or a fine not exceeding NZD100,000, or both.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident and nonresident individuals, regardless of their nationality, are taxed on their income earned in Nicaragua. Foreign-source income is not taxed.

Nicaraguan nationals are considered resident.

A foreign individual is considered a resident for tax purposes if he or she meets either of the following criteria:
- He or she stays in Nicaragua for more than 180 consecutive or non-consecutive days during the calendar year.
- The center of his or her economic interests is located in Nicaragua, unless he or she can prove his or her residence or tax domicile is located in another country by submitting a certificate issued by the relevant tax authorities, provided that the country of domicile is not considered a tax haven under the Nicaraguan income tax law.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Annual employment income in excess of NIO100,000 is taxable, including salary, pensions, bonuses, premiums, commissions and allowances (for example, housing and educational allowances). However, the 13th month salary (aguinaldo), labor indemnification (up to five months' base salary), indemnification up to NIO500,000 received in addition to five months' salary and social security contributions are exempt from tax.

Self-employment and business income. Income derived from self-employment or from trade or business activities is taxable. Resident individuals are subject to progressive tax rates ranging from 10% to 30% of net self-employment and business income. Nonresident individuals are subject to a flat 20% withholding tax on this income.

Investment income. Dividends paid or credited by local companies to resident or nonresident individuals are subject to a 15% withholding tax.

Per diem directors' fees. Per diem directors' fees paid to resident or nonresident individuals are subject to 25% withholding tax.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived by residents and nonresidents are subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 15%.

A special rule applies to transfers of property subject to registration with a public deed in the Public Registry. Progressive withholding tax rates ranging from 1% to 7% of the value of the property apply to these transfers.

Deductions. The following are personal deductions and allowances:
- Social security contributions of employed individuals
- Contributions of employed individuals to pension or savings funds that are not part of the social security system, provided that these funds are approved by the relevant authority in Nicaragua
- 25% of expenses on education, health and professional services, up to a maximum amount of NIO20,000 per year

Rates. Employment income earned by resident individuals is taxable at the following rates for the period of 1 January 2021 through 31 December 2021.

Annual taxable income
Exceeding NIO	Not exceeding NIO	Rate %
0	100,000	0

200,000	350,000	20
350,000	500,000	25
500,000	—	30

Payments to nonresident individuals for employment income (salaries, other remuneration, pensions, commissions, directors' fees and similar compensation items) are subject to a 20% final withholding tax.

Self-employment and business income earned by resident individuals (with annual gross income of NIO12 million or less) is taxable at the following rates for the period of 1 January 2021 through 31 December 2021.

Annual taxable income
Exceeding NIO	Not exceeding NIO	Rate %
0	100,000	10
100,000	200,000	15
200,000	350,000	20
350,000	500,000	25
500,000	—	30

If an individual's gross income exceeds NIO12 million, the tax rate for self-employment and business income is 30%.

Payments to nonresident individuals for professional services or technical advice are subject to a 20% final withholding tax.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

Gifts or inheritances from Nicaraguan sources are treated as capital gains and subject to a flat 15% tax.

C. Social security

Social security contributions are levied on salaries at a rate of 21.5% for employers and 7% for employees for the 2021 tax year. These rates are increased annually.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The ordinary tax year runs from 1 January through 31 December.

Employers are responsible for withholding income taxes and social security contributions from the employees' salaries on a monthly basis. Employees are not required to file an annual income tax return if their only source of income is employment compensation.

Returns must be filed and any tax due must be paid within two months after the end of the tax year. Self-employed individuals and individuals with a trade or business must pay installments of advance income tax.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Nicaragua has not entered into tax treaties with any other countries.

F. Temporary visas

Nicaraguan law provides a three-tier classification system that imposes visa requirements based on the nationality and passport type of the traveler. Tiers may be amended from time to time without prior notice.

Tier A. Nonresident foreign nationals holding passports issued by Tier A jurisdictions are visa exempt. On arrival into Nicaragua, each traveler must pay a USD10 fee (cash only) and is issued a tourist permit valid for up to 90 days that may be extended for up to a total of 180 days.

General. The immigration authorities require that passports of nonresident foreign nationals be valid for at least six months beyond the date of expected departure from Nicaragua.

Travelers entering Nicaragua from certain countries, including Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, French Guiana, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Venezuela and most African countries are required to present proof of yellow fever vaccination as a condition for entry into Nicaragua. This requirement applies to Nicaraguan and foreign nationals who have visited or been in transit for more than 12 hours in any of these countries. Travelers affected by this requirement must show an International Certificate of Vaccination issued at least 10 days prior to arrival in Nicaragua as proof of immunization at the port of entry.

G. Work visas (and/or permits)

Under Nicaraguan law, travelers seeking to enter the country to perform professional activities or undertake employment must obtain a work permit following admission into the country. However, according to the Visa and Residence Permits subdivision of the General Directorate of Migrations and Foreign Citizens, travelers seeking to enter Nicaragua to exercise professional activities for short time periods (up to 90 days) are not normally issued any type of special permit. The issuance of work visas requires the submission of extensive documentation. Please consult a professional advisor for further information.

H. Residency visas (and/or permits)

Foreign nationals may apply for permanent or temporary residency after entry into the country. The application process requires documentation issued and authenticated or apostilled in the foreign national's home country and, if necessary, translated into Spanish.

I. Entry and exit restrictions as a result of the COVID-19 outbreak

In the current COVID-19 outbreak, to enter Nicaragua, nationals and foreigners must carry proof of a negative polymerase chain reaction (PCR) test within 72 hours prior to entry into Nicaragua. Nationals and foreigners with fever or respiratory symptoms may not enter Nicaragua. If the PCR test result is negative and if the national or foreigner does not have fever or respiratory symptoms, he or she will be able to circulate freely in Nicaragua. He or she will receive follow-ups by telephone from health personnel during his or his or her initial 14 days in Nicaragua. Nationals and foreigners who develop symptoms of COVID-19 after entering Nicaragua will be quarantined.

Nicaragua has not announced the implementation of any exit restrictions. The only measures affecting departure from Nicaragua are those implemented by the airlines, which at the time of writing were expected to resume outbound travel in the first week of October.

Citizens and foreigners who test positive for COVID-19 are being quarantined and hospitalized if needed.

Airport officials are taking the following measures in connection with new arrivals to Nicaragua:

- Taking the temperature of new entrants
- Referring foreigners traveling from jurisdictions with high numbers of COVID-19 cases (or exhibiting symptoms on arrival) to medical facilities for monitoring
- Quarantining (and hospitalizing) foreigners who test positive (as needed)

For visa extensions or renewals, no special processes are followed.

J. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Dependents are not entitled to work in Nicaragua without a valid work permit. The application process for obtaining a Nicaraguan work permit may involve the submission of extensive documentation. Please consult a professional advisor for further information.

Marital property regime. Under Nicaraguan law, all assets acquired after the commencement of a marriage, with the exception of those received as a donation by either spouse, are assumed to be community property.

Forced heirship. Nicaraguan law requires intestate estates be settled through probate. In the case of intestacy, the Civil Code lists the order in which eligible persons may inherit.

Driver's permits. Holders of foreign-issued driver's licenses can drive in Nicaragua as long as their existing foreign license is valid. On expiration, drivers are expected to obtain a local driver's license.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are generally subject to tax on their worldwide income. However, foreign earnings derived by Nigerian residents are exempt from tax if the earnings are repatriated into Nigeria in convertible currency through a domiciliary account with an approved Nigerian bank. Income earned by a Nigerian from employment with the Nigerian government is considered Nigerian-source income, even if services are performed abroad. Nonresidents are subject to tax on Nigerian-source income only.

Individuals are considered residents if they are in one of the following categories:
- Nigerian and non-Nigerian individuals who reside in Nigeria
- Expatriate employees of a resident company who are present in Nigeria for employment purposes
- Expatriate employees of a nonresident company who are present in Nigeria for more than 183 days in a 12-month period
- Expatriate employees of a non-Nigerian company if their remuneration is recharged to a Nigerian company or borne by a fixed base in Nigeria and if they are not liable to tax in another country that has entered into a double tax treaty with Nigeria

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Taxable income includes salaries, wages, fees, allowances and other gains or profits from employment, such as bonuses, premiums, noncash benefits and other perquisites.

Gratuities paid to employees at the end of assignments are fully exempt from tax. Compensation for loss of office is also fully exempt from personal income tax. However, compensation for loss of office in excess of NGN10 million is subject to capital gains tax at 10%.

Self-employment and business income. Resident individuals who carry on a trade, business, profession or vocation are subject to tax on income derived from activities in and outside Nigeria. Self-employment income derived by nonresidents is subject to tax in Nigeria if the trade, business, profession or vocation is carried on even partly in Nigeria. However, only the gains or profits attributable to the part of the operations carried on in Nigeria are taxable.

Partners are taxed on their shares of partnership income, regardless of whether the income is distributed.

For both residents and nonresidents, a 5% tax is withheld from contract payments, payments with respect to construction-related activities and commissions, as well as from consulting, professional, management and technical fees. The recipient must include the income in his or her tax return, but may claim a credit for the tax withheld.

Taxable income is calculated by deducting allowable expenses, statutory reliefs and losses from gross income. Resident and nonresident self-employed individuals are taxed at the rates set forth in Rates.

Investment income. Withholding tax at a rate of 10% is imposed on dividends, interest, royalties and income from the rental of movable or immovable property. For nonresidents, the withholding taxes are final taxes. For residents, the withholding taxes on dividends, interest and royalties are final taxes, but the withholding tax on rent is treated as an advance tax payment.

Investment income earned abroad and brought into Nigeria through the Central Bank of Nigeria, or through any other authorized dealer appointed by the Minister of Finance, is exempt from tax.

Directors' fees. Companies paying directors' fees must withhold tax on the fees at a rate of 10%. For a resident, final tax is assessed when the individual files a tax return including income from all sources. For nonresidents, the 10% withholding tax is a final tax.

Capital gains. Capital gains consist of the disposal proceeds of an asset, less its cost and disposal expenses. Capital gains are taxed separately from ordinary income at a rate of 10%.

Amounts derived from the disposition of capital assets are taxable. These assets include the following:
- Land and buildings
- Options, debts and other property rights
- Any currency other than Nigerian currency
- Any form of property created by the disposing person or otherwise coming to be owned without being acquired
- Movable assets including motor vehicles

If these assets are located in Nigeria, they are taxable in Nigeria, regardless of where the beneficial owner is resident. Assets located outside Nigeria are taxable in Nigeria if the beneficial owner is resident in Nigeria or if he or she is a foreigner who is present in Nigeria for a period, or for an aggregate of periods, exceeding 183 days within a 12-month period. Capital gains derived from the disposal of capital assets located outside Nigeria, and administered by a trustee of a trust or settlement with a seat of administration outside Nigeria, are taxable if the seat of administration is transferred to Nigeria during the year of assessment and if the disposal of the asset occurred while the seat of administration was in Nigeria. For capital assets located outside Nigeria, a capital gains tax is levied on the proportionate amount of gain remitted to or received in Nigeria by nonresidents. For example, if 40% of the sales proceeds is remitted to Nigeria, 40% of the capital gain is subject to tax in Nigeria.

The taxation of gains accruing from the disposal of trade or business assets, including real property, may be deferred if the assets are replaced within one year before or after disposal.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. The following expenses are deductible from employment income:

- Contributions to approved pension funds in Nigeria
- Contributions to the National Housing Fund
- Contributions to the National Health Insurance Scheme
- Compensation for loss of office (also, see Employment income)
- Mortgage interest on a loan to develop an owner-occupied residential house
- Reasonable relocation allowance
- Gratuity

Personal allowances. Nigeria provides the following personal reliefs.

Type of allowance	Amount of allowance
Consolidated relief allowance (CRA); gross income for CRA purposes is the total income earned less nontaxable income, income on which no further tax is payable, business-related expenses and tax-exempt items provided in the Sixth Schedule to the Nigerian Personal Income Tax Act.	NGN200,000 or 1% of gross income, whichever is higher, plus 20% of gross income
Life insurance premiums (self)	No limit
Any expenses proved to the satisfaction of the relevant tax authority to have been incurred by the individual on research during the period, including the amount of levy paid to the National Agency for Science and Engineering Infrastructure Act	No limit

Business deductions. Expenses are deductible if they are reasonable and are incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in producing income. Expenses of a capital, private or domestic nature are not deductible.

Allowable expenses include the following:
- Interest on money borrowed and employed as capital in acquiring income
- Rental payments on business premises
- Repair and maintenance expenses
- Salaries, wages, allowances, utility costs and insurance premiums
- Bad debts

Any loss incurred in a previous year is deductible from the income of the same trade or business for up to four years.

Rates. The following rates apply to residents and nonresidents.

Taxable income NGN	Rate %	Tax NGN	Cumulative tax NGN
First 300,000	7	21,000	21,000
Next 300,000	11	33,000	54,000
Next 500,000	15	75,000	129,000
Next 500,000	19	95,000	224,000
Next 1,600,000	21	336,000	560,000

Minimum tax of 1% of gross income is due, even if applicable reliefs reduce tax liability below zero.

Individuals who earn the monthly minimum wage of NGN30,000 or below are exempted from any requirement to pay personal income tax or file a tax return.

Relief for losses. Business losses of a self-employed person may be carried forward for four years. Loss carrybacks are not allowed.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

Nigeria does not impose inheritance and gift tax.

C. Social security

Pension. The mandatory minimum contribution to the Nigerian Pension Scheme is 18% of an employee's monthly emoluments. Employers and employees are required to make contributions of 10% and 8%, respectively. Monthly emoluments are total emoluments as may be defined in the employee's employment contract but cannot be less than the sum of basic salary, housing allowance and transport allowance.

In addition to the above contributions, employees may make voluntary contributions to their retirement savings accounts. An employer may agree to the payment of additional benefits to the employee on retirement or elect to bear full responsibility for the scheme provided that the employer's contribution is not less than 20% of the monthly emoluments of the employee. In addition, every employer must maintain a group life insurance policy in favor of each employee for a minimum of three times the annual total emoluments of the employee. The premium must be paid not later than the date of commencement of coverage.

National Housing Fund. Nigerian employees earning a basic salary of NGN3,000 or more per year are required to contribute 2.5% of their basic salary to the National Housing Fund, administered by the Federal Mortgage Bank of Nigeria.

Employee Compensation Scheme. The Employee Compensation Scheme (ECS) is designed to provide adequate compensation for all employees or their dependents for any death, injury, disease or disability arising out of or in the course of employment. Under the ECS, employers are required to remit on a monthly basis to the National Social Insurance Trust Fund 1% of the employer's total monthly payroll as ECS contributions. This guarantees the registration of the employees for the benefits of the scheme. The contribution is mandatory for employers.

Industrial Training Fund. Employers with five or more employees are required to contribute 1% of their total payroll costs to the Industrial Training Fund (ITF). Employers with less than five employees but with a turnover of NGN50 million (approximately USD125,000) and above are also required to make the above contribution to the ITF. The term "employee" includes temporary employees who work for periods of not less than three months. The ITF may refund up to 50% of the amount contributed by an employer if the employer has engaged in approved training for its employees.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The federal government is responsible for enacting individual income tax legislation. The Internal Revenue office in each state administers and collects taxes from taxable residents. The federal government collects taxes from the armed forces, police personnel and External Affairs Officers as well as tax levied on nonresidents for income derived from Nigeria.

The tax year in Nigeria is the calendar year. Income tax is assessed on employment income on a current-year basis. Tax on income from a trade, business, profession or vocation is assessed on a preceding-year basis, except for the first three and the last two years of assessment. The basis period is the financial year chosen for the trade, business, profession or vocation. Investment income and other income are also assessed on a preceding-year basis.

Employers are obliged to file annual returns with respect to a year of assessment for employees no later than 31 January of the following year of assessment. Every taxable individual is required to file an individual tax return within 90 days after the beginning of each year of assessment. Individuals who earn the monthly minimum wage of NGN30,000 or less are not required to file a tax return.

Like residents, nonresidents earning income in Nigeria must account for such income in their tax returns.

Tax on employment income is paid by withholding from salary under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system. For business income, the tax due must be paid within 60 days after the receipt of an assessment notice from the Internal Revenue.

Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Foreign tax paid on income brought into Nigeria through the Central Bank of Nigeria, or through any other authorized dealer approved by the Minister of Finance, may be credited against tax payable in Nigeria on the same income.

Nigeria has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Belgium	Korea (South)	Romania
Canada	Mauritius	South Africa
China Mainland	Netherlands	Spain
Czech Republic	Pakistan	United Kingdom
France	Philippines

F. Entry visas

Nigerian consulates abroad issue various types of entry visas to bona fide business travelers, expatriate assignees (either on short- or long-term assignments) and visitors traveling for holidays. Entry visas are typically issued for a single entry into Nigeria, but visitors on tourist and business visa platforms may be granted multiple entries at the discretion of the Nigeria consulates abroad.

The various entry visas include transit visas issued to individuals who are passing through Nigeria en route to other destinations, but expect to stay in the country for up to seven days. Travelers in direct transit or whose transition period does not exceed 48 hours do not need transit visas.

Tourist visas are issued to applicants coming to Nigeria to visit families and friends or for tourism purposes. The visitor's stay in Nigeria can be extended subject to the approval of Nigeria Immigration Service (NIS), and relevant statutory fees may apply.

Business visas are issued to visitors and investors coming to Nigeria for discussions or meetings relating to business purposes. Any form of work-related activity is prohibited for holders of this visa. An extension of stay in Nigeria is permissible subject to NIS approval, and relevant statutory fees may apply.

A few years ago, the federal government introduced the Visa on Arrival (VOA) program to promote foreign direct investment and to ease doing business in Nigeria. The VOA program facilitates expedited entry into Nigeria for top executives of multinationals, high net worth private investors and business travelers from countries where no Nigerian consulates are located. In addition, consideration is given to other business travelers who need to urgently attend meetings, seminars and conferences in Nigeria on short notice. The approval of this facility is at the sole discretion of the Comptroller General (CG) of the NIS.

Temporary work permit (TWP) visas are issued to expatriates with specialized skills for work on short-term specific projects that are based in Nigeria. The visa application process is initiated in Nigeria by obtaining a local approval (a TWP pre-approval) for up to two months, which is granted by the CG of the NIS. The expatriates then present the approval, together with other supporting documents at the relevant Nigerian consulate abroad. An extension of stay in Nigeria is permissible subject to NIS approval, and relevant statutory fees may apply. For further details regarding the TWP visas, see Section G.

The subject-to-regularization (STR) visa is issued to expatriate assignees (including their dependents if applicable) who will be coming to work and live in Nigeria on a long-term basis. Expatriate assignees on this work visa platform are expected to be placed in the host company's approved Expatriate Quota (EQ) positions. On arrival in Nigeria, a Combined Resident Permit and Alien Card (CERPAC) is issued to an expatriate assignee as a temporary resident permit receipt. Subsequently, a Green Card, which is a permanent resident permit, is expected to be issued within 90 days.

G. Work permits and self-employment

The federal government, through its relevant agencies, regulate the employment of expatriates in Nigeria to ensure that the right skills are imported or transferred and, at the same time, to promote employment opportunities for qualified Nigerians. Applications for entry visas into Nigeria are screened for security as well as the potential for foreign direct investment.

The TWP visa application process is initiated in Nigeria by obtaining an electronic TWP pre-approval from the headquarters of the NIS. Specific information about the expatriate, including a copy of the international passport data page, the nature of assignment to be performed and country of visa application must be well articulated in the application. On approval of the CG of the NIS, a TWP pre-approval is issued for presentation at the relevant Nigeria consulate abroad.

The following documents are generally required to process a TWP visa application:

- Completed visa application form
- Copy or original TWP pre-approval as approved by the CG of the NIS
- Letter of invitation or visa application letter (to be provided by the host company on its letterhead and addressed to the specific Nigerian consulate abroad)
- Acknowledgment receipt confirming payment of visa fee
- Postal order made payable to the Nigeria consulate office and additional administrative charges for express service (this may not apply to all Nigerian consulates)
- International passport with a minimum of six months' validity and with two blank facing pages
- Return flight ticket

The above list is not exhaustive because visa requirements are determined by the various Nigerian consulates abroad.

Companies that require services of foreign nationals for permanent or long-term employment must have previously obtained an approval for specific EQ positions at the Federal Ministry of Interior (FMI) in Abuja as well as a business permit for non-indigenous companies. After the validity and availability of the EQ positions are confirmed, host companies can bring their qualified expatriate assignees to Nigeria on the STR visa platform (see Section F).

Foreign nationals taking up employment in Nigeria are classified into the following categories for visa application purposes:

- Individuals taking up employment in Free Trade Zones in Nigeria. This category is not subject to EQ conditions.

- Individuals taking up employment with partially government-owned organizations and private sector companies and organizations. This category is subject to EQ conditions.

Expatriates coming to Nigeria for employment under the above categories must apply for entry visas through Nigerian consulates abroad. The Nigerian consulates may issue entry visas, including STR visas (see Section F).

Applications for STR visas must be supported with quadruplicate copies of the following documents, stamped by the appropriate Nigerian consulate in the applicant's home country or country of residence:

- Completed visa application form (Form IMM/22)
- Credentials and academic qualifications or certificates
- Valid EQ approval letter
- Business permit and certificate of incorporation of the host company
- Offer of employment letter
- Acceptance of employment letter
- Board of directors' resolution (applicable if roles are to be assigned for senior management positions, such as Managing Director, Chief Executive Officer and General Manager)
- Letter of invitation or visa application letter (to be provided by the host company on its letterhead and addressed to the specific Nigerian consulate abroad)
- Acknowledgment receipt confirming payment of visa fee, as well as a postal order made payable to the Nigeria consulate for additional administrative charges and express service (this may not apply to all Nigerian consulates)
- International passport with a minimum of six months' validity and with two blank facing pages

Requirements may vary slightly among Nigerian embassies in different countries.

STR visas are granted for three months. The required documents must be approved and endorsed by the Nigerian embassy abroad and given to the expatriate in a sealed envelope, for presentation to the NIS on the expatriate's arrival in Nigeria. The host company must present these documents to the NIS together with a CERPAC usually referred to as a temporary residence permit and an application letter for "Regularization of Stay." On approval of the CG of the NIS, a permanent residence permit (Green Card) is issued.

The CG of the NIS abolished the use of re-entry visas (single and multiple re-entry visas) by resident expatriates, effective from 6 March 2015. Consequently, resident expatriates can commute in and out of Nigeria based on endorsed CERPACs or valid Green Cards. Expatriates employed in Nigeria are issued CERPACs on application for regularization of stay, which must be made within three months of arrival in the country. Permanent resident permits (Green Cards) are issued on completion of this process.

Expatriates may transfer from one company to another if the prior consent of the NIS is obtained. To obtain consent, the previous employer must signify in writing it has no objection to the change of employment, and the new company then applies to the NIS for the transfer of the expatriate.

Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) nationals are exempted from EQ conditions and are only required to obtain ECOWAS residence cards for work purposes. This type of residence permit is valid for two years, subject to the validity of the assignee's international passport.

All resident expatriates or visitors who wish to remain in Nigeria for a period of more than 90 days must complete the migrant e-registration process, as mandated by the federal government.

Foreign nationals may establish businesses in Nigeria and own up to 100% of the share capital of their companies. Companies that are partly or wholly owned by foreign nationals must be registered with the Nigerian Investment Promotion Commission or the FMI in Abuja after incorporation.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family members of expatriates must show evidence of their relationships, including marriage certificates and birth certificates. Dependents above 18 years of age are also issued CERPACs. Dependent minors are issued "Minor" immigration status endorsements, subject to the validity of their parents' residence permits. This allows them travel in and out of the country. Dependent minors are permitted to attend public or private schools.

A dependent with CERPAC status may be employed by a Nigerian company if he or she is at least 18 years of age, with requisite academic qualifications and if the company has vacant expatriate quota positions. An application is forwarded by the Nigerian company to the NIS with copies of the applicant's résumé and academic professional certificates. On NIS approval of the application, the status of the applicant is upgraded from the status of dependent to principal residence expatriate.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals are not permitted to drive legally in Nigeria with their home country driver's licenses. They must have international driver's licenses or prove that they have applied for Nigerian driver's licenses.

Nigeria does not have driver's license reciprocity with any other country. Foreign nationals must apply for Nigerian driver's licenses after obtaining their residence permits.

The following documents must be submitted with an application form and payment of the necessary fee to obtain a driver's license:
- A copy of the residence permit
- A copy of the foreign driver's license
- Two passport-size photographs
- The applicant's blood group
- Evidence of good eyesight

No actual driving test is required of a license applicant. However, a physical examination is conducted if considered necessary by the issuing authority.

A. Income tax

Who is liable

Territoriality. Individuals resident in the Republic of North Macedonia (RNM) are subject to income tax on their worldwide income. Nonresident individuals are subject to income tax on their income earned in the RNM.

Definition of resident. An individual is a resident of the RNM if he or she has a permanent or temporary residence in the RNM. An individual is considered to be resident in the RNM if he or she is present in the RNM either continuously or with interruptions for 183 or more days in any 12-month period.

Income subject to tax. Under the North Macedonian Law on Personal Income Tax, the following types of income are subject to tax:

- Labor income
- Self-employment income
- Income from the sale of own agricultural products
- Income from property and property rights
- Income from copyrights and industrial property rights
- Investment income
- Capital gains
- Insurance income, including insurance premiums
- Gains from games of chance
- Other revenues, including income from e-trading, e-marketing services, income generated from the sale of solid waste, unused financial help intended for medical treatments and costs for inventory shortages that are not a result of vis major or theft and are not on account of the employer

The various types of income are discussed below.

Labor income. Labor income consists of any income earned by an individual on the basis of employment, including income derived from a temporary contract or the temporary rendering of services, with state administrative bodies and domestic and foreign legal entities and individuals, as well as income derived by domestic and foreign individuals performing an independent activity, unless exempted from taxation. The following items are included in labor income:

- Salaries and allowances (to the extent that the amounts exceed the legal threshold amounts for allowances) arising from employment, performance-based remuneration (for example, bonuses) and fringe benefits
- Pensions
- Income realized by members of management and supervisory boards of enterprises
- Income realized by officials, members of parliament, advisors and similar high-level persons
- Income realized by professional sportspersons (for example, premiums and transfers)
- Remuneration for practical work by pupils and practical lessons by students (to the extent that the amounts exceed the legal threshold)
- Sick-leave allowances
- Annual leave allowances
- Allowances for judges and jury members, forensic experts and receivers not employed by the respective institutions or enterprises
- Compensation and remuneration paid to the members of the North Macedonian Academy of Sciences and Arts
- Salaries earned and paid abroad based on employment contracts with North Macedonian employers
- Pension allowances from a voluntary funded pension insurance
- Contributions to a voluntary funded pension insurance fund paid by legal entity or individual performing an independent activity
- Income derived from rendering services under contracts with entities and individuals on a temporary or occasional basis
- Remuneration for internship work in accordance with the Law on Internship

Self-employment income. Self-employment income includes income from the following types of activities:

- Business activities
- Professional and other intellectual services
- Agricultural activities
- Other activities with the objective of realizing revenues

Self-employed persons must maintain accounting books, except individuals whose total income from agricultural activities does not exceed MKD1 million annually. The tax base for employment income is net income, which is the difference between revenues and expenditures.

Income from sale of own agricultural products. The tax base for income realized from the sale of agricultural products is the difference between the total income realized and the recognized normative expenses in the amount of 80% (that is, 80% of the expenses incurred by the taxpayer are recognized as deductible for personal income tax purposes). Taxpayers whose income realized from the sale of agricultural products does not exceed MKD1 million are entitled to claim back the tax paid, provided that they did not realize any other personal income in the reporting year.

Income from property and property rights. Income from property and property rights includes income earned through the lease or sublease of land, residential or business premises, garages, leisure and recreational premises, equipment, transportation vehicles and other types of property.

Income from copyrights and industrial property rights. Income from royalties is considered to be payments received for the use of, or the right to use, copyrights and industrial property rights.

Investment income. Under the North Macedonian Law on Personal Income Tax, investment income includes the following items:
- Dividends and other income received from participations in the profits of legal entities
- Interest on loans granted to natural persons and legal entities
- Interest on deposits
- Interests on securities
- Other income from securities or financial instruments

The gross amounts of the above items are taxable.

Capital gains. Capital gains consist of income realized through the difference between the sale and the purchase price when selling or exchanging immovable property, securities, equity interests, and other tangible and intangible assets. If the difference is negative, a capital loss is generated.

Gains from games of chance and other prize games. An amount of gain exceeding MKD5,000 from conventional games of chance is subject to personal income tax. Gains from gambling on sports games is fully subject to tax.

Insurance income. Insurance income includes the following:
- Life insurance premiums paid by legal entities or self-employed individuals
- Voluntary health insurance premiums paid by legal entities or self-employed individuals
- General insurance premiums paid by legal entities or self-employed individuals, except for premiums that are exempt from tax
- Insured amount, except damage compensation that is exempt from tax under the provision of the law

The following are the tax bases for calculating the tax on income from insurance:
- The amount of the premium for life insurance paid by a legal entity or self-employed individual that exceeds the amount of two average gross salaries paid in the country, per employee
- The amount of the paid voluntary health insurance premium paid by a legal entity or self-employed individual that exceeds the amount of one average gross salary paid in the country
- The amount of the premium for non-life insurance paid by a legal entity or self-employed individual
- The insured amount reduced by the amount of the paid life insurance premiums if the premiums are paid by a natural person (that is, the insured amount reduced by the amount of the paid life insurance premiums subject to tax)

The following are exempted from tax:
- Paid premiums for the collective insurance of employees borne by the employer and by self-employed individuals for injuries at work
- Paid premiums for life and other insurance for employees and for self-employed individuals, in the amount of two average monthly gross salaries in the country per year

Other income. Any income that is not specifically mentioned in the Law on Personal Income Tax as being exempt from tax is considered to be other income, including income from e-trading, e-marketing services, income generated from the sale of solid waste, unused financial help intended for medical treatments and costs for inventory shortages that are not a result of vis major or theft and are not on account of the employer. The base for calculating the income tax on income referred to in the preceding sentence is gross income. However, the base for calculating the tax on the income generated from selling useful solid waste equals the gross income reduced by the tax-deductible costs in the amount of 50% of gross income.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. No specific measures in the North Macedonian tax law cover the taxation of stock options. Stock options granted are generally regarded as part of employment remuneration.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Deductible expenses for personal income tax purposes include the following:
- Contributions by an individual for pension, disability and health insurance and for employment
- Contributions by the individual for voluntary pension and disability insurance
- Fees and other public duties paid

Nonresident individuals may not claim the above deductions.

Personal deductions and allowances. Resident individuals may claim a deductible personal exemption in the annual income tax calculation. For 2021, the annual personal exemption equals MKD101,256. Nonresident individuals may not claim such exemption.

Rates. Under the most recent amendments to the Law on Personal Income Tax, personal income tax on employment income, self-employment income, income from the sale of own agricultural products and income from royalties are taxed at a flat rate of 10% until 1 January 2023. As of 1 January 2023, the following progressive tax rates will apply:
- Annual tax base up to MKD1,080,000 (approximately EUR17,560): 10%
- Annual tax base exceeding MKD1,080,000: 18%

The following progressive tax rates will apply to monthly payments:
- Monthly tax base up to MKD90,000 (approximately EUR1,464): 10%
- Monthly tax base exceeding MKD90,000: 18%

Income generated from industrial rights, leases and subleases, capital insurance and other income is also taxed at a flat rate of 10% until 1 January 2023. Effective from that date, the income will be subject to tax at a rate of 15%.

Capital gains are subject to tax at a flat rate of 10% until 1 January 2023. Effective from that date, capital gains will be taxed under a new regime in the following manner:

- The general tax rate for capital gains will be 15%.
- The following will be the tax rates for capital gains derived from the sale of securities and shares in investment funds:
  - 15% rate for holders of securities and shares for a period of up to 1 year
  - 10% rate for holders of securities and shares for a period from 1 to 10 years
  - 0% rate (tax exemption) for long-term holders of securities and shares for more than 10 years, as well as securities acquired from an initial public offering

The other types of income are subject to tax at a flat tax rate of 10% until 1 January 2023. Effective from that date, these types of income will be taxed at a rate of 15%.

Tax credit. Individuals donating financial resources to a legal entity under the Law on Donations and Sponsorship of Welfare Activities may claim a credit against personal income tax in their annual tax return. The credit may not exceed an amount equal to the first 20% of the annual tax debt, up to a maximum of MKD24,000.

Relief for losses. Capital losses from sales of shares can be carried forward for three years. Loss carrybacks are not allowed.

B. Other taxes

Property tax. Property tax is imposed on the owners of real estate, non-agricultural land, residential buildings or flats, business areas, administrative buildings, buildings or flats for rest and recreation, garages and other constructions. Property tax rates range between 0.1% and 0.2%, depending on the type and location of the property.

As of 1 January 2022, the property tax rates applicable for property that is not being used by the owner or is not leased for six months in one year will be increased to a range of 0.3% to 0.6%. In addition, property owners who fail to report that they own a property that is not being used, will be under the obligation to pay increased property taxes at rates of 0.5% to 10%, depending on the type and location of the property.

Real estate transfer tax. Transfers of real estate are subject to real estate transfer tax at a rate of 2% to 4% of the market value of the real estate.

Inheritance and gift taxes. Inheritance and gift taxes are imposed on the transfer of certain property by inheritance or gift. Inheritances and gifts are subject to tax if the market value of the inheritance or gift is higher than the amount of the average annual salary in the RNM in the preceding year, according to the data from the State Statistics Bureau. The following types of property are subject to tax:

- Immovable property
- Money and claims of money
- Securities and other movable property

The inheritance and gift tax rates vary depending on the order of succession of the recipient. The tax rate is 0% for taxpayers in the first line of succession. For taxpayers in the second line of succession, the tax rate is between 2% and 3%. For other taxpayers, the rate is between 4% and 5%. The municipal authorities fix the actual rate of tax.

C. Social security

Contributions. Employers are required to withhold the contributions listed in the table below from gross salary. No employer contributions are required. The following are the rates for the contributions.

Contribution	Rate (%)
Pension insurance	18.8
Health insurance	7.5
Unemployment insurance	1.2
Additional health insurance	0.5

The minimum base for social security contributions equals 50% of the average gross national salary (50% of MKD41,141 [approximately EUR668]). The maximum base for social security contributions equals 16 times the average gross national salary (MKD658,256 [approximately EUR10,703]).

Self-employed individuals must pay the contributions at the above rates. Their minimum base is the same while the maximum base equals 12 times the average gross national salary (MKD493,692 [approximately EUR8,027]).

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security contributions and to assure benefit coverage, North Macedonia has entered into totalization agreements, which usually apply for a maximum of two years, with the following jurisdictions.

Albania	Czech Republic	Netherlands
Australia	Denmark*	Poland
Austria	Germany	Romania
Belgium	Hungary	Serbia
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Italy	Slovak Republic
Bulgaria	Kosovo	Slovenia
Canada	Luxembourg	Switzerland
Croatia	Montenegro	Turkey

* This agreement has not yet entered into force.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Reporting obligations for individuals. Resident individuals must submit an e-calculation (E-PDD) with the Public Revenue Office (PRO) and report any income received from local individuals and income received from abroad. Nonresident individuals must electronically report their North Macedonian-source income received from local individuals.

The submission of the E-PDD must be made by the 10th of the month following the month in which the income is received.

The tax obligation is calculated by the PRO on the submission of the E-PDD and the payment must be made by the 15th of the month following the month in which the income is received.

Reporting obligations for legal entities. Legal entities that pay personal income to resident and nonresident individuals must submit an e-calculation with the PRO and report the income paid to individuals. The tax obligation is calculated by the PRO on the submission of the E-PDD, and the tax should be paid simultaneously with the payment of the income.

Tax returns. The annual tax returns are prepared by the tax authorities based on the data provided by the legal entities that pay personal income and the individuals through the E-PDD system.

The completed tax returns are provided to the individuals by 30 April in the year following the reporting year. Individuals are entitled to review and to correct (if necessary) the tax return no later than 31 May. The annual tax obligation is determined from the tax returns provided by the PRO or from the tax clearance issued by the PRO based on the corrected tax returns.

The deadline for payment of the tax determined with the tax return is 30 June. The deadline for payment of the tax determined with tax clearance is 30 days after receiving the clearance.

Other rules. Tax at a rate of 10% (see Rates) is withheld from the following types of income:
- Employment income
- Income from the sale of agricultural products if the income payer maintains business records
- Income from royalties
- Investment income
- Income from property and property rights
- Income from property and property rights if the income payer maintains business records
- Capital gains
- Income from insurance, including insurance premiums
- Other income, including income from e-trading, e-marketing services, income generated from the sale of solid waste, unused financial help intended for medical treatments and costs for inventory shortages that are not a result of vis major or theft and are not on account of the employer

A fixed tax rate of 15% is withheld from gains from games of chance.

Individuals must pay the difference between the annual tax amount and the advance payments within 15 days after receiving the decision on tax liability based on the submitted annual tax return (PDD-GDP form).

F. Temporary visas

Under North Macedonian law, foreign nationals may request a temporary visa for touristic, business, personal and other purposes. The duration of the temporary visa is usually up to one year.

G. Work visas and permits

The reciprocity principle in international relations is considered in evaluating applications for work and residence permits. Apart from reciprocity criteria, only domestic economic problems may cause difficulties in the obtaining of work and residence permits. North Macedonian law provides for the following types of working visas:

- Self-employment visas, which are issued for a period of one year or three years or as permanent visas. Permanent visas may be issued to members of families in the RNM, foreign citizens from humanitarian programs or foreign individuals granted asylum.
- Employment visas, which are issued for up to one year.
- Work permits, which have a duration that depends on the nature of the work.

H. Residence visas and permits

North Macedonian law provides for the following three types of residence visas and permits:

- Residence permits, which are issued for six months to one year.
- Temporary visas, which are issued to foreign citizens who intend to stay longer than three months. They are usually issued for a duration of up to one year, depending on the reason for the visit (for example, employment, self-employment, study, scientific research or visiting family members). Temporary visas are renewable.
- Permanent visas, which are issued to foreign nationals who have been residing in the RNM with a temporary visa for 5 years or more and, during this period, the individual has not left the country for a continuous period of 6 months or for a discontinuous period of 10 months.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. After a foreign national obtains a residence permit or visa, the spouse and children may apply for their own residence permits on the basis of a family reunification.

Family members of foreign nationals holding residence permits or visas receive priority in the RNM for the obtaining of work permits.

Marital property regime. The ordinary marital property regime in the RNM is participation in jointly acquired properties.

Driver's permits. Foreign or international driver's licenses may be used in the RNM.

Foreigners that reside in the country for a period longer than six months are required to obtain a local driver's license.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands (CNMI) residents are subject to tax on their total income regardless of source. An individual who is not a US citizen or permanent resident or a CNMI resident is subject to tax on income from sources within the CNMI only.

Foreign nationals who are not lawful US permanent residents (who do not hold US immigrant visas) are considered CNMI residents under a "substantial presence" test if they meet either of the following conditions:

- They are deemed to be present in the CNMI for at least 31 days during the current year.
- They are deemed to have been present in the CNMI for at least 183 days during a test period of three consecutive years, including the current year, using a formula weighted with the following percentages:
  - Current year: 100%
  - First preceding year: 33.33%
  - Second preceding year: 16.67%

Among the exceptions to the substantial presence test are the following:

- An individual may claim to be a nonresident of the CNMI in the year of departure by having a "closer connection" to a foreign country.
- Under certain circumstances, it may be beneficial to be considered a resident of the CNMI for income tax purposes. If certain conditions are met, an individual may elect to be a resident in the year of arrival (first-year election) for tax purposes.

Citizens and permanent residents of the United States are generally considered bona fide residents of the CNMI if they satisfy both of the following conditions:

- They are physically present in the CNMI for 183 days or more during the tax year.
- They do not have a tax home outside the CNMI during any part of the tax year and do not have a closer connection to the United States or a foreign country during any part of the tax year.

The CNMI, part of the post-World War II Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, is now a self-governing commonwealth in political union with, and under the sovereignty of, the United States. Because of this connection with the United States, US citizens and permanent residents with CNMI income are taxed somewhat differently from nonresidents. In addition to its wage and salary tax and earnings tax system, the CNMI has adopted the US Internal Revenue Code (IRC) as its income tax law, with "CNMI" substituted for all references to "United States." US citizens and permanent residents who are bona fide residents of the CNMI must file their individual tax returns with the CNMI instead of with the US Internal Revenue Service (IRS).

Income subject to tax. A nonresident alien is subject to CNMI tax on income that is effectively connected with a CNMI trade or business and on CNMI-source gains, profits and fixed or determinable, annual or periodical income (generally includes investment income, dividends, interest and rental income).

Employment income. A two-tier tax system applies to all employees in the CNMI, one under the IRC and the other under the CNMI wage and salary tax and earnings tax laws.

Under the IRC, gross income and deductions in the CNMI are determined as they are in the United States. Taxable income from personal services includes all cash wages, salaries, commissions and fees paid for services performed in the CNMI, no matter where the payments are made. In addition, taxable income includes the value of an employee's expenses paid by the employer and the fair-market value of noncash goods and services provided by the employer, including housing and vehicles.

Under the CNMI wage and salary tax and earnings tax rules, taxable income is determined as in the preceding paragraph, except that reasonable travel and per diem allowances furnished by the employer are excluded.

Individuals are subject to the earnings tax on nonbusiness income earned in the CNMI. Examples of nonbusiness income include the following:

- Gain from the sale of personal property
- One-half of the gain from the sale of real property located in the CNMI
- Gross gambling winnings
- All other CNMI income, except retirement plan income, alimony, social security or unemployment compensation

A nonresident alien who performs personal services as an employee in the CNMI any time during the tax year is considered to be engaged in a CNMI trade or business. A limited exception to this rule applies to a nonresident alien performing services in the CNMI if the services are performed for a foreign employer, if the employee is present in the CNMI for no more than 90 days during the year and if compensation for the services does not exceed USD3,000.

Compensation is considered to be from a CNMI source if it is paid for services performed in the CNMI, regardless of where the income is paid or received. If income is paid for services rendered partly in the CNMI and partly in a foreign country, and if the amount of income attributable to services performed in the CNMI cannot be accurately determined, the CNMI portion is determined based on a workday ratio. Fringe benefits that meet certain requirements are sourced to the person's principal place of work. These benefits include moving expenses, housing, primary and secondary education for dependents and local transportation.

Educational allowances provided by employers to their local or expatriate employees' children 18 years of age and under are taxable for income tax and social security tax purposes.

Self-employment and business income. Every CNMI resident who operates a business is taxable on the worldwide income of the business. Nonresidents are taxable on business income derived from CNMI sources only. Nonresidents are taxed on income effectively connected with a CNMI trade or business after related deductions at the graduated rates of tax set forth in Rates. The rules for the computation of an individual's taxable income from a business are similar to the US rules. An individual's self-employment income is combined with income from other sources and is subject to individual income tax at the rates discussed in Rates. The rebate provisions described in Rates also apply to income tax on self-employment income. Business gross revenue tax (see Section B) also applies on income earned by an individual in connection with a business in the CNMI.

Investment income. In general, dividend and interest income earned by residents is taxed at the ordinary rates.

Nonresident alien individuals with investment income are subject to special rules. Investment income received by nonresidents from CNMI sources is ordinarily taxed at a flat rate of 30% of gross income, which may be withheld by the payer. The nonresident alien must then file an individual tax return to obtain the 90% rebate (see Rates). Portfolio interest from the sale of stock in a CNMI company is exempt from the 30% tax. An election to tax rental income on a net basis is available.

Directors' fees. In general, directors' fees are considered earnings from self-employment. The business gross revenue tax (see Section B) applies to directors' fees earned in the CNMI.

Income from certain foreign corporations. Under a complex set of rules, US citizens and CNMI residents with ownership interests in "controlled foreign corporations" may be subject to tax on certain categories of income, even if the income has not been distributed to them as a dividend. Beginning in 2018, the categories of income subject to current taxation are expanded. Individuals who were subject to these rules in 2017 were required to calculate a "transition tax" when filing their 2017 tax returns.

Capital gains and losses. Net capital gain income is taxed at ordinary rates, except that the maximum rate for long-term gains is limited to the following:

- 0% for married individuals filing jointly, with a maximum taxable income of USD80,800 (USD40,400 for single individuals)
- 15% for married individuals filing jointly, with a maximum taxable income of USD501,600 (USD445,850 for single individuals)
- 20% for married individuals filing jointly, with taxable income of more than USD501,600 (USD445,850 for single individuals)

Net capital gain is equal to the difference between net long-term capital gains over net short-term capital losses. Long-term refers to assets held longer than 12 months. Short-term capital gains are taxed as ordinary income at the rates set forth in Rates.

Investors who hold "qualified small business stock" may be entitled to exclude from income part or all of the gain realized on disposition of the stock.

Once every two years, CNMI taxpayers, including resident aliens, may exclude up to USD250,000 (USD500,000 for married taxpayers filing jointly) of gain derived from the sale of a principal residence. To be eligible for the exclusion, the taxpayer must generally have owned the residence and used it as a principal residence for at least two of the five years immediately preceding the sale. However, if a taxpayer moves as a result of a change in place of employment, for health reasons or as a result of unforeseen circumstances, a fraction of the maximum exclusion amount is allowed in determining whether any taxable gain must be reported. The numerator of the fraction is generally the length of time the home is used as a principal residence, and the denominator is two years. The repayment of a foreign currency mortgage obligation may result in a taxable exchange-rate gain, regardless of any economic gain or loss on the sale of the principal residence. In certain cases, part of the gain on the sale of a principal residence may not be eligible for exclusion. To the extent the taxpayer has "non-qualified use" of the property, that portion of the gain (determined on a time basis over the total holding period of the property) is not eligible for exclusion from income. A complex set of rules applies to determine whether a particular use of the property, such as renting out the property or leaving it vacant, is considered a "non-qualified use."

Capital losses are fully deductible against capital gains. However, net capital losses are deductible against other income only up to an annual limit of USD3,000. Unused capital losses may be carried forward indefinitely. Losses attributable to personal assets (for example, a personal residence or an automobile) are not deductible.

When the IRC took effect in the CNMI on 1 January 1985, a provision was adopted to exempt pre-1985 appreciation of CNMI property from income tax. For the purposes of determining gains and allowances for depreciation and amortization, the basis of CNMI real and personal property is the greater of the basis determined under the IRC or the fair-market value as of 1 January 1985. Fair-market value may be established either by independent appraisal or by discounting the ultimate sales price back to 1 January 1985, using discount factors specified in the tax regulations. Rates published by the IRS are currently used.

In general, capital gains received by nonresidents from the sale of stock in a CNMI company are exempt from the 30% tax that applies to investment income received by nonresidents. Gains from sales of CNMI real property interests, however, are generally considered to be "effectively connected income," and special complex rules apply.

Dividends. Dividends received by individuals from domestic corporations and "qualified foreign corporations" are taxed at the same special rates as those applicable to net capital gains, for both the regular tax and the alternative minimum tax. See Capital gains and losses for the tax rates.

To qualify for the 15% (or 0% or 20%) tax rate, the shareholder must hold a share of stock for more than 60 days during the 120-day period beginning 60 days before the ex-dividend date. Other dividends are taxed at ordinary rates.

Deductions. Deductions are allowed under the same rules that apply in the United States.

Rates. Taxes on income derived within the CNMI by CNMI residents are low, but their computation is complicated. The following factors affect the amount of taxes paid:
- The wage and salary tax, earnings tax and business gross revenue tax (see Section B)
- The tax under the IRC
- A rebate, usually at a rate of 90%, of the excess of taxes under the IRC over the combined total of wage and salary tax and earnings tax, and business gross revenue tax (see Credit and rebate)

Wage and salary tax and earnings tax. The following wage and salary tax and earnings tax rates apply to total taxable income in the CNMI.

Total taxable income Exceeding USD	Total taxable income Not exceeding USD	Rate on total taxable income %
0	1,000	0
5,000	7,000	3

Individual income tax. Under the IRC, the applicable CNMI tax rate, like the US rate, depends on whether an individual is married and, if married, whether the individual elects to file a joint return with his or her spouse. Certain individuals also qualify to file as a head of household. For 2021, the graduated tax rates listed below apply in the CNMI.

Over USD523,600	USD157,804.25 plus 37% of the excess over USD523,600

The brackets of taxable income are indexed annually for inflation.

The preceding rates are used to compute an individual's regular CNMI income tax liability. In addition, higher income taxpayers (income over USD250,000 for married filing jointly and USD200,000 for single) are subject to a 3.8% tax on their "net investment income." The definition of "net investment income" is broad and essentially includes all income other than income from a trade or business. Compensation from personal services is generally excluded from this tax.

CNMI also imposes alternative minimum tax (AMT) at a rate of 26% on alternative minimum taxable income, up to USD199,900 and at a rate of 28% on alternative minimum taxable income exceeding USD199,900 (long-term capital gains and qualified dividends are generally taxed at lower rates of 15% or 20%; see Capital gains and losses and Dividends). The primary purpose of AMT is to prevent individuals with substantial income from using preferential tax deductions (such as accelerated depreciation), exclusions (such as certain tax-exempt income) and credits to substantially reduce or to eliminate their tax liability. It is an alternative tax because, after an individual computes both the regular tax and AMT liabilities, the greater of the two amounts constitutes the final liability.

Credit and rebate. The income tax, wage and salary tax, earnings tax and business gross revenue tax (see Section B) are applied against the same income, but two provisions in the CNMI laws provide substantial tax benefits. To avoid double taxation, the law provides a credit against income tax for the wage and salary tax, earnings tax and business gross revenue tax paid on income earned in the CNMI. If income tax on CNMI income exceeds the sum of wage and salary tax, earnings tax and business gross revenue tax, part of the excess income tax is rebated. The following are the rebate percentages.

Excess income tax		Rebate on	Rebate on
Exceeding USD	Not exceeding USD	lower amount USD	excess %
0	20,000	0	90
20,000	100,000	18,000	70
100,000	—	74,000	50

Income earned by CNMI residents from foreign sources is subject to the full amount of income tax under the IRC. A special rule prevents US residents from taking advantage of the rebate by changing their residence to report gains derived on the sale of US property or stock in US companies on their CNMI tax return.

Relief for losses. In general, passive losses, including those generated from limited-partnership investments or rental real estate, may be offset only against income generated from passive activities.

Limited relief may be available for real estate rental losses. For example, an individual who actively participates in rental activity may use up to USD25,000 of losses to offset other types of income. The USD25,000 offset is phased out for taxpayers with adjusted gross income of between USD100,000 and USD150,000, and special rules apply to married individuals filing separate tax returns.

Disallowed losses may be carried forward indefinitely and used to offset net passive income in future years. Any remaining loss may be used in full when a taxpayer sells the investment in a transaction that is recognized for tax purposes.

B. Other taxes

Business gross revenue tax. The following table presents the brackets and rates for the business gross revenue tax.

Gross revenue		Rate on total
Exceeding USD	Not exceeding USD	gross revenue %
0	5,000	0
5,000	50,000	1.5
50,000	100,000	2
100,000	250,000	2.5
250,000	500,000	3
500,000	750,000	4
750,000	—	5

Manufacturers, ocean shippers and wholesalers are taxed at a maximum rate of 2%.

The business gross revenue tax on income earned in the CNMI may be credited against income tax paid on income earned in the CNMI. The rebate provisions described in Section A also apply to income tax on business income.

Estate and gift taxes. Non-US citizens and US citizens who receive their citizenship by birth or naturalization in the CNMI and are CNMI residents at the time of death are subject to US estate and gift taxes on assets located in the United States only, not on those located in the CNMI. US citizens other than those who receive their citizenship by birth or naturalization in the CNMI are subject to US estate and gift taxes on all of their assets, including those located in the CNMI.

The CNMI imposes an estate tax that applies only to estates that have US estate tax liability. The CNMI estate tax equals the lesser of the amount of the foreign death tax credit allowed under Section 2014 of the United States Internal Revenue Code, or the amount derived by multiplying the US estate tax less any allowable credits by the quotient of the value of the property situated in the CNMI, divided by the value of the gross estate.

C. Social security taxes

Social security tax. CNMI is covered under the US social security system. Under the Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA), social security tax is imposed on wages or salaries received by individual employees to fund retirement benefits paid by the federal government. The following two taxes are imposed under FICA:

- Old-age, survivors and disability insurance (OASDI)
- Hospital insurance (Medicare)

For 2021 the OASDI tax is imposed on the first USD142,800 at a rate of 6.2% on the employee and 6.2% on the employer. Medicare tax is imposed, without limit, at a rate of 1.45% on the employee and 1.45% on the employer. In addition, higher income employees (but not their employers) pay an extra 0.9% Medicare tax. The income threshold varies by tax return filing status. Married couples filing jointly pay the extra tax on their combined wages in excess of USD250,000, single taxpayers and heads of households on wages exceeding USD200,000, and married taxpayers filing separately on wages exceeding USD125,000. Self-employment income (see below) is added to the amount of wages when determining the threshold.

FICA tax is imposed on compensation for services performed in the CNMI, regardless of the citizenship or residence of the employee or employer. Consequently, absent an exception, nonresident alien employees who perform services in the CNMI are subject to FICA tax. Certain categories of individuals are exempt from FICA tax, including foreign government employees, exchange visitors in the CNMI under J visas, foreign students holding F, M or Q visas, and individuals covered under social security totalization agreements between the United States and other countries. These agreements allow qualifying individuals to continue paying into the social security system of their home countries, usually for a period of five years.

Filipino and Korean nonresidents are exempt from FICA under treaty provisions. A CNMI or foreign employer is responsible for withholding social security taxes from compensation paid to nonresident alien employees.

Self-employment tax. Self-employment tax is imposed under the Self-Employment Contributions Act (SECA) on self-employment income, net of business expenses, that is derived by US citizens and CNMI residents. The following two taxes are imposed under SECA:

- OASDI
- Hospital insurance (Medicare)

For 2021, the OASDI tax is imposed on the first USD142,800 of the net earnings of a self-employed individual at a rate of 12.4%. Medicare tax is imposed, without limit, at a rate of 2.9%. In addition, higher income individuals pay an extra 0.9% Medicare tax. The income threshold varies by tax return filing status. Married couples filing jointly pay the extra tax on their combined self-employment income in excess of USD250,000, single taxpayers and heads of households on self-employment income exceeding USD200,000, and married taxpayers filing separately on self-employment income exceeding USD125,000. Wage income (see above) is added to the amount of self-employment income when determining the threshold.

Self-employed individuals must pay the entire tax (unlike an employee who pays half the tax while the employer pays the other half of the tax) but may deduct 50% (not including the extra 0.9% Medicare tax) as a trade or business expense on their federal income tax return. No tax is payable if net earnings for the year are less than USD400. If a taxpayer has both wages subject to FICA tax and income subject to SECA tax, the wage base subject to FICA tax is used to reduce the income base subject to SECA tax. SECA tax is computed on the individual's US income tax return (Form 1040-SS). Nonresident aliens are not subject to SECA tax unless they are required to pay the tax under a totalization agreement (see Social security tax).

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

CNMI income tax returns are filed under the rules of the United States, but they are filed with the CNMI government instead of with the IRS. Residents of the CNMI report their US income on their CNMI returns, and residents of the United States report their CNMI income on their US returns. Income taxes withheld on CNMI wages may offset CNMI income tax liability reported on a US return, and taxes withheld on US wages may offset US income tax liability reported on a CNMI return. Estimated tax payments are filed with the CNMI or the United States, depending on where the taxpayer resides the day the payment is due. Self-employment taxes are paid to the IRS.

Nonresidents must file tax returns if they are engaged in a trade or business in the CNMI, even if they earn no income from the business. Individuals not engaged in a CNMI trade or business must file returns if they have any CNMI-source income on which all of the tax due is not withheld. If all of the tax is withheld, the returns must be filed to obtain the 90% rebate. Nonresident employees subject to CNMI income tax withholding must file tax returns by 15 April. Other nonresidents must file returns by 15 June.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Foreign tax credits offset CNMI taxes on foreign income in the same manner as in the United States. However, none of the US double tax treaties applies to the CNMI, and the CNMI has no double tax treaties of its own.

F. Non-immigrant and immigrant visas

On 28 November 2009, the CNMI transitioned from the CNMI immigration laws to the immigration laws of the United States. The transition period to the US immigration laws ended on 31 December 2014. The transitional worker non-immigrant visa classification (CW) for foreign workers only in the CNMI was scheduled to expire on 31 December 2019 but was extended through 2029 by the Northern Mariana Island U.S. Workforce Act of 2018. The CW-1 program allows employers within the CNMI to apply for permission to employ foreign (nonimmigrant) workers who are otherwise ineligible to work in the CNMI under other nonimmigrant worker categories. Beginning with the 2020 fiscal year, all CW-1 filings must include an approved temporary labor certification from the US Department of Labor. For details regarding the US immigration laws, see the chapter on the United States in this book.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals resident in Norway are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxable on Norwegian-source income only. Wages and remuneration may be considered Norwegian-source even if an employer has no permanent establishment in Norway.

Individuals present for a period or periods exceeding in aggregate 183 days in any 12-month period or 270 days in any 36-month period are considered to be resident for tax purposes. After emigrating from Norway, an individual continues to be considered a resident for tax purposes if the individual, or someone closely related to him or her, maintains a home in Norway. After emigrating from Norway, an individual who does not maintain a home in Norway is considered to be a resident if the individual stays in Norway for more than 61 days per income year.

Notwithstanding the conditions mentioned above, an individual who has been resident in Norway for more than 10 years is considered to be resident for tax purposes in the three-year period after emigration and for as long as he or she maintains a home in Norway or stays in Norway for more than 61 days during a year.

Special rules may apply to individuals working on the Norwegian Continental Shelf.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable income generally includes salaries and wages, bonuses, directors' fees, benefits in kind, annuities and pensions, whether the benefit is earned over a period of time, occasionally or on a single occasion. Most allowances and fringe benefits are considered taxable income.

Nonresidents are subject to tax at various rates on income earned from work carried out in Norway and on wages earned on ships registered with the Norwegian common shipping register.

Self-employment and business income. Residents are subject to tax on worldwide self-employment and business income. Nonresidents are subject to tax if they engage or participate in business or other economic activities carried on or administered in Norway. Furthermore, persons with assets in Norway in the form of real property or tangible assets are subject to tax on income derived from such assets at the ordinary 22% rate described in Rates. Special rules may apply to shipping activities.

Partnerships are subject to so-called net assessment. The partnership model applies to general partnerships (ANS), limited partnerships (KS), silent partnerships (IS) and shipping partnerships (Partsrederier). Effective from 2016, new regulations were introduced for distributed income to personal shareholders and participants in partnerships. As a result of the reduction of the corporate tax rate from 23% to 22%, the basis for the calculation of distributed income is increased by an adjustment factor of 1.44 (2021 rate).

For 2021, such partnership taxation ensures the same level of taxation on both retained and distributed profits as in limited companies. The maximum marginal tax rate for distributed income is 46.7% for 2021.

The partnership model applies to all partners, regardless of whether the partners are active. However, partners, other than partners who are individuals, are not subject to additional taxation at distribution under the exemption method.

For self-employed individuals, all business profits exceeding a risk-free interest on the capital invested are taxed as personal income.

Taxable personal income serves as the basis for levying both personal income tax (step tax) at a rate of up to 16.2% and the social security contribution at a rate of 11.4%. It also entitles an individual to pension points in the social security system.

Nonresidents are also subject to tax at the same rates that apply to residents on the following amounts:
- Income from, and capital invested in, activities carried on or managed either in Norway or on the Norwegian Continental Shelf
- Income derived from providing employees for principals who are carrying on activities in Norway
- Income derived from, and capital invested in, real and movable property located in Norway
- Fees paid to foreign entertainers and artists for performances in Norway

Nonresidents may also be subject to Norwegian taxes if they participate as general partners or limited partners in businesses carried on in Norway. For example, a leasing business with property in Norway is taxable, even if the activity is not carried out through a fixed place of business in Norway.

Investment income. Interest, rental income and royalties are subject to tax with other ordinary income at a rate of 22%.

For dividends received by shareholders who are individuals, a shareholders' model has been introduced. Under the shareholders' model, dividends exceeding a risk-free return on the investment (the cost base of the shares) are taxed as general income when distributed to individual shareholders. The part of the dividend that does not exceed a risk-free return on the investment is not taxed in the hands of the shareholder. If the dividend for one year is less than the calculated risk-free interest, the tax-free surplus amount can be carried forward to be offset against dividends distributed in a subsequent year or any capital gain derived from the alienation of the shares on which the dividend is paid. In addition, an adjustment factor of 1.44 is introduced for dividends in 2021.

The shareholders' model applies to dividends received by Norwegian individuals and to individuals resident in other European Economic Area (EEA) states who are subject to Norwegian withholding tax.

Effective from 2021, dividends are multiplied by an adjustment factor of 1.44, and the adjusted basis is then taxed as ordinary income at a rate of 22%. As a result, the effective tax rate for dividends is 31.68%.

Nonresidents are subject to a 22% withholding tax on dividends paid by Norwegian companies, unless a lower treaty rate applies. Withholding tax is not imposed on interest and royalties paid to nonresidents.

Directors' fees. Nonresident and resident directors are taxed on directors' fees from Norwegian companies. Directors' fees are taxed in the same manner as employment income.

Optional simplified tax regime for foreign workers. From 2019, a simplified tax regime, Pay As You Earn (PAYE), for foreign workers is introduced to the Norwegian tax system. The simplified tax regime is optional; that is, the individual can choose to be part of the regular tax regime, as described above, or the simplified tax regime. In the simplified tax regime, employment income is taxed based on a gross method with a fixed rate of 25% (including the employee social security contribution). If an A1/ Certificate of Competency form is provided, an individual can be exempt from social security contributions of 8.2%, resulting in a fixed rate of 16.8%. No deductions from the tax base are allowed. In addition, the tax is determined and assessed as final on an ongoing basis through the employer's tax withholding and reporting to the tax administration.

To be eligible for the simplified tax regime, the individual must be considered a nonresident or first-year resident according to Norwegian law. The regime does not apply to offshore workers and foreign seafarers. In addition, the annual employment income must be below a certain threshold. Other conditions may apply; therefore, a case-by-case evaluation is required.

Individuals who are part of the simplified tax regime do not have an obligation to submit an annual individual tax return (see Section D).

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Stock options provided by employers to employees are taxed at the date of exercise as income from employment.

The taxable value at the date of exercise is the fair market value of the shares at the date of exercise, less the exercise price and any other costs incurred by the employee related to the grant of the options or the conversion of the options to shares.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains derived from disposals of business assets, including real property, are subject to ordinary income tax at a rate of 22%.

Effective from 2020, capital gains from the disposal of shares are multiplied by an adjustment factor of 1.44, and the adjusted basis is then taxed as ordinary income at a rate of 22%. As a result, the effective tax rate for capital gains from the disposal of shares is 31.68%.

Capital losses derived from disposals of shares are deductible against ordinary income (22%). However, the taxable gain may be reduced by any unused tax-free amount with respect to dividends received (see Investment income).

The gain derived from the sale of a personal residence is not subject to tax if the owner lived in the residence for at least 12 months during the 24 months before the sale. Otherwise, the gain derived from the sale of a private residence is subject to ordinary income tax, and losses are deductible from ordinary income.

Nonresidents are taxed on capital gains from capital assets located in Norway only.

Exit tax. Norway imposes an exit tax on unrealized profits on shares or share units in Norwegian or foreign companies, including units in securities funds and stock options. The exit tax applies only to profit exceeding NOK500,000.

Individuals who have been resident in Norway for tax purposes are taxed on profits as if the shares, units, options and similar instruments were realized on the last day the individual was considered a tax resident of Norway for either domestic or tax treaty purposes. The deemed gain after an adjustment of 1.44 is subject to capital gains tax at the normal rate of 22%.

For individuals who have resided in Norway for more than 10 years and were born in Norway, the profit is calculated as the spread between the original cost price of the asset and the market value at the time of emigration. However, individuals who have resided in Norway for less than 10 years may choose to use the market price at the time he or she became tax resident in Norway instead of the actual cost basis. However, this rule applies only to shares and share units owned by the individual when he or she took up residence in Norway.

The exit tax ceases to apply if the gain on the assets is not actually realized within five years after the emigration (or in the case of stock options, if the options are not exercised in the five-year period). The taxable profit can also be reduced if the actual sales price was lower than the value of the shares at the date of emigration.

It is possible to defer the payment of the exit tax until actual realization of gain takes place. To achieve this deferral, the taxpayer needs to furnish adequate security for the payment obligation or move to a state within the EEA with which Norway has entered into an agreement for the exchange of information and assistance with recovery of taxes.

Deemed losses on emigration are also calculated using the same rules (that is, on shares sold within five years of emigration), and any loss is offset against gains chargeable at the capital gains rate of 22%. However, the loss may be excluded on emigration outside the EEA, and no loss is granted as a result of step-up of the historic cost price.

In general, strict documentation requirements apply at the time of emigration and for the following five years. If the deemed profit is less than NOK500,000 and, consequently, no exit tax applies, the taxpayer is still required to report the unrealized profit to the Norwegian tax authorities.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. A 10% standard deduction can be claimed by foreign seafarers and shelf workers because they cannot be included in the new regime for foreign workers (see Optional simplified tax regime for foreign workers).

Personal allowances. In calculating ordinary income tax for 2021, individuals are allowed a standard minimum allowance of 46% of gross compensation, with a maximum of NOK106,750 and a minimum of NOK4,000. This allowance is reduced proportionately if the individual is taxable in Norway for only part of the fiscal year.

Business deductions. To be deductible for tax purposes, items must be included in the statutory financial statements. In principle, all expenses for earning, securing or maintaining income, with the exception of gifts and entertainment expenses, are deductible. Valuation and depreciation rules for individuals earning self-employment or business income are the same as those for corporations.

Rates

Personal income tax. Personal income tax (step tax) is levied on income from employment and pensions, and no deductions are allowed. The step tax rates for 2021 are set forth in the following table.

Taxable income
Exceeding NOK	Not exceeding NOK	Rate %
0	184,800	0
184,800	260,100	1.7
260,100	651,250	4.0
651,250	1,021,550	13.2
1,021,550	—	16.2

Ordinary income tax. A 22% ordinary income tax (county municipal tax, municipal tax and state tax) is levied on taxable net income from all sources after taxable income is reduced by NOK52,450 for individuals both with and without dependents. The personal allowance in tax Class 2 for individuals with dependents was terminated from 1 January 2018.

If an individual is taxable in Norway for part of a fiscal year only, the income brackets and excludable amounts are reduced proportionately.

Relief for losses. In general, losses may be carried forward for 10 years.

B. Other taxes

Wealth tax. A municipal and national wealth tax is levied at a rate of 0.85% on taxable net assets exceeding NOK1,500,000.

Inheritance and gift taxes. Effective from 1 January 2014, inheritance and gift taxes no longer apply in Norway.

C. Social security

Contributions. Employers and employees, as well as self-employed individuals, must make social security contributions. Contributions are payable on all taxable salaries, wages and allowances and, for self-employed individuals, on personal income.

For employees, contributions are withheld by employers together with income tax, and the total amount is paid to the tax authorities. Employers' contributions, payable bimonthly, are deductible for income tax purposes. Employees' and self-employed individuals' contributions are not deductible. The 2021 contribution rates are 8.2% of salary for employees and 11.4% for self-employed individuals. For 2021, the employer's contribution is 14.1%. In certain municipalities, the employer rate is lower.

Expatriates and foreign employers of employees working in Norway are subject to these contributions if an exemption (or reduction) is not available under a social security convention between Norway and the country where the expatriate or the employer is domiciled.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Norway has entered into social security agreements with the following jurisdictions.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Income tax and wealth tax on net taxable assets are assessed for a fiscal year ending 31 December. For most individuals resident in Norway who do not have trading income, annual tax returns must be submitted by 30 April in the year following the income year. An extension of one month may normally be obtained. For self-employed individuals, annual tax returns filed electronically must be submitted by 31 May.

Individuals who are self-employed or who have income from sources other than salaries, wages and similar compensation, receive from the tax authorities an individual estimate of taxes to be paid during the tax year. These estimated taxes are due in four equal installments on 15 March, 15 May, 15 September and 15 November. Assessments have normally been made in the third quarter of the year following the income year. Beginning with 2011, the Norwegian authorities announce the assessments in four different months. An individual may receive an assessment in June, August, September or October. At the time of assessment, an individual receives a tax computation showing total assessed taxes compared to taxes paid. Any amount of tax overpaid is refunded to the taxpayer, and any tax due is payable in two equal installments.

Taxes are withheld by employers from salaries, wages and other remuneration paid to employees. Nonresident employees who do not provide their employers their tax-deduction cards issued by the tax authorities are subject to 50% withholding. Employees who present their tax-deduction cards are eligible for the reduced rate specified in the cards. The withholding taxes are preliminary payments and are credited to the taxpayers in their tax assessments.

Individuals who are part of the simplified tax regime are not required to file an annual individual tax return.

F. Immigration regulations

All foreign nationals, except EEA nationals, are required to obtain a work permit before entering the country. Entrance for short-term visits, tourist visits, family visits, business trips and certain other purposes for a duration up to three months is allowed in accordance with the applicable visa.

All foreign nationals (except Nordic nationals) who wish to enter Norway must also carry valid passports or other identification officially recognized as valid travel documents.

Norway entered into the Schengen Agreement on 25 March 2001. Under the agreement, no passport controls apply to pass borders within the Schengen area. Passport controls will apply to pass the Schengen area's outer border, both to enter and depart the area. Non-EEA nationals are subject to extended controls, that is, a search of the Schengen Information System to determine whether the individual is registered with a denial to enter. As a general rule, under the agreement, visas issued by Norwegian authorities are valid to enter the entire Schengen area. Likewise, visas issued by other Schengen countries are valid to enter Norway.

Norway has visa-free arrangements for short-term visitors with 64 jurisdictions, in addition to all of the EU/EEA countries. Citizens of these countries are not required to obtain visas to enter Norway for short-term visits. Other exceptions to the visa requirement may exist. For further details, contact a Norwegian Foreign Service mission or the Directorate of Immigration (UDI).

G. Work permits

Foreign nationals for whom a visa is required must apply for a visa or residence permit in order to stay or work in Norway for any length of time. Once the permit a granted, visa-required nationals will also be issued an entry visa.

Residence permits are granted only if a particular reason for living or working in Norway exists, such as a work assignment, a trainee assignment, cultural exchange or family immigration. Any person who applies for a work permit must receive a concrete offer of employment in advance. The applicant must also have adequate income.

Nordic citizens do not need a residence permit to reside or work in Norway.

EU/EEA nationals do not need to apply for residence permits in Norway. They can do an advance registration online and attend an appointment with the authorities in person on arrival in Norway. EU/EEA nationals need to register in Norway only if they intend to work and stay in Norway for more than three months.

Work permit application process. The residence permit application must generally be submitted from abroad before an individual enters Norway. An application can also be submitted through a power of attorney by a third party in Norway. A first-time work permit must be granted before entry. However, for individuals holding a legal immigration status in Norway, such as visa-free travelers and skilled workers, a residence permit application can be submitted after entry. If they apply in Norway, they can submit the application either to the police district where they live or at a service center for foreign workers.

Prior to submission, all applications must be registered through the Application Portal, and the relevant documents can be uploaded electronically to the immigration authorities. The Foreign Service mission can provide information about documents that must be included with the application.

The Foreign Service mission sends the work or residence permit application to the Directorate of Immigration, which decides whether to grant the permit. After the application is considered, the applicant is informed of the results by the Foreign Service mission in the applicant's home country or via a third party in Norway with a power of attorney. Foreign nationals from certain countries are requested by the police to complete a mandatory and free tuberculosis test within the first weeks after arrival in Norway.

Non-EEA nationals with an EEA employer. A non-EEA national may have the right to work in Norway without a work permit if he or she is employed by an EEA employer and if the following additional conditions are met:
- The assignment is of temporary nature.
- The assignee holds a work permit in the EEA country and has the right to return to that country.

For stays in Norway above three months, the assignee must apply for a residence card.

Exempt categories. The following foreign nationals are exempt from the work permit requirement for work travel lasting up to three months:
- Commercial travelers, business travelers or individuals who will attend meetings or seminars, receive training or attend pre-contract sales or negotiations.
- Research workers, lecturers and others invited to Norway by educational or research institutions for professional or charity reasons.

- Technical experts, technicians, consultants or instructors. The purpose must be to install, check, repair or maintain machines or technical equipment or to provide information on their use. The need for these workers may not exceed three months.
- Employees in private households or foreign nationals who are staying in Norway on visits.
- Professional athletes attending sports engagements in Norway.
- Civil servants who are paid by their own countries.
- Personnel of foreign rail, air, bus or truck services working internationally, and necessary watchmen and maintenance personnel on ships laid up in Norway.
- Journalists, foreign newspaper staff and radio or television teams on assignment in Norway, who are paid by foreign employers.

Self-employment. Non-EEA nationals who are self-employed and have established a business abroad may be granted a residence permit for a period of up to four years. Also, self-employed persons who intend to engage in a permanent business activity are entitled to a residence permit if the presence of the self-employed person in Norway and active participation in running the business is necessary for the establishment or continued operation of the business.

H. Permanent residence

A permanent residence permit entitles the holder to permanently reside and work in Norway. This permit is granted, upon application, to persons who have had permits for a total of three years that form the basis for a permanent residence permit in Norway.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family members of a foreign national who has a residence permit in Norway have certain privileges concerning the right to receive their own residence permits.

Close relatives of a person in Norway may receive residence permits, which are granted primarily to the spouse and to children younger than 18 years of age. In general, the person who is granted a residence permit for family reunification must be guaranteed sufficient economic support.

In general, an application for family reunification must be submitted from abroad, or via a family member or a third party with a power of attorney in Norway.

EEA nationals employed in Norway may normally be accompanied by a spouse, children and parents. If the family member is an EEA national, he or she can also register through the registration scheme for EEA nationals. If not, he or she must apply for a residence permit.

A family immigration permit gives the right to work, regardless of whether job offers have been received.

Depending on nationality, different relation documents are required for family immigration. Relation documents, such as marriage contracts, divorce contracts and birth certificates, are officially required to have an apostille. However, this is not always enforced.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive in Norway with their home countries' driver's licenses under the following circumstances:

- To drive a car with foreign license plates, the foreign driver's license must be valid for at least one year.
- To drive a car with Norwegian license plates, the foreign driver's license must be valid for at least three months.

After the end of the allowed periods, a foreign license must be changed to a Norwegian driver's license. A theoretical and a practical test may be required. The expatriate must apply for a Norwegian driver's license at the Biltilsynet office in the county where he or she lives within one year of arriving in Norway. If an application for a driver's license is made later than this time, it is difficult to obtain a driver's license. In general, to obtain a driver's license in Norway, an individual must attend an authorized driving school and take both theoretical and practical lessons.

A driver's permit issued by another EEA country is accepted on an equal basis with a Norwegian driver's license.

A. Income tax

Oman does not levy personal income taxes. However, tax is imposed on the income derived by sole proprietors. Only an Omani national or, under certain circumstances, a national of a Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) member country may operate a business as a sole proprietor in Oman. Individual persons carrying on professional business in their individual capacities are taxable in Oman.

Partnerships are taxed at corporate rates. To transact business in Oman, partnerships must have at least one Omani partner and must be registered with Omani authorities. Partnerships established by agreements entered into outside Oman that carry on profitable activity in Oman are taxed in Oman on income that is attributable to a permanent establishment in Oman.

No special rules apply to capital gains. Capital gains are taxed as part of the regular income of sole proprietors and partnerships.

Profits derived from the sale of investments and securities listed on the Muscat Securities Market are exempt from tax.

Royal Decree 9/2017 (RD 9/2017), which was published in the Official Gazette on 26 February 2017, increased the tax rate to 15% and removed the statutory deduction of OMR30,000. Also, RD 9/2017 provides a 0% or 3% tax rate to small-scale establishments, including sole proprietorships and Omani partnerships, subject to certain conditions. These amendments to the tax rates introduced by RD 9/2017 are effective from tax years beginning on or after 1 January 2017.

Up to 26 February 2017, a 10% withholding tax (WHT) applied to royalties, consideration for research and development, consideration for the use of or right to use computer software and management fees paid to foreign persons not having a permanent establishment (PE) in Oman or to foreign persons having a PE if such payments did not form part of the income of the PE in Oman. Effective from 27 February 2017, under RD 9/2017, the scope of WHT is extended to dividends, interest and fees for performance of services.

Ministerial Decision (MD) 14/2019 published in the Official Gazette on 10 February 2019, amended the Executive Regulations (ER) to the Income Tax Law (ITL) to provide certain exclusions and clarifications with respect to categories of payments that may be covered by or excluded from performance of services, dividend and interest for purposes of the WHT.

WHT on performance of services. The tax authority's view is anything that is not a purchase of tangible goods is considered performance of services and is subject to WHT. Although the term "services" is not defined in the ITL or the ER, MD 14/2019 introduces the following list of payments that are excluded from WHT:

- Participation in organizations, conferences, seminars or exhibitions
- Training
- Transporting, shipping and insurance of goods
- Air tickets and accommodation expenses abroad
- Board meeting fees
- Reinsurance payments
- Any services related to an activity or property outside Oman

WHT on interest. The amendments to the ER define the term "interest" for WHT purposes and clarify the treatment of returns generated by certain Islamic Finance products. The ER also excludes the following payments from WHT:

- Interest paid on amounts deposited in banks in Oman
- Returns on bonds and sukuk issued by the government or banks in Oman
- Benefits from transactions and facilities between banks for providing and managing liquidity or financing, if the term for repayment of the debt does not exceed five years

WHT on dividends. Amendments contained in MD 14/2019 define the term "dividends" for WHT purposes to refer to dividends distributed by joint stock companies and distributions by investment funds. Consequently, WHT on dividend payments applies only to distributions made by joint stock companies and investment funds to foreign shareholders.

Dividends and interest paid to foreign persons. A Royal Assent suspended WHT applicable on dividend and interest payments to foreign persons for a period of three years, effective from 6 May 2019. Further, in accordance with the Economic Stimulus Plan introduced by the Ministry of Finance on 9 March 2021, the suspension on WHT on dividend and interest payments was extended for a period of five years starting from the 2020 tax year. Accordingly, dividend and interest payments to foreign persons by Omani taxpayers are not subject to WHT during that period.

B. Other taxes

Value-added tax. Royal Decree No. 121/2020, issued on 12 October 2020, introduced a value-added tax law in Oman, which entered into force from 16 April 2021. The rate of VAT is 5%.

Excise tax. Excise tax was introduced in Oman, effective from 15 June 2019, on selected products at the following rates.

Goods	Tax rate (%)
Tobacco and tobacco derivatives	100
Carbonated drinks	50
Sweetened drinks	50
Energy drinks	100
Pork products	100
Alcoholic products	50

Recruitment fees. Total fees for issuing and renewing permits for recruitment of non-Omani employees range from OMR141 to OMR2,001, depending on the type of profession, number of workers and amount of salary. For non-Omani employees working in small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), the fees range from OMR101 to OMR1,001.

C. Social security and vocational training levy

Social security contributions are applicable only to Omani employees and are payable on a monthly basis by employers at a rate of 10.5% of gross salary, plus 1% for the coverage against occupational diseases and work injuries and 1% as a contribution to the job security fund, and by employees at a rate of 7% of gross salary, plus 1% as a contribution to the job security fund. The following is the definition of "gross salary."

"The basic salary in addition to all other allowances payable to the employee for his return of work."

A vocational training levy (VTL) must be paid by private sector employers in Oman with respect to their expatriate employees. The VTL rate is OMR300 (USD780) once every two years for each expatriate employee.

D. Tax treaties

Oman has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Algeria	Japan	Spain
Belarus	Korea (South)	Sri Lanka
Brunei Darussalam	Lebanon	Sudan
Canada	Mauritius	Switzerland
China Mainland	Moldova	Syria
Croatia	Morocco	Thailand
France	Netherlands	Tunisia
Hungary	Pakistan	Turkey
India	Portugal	United Kingdom
Iran	Seychelles	Uzbekistan
Italy	Singapore	Vietnam
	South Africa	Yemen

E. Visit visas

All foreign nationals must obtain valid entry visas to enter Oman, with the exception of Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) nationals from Bahrain, Kuwait, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. However, foreign nationals who are residents of any GCC country and whose residence permits are valid for a minimum of six months may obtain entry visas on arrival in Oman.

Normal visit visas. Several different types of normal visit visas are issued based on the purpose of the visit, including visas for businesspersons, tourists, family members of resident permit holders and those making official or personal visits to Oman. Stays are limited to one month from the date of entry, except for family visit visas, which are valid for three months.

Citizens from countries mentioned in List #1 issued by the immigration authorities, such as Austria, France, Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States, may obtain single-entry visit visas on arrival at all ports-of-entry into Oman. Nationals of countries mentioned in List #1 may also obtain single-entry visit visas by applying to Omani diplomatic missions and commercial representation offices. Missions and offices can issue these visas without obtaining the approval of the Directorate General of Passports and Residency in Muscat. The validity period of an applicant's passport must be at least six months.

Citizens of countries on the above lists can obtain multiple-entry visit visas. This visa is issued on arrival at all land-, sea- and air-entry points after filing the visa application form. It is not possible to extend the length of the visa. A holder of this visa must enter Oman within three months after the date of its issuance (see Multiple-entry visas).

Citizens of countries not appearing on the above lists may apply for express visas, which can generally be obtained within 24 hours (see Express visas).

Express visas. Express visas are for business visits only and can generally be obtained within 24 hours. The duration of a stay can be extended for one more week. The fee for express visas is OMR30.

Multiple-entry visas. Multiple-entry visas can be granted to businesspersons for entry into Oman more than once. In general, these visas are valid for six months to one year. Visa holders can enter the country during the validity period of the visa and stay in Oman for a maximum period of three months in each visit. These visas can be issued without a local sponsor to nationals of specified countries

Alternatively, local sponsors can request multiple-entry visas for business purposes.

Foreign investors in land or buildings in integrated tourism complexes that are under construction and their relatives of the first degree can be granted a multiple-trips investors visa, which is valid for a period of not less than six months and not more than one year and can be extended for one more year. Visa holders can stay in Oman for a maximum period of three months in each visit.

The fee for the above multiple-entry visa is OMR50.

F. Employment visas and self-employment

Employment (work) visas. Employers must obtain employment visas for their expatriate employees aged 21 or older to enter Oman. The application process requires a labor clearance from the Ministry of Manpower. The ministry reviews the labor clearance request from the employer and considers whether the position meets with approval criteria, which includes the level of Omanization (nationalization) achieved or planned.

The duration of employment visas is limited to two years from the date of entry. Applicants may not work in Oman until all requirements are completely processed. The employment visa must be used within three months after the date of its issuance.

Individuals holding employment visas in Oman must not stay outside Oman for more than six months. However, this rule does not apply to family members of employment visa holders.

Resident cards. Expatriates on work visas in Oman must have a resident card which is issued by the Directorate General of Civil Status. This card must be obtained within 30 days after entry into Oman. The card is valid for two years from the date of issuance.

Investors' visas. Foreign nationals may obtain investors' visas under certain circumstances. The investor or the investor's partner must obtain the approval of the investment from the Ministry of Commerce.

Self-employment. Foreign nationals, except nationals of GCC-member countries, may not start businesses in Oman. However, an individual holding a business visa may conduct business through a company that includes Omani shareholding.

Only an Omani and a national of one of the GCC-member countries may own land or buildings in Oman. Foreigners may own property only within designated integrated tourism complexes.

A foreign company is allowed to set up a subsidiary headed by a foreigner; however, certain rules limit the extent of foreign shareholding.

G. Residence permits

Employees must obtain residence permits, which are valid for two years. Residence permits are applied for by the employer in Oman. Residence permits are renewable every two years.

To obtain a residence permit, the employee must have a valid resident card (see Section F) and an employment visa endorsed in his or her passport.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Applications for family-joining visas must be sponsored by an Omani national or a company with commercial registration in Oman. The recipient must be either the spouse, a child below the age of 18 or close dependent of the holder of a valid resident card and residence permit.

Driver's permits. Western nationals with visit visas may drive rental cars in Oman using their home country driver's licenses for a period of three months. For most Western countries and all GCC-member countries, license holders may exchange their licenses for Omani driver's licenses, provided that the license had been issued at least one year earlier. Oman has driver's license reciprocity with most countries.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Taxation in Pakistan is based on an individual's residential status and not on his or her nationality or citizenship. Expatriates who stay in Pakistan for 183 days or more in a tax year (1 July to 30 June) are considered to be residents for tax purposes. In addition, under the 2021 Finance Act, individuals who are present in Pakistan for 120 days or more in the tax year and were present in Pakistan for 365 days in the four previous tax years in aggregate are also classified as residents. Residents of Pakistan are taxed on their worldwide income regardless of where it is received, while nonresidents are taxed on their Pakistan-source income only. Foreign-source income of an individual who is a resident solely by reason of his or her employment in Pakistan and who is present in Pakistan for a period or periods not exceeding in aggregate three years is exempt from tax unless such foreign-source income is brought into or received in Pakistan by the individual or unless the income is derived from a business of the person established in Pakistan. A resident is exempt from Pakistan tax on foreign-source salary if he or she has paid foreign income tax on such salary income.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Income from salary is Pakistan-source income if it is earned in Pakistan, regardless of where it is received. Consequently, an expatriate is taxable on such income in Pakistan, regardless of his or her residential status. Taxable income includes directors' fees and all remuneration for employment, subject to allowances and additions for certain noncash benefits.

Employer contributions to recognized retirement benefit funds, including provident funds (up to certain limits), gratuity funds and superannuation pension funds, do not constitute taxable income for an employee. A gratuity is a lump-sum payment made to an employee at the time of separation from the employer. A gratuity fund is a separately administered fund created for the purpose of making gratuity payments to employees. If they exceed certain specified limits, gratuity payments from unapproved gratuity funds are taxable when received by employees.

For employees, the entire salary amount, including allowances and benefits, is subject to tax, with the following exceptions:

- Free provision of medical treatment and/or hospitalization by the employer to the employee or the reimbursement of medical expenses is 100% exempt, if paid in accordance with the terms of the employment agreement. If not provided for in the employment agreement, a medical allowance up to a maximum of 10% of basic salary is exempt.
- For employer-provided automobiles that are partly for business and partly for personal use, the amount included in salary is 5% of either of the following:
  — The cost of acquisition of the automobile to the employer.
  — If the automobile is leased by the employer, the fair market value of the automobile at the beginning of the lease.
- For employer-provided automobiles that are solely for personal use, the amount included in salary is 10% of either of the following:
  — The cost of acquisition of the automobile to the employer.
  — If the automobile is leased by the employer, the fair market value of the automobile at the beginning of the lease.
- For employer-provided rent-free accommodation, the notional value of the benefit of accommodation provided by an employer is the amount that would have been paid by the employer if such accommodation was not provided. However, such amount may not be less than 45% of the basic salary of the employee.

Self-employment and business income. All individuals who are self-employed or in business are taxed on their business income.

All income received in Pakistan is subject to tax, unless specifically exempt. Residents are taxed on their worldwide income, while nonresidents are taxed on their Pakistan-source income only.

Investment income. Amendments introduced by the 2019 Finance Act changed the concept of "filers" and "non-filers" to "Persons Appearing in the Active Taxpayers' List (ATL)" and "Persons Not Appearing in the ATL."

In general, for mutual funds and non-specified cases, dividends are subject to a withholding tax at a rate of 15% for Persons Appearing in the ATL and 30% for Persons Not Appearing in the ATL. A dividend paid by an Independent Power Purchaser that is a pass-through item under an Implementation Agreement, Power Purchase Agreement or Energy Purchase Agreement and that is required to be reimbursed by the Central Power Purchasing Agency (CPPA-G) or its predecessor or successor entity is taxable at 7.5% for Persons Appearing in the ATL and 15% for Persons Not Appearing in the ATL. If a person receiving a dividend from a company and no tax is payable by the company due to an exemption from income tax, the carryforward of business losses under Part VIII of Chapter III of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001 or a claim of tax credits under Part X of Chapter III of the Income Tax Ordinance, 2001, the rate of tax is 5% for Persons Appearing in the ATL and 50% for Persons Not Appearing in the ATL.

Interest and profit- and loss-sharing income from investments and deposits, unless otherwise exempt from tax, is subject to a 15% withholding tax for Persons Appearing in the ATL and 30% for Persons Not Appearing in the ATL. However, if the yield or profit paid is PKR500,000 or less, the rate of withholding tax is 10% and 20% for Persons Appearing in the ATL and Persons Not Appearing in the ATL, respectively. Interest on government securities is taxed at the same rates.

Under the 2021 Finance Act, for persons appearing in the ATL, profit on debt (interest) derived by taxpayers, other than companies, is taxed as a separate block of income. Profit on debt not exceeding PKR5 million is taxed at a rate of 15%, while profit above that amount is not taxed.

The above provisions do not apply with respect to profits on investments in Behbood Saving Certificates or Pensioner's Benefit Accounts, provided that the tax on the profits is taxable at slab rates. However, the tax payable with respect to this income shall not exceed 10% of such profits. The withholding tax deducted is offset against the tax determined above.

Income from prize bonds and crossword puzzles is subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 15% for Persons Appearing in the ATL and 30% for Persons Not Appearing in the ATL. Income from raffles, lotteries and winnings from quizzes or sales promotions offered by companies is subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 20% for Persons Appearing in the ATL and 40% for Persons Not Appearing in the ATL.

Nonresidents are subject to tax on investment income as described in Rates.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Legislation taxes an employee on stock options granted by an employer or the employer's associate. The grant of an option or a right to acquire shares at a future date does not constitute income at the date of grant. If an option to purchase shares is exercised by the employee, the difference between the market value of the shares on the date of issuance and the amount paid by the employee is subject to tax. If the shares acquired by the employee are subject to a transfer restriction, the employee is subject to tax at the earlier of the time the employee has a free right to transfer the shares or the time the employee disposes of the shares.

In such a case, the difference, if any, between the fair market value of the shares at the time of getting the free title, or at the time of sale of the shares, and the cost to the employee is considered to be part of the taxable salary of the employee.

Capital gains and losses. In general, capital gains resulting from the disposal of capital assets, other than depreciable assets, receive favorable tax treatment if the assets are held longer than 12 months prior to disposal.

For assets held longer than 12 months, only 75% of the capital gain is subject to tax at the normal rates.

These provisions do not apply to capital gains derived from transfers of public company shares, vouchers of Pakistan Telecommunication Corporation, modaraba certificates, instruments of redeemable capital, derivative instruments and debt securities (collectively known as "securities"). Capital gains derived from the disposal of securities in the 2019 tax year are taxable at the following rates.

Holding period	Security acquired before 1 July 2016 %	Security acquired on or after 1 July 2016 %
Less than 12 months	15	15
More than 12 months but less than 24 months	12.5	15

The 2020 Finance Act has reduced the rates of capital gain tax on the disposal of immovable property as prescribed under Division VIII of Part I of the First Schedule to the Ordinance, which are shown in the following table.

Serial number	Amount of gain	Tax rate (%)
1	The gain does not exceed PKR5,000,000	3.5
2	The gain exceeds PKR5,000,000 but does not exceed PKR10,000,000	7.5
3	The gain exceeds PKR10,000,000 but does not exceed PKR15,000,000	10
4	The gain exceeds PKR15,000,000	15

Capital gains arising on the disposal of debt instruments and government securities, including treasury bills and Pakistan investment bonds invested through special convertible rupee accounts, are taxable at the rate of 10% for both Persons Appearing in the ATL and Persons Not Appearing in the ATL.

The amount of the gain arising from the disposal of immovable property is computed as consideration received by a person less the cost of the asset. The 2020 Finance Act introduced progressive reduction in the amount of gain based on each year of the holding period. The following is the mechanism for the taxation of capital gains on immovable property.

Holding period for immovable property	Reduction in gain (%)
Does not exceed one year	0
Exceeds one year but does not exceed two years	25
Exceeds two years but does not exceed three years	50
Exceeds three years but does not exceed four years	75
Exceeds four years	100

As a result of the above, if the immovable property is held for more than four years, no gain arises.

Advance tax on the sale, transfer, attestation and recording of immovable property is collected by sellers who are dependents of a Shaheed belonging to the Pakistan Armed Forces, or a person who dies while in the service of the Pakistan Armed Forces or the service of federal or provincial government, with respect to the first sale of immovable property if the property is acquired from or allotted by the federal government, provincial government or any authority duly certified by the official allotment authority and if the property acquired or allotted is in recognition of or for services rendered by the Shaheed or the person who dies in service.

The person responsible for registering or attesting to the transfer of immovable property is required to collect, at the time of registration or attestation, advance tax from the seller or transferor of the property at 1% of the gross amount of consideration received for Persons Appearing in the ATL, and 2% for Persons Not Appearing in the ATL. Also, tax at a rate of 1% and 2% is required to be paid on the purchase or transfer of immovable property from Persons Appearing in the ATL and Persons Not Appearing in the ATL, respectively.

The advance tax is offset against the tax liability of the person from whom tax has been collected. Advance tax is not collected from the federal government, provincial government or local government.

However, provincial governments levy stamp duties on all transactions involving immovable property.

Capital losses may be set off against capital gains only.

Super tax. The 2015 Finance Act introduced a super tax, which applied for the 2015 tax year to income from all sources, including capital gains of listed securities, and to all persons, including insurance companies, oil and gas and mineral companies, and banking companies. To compute taxable income for super tax purposes, business losses carried forward and depreciation carried forward are not taken into account.

The super tax is required to be paid at the time of filing of the income tax return. This tax applies to all types of income, whether taxable under the normal tax regime or the final tax regime at the following rates.

	Rate of super tax
	2019 tax year	2020 tax year	2021 tax year
Person	%	%	%
Banking companies	4	4	4
Persons other than banking companies, having income equal to or exceeding PKR500 million	2	0	0

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Muslim taxpayers may claim a deduction for zakat paid (see Section B) in a tax year.

A taxpayer may claim a deduction with respect to any markup paid on a loan meeting either of the following conditions:
- It is sanctioned by a scheduled bank or by a nonbanking finance institution regulated by the Securities and Exchange Commission of Pakistan.
- It is advanced by the government, a local authority, a statutory body or a public company listed on a stock exchange of Pakistan.

To claim the deduction, the loan must be used for the construction or acquisition of a house.

The amount of the above tax deduction may not exceed 50% of the taxable income of the individual or PKR2 million, whichever is lower.

An individual may claim a deduction for tuition fees paid in a tax year (deductible allowance for education expenses) if the individual's taxable income is less than PKR1,500,000. The amount of the deduction may not exceed the lower of the following:
- 5% of the total tuition fees paid by the individual
- 25% of the individual's taxable income for the year
- An amount computed by multiplying 60,000 by the number of children of the individual

In general, taxpayers may deduct all expenses (excluding personal or capital expenditures) incurred in carrying on a business in Pakistan, provided that the expenses were incurred solely for a business purpose and proper withholding was made with respect to such expenses. Depreciation on fixed assets used in a business is allowed at specified rates.

Tax credits

Tax credit for charitable donations. An individual may claim a tax credit for charitable donations, including donations in kind, made by him or her to any of the following:
- A board of education or any university in Pakistan established by or under a federal or provincial law
- An educational institution, hospital or relief fund established or run in Pakistan by the federal government, provincial government or a local government
- A nonprofit organization

To compute the above tax credit, the average rate of tax is applied to the lesser of the following amounts:
- The amount of the donation including the fair market value of any property donated
- 30% of the taxable income of an individual or association of persons donor

Tax credit for investment in shares and insurance. An individual is entitled to an allowance for an investment in shares and insurance for a tax year with respect to the cost of acquiring the following:
- New shares offered to the public by public companies listed on a stock exchange in Pakistan.

- Shares from the Privatization Commission of Pakistan.
- Sukuks offered to the public by public companies listed and traded on stock exchange in Pakistan.
- Life insurance premiums paid on a policy to a life insurance company registered by the Securities and Exchange Commission of Pakistan under the Insurance Ordinance, 2000 (XXXIX of 2000), provided that the resident person is deriving income subject to tax under the heading "Salary" or income from business. If the insurance policy is surrendered within two years of its acquisition, the tax credit allowed is deemed to have been wrongly allowed, and the Commissioner Inland Revenue recomputes the tax payable by the taxpayer for the relevant tax years.

Shares acquired by the taxpayer must be held for at least 24 months from the date of acquisition. If the shares are disposed of within 24 months, the tax relief is recaptured in the year when the shares are sold.

To compute the above tax credit, the average rate of tax is applied to the lesser of the acquisition cost of the shares, PKR2,000,000 or 20% of the taxable income of the investor.

Tax credit for contribution to an approved pension fund. Certain resident individuals are entitled to an allowance with respect to premiums paid in an approved pension fund under the Voluntary Pension System Rules, 2005. This allowance is available to individuals who have obtained a valid National Tax Number or a National Identity Card and are not entitled to benefit under any other approved employment pension or annuity scheme.

To compute the above tax credit, the average rate of tax is applied to the lesser of the following amounts:
- The total contributions or premiums paid by the individual in a tax year
- 20% of the taxable income of the individual, provided that for an individual joining the pension fund at the age of 41 years or above, during the first 10 years, the individual is allowed an additional contribution of 2% per year for each year of age exceeding 40 years, and provided further that the total contribution allowed to such individual may not exceed 50% of the total taxable income of the preceding year

In general, the withholding taxes on nonresidents are advance taxes that may be offset against the eventual tax liability.

Relief for losses. Business losses, other than losses arising out of speculative transactions, may be carried forward to offset profit in the following six years. Unabsorbed depreciation was formerly carried forward indefinitely. However, under the amended provisions of the law, the adjustment of unabsorbed depreciation and amortization is now available against "Income from Business" only to the extent of 50% of taxable income (after offsetting business losses, if any) in a tax year. Nevertheless, if the income from business in a tax year is less than PKR10 million, the unabsorbed depreciation and amortization can be set off without any limitations (that is, to the extent of taxable income).

B. Other taxes

Net worth tax. Net worth tax has been abolished.

Zakat. Zakat, an Islamic wealth tax on specified assets, is levied at a rate of 2.5%. This tax applies only to Muslim citizens of Pakistan.

Estate and gift taxes. The federal law in Pakistan does not levy estate taxes. However, under the tax laws, the receipt of a gift is included in taxable income, unless received from immediate family members.

C. Social security

Pakistan offers benefits to employees for death, disability, injury, medical expenses and pensions, as well as academic scholarships for workers' children. Employees earning less than PKR17,500 a month are generally covered by these benefits, with employers making contributions to the government at the following rates.

Benefit	Employer contribution
Employees' Old Age Benefits	PKR780 per month
Provincial Employees' Social Security (Sindh)	6% of monthly salary of up to PKR15,000*
Workers' Children (Education)	PKR100 annually

* No contribution is payable on employee salary in excess of PKR15,000 per month.

Employees are also required to contribute PKR130 per month for Employees' Old Age Benefits.

Pakistan has not entered into any social security totalization agreements.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Pakistan for all individuals is from 1 July to 30 June. Individuals must obtain special permission from the Federal Board of Revenue in Pakistan to select a different accounting year-end. All individuals must file their income tax returns by 30 September following the tax year-end. Non-salaried individuals must also file their income tax returns by 30 September following the tax year-end.

Employers must withhold taxes from the salaries of their employees.

Individuals other than employees having taxable income of PKR1 million or more must pay advance tax in four equal installments on 15 September, 15 December, 15 March and 15 June. Tax due after adjustment for both advance tax payments and tax paid at source must be paid with the tax return.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Under Pakistani tax law, residents are taxed on worldwide income. However, a tax credit is generally granted for income from sources outside Pakistan (from both treaty and non-treaty jurisdictions), at the lower of the average foreign tax paid or the average Pakistani tax attributable to the foreign income.

Pakistan has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

This list does not include treaties that relate only to shipping and air transport.

- The individual is present in Pakistan for less than a specified period (usually not in excess of 183 days).
- The services are performed for, or on behalf of, a resident of the other country.
- The profits or remuneration are subject to tax in the other country.
- If self-employed, the individual has no regularly available fixed base in Pakistan.
- The remuneration is paid by, or on behalf of, an employer who is not a resident of Pakistan.
- The remuneration is not borne by a permanent establishment or a fixed base maintained by the employer in Pakistan.

F. Visas

To promote domestic and foreign investment, enhance Pakistan's international competitiveness, and contribute to economic and social development, Pakistan has a liberal visa policy. The significant aspects of the new visa policy are described below.

Visas on arrival are granted to nationals of 50 jurisdictions. E-visas are provided to citizens of 191 jurisdictions.

Business visas for a period of up to five years are granted to the investors and businesspersons of 95 jurisdictions.

Pakistan missions abroad are authorized to grant entry work visas to foreign expatriates on the recommendation of the Board of Investment (BOI) for one year (multiple entry) with the validity extendable on a yearly basis in Pakistan. The BOI processes work visa applications within four weeks and makes recommendations to the Ministry of Interior regarding the authorization of granting visas by concerned missions.

Conversion of business visas into work visas had been discontinued, effective from 11 November 2014. However, conversion of business visas into work visas is again permitted. The conversion of business visas to work visas is processed within four weeks by the BOI.

Pakistan missions abroad have the authority to restrict the grant of visas to nationals of the country where the mission is located. The granting of Pakistan visas to third-country citizens residing in a country and holding a valid residence permit for that country can only be decided by the Ambassador, High Commissioner or the Head of Mission or Consulate.

Details regarding the various types of visas issued by Pakistan are provided below.

Business visas on arrival. Pakistan has a policy of granting visas on arrival (non-reporting) at the airports in Pakistan to foreign investors or businesspersons from 95 jurisdictions. Single-entry visas are granted for 30 days on production of the following documents:
- Recommendation letter from the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of the respective country of the visitor
- Invitation letter from a business organization recommended by the concerned trade organization or association in Pakistan
- Recommendation letter by an Honorary Investment Counselor of the Board of Investment posted at Pakistan missions abroad

The following documents must be submitted for a business visa on arrival:
- Invitation letter from the sponsor
- Two latest passport-size photographs of the foreigner
- Photocopy of passport of visitor or employee, including pages with picture and particulars of passport holder
- Certificate of registration of the employer with the Chamber of Commerce and Industry, if any
- Copy of NTN certificate of sponsor
- Copy of registration certificate of company or firm registered in Pakistan
- Exact travel plan of the visitor, including flight details
- Company profile of member firm (member of trade organization, such as the Chamber of Commerce)
- Company profile of foreign national duly attested
- Undertaking on stamp paper worth PKR100 with signature and National Identification Card (NIC) number duly attested

A prescribed visa fee is payable at the visa counter at the Pakistan International Airport on arrival.

Although the visa on arrival is granted based on production of the required documents, it is suggested that the required documents be filed in advance with the immigration authorities at the airport. Individuals should retain the invitation letter from the sponsor and a copy of the certificate from the Chamber of Commerce and Industry, because the immigration authorities may ask for these documents at the time of arrival.

Currently, the following jurisdictions are approved for the purpose of visas on arrival.

Visas are not granted to nationals of countries not recognized by Pakistan. Pakistan does not recognize Israel.

Tourist visas. Tourist visas are issued to foreign nationals of 191 countries (List A) who intend to visit Pakistan for recreational purposes but who intend neither to immigrate to Pakistan nor engage in remunerated activities.

A tourist visa is valid for a maximum period of 90 days. If a foreign national wishes to extend his or her stay in Pakistan beyond this period, to obtain an extension of the visa, he or she must apply to the relevant regional passport office located in their city or the visa desk of the Ministry of Interior (MOI).

Tourist visas generally are not granted to nationals of Bhutan, India, Israel and Somalia. They are also not granted to members of the Palestinian Liberation Organization. However, temporary visas may be issued to these individuals for certain specific reasons, including visiting relatives or attending weddings or funerals.

Work visas

Permissible activities. A work visa allows the foreign national to exercise employment in Pakistan in the entity for which the visa is granted. Such employment can be exercised for the period for which the visa is valid. A renewal of the visa allows the foreign national to remain employed. The work visa does not entitle the foreign national to work for another employer without submitting a new application and obtaining permission for employment with the other employer. The visa of a foreign national found to be engaged in activities other than employment with the approved employer is canceled and the foreign national is deported.

No written policy allows a foreign national to begin work in Pakistan while his or her application for a work visa is in process. However, as a result of the liberal policy followed by Pakistan, no serious exception is taken for beginning work before the issuance of a work visa if the foreign national has a valid business visa and if his or her application for a work visa is ultimately approved and business visa conversion instructions are issued by the MOI.

- Power of attorney in favor of the person authorized to represent the entity with respect to the handling of the visa applications.

Applications. Applications for work visas and family visas are initially filed electronically with the BOI in Pakistan by the person authorized by the employer, who could be the principal officer or the head of Human Resources of the employer in Pakistan or any consultant. After e-filing, all documents must be filed in person along with the visa processing fee. After the work visa and family visa are approved by the BOI, if the foreign national is already in Pakistan on a business visa and his family is also already in Pakistan on any visa, a further application is filed with the MOI by the employee and his or her family for the issue of instructions to the concerned Passport Office for endorsement of the visas on the passports. If the foreign national is not in Pakistan, the work visa approval is sent to the concerned Pakistan Embassy, Mission or Consulate Office located in the country of the foreign national.

Although no requirement exists for the presence of a registered entity in Pakistan for the issuance of a business visa, the presence of a registered entity in Pakistan where the employment will be exercised is essential for the issuance of a work visa.

Business visas

Permissible activities. An approved list of activities that could be carried out by a foreign national visiting Pakistan on a business visa has not been issued. However, the following are permissible activities:
- Attend business meetings
- Negotiate and sign contracts
- Attend exhibitions, displays, conferences, symposiums, workshops and similar events
- Conduct training of short duration
- Deliver lectures, make presentations and engage in similar activities
- Provide technical services of short duration, including removal of faults during the warranty period of equipment supplied by foreign suppliers, installation of software, troubleshooting to correct faults in software, software training and transfer of technical know-how
- Visiting project sites to obtain information, technical specifications or material required for executing a contract for the supply of goods or providing of technical or consultancy services to an entity in Pakistan
- Setting up of a branch office or a local company for doing business in Pakistan
- Hiring of local personnel for utilizing their services in a Pakistan project or a Pakistan entity
- Inspection of the goods that the entity intends to purchase from Pakistan

Extensions. The following documents must be submitted for a business visa extension:
- Two sets of the properly completed application signed by the applicant.

- Two latest passport-size photographs.
- Two sets of photocopies of the visitor's passport, including pages with the picture and particulars of the passport holder, and the visa page.
- Invitation letter from the employer.
- Documents showing substantial investment, exports or imports during the preceding year.
- Business documents, such as a letter from the Chamber of Commerce and Industry (CCI) or Registrar of Companies, partnership deed or articles of association, or, in special cases only, a copy of CCI membership documents. Extension of a visa beyond one year is granted by the Ministry of Interior on production of the requisite business documents.

Applications. The application for a business visa must be filed by the applicant with the Pakistan Mission or Visa Consulate in the country of the applicant.

Family visas. A family visa entitles the spouse and children to stay with the foreign national who is entitled to exercise employment in Pakistan based on a work visa. A spouse who wants to exercise employment for remuneration needs the approval of the Board of Investment.

G. Application for citizenship by investors

To encourage foreign investment in Pakistan, the government allows foreign investors to apply for Pakistani citizenship. Nationals of countries recognized by Pakistan may receive Pakistani citizenship by making a one-time investment of at least USD750,000 in tangible assets and USD250,000 (or the equivalent in a major foreign currency) in cash on a non-repatriable basis (that is, the funds may not be taken out of Pakistan). The amount must be brought into Pakistan through normal banking channels, must be converted into rupees and may not subsequently be remitted through the free market. Citizenship is also subject to the fulfillment of the general conditions for Pakistani citizenship and the security situation in Pakistan.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family members of working expatriates may reside with the expatriates in Pakistan. Family members must obtain their own work visas if they plan to work in Pakistan or stay in Pakistan with their family.

Children of expatriates do not need student visas to attend school in Pakistan.

Driver's permits. Expatriates may not drive legally in Pakistan with their home country driver's licenses. However, they generally may drive legally in Pakistan with international driver's licenses.

Pakistan does not have driver's license reciprocity with any other country. Therefore, a home country driver's license may not be automatically exchanged for a Pakistani driver's license.

To obtain a driver's license in Pakistan, an applicant must submit an application form, a copy of his or her passport, a copy of his or her foreign driver's license and two passport-size photographs to the license-issuing authority. The license-issuing authority then examines all the documents and, at its discretion, may grant exemption to the applicant. If the license-issuing authority grants an exemption to an applicant, the applicant is issued a driver's license in one day on payment of the required fee. If the license-issuing authority does not grant an exemption, an applicant must acquire a learner's permit. About six weeks after obtaining a learner's permit, an applicant must take physical and verbal tests. If the applicant passes the tests, a driver's license is issued on payment of the required fee.

I. Other matters

Overstay surcharge. An overstay surcharge is imposed on foreigners who overstay the duration of their visas.

The following are the amounts of the surcharge for foreign nationals other than Indian nationals and nationals of Pakistani origin.

Period of overstay	Overstay surcharge (USD)
Up to 2 weeks	0
More than 2 weeks and up to 1 month	50
More than 1 month and up to 3 months	200
More than 3 months and up to 1 year	400

In addition to imposing the above surcharge, the Ministry of Interior (MOI) may exercise its powers of externment (deportation) and any of its other powers with respect to the overstaying individual. No surcharge is imposed on holders of diplomatic passports.

The following are the amounts of the surcharge for foreign nationals of Pakistani origin.

Period of overstay	Overstay surcharge (USD)
Up to one month	0
More than 1 month and up to 6 months	40
More than 6 months and up to 1 year	80
More than 1 year	200 per year

Overstay charges are not condoned.

No surcharge is imposed for children up to 12 years of age, and a 50% surcharge is imposed for children over 12 years of age, but not older than 18 years of age.

For Indian nationals, a surcharge of PKR40 per day is imposed for any period of overstay.

Indians working for certain international organizations and multinational companies. Indian passport holders working for the World Bank, Asian Development Bank, International Monetary Fund, the United Nations or multinational companies may obtain a visa under an expedited procedure from the respective Ambassador to Pakistan after clearing with the link offices (the office of the employer of the Indian national).

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Unless otherwise stated in the law, income tax in Palestine is imposed on all income realized by any individual in Palestine.

A Palestinian national is considered resident for tax purposes if he or she resides in Palestine for a total period of at least 120 days in a calendar year.

A non-Palestinian national is considered resident for tax purposes if he or she resides in Palestine for a total period of at least 183 days in a calendar year.

Income subject to tax

General. As stated in Who is liable, all income derived by individuals is subject to tax unless otherwise provided in the law.

Investment income. Under the Income Tax Law amendments in 2014, dividends are subject to income tax. Dividends distributed by companies resident in Palestine are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 10%. The Ministry of Finance has put on hold the application of this rate and treats dividends as exempt income. The current treatment is that no taxes are imposed on dividends paid to individuals.

Interest income is taxable.

Rental income is treated as ordinary income and is taxed at the rates set forth in Rates.

Exempt income. The following types of income are exempt from income tax:
- Pension payments or lump-sum amounts paid in accordance with Labor Law. Amounts paid in excess of that required by the Labor Law are taxed.
- Salaries and allowances paid by the United Nations from its budget to its staff and employees.

- Income earned by funds approved by the Minister of Finance, such as retirement, savings, social security and health insurance funds, provided that the exemption is limited to income from the contributions of both employers and employees.
- Compensation paid for work injuries or death and employees' medical expenses.
- Travel mission or representation allowances that are paid to public or private sector employees, provided that they are spent for purposes of the job.
- Income from jobs or services earned by blind or disabled persons with 50% disability according to the report of the competent medical committee.
- Tax-exempt income pursuant to a special law or a bilateral or multilateral agreement concluded by the national authority.
- Additional amounts that are paid as allowances or bonuses to Palestinians while working abroad in the diplomatic or consular corps. This exemption does not include a cost-of-living allowance.
- The wages of non-Palestinian staff of the diplomatic or consular corps who represent other countries in Palestine, subject to reciprocal treatment.
- Income earned abroad unless originating from taxpayers' funds or deposits in Palestine.
- Inheritances, except for revenues generated from inherited properties.
- The income of cooperative associations in relation to their transactions with their members.
- Severance payments that are paid according to the legislation in force and not exceeding one month for each year.
- Tax refunds resulting from settling previous years.

Capital gains and losses. In general, capital gains are taxable. An exception is the exemption for gains derived from the sale of financial securities from an investment portfolio, but a certain percentage of the entity's expenses must be added back to income as disallowed expenses.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. Nationals and foreigners who are considered residents are granted the following annual allowances that are deductible.

- Residency allowance in the amount of ILS36,000
- A one-time allowance in the amount of ILS30,000 for the building or purchase of a house, or an allowance for actual interest paid on a housing loan for a maximum of 10 years, up to a maximum of ILS4,000 per year
- The lesser of actual transportation expenses or 10% of gross salary
- University student exemption for the individual himself or his spouse or his children in the amount of ILS6,000 annually, with a maximum of two students
- An employee's contributions to retirement plans, provident funds, medical insurance or other funds approved by the Minister of Finance

Business deductions. All business expenses incurred in generating income are deductible. However, certain limitations apply to donations, write-offs of accounts receivable, and hospitality and training expenses.

Rates. Personal income, net of deductions, is subject to income tax at the following rates.

Taxable income ILS	Tax rate %	Tax due ILS	Cumulative tax due ILS
First 75,000	5	3,750	3,750
Next 75,000	10	7,500	11,250
Above 150,000	15	—	—

Withholding tax. Payments made by resident taxpayers to non-resident individuals or companies are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 10% of the gross amount paid.

All governmental agencies and shareholding companies that pay rent to local persons and make payments to local providers of services and suppliers of goods should request a Deduction at Source Certificate. Payments exceeding ILS2,500 are subject to withholding tax at the rate stated in the certificate. If the beneficiary does not provide a Deduction at Source Certificate, payments are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 10%.

Relief for losses. Losses may be carried forward and deducted from future profits for five years if the individual maintains proper accounting records. Losses cannot be carried back.

B. Property tax

Property tax is levied on the assessed rental value of real property at a rate of 17%. Twenty percent of the assessed or rental value is deducted from the tax base.

C. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Palestine is the calendar year. Tax returns must be filed in Arabic using a prescribed form within four months after the end of each fiscal year. The total amount of tax due must be paid at the time the return is filed.

Married persons can be taxed jointly or separately on all types of income. However, if they decide to be taxed separately, the housing allowance (see Section A) is granted to only one of them.

The tax regulations provide incentives to taxpayers who make advance tax payments. These taxpayers are entitled to the following credits:
- 7% on payments made in the first and second month of the fiscal year.
- 5% on payments made in the third month of the fiscal year.

In addition, the following special incentives are granted to taxpayers who pay the tax due and file their tax returns within the filing period.

Month of payment	Incentive (%)
First month	4
Second and third months	2

D. Tax treaties

The Palestinian Authority has entered into double tax treaties with Jordan, Serbia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates, Venezuela and Vietnam.

The Palestinian Authority has initialed a tax treaty with Oman. Tax treaty negotiations are underway with Turkmenistan.

E. Temporary visas

All visitors must obtain entry visas to visit Palestine. Nationals of Canada, the United States and Western European countries may obtain a three-month temporary visa at the time of entry.

An exit fee may be required, depending on the port of exit.

F. Work permits

Individuals of all nationalities must apply for working permits if they want to work in Palestine. Work permits are issued by the Ministry of Interior.

An applicant may not begin working in Palestine before obtaining a work permit. Work permits may not be transferred from one employer to another; therefore, if an employee changes employers, the previous work permit is canceled, and the worker must apply for a new permit.

Foreign investors may engage in almost any type of economic activity. The Palestinian Authority does not limit foreigners' investments, except for certain sectors, including energy, manufacturing of firearms, oil and gas, which require prior approval. In addition, foreign ownership of a public shareholding company may not exceed 49%.

Foreign investment for the establishment of a new company requires prior registration and authorization from the Palestinian Ministry of National Economy. To register and obtain authorization, the articles of incorporation, bylaws and board of directors' authorization must be filed, and a resident representative must be appointed.

G. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The spouse of a foreign national with a work permit does not automatically receive the same type of work permit as the primary applicant. He or she must file independently for a work permit to work in Palestine.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals in Palestine may exchange their home countries driver's licenses for a Palestinian license after passing a simple driving test.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident and nonresident individuals are taxed on their Panamanian-source income regardless of the nationality of the individual and the location of the payment of the income. For tax purposes, the nationality of the individual is irrelevant. Individuals are considered resident for tax purposes if they reside or remain in Panama for more than 183 continuous or non-continuous days in the calendar year or in the immediate preceding year or if they have established their permanent residence in Panama.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable income includes wages, salaries (including salaries in kind), bonuses, pensions, directors' fees, profit sharing, severance payments, seniority premium payments and other remuneration for personal services.

Education allowances are considered to be taxable salary and, consequently, they are subject to income tax and social security contributions.

Amounts received by the taxpayer for representation expenses are subject to a flat 10% withholding tax rate on amounts up to PAB25,000. Representation expenses in excess of PAB25,000 are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 10% on the first PAB25,000 and 15% on the excess. All representation expenses are subject to social security contributions.

Self-employment and business income. Profits derived from business, commercial and agricultural activities in Panama are subject to tax. Farming income is exempt from tax if gross sales are less than PAB300,000.

If self-employment and business income is received in addition to employment income, the total income is taxed at the rates listed in Rates.

Investment income. Panamanian-source dividends earned by residents and nonresidents are subject to a final 10% withholding tax. The tax rate is 20% for dividends paid on bearer shares. A final 5% withholding tax applies to dividends distributed by companies operating in free-trade zones in Panama and to foreign-source dividends distributed by companies with local operations. Foreign-source dividends distributed by Panamanian companies that do not require a Notice of Operations, that are not established in a Free Zone and that do not produce taxable income in Panama are exempt from dividend tax.

Dividends distributed from interest and gains on the sale of government securities and other interest from deposits with Panamanian banks are subject to a final 5% withholding tax. Other interest income and royalties derived from Panamanian sources are subject to tax under the common regime for resident taxpayers and for nonresident taxpayers. This tax is withheld at 50% of the ordinary tax rate on a gross basis.

However, interest is exempt from tax if it is earned with respect to any of the following:
- Savings or time-deposit accounts maintained in banking institutions established in Panama
- Government securities

Foreign-source interest and royalties are exempt from tax. Royalties received or earned by foreign persons from businesses established in the Colon Free Zone (a duty-free zone) are exempt from tax and are not deductible for the payers of the royalties.

Stock option plans. In principle, the benefit derived from stock option plans granted by the employer is subject to tax at the time of sale of the shares. However, gains derived from sales of shares issued by companies registered on the Panama Stock Exchange and negotiated through the stock exchange are exempt from tax.

Capital gains and losses. Net capital gains derived from the sale of bonds, shares, quotas and other securities issued by legal entities are subject to income tax at a rate of 10%.

Capital gains derived from the sale of shares (or other forms of equity participation) of a Panamanian company are considered Panamanian-source income, regardless of where the transaction takes place, if the company has operations in Panama or has assets located in Panama.

The buyer must withhold and deposit 5% of the gross purchase price paid to the seller with the tax authorities. The 5% withholding tax must be remitted to the tax authorities within 10 days after the date on which the withholding obligation arose. The 5% withholding tax may be considered the final capital gain tax due.

If the 5% withholding tax is greater than 10% of the net capital gain, the taxpayer may credit the 5% withholding tax against the 10% capital gain tax that is finally determined. The excess amount may be refunded, credited against other tax liabilities or transferred to other taxpayers.

Indirect transfers of shares "economically invested in Panama" are also subject to Panamanian capital gains tax, even if the seller and buyer are nonresidents.

In addition, gains derived from the sale of real estate are subject to tax at a rate of 10%. The tax base equals the sales price minus the sum of the original cost of the property and expenses incurred on the sale. However, if the sale is made in the ordinary course of trade or business of the taxpayer, the general income tax rates apply.

For purposes of capital gains on real estate taxed at the 10% rate, the seller must pay 3% of the sales price or the recorded value of the property, whichever is greater, as a capital gains tax advance. The 3% tax may be considered the final capital gain tax due. If the 3% tax is greater than 10% of the net capital gain, the taxpayer may credit the 3% tax against the 10% capital gain tax that is finally determined. The excess amount may be refunded, credited against other tax liabilities or transferred to other taxpayers. The transfer of real estate is also subject to an additional tax of 2%.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Individuals may deduct the following from gross taxable income:

- Mortgage interest related to loans for a principal residence, up to PAB15,000 a year
- Interest paid on educational loans
- Donations up to USD50,000 if made to charitable organizations recognized by the tax authorities
- Medical expenses incurred in Panama and not reimbursed by insurance
- Medical and hospitalization insurance premiums (excluding payments or withholdings for social security)
- Certain investments in tourism
- School expenses up to USD3,600 for each dependent
- Contributions up to 10% of gross salary or up to PAB15,000 to pension plans

Personal deductions and allowances. Individuals are entitled to a PAB800 deduction when filing jointly with the spouse.

Recipients of severance and seniority premium payments on termination of employment are entitled to a deduction at a rate of 1% of the payments for each complete year of service with the same employer. In addition, PAB5,000 may be deducted from the payments.

Nonresidents may not claim any deductions or personal exemptions.

Business deductions. All costs and expenses that are necessary to generate taxable income and protect investments are deductible.

Rates. Employment income and self-employment income are taxable at the following rates.

Taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding PAB	Not exceeding PAB	amount PAB	excess %
0	11,000	0	0
11,000	50,000	0	15
50,000	—	5,850	25

Withholding tax is levied on the income of nonresidents at a rate of 15% plus the educational tax at a rate of 2.75%.

Relief for losses. Self-employed individuals incurring a loss in a tax year may deduct 20% of the loss in each of the five subsequent tax years. However, the deduction is limited to 50% of taxable income in each subsequent tax year, and any nondeductible amount may not be carried forward.

B. Other taxes

Estate or gift taxes. Panama does not tax estates or gifts.

Real property tax. A real property tax applies to land, buildings and other permanent structures located in Panama. These properties are subject to tax at progressive rates, which are shown below.

The following are the tax rates if the property is considered a Tributary Family Patrimony (Patrimonio Familiar Tributario) or a Primary Residence (Vivienda Principal).

Tax base
Exceeding USD	Not exceeding USD	Rate %
0	120,000	0
120,000	700,000	0.5
700,000	—	0.7

A Tributary Family Patrimony is a property that is destined for permanent family habitation use by its owner(s), in accordance with the Article 476 of the Family Code.

A Primary Residence is a property that is destined for permanent residential habitation use by its owner (whether it is a natural person or juridical person) and that does not constitute a Tributary Family Patrimony.

The following are the tax rates for Secondary Residences and commercial and industrial properties.

Tax base
Exceeding USD	Not exceeding USD	Rate %
0	30,000	0
30,000	250,000	0.60
250,000	500,000	0.8
500,000	—	1

Horizontal Properties that have an existing property tax exemption will continue to receive the benefits of that exemption.

However, if the owner files the form requesting Primary Residence status, the remaining years of property tax exemption are lost. The owner is then subject to the normal Primary Residence property tax rates.

All new residential construction that is the purchasers' first residence and is considered a Tributary Family Patrimony or Primary Residence and that has a registered cadastral value of between USD120,000 and USD300,000 is exempt from property tax for a period of three years, as of the date of the issuance of the occupation permit or the date of inscription in the Public Registry, whichever occurs first.

Properties under the Horizontal Property Regime that are exempt for their improvements are subject to tax at a rate of 1% of the value of the land until the expiration of the exemption for the improvements. After the exemption for improvements expires, the regular progressive rates apply.

Education tax. Education tax is imposed on employers and employees. The rates are 1.5% for employers and 1.25% for employees.

C. Social security

Social security contributions are levied on salaries, at a rate of 12.25% for the employer and 9.75% for the employee. Contributions are computed based on an employee's gross compensation. No ceiling applies to the amount of remuneration subject to social security contributions. In addition, employers must pay workers' compensation insurance, which covers work-related personal injuries and death and occupational diseases, at rates that vary from 0.056% to 5.67%, depending on the type of business and other risk factors.

Panama has not entered into any social security totalization agreements with other countries.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Employers are responsible for withholding income taxes and social security contributions from an employee's salary on a monthly basis. Employees are not required to file an annual income tax return if their only source of income is employment compensation. Nonresidents are not required to file an annual income tax return if their income tax liability has been satisfied through withholding at source.

By 31 May of each year, employers must file an annual form providing all information on taxes withheld from employees. Individuals earning more than one salary or receiving other taxable income not subject to withholding tax must file an annual income tax return. If individuals earn taxable income from their own business, they must file annual income tax returns, even if the net result for the period is a loss.

The ordinary tax year is the calendar year. Tax returns are due on 15 March of the year following the tax year. The regulations provide for an extension of up to one month to file an income tax return. The late payment of taxes is subject to a 10% surcharge and late payment interest, which is imposed at a rate of approximately 0.79% to 1%. This interest rate equals the annual market interest rate determined by the Banking Supervisory Authority, plus two basis points for every month or fraction thereof that the tax payment is late. Tax returns are filed on electronic forms provided by the Ministry of Finance and Treasury.

Estimated tax, which is calculated in the annual income tax return of the preceding tax year, is due by 30 June or in equal installments on 30 June, 30 September and 31 December of the tax year. If the actual taxable income is lower than estimated income, any overpaid tax is applied toward the following year's estimated income tax liability.

Married persons are taxed jointly or separately, at the taxpayers' election, on all types of income.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Panama has entered into double tax treaties (DTTs) with Barbados, the Czech Republic, France, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Korea (South), Luxembourg, Mexico, the Netherlands, Portugal, Qatar, Singapore, Spain, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom and Vietnam.

Dependent personal services clause. The DTTs follow the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) Model Convention. Accordingly, salaries earned by a resident of the other state (non-Panamanian resident) from employment exercised within Panama should not be taxable in Panama if all of the following requirements are met:

- The recipient of the salary is present in Panama for a period or periods not exceeding, in the aggregate, 183 days in any 12-month period commencing or ending in the tax year concerned.
- The remuneration is paid by, or on behalf of, an employer who is not a Panamanian resident.
- The remuneration is not borne by a permanent establishment in Panama.

F. Temporary visas

Depending on their country of citizenship, individuals may be required to apply for and obtain an entry visa before traveling to Panama. A Panamanian consulate overseas grants the visa. Because the rules indicating the countries of citizenship of individuals who are required to obtain an entry visa before entering Panama and requirements for obtaining a visa often vary, it is necessary to check the entry visa requirements on a case-by-case basis.

To enter Panama as a tourist, the following is required:

- Ticket to the individual's home country or next destination
- Demonstration of economic solvency, which is not less than USD500 or the equivalent in credit cards, bank references, work letters or travelers' checks
- Passport or travel document valid for at least six months

- Authorized tourism card or visa, if applicable according to the nationality of the tourist
- Proof of payment from the hotel where the individual will be staying, if applicable

Foreigners may stay in Panama as tourists for up to 180 days. Foreigners from certain countries are only allowed to stay in Panama for 90 days with a tourist visa.

G. Work visas (and/or permits)

The government of Panama grants work permits to foreign employees who have special knowledge or experience in a certain field and whose country of origin maintains economic, professional and friendly ties with the Republic of Panama. The granting of a work authorization is subject to certain rules that have to be checked on a case-by-case basis because these rules often vary. The Ministry of Labor and Employment Development grants the work permit after the foreigner obtains the residence permit granted by the National Immigration Service.

Foreign nationals may work in Panama only if they have obtained a permanent or temporary residence permit and the work permit that allows them to work. Depending on the category, a visa may be valid for one year and may be renewed for the same period, up to five additional years. Certain types of visas are issued indefinitely, and others are issued for up to five years and are renewable for the same time period.

Residence and temporary work permit in the capacity of personnel hired as executives of international companies, whose functions take effect abroad. Special temporary visitors' visas may be obtained by international executives of companies that have Panamanian operations and by press correspondents.

International executives with a special temporary visa who receive a monthly salary of at least USD2,000 that comes from a foreign source for transactions or services executed or having effects abroad are not subject to income tax, educational tax and or social security tax in Panama.

Residence permit for permanent employee hired by Multinational Company Headquarters. Under the Multinational Company Headquarters (MHQ) Law (Law No. 41 of 27 August 2007; known as SEM for its acronym in Spanish), foreign personnel and their dependents may obtain an MHQ Permanent Personnel Visa or a Dependent of MHQ Permanent Personnel Visa. Under Article 26 of the Law 41 of 2007 and its amendments, salary and other labor remuneration, including salary in kind, received by employees who hold an MHQ Permanent Personnel Visa are exempt from income tax, social security contributions and educational insurance tax, provided that such salary and other labor remunerations are assumed, paid and recognized as payroll expenses in the MHQ company's accounting.

Migratory and labor options for a company hiring a foreigner. The migratory and labor options for a company hiring a foreigner include, among others, the following:

- 10% of the ordinary personnel (10% category).

- 15% of the specialized personnel (15% category).
- Marrakesh Agreement. The residence and work permit under this agreement applies to foreigners who enter the country to work in a company with less than 10 Panamanian employees.

The 10% category can be requested by foreigners who will be hired by private companies in Panama and who earn a monthly salary not less than USD850. Foreigners hired under the 10% category must hold ordinary positions, which do not denote hierarchy, command or specialization within the company, and their hiring must not exceed the percentage established by the labor legislation in relation to national workers, according to the detail of the payroll reported to the Social Security Authority.

The 15% category may be requested by foreigners who will be hired by private companies in Panama and who earn a monthly salary not less than USD850. Foreigners hired in the 15% category must hold a position of technician, expert or manager, and/or be considered trustworthy personnel (as defined in Article 84 of the Labor Code) within the company, and their hiring must not exceed the percentage established by the labor legislation in relation to national workers, according to the detail of the payroll reported to the Social Security Authority.

After the term of two years of the provisional residence permit, the foreigner can apply for permanent residence.

H. Residence visas (and/or permits)

The government of Panama may grant a temporary residence permit or a permanent residence permit, depending on the category in which the foreigner falls. All residence permits must be submitted to and processed by the National Immigration Service. The applicable requirements may vary depending on the foreigner's immigration category. Consequently, it is necessary to check in advance the requirements in each case.

A foreign national with a residence visa may transfer his or her residence to Panama for an indefinite period of time. The foreign national may be employed as a professional by a Panamanian employer if he or she obtains a work permit or may establish his or her own business, or both.

Friendly Countries Visa. Executive Decree No. 343 of 16 May 2012 created the immigration category of permanent resident for foreign nationals from specific jurisdictions who maintain friendly, professional, economic and investment relations with Panama. This Executive Decree has been modified by Executive Decree No. 197 of 7 May 2021, which provides that an applicant may acquire a temporary permit that will be granted for two years and then apply for a permanent residence permit and a work permit for three years, which is renewable for the same period in Panama. Citizens of the 50 jurisdictions considered "friendly" can move to Panama with their immediate family and acquire a permanent residence permit more quickly than citizens from other jurisdictions. To qualify, a citizen of a "friendly" jurisdiction must have a work contract or a real estate investment (USD200,000).

Citizens of the following jurisdictions may obtain a permanent residence permit under the category of Friendly Countries Visa.

Andorra	Greece	Norway
Argentina	Hong Kong SAR	Paraguay
Australia	Hungary	Poland
Austria	Ireland	Portugal
Belgium	Israel	San Marino
Brazil	Japan	Serbia

Professional Foreigner. The residence permit of a Professional Foreigner is a migratory permit that grants a provisional residence for two years, and after the end of this period, gives the option of applying for permanent residence, based on the quality of a foreign professional graduate with the corresponding university degree, master's degree or doctorate.

Through immigration reform published on 13 May 2015, the National Immigration Service established as a new requirement of homologation of diplomas or university degrees before the submissions of applications for residence and work permits.

In Panama, the institutions that make such Homologations are the University of Panama, the Technological University of Panama or the national authority that corresponds to the diploma or degree that is being presented.

A professional foreigner who applies for this permit must graduate in a profession that is not restricted to only Panamanians by law or the Constitution.

The list of professions reserved for Panamanian are the following:

- Security agent
- Dental assistant
- Medical assistant
- Barber and cosmetology
- Agricultural sciences (agronomy, agricultural botany, forestry, edaphology, economy agriculture, agricultural vocational education, entomology, agricultural extension, phytopathology, breeding, horticulture, agricultural engineering, agricultural chemistry, agricultural zoology, zootechnical and other sciences that are declared by the Technical Council National Agriculture)

Treaty of friendship, trade and navigation between Panama and Italy. Under a treaty between Panama and Italy, citizens of each of the contracting parties are allowed to enjoy in the territory of the other national treatment with respect to the admission to economic or professional activities of any kind and the exercise of such activities with the exception of the exercise of retail trade.

Based on the treaty, Panama has developed a special category of migration and labor for Italian nationals so that they can obtain a permanent residence permit, foreign certificate and indefinite work permit, if the Italian nationals fulfill the requirements for these items.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. By law, only family members or dependents in the following categories can apply as dependents of the applicant:
- Spouses (formally married).
- Children under 18. If the dependent is older than 18 but younger than 25, single and a student in an authorized academic institution in Panama, he or she can also apply as a dependent of the applicant.
- Parents of the applicant.

Only the applicant has the right to request a work permit. Consequently, if a dependent wishes to work in Panama, he or she must resign as a dependent and apply for an independent residence permit and work permit.

Marital property regime. Agreement regarding the matrimonial regime can be reached before the marriage ceremony. The agreements to establish the matrimonial regime are called matrimonial capitulations. The Family Code recognizes the following three matrimonial regimes:
- Profit-sharing regime
- Separation of property regime
- Partnership regime

The spouses choose the matrimonial regime that will govern their marriage. In Panama, if the spouses do not expressly establish the matrimonial regime that will govern the marriage, the law indicates that the profit-sharing regime applies automatically to all marriages entered into after 1995.

Forced heirship. If an individual dies without leaving a will, the beneficiaries of the individual's assets and patrimony according to the law are descendants, ascendants, the spouse, father and mother, collaterals, and brothers. The priority order is set by the Civil Code, according to a series of different combinations. Amounts to pay maintenance and other obligations of the deceased are removed from the deceased's estate before the estate is distributed among the beneficiaries.

Driver's permits. The Authority of Transit and Land Transport allows tourists (individuals who do not have an approved residence permit and are visiting Panama) to drive vehicles with their current license from their country of origin. Tourists are allowed to drive with the current license from their country of origin up to a period of 90 days. Once the foreigner changes his or her immigratory status that allows him or her to reside in Panama, he or she must apply to the Panamanian authorities for a local driver's license.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents of Papua New Guinea (PNG) are subject to PNG Salary and Wages Tax (SWT) on worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to SWT on PNG-source income only.

PNG's domestic law contains the following definition of a "resident" or "resident of Papua New Guinea":

"(a) in relation to a person, other than a company, means a person who resides in Papua New Guinea, and includes a person

(i) whose domicile is in Papua New Guinea, unless the Chief Collector is satisfied that his permanent place of abode is outside Papua New Guinea;

(ii) who has actually been in Papua New Guinea, continuously or intermittently more than one half of the year of income, unless the Chief Collector is satisfied that his usual place of abode is outside Papua New Guinea, and that he does not intend to take up residence in Papua New Guinea; or

(iii) who is a contributor to a prescribed superannuation fund or is the spouse, or a child under 16 years of age, or such a contributor…"

If an individual does not satisfy the above definition, he or she is considered to be a nonresident of PNG. The residency of an individual may be affected if PNG has entered into a double tax treaty with a relevant country.

The residence tests, and in particular, the overriding "resides" test (see paragraph [a] of the definition above) can potentially be met relatively easily. The PNG Internal Revenue Commission (IRC) may consider a person who is in PNG for employment purposes for as little as six months to be a resident of PNG for domestic tax purposes. For purposes of the residency tests, a person's facts and circumstances should be weighed and considered appropriately. For example, whether a person has a usual place of abode outside PNG should also be considered. Because PNG has a relatively limited treaty network, the residency test under PNG domestic law can be very important.

Income subject to tax. Except for salary and wages, income is calculated by subtracting deductible expenses and losses from the assessable income of the taxpayer. The taxability of various types of income is discussed below.

Employment income. Salary, wages, allowances and most cash compensation is included in the employee's assessable income in the year of receipt. Noncash benefits are either taxed in the employee's hands (often at concessional rates) or are exempt from tax. No specific PNG tax is imposed on employers with respect to the provision of noncash benefits. However, SWT withholding obligations exist for employers to the extent that employees are taxed on such benefits.

Self-employment and business income. Taxable income from self-employment or from a business is subject to PNG tax. Each partner in a partnership is taxed on his or her share of the partnership's taxable income.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are included in assessable income as personal earnings and are taxed in the year of receipt.

Dividends. Dividends paid to resident individuals, resident trust estates and nonresidents by PNG companies are subject to a 15% dividend withholding tax unless the income is expressly exempt.

Dividends that have been subject to dividend withholding tax are excluded from the assessable income of resident persons, resident trust estates and nonresidents.

For dividends derived from nonresident sources, a foreign tax credit (FTC) may be allowed for foreign taxes paid. The FTC allowed is equal to the lesser of the foreign tax paid or the amount of PNG tax payable on that income.

Interest, royalties and rental income. Interest, royalties and rental income derived by residents are included in assessable income with a deduction allowed for applicable expenses.

If tax is paid in the foreign country on foreign income, the resident may be able to claim an FTC. If the foreign investment results in a tax loss (that is, deductible expenses exceed assessable income), the tax loss is quarantined and can only be offset against other foreign-source investment income.

Interest paid by residents to nonresident lenders is generally subject to a final withholding tax of 15% (subject to any reductions available under an applicable double tax treaty).

Accrued foreign company income. The PNG tax law does not currently contain controlled foreign company rules or any similar measures. Accordingly, income or gains accumulating in foreign companies or foreign trusts are typically only taxed on a receipt basis.

Converting transactions denominated in foreign currency into PNG kina amounts. Taxpayers are generally required to convert income amounts denominated in foreign currency into PNG kina (PGK) amounts at the time of derivation of the income. Likewise, taxpayers must convert expense amounts into kina amounts at the time of payment.

Realized foreign-exchange gains are assessable and realized foreign-exchange losses are allowable deductions, to the extent they relate to the derivation of income assessable in PNG.

Concessions for individuals on short-term assignments. PNG tax legislation does not contain concessions with respect to living away from home allowances. Any such allowances paid in cash are fully taxable to employees.

Taxation of employer-provided stock and stock options. The PNG tax law does not contain any specific rules that deal with the taxation of employer-provided stock options. However, discounts provided to employees on stock or options acquired under an employee stock scheme are generally taxed as ordinary income in the employees' hands.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains are generally not subject to tax in PNG. However, the disposal of a capital asset may be subject to tax to the extent the disposal takes place as part of a profit-making scheme or is part of the ordinary business of the taxpayer.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. To claim deductions, an individual must file an income tax return (see Section C). Expenses of a capital, private or domestic nature, and expenses incurred in producing exempt income are not deductible.

Some employment-related expenses may be rebated.

Dependent rebates and personal tax offsets. If a dependent's declaration has been furnished, a resident individual taxpayer is allowed a rebate for a maximum of three "dependents." A dependent is a person who is related to the taxpayer, whose separate net income during the year does not exceed PGK1,040, and who is one of the following:
- A spouse
- An unmarried child who is less than 16 years old
- A full-time student child over 16 years old but under 25 years old
- An invalid relative
- A parent of the taxpayer or of his or her spouse, if the parent is a resident of PNG

For an individual earning salary or wage income, the rebates are built into the SWT tax rate schedule published each year by the IRC. The following are the fixed amounts of the fortnightly rebates:

- One dependent: PGK17.31
- Two dependents: PGK28.85
- Three or more dependents: PGK40.38

Business deductions. Losses and expenses are generally fully deductible to the extent they are incurred in producing assessable income or are necessarily incurred in carrying on a business for that purpose, and are not capital or of a capital, private or domestic nature.

Deductions are allowed for salaries and wages paid to employees, as well as for interest, rent, repairs, commissions and similar expenses incurred in carrying on a business.

Specific records must be kept for all business expenses incurred.

Expenditure for the acquisition or improvement of assets is not deductible, but depreciation deductions may be claimed.

Rates. The following are the annual rates for tax residents.

Taxable income PGK	Tax rate %	Tax due PGK	Cumulative tax due PGK
First 12,500	0	0	0
Next 7,500	22	1,650	1,650

Next 180,000	40	72,000	90,500
Above 250,000	42	—	—

The following are the rates for tax nonresidents.

Taxable income PGK	Tax rate %	Tax due PGK	Cumulative tax due PGK
First 20,000	22	4,400	4,400
Next 13,000	30	3,900	8,300

Next 180,000	40	72,000	93,250

B. Social security taxes

Superannuation/pension contributions. Under the Superannuation (General Provision) Act 2000 (PNG Superannuation Act), a PNG employer with 15 or more employees that has employed an employee for 3 months or more must make a minimum contribution to an Authorised Superannuation Fund (ASF). An ASF is a PNG resident superannuation fund that has been authorized to operate by the Bank of PNG.

Currently, the requirement to make superannuation contributions into an ASF exists only with respect to PNG-citizen employees. Contributions are currently optional for noncitizen employees. Under certain proposals, contributions would be required with respect to noncitizens.

The compulsory employer contribution is 8.4% of an employee's gross ordinary time earnings. It is also compulsory for PNG-citizen employees to contribute 6% of their gross ordinary time earnings into an ASF from their post-tax salary. This contribution is in addition to the compulsory employer contribution of 8.4%. It is deducted and remitted by the employer.

A tax deduction is not available for employers who make contributions to nonresident superannuation funds.

C. Tax filing and payment procedures

The PNG tax year is the calendar year (1 January to 31 December).

Returns for the year must be filed by 28 February of the following year. Extensions are available if the return is filed by a registered tax agent and if a request for extension of time is made. Nonresidents are subject to the same filing requirements as residents. No specific additional filing requirements are imposed on persons arriving in, or persons preparing to depart from, PNG.

Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income. Joint filing of returns by spouses is not permitted.

Individuals who derive employment income only are not required to file an income tax return in PNG. SWT withheld by an employer is a final tax. PNG national or expatriate employees who derive income other than employment income must file an income tax return in PNG. No return is required for dividend income that has been subject to PNG dividend withholding tax. An income tax return is required if any of the following circumstances exist:

- The individual has income of more than PGK100 from other sources.
- The individual is claiming a rebate for work-related expenses or donations.
- The individual received a housing allowance, and a variation was granted by the Commissioner General of Internal Revenue for the individual to receive the housing allowance before tax.

The IRC issues a tax assessment after a tax return is filed. After an assessment is issued and served on the taxpayer, the taxpayer must pay the amount of tax due within 30 days. If the taxpayer files an objection, the IRC requires that the amount of tax assessed be paid pending the review of the objection. A taxpayer may request the Commissioner General of Internal Revenue to grant an extension to pay the tax or allow the taxpayer to make the payment in installments.

D. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Foreign tax credit. A foreign tax credit (FTC) may be allowed for foreign taxes paid. The FTC equals the lesser of the foreign tax paid and the amount of PNG tax payable on the relevant income.

For FTC purposes, income derived from treaty and non-treaty countries are treated the same.

Double tax treaties. PNG has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Australia	Germany*	New Zealand
Canada	Indonesia	Singapore
China Mainland	Korea (South)	United Kingdom
Fiji	Malaysia

* This treaty has been signed, but it has not yet been ratified.

E. Temporary visas

Nonresidents seeking entry into PNG must obtain an appropriate visa prior to entry.

Temporary residence visas are granted to individuals whose activities are considered to benefit PNG, including individuals entering for business, skilled employment, cultural or social activities.

The types of temporary residence visas, and the conditions that must be fulfilled prior to such visas being issued, are discussed below.

Visitors. The following are the four categories of visitor visas:
- Tourist (tour package)
- Tourist (own itinerary)
- Journalist
- Yachtsperson

Nonresidents seeking entry into PNG for purposes such as tourism can either obtain the visa at a PNG consulate prior to entry or, for eligible country passport holders, online or on arrival at a designated port of entry.

Business visa. The three types of business visitor visas are described below.

Single-entry business visas. Single-entry business visas allow for a single visit of up to 30 days from the date of arrival (to attend business meetings, board meetings, conferences, conduct an exploratory business visit or participate in a business negotiation). Employment is prohibited on this visa, and the status may be eligible to be extended depending on certain facts and circumstances. For eligible country passport holders, this visa can be applied for online, on arrival at designated ports of entries or through a PNG consulate prior to travel. Nationals from high-risk jurisdictions must seek approval from the PNG Immigration & Citizenship Authority (PNGICA) before they can apply through a PNG consulate prior to travel.

Restricted Employment Visa. A Restricted Employment Visa (REV) is a temporary visa for foreign specialists or experts urgently required if no such specialist is immediately available in the country to perform short-term, highly specialized work that is not ongoing or to assist in a national emergency relief situation.

A REV can be used in the following sectors:
- Mining
- Gas
- Petroleum
- Agriculture
- Fisheries
- Forestry
- Building infrastructure
- Aviation

The REV has the following restrictions:
- It is limited to a stay of up to 30 days per visit.
- Entry is limited to four times per calendar year.

- Extensions may be permitted in limited circumstances.
- The individual can only work for a sponsoring employer.

The REV must be obtained through the PNGICA and collected at the PNG consulate prior to travel or at port of entry for eligible country passport holders if the individual holds an approval uplift letter issued by the PNGICA.

Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation Card. Individuals from fully participating Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) economies can be issued a five-year travel card that serves as the entry authority to other fully participating economies that have granted pre-clearance for short-term business travel of up to 60 or 90 days.

Employment. Noncitizens seeking to enter PNG for employment in the private sector may apply for a work and employment permit. The work permit can be issued for short- or long-term periods from six months and up to five years.

The work and employment permit process consists of the following three steps:
- A work permit application must be submitted to the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations (DLIR).
- Once the work permit is approved, an entry permit application must be submitted to the PNGICA.
- Once the work permit and entry permit are approved, the visa will be telexed to the nearest PNG embassy or consulate (or Australian mission if there is no PNG mission) for the consular visa issuance.

Long-term work permits can be renewed in the country or out of the country three months prior to the expiration of the work permit. However, any changes to the applicant's employer or occupation (including promotion) will require the individual to apply for a new work permit. If individuals repatriate prior to the expiration of their work permits, they will be required to submit a work permit cancellation application with DLIR.

Applicants may be required to apply for membership and registration with professional bodies in PNG prior to the submission of their work permit application. For example, engineers are required to apply for membership with the Institution of Engineers Papua New Guinea (IEPNG), and accountants are required to apply for membership with Chartered Professional Accountants Papua New Guinea (CPA PNG). Spouses (including de facto spouses) and dependents can apply for a dependent entry permit with PNGICA. Family members who are not included in a temporary resident's initial visa application may generally apply for a visa at a later date.

F. Permanent residence

To qualify for permanent residence, an individual must have lived in PNG on a valid visa for at least five years and must meet the criteria of one of the following classes of visa (subject to change at any time):
- Chief executive officer of a large company
- Majority owner of a business
- Skilled professional

- Missionary and religious worker
- Retired persons
- Spouses and children of PNG citizen aged 19 years or more

G. Family and personal considerations

Spouses (including de facto spouses) and dependents of temporary and permanent visa applicants can be included in the same visa application as the primary applicant and are granted visas for the purpose of residing in PNG with the primary applicant. Family members who are not included in a temporary resident's initial visa application may generally apply for a visa at a later date.

This chapter reflects the general tax reform introduced in Paraguay by Law No. 6380/19 and its regulations.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. The personal income tax is imposed on national or foreign individuals who are residents of Paraguay. The following are also considered liable to personal income tax by the law:

- Undivided estates with the scope established in the law
- Parents, guardians or curators for the income obtained by those under their custody, guardianship or curatorship
- Persons of Paraguayan nationality by virtue of their status as the following:
  - — Members of Paraguayan diplomatic missions, including the head of mission and members of the diplomatic, administrative, technical or service staff of the mission.
  - — Members of Paraguayan consular offices, including the head of the mission and the official or service staff thereof. Exceptions are made for honorary consuls or honorary consular agents and their dependent staff.
  - — Members of the delegations and permanent representations of Paraguay accredited to international organizations or forming part of delegations or observer missions abroad.
  - — Officials or contracted personnel serving abroad who are not of a diplomatic or consular nature, unless they can prove their tax residency in the country in which they serve.

Income subject to tax

Income and capital gains, excluding income taxed by the Dividends and Profit Tax. Income subject to tax includes income and capital gains, excluding those taxed by the Dividends and Profit Tax (IDU, for its Spanish acronym). For this purpose, income and capital gains consist of income, in money or in kind, which comes directly or indirectly from patrimony, goods or rights, whose ownership corresponds to the taxpayer of the tax. It also includes positive variations in the value of assets made by the taxpayer that do not come from income derived from the rendering of personal services. The IDU is levied on dividends or profits that are made available or paid to resident or nonresident individuals or legal entities that are owners, partners or shareholders of sole proprietorships, all types of partnerships or consortiums. The applicable rates are 8% if the recipient of the income is a resident of Paraguay and 15% if the recipient is a nonresident of Paraguay. Income subject to personal income tax includes income from the following:

- Dividends, profits, surpluses and any other benefits derived by shareholders or members of simple societies, cooperatives and societies or entities resident or constituted in the country, excluding income taxed by IDU.
- Interest or income paid by individuals, legal entities, entities or patrimonies resident in the country, derived from the following:
  - Money deposits
  - The investment of money in financial instruments, credit operations and contracts, such as the opening of credit, discounts, documentary credit or money loans
  - The holding of credit titles such as promissory notes, bills of exchange, bonds or debentures, or the holding of other public or private securities
  - Price differences in repurchase agreements, regardless of the denomination given to them by the parties
  - Other income obtained from the assignment of own capital, financial leasing, factoring, asset securitization and any type of credit, financing, capital investment or savings transaction
- Income generated by transparent legal structures, whether it comes from financial income, interest, valuation of goods and assets derived from the execution of trust business or investments made, excluding income taxed by the IDU.
- Royalties received in Paraguay or those coming from rights used in Paraguay. Among others, royalties include payments for the use or assignment of the use of copyright and related rights; industrial property rights; rights or licenses to computer programs or their updating; information relating to industrial, commercial or scientific knowledge or experience; personal rights susceptible to assignment, such as rights to images, names, nicknames and artistic names; and rights to other intangible assets.
- Capital gains arising from the disposal of rights, shares or interests in a resident or nonresident entity, which give its owner the right to enjoy movable or immovable property located in Paraguay.
- Capital gains derived from the sale or assignment of real estate, including leasing, subleasing, as well as from the constitution or assignment of rights or faculties (prerogatives, authorities or licenses) of use or enjoyment thereof, whatever their name or nature.
- Capital gains arising from the disposal or assignment of movable property, regardless of whether it is registrable, located in Paraguay, or in rem rights thereon.
- The prizes of lotteries, raffles, draws, bingos and similar events held in Paraguay.

- The incorporation free of charge to the patrimony of the taxpayer of movable and immovable assets located in Paraguay or rights that must be complied with or exercised in the country.
- The total or partial redemption of shares or quotas of entities resident or incorporated in the country, on the portion exceeding the capital contributed, as well as reserves, whatever their denomination, excluding income taxed by IDU.
- Any unjustified increase in capital (a capital increase with no verifiable source).

Income derived from the provision of independent personal services and in a labor relationship. Income derived from the rendering of personal services of Paraguayan origin is deemed to be income that comes from personal work, professional or otherwise, performed by a resident in a relationship of dependence or not, consisting of any type of consideration, remuneration or income, whatever its denomination or nature. This includes income from the following:
- Remuneration originating from the provision of independent personal services.
- Salaries, wages, bonuses or per diems not subject to accountability and other remunerations in any concept, paid by individuals, public or private entities, binational entities and autonomous patrimonies, to their representatives, officials or employees in Paraguay or in other countries.
- The salaries, wages, bonuses and other remunerations of crew members of air, river or sea vessels and land vehicles, provided that such vessels or vehicles have their base port in Paraguay or are registered or recorded in the country, regardless of the nationality or domicile of the beneficiaries of the income and the countries between which the traffic takes place.
- Remunerations, salaries, commissions, per diems not subject to accounting, representation expenses, gratuities or remunerations paid or accredited by entities with or without legal personality resident in the country to members of their boards of directors and other management or advisory bodies.
- Income corresponding to retirement incentive schemes established for public officials.
- Any other remuneration received in money or in kind, in consideration of an independent personal service and in a relationship of dependence under the Labor Code.

Every individual is liable for tax on income derived from personal services, once the total gross income taxed under that heading, computed as from 1 January of that year, exceeds PYG80 million. The person who reaches this amount settles this tax on the total gross income received minus deductible expenses incurred in the first fiscal year following the day on which the amount is reached.

Exempt income. Income derived from the following activities is exempt:
- Interest on public debt securities issued by the state through the Ministry of Finance and by municipalities.
- Income and capital gains derived from the sale of property by expropriation.
- Income and capital gains from the sale or disposal of movable property, provided that the sum of these in the year does not exceed PYG20 million.

- Exchange differences arising from the holding of foreign currency or from deposits or credits in such currency.
- The 13th salary required by the Labor Code.
- Compensation for dismissal adjusted to the legal minimum. Compensation established in collective bargaining agreements is not considered adjusted to the legal minimum. Therefore, the amount that exceeds the legal minimum is not exempt.
- Remuneration that diplomats, consular agents and other official foreign representatives of countries or international organizations accredited to the Paraguayan government receive for the performance of their functions, on condition of reciprocity.
- Ex gratia or non-contributory pensions.
- Interest and profits from the sale of stock market bonds placed through the stock exchange regulated by the National Securities Commission.
- Interest, yields and profits coming from greater value obtained from the negotiation of titles and securities through the stock exchange regulated by the National Securities Commission, including debt titles issued by issuing companies authorized by such entity.
- Returns from the valuation of the participation quota or the higher value from the negotiation or liquidation of the same of patrimonial investment funds foreseen in Law No. 5452/2015.
- Interest, commissions or yields for deposits or capital placements in banking and financial entities in the country, governed by Law No. 861/1996, as well as in cooperatives and mutuals that carry out savings and credit activities.
- Prizes under PYG500,000 won in lotteries, raffles, drawings, bingos and similar events held in Paraguay.
- Remuneration received as a scholarship holder under national scholarship programs abroad promoted by the national government, intended to cover subsistence and travel expenses.

Capital gains. For details regarding the taxation of capital gains, see Income subject to tax.

Deductions. Individuals may deduct expenses from income derived from the provision of independent personal services and in a labor relationship. Expenses are fully deductible if they are supported by documentation that complies with the tax rules. Deductible expenses incurred in Paraguay include, among others, the following:
- Food
- Clothing
- Rent of the house and the maintenance of the same, whether owned or rented
- Purchase of furniture, household appliances and household goods
- Entertainment allowances
- Other personal expenses

For other income and capital gains, excluding income taxed by IDU, no deductions are allowed.

Rates. The applicable rate for income and capital gains is 8%. The tax corresponding to income derived from the provision of personal services is determined by applying progressive rates linked to a scale of net income. For such purposes, the rate corresponding to each section of the scale is applied to the portion of net income included in that section. The following are the progressive tax rates:

Net income	Rate (%)
Up to PYG50,000,000	8
From PYG50,000,001 to PYG150,000,000	9
Equal to or higher than PYG150,000,001	10

Relief for losses. The negative results derived from the expenditures provided in the law will not be subject to compensation or carryover in the following fiscal years, with the exception of the acquisition of real estate, including the construction, remodeling or renovation of a home.

B. Social security

Social security tax is levied on employees' compensation. Employees pay contributions at a rate of 9% (11% for banking employees), and employers at a rate of 16.5% (17% for banks), on employees' compensation.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxation and to assure benefits coverage, Paraguay entered into totalization agreements with several countries, including, among others, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Ecuador, Spain and Uruguay.

In practice, the Paraguayan Social Security Institution is very formal regarding the documents and deadlines required for issuing Certificates of Coverage for foreign individuals.

C. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Paraguay is the calendar year (1 January through 31 December).

Individuals must file a tax return by March of the following year. The exact date depends on the taxpayer's Tax Identification Number.

D. Tax treaties

Paraguay has entered into double tax treaties with Chile, Qatar, Taiwan, the United Arab Emirates and Uruguay to avoid double taxation on income tax, including personal income tax.

E. Residence permits

All foreigners wishing to maintain residency in Paraguay must obtain residence permits. The Paraguayan migratory legislation does not provide for work visas. Individuals may enter as tourists for a maximum period of 90 days (renewable). During this period, they can start the process to obtain temporary or permanent residence permits.

Temporary residence permits allow their holders to reside in Paraguay. They are valid for a period of one year and may be renewed for a period of up to five years. The generally required documents to reside in Paraguay are the following:
- Identity card or passport from the country of origin
- Birth certificate

- Marriage certificate or divorce decree (to demonstrate civil status)
- Police or criminal records (from the age of 14) from the country of origin or residence during the previous five years
- Police records certificate for foreigners issued by the Department of Informatics of the National Police (from the age of 14)
- Health certificate from the Ministry of Health, mentioning psychophysical health and confirming absence of infectious diseases
- Certificate of life and residence, issued by the police department of the current domicile in the country
- Certificate of entrance and permanence in Paraguay
- Consular visa for countries that require it (verified by the Paraguayan Ministry of Foreign Affairs)
- Two passport-size photos (2.5 cm x 2.5 cm) in color
- Professional and/or technical title (legalized) or an official education certificate
- Proof of maintenance (for adults)

An individual with temporary residence must renew his or her permit each year.

For obtaining permanent residence, the following additional items are required:

- Proof of economic solvency, which can be made in the form of a deposit of 350 daily wages (PYG30,817,850 [approximately USD4,540]) in the National Development Bank (Banco Nacional de Fomento), or of a university degree
- Signed affidavit with the promise to obey Paraguayan laws, signed before a notary public

Foreigners with permanent residence must obtain a Paraguayan Identity Card, which must be renewed every 10 years.

All original documents must be valid and also filed with two complete copies authenticated by a notary public. The documents in foreign languages (except Portuguese) must be translated into Spanish (including the passport) by a translator certified by the Paraguayan Supreme Court of Justice. Documentation from the country of origin or residence must be endorsed by the Paraguayan consulate abroad and legalized by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Asunción or apostilled.

F. Work permits

Neither permanent nor temporary residents need to obtain a work permit in Paraguay. The residence permit is sufficient for performing gainful activities in the country.

G. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family members of a working expatriate must have separate permits to reside in Paraguay. However, the family members may file jointly with the working expatriate for residence permits. The dependents of a working expatriate may attend schools in Paraguay without student visas.

Driver's licenses. International driver's licenses are permitted in Paraguay.

A. Income tax

Who is liable

Territoriality. Individuals resident in Peru are taxed on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxed on their Peruvian-source income only.

In general, Peruvian-source income is any income obtained in Peru, regardless of the citizenship or residence of the individual.

Under the Peruvian Income Tax Law, Peruvian source-income includes, among other items, the following:
- Income earned for services rendered in Peru or for civil, commercial or business activities performed in the country, regardless of where it is paid
- Personal work-related income
- Income earned for selling, transferring or renting property or land located in Peru
- Income earned for selling, transferring, renting assets or rights, if such assets are physically located in Peru or such rights are used economically in Peru
- Royalties if they originate in assets or rights that are economically used in Peru or if the payer is a Peruvian resident
- Capital gains, interest, commissions, premiums and any amount additional to the agreed interest with respect to loans, credits or other financial transactions, if the capital is allocated or economically used in Peru or if the payer is a Peruvian resident
- Dividends and any other forms of profit-sharing distribution, if the payer (company or society) is domiciled in Peru
- Income earned from the sale, transfer or redemption of shares, participations, bonds, securities and other instruments representing the capital stock
- Income received for serving as a member of a board (performing abroad) if the payer company is domiciled in Peru

Definition of resident. Residence for income tax purposes is generally bound to the physical presence of an individual in Peru. In general, remaining more than 183 days in Peru results in residency and remaining 183 days abroad loses it. Residency of foreign citizens is acquired as of 1 January of the calendar year subsequent to the foreign citizen's cumulative physical presence in Peruvian territory for more than 183 days, measured in any 12-month period. An exception applies to individuals who leave the country after signing a long-term contract (at least one year) or who hold a resident visa of the destination country. For these individuals, residence status changes immediately as of the departure date, from resident to nonresident.

Peruvian citizens who lost tax residence may regain such status on the first day of the first calendar year after they return to Peru, unless they do it temporarily and stay in Peru no more than 183 days in any 12-month period.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Tax is imposed on all remuneration received by an employee in the form of salaries, bonuses, living and housing allowances, tax reimbursements, benefits in kind and any other fringe benefits at the rates set forth in Rates.

Salaries and remuneration received by nonresidents for services provided in Peru are taxed at a flat rate of 30%.

Self-employment and business income. Taxable self-employment income includes fees from independent professional, artistic and scientific activities, and from skilled occupations carried out by individuals, and is taxed at the rates set forth in Rates. Taxable income for self-employed persons equals their gross income minus a deduction of 20%. Such deduction is allowed up to a maximum of PEN105,600, which equals 24 annual tax units (ATUs; see Rates).

Nonresidents are allowed a deduction equivalent to 20% of gross income received as remuneration for services as an independent professional. As a result, they are subject to an effective withholding tax rate of 24%.

Business income includes profits from personal business and is taxed at a rate of 29.5% of net income. For information regarding the deductibility of expenses, see Deductions.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are included in taxable income and are subject to tax at the rates set forth in Rates. In addition, directors' fees are subject to an 8% withholding tax, which may be taken as a credit against the director's final income tax liability.

Investment income. Dividends and other forms of profit distributions, as well as remittances of net profits by branches, are subject to a 5% withholding tax if paid to resident individuals or to nonresident individuals or entities.

For residents and nonresident individuals, interest on deposits and savings in Peruvian banks and interest from bonds issued by the government are exempt from income tax. Other interest and royalties are considered taxable income.

Income from the rental of real estate received by residents is taxed as a capital gain at a rate of 6.25%. A deduction of 20% of gross rental income is allowed. As a result, the effective rate is 5%.

Income from the rental of real estate received by nonresidents is subject to an effective final withholding tax at a rate of 5%.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. The Peruvian Income Tax Law has not established specific rules regarding taxation of equity awards. Under the general taxation rules, the benefit obtained from a stock option plan equals the spread between the purchase price and the fair market value of the shares. Such spread must be recognized as compensation income because it is provided as part of an employment relationship. However, on the sale of the shares, the individual derives a capital gain equal to the difference between the sale price and the purchase price. Because no specific rule allows the purchase price to include the spread previously taxed as compensation income, a double taxation issue may arise.

Capital gains. For both resident and nonresident individuals, capital gains derived from the sale of real estate (except for real estate occupied as dwellings) are subject to a definitive payment, which equals 5% of the sale value.

Taxable capital gains include profits derived from the sale of shares issued by Peruvian entities and gains derived from an indirect sale of shares (including, among others, the sale of more than 10% of the shares of a nonresident company in any 12-month period, provided the total share value of such nonresident company included 50% or more of a Peruvian company's shares in any month in the 12-month period before the sale). If the sale of shares is made on the Peruvian Stock Exchange Market and if the shares meet specific requirements (generally speaking, permanence in the Peruvian Stock Exchange Market of at least 12 months and trade activity during that period for less than 10% of the total number of shares issued by such company), the capital gains can be exempted from tax.

Net taxable income for resident individuals derived from capital gains on Peruvian shares equals their gross income minus a deduction equal to 20%. Withholding tax is imposed on this amount at a rate of 6.25%. As a result, such income is subject to an effective withholding tax rate of 5%.

Nonresidents are taxed at a rate of 5% if the Peruvian shares are listed and traded on the Peruvian Stock Exchange Market. Otherwise, they are subject to tax at a rate of 30% on their gross income.

Capital gains also include profits derived through investment funds, trust funds or pension funds established in Peru. These profits are taxed at an effective rate of 5% for residents and nonresident individuals.

For capital gains on foreign shares, the tax treatment varies depending on the residence status of the individual and the exchange market on which the shares are traded.

Gains derived from sales of personal property are not considered capital gains.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Individuals receiving business income may deduct expenses incurred to earn the income or maintain the source of income.

Personal deductions. Individuals earning employment and self-employment income may deduct from taxable income the first PEN30,800 of income earned, which is equivalent to seven ATUs (for information regarding ATUs, see Rates) without proof of expenses. It is possible to deduct up to three additional ATUs, based on actual expenses related to housing rental, health care, professional services, social security of housemaids and amounts paid for accommodation in hotels and consumption in restaurants, subject to specific requirements and limits for each type of expense.

In addition, individuals earning employment or self-employment income may deduct donations to public agencies and nonprofit organizations that are certified by the Ministry of Economy and that are dedicated to educational, social welfare and other similar activities. Donations made by taxpayers as sports sponsors to sports beneficiaries, such as athletes, are deductible if the activity sponsored is authorized by the Peruvian Institute of Sport. If a location is declared to be in a state of emergency as a result of a natural disaster, donations made to help the population of such location during the state of emergency can also be deducted. The total donation deduction may not exceed 10% of net employment income or net self-employment income.

Rates. For resident employees, the tax rates are applied on a progressive scale expressed in ATUs, as set forth in the table below. ATUs are established by the government at the beginning of each year. For 2021, one ATU equals PEN4,400 (approximately USD1,113). The following are the tax rates.

Taxable income		Rate on
Exceeding	Not exceeding	excess
ATU	ATU	%
5	20	14
20	35	17
35	45	20
45	—	30

Relief for losses. No relief is provided for nonbusiness losses incurred by individuals. However, individuals may select either of the following two systems to carry forward losses related to business income:

- Carrying forward losses to the following four consecutive years
- Carrying forward losses indefinitely, subject to an annual limit equal to 50% of the taxpayer's taxable income in each year

Business losses may not be carried back.

B. Other taxes

Property tax. Property tax is imposed on urban and rural property and is payable by the property owners. The tax is administered and collected by the government of the locality where the property is located. The property tax base equals the total value of the taxpayer's property in every jurisdiction. To determine the total value of the property, land tariff values and construction official unitary values in force as of 31 October of the preceding year and the depreciation tables formulated by the National Council of Valuation must be applied. Property tax is levied at progressive rates ranging from 0.2% to 1%.

Vehicle tax. Vehicle tax is imposed on automobiles, vans, buses and station wagons that are up to three years old. The tax is payable by the vehicle owners. If the ownership of the vehicle is transferred, the new owner becomes the taxpayer from 1 January of the year after the transfer. The tax base equals the original value on acquisition or importation of the vehicle, which cannot be lower than the value approved by the Ministry of Economy and Finance. Vehicle tax is levied at a rate of 1%. The amount of tax cannot be less than 1.5% of one ATU as of 1 January of the year in which the tax is payable.

Tax on financial transactions. The rate of the tax on financial transactions is 0.005%. This tax is generally imposed on debits and credits in Peruvian bank accounts.

C. Social security

Employees must contribute 13% of their salaries and wages to the government-sponsored pension fund (Oficina de Normalizacion Previsional, or ONP). Under an alternative system, employees must contribute approximately 12% of their salaries and wages to the Private Pension Funds Trustee (Administradora de Fondo de Pensiones, or AFP). These amounts must be withheld by employers under both the ONP and AFP systems. Employers must contribute to the Health Care Fund (HCF) at a rate of 9%. Following the procedure established by law, employers can hire private health providers (Spanish acronym EPS). This allows them to use a credit of up to 25% of the HCF contribution, subject to certain limits. The health care system provides the employee with medical attention and subsidies in case of disability.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Employers must withhold income tax monthly from salaries of employees. An 8% tax must also be withheld on fees paid for independent professional services that are provided to legal entities as payment toward the professional's annual income tax. Such professionals may avoid withholding up to PEN38,496 if they foresee that their income will not be higher than this amount.

The tax year is the calendar year. Individual tax returns must be filed with the tax office usually in late March or by early April, and any balance due must be paid at that time. Only tax residents are subject to tax return filing obligations.

Married persons are taxed separately. However, for income derived from properties held in common, they may elect to be taxed jointly.

Individuals earning only employment income are not required to file tax returns, unless they want to apply the additional deduction of expenses up to three ATUs.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

A tax credit is granted for taxes paid or withheld abroad, within certain limits. Under a treaty with Bolivia, Colombia and Ecuador (signatories to the Andean Pact), income earned in those countries is excluded from taxable income in Peru to avoid double taxation, subject to certain exceptions. Peru has double tax treaties that are currently in force with Brazil, Canada, Chile, Korea (South), Mexico, Portugal and Switzerland.

F. Temporary visas

In general, all foreign nationals must obtain visas to enter Peru. However, citizens of the jurisdictions listed below may enter Peru for tourist, cultural or sporting purposes by getting tourist visas at the airport for periods of a maximum of 183 days. The visas are granted after the expatriates enter Peru.

Foreign nationals may enter Peru with temporary visas, which allow entry and stays for up to 183 days and are not renewable. Temporary visas are issued to individuals with tourist, business, official, artistic, religious, student, employee, designated employee and crew member status.

The granting of a visa is subject to the judgment of the Peruvian migratory office. All temporary visas are required before entry into Peru. If the expatriate will obtain the visa before entering Peru, he or she needs to pick up the visa at the Peruvian Consular Office, which can also evaluate whether a visa should be issued to the expatriate. The essential requirements for obtaining a visa are a passport and evidence of transitory status.

Foreign nationals holding the following visa statuses receive temporary visas:

- Business visas, granted to foreign nationals who enter Peru temporarily to carry out business activities that do not generate Peruvian-source income and who do not intend to establish permanent residence. Business visas are also granted to foreigners who will perform technical assistance services. These foreign nationals are permitted to sign agreements and undertake transactions. This visa can be granted for up to 183 days, and is not renewable.
- Work visas for designated employees who have an assignment for less than one year, granted to foreign nationals who are sent to work in Peru by their foreign company employers to perform agreed services. This visa can be granted for up to 90 days and is renewable for up to one year.
- Work visas for employees who have a work contract with a Peruvian entity for a term of less than one year and for foreign nationals who enter Peru to carry out activities related to their own profession. This visa can be granted for up to 90 days and is renewable for up to one year.
- Official visas, granted to foreign nationals who are recognized as official visitors by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and are subject to special regulations. This visa can be granted for up to 90 days and is renewable.
- Diplomatic and consular visas, which can be granted for up to 90 days and are renewable.
- Tourist visas, granted to foreign nationals who visit Peru for recreational purposes and who do not intend to immigrate or to enter into remunerated activities. This visa can be granted for up to 183 days and may not be extended. A foreign national who is in Peru on a tourist visa can change his or her migratory status while in Peru.
- Student visas, granted to foreign nationals who enter Peru to study in educational institutions recognized by the Peruvian government and who do not generate Peruvian-source income, except for professional practices or vacation jobs approved by a corresponding policy-making body. This visa can be granted for up to 90 days and is renewable up to one year.
- Artist visas, granted to foreign nationals who enter Peru with the purpose of carrying out approved remunerated artistic or performance-related activities and who do not intend to establish a permanent residence in Peru. This visa can be granted for up to 90 days and is renewable twice for additional periods of 30 days each within a calendar year.

G. Work visas and self-employment

Domestic and foreign companies established in Peru may employ foreign nationals up to a maximum of 20% of the total personnel of a company. Salaries paid to foreign nationals may not exceed 30% of the total payroll. Specialists or management personnel of a new industry may be exempt from these limits, among others.

The following individuals are not considered foreign nationals for purposes of hiring foreign personnel:

- Foreigners with Peruvian spouses, ascendants, descendants or siblings
- Foreigners who have immigrant visas
- Foreigners whose country of origin has a treaty of labor reciprocity or a treaty of double nationality with Peru
- Personnel from foreign transport enterprises that operate under a foreign flag
- Personnel from foreign enterprises or multinational banks that have a special regulation
- Foreign personnel under bilateral or multilateral agreements honored by the Peruvian government who render services in the country
- Foreign investors, regardless of whether they have waived the right to repatriate capital investments or profits, if an investment of no less than PEN500,000 (approximately USD156,000) is maintained throughout the term of their contracts
- Artists, athletes and, in general, those who work in public events in the country for a maximum of three months during a calendar year

Documents that must be submitted to obtain a work visa include the following:

- An application addressed to the Ministry of Labor
- Affidavit of limiting percentages subscribed by the employer, attesting that the employment agreement complies with the limits set under the law for hiring foreign personnel (other documents may apply with respect to employees exempt from these limits)
- Employment agreement with all of the mandatory clauses for a term of one year or more (limit of three years)
- Affidavit stating that the expatriate is qualified to perform the service; a copy of his or her professional degree, technical study or work certificates must be in his or her personal file
- Copy of the passport or the foreign card (the passport must have a minimum validity of six months at the moment of the visa application)
- Interpol criminal records
- Criminal records request in home country apostilled
- Copy of the company's tax registration
- Receipt for payment
- Document issued by the Peruvian Public Registry proving that the Peruvian legal representative of the company is authorized to submit work contracts

Employment agreements are approved by the Ministry of Labor automatically. The hired person may begin to render services after the work visa is obtained. This visa can be granted as a temporary or resident visa, depending on the term of the work contract with the Peruvian company.

The Peruvian immigration office approves resident work visas in approximately 60 working days. This visa can be granted temporal or resident and can be renewed. Temporal visas have a maximum duration of one year, while resident visas can be renewed annually with no limit.

A foreign national with a valid work visa may change employers after notifying the Ministry of Labor and the migratory office.

For a work visa for designated employees, the following documents must be filed with the immigration authorities:
- A service agreement between the foreign company and the local company, apostilled or legalized by the Peruvian consulate of the place where the document was issued
- A letter of assignment from the foreign company, apostilled or legalized by the Peruvian consulate of the place where the document was issued
- Interpol criminal records for individuals who apply for a resident visa
- Criminal records request in home country apostilled
- A letter from the local company, signed by the legal representative
- A copy of the passport (the passport must have a minimum validity of six months at the time of the visa application)

The Peruvian immigration office approves designated work visas in approximately 60 working days. This visa can be granted temporal or resident and can be renewed.

Self-employed foreign nationals are required to obtain work permits in Peru.

H. Residence visas

Foreign nationals holding the following visa status may receive residence visas:
- Employees who have a work contract with a Peruvian entity for a term of one to three years and foreign nationals who enter Peru to carry out activities related to their own profession may obtain a work visa. This visa can be granted for one year and is renewable annually for up to one year.
- Foreign nationals who are sent to work in Peru by their foreign company employers to perform agreed services may obtain an assignment work visa. The service agreement and assignment letter must be for one year. This visa can be granted for one year and is renewable for up to one year.
- Diplomatic, consular and official visa holders may obtain residence visas valid for a specific period established by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.
- Religious, student and work visa holders may obtain residence visas valid for up to one year, which are renewable.
- Immigrants (now called permanent residents) may obtain residence visas with an undetermined time period.

In these cases, a document that supports the residence must exist. For example, for work visas, a work contract for a period of one year is required for an employee. If the term of the contract is less than one year, a temporary visa applies.

Foreign nationals from Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Paraguay and Uruguay can obtain residence visas for a two-year period under the Southern Common Market (Mercado Común del Sur, or MERCOSUR) Agreement. This visa allows them to live and work in Peru. The visa is not renewable, but individuals can request permanent residency for an undetermined period three months before the expiration date. For permanent residency, it is necessary to prove that the expatriate has resources to live in Peru.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. A resident visa allows a foreigner to obtain a visa for his or her family members, including a spouse, children younger than 18 years old, and for children 18 years or older (in this case, it is necessary to prove that the dependent is single and is studying in Peru), parents and other dependents. This visa applies also to concubines. To obtain the visa for family members, the individual must submit a marriage certificate (issued no more than six months before the application) and birth certificates. These documents must be apostilled or legalized before the Peruvian consulate. If they are not in Spanish, they must be translated into Spanish by a Public Translator in Peru. Expatriates who have this type of visa are allowed to work in Peru. Apostilled Interpol criminal records and criminal records from the home country are required for applicants 18 or older.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally in Peru with their home country driver's licenses for the first six months after their arrival in Peru. Foreign nationals can also drive legally in Peru with their international driver's licenses, but the six-month period will apply. If the expatriate become a migratory resident in Peru, it will be necessary to obtain a Peruvian driver's license.

The following are the two ways to obtain a Peruvian driver's license:
- Taking a written test, physical test and practical driving exam
- Exchanging a local driver's license for a Peruvian one

This driver's license is granted for up to eight years depending on the category of the license.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident citizens are subject to tax on worldwide income. Nonresident citizens, resident aliens and nonresident aliens are subject to tax on income from Philippine sources.

Under Section 22E of the Tax Code, the term "nonresident citizen" means a citizen who meets one of the following conditions:
- Establishes to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the fact of his or her physical presence abroad with a definite intention to reside therein
- Leaves the Philippines during the taxable year to reside abroad, either as an immigrant or for employment on a permanent basis
- Works and derives income from abroad and whose employment requires him or her to be physically present abroad most of the time during the taxable year
- Has been previously considered as a nonresident citizen and who arrives in the Philippines at any time during the taxable year to reside permanently in the Philippines, with respect to his or her income derived from sources abroad until the date of his or her arrival in the Philippines

The term "most of the time during the taxable year" generally means presence abroad for more than 183 days during the year. However, in determining a Filipino citizen's residency status, the Bureau of Internal Revenue (BIR) considers other factors such as assignment term, location of payroll, assignee's employment status in the Philippines and residency status in the host country. As the BIR's interpretation may change from time to time, consultation with a tax advisor is highly recommended.

For foreign nationals, residence is determined by the length and nature of an individual's stay in the Philippines. An alien who comes to the Philippines for a definite purpose that is promptly accomplished is not deemed to be resident. However, if an alien makes his or her home temporarily in the Philippines because an extended stay may be necessary for the accomplishment of the alien's purpose for coming to the Philippines, the alien becomes a resident even though it may be the alien's intention at all times to return to the alien's domicile abroad when the alien consummates or abandons the purpose of the stay in the Philippines. Aliens who reside in the Philippines with the intention to remain permanently are considered resident. Aliens who acquire residence in the Philippines remain residents until they depart with the intention of abandoning that residence.

Nonresident aliens are classified as either engaged or not engaged in trade or business in the Philippines. A nonresident alien who stays in the Philippines for more than a total of 180 days during any calendar year is deemed to be engaged in trade or business in the Philippines; any other nonresident alien is deemed to be not engaged in trade or business in the Philippines.

A ruling issued by the BIR stated that in applying the above rules to nonresident aliens, all the months in a calendar year covered by the period of assignment of the nonresident alien individual must be considered in evaluating if he or she exceeded the 180-day period. If an expatriate's stay in the Philippines exceeds the 180-day period during any calendar year, he or she becomes a nonresident alien doing business in the Philippines for the entire duration of his or her Philippine assignment. As a result, if an expatriate stays in the Philippines for more than 180 days in any calendar year, he or she is considered a nonresident alien engaged in a trade or business and taxed at the graduated rates of 0% to 35% (as a result of the implementation of Republic Act No. 10963), not only during the year that his or her stay in the Philippines exceeds the 180-day period, but also during the other years of assignment, even if such stay did not exceed 180 days (BIR Ruling DA-056-05).

Income subject to tax. Gross income includes compensation, income from the conduct of a trade, business or profession, and other income, including gains from dealings in property, interest, rent, dividends, annuities, prizes, pensions and partners' distributive shares.

The following income items are excluded from gross income (the Tax Code refers to these items as "exclusions") and are, consequently, exempt from taxation:

- Thirteenth month pay, productivity incentives, Christmas bonuses and other benefits, up to an aggregate of PHP90,000
- Proceeds of life insurance policies
- Amounts received by an insured as a return of premium
- Gifts, bequests and devises
- Compensation for injuries or sickness from accident or health insurance or under the Workers' Compensation Acts
- Income exempt under treaty provisions
- Retirement benefits received pursuant to certain laws or under a reasonable private benefit plan
- Amounts received as a consequence of separation from service as a result of death, sickness, physical disability or any cause beyond the control of the employee
- Social security benefits, retirement gratuities and other similar benefits received by resident or nonresident citizens of the Philippines or aliens who come to reside permanently in the Philippines from foreign government agencies and other public or private institutions

- Payments or benefits due or to become due to individuals residing in the Philippines under US laws administered by the US Veterans Administration
- Benefits received from or enjoyed under the social security systems
- Prizes and awards in recognition of religious, charitable, scientific, educational, artistic, literary or civic achievement, as well as awards in authorized sports competitions
- Mandated contributions to the government and private social security systems and housing fund
- Gains from the sale of bonds, debentures or other certificates of indebtedness with a maturity of longer than five years
- Gains from redemptions of shares in a mutual fund

Employment income. Employment income includes all remuneration for services performed by an employee for his or her employer under an employer-employee relationship. The name by which compensation is designated is immaterial. It includes salaries, wages, emoluments and honoraria, allowances, commissions, fees including director's fees for a director who is also an employee of the firm, bonuses, fringe benefits, taxable pensions and retirement pay and other income of a similar nature. Emergency cost-of-living allowances received by employees are also included in their compensation income.

Employment income received for services provided in the Philippines is subject to tax in the Philippines regardless of where the compensation is paid. Remuneration for services remains classified as compensation even if paid after the employer-employee relationship is ended.

Taxable employment income equals employment income less exclusions. With the passage of the Tax Reform for Acceleration and Inclusion (TRAIN) Act (Republic Act [RA] No. 10963), personal and additional exemptions and premium payments on health and/or hospitalization insurance are no longer considered as deductions from employment income of citizen and resident alien taxpayers. As a result, beginning with the 2018 tax year, these deductions may no longer be deducted from employment income to arrive at taxable employment income. Nonresident aliens not engaged in trade or business in the Philippines remain taxable on their gross income.

Fringe benefits are any goods, services or other benefits granted in cash or in kind by employers to employees (except rank-and-file employees, as defined) such as, but not limited to, the following:
- Housing
- Expense account
- Any vehicles
- Household personnel, such as maids, drivers and others
- Interest on loan at less than market rate to the extent of the difference between the market rate and actual rate granted
- Membership fees, dues and other expenses borne by the employer for the employee in social and athletic clubs or other similar organizations
- Expenses for foreign travel

- Holiday and vacation expenses
- Educational assistance to the employee or his or her dependents
- Life or health insurance and other non-life insurance premiums or similar amounts in excess of the amounts allowed by law

Under the tax law, the following fringe benefits are exempt from tax:
- Fringe benefits that are authorized and exempt from tax under special laws
- Contributions of employers for the benefit of employees to retirement, insurance and hospitalization benefit plans
- Benefits granted to the rank-and-file employees (as defined), regardless of whether they are granted under a collective bargaining agreement
- De minimis benefits (see below)
- Fringe benefits required by the nature of, or necessary to, the trade, business or profession of the employer
- Fringe benefits granted for the convenience or advantage of the employer

De minimis benefits are items furnished or offered by employers to their employees that are of relatively small value and are offered or furnished by the employers as a means of promoting the health, goodwill, contentment, or efficiency of their employees. De minimis benefits are expressly exempt from income tax as well as from fringe benefits tax (FBT).

The following are de minimis benefits:
- Monetized unused vacation leave credits of private employees not exceeding 10 days during the year and the monetized value of the vacation and sick leave credits paid to government officials and employees
- Medical cash allowance to dependents of employees, not exceeding PHP1,500 per employee per semester or PHP250 per month
- Actual medical assistance not exceeding PHP10,000 per year
- Laundry allowance not exceeding PHP300 per month
- Employees' achievement awards, which must be in the form of tangible personal property other than cash or gift certificates, with an annual monetary value not exceeding PHP10,000, received by the employee under an established written plan that does not discriminate in favor of highly paid employees
- Gifts given during Christmas and major anniversary celebrations not exceeding PHP5,000 per employee per year
- Daily meal allowance for overtime work not exceeding 25% of the basic minimum wage on a per-region basis (the basic minimum wage rate is not the same across jurisdictions within the Philippines because such rates are determined by a Wage Board on a per region [city or province] basis)
- Rice subsidy of PHP2,000 or 1 sack of 50 kilograms of rice per month amounting to not more than PHP2,000
- Uniform and clothing allowance not exceeding PHP6,000 per year
- Benefits received by an employee in accordance with a collective bargaining agreement (CBA) and productivity incentive schemes, if the total combined annual monetary value received from the CBA and the productivity incentive schemes do not exceed PHP10,000 per employee per tax year

The above list is exclusive. All other benefits granted by employers that are not included in the above list are not considered de minimis benefits, and accordingly are subject to income tax, withholding tax on compensation, and FBT (Revenue Regulations [RR] No. 5-2011), as amended by RR No. 11-2018 with the introduction of the TRAIN Act.

Fringe benefits are subject to FBT if the cost of the benefit is borne or claimed as an expense by the Philippine entity and if the recipient of the benefit is a non-rank-and-file employee. If the cost is not borne by the Philippine entity or if it is borne by the Philippine entity but received by a rank-and-file employee, the benefit is classified as compensation income subject to income tax and accordingly withholding tax on wages. As mentioned above, de minimis benefits are exempt from both FBT and income tax or withholding tax on wages.

Business income. Gross income from the conduct of a trade or business or the exercise of a profession may be reduced by certain allowable deductions.

Resident or local suppliers of goods and services, including nonresident aliens engaged in trade or business in the Philippines, are subject to a 1% creditable expanded withholding tax on their sales of goods and to a 2% creditable expanded withholding tax on their sales of services, if the payer is among the top withholding agents as classified by the BIR. Expanded withholding tax is a withholding tax that is prescribed for certain payers and that is creditable against the income tax due of the payee for the relevant tax quarter or year (RR No. 11-2018, as amended by RR No. 14-2018).

Professional fees paid to individuals are subject to a 10% creditable expanded withholding tax (EWT) if the individual earns gross income of more than PHP3 million during the year or if the individual is VAT-registered regardless of the amount of his or her gross income. If an individual has gross income during the year of PHP3 million or less, the professional fees are subject to a creditable EWT of 5% (RR No. 11-2018, as amended by RR No. 14-2018).

Directors' fees. Directors' fees derived by individuals who are employees of the same company are taxed as income from employment and are subject to creditable withholding tax on wages. Directors' fees derived by individuals who are not employees of the same company are included in the recipients' business income and are subject to a creditable withholding tax. The rate of the withholding tax is 10% if the gross income for the current year exceeds PHP3 million. Otherwise, the rate is 5%. Directors' fees derived by nonresident aliens deemed to be not engaged in a trade or business are subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 25% (RR No. 11-2018).

Investment income. In general, interest on peso deposits and yields, or any other monetary benefit derived from deposit substitutes, trust funds and similar arrangements, is subject to a final 20% withholding tax. However, interest on certain long-term deposits or investments evidenced by qualifying certificates is exempt from the final 20% withholding tax. Final tax is imposed at rates ranging from 5% to 20% on the income from long-term deposits if the investment is withdrawn before the end of the fifth year. Interest received by residents on foreign-currency deposits is subject to a final 15% withholding tax. Interest received by nonresident individuals on foreign-currency deposits is exempt from tax (RR No. 11-2018).

Cash or property dividends actually or constructively received by citizens and resident aliens from domestic corporations, as well as a partner's share in the after-tax profits of a partnership (except a general professional partnership), are subject to final withholding tax at a rate of 10% (RR No. 11-2018). Nonresident aliens engaged in a trade or business in the Philippines are subject to final withholding tax on these types of income at a rate of 20%. For nonresident aliens not engaged in a trade or business in the Philippines, investment income is generally taxed at a rate of 25%, except for gains from sales of real estate and sales of shares of domestic corporations.

Rental income is considered business income and is taxed at the rates set forth in Rates.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. In general, employer-provided stock options are taxable to the employee as additional compensation or fringe benefit at the time the option is exercised. Revenue Memorandum Circular (RMC) No. 79-2014 provides for the tax treatment of employee income arising from the grant, exercise and sale of stock options. It states that for both Equity Settlement Options and Cash Settlement Options, the difference between the book value or fair market value of the shares, whichever is higher, at the time the stock option is exercised, and the price fixed on the grant date shall, on exercise of the option, be treated in the following manner:

- Additional compensation subject to income tax and to withholding tax on compensation, if the option is granted by an employer to a rank-and-file employee involving the employer's own shares of stock or shares owned by it
- A fringe benefit subject to FBT, if the employee receiving and exercising the option occupies a supervisory or managerial position

The RMC also imposed reportorial requirements on the issuing corporation with respect to the grant and exercise of options.

Capital gains and losses. In general, capital gains are included in an individual's regular taxable income and are subject to tax at the graduated rates set forth in Rates. The gain is the excess of the amount realized from the disposal of the asset over the adjusted basis. If the asset is held for 12 months or less prior to disposal, the entire gain or loss is reported. For assets held longer than 12 months, 50% of the gain or loss is reported. The holding period rules do not apply to capital gains derived from the sale of real property in the Philippines or shares of stock in a domestic corporation (see below).

Capital losses are deductible only to the extent of capital gains. Losses carried over are treated as short-term capital losses. Losses incurred from wash sales of stocks or securities are not deductible, unless incurred by a dealer in the ordinary course of business. This rule does not apply to shares of stock in a domestic corporation or to sales of real property described below.

A final tax of 6% is imposed on capital gains derived from transfers of real property located in the Philippines. The tax is based on the higher of the gross sales price and the fair market value.

Capital gains derived from the sale of shares in unlisted domestic corporations are taxed at a rate of 15%. The amount of the taxable gain is the excess of the sale price over the cost of the shares. In cases of transfers for less than an adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth, the amount by which the fair market value exceeded the value of the consideration is deemed to be a gift and is included in computing the amount of gifts made during the calendar year. However, transfers below consideration that are made in the ordinary course of business (a transaction that is bona fide, at arm's length, and free from any donative intent) is considered to be made for an adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth.

Gains derived from the sale of listed shares are exempt from capital gains tax. However, a percentage tax (stock transaction tax) is imposed at a rate of 0.6% on the gross selling price of the shares.

Gains derived by resident citizens from the sale of shares in foreign corporations are taxed as capital gains, subject to the regular income tax rates.

Deductions

General. As mentioned above in Employment income, the TRAIN Act removed personal and additional exemptions as deductions from gross taxable compensation income, effective from 1 January 2018. Individuals who earn income from a trade, business or the practice of a profession may deduct expenses incurred in connection with their trade, business or profession subject to Philippine income tax. These expenses include ordinary and necessary business or professional expenses, interest expense, taxes, losses, bad debts, depreciation, charitable contributions, contributions to a pension trust, and research and development. Alternatively, such taxable individual (except a nonresident alien not engaged in trade or business) may elect the optional standard deduction (OSD) of 40% of gross income instead of the itemized deductions. A taxpayer must signify his or her intention to claim the OSD in the annual tax return; otherwise, the taxpayer is deemed to have claimed the itemized deductions. After the election to claim the OSD is indicated in the return, it is irrevocable for the tax year for which the return is filed.

Contributions to government agencies. Employees age 60 or younger and their employers are compulsorily covered by the Social Security System (SSS). Individuals who are covered by the SSS are compulsorily covered by the Philippine National Health Insurance Program (PhilHealth) and the Home Development Mutual Fund (HDMF). Compulsory contributions to the SSS, PhilHealth and HDMF are deductible from the gross income of an individual. Voluntary contributions to these institutions in excess of the amount considered compulsory are not deductible and, accordingly, not exempt from income tax and withholding tax.

For the 2021 calendar year, the employee's total maximum compulsory monthly contribution to these entities amounts to PHP2,125 (SSS: PHP1,125; PhilHealth: PHP900; HDMF: PHP100). Employers' maximum monthly contributions to these entities amount to PHP3,155 (SSS: PHP2,155; PhilHealth: PHP900; HDMF: PHP100). The monthly contribution varies depending on the salary bracket of the individual.

The social security contributions mentioned above increased in January 2021 as provided in SSS Circular No. 2020-033. Also, HDMF issued Circular No. 421 in January 2019 informing employers to stop deducting contributions from all expatriates employed by them. This repeals Item B, Section (1)(1.1)(1.1.5) of HDMF Circular No. 274 issued in January 2010.

PhilHealth has introduced new guidelines for Overseas Filipinos with the issuance of PhilHealth Circular No. 2020-0014, dated 2 April 2020, increasing the premium rates applicable from 2.75% in 2019 to 3% in 2020. However, the measure is suspended temporarily.

Rates. Net taxable compensation and business income of resident and nonresident citizens, resident aliens, and nonresident aliens engaged in a trade or business are consolidated and taxed at the following graduated rates.

Net taxable income		Tax on lower amount	Rate on excess
Exceeding PHP	Not exceeding PHP	PHP	%
0	250,000	0	0
250,000	400,000	0	20
400,000	800,000	30,000	25
800,000	2,000,000	130,000	30
2,000,000	8,000,000	490,000	32
8,000,000	—	2,410,000	35

Effective from 1 January 2023, the following will be the graduated rates.

Net taxable income		Tax on lower amount	Rate on excess
Exceeding PHP	Not exceeding PHP	PHP	%
0	250,000	0	0
250,000	400,000	0	15
400,000	800,000	22,500	20
800,000	2,000,000	102,500	25
2,000,000	8,000,000	402,500	30
8,000,000	—	2,202,500	35

The preferential income tax rate of 15% on gross income for aliens and Filipinos employed by regional or area headquarters (RHQs) and regional operating headquarters (ROHQs) of multinational companies occupying a managerial or technical position, including those in offshore banking units (OBUs) and petroleum service contractors and subcontractors, is no longer applicable without prejudice to the application of preferential tax rates under existing international tax treaties. Beginning 1 January 2018, all employees of RHQs and ROHQs of multinational companies, offshore banking units and petroleum service contractors and subcontractors are subject to the regular income tax rate under Section 24(A)(2)(a) of the Tax Code, as amended (RR No. 8-2018).

Individuals earning income only from self-employment, business and/or the practice of a profession, whose gross sales or receipts and other nonoperating income do not exceed the value-added tax (VAT) threshold of PHP3 million have the option to be subject to an 8% final tax instead of the graduated income tax rates under Section 24(A) and the percentage tax under Section 116, respectively, of the Tax Code, as amended. The taxpayer must notify the tax authorities of his or her intention to elect the 8% income tax rate option in the first-quarter return of the tax year. If the taxpayer fails to do so, the graduated tax rates apply. The income tax rate option, once elected, is irrevocable for the tax year in which it is made. VAT-registered taxpayers whose gross sales or receipts exceeded the VAT threshold are automatically subject to the graduated income tax rates.

In calculating the FBT, the monetary value of the benefit is taken into consideration. The monetary value depends on the type of benefit granted, as well as on the manner in which the benefit is extended to the employee. For example, if the employer purchases a motor vehicle for the use of the employee (who is assumed to be a non-rank-and-file employee), the value of the benefit is the acquisition cost of the vehicle. The monetary value of the fringe benefit is the entire value of the benefit (meaning the entire acquisition cost). If the employer leases and maintains a fleet of motor vehicles for the use of the business and the employees, the value of the benefit is the amount of rental payments for motor vehicles not normally used for sales, freight, delivery, service and other non-personal uses. The monetary value of the benefit is 50% of the value of the benefit (rental payment). The BIR has issued specific regulations on the treatment of fringe benefits.

After the monetary value is determined, it is then grossed up and subjected to the applicable FBT rate.

The FBT rates and the gross-up factors are shown in the following table.

Type of employee	FBT rate %	Factor used in determining the grossed-up monetary value %
Resident citizen, resident alien or nonresident alien engaged in a trade or business in the Philippines	35	65
Nonresident alien not engaged in a trade or business in the Philippines	25	75
Alien employed by or Filipino employee occupying a managerial or technical position in regional or area headquarters of multinational companies, offshore banking units and petroleum contractors and subcontractors	25/35	65/75

Although the FBT is a tax on the employee, the actual payment of the tax is borne by the employer. This method is used to ensure that all benefits received by employees are subject to tax. During the deliberations of the Philippine Congress regarding the adoption of the FBT, it noted that many executives were able to avoid taxation by being paid fringe benefits rather than straight salaries. The collection of FBT from employers is intended to plug this loophole.

For nonresident aliens engaged in a trade or business in the Philippines, dividends, shares in profits of partnerships taxed as corporations, interest, royalties, prizes in excess of PHP10,000 and other winnings (including Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office winnings) are subject to final withholding tax at a rate of 20% of the gross amount. Royalties on musical compositions, books and other literary works are subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 10%. Nonresident aliens are taxed on capital gains derived from sales of real property or shares in domestic corporations in the manner discussed in Capital gains and losses.

Nonresident aliens not engaged in a trade or business in the Philippines are subject to a final withholding tax of 25% on gross income, including fringe benefits, from all sources in the Philippines. However, capital gains derived from sales of real property or from sales of shares in domestic corporations are subject to the same tax rates imposed on citizens and resident aliens.

Relief for losses. Under certain circumstances, self-employed persons may carry forward business losses for three years, unless a 25% change in the ownership of the business occurs. Carrybacks are not permitted.

B. Estate and gift taxes

Estate tax. An estate tax is imposed at a fixed rate of 6% on the transfer of a decedent's net estate. Citizens, regardless of whether resident at the time of death, and resident aliens are taxed on their worldwide estates.

An estate tax return must be filed by the executor or administrator, or any of the legal heirs, if any of the following circumstances exist:
- Transfers that are subject to estate tax.
- Regardless of the gross value of the estate, the estate consists of registered or registrable property such as real property, motor vehicles, shares of stock or other similar property for which a clearance from the BIR is required as a condition precedent for the transfer of ownership thereof in the name of the transferee.

If the estate tax return shows a gross value exceeding PHP5 million, it must be supported with a statement certified by a certified public accountant.

For estate tax purposes, only that part of a nonresident alien decedent's estate located in the Philippines is included in the taxable estate. Under specified conditions, deductions may be permitted for certain items, including expenses, losses, indebtedness, taxes and the value of property previously subject to estate or gift tax or of property transferred for public use.

The net estate is computed by deducting the following amounts from the total value of a decedent's real or personal, tangible or intangible, property, wherever situated:
- Claims against the estate, claims against insolvent persons, and unpaid mortgages or indebtedness on property
- The value of property transferred for public use
- The value of property subject to estate or gift tax (subject to special rules) within five years prior to a decedent's death
- The value of the family home, not exceeding PHP10 million
- The amount received from the decedent's employer as a result of the death of the employee

In addition, estates of residents or citizens are entitled to a standard deduction of PHP5 million as well as a deduction of up to PHP500,000 for medical expenses incurred by the decedent within one year prior to death.

In the case of married decedents, the surviving spouse's net share in the conjugal partnership property may also be deducted from the net estate.

To prevent double taxation of estates, the Philippines has concluded an estate tax treaty with Denmark.

Gift tax. Residents and nonresidents are subject to gift tax, which is payable by the donor on total net gifts made in a calendar year. Similar to estate taxation, citizens and resident aliens are subject to gift tax on worldwide assets. Nonresident aliens are subject to gift tax on their Philippine assets only.

In the calculation of the net taxable gift, the law allows the following items to be deducted from the total value of the donation:
- Encumbrance assumed by the donee
- Diminution of gift provided by the donor
- Gifts made to or for the use of the national government or any of its agencies
- Gifts to nonprofit organizations

The tax on the donor is imposed at a fixed rate of 6% of the total gifts in excess of the PHP250,000 exemption for gifts made during the calendar year, regardless of whether the donee is a stranger.

C. Social security

Contributions. All individuals working in the Philippines must pay social security contributions. Effective 1 January 2021, the SSS implemented the New Schedule of Regular Social Security, Employee's Compensation and Mandatory Provident Fund Contributions (SSS Circular No. 2020-033), following the enactment of RA 11199 or the Social Security Act of 2018, which increased the social security contribution rate to 13%. The employee's contribution is approximately 4% of salary and is withheld by the employer. The employer's contribution is approximately 8.5% of the employee's salary. Coverage is mandatory for self-employed persons and Overseas Filipino Workers (OFWs). The Mandatory Provident Fund (MPF) is similar to regular contributions in that it is shared by the employer and employee, and shouldered solely by the self-employed, voluntary, or OFW member. The minimum monthly salary subject to social security contributions is PHP1,000. The minimum monthly salary credit (MSC) is PHP3,000 and the maximum MSC is PHP25,000. The maximum monthly contributions are PHP2,155 (PHP1,730 regular SSS and PHP425 MPF) for employers and PHP1,125 (PHP900 regular SSS and PHP225 MPF) for employees, which apply to employees receiving monthly compensation of PHP24,750 or more.

As mentioned in Contributions to government agencies in Section A, employees covered by the SSS also must contribute to the PhilHealth and HDMF. Beginning in 2018, employer and employee contributions to HDMF for foreign nationals who live and work in the Philippines are no longer required.

For 2020, the employee's PhilHealth contribution is 1.5% of monthly basic salary and is withheld by the employer. The employer's contribution is 1.5% of an employee's monthly basic salary. The employer and employee's maximum PhilHealth contribution is PHP900 each (capped at PHP60,000 income). The contribution increases 0.5% per year beginning in 2021. Therefore, for 2021, the combined employer and employee contributions are increased from 3% to 3.5% or combined contributions of PHP2,450 (capped at PHP70,000 income). However, the increase in the PhilHealth contribution for 2021 is currently suspended.

Bilateral social security agreements. The Philippines has entered into bilateral social security agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Austria	Japan (b)	Quebec
Belgium	Korea (South) (c)	Spain
Canada	Luxembourg (d)	Sweden (f)
Denmark	Netherlands (e)	Switzerland
France	Portugal	United Kingdom
Germany (a)

(a) This agreement entered into force on 1 June 2018.
(b) This agreement entered into force on 1 August 2018.
(c) This agreement was signed 25 November 2019.
(d) This agreement entered into force on 1 January 2020.
(e) The agreement with the Netherlands is limited to mutual administrative assistance (for example, income validation and life certification [a document that helps attest or prove that the pensioner is alive and accordingly still entitled to the benefit or pension]). The agreement does not cover a Certificate of Continuing Liability (a certification issued by the SSS regarding continuing coverage under the Philippine SSS in relation to a bilateral agreement that the Philippines has with the country of temporary assignment or employment).
(f) This agreement will enter into force on the exchange of diplomatic notes of ratification.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in the Philippines is the calendar year. An income tax return must be filed, and the tax due paid, on or before 15 April for income derived in the preceding year. If the tax due exceeds PHP2,000, it may be paid in two equal installments, the first at the time of filing the return and the second on or before 15 October following the end of the relevant tax year. If the deadline falls on a Saturday, Sunday or holiday, the return is due the next business day. Filing and payment extensions are not allowed. Failure to file the income tax return and pay the taxes by the due date, if required, exposes the taxpayer to a 25% surcharge, interest and a compromise penalty not exceeding PHP50,000. The amount of interest to be paid is computed based on double the legal interest rate for loans or forbearance of any money, in the absence of an express stipulation, set by the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas from the date prescribed for payment until the amount is fully paid. Currently, this rate is 12%.

In prior years, the BIR allowed the manual filing of income tax returns. However, with the issuance of RR No. 5-2015, which amends RR No. 6-2014, it is now mandatory for taxpayers enumerated under RR No. 6-2014 to use the eBIR Forms facility. This means that the tax returns, including individual income tax returns (BIR Forms 1700 and 1701), must be prepared using eBIR Forms. This provision is supported by RMC 28-2017, which reiterates the mandate of electronic filing of tax returns. Such RMC provides the guidelines on how and where to file the returns, and which attachments are required to be filed with the tax return. RMC No. 25-2020 provides further guidelines on the payment options available for taxpayers filing through the eBIR Forms facility. A penalty of PHP1,000 is imposed for each return not filed electronically if electronic filing is required. The taxpayer is also liable for a civil penalty amounting to 25% of the tax due to be paid for filing a return in a manner not in compliance with existing regulations, thus tantamount to wrong-venue filing. Other individual taxpayers who do not fall in the categories in RR No. 6-2014 or are exempted may still file manually by using the printed BIR Form or using the form generated from the Offline eBIR Forms either manually or electronically by online submission or e-Filing.

The Philippines has the Pay-As-You-File system. Tax payments can be made over the counter on manual filing of the tax return or electronically using the online banking facilities of some banks. Tax payments also can be made through credit cards or GCash.

Minimum wage earners (MWEs) who work in the private sector and are paid the Statutory Minimum Wage (SMW), as fixed by the Regional Tripartite Wage and Productivity Board (RTWPB)/ National Wages and Productivity Commission (NWPC), applicable to the locations where they are assigned, are not subject to income tax and, consequently, to withholding tax on compensation. Likewise, employees in the public sector with compensation income of not more than the SMW in the non-agricultural sector, as fixed by RTWPB/NWPC, applicable to the locations where they are assigned, are also exempt from withholding tax on compensation.

Holiday pay, overtime pay, night shift differential pay and hazard pay earned by the MWEs mentioned above are also covered by the above exemption.

Employees do not qualify as MWEs if they earn additional compensation such as commissions, honoraria, fringe benefits, benefits in excess of the allowable statutory amount of PHP90,000, taxable allowances and other taxable compensation. Such additional compensation does not include the SMW, holiday pay, overtime pay, hazard pay and night shift differential pay.

Consequently, such employees' entire earnings are subject to income tax and, accordingly, withholding tax.

MWEs receiving other income, such as income from the conduct of trade, business, or practice of profession, except income subject to final tax, in addition to compensation income are not exempt from income tax on their entire income earned during the tax year. Notwithstanding this rule, such MWEs are exempt from withholding tax on the SMW, holiday pay, overtime pay, night shift differential pay and hazard pay.

Individuals deriving business income may credit against income tax due the creditable expanded withholding tax withheld from the income by the payers of the income (see Section A).

Although spouses may compute their individual income tax liabilities separately based on their respective total taxable incomes, they must file joint returns. However, spouses (both husband and wife) that would qualify under the "substituted filing" of income tax returns (see below) may not be required to file income tax returns.

For the sale of shares not traded through a local stock exchange and the sale of real property considered to be a capital asset, the filing and payment of the tax due must be made within 30 days after the sale or disposition, using BIR Forms Nos. 1707 and 1706, respectively. For the sale of real property considered to be an ordinary asset, the remittance of tax withheld must be made on or before the 10th day following the month of the transaction, using BIR Form No. 1606.

The BIR has implemented a "hassle-free" method of filing individual income tax returns (BIR Form No. 1700). Under certain circumstances, this method recognizes the employer's annual information return (BIR Form No. 1604CF) as the "substitute" income tax return filed by the employee, because the employer's return contains the information (amount of income payment, the tax due and tax withheld) included in an income tax return ordinarily filed by the employee. Under "substituted filing," an individual taxpayer who is required under the law to file an income tax return does not need to personally file an income tax return, and the employer's filed annual information return is considered the "substitute" income tax return of the employee. On or before 31 January of the year following the tax year, the employer must issue BIR Form No. 2316 to the employee. This form must be certified by both parties under the penalty for perjury.

A taxpayer may qualify under the substituted filing method of the BIR provided that all of the following qualifications and requirements are met:

- The employee receives purely compensation income during the taxable year.
- The employee receives income from only one employer in the Philippines during the taxable year.
- The amount of tax due from the employee at the end of the year is fully covered by the amount of tax withheld by the employer.
- The employee is not classified as a nonresident alien engaged in trade or business (that is, the employee is a citizen or a resident alien). In practice, to be considered as a resident alien, his or her Philippine assignment should exceed two years.

- If the employee is married, his or her spouse also complies with all three aforementioned conditions, or otherwise receives no income.
- The employer files BIR Form No. 1604CF.
- The employee has BIR Form No. 2316 or BIR Form No. 2306 issued by his employer.

Under RR No. 2-2015, the employer is required to scan the duplicate copies of BIR Form No. 2316 and save them in a digital versatile disk-recordable (DVD-R disk) and submit them to the BIR no later than 28 February following the end of the calendar year. RMC No. 24-2019 mentions that a universal storage bus (USB) memory stick or other similar storage devices may be used in the absence of DVDs, provided that the scanned copies of the forms are made in an uneditable format.

The following individuals do not qualify for substituted filing:
- Individuals deriving compensation income from two or more employers during the calendar year
- Employees deriving compensation income during the calendar year from whom the tax due is not equal to the tax withheld, resulting in a collectible or refundable return
- Individuals deriving other income, in addition to compensation that was not subjected to final tax
- Individuals deriving purely compensation income from only one employer and said income has been correctly subjected to withholding tax, but said individual's spouse is not entitled to substituted filing
- Nonresident aliens engaged in trade or business in the Philippines

For income subject to final withholding tax, the taxpayer is not required to file a tax return if such income is his or her sole income from the Philippines. The withholding agent is responsible for reporting the income and remitting the tax withheld.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Foreign taxes paid or incurred in connection with a taxpayer's profession, trade or business may be deducted from gross income, subject to exceptions. Resident Filipino citizens may claim a credit for income tax due to any foreign country; the credit may not exceed the Philippine income tax payable on the same income multiplied by a fraction, the numerator of which is taxable income from foreign countries and the denominator of which is worldwide taxable income.

The Philippines has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Australia
Austria
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Belgium
Brazil
Canada
China Mainland
Czech Republic
Denmark
Indonesia
Israel
Italy
Japan
Korea (South)
Kuwait
Malaysia
Mexico (a)
Netherlands
New Zealand
Romania
Russian Federation
Singapore
Spain
Sri Lanka (b)
Sweden
Switzerland
Thailand (c)
Turkey

Finland	Nigeria	United Arab Emirates
France	Norway	United Kingdom
Germany	Pakistan	United States
Hungary	Poland	Vietnam
India	Qatar

(a) The treaty with Mexico entered into force on 18 April 2018 and took effect on 1 January 2019 with respect to income arising from sources in the Philippines.
(b) The treaty with Sri Lanka entered into force on 14 March 2018 and took effect on 1 January 2019 with respect to income arising from sources in the Philippines.
(c) The treaty with Thailand has been renegotiated. The renegotiated treaty entered into force on 5 March 2018 and took effect on 1 January 2019 with respect to income arising from sources in the Philippines.

The Philippines is negotiating tax treaties with Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Iran, Laos, Myanmar, Oman, Papua New Guinea, Saudi Arabia (air transport only) and Tunisia.

Benefiting from tax treaty relief in the Philippines is not automatic. A Tax Treaty Relief Application Form (TTRA) must be filed with the International Tax Affairs Division (ITAD) of the BIR at least 15 days before the transaction, in accordance with the provisions of Revenue Memorandum Order (RMO) No. 1-2000. This requirement was further reiterated in RMO No. 72-2010, which states that the TTRA and the supporting documents must be submitted and received by the ITAD. If they are filed with any other office, the application is considered improperly filed. The submission must be done before "the first taxable event," which is defined as the "first or the only time when the income payor is required to withhold the income tax thereon or should have withheld taxes thereon had the transaction been subjected to tax." Consequently, the TTRA must be filed before the first income payment is made.

However, in the case of Deutsche Bank AG Manila v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue (G.R. No. 188550, 19 August 2013), the Supreme Court of the Philippines ruled that a failure to comply with the requirement under RMO No. 1-2000 — that is, to file a TTRA 15 days in advance — should not deprive the taxpayer of the benefit of the tax treaty. Nevertheless, it is advisable to file a TTRA for protection purposes, such as in the event of a BIR audit, and for confirmation of the tax implications of the relevant transaction.

The BIR has adopted a self-assessment system and the automatic withholding of taxes on nonresidents deriving dividends, interest and royalties from sources in the Philippines at the applicable tax treaty rates. The guidelines are contained in RMO No. 8-2017, dated 24 October 2016. They were issued to provide new procedures for claiming preferential tax treaty benefits. These procedures were originally contained in RMO No. 72-2010. These new procedures provide that a TTRA should no longer be filed with the ITAD. Instead of filing the TTRA, the withholding agents apply and use outright the preferential treaty tax rates for dividends, interests and royalties on submission of a Certificate of Residence for Tax Treaty Relief (CORTT) form by the nonresident to the ITAD and Revenue District Office No. 39 within 30 days after payment of final withholding tax (FWT). Failure to submit a CORTT form to the withholding agent or income payer means that the nonresident is not claiming any tax treaty relief and therefore such income is subject to the normal rate.

For income other than dividends, interest and royalties, the provisions in RMO No. 72-2010 continue to apply, and obtaining a ruling continues to be required.

F. Types of visas

Not all foreign nationals desiring entry to the Philippines are required to submit a medical certificate to the Philippine embassy when applying for an entry visa, or to the immigration officer at the border upon arrival. However, nationals of certain countries (see the list below), particularly those who arrived in the Philippines on or after June 2014 and are applying for specified visas (these visas are listed in Annex B of Operations Order No. SBM-2014-059-A), are required to obtain a medical clearance from the Bureau of Quarantine (BOQ). The BOQ provides such clearance on the presentation of a medical report resulting from a medical examination conducted by a duly authorized physician.

The following is the list of jurisdictions whose nationals are required to obtain the above medical clearance (this list is contained in Annex A of Operations Order No. SBM-2014-059-A).

In general, foreign nationals who are not classified as restricted or high-risk may visit the Philippines without obtaining entry visas before departure from their point of origin if they have valid passports and onward tickets or confirmed travel tickets for a return journey. Restricted or high-risk nationals must secure an entry visa from Philippines embassies or consulates to enter the Philippines.

Unless specifically exempted or excluded by law, all foreign nationals seeking long-term (at least one year) employment in the Philippines, whether residents or nonresidents, must secure an Alien Employment Permit (AEP) from the Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE). This rule applies to nonresidents who want to work in the Philippines, to nonresidents who were admitted under non-working visas and are seeking employment, and to missionaries or religious workers who intend to engage in gainful employment. Executives of area or regional headquarters and offshore banking units are exempt from the AEP requirement (see Section G).

Non-immigrant visas. A foreign national may be granted a non-immigrant visa as provided in Section 9 of the Philippine Immigration Act under the following categories of admission status.

Temporary visitor's visa under Section 9(a). Temporary visitor's visas are available to individuals coming to the Philippines for business, pleasure or health reasons. Visa-required nationals may not enter the Philippines unless they obtain entry visas from a Philippine consulate before coming to the Philippines. Visa-free nationals are not required to obtain entry visas. In general, both are allowed an initial period of stay of up to 30 days. Business visitors are foreign nationals who intend to engage in commercial, industrial or professional commerce or in any other legitimate activity if the activity is of a temporary nature (for example, attending conferences or conventions, negotiating contracts, or attending educational or business meetings). Writers, lecturers and theatrical performers are considered business visitors. Foreign nationals seeking employment of any kind in the Philippines do not qualify as temporary visitors for business, even if they intend to stay for a few months only.

Visitors who come for pleasure include tourists, those visiting relatives or friends, those who come for recreational and amusement purposes, and professional athletes who compete for prizes if they do not receive compensation or salary for their services.

Foreign nationals requiring medical treatment in the Philippines are also classified in the Section 9(a) category.

Under the existing immigration rules, foreigners holding temporary visitor visas may extend their stay in the country on a 1-, 2- or 3-month basis (or even 6 months, subject to good justification) for a total stay of 16 months. Extensions of stay beyond 16 months up to 24 months need the approval of the Chief of the Immigration Regulation Division (IRD) of the Bureau of Immigration (BI). Extensions of stay beyond 24 months need the approval of the Commissioner of the BI. Some persons take the view that this privilege applies only to visa-free nationals, and that individuals on the visa required list are allowed a maximum stay of six months only. As a result of this possible uncertainty, coordination with the officers of the BI is highly recommended.

Generally, Chinese and Indian nationals are required to secure an entry visa prior to traveling to the Philippines. However, Chinese nationals with a valid American, Japanese, Australian, Canadian or Schengen (AJACS) visa or permanent residency are granted visa-free entry for an initial authorized stay of seven days. This 7-day initial stay can be extended for another 14 days. Indian nationals holding a valid American, Japanese, Australian, Canadian, Schengen, Singapore or UK (AJACSSUK) visa or a permanent residence permit from the AJACSSUK-issuing states may enter the Philippines visa-free and stay for an initial 14 days, if traveling to the country for tourism purposes. This 14-day stay can be extended up to another 7 days. Chinese and Indian nationals are granted the privilege of applying for permanent resident visas, subject to certain conditions.

Foreign nationals who will work in the Philippines on a short-term basis (not exceeding six months) must secure a Special Work Permit (SWP). This is valid for three months. A second SWP, valid for three additional months, can be secured. An SWP can only be applied for twice in a calendar year. SWP holders should maintain a valid 9(a) visa at all times while in the country. On the day of filing an SWP application, foreign nationals should have at least 20 days of 9(a) visa validity left in his or her passport, must be at least 25 years of age and must be able to provide supporting documents that show he or she holds expertise in the field to which he or she is temporarily assigned in the Philippines. Foreign nationals who will work in the Philippines for a period of more than six months must secure the appropriate work visa and, generally, an AEP.

Transient's visa under Section 9(b). Section 9(b) of the Philippine Immigration Act defines a transient as a person passing in transit to a destination outside the Philippines. Transient visas may be obtained at Philippine consulates abroad.

Seamen's visa under Section 9(c). Seamen and airmen may enter the Philippines as vessel or aircraft crew members only if their names appear on a crew list visa or if they possess an individual seamen's visa.

International treaty trader/investor under Section 9(d). A treaty trader visa is granted to a foreign national coming to the Philippines solely to carry on substantial trade between the Philippines and his or her home country, or to direct and develop the activities of an enterprise in the Philippines in which he or she has invested, pursuant to the provisions of a treaty of commerce or navigation. An individual is considered a treaty investor if the individual seeks to enter the Philippines solely for the purpose of developing and directing the operations of an enterprise in the Philippines and if either of the following requirements is satisfied:
- The individual has invested in the enterprise, or is in the process of investing, a substantial amount of capital.
- The employer of the individual has invested, or is actively in the process of investing, a substantial amount of capital in the enterprise, such employer is a foreign person or organization of the same nationality as the individual, and the individual is serving in an overall supervisory or executive capacity.

For purposes of the above rule, a substantial amount of investment is at least USD30,000 for individuals and at least USD120,000 for corporations.

Treaty trader visas currently are granted only to nationals of Germany, Japan and the United States.

Diplomatic visa under Section 9(e). Pursuant to international conventions and bilateral agreements, the government of the Philippines accords varying degrees of privileges and immunities to various categories of foreign government officials coming to the country for official purposes.

Officials of the United States and its specialized agencies may be issued 9(e) visas, regardless of the officials' citizenship or nationality. Officials of the United Nations and other international organizations may be granted diplomatic visas under Section 9(e) on the basis of the United Nations' laissez passer (UNLP or LP). The UNLP is a travel document issued by the UN under the provisions of Article VIII of the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the UN in its offices in New York and Geneva, as well as by the International Labour Organization.

Non-immigrant student visa under Section 9(f). Foreign nationals may secure student visas from the Philippine mission in their home country or they may apply to the BI to change or convert their admission status to Section 9(f). Foreign nationals with 9(f) visas may not change or convert their visas to another category unless they first depart from the country.

A student visa holder may not work or engage in any trade or occupation in the Philippines unless the completion of the degree requires it.

Prearranged employee visa under Section 9(g). Prearranged employee visas under Section 9(g) (9(g) visas) are issued to foreign nationals coming to the Philippines to engage in any lawful occupation, whether for wages or salary or for another form of compensation, if bona fide employer-employee relations exist. The visa is issued only when it has been established that no person can be found in the Philippines willing and competent to perform the labor or service for which the foreign national is desired and that his or her admission would benefit the public interest. To prove the circumstances mentioned above, a Labor Market Test (LMT) is required. The LMT is done through the publication of the job vacancy in a newspaper of general circulation.

These visas may also be granted to qualified dependents (legal spouse and unmarried children below 21 years of age) accompanying the foreign nationals. Persons coming to perform unskilled manual labor in pursuance of a promise or offer of employment, express or implied, cannot be granted a 9(g) visa.

Applicants for a 9(g) visa whose undertaking in the Philippines will involve the practice of a profession that is regulated by the Professional Regulation Commission (PRC) must submit to the BI, together with all the other requirements for the 9(g) visa, a Special/Temporary Permit issued by the professional board governing his or her profession and the PRC.

The issuance of a 9(g) visa depends on the grant of an AEP (see Section G) by the DOLE. An AEP approval is not issued if a foreign national has not obtained a Taxpayer Identification Number (TIN) from the BIR. It takes approximately two to four months to process the 9(g) visa from TIN application until the release of the Alien Certificate of Registration (ACR) I Card (this is an identification card issued to foreign nationals who have registered with the BI for purposes of working in the Philippines). An application for a Provisional Work Permit is required to allow an individual to perform services while his or her application for the issuance of the 9(g) visa is pending.

A 9(g) visa may be renewed annually for a total period not exceeding five years. It appears that this is the maximum period for holding a 9(g) visa, because labor rules state that the validity of an AEP may not exceed five years. However, if it is reasonably expected that a foreign national's employment in the Philippines will extend beyond five years, coordination with the DOLE is advisable before filing a petition for a further extension of the AEP.

Special non-immigrant visa. The Philippine Immigration Act, specifically Section 47(a)(2), as well as several special laws, provides for special non-immigrant visas. These types of visas grant the holder multiple-entry privileges, and in some cases, exemption from registration requirements of the BI.

47(a)(2) visa. Acting through the appropriate government agencies, the President may allow the entry of foreign personnel for the following enterprises:

- Oil-exploration companies
- Philippine Economic Zones Authority (PEZA)-registered enterprises
- Board of Investment-registered enterprises

PD 1034 visa. A PD 1034 visa is granted to foreign personnel of entities licensed by the Central Bank of the Philippines (Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas) to operate as offshore banking entities, as well as to the foreign employees' qualified dependents.

EO 226 visa. An EO 226 visa is granted to foreign personnel of regional or area headquarters or regional operating headquarters of multinational companies. The visa is valid for three years and may be extended for an additional three years but, in practice, the validity period for the visa may vary. Foreign nationals admitted under this type of visa and their qualified family members are granted incentives under the omnibus investment laws, including exemption from the payment of all fees imposed under immigration laws, and from requirements for all types of clearance required by government departments or agencies, except on final departure from the Philippines.

Special visa for employment generation. The special visa for employment generation (SVEG) under EO No. 758 is a special visa issued to a qualified non-immigrant foreigner who will employ at least 10 Filipinos in a lawful and sustainable enterprise, trade or industry. Qualified foreigners who are granted the SVEG are considered special non-immigrants with multiple-entry privileges and conditional extended stay, without need of prior departure from the Philippines.

Special resident visa. Several types of special resident visas may be issued, including those described below.

Special investor resident visa. Qualified foreign nationals who are at least 21 years old, except nationals of Cambodia, Korea (North) and other restricted countries, may obtain a probationary special investor resident visa (SIRV) on proof of an inward remittance of USD75,000 or its equivalent in acceptable foreign currency. On investment in specified areas, the probationary SIRV visa is converted to an indefinite visa and remains in force for as long as the investment exists.

An investor may apply for an SIRV at the Philippines consulate in his or her home country or place of residence. If the foreign national is already in the Philippines, he or she may apply to the Board of Investment for a change of visa status to special investor resident.

Special investor resident visa in tourist-related projects and tourist establishments. Foreign nationals who invest an amount equivalent to USD50,000 in a tourist-related project or in any tourist establishment are eligible to apply for SIRVs. To obtain this type of visa, a foreign national must prove that he or she has remitted the required amount in an acceptable foreign currency to the Philippines through the Philippine banking system. A holder of an SIRV is entitled to reside in the Philippines while his or her capital remains invested. However, if the holder withdraws the investment, the SIRV expires automatically. An SIRV holder must submit an annual report to prove that he or she has maintained the investment in the Philippines.

Foreign nationals wishing to obtain SIRVs must apply to the Philippine consulate in their home country or place of residence. An investor who is already in the Philippines must apply to the Department of Tourism (DOT). The BI issues the visa on DOT approval.

Special resident retiree's visa. To obtain a special resident retiree's visa, an individual must satisfy certain age and minimum deposit requirements. The applicant must be at least 35 years old, and the deposit requirement ranges from USD1,500 to USD50,000, depending on the circumstances. Former Filipino citizens must be at least 35 years old and make an inward remittance of USD1,500. Ambassadors of foreign countries who served and retired in the Philippines and current and former staff members of international organizations, including the Asian Development Bank, are also eligible for this program. They must make an inward remittance of USD1,500 and be at least 50 years old.

Coordination with the Philippine Retirement Authority is highly recommended.

Subic special investor's visa. A Subic special investor's visa entitles a qualified investor, as well as his or her qualified dependents, to indefinite resident status in the Subic Bay Freeport Zone and to multiple entries into the Philippines if the individual makes an investment of at least USD250,000 or its equivalent in acceptable foreign currency in the Subic Bay Freeport Zone.

Subic special work visa. A Subic special work visa (SSWV) may be issued to qualified foreign nationals who are employed by Subic enterprises for a period not exceeding two years. The visa is extendible every two years. An SSWV is also issued to the applicant's qualified dependents if they accompany the foreign national to the Subic Bay Freeport Zone within six months after the foreign national is admitted to the zone as an SSWV holder.

Temporary work permit. The Subic Bay Metropolitan Authority (SBMA) may issue a temporary work permit (TWP) to foreign expatriates in order to immediately legalize a foreign national's status as an investor or worker in the Subic Bay Freeport Zone. The permit is issued while the foreign national's investor or work visa application is still in process. It is valid for three months and may be extended every three months, subject to a maximum total extension of one year.

Immigrant visa. An immigrant is classified as a foreign national admitted to the Philippines either as a quota (not in excess of 50 per nationality per calendar year) or non-quota (without numerical limitation) immigrant.

Immigrant status may be acquired on application before a competent consular office abroad or by direct application for a change of admission status before the BI. As a matter of policy, immigrant visas are issued to nationals or subjects of countries that grant similar privileges to Filipino citizens.

An applicant for quota immigrant status must clearly and beyond doubt demonstrate that his or her special qualification will advance the national interest of the Philippines. A minimum capitalization of USD40,000 in a viable and acceptable area of investment is required of each quota immigrant applicant.

The Philippines may grant the status of non-quota immigrant to the following categories of people:
- Foreign nationals who are legally married to Filipino citizens and their unmarried children below 21 years of age
- Children of foreign nationals who were born during the temporary visits of their parents abroad and whose mothers were previously admitted for permanent residence
- Children born subsequent to the issuance of viable, unexpired immigrant visas of the accompanying parents
- Women who were citizens of the Philippines who lost their citizenship through marriage, and their unmarried children younger than 21 years of age if accompanying or following their mothers
- People previously lawfully admitted for permanent residence returning from temporary visits abroad for unrelinquished residence in the Philippines
- Natural born citizens of the Philippines who were naturalized in foreign countries and who are returning to the Philippines for permanent residence, their spouses and their minor children

On registration, quota and non-quota immigrants are issued an I-Card by the BI.

G. Alien Employment Permit

Unless specifically exempted or excluded, all foreign nationals desiring to work in the Philippines must obtain an AEP from the DOLE. AEPs are normally valid for one year, but may be extended annually to cover the foreign national's length of employment, up to a maximum of five years.

Local employers who desire to employ a foreign national must apply for the AEP on the foreign national's behalf with the regional office of the DOLE having jurisdiction over the employee's place of work.

The petitioning company must prove that the foreign national possesses the required skills for the position. Educational background, work experience and other relevant factors are considered in evaluating the application. The petitioning company must prove that no Filipino is available who is competent, able and willing to do the specific job and that the employment of the foreign national is in the best interest of the public through an LMT.

The AEP is not an exclusive authority for a foreign national to work in the Philippines. It is just one of the requirements in the issuance of a work visa to legally engage in gainful employment in the country.

Companies that are listed in the "Tenth Regular Foreign Investment Negative List" must comply with the Understudy Training Program and Anti-Dummy conditions of the authorities, which require them to obtain an "Authority to Employ Alien" from the Department of Justice (DOJ) based on the DOJ Ministry Order No. 210, series of 1980.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The family members, spouses and unmarried dependent children under 21 years of age of visa holders in the following categories do not need student visas or special study permits:

- Permanent foreign residents (immigrants)
- Holders of Sec. 9(d) or 9(g) or 47(a)(2) visas
- Foreign diplomatic and consular missions personnel
- Personnel of duly accredited international organizations
- Holders of special investor resident visas (SIRVs)
- Holders of special resident retirees' visas (SRRVs)

The privileges of SVEGs (see Section F) may extend to SVEG holders' spouses and dependent unmarried children under 18 years of age, regardless of whether the children are legitimate, illegitimate or adopted. Dependent children of SVEG holders also do not need student visas or special study permits.

Marital property regime. Before 3 August 1988, property relations between a future husband and wife were governed by any of the following:

- Marriage settlement
- Provisions of the Philippine Civil Code
- Custom

In a marriage settlement, the future spouses agree to absolute community of property, conjugal partnership of gains, complete separation of property or any other property regime. Absolute community is a property regime under which all property of the spouses — present and future, movable and immovable, however acquired — form a single patrimony. Conjugal partnership of gains is a regime under which everything earned during the marriage belongs to the conjugal partnership, but the spouses retain ownership of their respective separate property. Whichever regime the spouses adopt may not be altered after the marriage is solemnized and continues to apply until the marriage is dissolved. In the absence of a marriage settlement or if the settlement is void, the system of conjugal partnership of gains applies.

After 3 August 1988, future spouses may elect a marital property regime of absolute community, relative community, complete separation of property or any other regime in a written marriage settlement to govern their property relations. In the absence of a marriage settlement or if the property regime elected is void, the system of absolute community of property applies.

Philippine family law is binding on citizens of the Philippines, even if they marry and establish their residence abroad. Foreign nationals are not governed by these laws, regardless of where their marriage is solemnized and where they reside.

Forced heirship. Under the succession rules in the Philippine Civil Code, an estate is divided into the legitime and the free portion. The legitime is the part of a decedent's entire estate that must be reserved for compulsory heirs. The distribution of the inheritance among the heirs may be effected by a will or by law.

The system of forced heirship in the Philippines applies only to citizens of the Philippines. In general, issues related to succession are regulated by the national law governing the deceased.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally in the Philippines with their home country driver's licenses for 90 days from the time of their entry into the country. Beyond 90 days, foreign nationals are required to obtain a Philippine driver's license. An application for conversion of the home country driver's license to a Philippine driver's license may be made at the Philippine Land Transportation Office (LTO).

An applicant must pass a written examination, an actual driving test and a medical examination. After completion of the examinations, the applicant is issued a driver's license receipt, which serves as a temporary driver's license and is valid for 60 days. Thereafter, a driver's license is issued to the applicant. A driver's license is valid for three years and expires on the holder's third birthday following the date of issuance.

An expatriate intending to secure an international driver's permit must submit additional documents to the Automobile Association of the Philippines (AAP), a private company that deals with the issuance of International Driving Permits.

The Philippines has driver's license reciprocity with certain countries.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are taxed on worldwide income. Non-residents are taxed on Polish-source income only.

Under domestic law measures, individuals who have their center of personal or economic interests (a center of vital interests) in Poland or stay in Poland for a period exceeding 183 days in a given tax year are generally considered Polish tax residents. Individuals who do not have their center of personal or economic interests in Poland and stay in Poland for a period shorter than 183 days in a given tax year are taxed in Poland only on Polish-source income.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable compensation includes salaries, bonuses and other compensation from employment exercised in Poland, regardless of whether paid in cash or in kind.

In addition to the statutory lump sum of PLN3,000, it is possible to apply the tax-deductible costs of an employee up to a maximum amount of PLN85,528 annually (PLN120,000 in 2022). Such deduction is currently possible based on the mechanism of the transfer of copyrights to works created within the employment contract and is intended for employees who are performing certain creative activities in specified fields. The applicability of increased tax-deductible costs for creative activities was restricted in 2018 to certain specified activities, such as the creation of computer programs, research and development works, audiovisual works, and journalistic works.

Education allowances provided by employers to their local and expatriate employees' children 18 years of age and under, as well as the cost of additional (not provided for by the labor law) medical packages provided to employees, are taxable for income tax and social security purposes.

Amendments to the Personal Income Tax Act introduced an exemption from tax for employment income of young people. Under the amendments, employment income up to a maximum annual amount of PLN85,528 that is earned by a taxpayer who is not older than 26 years old is exempt from tax. Starting with 2022, a similar exemption is applicable to, among others, individuals who return to Poland from a long stay abroad, parents with four or more children, or individuals who have passed the retirement age but continue to work and do not receive the pensions to which they are entitled.

Self-employment and business income. Taxable self-employment income consists of income from self-employment activities after the deduction of allowable expenses. Self-employment income is generally taxed with other income at the progressive rates set forth in Rates.

Under certain circumstances, self-employment income may be taxed at a 19% flat rate (the difference between earnings and tax-deductible costs equals taxable income). Real estate rental income may be taxable as self-employment income or may be treated as a separate source of income (but starting with 2022, it will not be possible to deduct any costs of such activity from the taxable revenues that will be subject to progressive rates of 8.5% and 12.5%).

Directors' fees. In general, directors' fees paid to residents are taxed with other income at the rates set forth in Rates. Directors' fees paid to nonresidents are subject to a final withholding tax of 20%.

Investment income. Interest income derived in Poland (except for interest derived from loans connected with business activities) and income derived from capital (investment) funds in Poland are generally taxed at a flat rate of 19%. Dividends from Poland are generally taxed at a flat rate of 19%. In general, interest on personal bank account deposits is taxed at a flat tax rate of 19%. In principle, all of these taxes are withheld at source.

Income from the rental of real estate is taxed at the progressive rates set forth in Rates. Rental income up to PLN100,000 may also be taxed at a flat rate of 8.5%; the excess over PLN100,000 may be taxed at a flat rate of 12.5%. Beginning with 2022, it will not be possible to apply progressive rates unless the rental of real estate is conducted within a business activity. For the taxation of real estate sales, see Capital gains.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. In general, employer-provided stock options are taxed at the time of exercise on the difference between the fair market value at the date of exercise and the exercise price. This amount is generally taxed at the standard progressive tax rates. However, this amount may be exempt from tax for employees or contractors granted the right to obtain shares of a joint stock company seated in a European Union (EU) or European Economic Area (EEA) member state or in a state that has entered into a double tax treaty with Poland (the Company), based on a resolution of the shareholders' meeting of the Company, or of the joint-stock company dominant (according to the Polish Accounting Act) to the Company, implementing the incentive program (which is legally defined).

At the time the shares are sold, an amount equal to the sale price decreased by the exercise price and by the amount of the taxable income recognized at the time of exercise is taxed at a 19% rate.

Capital gains. In general, income received from the sale of real estate is taxed at a flat rate of 19%. Real estate income equals the difference between the sales price and respective expenses, which include the purchase price.

However, if the sale of real estate occurs more than five years after the end of the calendar year in which the real estate was acquired or built (six months for other property, counted from the end of the month in which the property was acquired), the income from the sale is not subject to tax.

Income derived from the sale of shares is subject to tax at a rate of 19%.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. In addition to the exemptions mentioned in Income subject to tax, effective for revenues received in 2022 and future years, small personal deductions or allowances may be claimed in calculating income tax.

Deductible expenses. A limited number of deductions and credits are allowed, and only a few apply to nonresidents.

Donations to public benefit organizations and religious institutions are deductible from income, up to 6% of the annual taxable income. Expenses up to PLN760 incurred with respect to internet access are deductible from income for two consecutive years, provided that the deduction was not applied in preceding years. Child reliefs depend on the number of children. A credit of PLN92.67 per month of child raising can be subtracted from the tax liability for the first (provided that the parental income does not exceed a certain limit) and second child. Child relief is increased to PLN166.67 per month for the third child and to PLN225 per month for each additional child.

Business deductions. Self-employed individuals may deduct most costs related to generating business income, unless they are subject to lump-sum taxation (see Rates).

Rates. From 1 January 2022, income tax is levied at the rates set forth in the following table.

Taxable income	Tax	Tax-free threshold
PLN1 to PLN120,000	17%	PLN30,000*
Over PLN127,000	32%	PLN30,000*

* The tax-free amount is applicable only once.

Income from an undisclosed source is separately taxed at a rate of 75%.

Different types of taxation of self-employment income exist in Poland. In general, self-employment income is taxed together with other income at the rates set forth above. Under certain circumstances, self-employment income may be taxed at a 19% flat rate (the difference between earnings and tax-deductible costs equals taxable income). In addition, if self-employment income did not exceed the equivalent of EUR250,000 (EUR 2 million from 2022) in the preceding year, lump-sum taxation at rates ranging from 2% to 17% may apply.

Nonresidents are subject to a final withholding tax of 20% on fees received for membership on management boards granted under a specific resolution and on income derived from commission, management contracts, interest, copyrights, trademarks, designs and know-how.

Relief for losses. Losses from self-employment activities may offset income only from the same source. Unused losses may be carried forward for the following five years. In general, the deduction in any one year is limited to 50% of the original loss incurred, subject to a PLN5 million de minimis whereby the taxpayer can deduct up to PLN5 million of the loss carryforward without restriction in the first relevant year following the year in which the loss is incurred (that is, the year in which income from the same source are realized); any excess loss can continue to be carried forward subject to the 50% limitation rules, within the five-year carryforward period. Consequently, part of the benefit of the losses carried forward may be forfeited if a taxpayer has insufficient profit from a particular income source.

B. Other taxes

Inheritance and gift tax. In general, inheritance tax and a tax on gifts apply to assets that are located in Poland or property rights executed in Poland. In certain cases, the acquisition through inheritance or gift of immovable property and other assets located abroad is taxable if at the time of inheritance or execution of a donation contract, the acquirer is a Polish citizen or has permanent residence in Poland.

Tax rates are progressive and range from 3% to 20% for 2022, depending on the recipient's relationship to the donor or the deceased. The recipient of the property is required to pay the tax due. Under specific conditions, the closest relatives of the donor or the deceased are exempt from inheritance and gift tax.

Solidarity tax. Beginning in 2019, a solidarity tax is imposed at a rate of 4% on individuals obtaining total income exceeding PLN1 million in a given tax year (only particular sources of income are subject to this tax, including, but not limited to, employment income and rental income). The covered taxpayers are also required to file a separate tax return (DSF-1 form).

Exit tax. Poland applies an exit tax at a rate of 3% or 19%. This tax applies to Polish residents planning to move their tax residency to another country. Deemed income is taxable, regardless of the fact that potential capital gains have not yet been realized as of the date of the move of residency.

C. Social security and health care contributions

Social security. Social security contributions are paid partly by the employer and partly by the employee. Contributions are levied at the following rates calculated on the employee's gross remuneration.

Type of contribution	Rate (%)
Retirement insurance	19.52
Disability insurance	8.00
Sickness insurance	2.45
Industrial injuries insurance	0.67 to 3.33*

* The rate depends on the employer's type of business activity.

Contributions for retirement insurance are paid half by the employer and half by the employee. For disability insurance, the employer covers 6.5% and the employee covers 1.5%. The employee pays the entire sickness insurance contribution, and the employer pays the entire industrial injuries insurance contribution. The maximum annual base for calculating retirement and disability contributions is 30 times the projected national average monthly remuneration for that year (PLN177,660 for 2022).

Directors' fees payable to board members and commercial proxies based on a specific resolution are not subject to social security and health care contributions.

As a result of Poland's accession to the EU, it is covered by the EU social security regime, which is principally provided in European Community (EC) Regulations 1408/71 and 883/2004.

Health care system. In general, contributions to the health care system are levied at a rate of 9% on the employee's assessment base, which is gross remuneration after deduction of the employee's contributions to retirement, disability and sickness insurance. However, there are several exceptional rates of health care contribution for individuals conducting individual business activity who pay the flat 19% tax or use lump-sum taxation. Beginning with 2022, health care contributions are no longer deductible for personal income tax purposes.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Poland is the calendar year. By 30 April following the close of the tax year, taxpayers must file tax returns and pay any difference between total tax payable and advance payments. Married persons who are Polish tax residents may be taxed jointly, if certain conditions are met. Under additional conditions, joint filing may be available to Polish tax nonresidents who are tax resident elsewhere in the EU, the EEA or Switzerland.

Income tax may be generally withheld directly by employers on behalf of employees and remitted to the tax office within 20 days after the end of the month in which the income is paid or made available to the employee. Self-employed individuals and expatriates on temporary assignments to Poland who are paid from abroad must generally make advance tax payments each month, and must file annual tax reconciliations stating their income received and the advance tax paid by 30 April of the following year.

From 2017, the following employer-reporting obligations are in force:
- Polish Labor Inspectorate notification duty regarding new assignees
- The Common Reporting Standard of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) regarding the tax residency of financial institutions' customers

F. Visas and temporary permits

An individual who is not a Polish citizen is considered a foreign national.

Visas may be obtained in a Polish consulate abroad relevant to the foreigner's permanent residence. Foreigners entering Poland with a Schengen visa or under the "visa-free" travel regulations may stay in Poland (including other Schengen countries) for up to 90 days during any 180-day period. In certain cases, if a bilateral agreement between Poland and the other country exists, the 180-day restriction period may be abolished. (for example, for United States citizens)

In general, a foreigner who wishes to stay in Poland for longer than 90 days must apply for a long-term visa or for a temporary residence permit and demonstrate a legitimate purpose for an extended stay. Good cause includes, but is not limited to, the grant of an employment permit or the performance of other work in Poland. In addition, he or she must have financial resources to live in Poland and must be covered by health insurance valid in Poland. Temporary residence permits are, in principle, valid for a period of up to three years. In principle, long-term visas are valid for a period of up to one year. Both a long-term visa and a temporary residence permit allow individuals to travel within Schengen member states on general terms (90 days in a 180-day period). Stays in Poland based on these documents are not counted into the general Schengen limit. However, in the case of a stay based the short-term Schengen type C visa, residence in Poland is also counted into the general limit.

An application for granting a temporary residence permit can be submitted if there are circumstances justifying a stay in Poland for a period longer than three months, with the exception of a temporary residence permit granted due to circumstances that require a short-term stay and a permit for temporary stay for the purpose of the seasonal work.

In the proceedings for granting or withdrawing a temporary residence permit, the only party to the proceedings is the foreigner, except for proceedings for granting or withdrawing a temporary residence permit for the purpose of performing work as part of an intra-corporate transfer (ICT) and a temporary residence permit to enjoy long-term mobility of an employee from the managerial staff, specialist or internship employee as part of an ICT. In this case, the party to the proceedings is the undertaking admitting the foreigner.

The application for a temporary residence permit must be submitted to the voivode relevant for the foreigner's place of residence. The foreigner must be present in Poland on the day of the submission of the application.

A special type of residence permit (intra-corporate transfer [ICT] permit) is available for third-country nationals who are transferred within the same group of companies. This type of residence permit applies to non-EU country managers, specialists and trainees. It can be issued for a maximum period of three years to managers and specialists and for one year to trainees. The entity required to file for this permit is the host company and it must file for the permit before the non-EU national's arrival in Poland. To apply for such a permit, the individual should have been employed within the same group of companies for at least 12 months prior to the transfer in the case of managers and specialists, and at least 6 months in the case of trainees. The host company must provide evidence that the non-EU national manager or specialist has the professional qualifications and adequate professional experience needed for a given job or position, or in the case of trainees an appropriate diploma. The ICT permit allows an individual to stay and work in Poland.

Individuals holding a valid ICT permit issued by another EU country may benefit from short-term and long-term mobility to Poland. If a non-EU national's transfer to Poland does not exceed 90 days in a 180-day period, he or she can legally work in Poland based on a notification submitted to the Polish immigration office by the host company that the non-EU national was assigned to Poland within the structure of an ICT (short-term mobility). If a transfer exceeds 90 days, a special long-term mobility residence permit is required. This is issued by the immigration office in Poland at the request of the local host entity.

A foreign individual is expected to register at a specific address with the municipal office in the district of his or her intended residence. Citizens of EU and European Free Trade Association (EFTA) states and Switzerland must register within 30 days after their date of arrival in Poland if his or her stay in Poland is to exceed 3 months. Third-country nationals must register within 4 days after their arrival in Poland if his or her stay in Poland is to exceed 30 days.

For EU citizens, in general, registration of their stay is required for stays longer than three months. Every trip outside of Poland resets the registration deadline. In addition, an EU citizen must meet one of the following conditions:
• He or she works or performs a business activity in Poland.
• He or she is covered by health insurance and has sufficient financial resources to live in Poland.
• He or she is pursuing studies and is covered by health insurance.
• He or she is a spouse of a Polish citizen.

After a five-year period, EU citizens acquire the status of permanent resident if he or she continues to fulfill the respective conditions.

G. EU long-term residence permit

Foreign individuals intending to stay in Poland permanently may obtain EU long-term residence permits, which entitle them to permanent domicile in Poland. In general, a foreign individual may obtain an EU long-term residence permit if he or she satisfies the following conditions:
• He or she has financial resources to live in Poland.
• He or she is covered by health insurance.
• He or she has resided in Poland at least five years.
• He or she has fluency in the Polish language at the B1 level, as confirmed by the appropriate certificate, or has completed school or studies in the Polish language.

EU long-term residence permits are issued by the voivode in the district where the applicant intends to reside permanently. The Commandant of Voivode Police must give his or her opinion on the suitability of the applicant before the card is granted.

A person with an EU long-term residence permit is treated as a Polish citizen for purposes of labor regulations and does not need a work permit or permission to undertake employment in Poland.

The EU long-term residence permit is considered the foreigner's identity card in Poland. The EU long-term residence permit is granted permanently, but the residence card is issued for five years and must be exchanged after that period.

H. Work permits and self-employment

Work permits. Polish law concerning the employment of expatriates is subject to frequent change. In general, foreign nationals wishing to work in Poland must obtain a work permit. However, citizens of the EU and EFTA states are exempt from the requirement of obtaining a work permit in Poland.

Work permits for foreigners are required for the following types of employment:

- Type A: A foreigner works in Poland under an employment contract with an entity whose headquarters, place of residence, branch, permanent establishment, or other form of activity is located in Poland.
- Type B: A foreigner performing a function in the management board, acting as a proxy or a general partner of a legal person entered into the Register of Entrepreneurs or of a company under organization remains in Poland for more than a total of 6 months in any 12-month period.
- Type C: A foreigner is employed by a foreign employer and is delegated to Poland for a period longer than 30 days in a calendar year to a branch or a permanent establishment of the foreign entity, or its related entity, as defined in the Act of 26 July 1991 on income tax from individuals.
- Type D: A foreigner employed by a foreign employer that has no branch, permanent establishment or other form of an organized business activity in Poland is delegated to Poland for the purpose of performing temporary and occasional services (export services).
- Type E: A foreigner is employed by a foreign employer and is delegated to Poland for a period longer than 30 days in any 6-month period for purposes other than those listed for Types C and D.
- Type S: A foreigner is employed as a seasonal worker in areas such as agriculture, gardening and tourism. It allows foreigners to work in Poland for a maximum period of nine months in a calendar year and is available for nationals from all countries.

Work may be also executed after obtaining the so-called "single permit" (unified permit). If a local Polish contract will be signed with the foreigner, in certain cases, when applying for the work permit for the foreigner, it is necessary to prove that an employer is not able to fulfill the need of employment using local individuals (that is, to obtain a so-called "negative labor market test"). The Minister of Labor and Social Affairs publishes the list of the professions that are exempt from performing the labor market test in order to prove that an employer is not able to fulfill the need of employment. The list contains, among others, a wide range of information technology (IT) professions, engineers, medical professions, and construction specialists.

A work authorization application must be accompanied with a statement that the company has never been convicted of crimes connected to employment, human trafficking and forgery of documents. After the work permit is granted, the foreigner must obtain a visa with the right to work in the Polish consulate of his or her country of origin or a residence permit in Poland (possible only if the person is legally present in Poland). A foreigner may work in Poland only if he or she is staying in Poland legally (including visa-free travel).

An entity planning to employ a foreigner should apply for the issuance or extension of a work permit at least 60 to 90 days before the planned employment date or expiration date of the preceding work permit.

A work permit is issued for an individual foreigner. The work permit includes details regarding the employer, the position or type of work to be performed by the foreigner, remuneration and the expiration date of the permit.

It is possible to apply for a residence permit with a right to work in a unified procedure. Such option is available in case of a Polish employment contract and a person legally staying in Poland. Foreigners who are staying in Poland based on a tourist visa or family/friends visit visa are not able to apply for the residence permit with a right to work in a unified procedure. Restrictions apply both for Schengen and national visas.

Each year, a maximum yearly limit of work authorizations that can be issued by the authorities may be introduced. It needs to be checked whether the limits have been introduced.

The work permit may be revoked if any of the following occurs:
- The recipient performs activities contrary to those set out in the permit.
- The recipient loses certain qualifications required for the performance of the job (for example, a driver's license is withdrawn).
- The recipient acting on behalf of the employer in labor law matters grossly and persistently breaches the labor law rules.

The administrative fee for obtaining the work permit is up to PLN100.

The following foreigners, among others, may be exempted from the work permit requirement:
- A foreigner authorized to live and work in the EU, employed by an employer established in the EU and assigned to provide services in Poland
- Citizens of Armenia, Belarus, Georgia, Moldova, the Russian Federation or Ukraine who work during a period not exceeding 6 months in 12 consecutive months on the basis of an employer's declaration of the intention to employ such nationals, provided that such nationals are registered in the district employment agency competent for the place of residence or registered office of the entity submitting such declaration. If the application for a work permit or a residence permit with a right to work was submitted before the expiration of the foreigner's declaration, the foreigner's work remains legal after the expiration of the declaration until the issuance of a work or residence permit. However, this rule applies only if the foreigner has worked in Poland based on the declaration for minimum period of three months and has concluded an employment contract with the employer.
- Foreigners who are board members of Polish companies or branches of the companies are allowed to work in Poland for 6 months in a period of consecutive 12 months without the obligation to obtain a work permit. Since January 2018, this regulation has been extended also to proxies and general partners whose work in Poland is connected to managing limited partnership companies. However, proxies and general partners, whose work in Poland is to exceed 6 months in a period of 12 consecutive months, need to obtain a work permit.

- Foreigners authorized under the agreement establishing an association between the EC and Turkey
- Persons who have permanent residence abroad and are sent to Poland by a foreign employer for a period not longer than three months in a calendar year for one of the following purposes:
  - Installation and maintenance or repair of delivered, technologically complete appliances, constructions, machines or other equipment, if the foreign employer is the manufacturer of such items
  - Collection of ordered appliances, machines, other equipment or parts manufactured by a Polish producer
  - Providing a training course for the workers of a Polish employer that is a user of appliances, constructions, machines or other equipment referred to in the first item above, in the scope of operation or use of such appliances, constructions, machines or other equipment
  - Assembly or disassembly of exhibition stands as well as supervision over such stands, if the exhibitor is a foreign employer who delegates foreigners for this purpose

Business activities. Non-EU foreigners running businesses in Poland may obtain visas or temporary residence permits. In some cases, a work permit may be required. In general, non-EU foreigners may engage in business activities exclusively in the form of the following:
- Limited partnership
- Limited joint stock partnership
- Limited liability company
- Joint stock company

International agreements between individual jurisdictions and Poland may provide for additional limitations or rights.

Blue Card. Poland accepts EU Blue Card applications from highly skilled third-country nationals who have an employment contract with a Polish company and possess the required qualifications (relevant higher education certificates and documents proving professional experience). An individual holding a Blue Card may apply for an EU long-term residence after he or she has spent five years living in the EU of which the last two years were spent in Poland.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family members of expatriate applicants who obtain work or business visas may receive visas/residence permits as accompanying persons. Children who are above 18 years old must have their own purpose of stay, such as school or studies. These visas/residence permits may be issued for a period no longer than the period of validity of the primary applicant's visa/residence permit. EU citizens' family members may obtain EU citizens' family member cards. After five years, they acquire the status of permanent resident if they fulfill the respective conditions.

Marital property regime. A community property regime applies in Poland to married couples. Under the regime, property acquired before the marriage or during the marriage for proceeds received as an equivalent for the property acquired before the marriage remains separate. Couples may amend or opt out of the regime by a notarized agreement.

Forced heirship. Under Polish inheritance law, specified legal heirs, including descendants, surviving spouse and parents, are entitled to a legal portion of an estate if certain conditions are met.

Driver's licenses. In general, foreign individuals may drive legally in Poland with their home country driver's licenses or international driver's licenses for a period of six months. After an individual has been in Poland for six months, he or she should change a foreign driver's license to a Polish driver's license. A driver's license issued by another EU member state does not have to be changed after six months.

Members of the diplomatic corps often enjoy special privileges with respect to driver's licenses.

J. Proposed changes to the law

The changes discussed below have been enacted, but they are not yet in force. They will enter into force based on the competent ministry regulation. As a result, there is no clear answer as to whether they will be applicable in Poland soon. Therefore, they may currently be considered proposed changes.

From January 2019, a simplified procedure for obtaining a residence permit with a right to work has been introduced for foreigners whose purpose of stay in Poland is to perform work in professions desired for the Polish economy.

These professions can be specified in a regulation of the Minister of Family and Social Policy. To obtain a residence permit, an entity will not be required to demonstrate that it is not able to meet its staffing needs on the local labor market. Special grounds will also be provided for granting permanent residence permits to foreigners holding a residence permit with a right to work after four years of uninterrupted stay in Poland.

As of the time of writing, the list of professions had yet not been published by the competent minister.

The above provisions will make it possible to specify in a flexible manner by way of regulation, one or multiple limits with a possible division into voivodships, professions, the types of contracts under which work is to be performed and the types of business conducted by entities hiring the foreigners. This will allow negative phenomena in the labor market to be counteracted as cognitive tools corresponding to the situation on the Polish labor market are developed. This tool will be used to limit the number of work and residence authorization documents for third-country nationals.

The new Act on Foreigners provides also for legal grounds for the optional determination of limits in a given calendar year for the following:

- Temporary residence and work permits
- Temporary residence permits for the purposes of highly qualified employment

- Temporary intra-corporate transferee permits
- Temporary residence permits for business purposes for a foreigner working as a board member in a company in which he or she holds shares or as a proxy or general partner in a limited partnership or partnership limited by shares

The Polish parliament is working on a new draft law on the employment of foreigners, which was recently submitted by the Polish government. The draft law aims to facilitate the recruitment of non-Polish nationals into the Polish labor market and reduce government requirements and processing times for certain applications.

The new draft law includes proposals to amend the Foreigners' Act in the following ways:

- Create "priority admission paths," which will expedite the application process for specific categories of applicants, including citizens of specific countries (which have yet to be announced).
- Accelerate the issuance of residence and work permits to applicants who are sponsored to work in entities of particular strategic importance to the Polish economy (which have yet to be announced).
- Ensure that all applications for temporary residence permits are processed by the government in 60 days or less, and that all appeals of government decisions (for example, denials of temporary residence permit applications) are processed within 90 days.
- Eliminate some of the requirements for obtaining temporary residence permits (for example, elimination of the requirement to have a stable and regular source of income for the granting of temporary residence and work permits).
- Eliminate the need to obtain new residence and work permits in some instances when foreigners change employers or jobs while in Poland, and facilitate the process of obtaining new residence and work permits following changes in employers or jobs (when required).
- Ensure that all applications for permanent residence permits and EU long-term residence permits are processed by the government in six months or less.
- Create a simplified procedure for processing temporary residence permit applications that were filed with the Polish government before 1 January 2021 and will not have been processed by the time the new law goes into effect.

The new draft law also seeks to amend the Act on Employment Promotion and Labor Market Institutions in the following ways:

- Accelerate the issuance of work permits to applicants who are sponsored to work in entities of particular strategic importance to the Polish economy (which have yet to be announced).
- Enable Polish companies to use Declarations on Entrusting Work to a Foreigner (that is, a simplified procedure for obtaining work authorization) for nationals of Armenia, Belarus, Georgia, Moldova, the Russia Federation and Ukraine who work in Poland for up to 24 months (up from 6 months in a 12-month period, previously).

The personal income tax rules described in this chapter are in line with the current legislation and should be in force until 31 December 2020.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents of Portugal are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to personal income tax on income arising in Portugal.

An individual is considered resident in Portugal if, among other conditions, he or she meets either of the following conditions:

- He or she stays in Portugal for more than 183 days in any 12-month period, beginning or ending in the fiscal year concerned.
- He or she has a dwelling in Portugal, in any day of the abovementioned period, which may imply his or her intention to use it as his or her habitual residence.

As a rule, individuals that meet the above conditions become tax residents in Portugal from the first day of permanence in Portugal and become nonresidents from the last day of permanence in Portugal. As a result of the above two conditions, it is possible to split the year for tax purposes.

Despite the possibility to split the year for tax purposes, some additional rules apply. The loss of the tax resident status occurs from the last day of permanence in Portugal unless the individual remains in Portugal more than 183 days in the departure year and, after the departure, derives any income that would otherwise be subject (and not exempt) to tax as a resident of Portugal. In such case, he or she will continue to be considered tax resident of Portugal for the whole year, unless certain conditions are met. If a tax resident leaves Portugal and returns in the following year (after becoming nonresident of Portugal), that individual is deemed Portuguese tax resident for the prior year (year in which he or she had previously been deemed a nonresident), according to the Portuguese domestic law.

The tax status (resident versus nonresident) should be updated within 60 days (that is, the taxpayer must communicate any change to the tax authorities within the mentioned period; otherwise, penalties may be applied).

As a result of the elimination of the spouse attraction rule, tax residency is now determined with respect to each taxpayer separately.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Personal income tax (IRS) is imposed on the earned income of employed individuals.

Business and professional income. Taxable income includes all earned income of a professional individual, including commissions and profits from a trade. Business and professional income is taxed at the personal income tax rates listed in Rates and may be subject to one of the following two regimes:

- Simplified regime
- Organized bookkeeping regime

Income may be taxed under the simplified regime if the taxpayer does not choose to use, and is not required to use, organized bookkeeping and if the annual gross business and professional income of the taxpayer did not exceed EUR200,000 in the preceding year.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are taxed in the same manner as employment income.

Investment income. A withholding tax of 28% is imposed on interest income derived from public company bonds and state bonds and on bank interest. Dividends paid by resident companies are subject to a 28% final withholding tax. Withholding taxes are final with respect to the following:
- Dividends
- Bank interest
- Interest on shareholders' loans
- Interest from public company bonds, bills or other paper
- Interest on public debt

The taxpayer may elect to include these items in taxable income in the tax return unless they are obtained within the scope of a business or trade activity (in which case it is mandatory). If the taxpayer makes the election, the income is taxed at the rates set forth in Rates, with a credit given for the tax withheld (a 50% relief applies to dividends received from resident companies subject to and not exempt from Portuguese corporate tax or from European Union [EU] companies or companies resident in European Economic Area [EEA]countries that have entered into an exchange-of-information agreement with Portugal concerning tax matters, provided that these companies fulfill the requirements of the EU Parent-Subsidiary Directive).

In general, other investment income is subject to a final withholding tax of 28%.

Rental income and royalties are subject to withholding tax at rates of 25% and 16.5%, respectively. Most of the costs effectively borne by the landlord to obtain the rental income, except financial costs, depreciation, the purchase of furniture, domestic appliances and decorations, and the additional to the municipal real estate tax (the additional to the municipal real estate tax is levied on the total amount of the property tax values of residential properties and plots of land held by individuals and companies [exempt minimum thresholds apply for individuals]), are deductible from the rental income. Expenses related to maintenance and repair of the property incurred and paid in the 24 months before the beginning of the lease are also deductible from the rental income under certain conditions. The landlord must keep the supporting documentation and present it, if requested. The expenses can be deducted only against the income of each property and carryforward of losses is allowed for a six-year period under certain conditions.

Rental income is subject to a 28% flat tax rate. However, the taxpayer may elect to include rental income in the taxable income in the tax return. If the taxpayer makes the election, the income is taxed at the rates set forth in Rates, with a credit given for the tax withheld. Royalties are taxed at the personal income tax rates set forth in Rates, with a credit available for the withholding tax. Long-term rentals are subject to the following reduced rates, according to the term of the contract:
- More than 2 years and less than 5 years: 26%. For each renewal of equal term, the flat tax rate is reduced by 2 percentage points up to 14% (that is, the reduced flat tax rate cannot be lower than 14%).
- Equal or more than 5 years and less than 10 years: 23%. For each renewal of equal term, the flat tax rate is reduced by 5 percentage points up to 14% (that is, the reduced flat tax rate cannot be lower than 14%).

- Equal or more than 10 years and less than 20 years: 14%
- 20 years or more: 10%

Capital gains and losses. Taxable capital gains that are not specifically exempt or taxed separately are taxed at the ordinary rates listed in Rates. No withholding tax applies. In general, gains derived from sales of the following assets are taxed at the personal income tax rates set forth in Rates:
- Real estate and associated rights
- A taxpayer's property transferred to the taxpayer's business (however, this gain may be deferred; see below)

Capital gains derived from sales of the following assets are exempt from tax:
- Securities acquired before 1 January 1989
- Real estate, except land for construction, owned prior to 1 January 1989
- A personal residence if, among other conditions, the proceeds are reinvested in another personal residence in Portugal (or in other EU member states or EEA countries that have entered into an exchange-of-information agreement with Portugal concerning tax matters) within 36 months after the sale or 24 months before the sale
- A personal residence if the proceeds are invested in a life insurance contract, individual membership in an open pension fund or contributions to the capitalized public scheme, and if the following conditions are met:
  - The taxpayer or the respective spouse are retired or are, at least, 65 years old on the date of the sale of the personal residence.
  - The purchase of the insurance contract, individual membership in an open pension fund or contributions to the capitalized public scheme, occur within six months after the sale.
  - In the case of the purchase of an insurance contract or individual membership in an open pension fund, the applications entitle exclusively the taxpayer or the respective spouse, to a periodic payment of a maximum annual amount equal to 7.5% of the value invested.

  Additional conditions may have to be met for the abovementioned exclusions from taxation to apply.

The following capital gains benefit from special tax treatment:
- Gains derived from the sale of real estate or associated rights, excluding real estate used in a trade or business, are taxed only to the extent of 50% of the gain.
- Gains derived from transfers of real estate from the taxpayer's business to the taxpayer's own property are not deemed a taxable event. However, when this transfer occurs, in the case of organized accounting, if depreciation or impairments have been booked, the corresponding expenses for tax purposes that have been deducted during the period of allocation of the property to the business activity must be added, in equal fractions, to the income of the year in which the transfer occurs and in each of the following three years.

- Gains derived from the transfer of real estate that has been allocated to the taxpayer's business are taxed as business or professional income if the transfer occurs less than three years following the transfer of the real estate to the taxpayer's own property.
- Gains derived from transfers of other assets (other than real estate) from the taxpayer's own property to the taxpayer's business are deferred until a subsequent disposition of the property occurs or another event results in the ending of the deferral, if certain conditions are met, and only 50% of the gain is taxed.
- Gains derived from the sale by non-original owners of copyrights, patents and various other types of intellectual property are taxed only to the extent of 50% of the gain.
- Gains derived from disposals of securities (including disposals of autonomous warrants, redemptions of bonds and other debt securities, redemptions of participation units of investment funds, receipts of liquidation proceeds, assignments of credits and assignments of supplementary capital contributions or ancillary contributions) and derivative financial products are subject to tax at a rate of 28% (a 50% exclusion from tax applies to gains from shares in unlisted micro and small companies) if an exemption does not apply. An exemption may apply to nonresidents under domestic rules or an applicable double tax treaty.

In calculating the capital gain derived from the sale of real estate or securities, the purchase price is indexed by an official government coefficient to account for inflation if the sale occurs more than 24 months after the purchase.

Capital losses may offset capital gains only. In certain conditions, capital losses may be carried forward five years.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Income derived from employer-provided stock options is taxed in the same manner as employment income (see Employment income).

Taxation of residents in EU member states and EEA countries that have entered into an exchange-of-information agreement with Portugal concerning tax matters. Residents of EU member states and EEA countries that have entered into an exchange-of-information agreement with Portugal concerning tax matters may opt to be taxed as if they were tax residents of Portugal. This option is available for certain capital gains and other income that are not attributable to a permanent establishment and are not liable to definitive taxation, as well as for rental income. It may also apply if the individual's Portuguese-source income is at least 90% of his or her worldwide income derived during the relevant tax year. In determining the tax rate applicable to the income mentioned above, worldwide income must be considered and reported.

Taxation of non-habitual residents. A special regime applies to individuals who become tax residents of Portugal and have not been taxed as such in any of the previous five years. Non-habitual resident status applies for up to 10 years and requires the taxpayer to be registered as non-habitual resident with the tax authorities. Principal aspects of this regime are summarized below.

Employment income and business or professional income derived from high-value-added activities of a scientific, artistic or technical nature (including, among others, general managers and executive managers; heads of administrative, commercial and production departments; specialists or technicians working in the fields of physical sciences, mathematics, engineering and similar technical fields; doctors and dentists; teachers at universities; artists; specialists in information and communication technologies; and certain qualified industrial workers, construction workers and craftspersons) are taxed at a flat rate of 20% on net income.

On 23 July 2019, a new list of high value-added activities was published. New activities have been added and others (such as auditors and tax advisors) have been eliminated. The new list is applicable from 1 January 2020, but there is a transitory regime applicable to individuals who were already registered as such or with pending registrations up to 1 January 2020 or who requested such registration up to 31 March 2020 (with effects for the 2019 tax year).

Foreign-source income, such as employment income, income from certain business or professional activities (as listed above), income from copyrights, industrial property rights or transfer of know-how, investment income, rental income and capital gains, is exempt from tax in Portugal if such income is effectively taxed (for employment income) or may be taxed (for other types of income) in either of the following countries:

- A tax treaty country, in accordance with the terms of the treaty.
- A non-tax treaty country in accordance with the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) Model Tax Convention rules, provided that the country is not a territory considered a tax haven (not applicable to employment income) and that the income cannot be deemed sourced in Portugal under domestic tax law.

According to the rules in force until the 2020 State Budget Law, foreign-source pension income not resulting from contributions that had been claimed as a tax deduction in Portugal was exempt from tax in Portugal if such income was taxed in a tax treaty jurisdiction or was not deemed sourced in Portugal under domestic tax law. According to the new rules introduced by the 2020 State Budget Law, foreign-source pension income not originating from contributions that have been claimed as a tax deduction in Portugal is subject to tax at the special tax rate of 10%, applicable to the net taxable income of pensions, including the income qualified under Category H – pension income, as well as amounts qualified as employment income, such as those made before the holder is placed in a situation equivalent to retirement, and as well as lump-sum payments when the contributions were not subject to taxation. A transitional regime has been introduced, under which the prior rules granting the exemption may still apply in certain conditions.

Income benefiting from the exemption method is considered to determine the tax rate applicable to the remaining income (except capital gains from securities, dividends, interest and other investment income sourced abroad, rental income and employment and business or professional income subject to the 20% rate mentioned above, which are taxed at special flat rates). Taxpayers may opt to apply the credit method (rather than the exemption method) to this income. In such case, such income is aggregated with the remaining income and taxed at the normal IRS rates.

Favorable regime for returning individuals. A 50% exclusion on employment and self-employment income applies to individuals that become Portuguese tax residents in 2019 or 2020, provided that the individuals were not tax residents of Portugal in the three years prior to their return and were tax residents of Portugal prior to 31 December 2015. The individuals must have their tax affairs up to date. This regime is not cumulative with the non-habitual residents' regime and is applicable in the year of the return and in the four following years.

Exemption for outbound expatriates working abroad. An exemption for outbound expatriates (working abroad) has been applicable since 2015. The exemption applies to employment income, in the part corresponding to the compensation for travel and stay abroad that exceeds the legal limits foreseen in the Personal Income Tax Code, earned by tax resident individuals temporarily assigned abroad, in the respective tax year, for a period of not less than 90 days (of which 60 should be consecutive days).

The exempt amount cannot exceed the higher of the following:
- The difference between the annual employment income subject to tax of the individual, including compensation, and the total amount of his or her regular employment income subject to tax in the preceding year (excluding any compensation paid in the previous year under this regime)
- EUR10,000

This regime operates as an exemption with progression. The exemption also applies to nonresident individuals with a limit of three years from the date of the assignment, under certain conditions.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. For 2020, employees may deduct an amount of EUR4,104. Compulsory social security contributions in excess of EUR4,104 are deductible without limitation. Union contributions and indemnities paid to employers may also be deducted, subject to applicable limits.

Business and professional deductions. Professionals and individuals carrying on a business may be taxed under one of the following two regimes:
- Simplified regime
- Organized bookkeeping regime

Business and professional income may be taxed under the simplified regime if the taxpayer does not choose to use and is not required to use organized bookkeeping and if the annual gross business and professional income for the preceding year did not exceed EUR200,000.

Under the simplified regime, taxable income is calculated by applying the following predefined coefficients, which vary depending on the activity's sector, to gross income:
- 0.15 on sales of goods and products, as well as hotel and similar services (except the operation of local accommodation units consisting of apartments or dwellings), food and beverages activities

- 0.75 on income from professional activities (that is, services rendered) listed in the table referred to in Article 151 of the Personal Income Tax Code and 0.35 for the remaining activities
- 0.95 on income from intellectual or industrial property, royalties, investment income from a trade or business and other income from capital gains, rentals and net worth increases
- 0.30 on non-operating subsidies or grants, such as subsidies or grants for the purchase of equipment
- 0.10 on operating government subsidies (for example, grants for personnel training) and other business and professional income not mentioned above
- 0.5 on income from the operation of local accommodation units consisting of apartments or dwellings located in restricted areas
- 1 on income derived from services rendered by partners to a company taxed under the tax transparency regime and to companies in which, during more than 183 days in the respective tax year, either of the following circumstances exists:
  - The taxpayer holds, direct or indirectly, at least 5% of the shareholdings or voting rights.
  - The taxpayer, spouse or life partner, ascendants or descendants hold together, directly or indirectly, at least 25% of the shareholding or voting rights.

The deduction to the taxable income that derives from the coefficients of 0.75 for income from professional activities and 0.35 for the remaining service rendering activities is partially conditioned on the expenses effectively borne by the taxpayer, as it is added to the taxable income, which is the positive difference between 15% of gross income derived from such activities and the sum of certain expenses mentioned specifically in the law.

Taxpayers earning income from professional activities or other services rendered can deduct from taxable income compulsory social security contributions, in excess of 10% of the gross business and professional income, which have not been claimed as deductions for any other purpose.

Coefficients on the taxable income for services rendered and operating subsidies are reduced by 50% and 25%, in the first and second years of activity, if certain requirements are satisfied. This benefit does not apply if the entrepreneurs have ceased their activity in the last five years.

The simplified regime ceases to apply if the qualifying limit is exceeded for two consecutive years or by more than 25% during a single year.

The organized bookkeeping regime provides for the deduction of activity-related expenses. Taxable income is calculated using the corporate tax rules, with additional limitations imposed on the deduction of the following expenses:
- Amounts booked as remuneration paid to the self-employed individual are not deductible.
- Amounts booked as per diem allowances, kilometer allowances, meal allowances and other remuneration allowances are not deductible.

If a professional's house is partially used as an office, the professional may deduct certain expenses, including rent, electricity, water and telephone costs, and depreciation, up to 25% of the total amount of expenses incurred.

Certain expenses borne by professionals or other individuals who have or should have an organized bookkeeping regime are taxed autonomously, triggering an additional tax burden. These expenses include the following:

- Undocumented expenses are not tax-deductible and are subject to a surcharge of 50%.
- Entertainment expenses that are deductible from gross business or professional income are subject to a 10% surcharge.
- Expenses deductible from gross business or professional income that are related to cars (except electric cars) are subject to a 0%, 10% or 20% surcharge, depending on the nature and acquisition cost of the vehicle (reduced rates apply in the case of plug-in hybrid vehicles or liquefied petroleum gas [LPG]/natural gas vehicles).
- Per diems and expenses related to the use of a personal car by the employee for the company's business are taxed at a rate of 5% if such expenses were not charged to clients or taxed as employment income.
- Payments to nonresident entities that are subject to a favorable tax regime are not tax-deductible and are subject to a 35% surcharge if it cannot be proved that these expenses relate to operations effectively performed, that the payments are normal for the type of activity and that the amount is not unreasonable.

Rates. The following personal income tax rates apply for 2021.

Taxable income		Tax on	Rate on
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	lower amount EUR	excess %
0	7,112	0	14.50
7,112	10,732	1,031	23.00
10,732	20,322	1,863	28.50
20,322	25,075	4,597	35.00
25,075	36,967	6,261	37.00
36,967	80,882	10,661	45.00
80,882	—	30,422	48.00

For married taxpayers, the progressive tax rate is determined by dividing taxable income by two.

For 2021, taxable income exceeding EUR80,000 but not exceeding EUR250,000 is subject to an additional solidarity tax of 2.5%, and taxable income exceeding EUR250,000 is subject to an additional solidarity tax of 5%.

Credits. For 2021, individuals may credit the following amounts against their tax liability:

- EUR600 for each child (EUR726 for the first child in case he or she is younger than three years old or EUR900 for the second child and following, as long as he or she is younger than three years old, independently from the age of the first child).
- EUR300 for each child (EUR363 for the first child in case he or she is younger than three years old or EUR450 for the second child and following, as long as he or she is younger than three years old, independently from the age of the first child) for each taxpayer with parental responsibilities, whenever the agreement for the exercise of parental responsibility establishes joint responsibility and alternating residency.

- EUR525 for each ascendant who lives with the taxpayer and does not receive income above the minimum social security retirement pension. This credit is increased to EUR635 if only one ascendant complies with the abovementioned requirements.
- 35% (45% for single-parent families) of general expenses borne by any member of the household, with the limit of EUR250 (or EUR335 for single-parent families) per taxpayer.
- For health expenses that are exempt from value-added tax (VAT) or are subject to VAT at a rate of 6%, 15% of unreimbursed medical expenses, and health insurance premiums of the taxpayer or any member of the household. The tax credit cannot exceed EUR1,000.
- 15% of interest on certain loans and financial leasing rent for the acquisition or improvement of a residence in Portugal or a country in the EU or EEA (with which Portugal has entered into an exchange-of-information agreement concerning tax matters), limited to EUR296, and 15% of the rental payments made to the owner of a residence in Portugal or a country in the EU or EEA (with which Portugal has entered into an exchange-of-information agreement concerning tax matters), limited to EUR502. These limits may be increased for taxpayers with lower levels of income.
- 30% of education expenses of the taxpayer or any member of the household, limited to EUR800 (this limit can be increased to EUR1,000 in case the difference relates to rents for members of the family household, younger than 25 years old [inclusive], who are attending schools that are more than 50 kilometers away from the permanent residence of the family household).
- 25% of expenses incurred on retirement homes and similar homes, limited to EUR403.75.
- 15% of the VAT borne in the following sectors, limited to EUR250:
  - Maintenance and repair of motor vehicles
  - Maintenance and repair of motorcycles
  - Accommodation and food services
  - Hairdressers and beauty salons
  - Services rendered by veterinarians
  - Sport and recreational teaching, sport clubs, and gyms and fitness
- 100% of the VAT borne by any member of the household with monthly passes for use of collective public transport (concurrent with the EUR250 ceiling applicable to the VAT borne in the sectors mentioned in the preceding bullet; this means that the EUR250 ceiling applies to the sum of 15% of the VAT borne in such sectors and 100% of the VAT borne with respect to the monthly passes).
- 20% of pension fund contributions that meet certain conditions, limited to EUR300, EUR350 or EUR400 per taxpayer, depending on the taxpayer's age.
- 25% of donations to the state or municipalities, increased by 20%, 30%, 40% or 50%, depending on the type of the beneficiary entities.

- 25% of donations to religious institutions, public utility collectives, schools, museums, libraries, cultural associations, and philanthropic and charitable institutions, increased by 30%, with the credit limited to 15% of the total tax liability.
- 20% of alimony payments, in certain conditions.
- 20% of investments made by business angels (individual venture capital investors), provided certain conditions are satisfied, limited to 15% of the total tax liability.
- Advance personal income tax payments and taxes previously withheld at source.

To benefit from the credits, these expenses must be reported (generally by the suppliers) to the Portuguese tax authorities.

The tax credits concerning medical expenses, education expenses, alimony payments, retirement homes and expenses related to residential property, as well as 15% of the VAT borne in some sectors (100% for monthly transportation passes) and tax benefits, are also capped as a whole in accordance with the taxpayer's level of income, as shown in the following table.

Taxable income	Limit
Up to EUR7,112	None
More than EUR7,112 and less than EUR80,882	EUR1,000 + (1,500 x [EUR80,882 – taxable income] ÷ [EUR80,882 – EUR7,112])
EUR80,882 or more	EUR1,000

Each of the above limits is increased in 5% for each dependent, in families with three or more dependents.

Relief for losses. Losses from business or professional activities may be carried forward and offset against profits from activities of the same type in the following 12 years. Losses may not be carried back.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

Inheritance and gift taxes were eliminated, effective from 1 January 2004. However, stamp duty at a rate of 10% applies if the beneficiary is an individual (except for the spouse or life partner, ascendants and descendants who benefit from an exemption). For a beneficiary that is a collective person, a corporate tax applies at a maximum rate of 21%, plus the following surcharges:

- Municipal surcharge of up to 1.5% for residents or permanent establishments
- A state surcharge of 3% on taxable income between EUR1,500,000 and EUR7,500,000, 5% on taxable income between EUR7,500,000 and EUR 35,000,000, and 9% on taxable income exceeding 35,000,000

Specific rules apply to determine whether an asset is deemed to be located in Portugal for stamp duty purposes.

C. Social security

Contributions. Social security contributions are payable on all salaries, wages, bonuses and other regular income, excluding lunch subsidies. No ceiling applies to the amount of wages subject to social security contributions for employers or employees, including members of the board. The employer's share is 23.75%, and the employee's share is 11%, of salaries. An employer must deduct an employee's contribution and pay the total amount by the 20th day of the following month.

A self-employed individual engaged in a business or professional activity is subject to monthly social security contributions. The basis for contributions corresponds to 70% of the total amount of services provided (20% for income from production and sale of goods) in the three preceding months, with a monthly cap of EUR5,265.72 (12 times EUR438.81). If the individual is taxed under the organized accounting, the relevant income is determined based on the profit of the previous year. Social security contributions are first due on the first day of the 12th month after the beginning of activity.

Self-employed individuals should file a return to the social security authorities in the months of April, July, October and January, for the income earned in the previous three months.

The following are the contribution rates for self-employed individuals:
• 21.4% in general
• 25.2% for specific situations

Entities contracting service providers may be subject to a 10% (when more than 80% of the services are rendered to the same entity) or 7% (when more than 50% but less than 80% of the services are rendered to the same entity) social security contribution rate levied on the amount paid for the services.

Members of a company's governing bodies (management, supervisory and general meeting) are usually subject to social security contributions based on actual compensation. For contribution purposes, the actual compensation base must equal at least one monthly notional salary. This limit does not apply if members of the board are not remunerated and simultaneously carry on another remunerated activity that is liable to mandatory social security contributions and if the tax base is equal to or higher than EUR438.81, or in the case of pensioners.

For management, the rates are 11% for individuals and 23.75% for companies. For other governing bodies, the rates are 9.3% for individuals and 20.3% for companies.

Totalization agreements. Foreigners who work temporarily (generally up to two years) in Portugal and who contribute to a compulsory social security scheme in their country of origin may not be subject to Portuguese social security contributions. To provide relief from double social security contributions and to assure benefit coverage, Portugal has entered into totalization agreements, which apply to different periods (up to 60 months), with the following jurisdictions.

(c) Income may be declared at the option of the taxpayer.

Married taxpayers who are not legally separated, as well as joint couples (in some cases), can opt for joint taxation. Under Portuguese law, joint couples are taxpayers who are not married but live together for at least two years.

The tax year in Portugal is the calendar year. However, it is possible to split the year for tax purposes. Residents, as well as nonresidents who have filing obligations, must file their personal income tax returns between 1 April and 30 June of the following year. Any balance of tax due or excess tax paid is payable or refundable when the Portuguese tax authorities issue the respective tax assessment.

An extension to the filing of personal income tax returns with foreign tax credit is granted until 31 December of the year following the tax year. For that purpose, individuals must report the nature of the income and the country of source by the standard deadline for the personal income tax return filing (through Form 49) and subsequently file the return when the foreign tax assessment is available.

The foreign tax credit may be carried forward for five years.

Nonresidents who receive rental income from Portugal or who realize a capital gain in Portugal that is not excluded from taxation must file tax returns between 1 April and 30 June of the year following the year of receipt.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Residents who receive foreign-source income are generally entitled to a tax credit equal to the lower of the foreign tax paid or the Portuguese tax payable on such income. The credit applies to income derived from treaty and non-treaty countries; however, for treaty countries, the credit is limited to the amount of tax payable in the country of source in accordance with the treaty.

Brokers resident in countries with which Portugal has entered into double tax treaties are exempt from tax on commissions received from Portuguese entities. This exemption also applies to income from business and professional services. Specific forms are required to qualify for the exemption.

Compulsory social security contributions and other deductible expenses (see Sections A and C) incurred overseas may be deducted if properly documented.

Portugal has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Algeria	Hong Kong SAR	Qatar
Andorra	Hungary	Romania

(a) This tax treaty is not yet in force.
(b) Finland unilaterally revoked this treaty on 20 December 2018.

F. Short-stay visas and temporary visas

Short-stay visas (vistos de curta duração) in Portugal may be issued for several reasons, mainly for tourist and business purposes. They entitle non-EU citizens to spend up to 90 days in Portugal. This visa does not allow its holder to work in Portugal.

Nationals of Visa Waiver Program countries do not require a visa to enter Portugal for short-term visits. However, their stay cannot exceed 90 days within any 180-day period.

Foreign nationals who expect to stay in Portugal up to one year should apply for temporary-stay visas. This type of visa can be applied for various purposes, such as medical purposes, intra-company transfers and the exercise of high qualified activity or research.

G. Residence visas

Non-EU nationals must enter Portugal with the proper visas if they intend to carry out professional activities. The type of work permit and visa required and the required procedures to obtain these items differ depending on how the work relationship is classified (for example, as a self-employment activity, an employment activity or an activity considered to be a high qualified activity or research).

The procedure for obtaining an employment visa for a foreign national is initiated by the prospective Portuguese employer (or the Portuguese entity for which the employees are assigned to work), which must first request a declaration to the Instituto de Emprego e Formação Profissional proving that the job offer is covered by the quota limits and has not been filled by a worker who enjoys preference. The approval and issuance of such declaration usually requires up to three months. This procedure is usually followed to fill available vacancies within the quota limits, which are established by a resolution taken by the Council of Ministers.

The initial residence visa is issued for four months. As soon as the holder of the visa arrives in Portugal, he or she should apply to the immigration authorities in Portugal for a residence card (autorização de residência). The initial residence card is issued for two years and can be renewed for successive periods of three years.

Portugal is one of the countries that has implemented the EU Blue Card Directive, which enables companies to locally hire executives and high-skilled workers. To obtain the EU Blue Card, an individual must prove the following:
- For regulated professions specified in the employment contract, the adequate professional certification document, if applicable
- For professions that are not regulated, proof of higher professional qualifications in the occupation or sector specified in the employment contract

The application for the EU Blue Card should be submitted by a national of a third state or by the employer with the regional offices of the immigration authorities.

The EU Blue Card is issued for an initial term of validity of one year, renewable for successive periods of two years. The renewal of the EU Blue Card must be requested by the interested party within 30 days before the expiration of its validity.

H. EU, EEA and Swiss nationals

EU, EEA and Swiss nationals do not need any permits to enter and work in Portugal. An EU, EEA or Swiss national who intends to reside and work in Portugal must register with the local city hall if his or her stay exceeds 90 days. In principle, the EU registration is valid for a period of 5 years, after which EU, EEA and Swiss nationals should apply for a permanent residence permit, which is valid for 10 years.

I. Golden Visa

The rules governing the granting of a Residence Permit for Investment (known as an ARI/Golden Visa), which entered into force on 8 October 2012, enable third-country nationals to obtain a temporary residence permit to conduct business activities with visa waiver to enter Portugal.

The beneficiaries of an ARI/Golden Visa are entitled to the following:
- Residence visa waiver for entering Portugal
- The right to live and work in Portugal, on the condition that they stay in Portugal for a period of 7 or more days in the first year and 14 or more days in the subsequent years
- Visa exemption for traveling within the Schengen Area
- Family reunification
- The right to apply for permanent residence after five years
- The right to apply for Portuguese citizenship, by naturalization, provided all other requirements set out by the Nationality Act are fulfilled after five years

Eligible individuals are all third-country citizens who conduct an investment activity in Portugal, as individual businesspersons or through a company set up in Portugal or in another EU member state and who are stably settled in Portugal, provided that these citizens fulfill the quantitative requirements and the time requirements set out by the relevant legislation, by one of the following actions:
- Capital transfer with a value equal to or above EUR1 million (EUR1.5 million from 2022)
- The creation of at least 10 job positions
- The purchase of real estate property with a value equal to or above EUR500,000 (from 2022, the investment will only be possible in properties in low-density areas in Portugal)
- The purchase of real estate property that has construction dating back more than 30 years or that is located in urban regeneration areas, for refurbishing for a total value equal to or above EUR350,000
- Capital transfer with a value equal to or above EUR350,000 (EUR500,000 from 2022) for investing in research activities conducted by public or private scientific research institutions involved in the national scientific or technological system
- Capital transfer with a value equal to or above EUR250,000 for investing in artistic output or the support of the arts for the reconstruction or refurbishment of the national heritage, through local and central authorities, public institutions, the public corporate sector, public foundations, private foundations of public interest, networked local authorities, local corporate sector organizations, local associations and public cultural associations, if these entities are pursuing activities of artistic output and reconstruction or maintenance of the national heritage
- Capital transfer with a value equal to or above EUR350,000 (EUR500,000 from 2022) for the acquisition of units of investment funds or venture capital funds of funds dedicated to the capitalization of companies, if the capital is injected under the Portuguese legislation, the maturity at the moment of the investment is at least five years and at least 60% of the investments is realized in commercial companies with a head office in Portugal

- Capital transfer with a value equal to or above EUR350,000 (EUR500,000 from 2022) for the establishment of a commercial society with its head office in Portugal and the creation of five permanent working jobs, or for the reinforcement of the share capital of an existing commercial society with its head office in Portugal and the creation or maintenance of a minimum of five permanent jobs, for a minimum period of three years

J. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family members who accompany a non-EU foreign national to Portugal or wish to join a foreign national in Portugal must request special visas from the Portuguese consulate in their last country of residence. These visas (visto de residência para efeitos de reagrupamento familiar) allow family members to work in Portugal after the relative residence permit for family purpose is obtained (see below).

After the competent consulate abroad issues the visa, within four months after their arrival in Portugal, family members accompanying a foreign national must request their residence permits for the purpose of family reunion (autorização de residência para reagrupamento).

If the primary applicant holds a temporary stay visa, his or her family is granted a short-stay visa.

Applications for family reasons residence permits can made for children up to 18 years old. If the children are more than 18 years old, they need to be studying in Portugal.

Driver's permits. In general, foreign nationals may drive legally in Portugal for a period of 185 days using their home-country driver's licenses or if they possess international driver's licenses. If the individual becomes resident in Portugal, he or she should carefully investigate if he or she may continue to drive legally without any action (specific rules apply depending on the country that issued the driver's license). Portugal has driver's license reciprocity with all EU member countries and certain non-EU countries, including, for example, with the United States.

To obtain a Portuguese driver's license, foreign nationals must fulfill certain conditions, namely proceeding with physical and medical examinations. In addition, after obtaining a residence permit, a foreign citizen has 60 days to exchange the driver's license without undertaking any written or practical tests. After two years, the foreign citizen may be required to undertake a practical test. For both situations, all foreign citizens are asked to undertake physical and medical examinations.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Act 1 of 31 January 2011 contained a tax reform that introduced a new tax code known as the Internal Revenue Code for a New Puerto Rico (IRCPR). The IRCPR is effective for tax years beginning after 31 December 2010.

Under the IRCPR, residents of Puerto Rico are subject to Puerto Rico tax on their worldwide income. Nonresident aliens and nonresident US citizens are taxed only on their income from sources in Puerto Rico and on income treated as effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in Puerto Rico. Most residents of Puerto Rico are US citizens but are not subject to US federal income tax under Internal Revenue Code (IRC) Section 933, except on income derived from sources outside Puerto Rico.

For purposes of US taxation, an individual is considered a resident of Puerto Rico if he or she satisfies each of the following conditions:

- He or she is present for at least 183 days during the year in Puerto Rico. This determination is made under the substantial presence test.
- He or she does not have a tax home outside Puerto Rico during the tax year.
- He or she does not have a closer connection to the United States or a foreign country than to Puerto Rico.

Under the IRCPR, rules similar to the rules for determining whether income is from sources in the United States or is effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States generally apply as persuasive authority for purposes of determining whether income is from sources in Puerto Rico. However, any income treated as income from sources in the United States or as effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States may not be treated as income from sources in Puerto Rico or as effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in Puerto Rico.

For local purposes, whether an individual is considered resident or nonresident generally is a question of intent, which is determined based on facts and circumstances. As a general rule, individuals are presumed to be residents if they are present in Puerto Rico for not less than 183 days in a calendar year.

Under IRC Section 937 and Treasury Regulation Section 1.937-1(h), effective from 2001, an individual with worldwide gross income of more than USD75,000 must file Form 8898 for the tax year in which the taxpayer becomes or ceases to be a bona fide resident of Puerto Rico, among other US possessions. For married individuals, the USD75,000 filing threshold applies to each spouse separately.

Income subject to tax. Taxable income is computed by subtracting allowable deductions and exemptions from gross income. Gross income broadly includes virtually all realized economic gains. However, certain items are specifically excluded by statute from the definition of gross income, including, among others, life insurance proceeds, student grants, gifts and inheritances. Also, some items may be subject to the alternate basic tax.

Education allowances provided by employers to their local or expatriate employees' children are taxable for income tax and social security purposes.

Employment income. Salary deferred under a 401(k)-type plan may be excluded, subject to limitations, provided the plan is qualified by the Puerto Rico tax authorities.

In general, a nonresident individual who performs personal services as an employee in Puerto Rico at any time during the tax year is considered to have received income from sources in Puerto Rico. An exception to this general rule applies to a nonresident individual performing services in Puerto Rico if each of the following conditions apply:
- The services are performed for a foreign employer.
- The employee is present in Puerto Rico for no more than 90 days during the tax year.
- Compensation for the services performed in Puerto Rico does not exceed USD3,000.

If these conditions are not met, all income, including the first USD3,000, is subject to tax.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employed individuals conducting a business for profit in Puerto Rico are subject to income tax at the rates set forth in the first table in Rates.

For tax years beginning after 31 December 2018, self-employed individuals whose income originates substantially from rendering services may opt to use a fixed tax rate schedule to determine their income tax liability as stated in the second table in Rates.

To make this election, the self-employed individual must do the following:

- He or she must engage in a trade or business in which gross revenue is derived substantially from rendering services. It is understood that an individual substantially derives his or her income from rendering services if the individual receives 80% or more of his or her income from the rendering of services.
- He or she must receive income reported in an information return.

In addition, the entirety of the gross income must be subject to withholding at source or estimated tax payments. The Secretary of the Treasury may waive the annual tax return filing requirement for an individual who makes this election.

A nonresident individual engaged in a trade or business in Puerto Rico during the tax year is subject to tax on net income effectively connected with the conduct of the trade or business. The tax rates are the same as those for residents (see Rates). All income, gains and losses from sources within Puerto Rico, including Puerto Rico-source passive income, are treated as income, gains or losses effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in Puerto Rico.

Investment income. In general, dividends and interest income are taxed at the regular income tax rates (see Rates (a)). However, dividend income from corporations deriving 80% or more of their gross income from sources within Puerto Rico is taxed at a maximum rate of 15%, but the effective tax rate could be higher under certain conditions. The first USD100 of annual interest income paid on a deposit with a financial institution doing business in Puerto Rico is tax-free for individual taxpayers. In the case of married taxpayers filing jointly, the exclusion will not exceed USD200 (for married taxpayers filing separately, the exclusion is USD100 each). Interest in excess of the USD100 amount is taxed at a maximum rate of 10% if a taxpayer complies with certain conditions concerning withholding tax, but the effective tax rate could be higher as a result of the alternate basic tax system.

Rental operations and certain other activities that generate income are considered passive activities. Income from passive activities is included with other taxable income and taxed at the rates presented in Rates.

A nonresident alien individual not engaged in a trade or business in Puerto Rico is taxed, in general, at a rate of 29% on Puerto Rico-source fixed or determinable, annual or periodical gains, profits and income. Dividend income is taxed at a rate of 15%. Generally, the tax on fixed or determinable income must be withheld at source by the payer. A nonresident alien with income derived from real property located in Puerto Rico, or with gains derived from the sale of real property, may elect to treat rental income from that property as effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in Puerto Rico, thereby permitting the deduction of related expenses and depreciation.

Directors' fees. In general, directors' fees are considered earnings from self-employment.

Services payments. A withholding tax of 10% generally applies to payments made in excess of USD500 to persons for services rendered in Puerto Rico by another person carrying on a trade or business in Puerto Rico. The withholding applies to payments for services that are not covered by other withholding provisions, including payments of wages subject to income tax withholding.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. In general, employer-provided stock options are taxed the same in Puerto Rico as they are in the United States, with the following exceptions:
- The exercise of a qualified stock option does not constitute a taxable event in Puerto Rico.
- No alternative minimum tax (AMT) adjustment applies in Puerto Rico.
- No holding period is required for qualified stock options.
- Stock option plans must obtain a ruling from the Puerto Rico Treasury Department to obtain qualified status and beneficial income tax treatment.

Capital gains. Net long-term capital gains (the excess of net gains derived from the sale of capital assets held for longer than one year over losses from the sale of most capital assets held for one year or less) are generally subject to tax at a maximum rate of 15%, but the effective tax rate could be higher as a result of the alternate basic tax system. Losses from the sale of capital assets incurred in a tax year are allowed only to the extent of the gains from such sales generated during the tax year. If the losses exceed the gains for such tax year, the taxpayer may deduct the excess limited to the net income of the taxpayer (computed without regard to gains or losses from the sale of capital assets) or USD1,000, whichever is less. For tax years beginning after 31 December 2018, capital losses can be carried forward to subsequent taxable years as a short-term capital loss to the extent of 90% of the net capital gain generated for the tax year to which such losses are carried over.

Young taxpayers. The first USD40,000 of gross income derived by "young taxpayers" from salaries or self-employment is exempt from taxation. For purposes of this exemption, the term "young taxpayer" means individuals resident in Puerto Rico whose age is between 16 and 26 years at the end of the tax year. The amount in excess of USD40,000 is taxed at ordinary tax rates.

Deductions. Nonresident US citizens are allowed the same deductions applicable to residents but, in general, are not allowed any deduction that is allocable or apportioned to income not subject to Puerto Rico income tax.

Deductible expenses. To calculate taxable income, individuals may reduce gross income by claiming deductions for specific expenses.

In general, deductions allowed in the computation of adjusted gross income are costs and expenses directly incurred in, or attributable to, generating or earning income. The following deductions are included in this category:
- Deductions attributable to rents and royalties (losses may not offset other types of income)
- Losses from the sale or exchange of property

- A portion (not exceeding USD1,000) of the excess of capital losses over capital gains

Allowable deductions reduce adjusted gross income. These include mortgage interest on both a principal residence and a second home located in Puerto Rico, charitable contributions (subject to limitations), certain disaster losses, and medical expenses over specified amounts. Nonresident aliens may deduct certain charitable contributions made to various Puerto Rico charitable organizations.

Deductions for part-year residents and nonresident individuals must be apportioned on the basis of income sources.

In addition, deductions are allowed for contributions to individual retirement accounts (IRAs) of financial institutions engaged in trade or business in Puerto Rico (subject to limitations). A deduction of up to USD500 is available for cash contributions to an Educational Contributions Account for the exclusive benefit of a child or relative up to the third degree of blood relationship or second degree by affinity.

The following are the IRCPR categories of filing status:
- Married filing jointly
- Married filing separately
- Individual taxpayer (which includes single, head of household and married not living with spouse)

Personal exemptions. In addition to the deductible expenses discussed above, the following exemptions may be subtracted from adjusted gross income to arrive at taxable income.

Personal exemptions	USD
Married, living with spouse and filing a joint return	7,000
Married filing separate returns	3,500
Individual taxpayer	3,500
Additional personal exemption for veterans	1,500
Exemption for dependents (unless joint custody or married filling separate)	2,500

Personal exemptions and dependents' exemptions are not available for nonresident aliens.

Business deductions. Self-employed individuals are entitled to the same deductions as employees and may also deduct business expenses. Many business expenses may need to be validated through the issuance of an information return. Self-employed persons generally may deduct directly related ordinary and necessary business expenses. Deductible expenses for business meals and entertainment are limited to 25% of the amount incurred, and this amount may not exceed 25% of gross income. Depreciation on automobiles is deductible, up to the first USD30,000 of the cost of the automobile. The amount of allowable depreciation is subject to limitation for personal use of the automobile.

A nonresident alien is entitled to the business deductions allowed to a resident, only to the extent that the deductions are related to income effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in Puerto Rico.

Optional tax computation for married individuals who both work and file a joint return. If a married couple lives together and if both spouses work and file a joint return, an option exists to pay tax in an amount equal to the sum of the tax determined individually for each of the spouses. The rules applicable to this optional tax computation are summarized below.

Gross income. The gross income of each spouse consists of salaries, wages, professional fees, commissions, income from annuities and pensions, gains attributable to trade or business and distributive shares in the income of special partnerships and corporations of individuals, and other income derived from services rendered by each spouse in his or her individual capacity. All other income is equally divided between both spouses, regardless of who derived the income.

Exemptions and deductions. The personal exemption of a married couple filing jointly and the dependent exemption are divided equally between the spouses. Deductions for contributions to IRAs and Educational Contributions Account are allowed to the spouse to whom they individually correspond, subject to the limitations that apply to each particular deduction. All other deductions are divided equally between the spouses.

Tax calculation. The regular tax is determined separately for each spouse in accordance with the tax rate schedule applicable to individual taxpayers and then aggregated.

Rates. The 2021 income tax rates applicable to resident individuals, nonresident US citizens and nonresident aliens engaged in business in Puerto Rico are set forth in the table below. These rates apply to all taxpayers regardless of their filing status. The following are the income tax rates.

Net taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding USD	Not exceeding USD	amount USD	excess %
0	9,000	0	0
9,000	25,000	0	7
25,000	41,500	1,120	14
41,500	61,500	3,430	25
61,500	—	8,430	33

The tax due equals 95% of the normal rates and gradual adjustments, if applicable, for tax years beginning after 31 December 2018. For tax years beginning after 31 December 2019, the tax due equals 92% (instead of 95%) if the gross income is equal or less than USD100,000. Gradual adjustment is a factor of the income tax calculation that applies to individuals whose net taxable income is over USD500,000. The IRCPR provides for a gradual adjustment to the tax rates lower than 33% and the personal and dependents' exemptions.

The following are the gross revenue rates for self-employed individuals under the optional tax election.

From USD	To USD	Rate %
0	100,000	6
100,000	200,000	10
200,000	300,000	13
300,000	400,000	15
400,000	500,000	17
500,000	—	20

The Alternate Basic Tax (ABT) applies to an individual with an adjusted gross income of USD25,000 or more. Many types of revenue, such as certain dividends, interest and long-term capital gains, are preference items. The tax applies only if it is larger than the regular tax. The ABT is creditable against regular tax, subject to limitations. The tax is determined in accordance with the following table.

Adjusted gross income
From USD	To USD	Rate %
25,000	50,000	1
50,000	75,000	3
75,000	150,000	5
150,000	250,000	10
250,000	—	24

In calculating ABT net taxable income, the IRCPR establishes limits on deductions and expenses that may be claimed by individuals who engage in a trade or business. If an Agreed Upon Procedure (AUP) Report or Compliance Attestation (CA) Report, prepared by a certified public accountant who is licensed in Puerto Rico, is filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, the limits do not apply. Filing one of these reports enables individuals to deduct all ordinary and necessary expenses related to their trade or business.

Relief for losses. Net principal trade or business losses may be used to offset income from other activities. If each spouse has a principal trade or business, a married couple is considered a single trade or business. Unused operating losses may be carried forward for 7, 10 or 12 years, depending on the year in which they were incurred. The following are the applicable rules:

- For tax years commenced before 1 January 2005, losses could be carried forward for seven years.
- For tax years commenced after 31 December 2004 and before 1 January 2013, the carryforward period is 12 years.
- For tax years commenced after 31 December 2012, losses may be carried forward for 10 years.

Losses from other trade or business activities may offset income only from the same trade or business.

Capital losses incurred in a tax year are deductible against the capital gains of that same tax year. The excess of the loss, if any, may be used against the lesser of USD1,000 or the net income of the taxpayer. Unused capital losses may be carried forward for 5, 7 or 10 years, depending on the year in which they were incurred. The following are the applicable rules.

- For tax years commenced after 30 June 1995 and before 1 January 2005, the carryforward period was five years.
- For tax years commenced after 31 December 2004 and before 31 December 2012, the carryforward period is 10 years.
- For tax years commenced after 31 December 2012, capital losses may be carried forward for seven years, and these losses are considered short-term capital losses.

For tax years beginning after 31 December 2018, the net operating loss deduction is limited to 90% of the net income.

B. Estate and gift taxes

Puerto Rico estate and gift taxes are imposed at a fixed rate of 10% on the net taxable value of property transferred at death or by gift if the transfer occurs before 1 January 2018.

For estate and gift tax purposes, a resident of Puerto Rico generally may transfer property located in Puerto Rico tax-free before 1 January 2018 because a deduction is allowed for property located in Puerto Rico in determining the value of the gross estate.

Property transferred by death or by gift after 31 December 2017 is not subject to the fixed rate of 10%.

Gift tax. For a resident, gift tax is imposed on the value of transfers of property located outside of Puerto Rico before 1 January 2018. For a nonresident, gift tax is imposed on the value of property located in Puerto Rico only if the gift occurs before 1 January 2018.

A tax is imposed on the value of all taxable gifts made during the tax year and in all prior years before 1 January 2018. The gift tax is computed by applying a fixed 10% rate to taxable gifts made during the calendar year. Donors are entitled to an annual exclusion of USD10,000 to each donee from taxable gifts.

Various deductions are also allowed. A credit against gift tax may be claimed for gift taxes paid to the United States or to foreign governments.

If the gift tax is not paid by the donor, it may be assessed against the donee to the extent of the value of the gift received by the donee.

Estate tax. Estate tax is computed by applying a fixed 10% rate to the taxable estate for deaths occurring before 1 January 2018. For a resident, the taxable estate is defined as the gross estate (generally the fair market value of the transferred property, wherever located, on the date of transfer or gift), less allowable deductions. Various specified deductions, including a deduction for property located in Puerto Rico, are allowed, and a fixed exemption of USD1 million is also granted. The USD1 million exemption is prorated among all assets included in the estate based on their fair market value.

Tax credits are permitted for certain amounts that were included in the estate of a previous decedent, as well as for estate taxes paid to the United States or foreign countries.

Nonresidents are subject to Puerto Rico estate tax on estate property located in Puerto Rico only. Certain deductions and exclusions are allowed. A nonresident US citizen decedent is allowed a minimum exemption of USD30,000, and a nonresident alien decedent is allowed a USD10,000 exemption.

The Puerto Rico estate tax for deaths occurring before 1 January 2018 is limited to the maximum credit allowed under the rules of the government of the decedent. This rule applies, for example, to Puerto Rico residents who are subject to US estate taxes. Residents of Puerto Rico who were born or naturalized in Puerto Rico are subject to US estate and gift taxes on assets located in the United States only.

For deaths occurring after 31 December 2017, no estate tax is applicable, regardless of the residency of the decedent.

C. Social security

The following three principal social security taxes are levied under US federal law:
- The Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA)
- The Self-Employment tax (SE tax)
- The Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA)

In addition, Puerto Rico levies its own unemployment tax, as well as a disability tax and a workers' compensation insurance contribution.

FICA. For 2021, FICA tax is imposed on wages at a total rate of 15.3%, which includes a 2.9% Medicare tax. The combined tax rate for employee's wages is 7.65%, which is composed of a 6.2% component for Old-Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance (OASDI) tax and a 1.45% component for hospital insurance (Medicare). For 2021, OASDI tax is imposed on wages up to an OASDI wage base of USD142,800. An additional Medicare tax of 0.9% is imposed on wages exceeding USD200,000. No limit applies to the amount of wages subject to the Medicare portion of the tax.

SE tax. SE tax is imposed on a US citizen's or resident alien's self-employment income after deductions for business expenses. The 2021 rate is 15.3% on the first USD142,800 of self-employment income. No limit applies to the amount of income subject to the 2.9% Medicare portion of the tax. Self-employed individuals must pay the entire tax but may deduct 50% as an adjustment to gross income on their income tax returns. Individuals who are subject to both FICA and SE tax first deduct employment income from the 2021 net available base before determining SE tax. Therefore, a self-employed individual who also has FICA wages of USD142,800 is subject to the additional Medicare tax only.

FUTA. FUTA tax is imposed on an employer's wage payments to employees for services performed within the United States, which is defined to include Puerto Rico. This tax is levied without regard to the citizenship or residence of an employer or an employee. The tax rate is 6% on the first USD7,000 of wages for each employee. Self-employed individuals are not subject to FUTA. A credit for the amount of state unemployment insurance paid to the government of Puerto Rico is available.

Puerto Rico employment taxes. The maximum 2021 Puerto Rico unemployment tax rate is 5.4% on the first USD7,000 of an employee's wages. It remains to be determined whether the taxable wage will increase for future calendar years to as much as USD10,500, as allowed under the law. The rate may be lower, depending on the employer's rating, which is based on the employer's history of layoffs. This tax may be credited against the FUTA tax.

A disability tax is imposed on the first USD9,000 of an employee's wages. The rate is 0.6%, with 0.3% paid by the employer and 0.3% paid by the employee.

Premiums for workers' compensation insurance are borne solely by the employer and are based on total wages paid. The rate varies, depending on the occupation of the workers.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The Puerto Rico tax system is based on self-assessment. Puerto Rico taxpayers must file annual tax returns with the Bureau of Returns Processing of the Puerto Rico Treasury Department. Annual tax returns must be electronically filed.

Nonresident individuals must file tax returns if their gross income net of exemptions exceeds USD0 (that is, any amount greater than zero), unless the total tax is withheld at source.

Taxes are generally collected by employer withholding on wages and salaries and by individual payment of estimated taxes on income not subject to withholding. Normally, tax due in excess of amounts withheld plus estimated tax payments made must be paid with the return when filed. The taxpayer claims a refund of an overpayment of tax by filing the annual return. Substantial penalties and interest are usually imposed on a taxpayer if a return is not filed on time or if tax payments, including estimated payments, are not made by the applicable due date.

Returns may be selected at a later date for audit by the Puerto Rico Treasury Department Fiscal Audit Bureau. Failure to adequately support amounts claimed as deductions on the return may result in the disallowance of deductions and in a greater tax liability on which interest or penalties, or both, must be paid from the original due date. In general, taxpayers must maintain supporting documentation for at least four years after a return is filed. Evidence of income tax payments should be maintained indefinitely.

The due date is 15 April for calendar-year taxpayers. A six-month extension of time to file a tax return may be obtained, but it is not an extension of time to pay the tax. To prevent interest and penalties from being charged on unpaid tax, taxpayers must pay any tax due by the due date of the return.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Residents of Puerto Rico are taxed by the Puerto Rico government on their worldwide income. Puerto Rico is a territory of the United States, and most US laws apply in Puerto Rico. However, Puerto Rico-source income derived by individuals residing in Puerto Rico is generally exempt from US individual income taxation because Puerto Rico is considered a foreign jurisdiction for US tax purposes. Income from sources outside Puerto Rico derived by individuals residing in Puerto Rico is subject to US taxation.

A foreign tax credit is available to prevent double taxation of Puerto Rico residents subject to US or foreign tax on non-Puerto Rico-source income. Generally, the foreign tax credit permits a taxpayer to reduce Puerto Rico tax by the amount of income tax paid to the United States or to foreign governments. The credit is limited to the lesser of the following:

- The actual US or foreign taxes paid or accrued
- The Puerto Rico tax applicable to the non-Puerto Rico-source taxable income

Separate limitations may apply for situations in which non-Puerto Rico-source income is derived from more than one foreign jurisdiction.

Double tax treaties entered into by the United States do not apply in Puerto Rico. A protocol to the treaty between the United States and Spain states that the US and Spanish governments should meet to extend the treaty's coverage to Puerto Rico, but this has not yet occurred. Puerto Rico may not enter into separate tax treaties with foreign governments.

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) and the Puerto Rico Treasury Department have established a mutual agreement procedure to resolve inconsistent treatment of tax items. Requests for assistance under this procedure should be addressed to the Tax Treaty Division of the IRS.

F. Visas

The rules concerning eligibility for visas that allow foreign nationals to work in Puerto Rico are identical to those for the continental United States. Therefore, please refer to the US chapter in this guide for information on the requirements and procedures needed to obtain a visa in Puerto Rico.

G. Family and personal considerations

Marital property regime. The marital property (conjugal partnership) regime in Puerto Rico applies only to married couples. Under this regime, Puerto Rico recognizes that property acquired during marriage is subject to division and equitable distribution, and therefore constitutes marital property. Puerto Rico recognizes as separate property, distinguishable from marital property, any property acquired before marriage and all property derived by either of the spouses during the marriage through inheritance, gift or devise. The regime applies unless the spouses execute a marriage contract by public deed before the marriage.

Driver's permits. Any person with a valid driver's license is authorized to drive in Puerto Rico for up to 120 days from the date of arrival. After this period, the individual must apply for a Puerto Rico license. The following are the basic requirements:

- Completed application form
- Three photos of the applicant

- Medical exam
- Original and copy of the applicant's social security card, driver's license, certificate of birth, visa and US passport or residence card
- Written exam
- Payment of a fee

Puerto Rico offers driver's license reciprocity with the following states of the United States.

Florida	Maine	Tennessee
Illinois	South Dakota	Wisconsin

Individuals from the above states need fulfill only the first four of the requirements listed above.

E. Temporary visas

All visitors to Qatar, with the exception of nationals of the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) states, excluding Bahrain, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates, must obtain valid entry visas. Completed visa application forms may be submitted to the immigration authority in Qatar or to Qatari embassies abroad. Visa applications (including applications for business visas) may also be submitted online to the government visa service at www.gov.qa.

Business visas, which are valid for one month, are granted to visitors for business purposes. Only companies that are approved by the Qatar immigration authorities may sponsor and apply for business visas. Entry into Qatar on a business visa requires a pre-application in Qatar. This rule applies to all nationalities. A copy of the business visa is required on arrival at the port of entry. Business visas may be renewed for an additional two months.

Tourist visas, which are valid for 14 days, are granted to visitors on application if the visitor has a confirmed booking with one of the recognized hotels in the country. Visitors must stay at the hotel through which the visa is obtained. In general, most visitors must apply for a tourist visa before travel to Qatar. However, residents of certain specified jurisdictions are permitted to travel to Qatar without obtaining an entry visa before traveling and may obtain a tourist visa at any port of entry in Qatar.

Nationals from the following jurisdictions (subject to change and, accordingly, must be confirmed at the time of travel) are eligible to obtain a single- or multiple-entry visitor visa for tourism on arrival to Qatar, valid for one month from the date of entry, which can be extended for an additional period of 30 days.

Visitors' visas for stays of up to three months may be obtained on application by a sponsor residing in Qatar. The sponsor may be a company registered in Qatar or an expatriate who resides and works in Qatar. This type of visa may be extended for an additional three months. Citizens and residents of GCC member states do not require visitors' visas. On arrival in Qatar, they are granted visas valid for up to one month.

F. Work visas

Foreign nationals may work in Qatar only if they have valid employment contracts sponsored by companies resident in Qatar. An employment (work) visa is issued only if the applicant's employment contract is approved by the Ministry of Administrative Development, Labor and Social Affairs.

Foreign nationals may work only for the particular company that sponsors them. A transfer of employment from one sponsor to another requires the approval of the Department of Immigration at the Ministry of Interior (MOI).

Under the provisions of the Immigration Law, which became effective as of December 2016, a foreign national does not have to leave the country after the expiration of a fixed-term contract and before taking up a new contract in the state. If the foreign national leaves the country, the visa will be canceled and a new visa will be required for re-entry. Foreign nationals can also change jobs before their contract ends if they obtain permission from their sponsor, the MOI, and the Ministry of Administrative Development, Labor and Social Affairs. However, following the adoption of Law No. 18 of 2020. issued on 30 August 2020 (amending certain provisions of the Labour Law No. 14 of 2004), foreign nationals can change jobs before or after the completion of their employment contract without having to obtain a No Objection Certificate from their employer.

The Law on the Entry, Exit and Residency of Foreign Nationals Law No. 13 of 2018 was issued on 4 September 2018, amending certain provisions of Law No. 21 of 2015.

Under the amendment, Article 7 of Law No. 21 of 2015 has been replaced with a provision that stipulates that an expatriate worker covered under Qatar's Labor Law has the right to temporarily or permanently exit the country at any time throughout the duration of his or her employment contract without an exit permit.

However, an employer may submit a prior application to the Ministry of Administrative Development, Labor and Social Affairs with the names of the employees that it deems necessary to obtain pre-approval before the employees leave the country due to the nature of their work. The percentage of such workers cannot exceed 5% of the total number of employees.

Employment visas are valid from one to five years and are renewable.

Application for employment visas should be made in Qatar. The application process takes approximately two to four weeks after all documents are received from a foreign national. The following documents are required from an applicant:
- A passport
- Four passport-size photos
- Apostilled bachelor's degree certificate
- For certain nationalities, a health declaration
- Proof that the applicant has no criminal record (if required)

G. Residence permits

Residence permits are generally granted to foreigners only if they have valid employment visas. Foreigners must leave the country when their employment terminates. If they do not have another job offer and contract, they must leave; otherwise, they can transfer their sponsorship to the new company. However, foreign nationals and members of their immediate family who own land or property rights in leased properties are entitled without sponsorship to residence permits for five years with renewal options for the duration of their interests in their properties. In addition, foreign nationals with investments in businesses under the provisions of the Foreign Capital Investment Law No. 13 of 2000 are also entitled to entry visas and residence permits for five years with renewal options over the period of their investments.

Residence visas may also be issued to professionals, including doctors, accountants and lawyers, if they are sponsored by Qatari nationals or Qatari companies and if the necessary permits are obtained from the relevant government department.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Qualifying individuals who have resident permits can sponsor their spouse and children for the obtaining of residence permits in Qatar. The non-working spouse of a holder of an employment visa does not automatically receive the same type of visa. An independent application must be filed.

Property ownership. Foreign nationals may not own property in Qatar, other than in designated real estate developments, including the Al Khor Resort, the Pearl of Qatar Island and West Bay Lagoon. With the exception of these developments, ownership is restricted to Qatari and GCC nationals. Foreign nationals may purchase the right to enjoy the use of apartments in multistory buildings in residential areas for periods of up to 99 years.

I. Immigration and visas in the QFC

The QFC provides immigration services to QFC group entities and QFC firms, including their employees, family members and business visitors. All immigration applications and queries should only be submitted to the QFC, unless otherwise directed.

The QFC provides access to a one-stop-shop immigration service that includes the following:

- A fully dedicated QFC team that is available to process and assist in immigration applications
- Privileges and exemptions that are only available to QFC entities (which result in lower documentation requirements)
- A dedicated Ministry of Interior specialized office at the QFC that handles only QFC entities' applications and provides on-site eye scan, fingerprint and identification printing services

The QFC levies service charges for immigration services and administrative processing that are slightly higher than the State. The amount of the charges varies subject to the QFC's discretion. Service charges and fees are published in an Immigration Service Guide published in the immigration module of the QFC Portal. The processing times under the QFC are generally shorter than those experienced under the State administration.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals domiciled in Romania are considered to be tax residents and are taxed on their worldwide income (with certain exceptions). Under certain circumstances, individuals who are not domiciled in Romania may be subject to tax on their Romanian-source income, regardless of where the income is received. In the absence of a tax-residency certificate issued by another state based on a double tax treaty, a foreign individual or one who carries out independent activities through a permanent establishment in Romania becomes subject to tax on worldwide income beginning on the date on which the tax-residency criteria are met.

Individuals in Romania who are also residents of a country that has entered into a double tax treaty with Romania may benefit from a reduced tax rate or a tax exemption under the terms of the relevant treaty. If a foreign individual spends less than 183 days in Romania and if the salary costs for the individual are not recharged to Romania, he or she may be exempt from Romanian salary tax liabilities, provided that a tax residency certificate is available. Individuals in Romania who are tax residents in countries that have not entered into a double tax treaty with Romania are subject to tax in Romania from their first day of presence in the country.

A Romanian tax resident who is domiciled in Romania and who demonstrates a change of residency to a country that does not have a double tax treaty with Romania continues to be subject to tax on any worldwide income for the calendar year in which the change of residency occurs and for the next three calendar years.

Income subject to tax. A flat tax rate of 10% applies to salary income, income from freelance activities, income from intellectual property rights, rental income, pension income, investments, prizes, investment income, agricultural, forestry and fisheries income, and other types of income. Special tax rates apply to income such as dividends and income from gambling and transfer of property ownership. The taxation of various types of income is summarized below.

Employment income. Taxable compensation includes the following:
- Salaries
- Benefits in cash or kind (for example, allowances and perquisites)
- Wage premiums
- Rewards
- Temporary disability payments
- Paid holidays
- Other income received by an individual based on an employment agreement, document for appointing civil servants, secondment agreement or a special statute in the law
- Fees and compensation paid to directors and managers of private enterprises and to members of the board of directors, general shareholders meeting, administration council and audit committee

The monthly tax on employment income is determined by deducting mandatory social security charges, personal deductions, trade union contributions, employee contributions to the voluntary occupational pension scheme and contributions to the voluntary health insurance scheme cumulated with medical subscription services (an alternative branch of services offered by certain private health care companies by means of subscription). Each of the deductions for voluntary pension and voluntary health insurance is capped to a maximum of the equivalent in Romanian currency of EUR400 per year per participant (the limit of EUR400 represents a cumulative cap in the case of voluntary health insurance premiums and medical subscription services).

Income from independent activities. Income from independent activities includes income from production activities, income from commerce, income from rendering of services and income from freelance activities, whether performed individually and/or in a form of association, as well as related activities.

The net taxable income from freelance activities is computed as gross income less specified deductible expenses. Individuals engaged in freelance activities must make tax payments by 25 May of the following year. In the case of independent activities performed under contracts for sports activity, the income payer (the legal entity or other entity that has the obligation to maintain accounting records) must assess, withhold and pay the related income tax on a monthly basis.

Income derived by individuals from rental for tourism purposes of rooms located in their own homes, with a capacity for accommodation of more than five rooms is assessed as income from independent activities and is subject to tax based on the real system (actual income recorded based on the single-entry system).

Income from intellectual property rights. Income from intellectual property rights includes income from the selling of any form of intellectual property rights, including the following:
- Copyrights and rights related to copyrights, including the creation of monumental art works
- Patents

- Designs
- Trademarks
- Geographical indications
- Topographies of semiconductor products
- Similar items

In the case of income from intellectual property rights derived from legal entities or other entities required to maintain accounting records, the income payer must assess, withhold and pay the related income tax on a monthly basis, by the 25th day of the month following the month it was withheld.

If the income from intellectual property rights is not derived from legal entities or other entities required to maintain accounting records, the taxpayer must pay the related income tax to the state budget.

Taxable income from intellectual property rights is computed by deducting from gross income expenses representing 40% of gross income.

Rental income. Gross rental income consists of amounts in cash or kind that are stipulated in rental agreements, as well as certain expenses borne by the tenant that are the landlord's liability according to the law. The rental income is taxable in the tax year to which the rent relates, regardless of when the rent is effectively received.

Rental income also includes income derived by owners from the rental of rooms located in their own homes, with a capacity for tourist accommodation ranging from one room to five rooms.

If individuals are earning rental income from more than five rental contracts at the end of a tax year, such income is reassessed as income from independent activities beginning with the following year, and it is accordingly subject to the rules applicable to that category.

Taxable rental income is generally determined by subtracting from gross rental income a deduction equal to 40% of gross income. Tax on rental income is determined by applying a rate of 10% to the taxable amount. As an exception, taxpayers may opt for the determination of the net rental income based on single-entry accounting.

Investment income. Investment income includes the following:
- Dividend income
- Interest income
- Gains from transfers of securities (including stock option plans) and other operations involving financial instruments (including derivatives)
- Income from the transfer of financial gold
- Income from the liquidation of a legal entity

The first four of these categories of investment income are discussed below.

Dividends are any grant of benefits in cash or kind by a legal entity to shareholders or associates as a result of holding participation titles (with certain exceptions). The tax rate applicable to dividends distributed to resident individuals is 5%. The tax rate is calculated, withheld and paid by the payer of dividend. The tax must be paid by the 25th day of the month following the dividend payment. For dividends declared but not paid until the end of the year, the tax is payable by 25 January of the following year. Amounts received from holding participation titles in closed investment funds are treated similarly to dividends. A 5% final withholding tax is imposed on dividends.

Taxable income from interest is considered to be any interest from current account or sight deposits, term deposits, savings instruments and civil contracts or interest paid by the company issuing debt securities during the loan period. A 10% final withholding tax is imposed on interest income. The tax must be remitted by the 25th day of the following month.

Capital gains derived from transfers of securities (including stock option plans) and other operations involving financial instruments (including derivatives) are subject to a 10% income tax. In general, the capital gain equals the positive difference between the sale price and fiscal value of the securities, which includes the related transaction costs. A capital gain on a sale of shares obtained as a result of a stock option plan equals the difference between the sale price and the fiscal value (preferential acquisition price), which includes the related transaction costs. For shares obtained for a nil price, the fiscal value is considered to be zero.

Gains or losses derived from the operations with financial gold equal the positive or negative difference between the sales price and the fiscal value, which includes the costs related to the transaction.

Under the "net capital gain" concept, the difference between gains and losses registered during one year (that is, the positive or negative differences between the sale and fiscal value, which includes the related transaction costs) is calculated.

Income from the transfer of securities, other operations involving financial instruments and from the transfer of financial gold (financial gold is gold purchased for the purpose of creating a reserve and also for use as an investment instrument) is subject to an annual regularization, which is performed by applying a 10% tax rate to the annual taxable income, less tax losses carried forward (if any). Losses may be carried forward for seven years.

Income from other sources. Any income from other sources, as defined by the law, is subject to a 10% income tax, calculated, withheld and paid by the payer of such income.

Income whose source is not identified. Any income whose source is not identified is subject to a 16% income tax applied to the tax base adjusted according to the procedures and indirect methods for the reconstitution of revenues or expenses. The tax authorities compute the income tax and late payment penalties.

Deductions. Individuals domiciled in Romania and individuals meeting a certain residence condition for worldwide income taxation are entitled to personal deductions, which vary according to gross monthly income and number of dependents of the individuals. For gross monthly income up to RON1,950, the monthly deductions vary between RON510 for individuals without dependents and RON1,310 for individuals with four or more dependents. For gross monthly income between RON1,951 and RON3,600, personal deductions are degressive in relation to the above. No deduction is allowed for gross monthly income greater than RON3,600.

Rates. As discussed in Income subject to tax, most types of income are subject to tax at a flat rate of 10%.

B. Other taxes

Inheritance and gift taxes. No taxes are levied on inheritances or gifts, except for revenue subsequently derived from these items.

Property taxes. For property tax purposes, the taxable value of a property is computed based on multiple factors, including but not limited to, the following:
- Property surface
- Type of building
- Location of the property
- Age of the building
- Potential construction works
- Purpose for which the property is used (i.e., residential or non-residential)

Each Local Council establishes the applicable rate.

C. Social security and health care charges

Income subject to social security and health care charges is discussed below.

Employment income. The following rates are applicable for employment income:
- Employee social charges: 35% (25% pension contribution and 10% health fund contribution)
- Employer social charges: 2.25% (representing the work insurance contribution, which includes unemployment, medical leave, work accidents and the salary guarantee fund)

Private income (other than employment income). The following types of private income, other than employment income, are subject to social security contributions:
- Income from independent activities
- Income from intellectual property rights

Under certain conditions, individuals who derive income from independent activities and/or intellectual property rights are liable to pay social security contributions if the cumulated net annual income exceeds 12 minimum salaries per economy (approximately EUR5,600 for 2021). The contribution rate of 25% is applied to an amount chosen by the taxpayer that cannot be lower than 12 minimum national salaries per economy.

The following types of private income, other than employment income, are subject to the health fund contribution:
- Income from independent activities
- Income from intellectual property rights
- Rental income
- Agricultural, forestry and fisheries income
- Investment income
- Income from other sources, as provided by the law

Under certain conditions, individuals who derive income from one or more of the abovementioned sources are liable to pay health fund contribution if the cumulated net annual income exceeds 12 minimum salaries per economy (approximately EUR5,600 for 2021). The contribution of 10% is applied to a capped computation base of 12 minimum national salaries per economy.

Citizens of European Economic Area (EEA) countries, Switzerland and the United Kingdom benefit from the coverage of medical expenses incurred in Romania and may be exempted from social security charges if relevant European certificates are obtained. However, if an individual is not subject to social security charges in his or her home country, he or she falls under the Romanian social security system and is liable to pay social security charges in accordance with Romanian regulations (the home-country employer or the employee must follow a certain procedure to register for social security purposes).

Totalization agreements. Romania has entered into totalization agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Albania (a)
Algeria (a)
Canada (b)
Israel (b)
Korea (South) (b)
Libya (a)
North Macedonia (a)
Moldova (c)
Peru (a)
Quebec (c)

(a) No administrative procedures have been put in place. Consequently, the agreement is not applicable.
(b) The agreement covers pension contributions only. It provides exceptions from paying contributions in case of assignment.
(c) The agreement covers pensions, health indemnity, medical leave indemnities and work accidents. It provides exceptions from paying contributions in case of assignment.
(d) The 1961 agreement with the USSR applies to the former USSR republics of Armenia, Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine. It covers pension and medical leave indemnities. It does not contain any assignment provisions or exceptions from paying contributions.

D. Tax filing and payment

Foreign nationals assigned to work in Romania and who do not meet the tax exemption conditions must register for tax purposes within 30 days after beginning their assignment. Subsequently, they must file monthly tax returns, and pay income tax and social security charges (if applicable) by the 25th day of the following month.

If the individual is on a local payroll, the local employer must compute, withhold, declare and pay the income tax and social security charges (if applicable).

Albania
Algeria
Armenia
Australia

(a) The exemption from the visa obligation applies only to Hong Kong passport holders.
(b) The exemption from the visa obligation applies only to Macau passport holders.
(c) The exemption from the visa requirement applies only to holders of biometric passports.
(d) The exemption does not apply to holders of Serbian passports issued by the Department of Serbian Coordination (Koordinaciona Uprava).
(e) The exception from the visa obligation applies only to holders of passports issued in Taiwan that contain the identification card number.

In addition, the exemption from the visa requirement applies to British nationals of a territory subordinated to the British government.

Citizens of other countries can obtain short-term or long-term visas, which may be single- or multiple-entry visas. Special conditions apply to foreign nationals planning to set up businesses in Romania. Foreign citizens can obtain special short-term, multiple-entry visas for frequent business trips.

G. Work authorizations

EU, EEA and Swiss nationals can be seconded to Romania without obtaining a work authorization. The seconded individuals must apply directly for a registration certificate.

In addition, companies based in Switzerland or EU or EEA member states can second non-EU/EEA/Swiss nationals to Romania without obtaining a work authorization. The seconded individuals must apply directly for a residence permit and are required to present to the Romanian authorities the valid residence permit obtained from Switzerland or an EU/EEA member state.

The secondment of non-EU nationals (third-country nationals) is limited to one year within a five-year period. An extension of their stay in Romania may be granted if a work authorization for local employment purposes is obtained. Foreigners assigned as heads of foreign company branches and foreign citizens named administrators of Romanian companies only need to apply for the long-term visa and the residence permit.

As of September 2016, the EU directive with respect to intra-company transfer (ICT) workers has been transposed in the Romanian immigration legislation. Therefore, employees of companies outside the EU, EEA and Switzerland who are subject to an ICT in a leadership position or as a specialist can be seconded to Romania for a period of up to three years under certain conditions. A new type of work authorization for secondment purposes — the ICT work authorization — has been introduced. The secondment can be extended after the initial period of three years if the ICT worker leaves Romania and fulfills the conditions for initiating a new secondment process. Foreigners must be hired by a Romanian company before the assignment ends, or immediately after, if they want to continue carrying out activities in Romania without interruption.

H. Residence permits

Both short-term and long-term visas allow foreign nationals to stay for up to 90 days within a 180-day period from the date of entry to their date of exit from Romania. Although the short-term visa cannot be extended, the long-term visa can be extended through an application for a residence permit. The following documents are required for a visa extension:

- Work authorization for the categories of individuals who are required to obtain a work authorization for performing activities in Romania
- Medical insurance for the visa period
- Medical certificate attesting that the individual is in good health
- Proof of accommodation and means of support in Romania
- Other documents, depending on the purpose of the stay

Similar residence permits can be issued to immediate family members (that is, spouse, children, parents and parents-in-law, if these family members cannot support themselves and do not benefit from family support in the home country) accompanying an individual during his or her assignment in Romania.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The spouse of a foreign national holding a local work authorization must apply for a separate work authorization if the spouse wishes to work in Romania. If the spouse obtains a work authorization while being in Romania and holding a residence permit, there is no need to obtain a new long-term visa. The spouse who obtained the work authorization can either choose to keep the residence permit for family reunification purposes or apply for a residence permit for employment purposes.

Customs regulations for individuals. Special duty treatment is provided for the personal belongings of individuals establishing domicile or residence in Romania, goods introduced into Romania on marriage, inherited goods and household goods used for furnishing a residence in Romania and personal effects shipped through parcel and postal services. For certain goods, such as tobacco products and alcoholic beverages, duty exemption is granted within prescribed quantities.

Driver's permits. Driver's licenses issued in another EU member state are recognized in Romania if the license remains valid in the issuing country. Romania also recognizes national or international driver's permits issued by the relevant authorities in countries that have signed the International Convention of Traffic (Vienna 1968).

The current legislation does not require foreigners who have a valid Romanian residence permit to exchange their foreign driver's license for a Romanian one. However, it is recommended an individual obtain the Romanian driver's license if the foreign driver's license is not issued in an international language (English or French). An alternative is that a foreigner carry a legalized translation of the foreign driver's license when driving.

Russian Federation

Moscow GMT +3

Because of the rapidly changing economic and legislative environment in the Russian Federation, readers are advised to obtain updated information before making decisions. The tax law described in this chapter applies only to the Russian Federation. The foreign exchange rate established by the Russian Central Bank on 30 June 2021 is RUB72.3723 = USD1.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are taxed on worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxed on Russian-source income only. Russian-source income includes, but is not limited to, income derived from work or services performed in the Russian Federation, capital gains derived from the disposal of property in the Russian Federation, interest from deposits held in the Russian Federation, rent from property located in the Russian Federation, dividends paid on shares of companies in the Russian Federation, and income in the form of material benefit from certain low-interest loans and from the acquisition of securities or derivatives below fair market value (if Russian-source).

For tax purposes, individuals are considered resident if they are present in the country for 183 days or more in a period of 12 consecutive months. However, the Ministry of Finance and the Federal Tax Service take the position that an individual must spend at least 183 days in the Russian Federation in a calendar year to be considered tax resident for Russian tax purposes for the particular calendar year. This requirement is not stated in the Tax Code. For the purpose of determining residency, presence in the Russian Federation is not considered interrupted if an individual departs from the Russian Federation for periods of less than six months for medical treatment, education, or completion of employment or other duties related to work (that is, rendering services) at offshore hydrocarbon fields, which must be duly documented.

Currently, the 12-month rule is applied by Russian tax agents for tax withholding purposes.

The current position of the tax authorities is that the days of both arrival and departure count as Russian for purposes of the tax residency test.

Accordingly, nonresidents are individuals who do not meet the above test.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Employment income consists of compensation received in cash or in kind, including, but not limited to, salary, bonuses, expatriate allowances and taxes paid for the employee by the employer. Tax residents are entitled to certain types of tax deductions from income (see Deductions).

Self-employment and business income. The income of individuals engaged in self-employment activities is subject to income tax.

Controlled foreign companies. Russian tax residents are subject to certain reporting requirements with respect to participation in a foreign company or an establishment of a foreign unincorporated structure as well as controlled foreign company (CFC) notifications. A CFC's undistributed profit above the threshold may need to be included in the taxable income of the controlling person, subject to the additional analysis required. Certain types of CFCs may be exempt from tax in the Russian Federation.

Interest income. Interest income received at Russian and foreign banks is treated differently. Income received in the form of bank interest at a non-Russian bank is treated as a regular income.

New rules for the determination of the nontaxable limit for interest income at Russian banks came into force starting in the 2021 tax year. Under these new rules, the nontaxable threshold on all deposits that a taxpayer has at Russian banks is calculated as RUB1 million multiplied by the Central Bank's refinancing rate as of the first day of the tax period (that is, 1 January). The excess of the nontaxable limit is subject to tax at a rate of 13% for both Russian tax residents and nonresidents. The rules do not affect income received in the form of bank interest on deposits at a Russian bank with an interest rate of not more than 1% per year and escrow accounts at a Russian bank, because such income is fully nontaxable. The new rules do not affect income received in the form of bank interest at a non-Russian bank; it is still treated as a regular income and has no applicable nontaxable threshold.

Dividend income. Dividends (both Russian and non-Russian source) received by residents are subject to tax at a rate of 13% (15%; see Rates). Russian-source dividends received by nonresidents are subject to tax at a rate of 15%.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Taxation of employer stock options and other equity-based compensation is not directly addressed in the Tax Code. Therefore, general tax principles and Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) guidelines are normally applied in such cases for sourcing purposes (although the Russian Federation is not a member of the OECD). Historically, based on general tax principles and most common prevailing positions, an employee was required to recognize income equal to the excess of the fair market value of the stock over the exercise price at the time of exercise of an employer-provided stock option. However, a literal reading of the Tax Code and securities market regulations suggests that, effective from 1 January 2011, an equity award that at the time of grant is structured as an option contract may potentially also trigger taxation of the individuals at the time of receipt of the option. At the moment, uncertainty continues to exist as to the taxability of option grants. Under recent changes to the legislation, employer-provided stock options should not be taxed at the grant date with a condition that an option agreement (or other supporting documents) is in place and based on the employment relationship.

Capital gains. Capital gains are included in regular income. A separate capital gains tax does not exist in the Russian Federation. For additional details, see Property-related tax deductions.

Deductions. Deductions, which are available only to tax residents (the only exception is a property-related tax deduction on income from the sale of property which is also available for tax nonresidents), are categorized as standard tax deductions, social tax deductions, property-related tax deductions, professional tax deductions and investment tax deductions.

Standard tax deductions. Each resident taxpayer is allowed a standard deduction for dependent children of RUB1,400 per month per child for the first and second child and RUB3,000 per month for the third and each additional child. This deduction phases out in the month in which the taxpayer's year-to-date income taxable at a rate of 13% exceeds RUB350,000. In addition, a deduction of RUB3,000 per month is granted to certain disabled individuals, veterans and victims of natural disasters.

Social tax deductions. Social tax deductions include the following:
- Annual deductions for certain charitable contributions, up to 25% of income
- Education expenses for the taxpayer's children, up to RUB50,000 per child
- Education expenses for the taxpayer himself or herself
- Medical expenses for the taxpayer (the amount of the allowable deduction depends on the type of medical expense)
- Expenses related to the taxpayer's contributions to licensed Russian non-state pension funds
- Expenses related to the taxpayer's supplemental state pension insurance contributions

The aggregate deduction for medical, non-state pension fund, state pension insurance and educational expenses (except for the taxpayer's children's educational expenses and certain medical expenses related to expensive medical treatments, as designated by the government) may not exceed RUB120,000 per tax year.

Property-related tax deductions. Income derived from the sale of property owned by the taxpayer for five years (three years in certain cases) or more is exempt from tax, starting 1 January 2018 for both tax residents and tax nonresidents.

Property purchase expenses on the construction or acquisition of living premises in the Russian Federation (up to RUB2 million), increased by amounts of mortgage interest or certain other bank interest paid on a loan to fund such an acquisition or construction, are deductible. A property deduction in the amount of RUB2 million can be applied to several property items until the whole amount of deduction is used. The amount of deductible mortgage interest is limited to RUB3 million. If a residential property is owned by several individuals (so-called shared ownership), each individual can claim the property tax deduction in the amount of RUB2 million, but not exceeding the actual expenses of each individual. In case of spouses' mutual property, both spouses may claim the tax deduction in an amount not exceeding RUB2 million per individual.

The first RUB1 million of income from the disposal of immovable property that has been owned by the taxpayer for less than five years (three years) is fully deductible against the sale proceeds (alternatively, the taxpayer can choose to pay tax on the actual taxable gain, which equals gross proceeds less documented expenses).

The first RUB250,000 of income from the disposal of movable property (except securities) that has been owned by the taxpayer for less than three years is fully deductible against the sale proceeds (alternatively, the taxpayer can choose to pay tax on the actual taxable gain, which equals gross proceeds less documented expenses).

Deduction for property-purchase expenses, expenses related to pension insurance contributions to Russian non-state pension funds and professional tax deductions can be obtained through the payroll (that is, tax withholding ceases for a period until a deduction is fully taken).

Income derived from the sale of securities is subject to special rules.

Professional tax deductions. Individual entrepreneurs and other individuals performing work or services on a contractual basis may deduct associated business expenses. Property tax paid by these taxpayers is deductible if the property is directly used in carrying out entrepreneurial activities. Taxpayers who cannot document expenses incurred in connection with their entrepreneurial activities are allowed a standard professional tax deduction at a rate of 20% of total income received from entrepreneurial activities.

Investment tax deductions. The following are the three types of investment tax deductions:
- The amount of the capital gain from the sale or redemption of securities circulating on a Russian stock exchange that were owned more than three years and acquired after 1 January 2014 (certain limits on the amount of deduction apply)
- The amount of funds deposited into an individual investment account (special type of account opened by a Russian broker or fiduciary), capped at RUB400,000 per year, subject to certain terms and conditions
- The amount of income from transactions involving the use of an individual investment account

A taxpayer must choose between the second and third investment tax deductions above; they cannot be applied simultaneously.

Rates. Four flat tax rates of 13%, 15%, 30% and 35% apply to different baskets of income.

The following tax rates are applicable in the Russian Federation for tax residents:
- 13% for the income not exceeding RUB5 million per year
- 15% for the part of the income exceeding RUB5 million per year

A flat rate of 13% (15%) applies to all income for which another rate is not specified, including salary, dividends and other income earned by tax-resident individuals and earnings received by foreign individuals who qualify as Highly Qualified Specialists (HQSs) for immigration purposes (see Section J) for performance of work and services in this capacity. However, see the next paragraph.

In accordance with the current position of the Ministry of Finance, employment income of tax-nonresident HQSs is limited to base salary, vacation allowance, payments for the duration of business trips and bonuses (that is, remuneration received under Russian employment or civil-legal agreements from the employer sponsoring the HQS work permit). Because tax authorities currently tend to apply a 13% (15%) tax only to income directly related to remuneration in an HQS capacity, some benefits and allowances are treated by the tax authorities as taxable at 30%. Therefore, taxation of other types of income received by tax-nonresident HQSs or income received by tax-nonresident HQSs outside the Russian Federation; for example, work or services performed by an HQS in the Russian Federation at a 13% (15%) rate may be challenged by the authorities.

A flat rate of 15% applies to Russian-source dividend income received by individuals who are not tax residents.

A flat rate of 30% applies to all taxable income (other than dividend income) received by individuals who are not tax residents, except earnings of tax-nonresident HQSs (however, see above).

A flat rate of 35% applies to certain prizes and deemed income from certain low- or zero-interest loans.

Starting 1 January 2018, receipt of low- or zero-interest loans is considered to be income in the form of a material benefit that is taxable in the Russian Federation if a taxpayer receives such a loan from a company or an individual entrepreneur that is considered an affiliated person for the taxpayer or if the taxpayer has a labor relationship with this company or individual entrepreneur.

Relief for losses. Business losses of a self-employed person may not be carried forward to future years.

B. Other taxes

Net worth tax and estate and gift tax are not levied in the Russian Federation.

C. Social security

In 2021, the following rates of social contributions are established for all categories of payers (except those who are entitled to the beneficial social security regime).

Individual cumulative year-to-date income subject to social contributions RUB	Pension Fund %	Social Insurance Fund %	Medical Insurance Fund %	Total %
Up to 966,000	22	2.9*	5.1	30
From 966,000 up to 1,465,000	22	0	5.1	27.1
Over 1,465,000	10	0	5.1	15.1

* The rate is 1.8% for expatriate employees holding standard work permits.

Payments made with respect to expatriate employees who hold the immigration status of HQS (see Section J), are not subject to social contributions (except for workplace accident insurance). Payments with respect to expatriate employees holding standard work permits and temporarily staying in the Russian Federation are not subject to contributions to the Medical Insurance Fund and are subject to social contributions to the Social Insurance Fund at a 1.8% rate. After the first six months of accrual of these contributions, these expatriate employees are eligible for payment for the period of a sick leave.

Payments made with respect to other categories of expatriate employees who hold temporary or permanent resident permits without HQS status are subject to social contributions similar to Russian nationals. Existing totalization agreements with a few countries allow foreign employees working in the Russian Federation to be exempt from certain types of social contributions subject to the availability of a certificate of coverage.

Under the social security system, additional pension contributions must be paid by organizations that have employees eligible for early retirement (that is, employees working in unsafe and hazardous conditions). Based on the results of a procedure for the special evaluation of working conditions, certain job positions may be classified as work performed in unsafe and/or hazardous conditions. In this case, the employer must accrue and pay additional pension contributions due on employment income of these special categories of employees. Depending on the class of professional risk assigned to employees, the employers are required to pay additional pension contributions at a rate ranging from 0% to 8%.

The legislation also stipulates certain categories of organizations entitled to apply lower rates of social contributions. These are organizations conducting specific types of economic activities including, but not limited to, the following:
- Certain types of information technology companies
- Certain types of mass media companies
- Participants in the Skolkovo project
- Companies rendering engineering services

In addition to the above social contributions, workplace accident contributions are due on all payments to all employees (Russian nationals and foreigners), including HQSs. The contributions are without a cap. The rate is generally 0.2% for most employers that predominantly or only employ office workers.

Organizations must submit the following reporting on social contributions:
- “Electronic labor book” SZV-TD capturing major human resources events (such as hiring, termination and change of job position)
- Monthly pension fund report (SZV-M)
- Quarterly report on workplace accident contributions (Form 4-FSS)
- Quarterly report on social contributions
- Annual report on employees’ length of service (SZV-STAZH)
- Annual confirmation of the main type of economic activity with the Social Insurance Fund

According to the current requirements, the respective types of reporting should be submitted to the authorities electronically if the number of individuals with respect to whom social contributions were paid (that is, insured persons) exceeds 25.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in the Russian Federation is the calendar year.

Entrepreneurs, attorneys, notaries and private detectives must file both preliminary and final tax returns. These categories of taxpayers must submit a preliminary tax return within one month and five days after they first receive income from their activities, and no later than 30 April in each subsequent year in which they plan to conduct professional activities in the Russian Federation. Preliminary tax equals 100% of the tax payable on the estimated income. Payment for January through June is due by 15 July; for July through September, by 15 October; and for October through December, by 15 January of the following year.

For most taxpayers, tax is payable through withholding at source. Tax agents for the purpose of Russian personal income tax are Russian legal entities and permanent establishments of foreign legal entities, from which, or as a result of relations with which, individuals receive income. Tax agents are required to withhold income tax at source on payments in accordance with the individual's residency status (or some special status) and remit the tax withheld to the Russian tax authorities on a monthly basis.

Tax agents submit reporting on the accrued and withheld personal income tax.

Individuals who receive income subject to tax in the Russian Federation but not subject to full tax withholding must file a tax return. If underwithholding of employment income from the Russian company is the only source that triggers Russian tax payment obligations, a tax return is not needed (if the employer notifies the tax authorities of this debt), and the taxpayer should be able to pay the outstanding tax due by 1 December of the year following the reporting year based on the notification provided by the tax authorities.

An individual may also file a tax return on a voluntary basis even if a filing is not required. A tax filing may be required to claim certain tax deductions that cannot be granted through the payroll, to claim a refund of overwithheld tax as a result of a change of a tax-resident status or to obtain a Russian tax clearance certificate.

The annual tax return is due on 30 April of the year following the reporting calendar year, and no extensions are available; the corresponding tax self-assessed in the declaration must be paid by 15 July of such year.

There are special provisions for filing departure tax returns by foreign citizens. A departure tax return must be filed at least one month prior to the actual departure of a foreign individual from the Russian Federation, and tax due must be paid within 15 days of the filing of the departure tax return. Previously, departure tax returns were often filed as soon as the final compensation information became available, and the late submission of a departure tax return did not result in late filing fines provided the tax was paid prior to the filing of the departure tax return. However, the tax authorities have started increasing their control over demobilizing expatriates. Therefore, submission of a departure tax return and payment of tax due within the set time frames or at least closer to the respective timing is advisable.

All tax payments must be made in rubles from the individual taxpayer's personal bank account or in cash via Sberbank. Starting from the 2017 calendar year, the tax may be paid by third parties. If the tax due is to be settled from a foreign bank account, it is necessary to confirm with each particular bank in advance that the bank is able to process the payments in rubles and that it has a correspondent relationship with the Russian bank system; otherwise, registration of the payment to the tax office may be delayed.

A penalty of 5% of the tax due for each full or partial month of delay is imposed for the late submission of a tax declaration after the deadline. The penalty is capped at 30% of the tax due and cannot be less than RUB1,000. The late payment of tax is subject to interest at a rate of 1/300 of the annual refinancing rate of the Central Bank of the Russian Federation for each day of late payment.

Underpayment or incomplete payment of tax results in the imposition of a 20% fine (40% for a deliberate violation) on the respective amount of tax due. Criminal sanctions can also be applied in rare cases.

Under immigration rules, a foreign citizen is not allowed to enter the Russian Federation if he or she evaded a tax payment or has an administrative fine during a previous stay in the Russian Federation. The entry ban lasts until the foreign citizen fully pays the respective tax or administrative fine.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Taxpayers may be either exempt from the payment of Russian tax or foreign tax paid may be credited against Russian tax payable, but the foreign tax credit cannot exceed the Russian tax payable on the same income. Under new rules in force from 2016, to apply for an exemption, a taxpayer must present a certificate of residency from a country with which the Russian Federation has a double tax treaty (the Russian tax authorities may request additional supporting documents). The foreign tax credit may be claimed in a tax return within three years of the receipt of income. The taxpayer must enclose documents supporting the amount of income received and tax paid with the tax return.

Depending on the particular situation, a taxpayer must submit one of the following:
- A certificate issued by the tax authorities of the treaty state indicating the type and amount of income, calendar year of receipt, amount of tax paid and date of payment
- A copy of the tax return submitted in the foreign state and a copy of the tax payment confirmation
- A document issued by a tax withholding agent containing information on income per month and tax withheld

All supporting documents must be submitted to the Russian tax authorities together with a notarized Russian translation.

The Russian Federation has entered into tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

(b) On 7 September 2017, the Russian Federation and Japan signed a double tax treaty, which replaces the previous treaty and applies to tax periods beginning in 2019.

(c) The double tax treaty is denounced and no longer valid starting from 1 January 2022.

F. Visas

Visas are issued by diplomatic missions or consulates of the Russian Federation, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs or the Ministry of Internal Affairs (directly or by proxy) on the basis of any of the following:

- An invitation from an organization registered with bodies of the Ministry of Internal Affairs
- A decision adopted by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs or a consulate or diplomatic mission
- A decision of a territorial body of the Ministry of Internal Affairs to issue a temporary residence permit

Visas can be single-entry, double-entry or multiple-entry.

Foreign citizens from most Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) countries and those who are permanent or temporary residents of the Russian Federation do not need entry visas; they must present identification documents and/or their permanent or temporary residence permit on entry.

The following categories of visas are available in the Russian Federation:
• Diplomatic • Service
• Ordinary • Transit
• Temporary residence

Ordinary visas are divided into private, business, tourist, study, work, humanitarian, and entry visas for persons seeking asylum.

Ordinary business visas support business trips to the Russian Federation. In general, they may be single-entry or double-entry for up to three months, or multiple-entry for up to one year. A foreign citizen with a multiple-entry business visa may not be present in the Russian Federation for more than 90 days within each 180-day period. Ordinary work visas are issued to those who perform labor activities in the Russian Federation. Initially, ordinary work visas are issued for up to three months and are valid for a single entry (except for HQSs). However, on the individual entering the Russian Federation, the visa may be extended by bodies of the Ministry of Internal Affairs or the foreign citizen's place of stay through the issuance of a multiple-entry visa for the term of the labor agreement, limited to one year for the initial visa and for each subsequent multi-entry visa.

For information on the special work permit and work visa regime for HQSs, see Section J.

G. Work permits

Work permits, patents and residence permits are discussed in Sections G, H and I, respectively.

Effective from 1 January 2015, foreign nationals who apply for a work permit, patent, temporary residence permit or permanent residence permit are required to present a certificate confirming their knowledge of Russian language, history and basics of Russian law. This requirement does not apply to the processing of work permits and permanent residence permits for HQSs.

In general, any foreign citizen who works in the Russian Federation must hold a work permit or patent, and the employer or purchaser of work (services) of such foreign citizen must hold a valid employer permit to engage such an individual (when applicable).

The Russian Federation has entered into treaties simplifying the Russian work permit application process with France and Korea (South).

It is never necessary to obtain a work permit or patent, and permit for the engagement and use of foreign workers with respect to certain workers, including the following:
• Citizens of Armenia, Belarus, Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan
• Temporary residents of the Russian Federation
• Permanent residents of the Russian Federation

- Refugees and individuals with temporary shelter in the Russian Federation
- Employees of diplomatic missions, consulates and international organizations (with respect to their work for such organizations)
- Employees of foreign legal entities engaged in the installation, installation supervision, servicing, warranty servicing and after-guarantee repairs of installed equipment manufactured or supplied by those foreign legal entities
- Journalists accredited in the Russian Federation
- Students studying at vocational or higher educational institutions in the Russian Federation according to the state-accredited basic professional education program (starting from 4 August 2020)

The procedure applicable for individuals who are not HQSs and who require a visa to enter the Russian Federation is discussed below.

If no exemption applies, the company must submit a forecast to the local Interdepartmental Committee setting out the company's expectations for the number and profile of foreign employees needed in the following year. If the company fails to complete this submission or properly include in it a foreign employee for whom it will apply for a work permit, a refusal to issue a work permit may result. The deadline for submitting a forecast application varies by region.

A list of positions that do not require a forecast (quota) approved upfront also exists.

The following are the steps for obtaining employer and employee permits with respect to citizens of countries requiring visas to enter the Russian Federation:
- Applying for a conclusion on the expediency of the engagement of foreign labor from the Federal Employment Service
- Applying for a permit for the engagement of foreign labor from the Ministry of Internal Affairs
- Applying for a work permit for a foreign employee from the Ministry of Internal Affairs

The following essential documents are required for an application for a non-HQS work permit:
- Voluntary medical insurance policy
- Medical certificates on the absence of drug abuse and infectious diseases, including COVID-19
- Certificate of Russian language proficiency and knowledge of the history and basics of Russian law
- Apostilled or legalized diploma with translation into Russian and further notarization

Completion of the above steps can take four or more months. As a result, it is critical to begin the application process as early as possible.

H. Patents

Effective from 1 January 2015, foreign nationals who do not require a visa to enter the Russian Federation (CIS countries) for work purposes must apply for a patent instead of a work permit to perform a labor activity for organizations or individuals. The quota system is abolished for these foreign nationals who come from non-visa countries.

Under the patent system, a foreign national must make fixed advance tax payments to maintain the validity of the patent. The monthly amount of such tax payments varies by region.

The amount of such payments is subject to an adjustment for the deflator coefficient set for the corresponding calendar year. Failure to make advance payments leads to an annulment of the patent.

A patent is issued to a foreign national for the duration of one month with the possibility of further renewal for a period of up to 12 months, provided that a signed employment or civil-legal contract exists.

The following essential documents are required for an application for a patent:
- A voluntary medical insurance policy
- Medical certificates on the absence of drug abuse and infectious diseases, including COVID-19
- Certificate of Russian language proficiency, and knowledge of the history and basics of Russian law

I. Residence permits

Foreign citizens in the Russian Federation may have one of the following three statuses:
- Persons temporarily located in the Russian Federation
- Temporary residents (those who hold temporary residence permits)
- Permanent residents (those who hold permanent residence permits)

The first status, which is the default status if one does not apply for and obtain a residence permit, is by far the most common status of expatriates working in the Russian Federation.

Temporary residence permits are issued within quotas established by the government on an annual basis and are valid for three years.

A permanent residence permit may be issued to a foreign individual on the basis of a valid temporary residence permit no later than six months before the expiration of the temporary residence permit. A permanent residence permit may be issued to an HQS (see Section J) based on an HQS work permit only (it is not necessary to first apply for a temporary residence permit). A permanent residence permit is valid for an indefinite period except for the residence permit for an HQS, which validity is limited to the HQS work permit expiration date.

J. Special regime for Highly Qualified Specialists

A beneficial immigration regime is available for highly qualified foreign nationals working in the Russian Federation who are employed by Russian companies or branches and representative offices of foreign companies in the Russian Federation. These individuals are referred to as Highly Qualified Specialists (HQSs). For this purpose, an HQS is a person who receives earnings not less than RUB167,000 per month or not less than RUB501,000 per quarter for work performed in the Russian Federation (with a minor exemption applicable for limited categories of employers; that is, a decreased amount of the monthly salary for HQSs employed by companies operating in particular fields). A simplified quota-free, one-step application procedure for work permits and visas is established for HQSs. HQSs may apply for work permits and work visas that are valid for three years with the opportunity to extend their validity for subsequent three-year periods, as compared to one-year work permits and visas received by other foreigners. Employers engaging HQSs are required to notify the immigration authorities on a quarterly basis with respect to the fulfillment of obligations regarding the payment of the required level of earnings (remuneration) to HQSs. The notification must be sent no later than the last working day of the month following the reporting quarter.

The following are some of the advantages of the simplified procedure for obtaining a work visa and work permit for an HQS:
- The employer does not need to receive a conclusion on the expediency of engaging foreign labor.
- A corporate permit is not required to employ an HQS.
- A work permit and work visa for an HQS are issued within 14 workdays after the submission of the application documents.
- A work permit for an HQS can be valid for multiple regions of the Russian Federation. Under ordinary procedures, a separate work permit must be obtained in each region in which the individual would work.
- Medical certificates or exams, Russian language proficiency, and knowledge of the history and basics of Russian law are not required for an HQS work permit application.

HQSs and their accompanying family members (if any) must have voluntary medical insurance valid in the Russian Federation for the duration of their HQS status, which can be arranged either by HQSs or their employers.

Earnings of HQSs for their work in such capacity are subject to tax at a rate of 13% (for further details, see Rates in Section A).

K. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Non-working family members of foreign citizens may receive accompanying family member visas, but applications must be filed separately. The providing of apostilled or legalized birth certificates for children and apostilled or legalized marriage certificates is required for visa applications. Family members must have separate work permits if they plan to work in the Russian Federation.

Driver's permits. In general, foreign nationals can drive legally in the Russian Federation with their home country driver's licenses (if the home country is a member of the Vienna Convention on Road Traffic) or international driver's licenses, accompanied by a notarized translation.

The Russian Federation does not have driver's license reciprocity with any other country.

Starting 1 June 2017, a foreign national who expects to work in the Russian Federation as a professional driver must obtain a local Russian driver's license.

To obtain a local Russian driver's license, an applicant must take a written exam, a medical exam and a practical driving test.

L. Other matters

Enrollment. The enrollment procedure involves the responsible hosting party notifying the respective territorial office of the Ministry of Internal Affairs within seven business days of a foreign citizen's arrival at the place of his or her stay in the Russian Federation, or arrival at a new location in the Russian Federation where this individual will stay for seven days or more.

The enrollment procedure for citizens of Armenia, Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan should be performed within 30 days after entering the Russian Federation. The enrollment procedure for citizens of Ukraine, except for those who work in the Russian Federation, and for citizens of Belarus should be performed within 90 days after entering the Russian Federation.

HQSs and their accompanying family members may enter and stay in the Russian Federation without having to enroll within 90 calendar days after entering the Russian Federation. In addition, HQSs are not required to enroll if they travel to other regions or places of stay of the Russian Federation different from the one in which they are enrolled, provided that the period of stay in this other place does not exceed 30 calendar days. After the 30-day period expires, HQSs must enroll within 7 business days.

The responsible hosting party is generally the following:
- A hotel if the foreign citizen is staying at a hotel
- A landlord of an apartment in which the foreign citizen is staying
- An employer if the foreign employee lives at the company's premises
- A company (employer) in case the accommodation provided to a foreign citizen for living in the Russian Federation is owned or rented by the company
- Foreign citizens who own an accommodation in the Russian Federation

The de-enrollment procedure is completed at the Russian border when a foreign citizen leaves the Russian Federation, when a foreign citizen is enrolled at a new place of stay in the Russian Federation or by the filing of a special application by the hosting party.

Submission of foreign labor needs forecasts (quota applications). Under the regulations, companies must report annually before a specified date the number of foreign employees (including both actual employees and civil-legal contractors, but excluding HQSs and CIS citizens) they anticipate needing to engage in the following calendar year, including the precise positions and citizenships of these anticipated foreign employees. This effectively constitutes an application for a quota. A quota must first be obtained before it is possible to submit a work permit application for any foreigner who is not one of the following:

- An HQS
- A CIS citizen
- An individual who will occupy one of a limited number of specific quota-free job positions

The deadline for filing the quota application varies by region.

Notifications. Companies are required to notify the immigration authorities of the conclusion or termination of an employment or civil-legal agreement with a foreign national within three business days after the date of the event.

Sanctions for noncompliance with the immigration legislation. Russian legislation contains severe sanctions for companies, their executives and foreign citizens for noncompliance with immigration legislation. The upper end of financial sanctions applied to a company can reach RUB1 million (per foreign individual per violation). The worst-case scenario can include deportation of the individual from the country for up to 10 years and/or suspension of the employer's business activities for up to 90 days and/or a company being banned from engaging any foreigners under the HQS regime for up to two years. Financial sanctions and even deportations have been increasingly applied. In addition, a foreign citizen may not be allowed to enter the Russian Federation if he or she was held liable for an administrative offense in the Russian Federation two or more times within three years or has unsettled tax in the Russian Federation. The entry ban lasts for three years from the date when the last decision on the imposition of administrative sanctions entered into force.

Punishment measures for violations incurred in the cities of federal significance (Moscow, St. Petersburg, Moscow Region and Leningrad Region) are even tougher.

Fingerprinting, photographs and medical examinations. Starting 1 January 2021, fingerprinting, photographs and medical examinations are mandatory for the following persons:

- Foreign nationals entering the Russian Federation for purposes of employment, including HQSs and citizens of Eurasian Economic Union member countries (with the exception of Belarus, to which these rules do not apply): within 30 calendar days after their arrival
- Foreign nationals entering the Russian Federation for purposes other than employment for a period of over 90 days, including family members accompanying HQSs and other persons employed in the Russian Federation: within 90 calendar days after their arrival

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Employment income includes the following:
- Wages and salaries
- Vacation pay
- Sick pay and medical allowance
- Payments instead of vacation
- Directors' fees
- Commissions
- Bonuses
- Gratuities
- Entertainment or other allowances received for employment

Employment income also includes all benefits in kind, including employer-provided cars, housing, loans at interest rates lower than the central bank lending rates and benefits provided to employees' relatives by employers.

Self-employment and business income. Business income includes the following:
- Trading profits
- Gains derived from disposals of business assets, shares of profits or profits from partnership interests
- Gains on assets held in foreign currency
- Professional, technical, management and other fees
- Investment income in the form of capital gains, financial interest, dividends, royalties or rent and other income that has not been taxed as business income

Investment and other income. A final withholding tax at a rate of 15% is imposed on the following:
- Dividends, except income distributed to the holders of shares or units in collective-investment schemes.
- Financial interest except for the following:
  - — Interest on deposits in financial institutions for at least a one-year period

— Interest on loans granted by a foreign development financial institution exempted from income tax under the applicable law in the country of origin
— Interest paid by banks operating in Rwanda to banks or other foreign financial institutions
• Royalties
• Technical, management and other service fees except for transport services' fees
• Payments made to craftspersons, artists and players in sports, culture and leisure activities
• Lottery and gambling proceeds
• Payments for goods sold in Rwanda

Individual property owners who earn rental income are subject to rental income tax. The tax is payable to local or urban decentralized authorities at the following rates.

Rental income earned by an individual
Exceeding RWF	Not exceeding RWF	Rate %
0	180,000	0
180,000	1,000,000	20
1,000,000	—	30

Sitting allowances. Sitting allowances are subject to a final withholding tax of 30%.

Capital gains. Sales of business assets and proceeds from asset sharing are taxed at 30%. Capital gains on the sale or transfer of shares are taxed at a rate of 5%.

Deductions. Business expenses are deducted from taxable income if all of the following conditions are satisfied:
• They are incurred for the direct purpose of the business and they are directly chargeable to income.
• They correspond to a real expense and can be substantiated with proper purchase receipts.
• They lead to a decrease in the net assets of the business.
• They are used for activities related to the tax period in which they are incurred.

Fixed assets qualify for an annual capital allowance deduction. The deduction may be calculated using the straight-line or declining-balance methods at rates ranging from 5% to 50%, depending on the type of asset.

Rates. The following table sets forth the tax rates, which are applicable to employment income and taxable business income earned by individuals and unincorporated entities.

Annual taxable income
Exceeding RWF	Not exceeding RWF	Rate %
0	360,000	0
360,000	1,200,000	20
1,200,000	—	30

Small enterprises pay a lump sum tax of 3% of annual turnover. However, they can opt for the normal tax regime.

Micro enterprises pay a flat amount of tax based on the annual turnover as shown in the following table.

Annual turnover
From RWF	To RWF	Flat tax amount RWF
2,000,000	4,000,000	60,000
4,000,001	7,000,000	120,000
7,000,001	10,000,000	210,000
10,000,001	12,000,000	300,000

Relief for losses. Losses may be carried forward for five years to offset future profits of businesses. However, a request may be made to the tax authority to carry forward tax losses for more than five years.

B. Other taxes

Estate and gift taxes. Estate and gift taxes are not levied in Rwanda.

Net worth tax. Net worth tax is not levied in Rwanda.

C. Social security

The Rwanda Social Security Board, which is Rwanda's statutory social security fund, provides employees with retirement benefits. Employees contribute 3% of their total monthly salaries excluding transport allowance, and employers contribute an amount equal to 5% of each employee's total salary excluding the transport allowance. In addition, employers and employees each contribute 0.3% of the total salary, excluding the transport allowance, for the maternity leave benefit, and employees contribute 0.5% of the net salary for Community-Based Health Insurance.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Tax is withheld from employees under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system. However, if the employer is unable to withhold tax from an employee, the obligation of declaring and paying the tax reverts to the employee.

The tax year runs from 1 January to 31 December. Taxpayers with accounting periods coinciding with the tax year must file three provisional returns and pay tax equal to 25% of the tax paid in the preceding year by 30 June, 30 September and 31 December. However, to help companies recover from the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic on the economy, the provisional taxes will be based on the transactions of the current year. Taxpayers with other accounting periods must file provisional returns within three months after the beginning of the accounting period that ends within the tax year.

Taxpayers must file their final tax returns within three months after the end of their accounting year. An assessment is made based on the return, with a credit granted for taxes withheld at source and for provisional taxes paid.

Nonresidents who trade in Rwanda must register their operations or appoint an agent for tax purposes and are subject to the filing and payment requirements described above.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

In accordance with tax treaties, residents may credit foreign taxes paid on foreign-source income against Rwandan tax payable in accordance with tax treaties. Rwanda has entered into double tax treaties with Barbados, Belgium, Jersey, Mauritius, Morocco, Qatar, Singapore and South Africa.

F. Temporary permits

All foreign visitors must obtain valid entry visas to enter Rwanda, with the exception of nationals of member countries of the East African Community (EAC) and nationals of a few other countries.

Visitors' passes are issued to citizens of EAC member countries at the border post. They are valid for 72 hours and renewable once.

Students may obtain long-term permits called students' passes, which are valid for the duration of their courses of study.

Transit passes are normally valid for 72 hours. They may be extended once if necessary.

When applying for passes, applicants must have valid passports or equivalent travel documents. No quota system exists for immigration purposes in Rwanda.

G. Work permits and self-employment

Foreign nationals must obtain a work permit before undertaking employment in Rwanda. The application for a work permit is made to the Director General of Immigration and Emigration and consists of:

- An application letter from the employer
- Notified diploma or degree
- Original police clearance from the country in which the applicant has lived for the last six months
- The applicant's curriculum vitae (CV) and a copy of his or her passport
- Completed application form
- One color passport-size photo with white background
- An employment contract signed by the applicant and employer
- Payment of RWF100,000 (approximately USD113) to the government treasury

H. Residence permits

A work permit has a dual purpose in Rwanda. It serves as a work permit and resident permit, allowing an expatriate to live and work in Rwanda during his or her assignment.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Dependents of expatriates with work permits may obtain long-term permits called dependents' passes. The duration of these passes depends on the duration of the expatriate's work permit.

Working spouses of work permit holders do not automatically receive the same type of pass or permit as the principal permit holder. Applications must be filed independently.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally in Rwanda with their home country driver's licenses for three months.

To obtain a local driver's license in Rwanda, an applicant must obtain a provisional driver's license after paying a general fee. This enables the applicant to go to a driving school and to take a driving test, after which he or she is issued a driving permit. No written or physical examination is required.

In the 2019 Budgetary Proposals, the Minister of Finance proposed a number of changes to the St. Lucia personal tax regime, including the revision of personal tax rates, the personal allowance and available deductions. The proposals were expected to take effect on 1 January 2020, but as of the time of writing, they had not yet been enacted. Because of these proposed changes, readers should obtain updated information before engaging in transactions.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. An individual resident in St. Lucia for tax purposes is subject to income tax on worldwide income, regardless of whether the income is remitted to St. Lucia. An individual who is resident but not ordinarily resident is subject to tax on income received in St. Lucia. Nonresidents are taxed on income derived from sources in St. Lucia only.

Individuals are considered resident if they are physically present in St. Lucia for at least 183 days in a calendar year or if they are ordinarily resident in St. Lucia in a calendar year. Individuals are deemed to be ordinarily resident if they have a permanent home in St. Lucia and if they are physically present in St. Lucia for some time period in the income year, unless an absence is reasonable to the satisfaction of the Comptroller of Inland Revenue. This time period is determined at the discretion of the Minister of Home Affairs on application for ordinarily resident status. An individual may also be deemed to be resident in St. Lucia if he or she is physically present in St. Lucia for a period of at least 183 consecutive days across two calendar years.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable remuneration from employment includes salaries, wages, commissions, bonuses, directors' fees, gratuities, pensions and leave pay. In general, employees may be taxed on any benefit that is not conferred wholly, exclusively and necessarily for the performance of duties relating to their employment. For example, the total value of a rent-free residence is included in the employee's taxable income. Amounts paid as a housing allowance are also fully taxable. A company car provided to an employee is subject to tax on 15% of the cost of the car when it is purchased locally or imported. If the vehicle is leased, the employee is subject to tax on 40% of the annual cost of leasing.

Educational allowances provided by employers to their employees' children are fully taxable for income tax and social security purposes.

Self-employment income. Taxable profits from self-employment generally consist of business profits, as disclosed in the business operation's financial statements, subject to various tax adjustments. Income tax is imposed on net business income.

Expenses incurred wholly and exclusively by the employees in the performance of the duties of their employment may be available for deduction, but only to the extent that these expenses are not reimbursed by the employer.

Investment income. A resident's investment income, other than dividends, is aggregated with other income and taxed at the rates set forth in Rates.

Dividends and interest on a deposit in any bank in St. Lucia are not subject to tax in St. Lucia. Other types of interest received by resident individuals are aggregated with all other taxable income and taxed accordingly.

All royalties received are aggregated with other income and subject to tax at the rates set forth in Rates.

A final withholding tax at a rate of 25% is imposed on domestic royalties, commissions, premiums and management fees paid to nonresidents. Domestic interest paid to nonresidents is subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 15%.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Employees are taxed on income arising on the purchase of shares acquired under a stock option plan. The benefit is taxed in the same manner and at the same rates as other employment income. No distinction is made between qualified and non-qualified stock option plans.

Capital gains. Capital gains are not subject to tax, and capital losses are not deductible.

Deductions

Personal deductions and allowances. For 2021, residents are entitled to the deductions and allowances listed in the following table.

Type	Maximum deductible amount
Basic allowance	XCD18,000 (XCD18,400 if the person does not have medical insurance)

Registered retirement contributions by an individual	Lower of 1/10 of assessable income and XCD8,000
Premiums paid by an individual to a local life insurance company for a policy on the life of the individual and/or his or her spouse and children	Lower of 1/10 of assessable income and XCD8,000

(b) This deduction is allowed with respect to 50% of the premiums paid.
(c) A deduction is allowed based on the value of the shares, up to a maximum of XCD5,000.
(d) This deduction is allowed with respect to an owner-occupied dwelling house only.
(e) This deduction is allowed with respect to deeds of covenant to religious, charitable, medical, sporting or educational institutions or bodies.

Nonresidents may not claim the above deductions and allowances.

Business deductions. Any expenses incurred wholly and exclusively for the purpose of producing taxable business income are deductible.

Rates. The following tax rates apply to taxable income for 2020.

Taxable income XCD	Tax rate %	Tax due XCD	Cumulative tax due XCD
First 10,000	10	1,000	1,000
Next 10,000	15	1,500	2,500
Next 10,000	20	2,000	4,500
Above 30,000	30	—	—

Nonresidents are taxed at the same rates as residents except for interest, royalties and management fees, which are subject to withholding taxes (see Investment income).

Relief for losses. Business losses may be carried forward six years and offset against income arising in those years. The offset is restricted to 50% of chargeable income. Losses may not be carried back.

B. Other taxes

Stamp duty. Stamp duty is levied on all transfers of real estate, personal property and shares, except for shares traded on the St. Lucia securities exchange.

For real estate transfers by citizens of St. Lucia or a local company, the following are the stamp duty rates:
- 2% of the value of the property is payable by the purchaser.
- 2.5% of the value of the property is payable by the vendor if the value is from XCD50,000 to XCD75,000.
- 3.5% is payable by the vendor on property valued from XCD75,001 to XCD150,000.
- 5% is payable by the vendor on property valued over XCD150,000.

For real estate transfers by non-citizens or foreign companies, the following are the stamp duty rates:
- 10% of the value of the property is payable by the foreign vendor.
- 2% of the value of the property is payable by the purchaser.

The transfer of personal property is subject to stamp duty of 2% of the value of the property. The transfer of shares is subject to stamp duty amounting to the greater of the following:
- XCD10
- 0.5% of the total net assets of the company

If more than 75% of the assets of the company comprises immovable property, stamp duty is applied at the rates outlined above regarding the transfer of real estate.

Estate and gift tax. St. Lucia does not levy estate and gift tax.

C. Social security

Contributions. Contributions to the national insurance scheme must be made at the following rates on maximum monthly insurable earnings of XCD5,000:
- Employees: 5%
- Employers: 5%
- Self-employed persons: 10% (contributions by self-employed persons are based on an amount of earnings agreed with the National Insurance Corporation, up to the maximum insurable earnings of XCD5,000)

Totalization agreements. St. Lucia has entered into social security totalization agreements with Canada and the Caribbean Community and Common Market (CARICOM) to provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Resident and nonresident individual taxpayers must file income tax returns by 31 March following the income year, which ends on 31 December. Self-employed persons must file returns, regardless of the amount of their taxable income.

Tax on employees normally is collected through the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system.

Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Double tax relief is provided for foreign taxes paid to British Commonwealth countries.

St. Lucia has entered into a tax treaty with the other CARICOM countries.

F. Temporary visas

In general, visas are not required to enter St. Lucia, except for visitors from certain countries, including India and African countries. Visitor visas, which are also called temporary visas and extensions of stay, are issued to individuals who want to extend their stays in St. Lucia or to cover the waiting period while another type of visa is being processed. Visitor visas are also issued to spouses of work permit holders.

G. Work permits and self-employment

Foreign nationals employed by companies in St. Lucia must obtain work permits. Work permits allow individuals to reside and work in St. Lucia. No quota system exists for issuing work permits; each application is evaluated on its own merit. To approve a work permit application, the government must be satisfied that no suitable St. Lucian can fill the vacancy.

Work permits are non-transferable. If a work permit holder leaves the employer, the work permit is canceled. The employer should inform the Ministry of Labour Relations that the employee has left the company.

Applicants may not work while their work permit applications are being processed.

Work permit holders should renew their work permits at least two months before expiration. A person who has obtained a residence permit is still required to apply for a work permit.

H. Residence permits

Individuals can apply for permanent residence after a period of five years of continuous residence in St. Lucia. This period may be significantly reduced in certain circumstances, such as when retirees purchase property and take up residence.

The advantage of having this status is that the individual's passport is stamped with the permanent residence stamp, which obviates the application for residence permits every three months.

This status entitles the permanent resident to work in St. Lucia; a work permit is not required.

No quota system exists for issuing residence permits; each application is evaluated on its own merit.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Spouses and dependents (excluding children) of working expatriates must obtain their own work permits to be employed in St. Lucia. Children of working expatriates can be placed under a parent's work permit. Spouses or dependent children who do not intend to work are allowed to reside in St. Lucia after they are listed on the work permit of the expatriate.

Marital property regime. St. Lucia has a community property regime.

Forced heirship. The succession laws of St. Lucia provide that a surviving spouse is entitled to one-third of the estate of the deceased spouse, unless the surviving spouse elects not to claim this right. Parents are not required to leave any part of their estate to their children unless the children are minors (under 18 years of age); in such case, sufficient provisions must be made for the maintenance of the children.

Driver's permits. Holders of work permits who possess valid driver's licenses in their home countries are excused from taking the written examination and driving test.

Temporary driver's permits are also available to visitors of St. Lucia. These permits are generally valid for a period of three months.

São Tomé and Príncipe

ey.com/globaltaxguides

Please direct all tax inquiries regarding São Tomé and Príncipe to Luís Marques (office telephone: +351 217-912-214; email: luis.marques@pt.ey.com) and Joana Ribeiro (office telephone: +244 227-280-461 or +351 217-912-000; email: joana.ribeiro@pt.ey.com) of the Angola/Portugal office.

The exchange rate between the São Tomé and Príncipe dobra and the US dollar used in this chapter is STD21.09 = USD1.

A. Income tax

Who is liable

Territoriality. In general, resident individuals are subject to Personal Income Tax (PIT) on their worldwide income. Nonresident individuals are subject to PIT on income received in São Tomé and Príncipe (STP).

Definition of resident. An individual qualifies as resident for PIT purposes if any of the following conditions is met:
- The individual stays in STP for more than 180 days during a calendar year, with or without interruptions.
- As of 31 December, the individual has a local residence available, and it may be presumed that it is his or her intention to keep and occupy such residence as a permanent residence.
- The core of the business or professional activities and/or economic interests of the individual is in STP.
- The individual is a member of a diplomatic or consular mission of STP abroad.
- As at 31 December, the individual is a crew member of a vessel or aircraft operated by an entity with its residence, legal seat or place of effective management in STP.

Income subject to tax. In accordance with the PIT Code, individuals' income is divided into the following four categories:
- Dependent income and pensions (Category A)
- Business or professional income (Category B)
- Investment income (Category C)
- Capital gains (Category D)

These income categories are discussed below.

Dependent income and pensions (Category A). PIT is imposed on the earned income of employed individuals, in cash or in kind, including, among others, the following:
- Wages
- Salaries
- Directors' fees
- Severance payments
- Fees
- Gratuities
- Allowances
- Travel
- Housing

- Insurance
- Taxes paid on behalf of the employee (employer cost)
- Bonuses
- Other premiums

In general, pensions are also subject to PIT.

The following items are expressly exempt from PIT:
- Contributions made by an employer to a social security scheme to guarantee retirement and disability benefits
- Pensions, up to an annual amount of STD24 million (approximately USD1,090.88)
- Benefits deriving from the use of social and leisure facilities provided by the employer
- Scholarships provided by the employer, under certain conditions
- Training courses in STP, under certain conditions
- Severance payments, up to the legal limits established in the Labor Law

The following items may be deducted in the computation of the taxable income in Section A:
- Social security contributions
- Union contributions
- Compensation paid by the employee to the employer for contract termination, under certain conditions
- Fifty percent of income derived from pensions, under certain conditions

Business or professional income (Category B). For PIT purposes, business or professional activities are activities that imply the use of human and material resources, with the purpose of producing or distributing goods and services.

All income or benefits paid or offered for disposal of the beneficiary, whatever its name or nature, that result from business or professional activities are included in the taxation of Category B, including the following:
- Income or benefits resulting from the exercise of commercial, industrial, agricultural, forestry or livestock activities
- Income or benefits earned from the rendering of services, including those with a scientific or technical nature, regardless of whether the services are related to an activity mentioned in the first bullet
- Income or benefits from intellectual and industrial property or from the provision of information concerning experience acquired in industrial, commercial or scientific activities, if earned by its original owner
- Income or benefits earned from artistic, sporting and or cultural activities

The following types of income, among others, are also included in Category B:
- Capital and real estate income attributable to business and professional activities
- Capital gains arising from business and professional activities, as defined under the Corporate Income Tax (CIT) Code, including those resulting from the transfer of assets from a company to a natural person

Income obtained exclusively from an agricultural activity benefits from a 50% exemption, after the deduction of any losses.

In general, the taxable income of Category B is computed in accordance with the rules set forth in the CIT Code for Group 1 and Group 2.

Group 1 includes all the taxpayers with a permanent residence in STP and with turnover in the preceding year of higher than STD500,000 (approximately USD23,708). Regardless of total turnover, all public entities, joint-stock companies and all non-resident companies with a permanent establishment in STP are included in Group 1.

Group 2 includes all the taxpayers not included in Group 1 as well as taxpayers providing accidental or temporary activities (isolated business or professional acts with no evidence of a repeated and permanent business or professional activity).

The following expenses, among others, are not deductible (even if accounted for as costs):
- Travel and accommodation expenses, to the extent that they exceed 10% of gross income
- Housing expenses (rent, depreciation, water, energy and other expenses), if allocated to the provision of services, to the extent that they exceed 10% of the gross income

Investment income (Category C). Investment income in Category C includes the following:
- Dividends
- Interest
- Royalties not obtained by an individual other than the owner of the intellectual and industrial property

In general, investment income is taxable income, regardless of its name or nature, arising directly or indirectly from assets or rights, owned by an individual but not allocated to business or professional activities performed by such individual.

No deductions are allowed for income included in Category C. Consequently, the gross amount of such income is subject to PIT. However, only 50% of all forms of capital income included in Category C, including dividends received, is subject to PIT.

Capital gains (Category D). Unless included in Categories B or C, capital gains are included in Category D. They equal the positive difference in the net worth value of the individual, attributable to variations in the composition or valuation of its portfolio of assets.

In accordance with the PIT Code, the gains are computed in accordance with the following rules:
- For the sale of assets, capital gains equal the difference between the sales proceeds and the historical acquisition value.
- In all cases not involving the sale of assets, capital gains equal the sales proceeds for the asset.

For this purpose, the acquisition cost is the transaction value, increased by interest paid in the transaction and reduced by depreciations in accordance with the CIT Code. The sales proceeds equal the transaction value, reduced by investments in the asset and the transaction costs.

No deductions are allowed to income included in Category D. Consequently, the gross amount of such income is subject to PIT.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains are subject to PIT and are included Category D (see Capital gains [Category D]).

Deductions. The PIT Code allows the following tax deductions:
- Family deductions
- Double tax relief
- Health deductions
- Education and training deductions
- Property deductions (limited to STD15,000 [approximately USD711.24])

Rates. Income included in Categories A and B is aggregated and subject to PIT at the progressive rates shown in the table below. The PIT Code establishes the following formula to determine annual taxable income for each tax bracket:

Taxable income for bracket = (Amount from first column x rate from second column) – Amount from third column

Income up to STD11,700 (approximately USD554.77) is exempt from tax. The following is the tax rate table.

Taxable income STD	Tax rate %	Amount to deduct STD
Up to 11,700	0	—
Between 11,700 and 50,000	10	1,170
Between 50,000 and 100,000	13	2,670
Between 100,000 and 150,000	15	4,670
Between 150,000 and 240,000	20	12,170
Over 240,000	25	24,170

Individuals may choose to also aggregate the income qualifying as Category D. Otherwise, the gross amount of Category C and Category D income is subject to a final withholding tax of 15%.

Minimum annual tax due. Decree-Law No. 6/2016, from 31 October 2016, establishes that taxpayers receiving income from Group A and Group B are subject to a minimum tax due in the annual amount of STD300 (approximately USD14). Group A minimum tax is withheld on a monthly basis by the employer. Group B minimum tax is paid in three installments in February, June and October. Group B minimum tax is added to stamp duty in the amount of STD18 (approximately USD1).

Relief for losses. Taxable losses computed for Category B may be carried forward for five years, but may only be offset against the same type of income.

Nonresidents. Nonresidents are subject to PIT on gross income derived in STP. This income is subject to a final withholding tax of 15%.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

Beneficiaries of a property or gift are subject to tax in STP, at the moment of transaction, at the following rates, which vary in accordance with the relationship with the donor or deceased:

- 5% if the beneficiary is a lineal descendant or ascendant or spouse
- 10% if the beneficiary is a sister or brother
- 15% for other beneficiaries

The tax is levied on the net value of the assets to be transferred, with deductions for eligible expenses.

Under certain conditions, an amount equivalent to 1,000 national minimum monthly salaries is deducted from the taxable amount. Ministry of Finance Order No. 5/2010 from 13 April 2010 set the national minimum salary at STD715 (approximately USD34). Consequently, the current amount for the deduction is STD715,000.

C. Social security

Contributions. Social security contributions are payable on gross income at a rate of 14% (8% for the employer and 6% withheld from the employee).

Totalization agreements. No totalization agreements are currently in force.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Income included in Categories A, B (only Group 2) and D (if the individual chooses to aggregate this income) must be declared through the submission of a tax return by the end of February of the following year.

Income included in Group 1 of Category B must be declared by the end of April of the following year.

The following individuals are not required to file a tax return:

- Individuals who only received income included in Category A that is subject to withholding tax from a single entity
- Individuals subject to the final withholding tax rate

The tax payable, reduced by withholding tax, must be paid by the end of September of the year in which the return is submitted.

In accordance with the provisions of the CIT Code, individuals with income in Category B are required to make three advance payments (in June, September and December), in an amount corresponding to 75% of the tax payable for the preceding year. These advance payments may be waived in certain conditions. Any excessive advance payments result in a refund at the end of the year.

Invoicing legal regime – electronic invoicing system (E-Factura). All taxpayers must issue invoices or equivalent documents through electronic means according to the terms and conditions provided in Decree Law 14/2019, which entered into force on 9 December 2019.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

STP has entered into a tax treaty with Portugal.

F. Temporary visas

Temporary visas may be granted to foreign citizens to engage in, among others, cultural, study, sports or business activities (to the extent that a work visa is not required for such activities).

A multiple-entry visa is valid for 180 days, while the single-entry visa is valid for 30 days.

G. Work visas (and/or permits)

No specific work visa is issued in STP. Foreign citizens must obtain a residence visa to be able to work in STP (either as dependent or independent workers).

H. Residence visa (and/or permits)

On request, yearly residence visas may be granted to foreign citizens.

After final approval, the residence visa is valid for one year, with the possibility of renewals for equal periods.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Saudis and nationals of other Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) states who are resident in Saudi Arabia are not subject to income tax. The GCC states are Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. Non-Saudi and nonresident GCC nationals and entities with a permanent establishment in Saudi Arabia are subject to income tax on their business income in Saudi Arabia. Taxable payments to nonresidents are subject to withholding tax (for details, see Rates).

An individual is considered to be resident in Saudi Arabia for a tax year if the person meets any of the following conditions:

- The person has a permanent place of abode in Saudi Arabia and resides in Saudi Arabia for a total period of at least 30 days during the tax year.
- The person resides in Saudi Arabia for a period of at least 183 days in the tax year.

Income subject to tax

Employment income. Employment income and allowances received by expatriates are not subject to tax in Saudi Arabia.

Self-employment and business income. Non-Saudi and non-GCC individuals are generally not allowed to carry on trading activities in Saudi Arabia. However, non-Saudi and non-GCC professionals and consultants may carry on activities in Saudi Arabia if appropriate licenses are obtained from the Ministry of Investment of Saudi Arabia.

Income tax is levied on profits arising from a source in Saudi Arabia derived by self-employed non-Saudi and non-GCC professionals and consultants from their activities conducted in Saudi Arabia.

Investment income. In principle, foreign individuals are taxed on income derived from investments in Saudi projects at a rate of 20%. However, such investments do not include the opening of all types of bank accounts (current, term and savings) or trading in the shares of companies registered in the Saudi Stock Exchange by resident persons that are not subject to tax, if certain conditions are met.

It is suggested that foreign individuals seek professional advice on the taxation of their investment income.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. In general, employer-provided stock options are not subject to tax in the hands of the recipient employee.

Capital gains. In general, capital gains are treated as ordinary income, together with other income earned for the same period, at a rate of 20% if the individual is a person subject to tax in Saudi Arabia and if the gain is realized in connection with the person's business activities. However, capital gains arising on the sale of shares traded on the stock exchange are exempt from tax if the following conditions are met:

- For the disposal of shares traded on the Saudi Stock Exchange (Tadawul), the disposal must be done in compliance with the Capital Market Law in Saudi Arabia.
- For the disposal of shares traded on a foreign stock exchange, the securities must also be traded on the Saudi Stock Exchange (Tadawul) for the tax exemption to apply.
- In all cases, the shares must have been acquired after 30 July 2004 (the date of enforcement of the Income Tax Law).

Based on a Circular issued by the Zakat, Tax, and Customs Authority (ZATCA), capital gains realized from the following sales of shares in a listed entity are also eligible for tax exemption if the above conditions are met:

- Sale of founders' shares
- Sale of bonus shares (or stock dividends)
- Sale of shares through a privately negotiated transaction (pursuant to the Saudi Capital Market Authority Law and implementing regulations)

Gains on the disposal of property other than assets used in a business activity are also exempt from tax.

Deductions. A taxpayer may deduct all necessary, provable and certifiable expenses incurred for the purposes of the business to the extent allowed under the tax regulations.

Unutilized provisions, as well as private and personal expenses, are not deductible.

Rates. A flat income tax rate of 20% is applied to the tax-adjusted profit of resident non-Saudi and non-GCC individuals.

Nonresidents who do not have a legal registration or a permanent establishment in Saudi Arabia are subject to withholding tax on their income derived from a source in Saudi Arabia. A Saudi resident entity must withhold tax from payments made to such nonresidents with respect to income derived from Saudi Arabia. This rule applies regardless of whether the Saudi resident entity is subject to tax or Zakat. The following are the withholding tax rates.

Payments	Rate (%)
Management fees	20
Dividends, interest, rent, payments made for technical and consulting services to unrelated parties, payments for air tickets, freight or marine, shipping, international telephone services (other than those paid to a head office or a related party), and insurance or reinsurance premiums	5
Royalties, payments to the head office or any other related companies for services including technical or consultancy services, and services for international telephone calls	15
All other payments	15

Relief for losses. Losses may be carried forward indefinitely. However, the maximum loss that can be offset against a year's profit is 25% of the tax-adjusted profits for that year. Saudi tax regulations do not provide for the carryback of losses.

B. Net worth tax (Zakat)

Net worth tax in Saudi Arabia, or Zakat, is a religious levy payable by a Saudi or a GCC national on the net worth or the Zakat base as adjusted for Zakat purposes. Zakat is imposed on a Saudi or a GCC national who is resident in Saudi Arabia and is engaged in business activities intended for profit or gain, such as investment; services; or commercial, industrial or financial activities.

Zakat is assessed in accordance with the following rules:
- If the Zakat base is higher than net adjusted profits attributable to Saudi and GCC national shareholders, Zakat is calculated at 2.578% of the net assessable funds or the Zakat base (excluding net adjusted profits) plus 2.5% of net adjusted profits.
- If the Zakat base is lower than net adjusted profits, Zakat is calculated at 2.5% of net adjusted profits.

Broadly, net assessable funds comprise net assets less amounts invested in fixed assets, long-term investments and deferred costs, plus or minus the adjusted income for the year.

Complex rules apply to the calculation of Zakat liabilities, and it is therefore suggested that Zakat payers seek specific advice suited to their circumstances.

C. Social security

Employers must pay Saudi social insurance tax (GOSI) on behalf of their employees on a monthly basis. The contributions are levied on basic salary, including housing allowances. Saudi nationals are subject to pension contributions and unemployment insurance (SANID) at 18% and 2%, respectively (shared equally between employer and employee). Other GCC nationals' contributions are based on their respective country laws. However, pension contributions are not required with respect to other foreign employees. Employers must pay contributions for occupational hazards insurance at a rate of 2% for both Saudi and non-Saudi employees.

The minimum and maximum monthly earning levels of contributory wage for Saudi employees are SAR1,500 and SAR45,000, respectively. For non-Saudi employees, the minimum and maximum monthly earnings levels on which to calculate contribution are SAR400 and SAR45,000, respectively.

Different rates apply to employees that are nationals of other GCC countries. Broadly, the rates that apply to Saudi employers with respect to nationals of other GCC countries are generally equal to the rates that would otherwise apply if the relevant individuals were employed in their country of origin, plus the mandatory 2% workplace insurance levy.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Tax filing. A resident self-employed foreign professional or a resident foreign individual carrying on business activity in Saudi Arabia must file a tax return and must pay the tax due within 120 days after the end of the tax year.

Advance tax. An advance payment on account of tax for the year is payable in three installments by the end of the sixth, ninth and twelfth months of the tax year. Each installment of advance payment of tax is calculated at 25% of the tax due for the preceding year, in accordance with the following formula:

$$25\% \times (A - B)$$

For the purposes of the above calculation, A equals the taxpayer's liability as per the tax declaration for the preceding year and B equals tax withheld at source for the taxpayer in the preceding year.

A taxpayer is not required to make advance payments if the amount of each payment calculated above would be less than SAR500,000.

Delay fines. A delay fine of 1% for each 30 days of delay is computed after the elapse of the first 30 days from the due date of tax until the tax is paid.

Fines for non-submission of tax declarations by the deadline are payable at a rate of 1% of the total revenue, subject to a maximum delay fine of SAR20,000. However, fines based on unpaid tax are payable instead of the fine described in the preceding sentence if the fines based on the unpaid tax are higher. The following are the applicable fines:

- 5% of the unpaid tax if the delay is up to 30 days from the due date
- 10% of the unpaid tax if the delay is more than 30 and not more than 90 days from the due date
- 20% of the unpaid tax if the delay is more than 90 and not more than 365 days from the due date
- 25% of the unpaid tax if the delay is more than 365 days from the due date

Withholding tax. The withholder of tax is required to register with the ZATCA before the settlement of the first tax payment. The withholder of tax must settle the tax withheld with the ZATCA by the 10th day of the month following the month in which the taxable payment is made and issue a certificate to the nonresident party. A delay fine of 1% for each 30 days of delay is computed from the due date of tax until the tax is paid.

E. Tax treaties

Saudi Arabia's double tax treaties that are in force and effective as of 1 January 2021 are listed below.

To benefit from the reduced rates or exemptions under the double tax treaties, additional conditions should be met (for example, the recipient is required to be the beneficial owner of the related gain). Readers should seek professional advice with respect to the application of Saudi tax treaties.

The treaty benefits are not applicable automatically and should be claimed from the ZATCA in each particular case by submitting the Q7-B form and other supporting documents (for example, a tax residence certificate). The taxpayer may claim the treaty benefit upfront and follow double tax treaty rules, or the taxpayer may pay the tax under domestic income tax law and then claim a refund from the ZATCA.

Saudi Arabia has tax treaties that are in force and effective as of 1 January 2021 with the following jurisdictions.

Saudi Arabia is negotiating tax treaties with Barbados, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Croatia, Lebanon, Gambia, Ghana, Guernsey, Jersey, Mauritius, New Zealand, Seychelles, Sudan and Sri Lanka.

Saudi Arabia has also entered into limited tax treaties with the United Kingdom, the United States and certain other countries for the reciprocal exemption from tax on income derived from the international operation of aircraft and ships.

F. Entry visas

All foreign nationals must obtain valid entry visas to enter Saudi Arabia, with the exception of GCC nationals.

Foreign nationals may enter the country under visit visas, tourist visas, pilgrim visas, work visas (see Section G) and family visas (see Section I). The Saudi Arabian government does not issue any type of permanent visa.

Visas are issued to nationals of countries that have diplomatic ties with Saudi Arabia. In general, those who are deported from Saudi Arabia as a result of violation of Saudi Arabian regulations are prohibited from re-entering the country.

In general, an applicant may not enter the country while his or her visa papers are being processed.

Visit visas. Visit visas are granted to short-term visitors who visit Saudi Arabia for business purposes. The visa allows its bearer to undertake any activity deemed to be usual and necessary for his or her visit, including attending meetings and establishing business contacts. An applicant must submit his or her passport and the approved visit visa document (provided by the Saudi inviter) to the Saudi embassy in the applicant's home country.

Pilgrim visas. Pilgrim visas are issued to Muslim pilgrims for the performance of Haj and Umrah. This type of visa is primarily restricted to the cities of Mecca and Medina. However, holders of pilgrim visas for Umrah may obtain permission from the appropriate government department to travel to other cities. A foreign national visiting for pilgrimage purposes may not conduct business or engage in other activities in Saudi Arabia.

G. Work visas and self-employment

Saudi Arabia depends substantially on foreign workers for its labor requirements. However, the government is making concerted efforts to increase the number of Saudi nationals in the workforce and, consequently, considers the availability of Saudi national workers before granting a work visa to a foreign national.

Work visas are issued to foreign workers who come to Saudi Arabia to work under employment contracts with local employers for a maximum initial period of two years. A local employer may be an individual, a registered company, the Saudi Arabian government or a branch of a foreign company. A work visa is renewable by the Ministry of Labor on renewal of the employment contract.

To obtain a work visa, an application is submitted to the Saudi embassy or consulate in an applicant's home country together with a passport, a copy of the employment contract, a medical certificate and proof of professional qualifications. It takes approximately two to four weeks to obtain a visa after all of the documents are submitted. On entry into Saudi Arabia, an application is then made by the employer for a Residence Permit (Iqama) for the employee (see Section H). An employee may work while a Residence Permit is being processed or renewed.

It is possible to change employers with the approval of the existing employer.

Foreign nationals may not carry out trading activities in Saudi Arabia. A foreign national who is a professional (for example, an accountant, engineer, lawyer or consultant) may conduct business in Saudi Arabia by setting up a professional partnership with a Saudi national, according to the professional partnership regulations.

A foreign company may set up a subsidiary or a branch headed by a foreign national after obtaining the necessary approval from the authorities.

H. Residence Permits

Residence Permits are issued after arrival in Saudi Arabia to those entering the country with work visas. Residence Permits are called Iqamas and must be carried at all times.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family visas are issued to spouses and dependents of foreign workers in designated professions. Family visas may also be issued to the parents of foreign workers. Family visas must be applied for independently of the work visa.

Marital property regime. No community property or similar marital property regime applies in Saudi Arabia.

Driver's permits. Resident foreign nationals may not drive legally in Saudi Arabia with their home country driver's licenses. Short-term visitors holding visit visas may drive with international driver's licenses issued in their home countries.

Saudi Arabia has driver's license reciprocity with certain countries in Europe and North America.

To obtain a local Saudi Arabian driver's license, an applicant must take an eye test, a blood test and a practical driving test.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents of Senegal are taxed on worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxed on their Senegalese-source income only.

Senegalese and foreign individuals (unless a double tax treaty states otherwise) are considered to be residents for tax purposes if they meet any of the following criteria:
- They maintain a permanent home or have their main residence in Senegal.
- The center of their economic interests is in Senegal.
- They perform a professional activity in Senegal, unless the activity performed is accessory.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable compensation consists of salary, bonuses, cash allowances and fringe benefits valued according to the tax rules on a lump-sum basis. Taxable salary reported by the taxpayer may not be lower than the amount calculated by the tax administration based on the taxpayer's standard of living. The factors contributing to the taxpayer's standard of living are valued according to a rate table established by decree.

The following income is exempt from tax:
- Family or state allowances.
- Specific allowances to compensate for professional expenses if they are not excessive and are duly proved.
- Reimbursement for employment-related expenses, up to either XOF400,000 if annual turnover does not exceed XOF2 billion or XOF800,000 if annual turnover exceeds XOF2 billion (because the recently enacted tax law did not expressly abrogate the decree containing this rule, these thresholds probably still apply).
- Legal severance payments and legal retirement benefits. The amounts of these items are determined based on the Senegalese labor law.
- Death benefits.
- Amounts paid in addition to agreed severance with respect to the end of an employment relationship resulting from a restructuring plan of the relevant company.

- Capital gains realized on equity held by mutual funds approved by the Finance Minister.
- Insurance premiums paid by the employer for coverage of supplemental retirement and health or death insurance, provided that they do not exceed 10% of the gross remuneration of the employee. This limit applies only to retirement and death insurance premiums taken as a whole.

A nonresident individual is taxable on income derived from services performed in Senegal.

In the absence of an applicable tax treaty, 20% withholding tax is levied on remuneration paid by a resident to a nonresident for any services provided or used in Senegal. This tax must be remitted by the Senegalese payer within 15 days following the month of the payment of remuneration to the nonresident. The withholding tax is a final tax for nonresidents.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employment activities are divided into commercial activities, agricultural activities and professional activities. Taxable income is determined according to specific rules applicable to each category of revenue. The revenues realized in different categories of revenues are aggregated and are subject to general income tax (see Rates).

Individuals are taxed on commercial income if they derive profits from activities in industry, commerce or skilled trades. Taxable commercial income consists of the net profit derived from all business activities carried on by the taxpayer, computed on an accrual basis.

Individuals are taxed on professional income from professional services, from non-commercial activities and from other occupations and business activities not subject to special tax. Taxable professional income is the difference between income received for, and expenses incurred in, the performance of a qualifying activity. The cash basis of accounting is used.

Agricultural income includes profits realized by farmers, stockbreeders, fishermen and forestry operators. Taxable agricultural income and capital gains derived by agricultural businesses are determined based on the same methodology as taxable commercial income.

Investment income. Investment income, which includes dividends, interest pertaining to bonds and debentures and directors' fees, is subject to withholding taxes at rates that vary based on the specific type of income. Directors' fees are taxed only if the payer company is established in Senegal.

Gross investment income (except dividends) is added to other taxable income, and the proportional tax paid constitutes a tax credit deductible from general income tax liability.

The rate of withholding tax is 10% for dividends, 13% for interest derived from bonds of less than five years, and 16% for directors' fees. The withholding tax on dividends is a final tax for individuals.

Certain types of investment income are exempt from taxation, including income from negotiable securities issued by the state or certain Senegalese banks. Interest derived from long-term bonds (five or more years) is subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 6%.

Unless double tax treaties state otherwise, withholding tax at a rate of 20% applies to royalties paid to nonresidents. This tax must be remitted by the Senegalese payer within 15 days following the month of the payment of royalties to the nonresident. Withholding tax is imposed on dividends and interest paid to nonresidents at the same rates applicable to such payments made to residents. The withholding taxes are final taxes for nonresidents.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. No specific rules apply to the taxation of employer-provided stock options. The Senegalese tax and social laws do not provide specific rules regarding the taxation of stock options. The granting of stock options is not a common practice in Senegal.

Capital gains. Capital gains realized in the performance of professional, commercial and agricultural activities are taxed as ordinary income, with certain relief available.

An individual shareholder who sells to a third party during the company's life all or part of his or her shares is subject to tax on one-third of the capital gains at a 25% rate if the individual or his or her spouse, descendants or ascendants held a position in the direction of the company during the preceding five years and they have held together at least 25% of the shares of the company during that period. Otherwise, one-half of the capital gains are taxable.

However, the abovementioned rules do not apply to capital gains realized on the disposal of shares of companies if more than 50% of the companies' assets is derived from real estate, real estate rights, rights from leasebacks of real estate or shares of other real estate companies.

Capital gains derived from sales of real estate are subject to capital gains tax on real estate at variable rates. Under the tax provisions contained in Law No. 2020-33, dated 22 December 2020, on the Finance Law for the 2021 fiscal year, capital gains are taxed at 15% on the sale of unbuilt or insufficiently built land, 10% on the sale of real estate rights over a public land property and 5% in all other cases.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. The following expenses are deductible:

- Employment-related expenses that are justified.
- Mileage allowance, up to the limit allowed by the Finance Ministry. The current limit is XOF50,000 per month.

Personal deductions. The following expenses are deductible:

- Arrears and pensions paid by the taxpayer, up to 5% of the taxable income for personal income tax purposes. The deductible amount cannot exceed XOF300,000. This limit does not apply to arrears paid under court order.

- Voluntary premiums for retirement pensions, up to 10% of salary, allowances and benefits in kind.
- Life insurance premiums, up to 5% of net revenue. The maximum deductible amount is XOF200,000, increased by XOF20,000 per dependent child.
- Interest paid on loans to acquire, maintain or repair the taxpayer's principal residence in Senegal, provided the taxpayer produces a loan amortization table certified by the lender.

Business deductions. For each of the three categories of income, the following expenses are deductible:
- General expenses incurred for business purposes. These include personnel and social security contribution expenses, rental and leasing expenses, finance charges and certain professional taxes, including business tax, license fees and tax on wages.
- Depreciation expenses computed using the rates established by the tax administration.

Rates. Employees in Senegal are subject only to progressive income tax rates up to 40%.

Under the tax law, the progressive rates are applied to taxable income after deduction of a lump-sum amount representing retirement contributions. This lump-sum deduction equals 30% of taxable income, with an annual cap of XOF900,000.

The following are the amounts of the family allowances.

Taxpayer's status	Number of allowances
Single, divorced or widowed without dependent children	1
Married without dependent children	1.5
Single or divorced, with one dependent child	1.5
Married or widowed, with one dependent child	2
Single or divorced, with two dependent children	2
Married or widowed, with two dependent children	2.5
Single or divorced, with three dependent children	2.5
Married or widowed, with three dependent children	3
Single or divorced, with four dependent children	3

Half of an allowance (0.5) is added for each additional dependent child for the benefit of each parent. If one spouse does not work, an additional half of an allowance (0.5) is granted to the other spouse. Each individual is limited to five family allowances.

The following are the progressive income tax rates.

Taxable income
Exceeding XOF	Not exceeding XOF	Rate %
0	630,000	0
630,000	1,500,000	20
1,500,000	4,000,000	30
4,000,000	8,000,000	35
8,000,000	13,500,000	37
13,500,000	—	40

The tax is computed using the progressive tax rates based on the family status and number of tax allowances of each individual. After this computation, the tax law prescribes a tax-reduction mechanism for family charges. The tax law provides the following rates for the tax-reduction mechanism.

Number of allowances	Rate %	Minimum XOF	Maximum XOF
1.5	10	100,000	300,000
2	15	200,000	650,000
2.5	20	300,000	1,100,000
3	25	400,000	1,650,000
3.5	30	500,000	2,030,000
4	35	600,000	2,490,000
4.5	40	700,000	2,755,000
5	45	800,000	3,180,000

Relief for losses. Losses may not be deducted from income from other categories, but may be carried forward for three years to offset income in the same category.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

The worldwide net assets of a Senegalese resident are subject to inheritance and gift tax. Nonresidents are subject to inheritance and gift tax only on assets located in Senegal.

Gifts and inheritances are subject to tax at progressive rates, depending on the value of the assets transferred and the relationship between the donor or deceased and the recipients. The tax rate is 2% for the spouse and direct lineal ascendants and descendants and 5% for others. Certain deductions are also granted.

Under Senegalese succession law, parents must leave two-thirds of their estates to their direct lineal descendants.

C. Social security

Contributions. Individuals' social security contributions are withheld monthly by employers and are computed on the basis of gross remuneration paid, including fringe benefits and bonuses. The following contributions are required.

Description	Rate (%)
On annual salary of up to XOF756,000; paid by the employer
Family allowances	7
Industrial accidents and professional sickness	1/3/5
Pension contributions, based on annual salary of up to XOF4,320,000; paid by
Employer	8.4
Employee	5.6
Special executive contributions, on annual salary of up to XOF12,960,000; paid by
Employer	3.6
Employee	2.4

Totalization agreement. To prevent double social security contributions and to assure benefit coverage, Senegal has entered into a totalization agreement with France, which applies for a maximum period of three years.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Individual income tax on wages is withheld at source by employers. Employers must pay the withheld tax to the revenue authorities by the 15th day of the month following the month of payment of the remuneration.

An individual paid by a foreign employer is liable for the monthly filings and payments of the tax due to the revenue authorities. He or she must register with the revenue authorities to get a tax identification number, which is mandatory for the individual filing of tax returns and payment of taxes due.

Senegalese residents are generally required to file income tax returns before 1 May of each year, at which time employees must satisfy any additional tax liability. Individuals engaged in commercial, professional or agricultural activities whose financial year ends 31 December must file returns by 30 April.

An individual performing commercial, agricultural or professional activities must make a first installment payment within the first 15 days of February and a second by 30 April, based on the income tax paid the preceding year. Each installment payment must equal one-third of the preceding year's income tax. The balance is payable by 15 June of each year.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Foreign taxes paid may be deducted as an expense from taxable income.

Senegal has entered into double tax treaties with Belgium, Canada, France, Italy, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Mauritania, Morocco, Norway, Portugal, Qatar, Spain, Tunisia, the United Kingdom and the United Arab Emirates. The tax treaty between Senegal and Mauritius has been terminated and is no longer applicable.

Senegal is a member of the West African Economic and Monetary Union (WAEMU) together with Benin, Burkina Faso, Bissau Guinea, Côte d'Ivoire, Mali, Niger and Togo. Regulation No. 08/2008/CM/UEMOA institutes a tax treaty, which is effective from January 2009. The WAEMU tax treaty has abrogated (regarding relations between WAEMU countries) the West African Economic and Customs Community (CEAO) tax treaty. However, the Common African and Mauritian Organization (OCAM) treaty continues to apply in certain countries, subject to reciprocity.

The treaties generally provide the following relief:
- Commercial profits are taxable in the treaty country if a foreign firm performs its activities through a permanent establishment.
- Interest is taxable in the state of residence of the beneficiary, but the state of source may apply a withholding tax in accordance with its internal law.
- Employment income is taxed in the treaty country where the activity is performed, except in the case of a short assignment.

The tax treaties provide that royalties and remuneration paid to a nonresident for services rendered in Senegal are taxable in the state of residence of the beneficiary, but the state of source may apply a withholding tax in accordance with the applicable regulations, subject to a maximum rate provided by the applicable treaty.

Under the WAEMU treaty, dividends are taxable in the treaty country where the beneficiary is resident but are subject to withholding tax in the treaty country where the payer is resident.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are subject to tax in Serbia on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on Serbian-source income only.

Individuals are considered to be resident for tax purposes if they have a domicile, residence or center of business and life interests in Serbia or if they spend more than 183 days within a 12-month period, which begins or ends in the tax year (that is, the calendar year). In addition, the applicable legislation prescribes a split tax residence concept (that is, it would be possible to consider the assignee as Serbian tax resident for only part of the year).

Income subject to tax. Tax is levied on the types of income described below.

Employment income. Salary tax is payable at a rate of 10% on income from permanent or temporary employment, benefits received in money and in kind, paid leave and other employment remuneration that exceeds a prescribed level.

Self-employment income. Tax is levied on the net earnings of self-employed individuals at a rate of 10%. For this purpose, taxable income is accounting profit adjusted in accordance with the tax regulations. The tax authorities may grant certain self-employed individuals the right to not maintain books; lump-sum tax is levied on these individuals.

Investment income. Tax is imposed at a rate of 15% on the following types of investment income:
- Interest
- Dividends and participation in profits
- Income derived from investment units
- The taking of a company's assets and the use of a company's services by founders for their private purposes free of charge

Interest derived from government bonds and deposits and savings in local currency is exempt from tax under the personal income tax law.

Income from property leasing and subleasing is taxed at a rate of 20%. A standard deduction of 25% may be claimed with respect to this leasing income. Under an exception, for leases up to 30 days in the tourist industry, the tax base is 5% of the average monthly salary in Serbia multiplied by the number of rented beds and the appropriate coefficient (the tax is determined by the tax authority's ruling).

Withholding tax is imposed at a rate of 20% on royalties from copyrights, rights related to copyrights and industrial property rights. Deductions from royalty income may vary between 34%, 43% and 50% of the total royalty income, depending on the source of income. Actual expenses incurred by an author or interpreter are deductible if they are properly documented.

Directors' fees. Fees received by members of a board of directors or supervisory board of a legal entity are taxed at a rate of 20%. A standard deduction of 20% may be claimed with respect to such income.

Other income. Income from insurance, reduced by paid premiums, is taxed at a rate of 15%.

Other types of income, including winnings from games of chance, are subject to tax at a rate of 20%. Certain standard deductions are allowed with respect to such income.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains derived from the sale of real estate, industrial property rights, securities and digital assets are subject to tax at a rate of 15%. Capital losses incurred in a calendar year may offset capital gains derived in that year or in the following five years.

Annual personal deductions. Taxpayers may claim a personal deduction in the amount of 40% of the average annual salary per employee paid in Serbia in the year for which the tax is assessed. In addition, individuals may claim a deduction in the amount of 15% of the average annual salary per employee paid in Serbia in the year for which the tax is assessed for each dependent family member. The total amount of deductions claimed may not exceed 50% of taxable income.

Other deductions. There are certain annual tax deductions for individuals who invested in alternative investment funds in Serbia.

Annual tax rates. Annual tax in Serbia is not a reconciliation of taxes paid during a year, but rather an additional tax for individuals whose income exceeds a prescribed threshold. Progressive income tax rates of 10% and 15% apply to the income of individuals exceeding the threshold.

For Serbian tax resident and nonresident individuals (both Serbian and foreign nationals), the 10% rate applies to net income from sources specified in the tax law exceeding three times the amount of the average annual salary per employee paid in Serbia in the year for which tax is assessed, but not exceeding nine times such average annual salary in total. A 15% rate applies to income exceeding nine times the average annual salary.

The above thresholds are modified each year in accordance with the annual fluctuation of average salary in Serbia.

Relief for losses. Losses incurred in self-employment activities may be carried forward for up to five years.

B. Other taxes

Property tax. Residents and nonresidents are subject to property tax at rates that may not exceed the maximum rates set by the Property Law. Each municipality may determine the rates up to these maximum rates. The maximum rates range from 0.4% to 2% on real estate owned in Serbia. The rates depend on the kind of property (land or building), kind of owner (company/entrepreneur or physical person) and, for physical persons, the value of the property. Shares and stakes in legal entities are not subject to property tax.

Inheritance and gift tax. Inheritance and gift tax is levied on the market value of property at rate of 1.5% for taxpayers who are second relations to the testator or donor and 2.5% for taxpayers who are third relations or are not related to the testator or donor. Shares and stakes inherited, or received free of charge, are not subject to inheritance and gift tax.

Transfer tax. The rate of the transfer tax is 2.5%. The tax base is the higher of the contract price or market price. Sales of shares and stakes in legal entities are exempt from transfer tax.

C. Social security and other contributions

Contributions. Social security tax is imposed on salaries received by individual employees. Employers and employees each pay contributions at the rates noted to the following.

Fund	Employer rate (%)	Employee rate (%)
Pension and Disability Fund	11.50	14.00
Health Care Fund	5.15	5.15
Unemployment Fund	—	0.75

Contributions to the Pension and Disability Fund at a rate of 25.5% and contributions to the Health Care Fund at a rate of 10.3% (for individuals without any other insurance) are payable by individuals on income received under contracts relating to royalties, services, additional work, agency and sports, as well as under similar contracts involving the payment of remuneration for services performed.

For expatriate employees, social security contributions may also be payable on salaries received outside Serbia. Under certain bilateral conventions, expatriates may pay social security contributions in their country of residence only.

Coverage. An employee who pays Serbian social security contributions is entitled to benefits, including health insurance for the employee and dependent family members, disability and professional illness insurance, unemployment allowances, retirement and other benefits.

Totalization agreements. To prevent double taxation and to assure benefit coverage, the Republic of Serbia currently applies social security totalization agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Austria
Belgium
Bosnia and Herzegovina
Bulgaria
Canada
China Mainland
Croatia
Cyprus
Czech Republic
Denmark
France
Germany
Greece
Hungary
Italy
Libya
Luxembourg
Montenegro
Netherlands
Norway
North Macedonia
Panama
Poland
Romania
Russian Federation
Slovak Republic
Slovenia
Sweden
Switzerland
Turkey
United Kingdom

These agreements generally provide a 12-month exemption, which may be extended. Certain agreements provide an exemption for the full term of the individual's assignment.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year is the calendar year. Annual tax returns must be filed by 15 May of the year following the tax year. Withholding tax is levied on most types of income, including salaries. Individuals who are liable for income tax must make advance payments of income tax in monthly or, in certain cases, quarterly installments (subject to a ruling of the tax authorities).

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Although Serbia professes to honor the tax treaties concluded by the former Yugoslavia, the applicability of these treaties is in doubt in several instances. In the event of the inapplicability of a treaty, Serbian tax legislation provides for the unilateral avoidance of double taxation through tax credits.

The Republic of Serbia, as the legal successor of the Union of Serbia and Montenegro, applies treaties with countries that were entered into by the former Yugoslavia and the former Union of Serbia and Montenegro. Tax treaties with the following jurisdictions are being applied.

Albania
Armenia
Austria
Azerbaijan
Belarus
Belgium
Bosnia and Herzegovina
Bulgaria
Canada
China Mainland
Croatia

F. Temporary visas

Valid passports and visas are required for foreign nationals of many countries to enter Serbia. Foreign nationals from countries with which Serbia has a visa-free regime (for example, citizens of the European Union, Australia, Canada, the United Arab Emirates and the United States) who are on vacation or visiting family may remain in the country just on the basis of a valid passport for 90 days in a six-month period, starting from the date of the first entry. Foreign nationals from countries with which Serbia does not have a visa-free regime need to obtain a visa prior to entering Serbia. Foreign nationals wishing to stay longer than 90 days or for business purposes for which a work permit is required (regardless of the period of stay) should have a residence permit or visa D.

The procedure for obtaining a temporary residence permit or visa D takes approximately 30 days.

The government of Serbia adopted the decision on visa-free entry to Serbia for holders of a foreign passport with a valid Schengen, UK or other EU member state visa, or a United States visa, and for holders of a foreign passport with a residence permit in the countries of the Schengen area or the EU, or the United States. By this decision, the abovementioned categories of foreign nationals may, without prior visa application, enter, travel through or stay in Serbia up to 90 days during a six-month period, but not exceeding the expiration date of the visa or residence permit. Such individuals may enter Serbia for non-work purposes (business meetings are allowed); however, if they need to apply for a residence and work permit later, they need to first obtain a visa.

G. Work permits

Before applying for a work permit, a foreign national must have a temporary residence permit or visa D.

The procedure for obtaining a work permit takes up to 15 days.

H. Residence permits and visa D

Temporary and permanent residence permits are issued by the Republic Police Department.

To obtain a temporary residence permit, a foreign national applies to the local Republic Police Department by stating the reasons for the temporary stay and, if requested, providing documents justifying the reasons. The applicant must also prove that he or she has health insurance and sufficient financial means for his or her support during the stay in Serbia. A temporary residence permit is issued for of a period of up to one year (initially may be issued for up to six months on a case-by-case basis) and may be extended for similar periods if sufficient reasons exist.

For a permanent residence permit, a foreign national applies to the Republic Police Department enclosing evidence of sufficient financial means for his or her support in Serbia. A permanent residence permit is issued to an applicant who meets one of the following conditions:

- The applicant has lived for at least five years continuously in Serbia, based on a temporary resident permit.
- The applicant has been married or in a common-law union for at least three years to a Serbian citizen or to a foreign national with a permanent residence permit.
- The applicant is a minor with a temporary residence permit, one of his or her parents is a Serbian citizen or a foreign national with a permanent residence permit, and he or she has the consent of the other parent.
- The applicant is of Serbian origin.

A visa D is issued abroad in the jurisdiction where the applicant resides (Embassy or Consulate General of the Republic of Serbia in that jurisdiction) prior to entering Serbia.

I. Family and personal considerations

Work permits for family members. Work permits are not automatically granted to the family members of a foreign national who receives a work permit.

Forced heirship. Serbia's forced heirship rules prevent the disinheritance of the closest relatives of the decedent. The decedent's descendants, whether biological or adopted, and spouse comprise forced heirs in the first line, who are entitled to one-half of their intestate share of the decedent's estate. Other forced heirs are entitled to one-third of their intestate share. Forced heirs have all the rights and duties of other heirs.

Driver's licenses. Foreign nationals may drive in Serbia with their home country driver's licenses for six months. After this period, they must apply for Serbian driver's licenses.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. A person is subject to tax on employment income for services performed in Singapore, regardless of whether the remuneration is paid in or outside Singapore. Resident individuals who derive income from sources outside Singapore are not subject to tax on such income. This exemption does not apply if the foreign-source income is received through a partnership in Singapore. Foreign-source dividend income, foreign branch profits and foreign-source service income received by any individual resident in Singapore through partnerships may be exempted from Singapore tax if certain prescribed conditions are met. Individuals who carry on a trade, business, profession or vocation in Singapore are taxed on their profits. Whether an individual is carrying on a trade is determined based on the circumstances of each case. Foreign-source income received in Singapore by a nonresident is specifically exempt from tax.

Individuals are resident for tax purposes if, in the year preceding the assessment year, they reside in Singapore except for such temporary absences from Singapore as may be reasonable and not inconsistent with a claim by such persons to be resident in Singapore. This also includes persons who are physically present or who exercise employment (other than as a director of a company) in Singapore for at least 183 days during the year preceding the assessment year. A concession is available for foreign employees whose employment period straddles two calendar years. Under this concession (commonly known as the “two-year administrative concession”), the individual is considered resident for both years if he or she stays or works in Singapore for a continuous period of at least 183 days straddling the two years, even if fewer than 183 days were spent in Singapore in each year.

Nonresident individuals employed for not more than 60 days in a calendar year in Singapore are exempt from tax on their employment income derived from Singapore. This exemption does not apply to a director of a company, a public entertainer or a professional in Singapore.

Frequent business travelers (foreign employees based outside Singapore but who travel into Singapore for business purposes) may have a tax liability arising from their presence in Singapore, depending on their total number of employment days in Singapore. Work pass requirements should be reviewed before travel (see Sections F and G).

Under the Not Ordinarily Resident (NOR) scheme, a qualifying individual may enjoy tax concessions for five consecutive assessment years, including time apportionment of Singapore employment income, if certain conditions are satisfied.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable employment income includes cash remuneration, wages, salary, leave pay, directors' fees, commissions, bonuses, gratuities, perquisites, gains received from employee share plans and allowances received as compensation for services. Benefits-in-kind derived from employment, including home-leave passage, employer-provided housing, employer-provided automobiles and children's school fees, are also taxable.

Compulsory statutory contributions made by employers to the Central Provident Fund (CPF; see Section C) on behalf of individuals performing services in Singapore do not constitute taxable income. Contributions made by an employer to any provident or pension fund located outside Singapore are taxable as income when the contributions are paid, unless exempted by concession.

Not Ordinarily Resident scheme. Under the NOR scheme, a resident employee whose resident status is not accorded under the two-year administrative concession (see Who is liable) may benefit from the following concessions for five consecutive assessment years:
- Time apportionment of employment income
- Tax exemption (with certain exceptions) for the employer's contributions to non-mandatory overseas pension funds or social security schemes, subject to the Central Provident Fund (CPF) maximum contribution limits for "ordinary" and "additional" wages (see Section C)

Under a 2019 budget proposal, the last such NOR status will be from the 2020 assessment year to the 2024 assessment year. Individuals who have been accorded the NOR status will continue to enjoy NOR tax concessions until their NOR status expires if they continue to meet the conditions of the concessions.

To qualify for the NOR scheme, an employee must meet the following conditions:
- He or she must be a resident for tax purposes in the assessment year in which he or she wishes to apply.
- He or she must not have been a resident for tax purposes in the three assessment years immediately preceding the assessment year in which he or she wishes to apply.

To benefit from the time apportionment of employment income, the employee must meet the following additional conditions:

- He or she must spend at least 90 business days in the calendar year outside Singapore with respect to his or her Singapore employment.
- The employment income of the individual must be at least SGD160,000.
- The tax on the apportioned income must be at least 10% of the total Singapore employment income.

The time apportionment concession applies to both cash compensation and benefits-in-kind, other than directors' fees and Singapore tax paid by employers.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employment income subject to tax is based on financial accounts prepared under generally accepted accounting principles. Adjustments are made to the profits or losses according to tax law. Business income is aggregated with other types of income to determine taxable income, which is taxed at the rates described in Rates.

Investment income. Under the one-tier system, dividends paid by Singapore tax-resident companies are exempt from income tax in the hands of shareholders, regardless of whether the dividends are paid out of taxed income or tax-free gains.

Dividends, other than tax-exempt and one-tier dividends, are taxed at the rates set forth in Rates.

Singapore-source investment income (that is, income that is not considered to be gains or profits from a trade, business or profession) derived directly by individuals from specified financial instruments, including standard savings, current and fixed deposits, is exempt from tax. Examples of such income include interest from debt securities, annuities and distributions from unit trusts.

Net rental income is aggregated with other types of income and taxed at the rates set forth in Rates.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options and share ownership plans. Employer-provided stock options are taxed at the time of exercise, not at the time of grant. Share awards are taxable at the time of award or at the time of vesting, if a vesting period is imposed. The taxable amount is the open market value of the shares at the time of exercise, award or vesting, less the amount paid by the employee, if any. For stock options and share awards granted on or after 1 January 2003 on which a moratorium is imposed on the acquired shares, the gains are taxed only on the date the moratorium is lifted. The taxable amount is the open market value of the shares on the date the moratorium is lifted, less the amount paid by the employee.

Stock options and share awards granted during overseas employment are not subject to tax even if the gains derived are remitted into Singapore while the employee is a tax resident, because all foreign-source income received in Singapore (other than through partnerships) by resident individuals is exempt from tax. Stock options and share awards granted on or after 1 January 2003 while the employee is engaged in employment in Singapore are subject to tax, regardless of where the options are exercised or shares are vested. These options and awards are deemed exercised or vested at the time of cessation of employment (including being seconded outside Singapore for an assignment or leaving Singapore for a period more than three months) for a foreign national employee, and tax is due immediately on the deemed gains.

For employee stock options or shares granted under any employee share ownership plan on or after 1 January 2003, the employer may apply for a Tracking Option if certain qualifying conditions and requirements are met. If the employer has been granted approval to track and elects to do so, the stock options or shares granted are reportable and taxable at the time of exercise or vesting.

An incentive scheme is available for an employee to defer payment of tax on share plan income (subject to an interest charge).

Any additional gain derived from the subsequent sale of the shares is normally capital in nature and is not taxable.

Capital gains. Capital gains are not taxed in Singapore. However, in certain circumstances, the tax authorities consider transactions involving the acquisition and disposal of real estate, stocks or shares to be the carrying on of a trade. As a result, gains arising from such transactions are taxable. The determination of whether such gains are taxable is based on a consideration of the facts and circumstances of each case.

The buyer of property must pay stamp duty on the value of the property purchased. Certain buyers of residential properties, including residential land, must pay additional buyer's stamp duty, in addition to the usual stamp duty. Sellers of residential and industrial properties may be liable for seller's stamp duty depending on when the property was purchased and the holding period. Specified sellers of industrial properties may be liable for stamp duty.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. In principle, expenses incurred wholly and exclusively in the production of income qualify for deduction, but in practice, the deductions available against employment income are limited. The general view taken by the Inland Revenue is that an employer normally pays all necessary expenses incurred by an employee in the course of discharging the duties of office. Employees must be able to prove to the Inland Revenue that expenses claimed were necessarily incurred in performing their duties.

Personal deductions and allowances. Personal deductions are granted to individuals resident in Singapore. Some of the deductions for the 2021 assessment year (income earned in the 2020 calendar year) are summarized in the following table.

Type of deduction	Amount of deduction
Spouse relief	SGD2,000*
Handicapped spouse	SGD5,500*
Earned income
Under 55 years of age	SGD1,000
55 to 59 years of age	SGD6,000
60 years of age and older	SGD8,000

Type of deduction	Amount of deduction
Handicapped earned income
Under 55 years of age	SGD4,000
55 to 59 years of age	SGD10,000
60 years of age and older	SGD12,000
Child relief	SGD4,000 each
Handicapped child	SGD7,500 each
Dependent parents (maximum of two)
Living with taxpayer	SGD9,000
Not living with taxpayer	SGD5,500
Handicapped dependent parents
Living with taxpayer	Additional SGD5,000
Not living with taxpayer	Additional SGD4,500
Grandparent caregiver relief (for working mothers)	SGD3,000
Handicapped brother/sister relief	SGD5,500

* The spouse relief is an expansion of the traditional wife relief, the purpose of which is to provide recognition to both male and female taxpayers supporting their spouses. Spouse relief and handicapped spouse relief are no longer granted to individuals for maintaining their former spouses.

Working mother's child relief and foreign maid levy deductions are available for married women working in Singapore. Parenthood tax rebates are available for parents, but are subject to certain conditions. Special deductions are available for military reservists and the spouse or parents of military reservists.

The following deductions for life insurance premiums or contributions to approved pension funds are granted:

- For an employee, the total of life insurance premiums and amounts contributed to approved pension funds other than the CPF may be deducted up to a maximum amount of SGD5,000, provided that the total CPF contributions are less than SGD5,000.
- For an individual carrying on a trade, business, profession or vocation, CPF contributions may be deducted up to an amount of SGD37,740, effective from the 2017 assessment year.
- A deduction of up to SGD7,000 may be claimed for cash contributions made to the taxpayer's, the taxpayer's parents' or the taxpayer's grandparents' CPF retirement accounts, including contributions by taxpayers to non-working spouses or siblings who earned no more than SGD4,000 in the preceding year (see below).

Two separate tax reliefs of up to SGD7,000 are granted. The first relief is for top-ups by the taxpayer or his or her employer to the employee's own CPF retirement account. The second relief is for top-ups to the taxpayer's family members' CPF retirement account. In addition, tax relief is allowed for voluntary contributions made by the taxpayer specifically to his or her CPF Medisave Account, which is intended for the taxpayer's medical needs. Voluntary contributions made by an employer are taxable income to the employee.

Fees for approved courses may also be deducted, up to a maximum of SGD5,500.

To enhance the progressivity of the personal income tax regime, the total amount of personal income tax reliefs that an individual can claim is capped at SGD80,000 per assessment year.

Business deductions. For expenses to be deductible, they must be incurred wholly and exclusively in the production of income, be revenue in nature and not be specifically prohibited under the Singapore tax law. Expenses specifically not deductible include personal expenses, income taxes paid in and outside Singapore, contributions to unapproved provident funds and private vehicle expenses. No deduction is allowed for the book depreciation of fixed assets, but tax depreciation (capital allowances) is granted according to statutory rates.

Rates. A person who is a tax resident in Singapore is taxed on assessable income, less personal deductions, at the following rates for the 2021 assessment year (income from the 2020 calendar year).

Assessable income SGD	Tax rate %	Tax due SGD	Cumulative tax due SGD

(a) The rate may be reduced under the terms of a double tax treaty.
(b) This is a final withholding tax on the gross amount, unless the nonresident professional elects to be assessed at a rate of 22% on net income.
(c) The rate applies only if the income is not derived by the nonresident individual from any trade, business, profession or vocation carried on or exercised by that individual in Singapore.
(d) Singapore currently does not have withholding tax on dividends, but withholding tax rates on dividends are provided under its tax treaties.
(e) This reduced rate applies only during the period of 22 February 2010 through 31 March 2022. The rate will return to 15% thereafter, subject to future announcements by the government.
(f) This exemption is subject to a review date of 31 March 2022.

Relief for losses. Losses and excess capital allowances from the carrying on of a trade, business, profession or vocation may be offset against all other chargeable income of the same year. Any unused trade losses and capital allowances can be carried forward indefinitely for offset against future income from all sources, subject to certain conditions.

Relief is also available for the carryback of current-year unused capital allowances and trade losses, subject to the satisfaction of certain conditions.

B. Estate and gift taxes

Estate duty has been eliminated from the Singapore tax regime for deaths occurring on or after 15 February 2008.

Singapore does not impose a gift tax.

C. Social security

The Central Provident Fund (CPF) is a statutory savings scheme to provide for employees' old-age retirement in Singapore. Only Singapore citizens and permanent residents working in Singapore are required to contribute to the CPF. All foreigners (including Malaysians) are exempt from CPF contributions. In addition, they may not make voluntary contributions to the CPF.

Both employees and employers must contribute to the fund. For individuals up to 55 years of age, the statutory rate of the employee's contribution is 20%, and the rate of the employer's contribution is 17%. Lower contribution rates apply to individuals over 55 years of age. Special transitional contribution rates apply to foreigners who become Singapore permanent residents.

Maximum contribution limits apply to both "ordinary" and "additional" wages. For "ordinary" wages, contributions for employees in the private sector are payable only on the part of the monthly wage that does not exceed SGD6,000.

Contributions on "additional" wages, such as bonuses and other non-regular wages, are subject to limits if the employee's total wages for the year exceed SGD102,000. In this event, the contributions on the "additional" wages are payable up to a limit of SGD102,000, less the total "ordinary" wages subject to CPF contributions in the year.

Self-employed individuals who carry on a trade, business, profession or vocation may also participate in the CPF scheme.

On reaching 55 years of age, an employee is entitled to withdraw, tax-free, the accumulated contributions up to a certain limit, plus accrued interest. If the employee permanently leaves Singapore (and Malaysia) before reaching 55 years of age, the funds may also be withdrawn. The employee's balance may also be withdrawn for certain specified purposes, including the acquisition of residential property, investment in shares and the payment of certain hospital expenses for anyone in the taxpayer's family.

A Supplementary Retirement Scheme (SRS) allows Singapore citizens and permanent residents to elect to contribute to private funds in addition to their CPF contributions. Foreigners working in Singapore may also participate in the scheme. Contributions are deductible but are subject to a cap. The rates of contribution are 15% for citizens and permanent residents and 35% for foreigners, subject to an absolute cap of 17 months of the prevailing CPF salary ceiling. The voluntary SRS contributions are paid only by employees; employers are not required to make SRS contributions. Employers may also directly contribute to the SRS on behalf of their employees, subject to the current contribution limits. Withdrawals made before the employee reaches the statutory retirement age are fully taxed and are generally subject to a 5% penalty. Withdrawals are only 50% taxable if they are made after the employee reaches the statutory retirement age in effect at the time of the first contribution, after the employee's death, for medical reasons, or by a foreigner who has maintained the SRS account for at least 10 years from the date of the first contribution. Employees who reach the statutory retirement age or who meet the rules on medical grounds, may further reduce the tax payable by extending the withdrawals over a period of up to 10 years from the time they reach the statutory retirement age in effect at the time of withdrawal.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Singapore is the assessment year, and tax is levied on a preceding-year basis. For example, in the 2021 assessment year, tax is levied on income from the 2020 calendar year. Resident and nonresident individuals must file returns by 15 April of the assessment year. Sole proprietors and partners whose annual turnover exceeds SGD500,000 must attach their certified financial statements to their tax returns. NOR taxpayers who spend at least 90 days outside Singapore on business may file their tax returns on a "days-in, days-out" basis, subject to certain conditions.

An individual may pay the tax due for the assessment year in one lump sum within one month after the issuance of a tax assessment. Alternatively, the tax may be paid in installments, up to a maximum of 12 per year.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Relief from double taxation is granted on income derived from professional, consultancy and other services rendered in countries that do not have double tax treaties with Singapore.

Double tax relief is also available for foreign taxes levied on income taxed in Singapore if Singapore has a tax treaty with the country concerned and if the individual is resident in Singapore for tax purposes.

Singapore has entered into tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

(a) This is a tax information exchange agreement, which provides only for the exchange of information on tax matters.
(b) These are limited treaties that cover only income from shipping and/or air transport.

Individuals who receive employment income in Singapore and who are tax residents of countries that have concluded double tax treaties with Singapore may be exempt from Singapore income tax if their period of employment in Singapore does not exceed a certain number of days (usually 183) in a calendar year or within a 12-month period and if they satisfy certain additional criteria specified in the treaties.

F. Visit passes and visas

Short-term visit passes are issued at the port of entry and may be obtained without prior application. They are issued for visiting purposes only, not for employment. Short-term visit passes are valid from 14 days to 90 days, subject to the discretion of the immigration authorities.

Certain categories of foreign nationals must obtain entry visas prior to arrival in Singapore.

G. Work permits and employment passes

Foreign nationals who intend to take up employment or to engage in a business, profession or occupation in Singapore must first apply for a work pass. A Singapore entity, which is normally the employer, must sponsor the work pass application.

Work permit. A work permit (WP) may be granted to a skilled or unskilled foreign worker who holds qualifications and experience relevant to the position. WPs are granted for up to two years at a time and are renewable (maximum employment period in Singapore may apply). WPs are subject to sourcing and quota restrictions, and employers are subject to monthly levies for each WP holder employed.

S Pass. An S Pass is a work pass for individuals with a minimum fixed monthly salary of SGD2,500 and an acceptable tertiary qualification, which may be less than a university degree (for example, a college diploma). More experienced applicants are expected to draw higher salaries to qualify for an S Pass. The S Pass is subject to a quota and a monthly levy payable by the company.

Employment pass. An employment pass (EP) may be granted to a foreigner who holds an acceptable degree, professional qualifications or specialist skills and has a fixed monthly salary exceeding SGD4,500 for all sectors other than the financial services sector for which the minimum monthly qualifying salary is SGD5,000. The minimum qualifying salary applies only to recent graduates from good institutions. More experienced applicants are expected to possess a higher salary commensurate with their work experience. The authorities reviewing the application may consider the applicant's professional and academic qualifications, special skills with respect to his or her employment and his or her anticipated economic contribution to Singapore.

Under the Fair Consideration Framework, before the submission of a new EP or S Pass application, the employer must post the job vacancy to the designated jobs database for a period of at least 28 calendar days. Small firms with fewer than 10 employees or jobs that pay a fixed monthly salary of SGD20,000 and above are exempt from the advertising requirement. Other exemptions are available.

Fixed monthly salary includes basic salary and other fixed monthly payments, such as a cost-of-living adjustment and other cash allowances provided to an employee. Notably, it does not include the provision of benefits-in-kind, such as housing, or variable payments, such as commissions, bonuses or daily-based allowances.

A foreign national who receives an in-principle approval for an EP or S Pass may be required to undergo a medical examination or to complete a health declaration form.

A first-time applicant may be issued an EP/S Pass with a duration of up to two years. The EP/S Pass may be renewed for periods of up to three years per renewal.

Personalized employment pass. An EP holder who earns a fixed monthly salary of at least SGD12,000 may apply for a personalized employment pass (PEP). An overseas foreign professional whose last drawn fixed monthly salary (within six months from the date of application) was at least SGD18,000 may also apply. The PEP is issued for a non-renewable period of three years and may be issued only once. The holder must not be unemployed for a continuous period exceeding six months, and must earn a fixed annual salary of at least SGD144,000 in each calendar year in which he or she holds the PEP. Certain requirements for reporting to the Ministry of Manpower are imposed on the PEP holder and his or her employer.

The PEP provides added flexibility for the holder because the pass is not tied to a particular employer. The PEP provides the same dependent privileges as the EP. The PEP does not enable the holder to take up freelance work without a direct employer, or to be a business owner (sole proprietor, working partner or director with shareholding).

EntrePass. A foreigner who is an entrepreneur and ready to start a new business or company in Singapore may apply for an EntrePass (employment pass for entrepreneurs). New EntrePass applicants must have their company registered as a private limited company in Singapore for less than six months at the time of the EntrePass application or if the company is not registered, they may do so after the outcome of the application. In addition, the proposed business venture must be of an entrepreneurial nature. Applicants must show evidence of innovation and meet the criteria of an entrepreneur, innovator or investor, as defined by the Ministry of Manpower. Newly issued and first renewed EntrePasses have a validity period of one year. Subsequent renewed EntrePasses have a validity period of up to two years.

Tech.Pass. The Tech.Pass visa is intended for established tech entrepreneurs, leaders or technical experts to provide them with the flexibility to participate in a variety of activities, such as starting and operating tech companies, being an employee, investor and/or director in a Singapore-based company and being a consultant or mentor.

To be eligible for the pass, two of the following three conditions must be met.

- A last drawn fixed monthly salary of at least SGD20,000
- At least five cumulative years of experience in a leading role in a tech company with a valuation/market cap of at least USD500 million or at least USD30 million funding raised
- At least five cumulative years of experience in a leading role in the development of a tech product that has at least 100,000 monthly active users or at least USD100 million annual revenue

H. Residence permits

Qualified professionals, technical personnel and skilled workers may apply for permanent residence (PR) on obtaining an EP/S Pass to work in Singapore. An applicant in this category may also apply for PR for his or her spouse and unmarried children under 21 years of age.

Under the Global Investor Program (GIP), foreign investors who satisfy preconditions set by the Economic Development Board (EDB) in Singapore may obtain the EDB's support in their application for permanent residency in Singapore for themselves and immediate family members. Currently, the EDB has established that the four main categories of qualifying applicants are individuals who fulfill certain criteria and who fall within the following categories:

- Established business owners
- Next-generation business owners
- Founders of fast-growth companies
- Family office principals

Individuals who meet the conditions may apply for the program by committing to invest at least SGD2,500,000 in certain approved categories of business and investment activities. If applicable, the investment must be made in a Singapore-incorporated entity, a designated GIP fund that invests in Singapore-based companies, or into a new or existing Singapore-based single-family office that has assets under management (AUM) of at least SGD200 million. Offshore assets can constitute part of the SGD200 million AUM as long as the SGD50 million net investible AUM is held onshore in Singapore.

Successful applicants must make the investment in accordance with the approved business plan within six months of receipt of the approval in principle. Applicants are required to produce evidence of their investment for final approval of the conferring of PR status.

Applicants are required to formalize their PR status in Singapore within 12 months from the date of the final approval letter. On formalization of the PR, applicants are issued a Re-Entry Permit (REP), which will be valid for five years and allows applicants to maintain PR status even if they are outside of Singapore.

Applicants must maintain the investment made for a period of five years. This five-year period begins on the date of final approval of PR. After five years, applicants will have their REP renewed if certain REP renewal conditions are met by the fifth year of their PR status.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. An EP/S Pass holder may apply for Dependant's Passes, which allow his or her legal spouse and legal children under 21 years of age to live in Singapore. An EP/S Pass holder earning a fixed monthly salary of less than SGD6,000 per month may not apply for Dependant's Passes. A Dependant's Pass holder who wishes to work in Singapore must apply for a WP, S Pass or EP separately.

If dependents are not eligible to apply for Dependant's Passes, the EP/S Pass holder with fixed monthly salary of at least SGD6,000 may apply for a Long Term Visit Pass for eligible dependents, who are the following:

- Common-law spouse who is recognized as such by the laws of his or her country

- Unmarried stepchildren who are not legally adopted under age 21
- Unmarried handicapped children above age 21
- Parents of the EP/S Pass holder (only applicable for pass holder with fixed monthly salary of at least SGD12,000)

Matrimonial property regime. The Family Justice Courts of Singapore have jurisdiction to determine the division of matrimonial property of spouses. The court does not automatically divide the property equally but determines a fair and equitable split according to the circumstances of the case.

Broadly, matrimonial property includes the following:

- Property acquired after the date of marriage
- Property acquired before the date of marriage but ordinarily used by the other spouse or children during the marriage for accommodation, transport or household, recreational, educational, social, or aesthetic purposes
- Property acquired before the date of marriage but substantially improved during the marriage
- Gifts of a matrimonial home or gifts that have been substantially improved during the marriage

Forced heirship. Singapore does not have generally applicable forced heirship rules. However, forced heirship rules may apply to Muslim persons who are domiciled in Singapore at the time of their death. These rules provide that a Muslim deceased's estate must be distributed in a manner that adheres to Muslim law rather than the general intestacy laws. Under such rules, Muslims domiciled in Singapore can generally distribute up to one-third of their estate by a will and generally only to individuals who are not blood-related (excluding spouses). The laws of other countries with forced heirship rules could apply in Singapore if the relevant asset is located in a foreign country with forced heirship rules.

Driver's permits. Expatriates may drive legally in Singapore with their home country driver's licenses for the first 12 months after their arrival. Expatriates with valid employment passes must produce their home country driver's licenses (in English or with an official translation) and pass the basic driving theory test to convert their overseas licenses to Singapore licenses.

Singapore has driver's license reciprocity with almost all other countries.

On 10 October 2010, the country Netherlands Antilles, which consisted of five island territories in the Caribbean Sea (Bonaire, Curaçao, Saba, Sint Eustatius and Sint Maarten), was dissolved. On dissolution of the Netherlands Antilles, the islands of Bonaire, Sint Eustatius and Saba (BES-Islands) became part of the Netherlands as extraordinary overseas municipalities. Curaçao and Sint Maarten have both become autonomous countries within the Kingdom of the Netherlands. The former Netherlands Antilles tax laws remain applicable to Sint Maarten, with the understanding that references in the laws to "the Netherlands Antilles" should now be read "Sint Maarten." The following chapter provides information on taxation in Sint Maarten only. Chapters on the BES-Islands and Curaçao appear in this guide. Chapters on BES-Islands and Curaçao appear in this guide.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are taxable on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxable only on income derived from certain Sint Maarten sources. A resident individual who receives income, wherever earned, from former or current employment is subject to income tax in Sint Maarten.

Residence is determined based on an individual's domicile (the availability of a permanent home) and physical presence, and on the location of an individual's vital personal and economic interests.

Income subject to tax. The following types of income are taxed in Sint Maarten:

- Employment income
- Self-employment and business income
- Income from immovable property (rental income)
- Income from movable assets (dividend and interest income)
- Income from periodical allowances

Employment income. Taxable employment income consists of employment income, including directors' fees, less itemized and standard deductions and allowances (see Deductions), pension premiums and social security contributions, whether paid or withheld.

Directors' fees are treated in the same manner as ordinary employment income and are taxed with other income at the rates set forth in Rates. Directors' fees paid by Sint Maarten companies are subject to withholding for wage tax and for social security insurance contributions.

A nonresident individual receiving income from current or former employment carried on in Sint Maarten is subject to income tax and social security contributions in Sint Maarten. Wage tax and social security contributions are withheld from an individual's earnings. However, if the individual's stay does not exceed three months, the individual may request an exemption from the withholding requirement.

A nonresident who is employed by a Sint Maarten public entity is subject to tax on income, even if the employment is carried on outside Sint Maarten.

A nonresident individual receiving income as a managing or supervisory director of a company established in Sint Maarten is subject to income tax and social security contributions in Sint Maarten.

Self-employment and business income. Residents are subject to income tax on their worldwide self-employment and business income, as well as on income derived from a profession. Nonresidents are taxed on income derived from a profession practiced in Sint Maarten. However, if the profession practiced in Sint Maarten does not exceed three months, a full or partial exemption of income tax may be requested. Annual profits derived from a business must be calculated in accordance with sound business practices that are applied consistently. Taxable income is determined by subtracting the deductions and personal allowances specified in Deductions from annual profits.

A nonresident individual earning income from activities carried on in Sint Maarten through a permanent establishment or a permanent representative is subject to income tax in Sint Maarten. Profits of a permanent establishment are calculated in the same manner as profits of resident taxpayers.

Income from periodic allowances. Resident individuals are subject to tax on their worldwide periodic allowances, including old-age pensions (not related to previous employment), alimony payments and disability allowances. In general, periodic allowances are taxable if the allowances exceed their purchase price and if the purchase price has not (nor could have) been deducted from Sint Maarten income or was considered a component of Sint Maarten income.

Income from immovable property. Sixty-five percent of the income from real estate (rental income), grounds, mines and waters is taxed at the income tax rates set forth in Rates. Income derived from a person's residence is not taxed as income from immovable property. Interest paid on mortgage loans for the acquisition or the restoration of immovable property can be deducted from taxable income.

Nonresident individuals are taxed on rental income derived from real estate located in Sint Maarten or from the rights to such property.

Income from movable assets (dividend and interest income). Dividends and interest income derived from domestic and foreign sources, less deductions, are generally subject to income tax at the rates set forth in Rates. For investments in foreign portfolio investment companies and investments in Sint Maarten exempt companies, a fictitious yield at a rate of 4% must be reported annually based on the fair market value of the investments at the beginning of the calendar year. Interest income received from local bank accounts is taxed at a rate of 5% (not including surcharges).

Nonresident individuals are taxed on interest income derived from debt obligations if the principal amount of the obligation is secured by mortgaged real estate located in Sint Maarten.

No withholding taxes are levied on dividends, interest and royalties earned by nonresidents. In general, a withholding tax applies to interest payments made by paying agents established in Sint Maarten to individuals resident in one of the member states of the European Union (EU). This withholding tax applies for the duration of a transitional period. The withholding tax rate was 15% for the first three years beginning in 2005. Effective from 1 July 2008, the tax rate was increased to 20%. Effective from 1 July 2011, the tax rate was increased to 35%. However, exchange of information is now prescribed instead of the withholding on interest payments.

Income from substantial share interests. On request, resident individuals are taxed on dividend income and capital gains derived from substantial share interests at a fixed rate of 15% (not including 25% surcharges, or 18.75% including surcharges). Otherwise, such income is subject to the progressive income tax rates (see Rates).

An interest of at least 5% in the issued share capital of a company, a right to acquire such interest and a corresponding profit-sharing right qualifies as a substantial share interest.

Nonresident individuals are taxed on dividend income and capital gains derived from substantial share interests in companies that are resident in Sint Maarten if the nonresident individuals were residents of Sint Maarten at some time during the 10-year period preceding the receipt of the dividends or the realization of the capital gains. In the event of emigration to Sint Maarten, a "step-up" facility is available to determine the cost of a substantial share interest. In the event of emigration from Sint Maarten, the tax authorities may issue an income tax assessment on the difference between the fair market value of the shares on emigration and the fair market value on establishing residency. However, this tax assessment need not be paid if certain conditions are met. If the taxpayer emigrates within eight years after establishing residency, this income tax on emigration may not be imposed.

Capital gains. Capital gains are generally exempt from tax. In the following circumstances, however, capital gains may be subject to income tax at normal or special rates.

Type of income	Rate (%)
Capital gains realized on the disposal of business assets and on the disposal of other assets if qualified as income from independently performed activities	Up to 47.5 (including surcharges)
Capital gains on the liquidation of a company or on the repurchase of shares by the company in excess of the average paid-up capital (non-substantial share interest)	Up to 47.5 (including surcharges)
Capital gains derived from the sale of a substantial share interest in a company	18.75 (including surcharges)

Nonresidents may be subject to income tax on capital gains derived from the disposal of business assets or of shares in Sint Maarten resident corporations if the shares constitute a substantial share interest and if certain other conditions are met.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. A resident taxpayer is entitled to more deductible items than a nonresident taxpayer. A fixed deduction of ANG500 may be deducted from employment income. Instead of the fixed deduction, actual employment-related expenses incurred may also be fully deducted to the extent that the expenses exceed ANG1,000 annually.

Deductions that may be claimed by residents include those discussed below.

Personal deductions. Residents may claim the following personal deductions:
• Alimony payments to a former spouse
• Mortgage interest paid that is related to the taxpayer's dwelling (limited to ANG27,500 annually)
• Maintenance expenses related to the taxpayer's dwelling (limited to ANG3,000 annually)
• Interest paid on consumer loans (limited to ANG2,500, or ANG5,000 if married, annually)
• Life insurance premiums that entitle taxpayers to annuity payments (up to a maximum of 5% of the income or ANG1,000, annually)
• Pension premiums paid by an employee
• Social security premiums paid by an employee
• Qualifying donations in excess of certain threshold amounts

Extraordinary expenses. Residents may deduct the following extraordinary expenses:
• Financial support to children exceeding 27 years of age and other relatives not capable of providing for themselves

- Medical expenses, educational expenses and support for up to second-degree relatives, if certain threshold amounts are met

Nonresidents. Deductions for nonresidents include the following:
- Employment expenses
- Qualifying donations in excess of certain threshold amounts

Business deductions. In general, business expenses are fully deductible. However, the deduction of certain expenses is limited. The following deductions are available for self-employed persons:
- Accelerated depreciation of fixed assets up to a maximum of 33⅓%.
- An investment allowance of 8% for acquisitions of or improvements to fixed assets in the year of investment and in the immediately following year. The investment allowance is increased to 12% for acquisitions of new buildings or improvements to existing buildings. This allowance applies only if the investment amounts to more than ANG5,000 in the year of investment.

Personal tax credits. The following personal tax credits may be subtracted by a resident taxpayer from the income tax due for the 2021 fiscal year (at the time of writing, the 2022 tax rates and credits had not yet been published):
- Standard tax credit: ANG2,091
- Sole earner tax credit: ANG1,396
- Senior tax credit: ANG1,054
- Child tax credit per child: varies from ANG76 to ANG744, depending on the children's age, residence and education

Nonresidents may claim only the standard tax credit.

Pensioners and retirees. Pensioners who request and obtain the penshonado status can opt to be taxed at an income tax rate of 10% (including surcharges) on all foreign-source income or they can declare a fixed income of ANG500,000 per year as foreign income. This fixed income is taxed at the progressive income tax rates (see Rates). The penshonado status can be obtained if certain conditions are met, including the following:
- The applicant must not have been a resident of Sint Maarten for the past five years.
- The applicant must at least be 50 years of age.
- The applicant must apply for the penshonado status within two months of his or her registration in Sint Maarten.
- The applicant must acquire a house for personal use within 18 months of his or her registration with a value of at least ANG450,000.

Expatriate facility. Individuals that meet certain criteria can request the application of the expatriate facility. To acquire the expatriate status, an individual must meet the following conditions:
- The applicant must not have been a resident of Sint Maarten for the past five years.
- The applicant must have special skills at the college or university level and at least three years of relevant working experience at the required level.
- If the applicant does not have special skills at the college or university level, the applicant must have at least five years of relevant working experience at the required level and the applicant must receive remuneration from his or her employer of at least ANG100,000.

- The applicant must possess skills that are scarcely available in Sint Maarten or be employed by the government of Sint Maarten with the salary scale of 11.

The employer must file the application. In principle, the expatriate status applies with retroactive effect to the beginning of the employment if the application is filed within three months after the beginning of the employment.

An employee with the expatriate status can receive limited amounts of fringe benefits tax-free, such as wages in kind, travel expenses, hotel expenses and expenses with respect to means of transportation and relocation. The remainder of the compensation paid to the expatriate by the employer is taxed at the progressive income tax rates (see Rates). In addition, a net employment contract can be entered into with the expatriate, and the wage tax should then not be grossed up as an additional benefit received from employment.

Rates. Resident and nonresident individuals are subject to income tax at the same progressive rates. The following are the individual income tax rates and tax brackets for the 2021 fiscal year (at the time of writing, the 2022 tax rates and credits had not yet been published).

Taxable income		Tax on lower	Tax rate

Local interest is taxed at a rate of 6.25% (including surcharges).

If the taxable income is equal or less than the minimum wage, tax is not imposed on the taxable income.

Relief for losses. Individual taxpayers may carry losses forward for five years.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

Inheritance and gift tax is levied on all property bequeathed or donated by an individual who is a resident or deemed to be a resident of Sint Maarten at the time of death or donation. For individuals who are nonresidents at the time of death or donation, inheritance and gift tax is levied on real estate located in Sint Maarten only. The tax is payable by the heir or the recipient of the gift, regardless of his or her place of residence.

Inheritance and gift tax rates range from 2% to 24% of the value of the taxable estate or the donation, less deductions. The rates vary, depending on the applicable exemptions and the relationship of the recipient to the deceased or the donor. In general, the following rates apply.

Relationship of recipient	Rate (%)
Spouse or child	2 to 6
Brother or sister	4 to 12
Parent or grandparent	3 to 9
Niece, nephew or grandchild	6 to 18
Other	8 to 24

Notwithstanding the above, the tax rate is 25% for a donation from a resident to a private foundation.

C. Social security contributions

All resident individuals must pay social security contributions. The contributions provide benefits under the General Old Age Pension Ordinance (AOV), the General Widows and Orphans Ordinance (AWW) and the General Insurance Extraordinary Sickness Ordinance (AVBZ). Contributions to the health insurance (ZV) and disability insurance (OV) are also due on salaries up to a certain threshold (ANG5,170.08 per month for 2021). In addition, employers must pay a severance contribution (cessantia) fee of ANG40 (2021) per employee per year.

The total AOV/AWW contributions due annually are 14% of earnings, up to a maximum amount of earnings of ANG117,091.61 for 2021. Premiums are paid partly by the employer if an individual is employed. For AOV and AWW, employers contribute 7.5% of salary and employees contribute 6.5%. For AOV and AWW, self-employed persons pay a total of 14%, up to a certain maximum amount of contributions per year, but different percentages are applied, depending on the amount of income.

For AVBZ, the following are the contributions:

- Employers: 0.5% of salary
- Employees: 1.5% of salary
- Self-employed persons: 2% of earnings
- Pensioners: 1.5% of pension income if the amount of the annual income exceeds ANG10,000 or 1% of pension income if the amount of the annual income does not exceed ANG10,000

The rates of contributions for AVBZ are applied to taxable income, up to a certain maximum amount (for 2021, ANG428,626).

The total rate of required ZV contributions for employees and self-employed individuals amounts to 12.5%. The contributions are partly paid by the employer (8.3%) and partly by the employee (4.2%). The rate of required disability insurance (OV) contributions for employees and self-employed individuals varies between 0.5% and 5%, depending on the applicable risk category; the contribution is fully payable by the employer. The OV and ZV contributions are due on salaries up to a certain maximum amount (ANG5,651 per month for 2021).

In general, nonresidents earning income from employment in Sint Maarten are subject to social insurance contributions.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Filing and payment. Because the wage tax is a pre-levy to the income tax, employers must file wage withholding tax returns on a monthly basis. The wage tax return must be filed before the 16th day of the month following the month in which the salaries are paid to employees. For most employees, wage withholding tax is the final tax. Personal income tax returns for the calendar year must be filed within two months after the issuance of the tax return forms, unless an extension for filing is obtained. Any additional income tax to be paid is normally due within two months after the date of the final assessment.

Filing income tax return together with spouse. If both spouses earn income, married persons are taxed separately on the following types of income:
- Employment income
- Self-employment and business income
- Certain periodic allowances, including old-age pensions, alimony and disability allowances

Investment income, including rental income, dividends and interest on bonds, is included in the taxable income of the spouse who has the higher individual income or, if both spouses earn the same amount of individual income, in the taxable income of the older spouse. Personal deductions must be claimed by the spouse with the higher individual income, or if both spouses earn the same amount of individual income, by the older spouse.

Social security payments. Social security contributions are withheld by the employer and are declared in the wage tax returns. Individuals receiving other types of income must pay social security contributions within two months after the date of an assessment.

Filing inheritance tax return. An inheritance tax return must be filed within six months after the date of death. A gift tax return must be filed within three months after a gift is made. Both inheritance and gift tax must be paid within two months after the date of assessment.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Sint Maarten has entered into double tax treaties with the Netherlands (including the BES-Islands) and Norway. The double tax treaty with the Netherlands entered into force on 1 March 2016 and is applicable as of 1 January 2017. The Tax Regulation for the Kingdom of the Netherlands remains in force between Sint Maarten and Aruba and Sint Maarten and Curaçao. Sint Maarten's double tax treaties apply to taxes on income, capital, inheritances and gifts. If no double tax treaty applies, in general, the Tax Office allows foreign taxes paid to be deducted as expenses from taxable income.

Sint Maarten entered into bilateral agreements with the EU member states with respect to the application of the EU Council Directive on the taxation of savings income. The Sint Maarten law to implement the directive took effect in July 2006.

Sint Maarten has entered into tax information exchange agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Antigua and Barbuda
Argentina*
Australia
Bermuda
Costa Rica*
Denmark
Faroe Islands
Finland
France
New Zealand
St. Kitts and Nevis
St. Lucia
St. Vincent and the Grenadines

British Virgin Islands*	Greenland	Spain
Canada	Iceland	Sweden
Cayman Islands	India*	United Kingdom
	Mexico	United States

* This agreement has not yet entered into force.

Sint Maarten has committed itself to automatic exchange of information under the Common Reporting Standard as of 2018 with respect to the year 2017.

F. Residency and working permits

In general, foreign individuals who wish to reside and work in Sint Maarten need residency and working permits. The conditions for obtaining such permits depend on the nationality of the individual. Special provisions apply to individuals holding a Dutch passport.

Wealthy individuals (Investors) who meet certain conditions are granted through a simplified procedure a residency permit known as an Investors Permit. The permit allows an Investor a legal stay in Sint Maarten of, in principle, up to 120 days a year. A stay of the Investor exceeding 120 days a year is not prohibited, but may result in the Investor being considered a resident taxpayer with respect to Sint Maarten.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Slovak residents are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on their Slovak-source income only.

An individual is considered a Slovak tax resident if any of the following conditions is met:
- The individual has accommodation available in the Slovak Republic that is not used for occasional purposes and at the same time has economic and personal ties with the Slovak Republic.
- The individual has a permanent residency in the Slovak Republic.
- The individual is physically present (that is, usually staying) in the Slovak Republic for at least 183 days in a calendar year. For purposes of the 183-day test, each whole or partial day spent in the Slovak Republic during the calendar year counts toward the number of days. The 183-day test does not apply to the following individuals:
  - Individuals staying in the country to study
  - Individuals present in the country for medical treatment

Individuals assigned by a foreign employer to the Slovak Republic who continue to be employed and paid by the foreign employer and who perform work for and under the instruction of a Slovak resident individual or legal entity are deemed to be employed by the Slovak resident individual or legal entity and subject to monthly withholding of personal income tax from their employment income.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Employment income includes salaries, wages, bonuses, other regular, irregular or one-off compensation of a similar nature and most benefits-in-kind. Employment income also includes fees paid to directors and partners of limited liability companies and to limited partners of limited partnerships. Income received by a professional sportsperson on the basis of a player contract is also considered to be employment income.

Self-employment and business income. Taxable self-employment and business income consists of income from business activities and professional services. This income may be decreased by deductible expenses. A notional expenses deduction of 60% of taxable income and up to a maximum of EUR20,000 per tax period is available for non-VAT payers. Nonresidents are subject to tax on their Slovak-source business income only.

Rental income, including income from the rental of real estate and movable assets representing appurtenances of the real estate is taxed as self-employment and business income. As a result, expenses can be deducted from such income. A notional expenses deduction and loss carryforward are not possible for rental income.

Investment income. Investment income from Slovak sources, including interest and other income derived from securities, and payments made from supplementary pension insurance schemes is generally subject to a 19% withholding tax. This withholding tax is considered a final tax, and the income is not included in the tax base.

Investment income is not included in the tax base subject to the progressive tax rates (see Rates). It constitutes a separate tax base (few exemptions applicable), which is subject to a flat tax rate of 19% (that is, without application of tax progression).

Dividends. Dividends distributed from profits for accounting periods starting before 31 December 2003 or starting after 31 December 2016 are subject to tax (dividends distributed from profits in other periods might be subject to Slovak health insurance contributions). Slovak tax residents who participate in the registered capital of the company (regardless of where the legal seat is registered) are generally taxed at 7% on their dividend income. However, a tax rate of 35% applies on dividend income from jurisdictions that have not entered into a double tax treaty or tax administrative treaty with the Slovak Republic (that is, jurisdictions that are not included in the white list published by the Slovak Ministry of Finance). Dividend income should be taxed via withholding tax if its source is in the Slovak Republic, or via a tax return if its source is abroad.

Income from controlled foreign companies. As of 1 January 2022, the application of the rules for controlled foreign companies (CFCs) is extended to include individuals who are tax residents of the Slovak Republic.

An individual's income derived from CFCs should be included in a special tax base for a period that corresponds to the end of the CFC's tax period; that is, when the potential claim of the taxpayer arises, not at the time of actual income payment. The income concerned should be subject to a tax rate of 25% or 35%.

Legal entities or subjects with head offices in foreign jurisdictions should be considered CFCs if the following conditions are met:
- It is taxed at an effective rate below 10% or is a taxpayer in a non-cooperating state (not included in a so-called whitelist of the Slovak Ministry of Finance).
- An individual, who is a tax resident of the Slovak Republic, alone or with other related parties, has effective control or at least 10% participation in it.

The CFC rules will apply for the first time to income attributable to a taxpayer from the economic result of a CFC for the fiscal period ending during 2022.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. For employer-provided stock options granted after 31 December 2009, the taxable amount equals the higher market price of the stock at the exercise date (that is, on the day on which the option is actually exercised) minus the sum of the following:
- The guaranteed exercise price of the employee’s stock
- The price paid by the employee for the option (if any)

The above amount is taxable on the exercise date. Employer-provided stock options are treated as employment income and taxed through payroll withholdings at the regular income tax rate in the month of exercise.

The income from stock options granted by employers before 31 December 2009 is taxed on the vesting date (that is the date on which the option can be exercised) under the rules applicable until 31 December 2009.

Capital gains derived from the sale of shares acquired under an option plan are calculated as the difference between the sales price and the market price on the exercise date (vesting date for options granted before 31 December 2009). These gains are subject to tax at the regular rate (see Capital gains).

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from the sale or exchange of property are taxed as ordinary income at the regular income tax rate (see Rates). In general, capital gains derived from the sale of real estate or personal property are exempt from income tax if relevant conditions stipulated in the law are met (for example, the minimum required holding period). Business assets generally do not qualify for exemption.

Income derived from the sale of securities that are traded on a regulated market or similar foreign market for at least one year is exempt from tax if the period between acquisition and sale of the securities exceeds one year and if such securities had not been included in the business assets. The exemption also applies to income derived from the sale of options and income from derivative transactions from “long-term investment savings,” which is income that is paid 15 years from the beginning of a long-term investment, if such items had not been included in the business assets of the taxpayer.

In addition, a general tax exemption of up to EUR500 per year applies to capital gains from the sale of securities that would not be otherwise subject to the tax exemption above (shares included in the business assets of the taxpayer, shares that are not traded on regulated market or shares that were sold prior to the end of the one-year time period) if the respective tax-free allowance available to the taxpayer is claimed with respect to this type of income.

Income from the sale or exchange of virtual currencies is subject to the personal income tax at a rate of 19% to 25%. Taxable income is realized by sale of virtual currency, exchange of virtual currency for goods or services, or by exchange of virtual currency for another virtual currency. The income may be reduced by expenses provably incurred to generate the income (for example, acquisition costs of a virtual currency). It is not possible to offset a tax loss against the sale or exchange of a virtual currency with other income; however, losses from the sale or exchange of one virtual currency may be offset against profits from the sale or exchange of another virtual currency in one tax period (a loss carryforward is not possible). Specific rules apply to virtual currencies included in business assets.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Mandatory sickness insurance, health insurance, old-age insurance, disability insurance and unemployment insurance contributions paid by employees (see Section C) are deductible from employment income.

Personal allowances and deductions. All taxpayers, including nonresidents, are entitled to a personal allowance. Taxpayers whose tax base for the calendar year does not exceed 92.8 times the subsistence minimum (EUR19,936.22 for 2021) can deduct a nontaxable amount equal to 21 times the subsistence minimum per taxpayer (EUR4,511.43 for 2021). For taxpayers whose tax base for the calendar year exceeds 92.8 times the subsistence minimum, the nontaxable portion of the tax base gradually decreases depending on the taxpayer's income. Taxpayers who have a tax base for the calendar year higher than EUR37,981.94 are not entitled to any general allowance. Slovak tax residents and Slovak tax nonresidents whose Slovak-source income represents more than 90% of their worldwide income may also claim a spousal allowance for a spouse who has no or limited income of his or her own, who lives with them in the same household and who takes care of infant children living with the taxpayer or the following persons:

- A person receiving compensation for care
- A person who is registered with the Labour Office as unemployed
- A person considered to have a severe disability

The spousal allowance also gradually decreases depending on the taxpayer's and the spouse's income. Individuals whose annual tax base exceeds EUR54,480.88 in 2021 are not entitled to the spousal allowance.

The above personal allowances are deductible from the tax base reported for employment income and self-employment and business income only.

In addition, tax residents and Slovak tax nonresidents whose Slovak-source income represents more than 90% of their worldwide income are entitled to a tax bonus (credit) per dependent child. As of August 2021, taxpayers who are entitled to a child credit according to Slovak tax legislation and who have children above the age of 6 years and up to the age of 15 years should be able to decide whether they will apply the child credit or meal allowance. However, multiple other conditions may apply. Monthly child credit amounts are shown below.

The following are the monthly child credit amounts for the period from 1 January 2021 to 30 June 2021:
- EUR46.44 for one child up to the age of 6 years
- EUR23.22 for one child above the age of 6 years

The following are the monthly child credit amounts for the period from 1 July 2021 to 31 December 2021:
- EUR46.44 for one child up to the age of 6 years
- EUR39.47 for one child above the age of 6 years and up to the age of 15 years
- EUR 23.22 for one child above the age of 15 years

The increased amount of child tax bonus in the amounts of EUR46.44 and EUR39.47 can be applied for the last time in the calendar month in which the child reaches the age of 6 or 15 years, respectively.

Deduction on paid interest. As of 1 January 2018, a tax bonus on interest paid is introduced. In general, it represents a new form of tax advantage for interest paid on housing loans, which replaces the prior governmental mortgage credit support scheme for young people.

An individual is entitled to the tax bonus on the fulfillment of both of the following conditions:
- As of the loan application date, the individual is at least 18 years old and not more than 35 years old.
- The total average monthly income of the individual does not exceed 1.3 times the average monthly wage of an employee in the Slovak economy determined in the year preceding the year in which the loan agreement is concluded.

The taxpayer must claim entitlement to the tax bonus after the end of the tax period through either of the following:
- A simplified tax reconciliation performed by the employer
- A Slovak personal income tax return filed by the individual

The tax bonus is set at 50% of the interest paid in the relevant tax period. However, it may not be more than EUR400 annually and may not exceed the tax liability of the individual.

Business deductions. In general, costs and expenses incurred to generate, assure and maintain taxable income are deductible, including mandatory contributions for social and health insurance. Expenses of a capital nature, penalties other than payments of contractual penalties, income tax and expenses incurred to generate tax-exempt income are not deductible.

As of 1 January 2017, the notional expenses that self-employed individuals can deduct were increased to 60% of total taxable income. At the same time, the maximum limit of tax-deductible notional expenses was increased to EUR20,000 per year. The Amendment to the Income Tax Act has also abolished the obligation to proportionally decrease the amount of tax-deductible expenses if a taxpayer does not conduct business activity during the entire tax period.

Rates. The basic tax rate is 19%. The annual tax base exceeding EUR37,981.94 is taxed at a rate of 25%.

Interest income represents a separate tax base, with a tax rate of 19% without application of tax progression and also dividend income with tax rates 7% and 35% on the dividend income from jurisdictions that have not entered into a double tax treaty or tax administrative treaty with the Slovak Republic.

A tax rate of 15% applies to taxpayers who earned, with respect to a tax period, taxable income not exceeding EUR49,790 from a business or other self-employed activity.

Relief for losses. An individual may carry forward losses incurred in the tax years immediately preceding the year in which he or she first declares a positive tax base. Effective from 2014, historical tax losses incurred in the 2010 through 2013 tax years may be carried forward for a maximum period of four years, proportionally each year. The same rules apply to losses generated in 2014 and future years. In general, losses may not be offset against employment income. Losses incurred after 31 December 2011 can be offset only against self-employment and business income of the taxpayer. Losses incurred from renting a property cannot be used to offset other profits or carried forward.

B. Inheritance and gift taxes

The inheritance and gift taxes were eliminated in 2004.

C. Social and health insurance

Contributions. If an employee is subject to the Slovak social security system, both the employer and the employee must pay social security contributions. Slovak social security contributions consist of sickness, old-age, disability, unemployment, guarantee and accident insurance, and contributions to the reserve fund. In general, every person performing an income-generating activity for which he or she is entitled to a regular monthly compensation (and also irregular for the purposes of pension insurance) subject to income tax is deemed to be an employee for Slovak social security purposes. Rental, capital or other income is not subject to social insurance.

Slovak health insurance contributions are for health care. Individuals having income subject to income tax (including dividends paid to employees not participating in the registered capital of a company that are generated from profits for accounting periods beginning after 1 January 2011, and capital or other income on which the Slovak withholding tax does not apply) is subject to health insurance. Persons acting as members of statutory or supervisory bodies for employers, with a registered seat in the Slovak Republic, are not subject to Slovak health insurance if they do not have permanent residency in the Slovak Republic and are subject to a health insurance system in a non-European Union (EU) state.

The combined rate for the employee's social and health insurance contribution is 13.4% of his or her assessment base, which is, in general, his or her monthly taxable employment income. The employer's contribution rate is 35.2% of the employee's assessment base. The maximum monthly assessment base for all types of insurance (excluding accident insurance and health insurance) equals seven times the average wage in the Slovak economy, that is, EUR7,644 in 2021. The assessment base for accident insurance and health insurance is not limited. This means that the actual health insurance contribution (employers' as well as employees' part) and accident insurance (employers' part only) is calculated based on the total amount of income that is subject to the respective insurance under the Slovak legislation.

The following social security and health insurance rates apply for 2021.

Benefit	Employer %	Employee %	Self-employed individuals %
Sickness insurance	1.4	1.4	4.4
Health insurance (a)	10.0	4.0	14.0
Old-age insurance (b)	14.0	4.0	18.0
Disability insurance	3.0	3.0	6.0
Accident insurance	0.8 (c)	0.0	0.0
Guarantee fund	0.25	0.0	0.0
Reserve fund	4.75	0.0	4.75
Unemployment insurance	1.0	1.0	0.0 (d)
Total	35.2	13.4	47.15

(a) The health insurance contribution cap was eliminated from January 2017, and the amount of health insurance contribution is now computed from the actual amount of income regardless of the total amount of paid income subject to health insurance in the Slovak Republic.

(b) The Slovak old-age contribution consists of two pillars. The contributions are paid to two different social security institutions, which are the state Social Security Agency and one of the commercial pension fund management agencies. The rates shown are the total rates of contributions.

(c) Employers remit accident insurance contributions of 0.8% of the employee's assessment base (no limit applicable).

(d) Self-employed individuals are not required to make contributions for unemployment insurance. If they elect to be insured, they make contributions at a rate of 2% of a self-determined assessment base (within statutory bounds).

Dividends from profits generated in accounting periods beginning after 1 January 2011 are subject to health insurance. For dividends from profits generated in accounting periods beginning between 1 January 2011 and 31 December 2012, a 10% rate and the common maximum assessment basis applies. For dividends from profits generated in accounting periods beginning on or after 1 January 2013, the rate is 14%.

As of 1 January 2017, the obligation to pay health insurance from distributed dividends is abolished. However, the dividend income distributed from profits achieved for tax periods before 1 January 2017 is still subject to the health insurance, with a maximum contribution base amounting to 60 times the average monthly wage (that is, EUR65,520 for 2021).

Dividends paid by joint stock companies (or similar entities established abroad) whose shares are traded on a regulated market (including foreign markets) are exempt from health insurance contributions.

The EU regulations on social and health insurance are binding in the Slovak Republic. Consequently, the respective regulations for European Economic Area (EEA) and Swiss citizens, and the applicable totalization agreements for other foreigners (see Totalization agreements) must be taken into account when determining the social and health insurance obligations of foreign individuals working in the Slovak Republic.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, the Slovak Republic has entered into totalization agreements with the following non-EU jurisdictions.

Australia	Korea (South)	Serbia
Canada	Montenegro	Turkey
Iran (a)	North Macedonia	Ukraine
Israel	Quebec	United States
Japan (b)	Russian Federation	Yugoslavia (c)

(a) This agreement was signed 19 January 2016 and is subject to the ratification process.
(b) This agreement entered into effect on 1 July 2019.
(c) This agreement was entered into between the former Czechoslovakia and the former Yugoslavia in 1957. The Yugoslavia agreement applies to Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Totalization agreements with EU member states continue to be valid. However, effective from 1 May 2004, the EU regulations superseded these agreements.

Under a strict interpretation of the Slovak law, employers from non-EU and non-EEA countries (without a registered seat or a branch in the Slovak Republic) that have employees in the Slovak Republic are required to register for social security purposes in the Slovak Republic, to remit employer and employee contributions to the Slovak social system and to handle the related administration (unless their employees' income is exempt from tax in the Slovak Republic or unless the Slovak Republic has entered into a bilateral agreement with the respective country).

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

In general, individuals who receive income exceeding 50% of the personal allowance (that is, EUR2,255.72 for 2021; see Section A) are required to file a tax return. An exception applies if individuals receive only employment income and/or other income and if all of such income is subject to withholding tax.

Tax returns must be filed by individuals who receive any of the following types of income:
- Income from an employer that is neither a Slovak taxpayer nor a foreign taxpayer under the Slovak tax law
- Foreign-source income (with certain statutory exemptions)
- In-kind compensation, if tax prepayments could not be withheld
- Income other than employment income

In addition, individuals having only employment income who did not request that their employer perform the annual tax reconciliation of their employment income and tax withholdings must file a tax return.

The tax year for individuals is the calendar year. Tax returns for each tax year must be filed within three months after the end of the respective tax year (that is, by 31 March of the year following the tax year). This deadline can be extended by three months on the filing of an announcement with the respective tax authority. If an individual who is a resident for tax purposes in the Slovak Republic receives foreign-source income, the deadline can be extended up to six months (that is, until 30 September) on the filing of an announcement.

Employment income received by 31 January of the following year that relates to the preceding year is regarded as income of the preceding year.

Advance tax payments are withheld monthly by Slovak employers or foreign persons that qualify as foreign payers of tax from all employment compensation paid by or through them. Individuals must make quarterly or monthly advance tax payments for rental and business income, if their last known tax liability exceeded EUR5,000. However, no advance tax payments from such income are paid if an individual also receives employment income that represents more than 50% of his or her personal income (if employment income represents a smaller share, half of the regular amount of advance tax payments is paid).

Individuals performing dependent activities in the Slovak Republic for neither Slovak nor foreign payers of tax must make monthly Slovak tax prepayments based on the actual income received.

In general, married persons are taxed separately on all types of income. The income from joint property, such as interest income or income from the sale or renting of the property, is generally divided between married persons equally, unless agreed otherwise. Related expenses are divided in the same percentage as income.

E. Tax treaties

The Slovak Republic has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions (this list includes the double tax treaties entered into by the former Czechoslovakia, which the Slovak Republic honors).

* This treaty has been ratified by the Slovak Republic but not by Egypt, so it is not yet in effect.

The method of elimination of double taxation is applied based on the tax treaty entered into between the Slovak Republic and the source country. However, for employment income from foreign sources, regardless of the method for the elimination of double taxation provided in the respective tax treaty, Slovak tax residents may apply the exemption method if both of the following conditions are satisfied:

- The income was provably taxed abroad.
- Such treatment is more favorable for the individual.

If the Slovak Republic has not entered into a double tax treaty with the source country, the exemption method can be used for employment income if it is proven that the income was taxed in the source country.

F. Entry visas

Foreigners coming from EU and non-EU jurisdictions must comply with the immigration requirements.

Citizens of the EU/EEA and Switzerland. Citizens of the EU/EEA and Switzerland holding a valid identification card or passport or any other document proving their identity are entitled without any conditions or formalities to stay in the Slovak Republic for three months from the date of entry into the Slovak Republic. They are only required to notify the Foreigner Police about the stay in the Slovak Republic within 10 workdays after their entry into the Slovak Republic. For a stay exceeding 90 days, citizens of EU/EEA or Switzerland must register with the Foreigner Police. This registration needs to be submitted to the Foreigner Police within 30 days after the end of the three-month period beginning on the date of entry into the Slovak Republic. No visa or work permits are required for citizens of EU/EEA or Switzerland.

Non-EU nationals. Foreign nationals residing in jurisdictions for which a visa is not required can enter the Slovak Republic without a visa and stay in the Slovak Republic for up to 90 days during a 180-day period. After their arrival in the Slovak Republic, they must register with the Foreigner Police within three days (unless they stay in a hotel; in such case, the hotel automatically processes the registration).

This possibility of staying in the Slovak Republic without a visa does not apply to non-EU nationals who work or perform other economic activities in the Slovak Republic. These individuals need a proper type of work or entrepreneur visa unless they meet certain conditions to avoid this obligation.

For all non-EU nationals, a stay longer than 90 days in a 180-day period is possible only with a long-term visa or relevant residence permit.

Foreign nationals residing in jurisdictions for which a visa is required must have a valid visa to enter the Slovak Republic. These non-EU nationals must submit an application for a visa three months before arrival in the Slovak Republic at the earliest.

Schengen visa. A Schengen visa is a short-term visa issued by the appropriate authorities to an individual for visiting or traveling within the Schengen area. Depending on the type of visa issued by the embassy or consulate of a Schengen country, different restrictions may apply to the particular visa based on the nature of the travel and other relevant circumstances. The most common type of visa issued to travelers can have a duration of a maximum of 90 days in every 180-day period beginning from the date of entry. The Schengen visa can be issued for single, double or multiple entries. It cannot be used for employment activity.

Long-term visa. A long-term visa or national visa is granted for the purpose of granting temporary residence in the Slovak Republic. This visa allows the individual to travel to Schengen countries under the condition that the presence of the individual does not exceed 90 days within a six-month period.

G. Working in the Slovak Republic

Work permits. The Act on Employment Services regulates the employment of foreigners in the Slovak Republic. Non-EU nationals must request permission to work in the Slovak Republic at the locally competent Office of Labour, Social Affairs and Family of the Slovak Republic. The office may require from the employer a written request for permission to employ a foreigner. An employer must report a job vacancy to the Central Labour Office at least 20 working days before applying for the job permission. The process of reporting job vacancies can be omitted; however, this applies only for selected professions in regions with low unemployment rates as indicated by labor inspectorates.

EU Blue Card. The Blue Card is a type of temporary residence, which is issued to non-EU nationals for the purpose of highly qualified employment in the Slovak Republic. The basic requirement for acquiring the Blue Card is higher professional qualification in the form of university education. In addition, the agreed-upon salary must not be lower than 1.5 times the wage in the Slovak national economy in the relevant field, and an employment contract must be concluded for the duration of at least one year. A Blue Card entitles an individual to enter, reside and work in the Slovak Republic and to travel abroad and back. The application for the Blue Card generally must be submitted at the diplomatic mission of the Slovak Republic for a non-EU national's country of citizenship or his or her country of residence. If a non-EU national resides legally in the Slovak Republic, the application may be submitted at the competent Foreigner Police for the place of residence. An employer must report a job vacancy to the Central Labour Office at least 15 working days before applying for the Blue Card. The employer must notify the Central Labour Office of the commencement and termination of the employment of a non-EU national within seven days. The Blue Card is issued for a maximum period of four years. If the duration of the employment relationship is shorter than four years, the Foreigner Police issues a Blue Card for the duration of the employment relationship extended by 90 days.

Self-employment. To engage in activities that have the characteristics of a trade, an individual must apply for a trade license. This is an authorization to conduct activities that fall into the scope of a trade or business and is valid for the entire territory of the Slovak Republic. A sole trader is personally liable without limit for all debts incurred by his or her business. This applies to all of his or her assets (including private property). The acquisition of a trade license does not always enable an individual to legally start running a business in the Slovak Republic. Depending on the individual's citizenship and type of residence in the Slovak Republic, in certain cases, an individual may not start conducting a business until he or she obtains temporary residence for the purpose of business and/or registers with the Commercial Register.

Intra-company transfer. The recent amendment (to the Act on Residence of Foreigners, effective from 1 May 2017) involved national transposition of Directive 2014/66/EU on the conditions of entry and residence of third-country nationals in the framework of an intra-corporate transfer (also known as the ICT Directive). The purpose of this amendment is to facilitate mobility and accelerate the procedure for granting temporary residence permits for selected categories of employees who are nationals of third countries. These are the cases with an employer established outside of the EU that transfers an employee for more than 90 days, up to three years for managers and specialists and up to one year for trainees, to a branch within an EU member state (including those covered by the EEA Agreement and the Swiss Confederation). However, once the EU member state implements the terms of the ICT Directive, the third-country nationals with an ICT permit issued in any EU member state (the location of first temporary residence) can enter, stay and work in one or more additional member states that have also implemented the ICT into local law, with little or no interruption to their secondment and vice versa. The main benefit of these new rules is to reduce the administrative burden associated with intra-corporate transfers of workers from non-EU third countries to EU member states. As of 1 May 2018, the secondment of third-country nationals directly by their employer established outside the EU to the Slovak Republic is possible only through the ICT procedure.

H. Temporary and permanent residence permits

Temporary residence. Various types of temporary residence are available for foreigners, depending on the type of their activity in the Slovak Republic (e.g., long-term study, research and development activities, employment). Family members joining a non-EU national for a period longer than 90 days must request temporary residence for the purpose of reunion of the family. This request must be submitted at an embassy of the Slovak Republic or at the Foreigner Police in the Slovak Republic. On the granting of a temporary residence permit, the foreigner must arrange for health insurance to cover any medical costs and expenses.

Permanent residence. A permanent residence permit grants a foreign national right to reside in the Slovak Republic and to travel abroad and back to the Slovak Republic. Foreign nationals with a permanent residence permit enjoy the same rights and duties as all Slovak citizens in most areas of life (for example, employment, health care and social affairs). The following are the three types of permanent residence:
- Permanent residence for five years
- Permanent residence for an unlimited time period
- Long-term residence for an unlimited time period

One of these types of permanent residence may also be obtained for the purpose of family reunion.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are subject to income tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to income tax on income from sources in Slovenia. Employment income and income from the performance of services and business income are considered to be derived from sources in Slovenia if the employment, services and business are carried out in Slovenia. In addition, income is deemed to be derived from a source in Slovenia if it is paid or borne by a Slovenian tax resident.

An individual is considered to be resident for tax purposes in Slovenia if, during the fiscal year, he or she fulfills any of the following conditions:

- He or she has an officially registered permanent residence in Slovenia.
- His or her habitual abode or center of personal and economic interests is located in Slovenia.
- He or she is present in Slovenia for a total of more than 183 days.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Employment income includes all income that a person receives from the employer or other person with respect to either past or present employment. Employment income includes salary, holiday bonus, fringe benefits and directors' fees. Benefits provided to family members of employees are considered to be employees' benefits.

Business income. Business income includes income derived from performance of business activities and income from individual business transactions. Taxable business income is the difference between gross business income and the expenses necessary to generate business income.

Income from agricultural activities and forestry. Income from primary agricultural and primary forestry activity is attributed to a person who has the right to use the land that is recorded in the land register as agricultural land or a forest (cadastral income).

The tax base for cadastral income is the deemed income from the land determined under the relevant regulations.

Income from property leases. Income from property leases includes income from leases of immovable and movable property. In the determination of the tax base, standard costs of 15% are deducted from the income received. Instead of deducting standard costs, individuals may opt to deduct the actual costs for the maintenance of property to preserve its usable value. Income from property leases is taxed at a flat rate of 27.5% and is treated as final tax.

Income from transfers of property rights. Income from transfers of property rights includes income derived from the conveyance of the right to use the following:
- Material copyrights
- Material rights of the operator
- Inventions
- Appearance of a product
- Distinguishing signs
- Technical improvements
- Plans
- Formulas
- Methods
- Similar rights or similar property and information about industrial, commercial or scientific experience, regardless of whether they are legally insured
- Personal names
- Pseudonyms
- Images

To determine the tax base, income is reduced by 10% of standard costs unless the holder of the right is not its author, operator, or inventor. Standard costs are not recognized in the conveyance of the right to use a personal name, pseudonym or image. An advance payment of income tax equaling 25% of the tax base is payable.

Income from capital. Income from capital includes dividends, interest and capital gains.

Income from dividends includes dividends and other income derived from ownership of shares. Tax on dividends is also payable on the following:
- Hidden profit distributions
- Gains that are distributed with respect to debt securities
- Income received on the basis of profit sharing of mutual funds

Income similar to dividends, which is taxed in the same manner as dividends, includes income derived from sales of products and services at lower than market prices to shareholders and their family members and debt cancellations. A flat tax of 27.5% is imposed on dividends and is treated as final tax.

Interest income includes the following:
- Interest on loans, debt securities, bank deposits, deposits with savings banks and other similar financial claims
- Income from life insurance policies
- Income from financial leases
- Interest income received by unit holders from mutual funds that make payments on the basis of income sharing

Interest on deposits at banks and saving banks established in Slovenia or other European Union (EU) member states of up to EUR1,000 is not included in the tax base. Interest income is taxed at a flat rate of 27.5%.

An individual who is resident in a EU member state other than Slovenia is not subject to personal income tax on savings with a source in Slovenia to which the automated information exchange system between the EU member states applies.

Capital gains. Capital gains include the following:
- Gains from the disposal of immovable property regardless of whether the condition of the property is changed or unchanged at the time of disposal
- Gains from the disposal of securities and shares issued by companies and other entities
- Gains from investment coupons

The tax base for capital gains is the difference between the value of the capital at the time of disposal and the value of the capital at the time of acquisition. Standard costs are recognized for acquisition and disposal costs and reduce the tax base.

Capital gains are taxed at a flat rate of 27.5% with a reduction of the tax rate for every completed five-year period of ownership of the capital. As a result, the following are the tax rates:
- 20% after 5 years
- 15% after 10 years
- 10% after 15 years

Other income. Other income includes awards, gifts, prizes from prize drawings, student grants and similar items. An advance payment of income tax equaling 25% of the tax base is payable. The 25% advance payment is withheld at source unless the payer of the income is a nonresident or an individual. In such cases, the recipient of the income must file a prepayment tax return.

Deductions. For 2021, residents may claim as deductions the following annual tax reliefs:
- General relief of EUR3,500 if no other residents claim dependent family member relief with respect to the taxpayer. If the annual tax base is lower than EUR13,316.83, the tax relief is increased and calculated using the following formula: Total allowance = 18,700.38 – (1.40427 x total income). If the annual tax base is lower than EUR11,166.37, the tax relief is increased to EUR6,519.82.
- Dependent family member relief of EUR2,436.92.
- Relief of EUR2,436.92 for the first, EUR2,649.24 for the second, EUR4,418.54 for the third, EUR6,187.85 for the fourth and EUR7,957.14 for the fifth dependent child.
- Relief of EUR8,830 for dependent children in need of special care.
- If certain conditions are met, relief of EUR17,658.84 for disabled persons with a severe physical disability.
- Relief of EUR3,500 for a student if no other residents claim dependent family member relief with respect to the taxpayer and if other conditions are met.

- Special tax relief for assignees in the maximum annual amount of EUR12,000 if the following conditions are met:
  - The assignment is longer than 30 days.
  - The prior working location was more than 200 kilometers from the assignment location.
  - The monthly salary received during the assignment is at least 1.5 times higher than the average annual salary in the previous year divided by 12 months.
  - The individual was not a tax resident of the host country five years prior to the assignment.
- For self-employed cultural workers or journalists earning annual income up to EUR25,000, a deduction equal to 15% of their annual income.

Nonresidents of Slovenia who are tax residents of other EU or European Economic Area (EEA) member states may apply the general relief and relief for dependent family members in their annual income tax return if they can demonstrate that at least 90% of their entire taxable income in a tax year is derived in Slovenia and if they can prove that the income was exempt from tax or not taxed in their country of residence.

Rates. Employees are subject to monthly employer withholding tax on salaries at rates ranging from 16% to 50%. Temporary workers are subject to a 25% withholding tax on income earned from the performance of work and services, reduced by 10% of standardized material costs. Payments on the basis of work contracts are subject to an additional tax at a rate of 25%, paid by the employer.

Individuals aggregate their active income (that is, employment income, business income, income from agricultural activities and forestry, rental income and income from transfer of property rights), apply the progressive tax rates below, subtract tax withheld and paid during the year and then pay any balance due or request a refund of any overpayment.

Individuals are subject to tax at the following progressive rates for income earned in 2021.

Taxable income
Exceeding EUR	Not exceeding EUR	Rate %
0	8,500	16
8,500	25,000	26
25,000	50,000	33
50,000	72,000	39
72,000	—	50

Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

Relief for losses. Losses incurred by a private business may be carried forward for an unlimited number of years.

B. Other taxes

Inheritance and gift taxes. Resident individuals who inherit, or who receive as a gift, immovable or movable properties in Slovenia are subject to tax. Movable property received is not subject to the tax if it does not exceed the value of EUR5,000.

The taxable value for inheritance or gift tax is the current market value of the property, less transaction costs and any liabilities attached to the property. The inheritance and gift tax rates depend on the taxable value of the property and on the beneficiary's relationship to the deceased or donor. Beneficiaries are divided into the following categories.

Class	Beneficiaries
I	Spouses, children and their spouses, and stepchildren
II	Parents and siblings and their descendants
III	Grandparents
IV	All others

Class I beneficiaries are not subject to inheritance or gift tax. In addition, beneficiaries in any other class who inherit or receive a residence, and who have no other residence and were living in the household of the deceased or donor at the time of the death or gift, are not subject to inheritance or gift tax.

The rates for Class II beneficiaries range from 5% to 14%, for Class III beneficiaries from 8% to 17%, and for Class IV beneficiaries from 12% to 39%.

Property tax. Municipalities determine compensation for the use of building land based on points allocated to each building land. Each municipality has its own scoring system and point value. As a result, the compensation varies based on the location of the building land.

Municipalities tax real estate of higher value at the following progressive tax rates based on the type of real estate:
- Buildings: Tax rates range from 0.1% up to 1% for compensation value over EUR251,170.77.
- Vacation home: Tax rates range from 0.2% up to 1.5% for compensation value over EUR251,170.77.
- Office space: Tax rates range from 0.15% up to 1.25% for compensation value over EUR194,813.91.

Certain properties are exempted from taxation depending on the usage of the property and type of property. Property tax is paid in installments for the year in advance.

Taxes on vessels. Taxes are imposed on vessels that are longer than five meters and satisfy one of the following additional conditions:
- It is entered in the boat/ship register for shipping on the sea and continental waters
- The owner of the vessel is a resident of Slovenia and the vessel fulfills the conditions to be registered as mentioned in the first item above, but it is not registered
- The owner is a resident of Slovenia and the vessel fulfills the conditions to be registered, but is not registered because the ship is already registered abroad

The vehicle taxes do not apply to vehicles performing only registered activities.

The following tables show the rates of the vehicle tax and the additional tax on vehicles.

Length class of the vessels Exceeding Meters	Not exceeding Meters	General tax EUR	Tax per meter of vessel EUR	Tax per kilowatt of power of vessel EUR
5	8	10	2.5	0.5
8	12	15	3.0	1
12	—	20	3.5	2
5	8	2.00	0.50	0.10
8	12	10.00	2.00	1.00
12	—	20.00	3.50	2.00

C. Social security

Slovenia imposes social security taxes to cover health insurance, pension and disability insurance, and unemployment insurance. Each month, employers and employees contribute amounts equal to the percentages of salary shown in the table below. No ceiling applies to the amount of salary subject to the contributions.

Type of contribution	Employer %	Employee %	Total %
Pension and disability insurance	8.85	15.50	24.35
Health insurance	6.56	6.36	12.92
Unemployment insurance	0.06	0.14	0.20
Maternity allowance	0.10	0.10	0.20
Worker's compensation insurance	0.53	0.00	0.53
Total	16.10	22.10	38.20

Self-employed persons must pay all of the above contributions, unless they are also employees. The tax base for the contributions is 60% of the profit generated by the business.

Contributions for health insurance and pension and disability insurance are also levied on contract workers. For contract workers, the rates of health insurance contributions are 6.36% of earned income for employees and 0.53% of earned income for employers. The contributions for pension and disability are 15.5% of earned income for employees who are not covered by pension and health insurance and 8.85% of earned income for employers. Employees who are already covered by pension and health insurance does not need to make contributions for pension and disability.

Contributions paid during the year are considered final payments. As a result, no adjustment or final settlement is made at the end of the year.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Slovenia is the calendar year.

The tax authorities prepare an informative calculation of each individual's personal income tax liability based on the information received from payers of income. Beginning from the date of dispatch of the calculation, the individual has 30 days to object and submit a tax return. If the individual does not object within 30 days, the calculation is deemed to be a tax assessment and the individual is considered to have waived his or her right to appeal.

If a tax resident individual does not receive the calculation by 31 May of the year following the tax year, he or she must complete and submit the tax return by 31 July of the year following the tax year.

Advance payments are due on the receipt of income (see Section A).

The tax is usually payable within 30 days after receipt of the tax assessment. The tax authorities have until 31 October of the year following the tax year to issue the annual tax assessment.

A rental income tax return must be filed by 28 February of the year following the tax year.

Interest received from abroad must be declared to the tax authorities by 28 February of the year following the calendar year.

Capital gains must be reported by 28 February of the year following the calendar year.

A dividend tax return must be filed by 28 February of the year following the calendar year.

G. Work registration, single residence and work permit, and self-employment

Foreigners need a single permit for residing and working in Slovenia if any of the following applies:
• They wish to reside and be employed or perform work, including as self-employed persons.
• They are either posted or transferred to work in Slovenia or perform seasonal work in Slovenia for longer than 90 days.

A single application is filed for obtaining such permit, which means that it is not necessary to first obtain a work permit. However, work permits must be obtained for Bosnia and Herzegovina citizens and for seasonal farm workers who are working up to 90 days.

The initial single permit, which needs to be obtained before entering Slovenia, is issued for the duration of the employment or work contract, but not for longer than one year and can be extended for a maximum of two years if the foreigner and their employer apply for an extension of the single permit by the appropriate time. It can be extended under the same conditions that apply to its issuance.

The single residence and work permit is issued by the administrative office with the consent of the Employment Service of Slovenia. After submitting the application for the single permit, the administrative office automatically begins the process of obtaining consent from the Employment Service of Slovenia. The permit is issued in residence permit card form, on which it is specifically noted that it is the single permit.

A foreigner, his or her employer, or its authorized person may file for an application for the single permit. If the first single permit application is filed by the foreigner, it must be filed at the diplomatic representation or consulate of Slovenia abroad, while an employer or its authorized person may file an application with the administrative office where a foreigner will reside or with the administrative office of where the employer's registered office is located or where the business activity will take place. The single permit application needs to be accompanied by supporting documents proving that the requirements for both residence and employment are met (that is, a foreigner must have a passport with a validity that exceeds the intended residence in Slovenia by at least three months, sufficient funds and adequate health insurance, as well as supporting documents required for a particular type of employment or work (for example, an employment contract or a certificate).

Under the procedure for issuing the single permit, the administrative office obtains data on compulsory health insurance if the foreigner's compulsory health insurance is in Slovenia and data on criminal and minor offenses' records kept in Slovenia. If the criminal and minor offences' records are not available in Slovenia, they should be provided by the foreigner.

A foreign national who establishes a company in Slovenia and intends to run the business as a founder must obtain a personal single permit for self-employment before registering the company.

Employers from EU member states must register job positions at the employment office for persons who are seconded to a subsidiary or branch office in Slovenia. No single permits are required for such persons, but such work needs to be registered at the Employment Service of Slovenia. If a foreigner is not from an EU member state, he or she must obtain a single permit.

The EU Blue Card is introduced for highly qualified employee migrants and entitles its holder to reside and work in the territory of an EU member state.

Workers that are seconded to work in Slovenia must be employed by the seconding company for at least one year before the secondment. This applies to all types of secondments, such as cross-border services, movement within a group of companies and seasonal work.

Citizens of the EU do not need single permits to work in Slovenia. However, the foreign entity must register them at the National Employment Office, specifying where and over what time period the individual will be working.

Because the application process for work permits is time-consuming, applications should be submitted to the appropriate authorities at least two months before the intended start date of employment. Each employment of a foreign national must be registered at the employment office. For EU citizens whose work need only be registered and no single permit is required, the procedure is shorter and simplified, yet it should be completed prior to the start of work.

H. Residence permits

Temporary residence permits. Temporary residence permits are issued with work permits (that is, single residence and work permits) or independently by the Regional Department of Internal Affairs for a period of the intended stay in Slovenia, up to five years (or less if the passport expires before then) in the case of an EU citizen. To apply for a temporary residence permit, the applicant must prove the following:

- The length of his or her intended stay in Slovenia
- Adequate means of support
- Arrangement for health insurance

A foreign person must indicate one of the prescribed reasons for his or her residence in Slovenia, such as employment, work, family reunion or study.

The application for a first residence permit must be filed with the Slovenian embassy in the country of permanent residence. An application for a residence permit for seasonal work can be filed by a foreigner with the Slovenian embassy in a foreign country or by his or her employer in Slovenia or with the embassy abroad. The same application process applies with respect to cross-border services.

The residence permit must be obtained before arrival in Slovenia. After obtaining the residence permit, a foreigner must register his or her address in Slovenia.

Temporary residence permits may be renewed. Applications for renewals must be filed with the authorities before the expiration of the existing permit.

Permanent residence permits. Permanent residence permits are issued to foreign nationals who have lived in Slovenia for five consecutive years under temporary residence permits if other conditions are met.

Permanent residence permits can be issued before five years have elapsed if certain conditions are met (a foreign person of Slovenian origin and family members of a foreign person who has already obtained a permanent residence permit).

A foreign national must file an application for a permanent residence permit with the Regional Department of Internal Affairs in the area where he or she has a permanent place of residence.

EU nationals. An EU citizen may enter Slovenia with a valid identity card or passport and reside in Slovenia for three months without having to register his or her residence. In the event of a prolonged stay in Slovenia (in excess of three months), he or she is required to apply for registration of residence before the expiration of the first three months of his or her residence in Slovenia. Alternatively, he or she may apply for a registration of residence immediately after his or her entry into Slovenia.

A certificate of residence registration may be issued to an EU citizen who intends to or already resides in Slovenia for the purpose of employment or work, self-employment, provisions of services, studying or family reunion, as well as to an EU citizen who wishes to reside in Slovenia for another reason.

An EU citizen, who continuously resides in Slovenia for five years on the basis of a certificate of residence registration, may be granted a permit for permanent residence. This permit is valid for an indefinite time period.

A beneficial regime concerning the entry into and residence in Slovenia applies to family members of EU citizens.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Working spouses of expatriates do not automatically receive the same types of permits as the expatriates. Applications must be filed independently.

Spouses and children of EU nationals who legally reside and work in Slovenia do not need work permits to be legally employed, but must have the approval of the National Employment Office.

Marital property regime. Under the Law on Marriage and Family Relations, a couple's property is presumed to be owned in equal shares. However, the spouses may prove that they did not contribute to the joint property in equal proportions. The law applies to married couples and long-term heterosexual partnerships (common-law spouses). For spouses who are both foreign nationals, Slovenian law does not apply.

Forced heirship. Under Slovenian inheritance law, a specified percentage of a deceased's estate passes to a surviving spouse and children, regardless of the provisions of any will.

Driver's permits. Foreign individuals who possess valid driver's licenses in their home countries may drive vehicles in Slovenia for a period up to 12 months after taking up residence in Slovenia. However, citizens of EU countries may use their home-country driver's licenses during the entire length of their stays in Slovenia without applying for Slovenian licenses. Foreign individuals may apply for a Slovenian driving license within two years after the date of entry into Slovenia. However, even if an individual applies for a Slovenian driver's license within two years, he or she may not drive in Slovenia with his or her home country driver's license after the 12-month grace period.

A Slovenian driver's license may be issued if the applicant submits the application, results of a medical examination, valid foreign driver's license and a fee. The foreign driver's license is sent to the applicant's home country and may be returned to the foreign individual when he or she returns to his or her home country.

This chapter reflects the revised tax rates and thresholds announced in the 2021/2022 budget speech for the period of 1 March 2021 through 28 February 2022.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals resident in South Africa are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on income from a South African source.

The source of remuneration is linked to services rendered and where those services are rendered. In practice, short-term visits of fewer than three weeks do not generally result in South African tax liability if the individual's presence in South Africa is incidental to continuing employment elsewhere and if the income earned falls below the annual tax threshold. Under domestic law, income tax is payable if an individual earns more than ZAR87,300 per year (below the age of 65); ZAR135,150 (ages 65 to 74) and ZAR151,100 (ages 75 and over).

An individual is regarded as a resident for tax purposes under either the ordinarily resident rule or the physical presence rule. Under the ordinarily resident rule, an individual is regarded as resident in South Africa if South Africa is the place, considering all personal and financial circumstances, to which the individual would naturally return from his or her travels, and that is the individual's real home.

The physical presence rule applies if the individual is not ordinarily resident at any time during a particular year, but is physically present for more than 91 days in the relevant year and is physically present for an aggregate of more than 915 days in the preceding 5 tax years (that is, effectively an average of 183 days per year) and for a de minimis period of more than 91 days in each of those preceding years). For purposes of determining the 91-day and 915-day periods, a partial day counts as a full day.

If an individual is physically outside South Africa for a continuous period of at least 330 full days after the day of last physical presence, under the physical presence rule that person is not resident for the entire period of continuous absence.

A person cannot be treated as a South African resident for tax purposes if he or she is considered to be a resident of another country under the "tiebreaker" rules of a double tax treaty applicable to the relevant income item.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. The basis of employee taxation is remuneration, which consists of salary, leave pay, allowances, wages, overtime pay, bonuses, gratuities, pensions, superannuation allowances, retirement allowances and stipends, whether in cash or otherwise. These payments, together with the cash value of any fringe benefits received, form part of the gross income of an employee. Fringe benefits are taxed in accordance with a schedule of valuations.

Remuneration from employment on extended absences outside South Africa is exempt from tax if the employee is outside South Africa for an aggregate of more than 183 full days in any 12-month period and for at least one continuous period exceeding 60 full days during the same 12-month period.

Effective from 1 March 2020, only the first ZAR1.25 million of remuneration with respect to foreign services rendered will be exempt from tax under the foreign employment income exemption. A foreign tax credit can be claimed for foreign taxes paid on foreign employment income in excess of ZAR1.25 million.

Effective 1 March 2017, residents do not qualify for an exemption where a lump sum, pension or annuity is received or accrues from a South African retirement fund, regardless of whether services are rendered outside South Africa. In order for such income to qualify for the exemption, the resident must have rendered services outside South Africa and the lump sum, pension or annuity must be received or accrued from a foreign retirement fund.

Self-employment and business income. Professional fees paid to nonresidents are subject to employees' tax withholding (if from a South African source), even if the nonresident is an independent contractor.

Investment income. Foreign dividends on holdings of less than 10% that are paid to residents are taxable, subject to the provisions of an applicable double tax treaty. Credit for foreign tax paid may be available. Foreign dividends paid on greater holdings are exempt. A portion of the foreign dividend is exempt. The exempt portion of the dividend is determined by multiplying the dividend by a factor that results in a maximum tax rate of 20%, thereby providing a result similar to that produced by the local dividends tax.

Domestic dividends are subject to a final withholding tax of 20%. Royalties paid to nonresidents are subject to a final 15% withholding tax.

For residents, South African-source interest only up to a cumulative ZAR23,800 (ZAR34,500 for individuals older than 65 years of age) is exempt from normal income tax (general interest exemption). Interest derived from investments in qualifying Tax-Free Savings Accounts is exempt from normal income tax.

Capital gains realized with respect to Tax-Free Savings Accounts are not subject to capital gains tax (CGT). Foreign-source interest is subject to income tax.

Nonresidents qualify for a specific exemption from normal income tax on their South African-source interest if they are physically absent from South Africa for a period exceeding 183 days during the 12-month period preceding the date on which on which the interest is received by or accrued to that person.

A final withholding tax of 15% is imposed on South Africa-source interest paid to nonresidents, subject to a reduction in the rate in accordance with double tax treaties. Anti-avoidance legislation restricts spouses from splitting their investment income to reduce their tax burden.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options and other incentive plans. The difference between the market value of shares and similar rights as of the date of vesting for tax purposes and the consideration given by the employee is taxed in South Africa if, in the case of nonresidents, the incentive is related to services rendered in South Africa. Vesting for tax purposes differs from vesting for plan purposes. Vesting for tax purposes occurs when all restrictions on the equity instrument have been lifted or cease to have effect.

Residents are taxable on the entire gain, regardless of source, unless they are exempt under the foreign employment income exemption. Any subsequent gain on actual disposal is generally subject to CGT. However, if the resident is classified as a share dealer, the gain is subject to income tax instead of CGT.

Nonresidents are subject to income tax on that part of the gain that relates to the period of South African service. Nonresidents are generally not subject to CGT on any subsequent gain on actual disposal. However, if a nonresident employee is classified as a share dealer, the gain is subject to income tax.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Expenses not of a capital nature that are incurred in the production of income are generally deductible. However, restrictions apply in the case of employment income. Donations to public benefit organizations are deductible by individuals up to 10% of taxable income, before medical expenses and donations. Donations in excess of 10% may be carried forward to the following year to be deducted as part of the 10% limit for such year.

Employer contributions to South African-registered pension, provident and retirement annuity funds are included in an individual's taxable income as a taxable fringe benefit and deemed to be a contribution made by the individual.

For defined contribution funds, the value of the fringe benefit equals the actual employer contribution. For funds other than defined contribution funds, the value of the fringe benefit is calculated in accordance with a formula.

Individuals are allowed to claim a deduction for contributions to pension, provident and retirement annuity funds. The deduction is limited to the lesser of ZAR350,000 or 27.5% of the higher of "remuneration" (as defined in the legislation) or "taxable income" (as defined in the legislation).

The tax treatment of employer contributions and individual deductions apply only to approved retirement funds in South Africa. Currently, employer contributions to foreign funds are not treated as a taxable benefit in the hands of the employee, and the employee may not claim a deduction with respect to any such contributions, unless it is specifically provided in a double tax treaty and approval is obtained from the authorities.

Mortgage interest paid is not deductible for tax purposes unless the individual leases the mortgaged property for trade purposes.

Individuals may claim medical scheme tax credits (that is, for set off against tax calculated on taxable income) for contributions (personal and those of their employers) toward private or state medical benefit funds (medical aid), subject to the following maximum amounts for the 2021-22 tax year:
- ZAR332 each per month for the fund member and his or her spouse
- A further ZAR224 per month for each additional dependent

Additional relief for the excess medical contributions and qualifying medical expenses incurred is available, subject to stringent limitations based on the taxpayer's age and disabilities.

With the exception of taxpayers who retired from employment as a result of old age, ill health or infirmity, employer contributions toward medical aid are considered to be taxable fringe benefits, but the medical tax rebate referred to above applies.

Personal tax rebates and thresholds. For the 2021-22 tax year, a primary rebate of ZAR15,714 is deducted from tax payable on taxable income. An additional rebate for individuals who are at least 65 years old and under 75 years old is ZAR8,613. A further tertiary rebate of ZAR2,871 is for individuals who are age 75 or older.

Individuals younger than 65 years old who have taxable income of less than ZAR87,300 are not subject to tax. For individuals who are at least 65 years old and under 75 years old, the threshold is ZAR135,150. For individuals who are age 75 or older, the threshold is ZAR151,100.

Rates. All individuals are taxed at the same rates. The rates for the 2021-22 tax year are presented in the following table.

Taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding ZAR	Not exceeding ZAR	amount ZAR	excess %
0	216,200	0	18
216,200	337,800	38,916	26
337,800	467,500	70,532	31
467,500	613,600	110,739	36
613,600	782,200	163,335	39
782,200	1,656,600	229,089	41
1,656,600	—	587,593	45

Relief for losses. Business losses of a self-employed person may be carried forward indefinitely if the trade is continued. No loss carrybacks are permitted.

B. Other taxes

Capital gains tax. Capital gains are taxable in South Africa. Capital gains tax (CGT) is imposed through the income tax system by including a portion of the calculated gain in taxable income. For residents, CGT applies to capital gains derived from the disposal of worldwide tangible and intangible assets. Nonresidents are subject to CGT on capital gains derived from the disposal of real estate held directly by the nonresident or indirectly through a company or trust (if 80% of the value is attributable to real estate), or the assets of a permanent establishment in South Africa. A deemed capital gain arises on the loss of tax resident status.

For individuals, a ZAR40,000 annual exemption of capital gains or reduction in capital losses is allowed. Only 40% of capital gains (after the exemption) is taken into account for CGT purposes. Consequently, the effective CGT rate for an individual taxed at the highest marginal income tax rate of 45% is 18% (40% x 45%).

CGT applies only to increases in value occurring on or after 1 October 2001 and a formula calculation or a formal valuation is used to determine the base value at that date. Inflation indexing of base cost is not allowed. Rollover relief is available in certain circumstances, including the destruction or scrapping of assets. A gain derived from the sale of an individual's primary residence is not subject to CGT unless the amount of the gain exceeds ZAR2 million.

Capital losses, other than those incurred on the disposal of personal-use assets (assets used primarily for purposes other than the carrying on of a trade), may offset capital gains. However, net capital losses may not be offset against regular taxable income. Excess losses may be carried forward indefinitely to offset future gains (subject to the ZAR40,000 annual reduction, which is discussed above).

Estate duty and donations tax. Estate duty and donations tax are levied at a flat rate of 20% on net assets at death and all capital transfers concluded for no consideration or for inadequate consideration.

Effective from 1 March 2018, a rate of 25% applies to donations exceeding ZAR30 million and on estates for which the dutiable amount is more than ZAR30 million.

Exemptions from donations tax are granted for donations of up to ZAR100,000 made each year during a person's lifetime. A deceased's estate is subject to duty only to the extent that the net value exceeds ZAR3,500,000 (ZAR7 million for a married couple).

Residents are subject to estate duty and donations tax on worldwide assets, except offshore assets acquired by inheritance or donation from a nonresident or owned prior to becoming resident. Nonresidents are subject to estate duty on assets located in South Africa only and are exempt from donations tax.

To prevent double taxation, South Africa has entered into estate tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Botswana	Lesotho	United States
Eswatini	United Kingdom	Zimbabwe

Transfer duty. Transfer duty is levied on the acquisition of fixed property with a value exceeding ZAR1 million. The rate of the duty on property with a value exceeding ZAR1 million depends on the purchase price of the property; the maximum rate is 13% which applies to property with a value exceeding ZAR11 million. If the purchase price is less than the property's fair value, the tax authorities may calculate the amount of transfer duty payable based on the fair value.

C. Social security

South Africa does not have a social security system per se. However, South Africa does have contributions that are similar to social security contributions, such as Unemployment Insurance Fund contributions, Skills Development Levy and Compensation Commission contributions.

Limited unemployment insurance and accident or illness benefits are provided.

The Unemployment Insurance Fund provides benefits to unemployed people and to dependents of deceased contributors. Employers and employees each contribute to the fund at a rate of 1% of the employee's remuneration up to a remuneration limit of ZAR17,712 per month (effective 1 June 2021). Both local and foreign national employees are required to contribute to this fund.

Employers are required to contribute to the Skills Development Levy fund, which was set up to encourage learning and development in South Africa. They contribute 1% of the employer's salary bill. The funds are used to develop and improve skills of employees.

Employers are also required to make contributions to the Compensation Fund, which was created under the Compensation for Injuries and Diseases Act to insure employees against industrial accidents or illnesses that result in death or disability. The Compensation Commissioner determines the amount of the contributions after the employer reports the annual total remuneration of employees.

Contributions to the Compensation Fund are payable on annual remuneration of up to ZAR506,473 for the period of 1 March 2021 through 28 February 2022.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The year of assessment in South Africa is from 1 March to 28 (or 29) February. Nonresidents are subject to the same requirements for filing tax returns as residents. If an individual (resident or nonresident) earns less than ZAR500,000 during a tax year, he or she is not required to file a tax return (subject to certain conditions).

Employees. Under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system, resident employers or agents for nonresident employers must deduct tax monthly from the remuneration of their employees and must pay these amounts to the South African Revenue Service (SARS). If a nonresident employer does not have a place of business in South Africa or an agent who is authorized to pay remuneration, no PAYE liability is likely to arise. However, the foreign employer effectively has an obligation to pay the statutory contributions described above. Annual tax returns must be submitted to the Commissioner for SARS within the period specified in the annual "Notice to Furnish Returns" (this deadline is confirmed annually by the SARS).

Provisional taxpayers. Persons deriving income, excluding exempt income, of ZAR30,000 or more a year from sources other than remuneration or having taxable income in excess of the tax threshold are considered provisional taxpayers and are required to make provisional tax payments each year on 31 August (first payment) and in the following year on 28 February (second payment) and 30 September (third payment). The second provisional tax estimate must be at least 80% of the taxpayer's actual income (90% if less than ZAR1 million) for the year to avoid penalties. The third payment must bring the total amount paid to 100% of actual liability, to avoid an interest penalty.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

In the absence of treaty provisions, unilateral relief (in certain circumstances) is available on foreign-source income in the form of a credit for foreign taxes paid, limited to the lesser of the actual foreign tax liability and the South African tax payable on the foreign income.

(b) This treaty has been ratified or signed by South Africa, but it is not yet effective.

In addition, many treaties are being renegotiated by way of protocol to deal with South Africa's new dividend and interest withholding tax regimes.

F. Visitors' visas

Under Section 11(1) of the Immigration Act No. 13 of 2002, as amended (the Immigration Act), visitors' visas are for international travelers (citizens of other countries) who have permanent residence outside South Africa and who wish to visit the country on a temporary basis for tourism for a period of 90 days or less. The Department of Home Affairs does allow an international traveler who travels to South Africa on a Section 11(1) visitor's visa (tourist visa) to attend limited business meetings or attend a conference or seminar on this visa type.

A visa indicates that an individual's application has been reviewed at a South African embassy, mission or consulate and that the consular officer has determined that the individual is eligible to enter the country (via the dedicated ports of entry) for a specific purpose.

The visa allows an individual to travel to a South African port of entry where an immigration official then determines if the individual is allowed to enter South Africa and how long the individual can stay for that particular visit. Visitors are restricted to the activity or reason for which their visas were issued.

To obtain a visitor's visa for recreational purposes only, proof of sufficient financial means and a return air, boat or bus ticket must be submitted. Individuals who have traveled or who intend to travel through a yellow fever area must produce a yellow fever vaccination certificate. This requirement excludes direct transit through yellow fever areas. Proof of guardianship and custody is required with respect to minor dependent children together with consent from the other parent when traveling with only one parent. A visitor's visa may be renewed only once for a maximum period equal to the original visa. Thereafter, the visitor must depart from the country.

The holder of a passport of certain jurisdictions (subject to change without notice) may be issued a visitor's visa at the port of entry if the intended stay is 90 days or fewer or if the individual is in transit and a return air or other travel ticket is shown.

The holders of a passport from certain jurisdictions (subject to change without notice) are visa-exempt.

The latest list of the visa-exempt nationals can be found on the South Africa Department of Home Affairs website (dha.gov.za).

Nationals from jurisdictions not listed must obtain a visa before traveling to South Africa by contacting the nearest South African mission abroad.

On arrival, a visitor must present his or her passport. The passport must be valid for at least 30 days after the intended departure date. The visitor may need to satisfy the immigration authorities that the visitor has no criminal record, no communicable diseases and sufficient funds to support himself or herself for a reasonable period after arrival. The visitor must also produce a valid return air ticket.

A visitor's visa under Section 11(2) of the Immigration Act, with endorsement to conduct short-term work-related activities (up to 90 days) may be issued to international travelers who are required in South Africa for short-term project work for up to a period of 90 days.

Certain activities need to be approved in advance by applying for the appropriate permission before departure for South Africa for all international travelers applying for a visitor's visa under Section 11(1) or Section 11(2) of the Immigration Act. This applies equally to citizens of visa and non-visa exempt countries. Holders of these visitors' visas may not change the status or condition of their visas while in South Africa and will be required to return to their country of usual residence or origin and apply for a different type of visa abroad. The activities referred to above for these two visa types in this category include the following:
- Visiting South Africa for short-term project work
- Attending short courses at educational institutions
- Performing voluntary or charitable activities
- Conducting research

G. Work visas

Types of work visas. Work visas fall into the following four categories:
- Critical skills work visas
- General work visas
- Intracompany transfer work visas
- Corporate work visas

Critical skills work visas. Subject to any prescribed requirements, a critical skills work visas may be issued to individuals possessing such skills or qualifications determined to be critical for South Africa as per a notice in the Government Gazette. The applicant's foreign tertiary qualifications need to be certified by the South African Qualifications Authority The purpose of the evaluation function is the recognition of foreign qualifications in terms of the South African National Qualifications Framework (NQF). Registration with the relevant professional body is also required. A critical skills work visa is issued for a period not exceeding five years.

General work visas. General work visas are issued to individuals who do not fall in a critical skills category. The South African employer needs to prove through advertisements and interviews that a suitably skilled or experienced South African citizen or permanent resident could not be found to fill the position offered. The applicant's foreign tertiary qualifications need to be certified by the South African Qualifications Authority. The purpose of the evaluation function is the recognition of foreign qualifications in terms of the South African NQF. It is also required that the Department of Labour issue a certificate confirming the following:

- Despite a diligent search, the prospective employer has been unable to find a suitable citizen or permanent resident with qualifications or skills and experience equivalent to those of the applicant.
- The applicant has qualifications or proven skills and experience in line with the job offer.
- The salary and benefits of the applicant are not inferior to the average salary and benefits of citizens or permanent residents occupying similar positions in South Africa.
- The fixed-term employment contract for a period of five years (in line with the issuance of the visa) stipulating the conditions of employment that is signed by both the employer and the applicant is in line with the labor standards in South Africa and is conditioned on the general work visa being approved.

Registration with the relevant professional body is required in some cases. A general work visa is issued for a period not exceeding five years.

Intracompany transfer work visas. Intracompany transfer work visas are issued if an employee is seconded from his or her place of employment abroad to an affiliated company, branch or subsidiary in South Africa for a period of up to four years only and if the foreigner's employment contract with the company abroad is valid for a period of not less than six months before transfer. These types of visas are nonrenewable and may be issued for a period of four years. The intent of this visa category is that the expatriate transfer his or her skills to South African employees and leave South Africa at the end of the four-year secondment. A plan must be developed for the transfer of skills to a South African citizen or permanent resident. The employer's skills transfer plan must accompany the application.

Corporate work visas. Corporate work visas may be issued to a corporate applicant to employ foreigners to conduct work for the applicant in South Africa. No corporate visa may be issued or renewed with respect to any business undertaking that is listed as "undesirable" by the Minister of Home Affairs. The corporate work visa application requires a certificate from the Department of Labour confirming the following:

- Despite a diligent search, the prospective employer has been unable to find a suitable citizen or permanent resident with qualifications or skills and experience equivalent to those of the applicant.
- The job description and proposed remuneration for each foreigner.
- The salary and benefits of any foreigner employed by the corporate applicant is not inferior to the average salary and benefits of citizens or permanent residents occupying similar positions in South Africa.

An applicant for a corporate visa must provide proof that at least 60% of the total staff employed in the operations of the business is citizens or permanent residents employed permanently in various positions. This proof is also required during the duration of the visa.

To qualify, the corporate applicant must conduct business in certain sectors, as published in the Government Gazette.

The immigration authorities determine, in consultation with prescribed departments, the maximum number of foreigners to be employed under a corporate visa.

The corporate applicant must undertake that it will take prescribed measures to ensure that foreign employees comply with the provisions of immigration legislation and the conditions of the corporate visa. In certain circumstances, the corporate applicant may be required to post financial guarantees to defray deportation or other costs in the event that the corporate visa is withdrawn.

A foreigner employed under the terms of a corporate visa must work only for the holder of that corporate visa.

Other requirements. Expatriates may not change employers or terms of employment without prior approval from the immigration authorities. If an expatriate does not comply with the conditions of his or her visa or if he or she contravenes the immigration legislation, the expatriate is classified as an undesirable person.

Employers must make a good faith effort to ascertain that no illegal foreigner is employed by them and to ascertain the status of the visa or citizenship of individuals employed by them.

Employers must keep prescribed records relating to employment up to two years after the termination of a foreigner's employment. The employer must report to the immigration authorities termination of a foreigner's employment and a breach by a foreigner of his or her status.

If an illegal foreigner is found on any premises where a business is conducted, the legislation presumes that the foreigner was employed by the person who has control over the premises, unless evidence to the contrary is provided. Stiff penalties in the form of fines and imprisonment can be imposed on both the employer and employee.

H. Self-employment

A business visa may be issued to a foreigner who intends to establish a business or invest in a business that is not yet established in South Africa.

Appropriate visas are issued to family members accompanying the business owner.

A business visa requires a minimum capital investment of ZAR5 million derived from abroad that is invested and retained in the book value of the business.

The business must comply with any relevant registration requirements of the SARS, Unemployment Insurance Fund, Compensation Fund for Occupational Injuries and Diseases, Companies and Intellectual Properties Commission and any relevant professional body, board or council recognized by South African Qualifications Authority.

The applicant must make an undertaking that at least 60% of the total staff to be employed in the operations of the business will be South African citizens or permanent residents employed permanently in various positions and submit proof of compliance with this undertaking within 12 months of issuance of the visa.

Confirmation of continued compliance with immigration legislation is required on a biannual basis.

A business visa may be issued for a period not exceeding three years at a time.

I. Other temporary residence visas

The following temporary residence visas may be issued:

- Study visa for individuals wishing to study in South Africa
- Dependent visa (visitor's visa) for a spouse and minor children of an assignee who holds a valid work or business visa to accompany the assignee

- Spouse visa (Section 11(6) visitor's visa) for a spouse of a South African citizen or permanent residence holder
- Retired persons' visa for individuals intending to spend part or all of their retirement in South Africa (work not permitted)

- Individuals who have a net worth of at least ZAR12 million and pay a fee to the Department of Home Affairs of ZAR120,000 on approval of the application
- Individuals who derive an income of at least ZAR37,000 per month from a pension, irrevocable annuity or retirement account
- Individuals who are refugees referred to in Section 27(c) of the Refugees Act
- Individuals who hold a combination of assets realizing an income of ZAR37,000 per month
- Individuals who are relatives of a South African citizen or resident within the first step of kinship

A permanent residence permit may be withdrawn if the holder is convicted of specified offenses or fails to comply with the requirements of the permanent residence permit. Absence from South Africa of more than three uninterrupted years causes the permanent residence permit to be withdrawn.

K. Undesirable persons

An individual is declared undesirable when he or she overstays the validity of a current permit and leaves South Africa.

An individual who overstays for the first time for a period not exceeding 30 days is declared undesirable for a period of 12 months. An individual who overstays for the second time within a period of 24 months is declared undesirable for a period of two years. An individual who overstays for more than 30 days is declared undesirable for a period of 5 years.

L. Family and personal considerations

Marital property regime. Couples who solemnize their marriages in South Africa are subject to a community property regime that applies to all property. A prenuptial agreement may be concluded if a couple wishes to elect out of the community property regime.

The regime does not apply to couples who do not solemnize their marriages in South Africa or to couples with a non-South African husband, unless they establish a marital domicile in South Africa by seeking a Supreme Court confirmation subjecting the couple to South African marriage legislation.

Forced heirship. South Africa does not have forced heirship rules.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals who are resident for tax purposes are subject to personal income tax (PIT) on their worldwide income while nonresident individuals are taxed on income that is sourced in South Sudan.

A resident individual is an individual who is domiciled in South Sudan or is physically present in South Sudan for 183 days or more in a tax year.

Income subject to tax. Individuals are subject to tax on various types of income, including, but not limited to, the following:
- Wages
- Income from entrepreneurial activities
- Income from the use of movable or immovable property
- Income from the use of intangible property

A recently introduced legislative change applies to individuals who do not receive regular monthly pay (salary). These are individuals who receive wages and individuals who are engaged in entrepreneurial activities. A 20% rate is applied to such income after deducting standard allowable expenses, which are set at 20% of the income. Other deductible expenses include fees paid by the individuals (this most likely would apply in the case of entrepreneurial activities) to relevant local authorities such as ground rates and town rates. These rates are charged by and paid to relevant local authorities in South Sudan to support delivery of services by the local authorities. Personal income tax on employment income (salary) is payable based on the tax rates set forth in the table in Tax rates.

Tax is withheld from dividends, interest, royalties, rent, technical fees (to nonresidents) and government contract payments (see Tax rates).

The following types of income are exempt from income tax:
- Wages received by foreign diplomatic and consular representatives and foreign personnel of liaison offices in South Sudan
- Wages received by foreign representatives, foreign officials and foreign employees of international governmental organizations

- If agreed on with the government of South Sudan, wages received by foreign representatives, foreign officials and foreign employees of donor agencies or their contractors or grantees carrying out humanitarian aid, reconstruction work, civil administration or technical assistance
- Compensation for damages and proceeds of life insurance policies
- Dividends, rent, technical fees, government contract payments and interest income, if tax was withheld at source

Capital gains. Capital gains are recognized as business income. For individuals, capital gains are considered to be gross income subject to personal income tax.

Deductions

Pension deduction. An 8% pension contribution to a government-recognized funded retirement scheme is deductible in determining taxable income.

Business deductions. In general, expenses are deductible only if they are incurred wholly and exclusively to produce taxable income.

Accounting depreciation is not deductible, but capital allowances are available for deduction. A capital allowance is granted on either a straight-line or reducing-balance basis over the useful life of the asset. The assets are classified into the following four classes.

Class	Annual depreciation rate (%)
Buildings and other structures	10
Vehicles, office equipment and computers	33
Other property	25
Intangible assets	10

Tax rates. The following tax rates apply to employment and self-employment income.

Monthly taxable income SSP	Tax rate %	Tax due SSP	Cumulative tax due SSP
First 2,000	0	0	0
Next 3,000	5	150	150
Next 5,000	10	500	650
Next 5,000	15	750	1,400
Above 15,000	20	—	—

Tax is withheld from dividends, interest, royalties, rent, technical fees and government contract payments as shown in the following table.

Income category	Tax rate (%)	Persons subject to tax
Dividends, interest and royalties	10	Residents and nonresidents
Technical fees	15	Nonresidents only
Rent and government contract payments	20	Residents and nonresidents

Relief for business losses. Losses may be carried forward to offset future profits from the same specified source. The loss may be carried forward to the following five tax periods or years. Losses may not be carried back.

B. Other taxes

South Sudan does not levy property tax, net worth tax, inheritance tax or gift tax.

C. Social security

The only social security tax levied in South Sudan is a pension contribution based on employment income. The rates of the contribution are 17% for employers and 8% for employees.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Employee tax withholding. For employees, tax is withheld at source under the PIT system.

Returns. Resident individuals are not required to file an annual PIT return.

Assessment. A taxpayer may be assessed by the National Revenue Authority even after a self-assessment return is filed. The assessment is done within three years following the filing of the self-assessment return.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Double tax relief. Resident individuals may offset tax paid overseas against tax payable in South Sudan on foreign income, up to the amount of tax payable in South Sudan.

Double tax treaties. South Sudan has not entered into any double tax treaties.

F. Temporary visas and passes

All visitors must have visas to enter South Sudan. Citizens of Uganda and a few other countries can obtain temporary visas at any entry point. Citizens of Kenya do not require an entry visa.

G. Work permits and self-employment

Work permits are issued for a period of one year. They are renewable on an annual basis.

H. Residence permits

A residence permit allows an alien to reside in South Sudan. A resident permit can either be special, ordinary or temporary.

Special residence permits. Special residence permits may be granted to the following:
- Aliens who have been continuously residing in South Sudan for a period of not less than three years
- Aliens who have lawfully stayed in South Sudan for more than five years and are carrying out scientific, technical and commercial activities deemed by the Minister of Interior to be of value to South Sudan

A special residence permit is valid for five years and is renewable.

Ordinary residence permits. Ordinary residence permits may be granted to the following:

- Aliens who have been continuously residing in South Sudan for not less than five years
- Aliens who have lawfully resided in South Sudan for more than two years and are carrying out scientific, technical or commercial activities deemed by the Minister to be of value to South Sudan

An ordinary residence permit is valid for two years and is renewable.

Temporary residence permits. Aliens not eligible for special or ordinary residence permits may be granted temporary residence permits.

A temporary residence permit is valid for 12 months and is renewable for periods of up to 12 months.

Other information. A residence permit is required for all foreign residents in South Sudan even for individuals who have a work permit. Work permit holders and their dependents must obtain resident permits when they enter South Sudan.

Visitors to South Sudan can be accompanied by their family members. Residence permits extend to the dependents of aliens.

The average processing period for visas is one to three weeks.

I. Family and personal considerations

Vaccinations. Individuals entering South Sudan must have the immunization certificate for yellow fever and a negative COVID-19 test.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals performing activities in Spain are subject to tax based on residence and source of income. Residents are taxed on worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxed on Spanish-source income and on capital gains realized in Spain only. Several tax exemptions may apply to expatriates.

Individuals are considered residents for tax purposes if they spend more than 183 days in a calendar year in Spain or if the center of their vital interests is located in Spain. A presumption of residence arises if an individual's family lives in Spain.

Residence is determined on a full-year basis; Spain recognizes no change of residence during a fiscal year. A Spanish national who gives up Spanish tax residence is nonetheless considered a Spanish tax resident for the year of departure and the next four tax years if the new tax residence is in a tax haven.

Special expatriate tax regime. Under the Spanish regulation, an employee assigned to Spain who meets the criteria for being considered a Spanish tax resident may elect to be subject to tax under the nonresident taxpayer rules.

This election is subject to certain conditions, the most important of which are the following:

- The individual must not have been a Spanish tax resident in the 10 years preceding the tax year of his or her arrival in Spain.
- The assignment in Spain must be based on one of the following circumstances:
  - — The assignment is under a labor contract (local contract or assignment letter) with the exception of a contract for a professional athlete.
  - — The individual is a representative person of a company (without a participation in such company or with a participation in an unrelated entity).
- The individual cannot receive compensation that is deemed obtained by a permanent establishment in Spain.

Under this special tax regime, employment income up to EUR600,000 is taxed at a rate of 24%, and employment income exceeding this amount is taxed at a rate of 47%.

If the above election is made, the individual is subject to tax on employment income at a flat rate of 24%, instead of at the progressive resident tax rates of up to 47%, which depend on the autonomous community in which the taxpayer resides (other rates may apply to different types of income). The election is effective for the first year of residence and the following five consecutive years. For the purpose of calculating the tax base, the Spanish tax law states that any income derived from the date of arrival in Spain until the communication of the departure is considered employment income obtained in Spain (unless it can be proved that the income is for work performed before the arrival date in Spain).

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable employment income includes all compensation received for personal services, including salaries and wages, payments for certain business-related expenses, pensions, housing allowances and other allowances paid in cash or in kind.

Spanish residents with overseas duties may apply a foreign earned income exemption of up to EUR60,100 if certain conditions are met.

Irregular employment income (earned over a period that is longer than two years) may be eligible for a limited 30% reduction if certain conditions are met.

Self-employment and business income. Taxable self-employment and business income includes income from all industrial, commercial, professional and artistic activities carried on by a taxpayer.

Residents are subject to tax on self-employment and business income at the rates described in Rates. Nonresidents are subject to a flat 24% (19% for residents of other European Union [EU] member states and European Economic Area [EEA] member states) tax on gross self-employment and business income. Only those individuals whose tax residence abroad is located in an EU or EEA state are allowed to claim a tax deduction for certain expenses related to the business and the activity performed, such as salaries paid, materials purchased and miscellaneous expenses.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are considered ordinary income and are taxable to residents at the rates described in Rates and to nonresidents at a flat rate of 24% (19% for residents of other EU member states).

Investment income. Resident individuals are subject to tax on rental income and other consideration derived from the lease of rural or urban real estate at the rates described in Rates. Nonresident individuals are subject to tax on such income at a flat rate of 24% (19% for residents of other EU member states and EEA member states). For tax residents of Spain, net income from the rental of property may be reduced by 60% if the net income result is positive and if the property is destined for living (regardless of the age or amount of income of the tenant).

For urban real estate used by the owner as a permanent residence, deemed income does not apply. However, for urban real estate used as a nonpermanent residence or not leased, the law presumes an income of 2% of the cadastral value (1.1% if the cadastral value of the real estate was reviewed in the last 10 years). If the cadastral value is not determined, the presumed income is calculated by applying 1.1% to half of the value assessed in accordance with the principles of valuation for purposes of the net worth tax (see Section B).

Income from movable property includes dividends, interest, profits from copyrights and industrial property, and the return in cash or in kind on capitalization transactions and life insurance policies.

In determining net income from personal property, limited administration expenses are deductible.

Spanish tax residents and nonresidents are subject to tax on dividends, interest and capital gains (regardless of the holding period) at the following rates:

- The first EUR6,000 at a rate of 19%
- Amount from EUR6,000.01 up to EUR50,000 at a rate of 21%
- Amount from EUR50,000.01 up to EUR200,000 at a rate of 23%
- Amount above EUR200,000.01 at a rate of 26%

Income from public debt or nonresident bank accounts and income derived from the sale of shares or reimbursement of participations in investment funds in official Spanish markets are not taxable if Spain and the country of the taxpayer's residence have entered into a double tax treaty that includes an exchange-of-information clause.

Interest income and capital gains derived from bonds and securities issued by resident entities or individuals are not taxable if the taxpayer is a resident of an EU member state.

If members of a family unit elect to file separate tax returns, the income derived from property must be attributed to the members who own the property. For spouses under the community property regime, 50% of the income must be attributed to each spouse (see Section H).

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Employer-provided stock options are taxed at the date of exercise on the difference between the exercise price and the fair market value of the stock at the date of exercise. This income is also subject to social security contributions (see Section C).

Income derived from employer-provided share options up to an annual limit of EUR12,000 may be exempt from tax if all of the following requirements are met:

- The offer or delivery is made to all of the active employees of the company, group or subgroup under the same conditions. This requirement is met if the offer or delivery is made based on the employee's seniority or if the offer is made available to all employees who are regarded as Spanish tax residents.
- The employee (individually or jointly with the spouse and other family members) cannot own more than 5% of the company.
- The employee holds the shares for at least three years.

If the entire share award benefit is made under the same conditions for all employees of the company, group or subgroup, and if the employee fulfills the three conditions above but exceeds the limit of EUR12,000, only the excess is considered to be taxable income. If the employee disposes of the shares within three years after receiving the share award, he or she must file an amended tax return.

If the stock option income is generated over a period exceeding two years and if it is attributable to only one fiscal year, it may be possible to apply the 30% reduction for irregular employment income (see Employment income). However, the 30% reduction can only be applied every five years, except in some cases.

Any capital gains derived from the subsequent sale of the stock are subject to the capital gains tax rules described in Capital gains and losses.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains are calculated as the difference between the transfer price of an asset and its acquisition price.

Capital gains are taxed at a rate of 19% on the first EUR6,000, at a rate of 21% on the amount from EUR6,000.01 to EUR50,000, at a rate of 23% on the amount from EUR50,000.01 to EUR200,000, and at a rate of 26% on the amount above EUR200,000.

For Spanish tax residents only, capital losses incurred on sales of assets may be offset against capital gains. Any excess losses may be carried forward four years.

For filers of individual returns, capital gains and losses must be allocated to the individual owner of the property. If the spouses are under the community property regime (see Section H), capital gains and losses are imputed 50% to each spouse.

Deductions and allowances

Deductible expenses. Social security contributions may be deducted in computing taxable employment income for tax residents. In addition, the following reductions are allowed:

- A standard reduction of EUR5,565 if a taxpayer's annual net employment income does not exceed EUR13,115
- A reduction of EUR5,565 less the result of multiplying 1.5 by the difference between the net employment income exceeding EUR13,115 for net income between EUR13,115 and EUR16,825
- A standard deduction of EUR2,000 if net employment income exceeds EUR16,825

These amounts may be increased for disabled taxpayers.

Contributions to a regulated pension plan shall reduce the tax base. The annual reduction is limited to the lesser of EUR1,500 or 30% of net employment income or business income. This limit will be increased by EUR8,500, provided that such increase comes from employer/business contributions, or from contributions of the employee to the same social welfare scheme for an amount equal to or less than the respective employer/business contribution. In addition, individuals whose spouses receive net earned income and income from business activities below EUR8,000 can choose to make contributions up to EUR1,000 annually to pension plans in which the spouse is the beneficiary, and these contributions can be claimed as a reduction from the tax base of the taxpayer making the contribution. Contributions made in the fiscal year that cannot reduce the taxpayer's tax base may generally be carried forward five years.

Interest expenses that do not exceed gross income, expenses necessary to produce income and charges for depreciation are deductible from rental income.

Nonresidents are generally not entitled to deduct any expenses, except for taxpayers who qualify as tax resident in other EU member states and EEA member states.

Personal allowances. The allowances listed below reduce an individual's tax liability by an amount resulting from the application of the progressive tax rates to the total allowances. They do not reduce the tax base. The following are the allowances.

Allowance	Amount (EUR)
Personal allowance	5,550
Allowance for taxpayers over 65 years of age	6,700
Allowance for taxpayers over 75 years of age	6,950
Allowance for handicapped taxpayer for whom the grade of disability equals or exceeds 65%	9,000

Allowance	Amount (EUR)
Allowance for handicapped taxpayer for whom the grade of disability is less than 65%	3,000
Allowance for handicapped taxpayer needing help with mobility	3,000 (additional)
Each ascendant living with taxpayer whose annual income is less than EUR8,000
Over 65 years of age	1,150
Over 75 years of age	1,400
Each disabled dependent child or ascendant living with the taxpayer whose annual income is less than EUR8,000
Individuals for whom the grade of disability exceeds 65%	9,000 (additional)
Other disabled individuals	3,000 (additional)
Each disabled individual needing mobility help	3,000 (additional)
Each dependent child under 25 years of age living with taxpayer whose annual income is less than EUR8,000
First child	2,400
Second child	2,700
Third child	4,000
Fourth child and subsequent children	4,500
Allowance for children under three years old	2,800 (additional)

Local governments may allow additional personal allowances and deductions.

Business deductions. Deductions are permitted for all expenses necessary to obtain business income and for the depreciation of assets related to business activities.

Rates. Total tax liability consists of the tax liability computed under the general rates plus the tax liability computed under the autonomous community rates. Consequently, the final maximum marginal rate depends on the marginal tax rate of the autonomous community where the taxpayer resides. For example, the maximum marginal tax rate is 45% for an individual resident in Madrid and 50% for a resident in Cataluña (for income above EUR300,000).

Income derived by nonresidents is generally subject to a final tax of 24% (or 19% for residents of other EU member states and EEA countries). However, other rates may apply depending on the type of income. Dividends and other income derived from holding a participation in a company, interest and other income obtained from assigning capital to third parties are subject to tax rates of 19%, 21%, 23% and 26% (see Investment income).

See Special expatriate tax regime for details regarding the special tax regime for expatriates.

Credits. Tax credits are allowed in only a few specified circumstances, such as for gifts to specified entities and for certain double tax relief.

In addition, an investment tax credit is available for amounts paid for the acquisition, maintenance, repair, restoration or exhibition of assets deemed to be of cultural interest. The credit is granted at a rate of 15% on a maximum expenditure of 10% of the taxpayer's tax base.

The Spanish government removed the tax credit on the purchase of the taxpayer's primary residence acquired in or after January 2013. However, a grandfathering provision has been introduced for acquisitions or investments made before 1 January 2013.

Under this transitional measure, the tax deduction amounts to the equivalent of 15% of the acquisition cost (base of the deduction) up to a maximum base of EUR9,040. As a result, the tax credit cannot exceed the amount of EUR1,356. If the acquisition of the primary residence is financed with debt, the amount of the debt repaid plus the interest paid in the fiscal year represents the base of the deduction; the annual limit is EUR9,040.

If spouses file separate returns, the tax credit is applied to each spouse according to the percentage of ownership.

A tax credit is available for working mothers with a child up to three years old (up to a maximum of EUR1,200 per year per child), as well as for large families (three children or more). An additional amount up to EUR1,000 can be applied for childcare expenses.

For large families (three or more children), a tax credit of EUR1,200 per family applies. Families with four or more children can increase the amount of this tax credit by EUR600 per each child who exceeds the minimum number of children required.

Relief for losses. Relief for losses may be available, subject to the limits and conditions established by law.

B. Estate and gift tax

An individual resident in Spain for fiscal purposes is taxed on assets and rights acquired by inheritance or gift, regardless of where the assets or rights are located. If the recipient is not resident in Spain, estate and gift tax applies only to assets located in Spain or to rights that may be executed in Spain.

Estate tax must be paid by the legal heir, and gift tax must be paid by the donee. The taxable amount for estate tax purposes is determined by deducting certain amounts based on the beneficiary's age and on the relationship between the deceased and beneficiary. Tax payable is calculated by applying factors based on the taxpayer's net worth, age, relationship with the deceased or beneficiary and type of asset.

Estate and gift tax rates vary depending on the autonomous region.

C. Social security

Contributions. Under Spanish domestic law, an individual must join the Spanish social insurance system if work and residence permits are received. Under Spanish domestic law, an individual must join the Spanish social insurance system if work and residence permits are received. The rate of social insurance contributions is 6.35% of salary for employees, and the rate for employer contributions is generally 29.9% of salary. For 2021, the maximum base for employee contributions is EUR48,841.20. For 2020, the maximum annual contribution is EUR3,101.42 for employees and EUR14,603.52 per employee for employers.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Spain has entered into totalization agreements, which usually apply for a period of five or six years, with the following jurisdictions.

Andorra
Argentina
Australia
Brazil
Canada
Cape Verde

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The Spanish tax system operates through self-assessment. The tax year is the calendar year. Regardless of marital status, a taxpayer may file an individual return. Alternatively, family members may file one tax return that includes the income of the entire family. On a family tax return, the family members are jointly and severally liable for the payment of tax. If one spouse has a tax liability and the other spouse has a refund, the spouses may offset each other's amounts. Nonresidents with taxable income must file tax returns, unless they are subject to withholding tax for the entire amount due. However, individuals who have elected taxation under the special expatriate regime (see Section A) must file their returns during the period of 4 April through 30 June following the end of the calendar year.

Returns are usually filed from 4 April to 30 June following the end of the calendar year. Nonresidents must file an income tax return for each type of income, and the deadlines vary depending on the type of income and the accrual of the income. In some cases, the tax returns for nonresidents must be filed quarterly, and in other cases annually.

For tax returns filed by residents, any tax due is payable with the return, and interest accrues on any unpaid balance. However, 60% of the tax may be paid in June, and the remaining 40% paid by 5 November, without interest accruing. The tax due is the balance remaining after subtracting amounts withheld during the year. If excess tax is withheld, the excess is refunded to the taxpayer.

Compulsory declaration of assets and rights located abroad. Royal Decree 1558/2012, published on 24 November 2012, establishes new requirements for tax residents of Spain to report details of their assets and rights located outside Spain.

Resident taxpayers who have assets or rights located abroad meeting certain conditions must file this information declaration by 31 March following the end of the tax year referred to in the tax return. Severe penalties may be imposed on noncompliant taxpayers.

Exit tax. If an individual has been tax resident in Spain for at least 10 years out of 15 consecutive tax periods, the fact of losing tax residence may generate the obligation to declare the potential capital gains on its financial assets (stocks and shares) if certain circumstances exist.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

An individual resident in Spain may use foreign tax credits to avoid double taxation (imputation method).

Spain's double tax treaties apply both the imputation and the exemption-with-progression methods. Spain has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

F. Residence permits

A foreign national who wishes to reside in Spain must obtain a valid residence permit.

For a person who does not wish to work in Spain, temporary and permanent residence permits are available.

Temporary residence permits are issued to persons who wish to reside in Spain more than 90 days and less than 5 years. They are issued initially for one year and may be renewed for two periods of two years each.

If the temporary residence permit is issued as a result of a spouse holding work and residence permits, the validity of the residence permit is for the same duration as the spouse's work and residence permits.

Foreigners who have resided lawfully in Spain for a period of five years can apply for a long-term residence permit. However, the residence card must be renewed every five years.

A regulation applicable to EU nationals, nationals of the EEA, which comprises Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway, and nationals of Switzerland provides for the right of freedom of movement, residence and work in Spain for these nationals. Partners appearing in an official register have the same rights as spouses.

EU nationals, EEA nationals and Swiss nationals, who wish to reside in Spain for more than three months, must go to the police station within the first three months after their entry into Spain and register in the Central Registry for Foreigners (Registro Central de Extranjeros). The police station issues a certificate that includes the name, nationality and domicile of the foreigner, his or her identification number and the date of the registration. This certificate replaces the identification card. To complete the registration, individuals must submit, among other documents, proof that they have sufficient economic means to live in Spain and that they have private or public medical coverage.

Relatives of EU nationals, EEA nationals and Swiss nationals with a third-country nationality must apply for a special residence card indicating that they are a relative of these nationals. They will have the same rights as other EU nationals, EEA nationals and Swiss nationals. However, for an individual to obtain a residence card, the marriage must be registered in an EU country's registry. An exemption is granted to nationals of Austria, Denmark, Germany, the Netherlands, the Slovak Republic and the United Kingdom. Nationals of these countries are not required to register a marriage that took place abroad. These rights also apply to partners of EU nationals, EEA nationals and Swiss nationals with a third-country nationality who are registered as partners in an official registration. A change in the Spanish regulations that entered into force on 16 December 2015 expands the beneficiaries of this special residence card to include partners with no legal bonds (among others). Applicants need to provide the authorities with all documentation available to demonstrate at least two years of proven partnership or one year of coexistence. The immigration authorities use their discretion in analyzing this documentation.

Regarding the possibility of residing in Spain without engaging in any work or professional activity, an individual may apply for a Non-Lucrative Residence Visa. It is not available to EU citizens or to nationals of countries to whom EU law applies in terms of being beneficiaries of the rights of free movement and residence. The Non-Lucrative Residence Visa can be applied for up to 90 days before the desired date of entry into Spain at the Spanish consulate at the place of residence. The main requirements are the following:

- Public or private health insurance taken out by an insurance company authorized to operate in Spain
- Proof of financial means required to cover the living expenses and, where appropriate, those of their family members

G. Work permits

Nationals of non-EU countries who wish to work and reside in Spain must apply for work permits.

Non-EU nationals may not work while their work permits are being processed. EU nationals are not required to apply for a work permit to undertake employment in Spain. Rules applicable to EEA nationals and to EU nationals also apply to nationals of Switzerland.

A non-EU national who performs any economic activity in Spain, either as an employee of a Spanish company or as a self-employed individual, must obtain work and residence permits. Spanish law imposes steep fines of up to EUR180,000 for companies that hire foreign workers without valid work permits.

The same rules apply to self-employed foreign nationals and to those applying to work for a specific Spanish company. However, special permits exist for foreign nationals intending to start a business or for foreign companies wishing to establish subsidiaries headed by foreign nationals in Spain.

H. Types of permits under Law 14/2013, in support of entrepreneurs and certain others

Law 14/2013 entered into force on 30 September 2013. Several changes to the rules for visas and residence permits came into force on 29 July 2015. They significantly reduce the administrative and financial requirements for obtaining a Spanish visa under Law 14/2013.

The law establishes a residence visa for highly qualified employees to be assigned to a Spanish company belonging to the same group of companies (Intracompany Residence Permit [Autorización de Residencia por Traslado Intramepresarial]) and for senior professionals or managing director-type individuals (highly qualified professionals, for whom the visa is called the Residence Authorizations for Highly Qualified Personnel [Autorizaciones de Residencia para Personal Altamente Cualificado]).

Among other measures, the law provides that the Spanish government may grant residence visas to the following types of foreigners:

- Entrepreneurs
- Highly qualified professionals (the immigration authorities are currently very restrictive on what is considered a highly qualified position)
- Researchers
- Employees with intercompany transfers

Foreigners who prove that they belong in one of the categories listed above and who wish to reside and work in Spain may request a residence visa if they fulfill all of the following conditions established in the law:

- They are not illegally residing in Spain.
- They are more than 18 years old (Spanish full age).
- They do not have a criminal record.
- They are not rejectable by jurisdictions with which Spain has entered into an agreement.
- They have medical insurance with an entity authorized in Spain.
- They have enough economic resources to support themselves and their family members (if applicable).
- They pay the government fees.

Highly qualified professionals

Spanish National Classification of Occupations classification. The Spanish National Classification of Occupations (CNO) classification refers to work positions and functions that can be assimilated to Groups 1 and 2 of the 2011 CNO (CNO-11). This is related to the profile of the position, the employment contract, the professional classification and the applicable collective agreement (the negotiated agreement between an employer and the employee's representatives, covering rates of pay and terms and conditions of employment).

Remuneration. Minimum salary is based on the social security classification group, taking data from the National Statistical Institute. The following are the applicable amount of minimum salary.

Groups 1 and 2 of CNO-11	Average annual salary (EUR)
Directors and managers	54,142
Other technicians and scientific and intellectual professionals	40,077

There is a reduction by a coefficient of 0.75 in the following cases:

- Small and medium-size enterprises belonging to a sector considered strategic.
- Applications from highly qualified professionals up to 30 years old.

Bonuses and allowances are considered as a part of the annual base salary.

Benefits in kind may not be considered for more than 30% of the worker's wages for purposes of calculating the annual average salary referred to above.

Training. Article 72 of Law 14/2013 regulates training, research, development and innovation.

Renewal. Compliance with the requirements resulting in the initial authorization must be established and verified to have been registered in order to proceed with the renewal application.

Change of employer. A change of employer must be communicated by the interested party to the Unit of Large Companies and Strategic Collectives within 30 days, requesting a new authorization.

The issuance of the new authorization could be required in case of change of companies when both entities belong to the same group.

In cases of acquisitions or mergers of companies, the residence permit is renewed for the period of validity remaining in the initial permit.

Worker's dismissal. If the highly qualified professional is dismissed, the dismissal must be communicated to the Unit of Large Companies and Strategic Collectives. If the applicant will be entitled to the unemployment benefit, the renewal shall be carried out in accordance with Article 71.

Investors. The new law considers the following investments:

- Investment of EUR2 million or more in public debt
- Investment of EUR1 million or more in Spanish company shares or Spanish bank deposits
- Real estate with a value of EUR500,000 or more without any mortgage on this amount
- A business project to be developed in Spain that can be considered of general or public interest, taking into account the creation of jobs, the technology and scientific innovation of the project and its socioeconomic impact in Spain

The law establishes the manner for proving the investment.

The corresponding Spanish consulate grants the visa for a year. If the foreigner wishes to reside in Spain for a longer period, a residence permit can be requested from the Spanish immigration authorities in Spain.

For these residence visas, the Spanish immigration authorities take into account the business plan, the professional profile of the foreigner and possible benefit to Spain from the economic opportunity.

Researchers. A new residence permit is available for some research, development and innovation projects for Spanish public or private institutions, subject to certain requirements.

Intracompany transfers

EU Intracompany Transfer. The EU Intracompany Transfer (ICT) applies to transfers between companies in the same group to work as a manager, specialist or training worker.

If there is a social security bilateral agreement in place, it must be applied. If the Certificate of Coverage does not include health care coverage, the applicant will need health insurance.

The assignment letter must contain the following information:

- Duration of the assignment and location
- Accreditation that the position will be as a manager, specialist or training worker
- Activities
- Remuneration
- Accreditation of return to company of the same group

Under EU Directive 96/71/EC concerning the posting of workers (96/71/CE), every displacement of a posted worker affected by a work contract signed between two EU companies should be communicated to national labor authorities before the displacement. This communication does not affect the work and residence permit, but it should be considered to avoid any sanction in the framework of labor inspections that will be intensified as a result of the effect of the COVID-19 crisis on employees' working conditions.

ICT Nacional. The ICT Nacional applies to the following workers:

- Workers posted between subsidiary companies or companies within the same group, when they have passed the period limited by the directive (one year for training and three years for the other activities).
- Workers posted between subsidiary companies or the same group who are neither a manager, nor a specialist nor a training worker, but who can be considered key personnel for the performing of a job that is particularly complex.
- Workers transferred as a result of a contract to provide services between the company that transfers the worker and the one that receives the worker, if the two companies are not part of the same company group and if the worker is part of the workforce of the company that transfers the worker.

Remuneration. The following are the rules applicable to remuneration:

- The minimum salary is the salary established by the applicable Spanish collective bargaining agreement.
- The salary received in the country of origin must be indicated in both local and foreign currency.
- Bonuses and allowances may not be taken into account.
- Benefits in kind may not be more than 30% of the salary.

Other considerations. In general, this new law establishes easier processes and shorter deadlines to obtain these types of residence visas and permits than under the normal immigration rules. As a result, the immigration process will be expedited for foreign companies and individual investors making investments and engaging in professional activities in Spain. The following are some of the advantages of the new types of permits in comparison with the permits established in the immigration law:

- The law provides for shorter processing times for obtaining the work or residence permit. The current processing times are 20 business days, while the regular procedure takes 30 business days.
- The law provides for shorter processing times when applying for the residence visa at a Spanish consulate overseas (should not exceed 10 business days).
- In some cases, bypassing the visa application process is possible if the work permit applicant is in Spain legally at the moment of the work permit application. This is determined on a case-by-case basis.
- Family applications can be made simultaneously with the principal application or at a later stage.
- The residence visa or permit allows work in any region within the Spanish territory.

The following are other measures in the law:

- At the time of renewal, the individual must not have stayed outside Spain for more than six months per year (except for investors).
- For the regulated professions, all academic qualifications and diplomas must be duly validated by the Spanish Ministry of Education.
- In some cases, the applicant or the dependents need to demonstrate that they have their own financial means (entrepreneur and investors).

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Family members must obtain residence permits if they intend to accompany a foreign national to Spain. The spouse's children, child guardians and ancestors of the spouse are considered family members.

Driver's permits. A foreign national may drive legally in Spain with his or her home country driver's license for six months. Requirements for driver's license reciprocity in Spain vary, depending on the country of origin of the foreign national.

This chapter is based on the Inland Revenue Act No. 24 of 2017 (effective from 1 April 2018), which was subsequently amended by the Inland Revenue (Amendment) Act No. 10 of 2021. The respective amendments take effect as specified, either from 1 April 2018, 1 April 2019, 1 April 2020 or 1 April 2021.

As of 1 Jan 2021, the exchange rate was LKR203 = USD1.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. An individual is liable to income tax on the taxable income for the year of assessment and any final withholding payment during the year of assessment. Taxable income equals the total of the individual's assessable income from employment, business, investment and other sources for that year of assessment after deducting applicable reliefs.

The assessable income of a resident individual for a year of assessment from any such main source referred to above is the income (gains and profits) from such source, wherever the source arises.

The assessable income of a nonresident individual for a year of assessment from any such main source is the income to the extent that it arises in or is derived from a source in Sri Lanka.

An individual is considered a tax resident individual for a year of assessment if he or she meets any of the following criteria:
- He or she resides (lives) in Sri Lanka.
- He or she is present in Sri Lanka for a period or periods aggregating 183 days or more in a 12-month period that commences or ends during the year.
- He or she is an employee or an official of the Government of Sri Lanka, and his or her spouse is posted abroad during the year (both the individual and the spouse are considered resident).
- He or she is an individual employed on a Sri Lanka ship according to the meaning in the Merchant Shipping Act, for the period during which the individual is so employed.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. For the purposes of the taxation of employment income, employment includes past, present or prospective employment.

Income from employment includes any wages, salary, allowance, directors' fees, leave pay, pension, shares of a company received through a share option scheme (see below) or similar compensation, as well as the value of any benefits given to an employee (or to his or her spouse, child or parent), directly or indirectly, in money or in kind. An allowance means any form of allowance paid in the course of employment and includes travel and entertainment allowances. Benefits include taxes borne by the employer on behalf of the employee, the personal use of a company-provided automobile and the value of housing facilities provided by the employer.

In addition, the value of the benefit to the employee from the allotment or the grant of the shares (that is, the exercise of the option and transfer of ownership of the shares to the employee) is also taxable as employment income. Regarding certain benefits, the Commissioner General of Inland Revenue specifies a fair market value thereof for tax purposes. In appropriate situations, such values can be used.

However, certain benefits are not taxable. They include the following:

- The reimbursement or payment of dental, medical or health insurance expenses by the employer if the benefit is available to all full-time employees in the same grade of service on equal terms
- The payment or reimbursement of expenses incurred by the individual on behalf of the employer
- The value of a right or an option to acquire shares at the time of granting such shares under an employee share option scheme (liability arises only at the time of allotment of shares)

Subject to any conditions specified by the Commissioner General of Inland Revenue, contributions made by an employer to an employee's account with a pension, provident or savings fund approved by the Commissioner General of Inland Revenue is exempt from income tax.

Amounts received from a provident fund approved by the Commissioner General of Inland Revenue as terminal benefits from employment are exempt from income tax.

Amounts received from a pension fund, gratuity fund or the Employees Trust Fund that represents income from investments made by such funds after 1 April 1987 are exempt from income tax.

The employment income of government-sector employees is taxable, except for the following:

- Pensions or retirement benefits
- Benefits received or derived from a road vehicle permit issued to that employee

Compensation derived by diplomatic representatives and officials employed by international agencies, such as the United Nations and specialized agencies of the United Nations, are exempt from tax.

Business income. For the purposes of business income, business includes a past, present or prospective business.

A person's income from business consists of the gains and profits from conducting business. Such income from business also includes service fees, amounts received in consideration for accepting a restriction on the capacity to conduct business, gifts received, and any amounts derived that are effectively connected with the business and that would otherwise be included in that person's income from investment. The Inland Revenue Act specifies the amounts that fall within business income and those that do not fall within such income.

In calculating a person's income from business, only the expenses specified are deductible. The Inland Revenue Act includes a general provision as a residual rule. Under this provision, expenses that are incurred during the relevant year in the production of income from the business can be deducted, except for specifically disallowed expenses.

Effective from 1 January 2020, partnerships are taxed on taxable income exceeding LKR1 million at a rate of 6%. If the taxable income includes gains on the realization of investment assets, such gains are taxable at a rate of 10%.

Investment income. A person's income from investment consists of the person's gains and profits from investments.

Gains and profits from investments include the following:
- Dividends, interest, discounts, charges, annuities, natural resource payments, rents, premiums and royalties
- Gains from the realization of investment assets (see next paragraph)
- Amounts derived as consideration for accepting a restriction on the capacity to conduct the investment
- Gifts received with respect to investments
- Winnings from lotteries, betting and gambling
- Other amounts required to be included

A gain from the realization of investments equals the amount by which the sum of the consideration received for the asset or liability exceeds the cost of the asset or liability at the time of realization. The realization of an asset occurs when asset is sold, exchanged, transferred, distributed or canceled, or a similar event occurs. A loss incurred on the realization of an asset cannot be set off against a gain from realization of an asset.

Other income. Other income is income from any other sources, not including profits of a casual or nonrecurring nature.

Exemptions. Items that are exempt from income tax are described below.

Capital sums paid as compensation or a gratuity with respect to personal injuries suffered by the person or from the death of another person are exempt from tax.

Effective from 1 January 2020, any foreign-source income derived in foreign currency remitted to Sri Lanka through a bank is exempt from income tax.

Income from any service rendered in or outside Sri Lanka to a person that is to be utilized outside Sri Lanka is exempt from income tax if the payment is made in foreign currency through a bank to Sri Lanka.

Income of a nonresident person from income derived by providing laboratory services or standards certification services is exempt from income tax.

Interest or a discount received or realization of any gain by a nonresident person (other than a Sri Lankan permanent establishment) from investment in sovereign bonds denominated in local or foreign currency issued on or on behalf of the Government of Sri Lanka is exempt from tax, effective from 1 April 2018.

Interest income of a person from sovereign bonds denominated in foreign currency, including Sri Lanka Development Bonds, issued by or on behalf of the Government of Sri Lanka is exempt from income tax, effective from 1 April 2018.

Interest accruing or derived by a person from foreign currency in a foreign-currency account opened by him or her or on his or her behalf in a commercial bank or any specialized bank with the approval of the Central Bank of Sri Lanka is exempt from income tax.

Interest paid to persons outside Sri Lanka on loans granted by such persons to persons in Sri Lanka or to the Government of Sri Lanka is exempt from income tax.

Dividends received by a person out of another dividend received by a resident company is exempt from income tax.

Dividends received by a nonresident person from a resident company is exempt from income tax.

Dividends paid by resident companies that have entered into agreements with the Board Of Investment (BOI) of Sri Lanka and that are engaged in specified businesses, such as entrepôt trade, providing front-end services to clients abroad, headquarters operations of leading buyers for management of financial supply chain and billing operations and logistic services, such as bonded warehouse or multi-country consolidation in Sri Lanka, are exempt from income tax.

Dividends from shares invested in a nonresident company that are derived by a person who has a substantial participation in the nonresident company are exempt from income tax.

Gains from the realization of an investment asset that do not exceed LKR50,000 are exempt from tax if the total realization for the year of assessment does not exceed LKR600,000 and if certain other specified conditions are satisfied.

A gain from the realization of an individual's principal place of residence is exempt from tax if it had been owned by the individual continuously for the three years before the gain was realized and if it had been lived in by the individual for at least two of those three years.

Gains on the realization of shares quoted in any official list published by the Securities and Exchange Commission of Sri Lanka are exempt from tax.

The following items of other income are exempt from tax:
- A prize received as an award made by the President of Sri Lanka or by the government in recognition of the creation of an invention or any research undertaken by that person
- Amount received from the President's Fund or the National Defence Fund
- Winnings from a lottery if the gross amount does not exceed LKR500,000
- Amount derived from the sale of gems on which withholding tax has been deducted
- Income from sale of produce of an undertaking for agro-farming without subjecting such produce to any process of production (effective from 1 April 2019)
- Income from providing information technology and enabled services as may be prescribed
- Foreign-source income if the gains or profits are earned or derived in foreign currency and remitted through a bank in Sri Lanka

Qualifying payments and other reliefs. For all resident individuals (including employees) and for nonresident individuals who are Sri Lanka citizens, a personal relief of LKR3 million is granted each year of assessment with respect to taxable income, other than from gains from the realization of investment assets.

A deduction for a donation made in money to an approved charitable institution may be claimed, subject to a maximum of 1/3 of the individual's taxable income or LKR75,000, whichever is less.

A donation made in money or otherwise to the government of Sri Lanka, a local authority, funds established by the government of Sri Lanka or by a local authority and other specified institutions, is deductible in full in determining taxable income.

An amount equal to 25% of total rental income is granted as relief for repairs, maintenance and depreciation relating to an investment asset if no deduction is claimed for actual expenses incurred with respect to such items.

The following reliefs are available, totaling up to a maximum of LKR1,200,000:

- Health expenditure, including contributions to medical insurance policies
- Education expenses incurred locally for the individual or on behalf of his or her children
- Interest paid on housing loans
- Contributions made by an employee to a local pension scheme (other than for a scheme under the employer)
- Expenditure incurred for the purchase of quoted shares or quoted financial instruments or treasury bills

Withholding tax. Effective from 1 January 2020, Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) tax was replaced by Advance Personal Income Tax (APIT), which is deductible (as withholding tax) in a manner similar to prior PAYE, but only with the consent of the respective employee. Any employee who does not consent to the deduction of APIT has to pay tax on the employment income on a self-assessment basis.

Consent of the respective employees is not required to deduct APIT if the payments are made to nonresident employees or if the payments are terminal benefits.

Because the threshold of the personal tax allowance is LKR3 million, the deduction of APIT applies only to resident or citizen employees whose monthly remuneration exceeds LKR250,000 per month.

An employee whose monthly remuneration exceeds LKR250,000 must open an income tax file at the Inland Revenue Department and file the annual income tax return.

An employee should furnish a Primary Employment Declaration to the employer, indicating that the employment is his or her primary employment. An employee who has not furnished such a declaration or who has more than one employment will be subject to withholding tax under APIT (if consent has been granted by the employee) under secondary employment at the rates specified by the Inland Revenue Department.

Withholding tax on all payments to resident persons has been abolished, effective from 1 January 2020. As a result, resident recipients of all types of income should pay income tax on such income on a self-assessment basis.

Any payments made to nonresident persons that have a source in Sri Lanka are liable to withholding tax. The applicable withholding tax rates for such payments, subject to the provisions of relevant double tax treaties, are the following:

Type of payment	Withholding tax rate (%)
Dividends	Exempt
Interest (excluding exempt interest)	5
On payments for land, sea, air transport or telecommunication services	2
On other payments (excluding specific payments)	14

The rates of income tax that apply to resident individuals for a year of assessment commencing on or after 1 April 2020 are set forth in the following table.

Taxable income LKR	Tax rate %	Tax due LKR	Cumulative tax due LKR
First 3,000,000	6	180,000	180,000
Next 3,000,000	12	360,000	540,000
Above 6,000,000	18	—	—

Gains from the realization of investment assets included in an individual's taxable income are taxed a rate of 10%.

The following special tax rates apply to terminal benefits, such as amounts received as commutation of pension, retiring gratuity and compensation for loss of office under a scheme uniformly applicable to all employees:
• Up to LKR10 million: 0%
• Next LKR10 million: 6%
• Above LKR20 million: 12%

The rate for compensation for loss of office payments not approved by the Commissioner General of Inland Revenue is 18%.

Relief for losses. In calculating the income from business, the unrelieved losses for the year from any other business can be deducted. Unrelieved losses can be carried forward for six years to be set off against income from business.

B. Other taxes

Economic Service Charge. The Economic Service Charge (ESC) was abolished, effective from 1 January 2020.

Nation Building Tax. The Nation Building Tax (NBT) is abolished, effective from 1 December 2019.

Value-added tax. The standard rate for value-added tax (VAT) is 8%, effective from 1 December 2019. A 0% rate applies to exports of goods and services. Certain goods and services are exempt from VAT. The turnover threshold applicable to registration for VAT is LKR300 million per year or LKR75 million per quarter.

However, persons who wish to voluntarily register for VAT (an existing person or a new person) is given the option to register or reregister for VAT.

Stamp duty. Stamp duty is imposed on the following instruments:
• Specified instruments executed, drawn or presented in Sri Lanka
• Specified instruments executed outside Sri Lanka with respect to property in Sri Lanka and presented in Sri Lanka

It does not apply to the following:
• Letters of credit that are subject to Ports and Airport Development Levy
• Specified instruments exempted by gazette notifications
• Share certificates
• Credit card usage (locally; for foreign purchases, the rate is 2.5%)

The stamp duty on the transfer of immovable property continues to apply.

C. Social security

Sri Lanka's social security contribution rates rarely change. Most employees are covered by the Employees' Provident Fund (EPF) Act of 1958. The act requires employees to contribute 8% of total earnings and employers to contribute 12% of employees' earnings.

In addition, employers must contribute an amount equal to 3% of each employee's total earnings to the Employees' Trust Fund (ETF). This contribution is not deducted from the employee's earnings.

When employment ends, in addition to receipt under the above, a gratuity is payable to employees under the Payment of Gratuity Act of 1983, which equals to half of one month's salary for each year of service. To qualify, an employee must have worked for the employer for more than five years.

ETF benefits, and gratuity benefits paid under a uniform scheme, that exceed the exemption limit of LKR5 million (if the period of contributions exceeds 20 years) or LKR2 million (in other cases) are taxed at a maximum rate of 10%. However, gratuity payments for retirement in excess of a certain amount are taxed at normal tax rates. This amount is equal to the greater of LKR1,800,000 or the average salary for the last three years of employment, multiplied by the number of years of service.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The income tax year in Sri Lanka is from 1 April to 31 March.

Income tax returns must be filed on or before 30 November following the end of the year of assessment.

Tax is withheld from employees under the Advanced Payment of Income Tax (APIT) scheme with the consent of the employees. Consent for deduction is not required for payments to nonresident employees or for terminal benefit payments. For further details, see Withholding tax in Section A.

Employees whose monthly remuneration exceeds LKR250,000 are required to file an income tax return.

Income tax is payable in advance under a self-assessment system based on a Statement of Estimated Tax (SET) submitted in advance. Accordingly, quarterly payments are required to be paid as per such set. They are payable in four quarterly installments, which are due one and a half months after the end of each quarter. A tax return must be filed by 30 November following the tax year. Penalties are levied on late or insufficient payments.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Sri Lanka has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Australia
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Belarus
Belgium
Canada
China Mainland
Czech Republic
Denmark
Finland
France
Italy
Japan
Jordan*
Korea (North)
Korea (South)
Kuwait
Luxembourg
Malaysia
Mauritius
Nepal
Netherlands
Poland
Qatar
Romania
Russian Federation
Saudi Arabia*
Seychelles
Singapore
Sweden
Switzerland
Thailand

Germany	Norway	United Arab Emirates
Hong Kong SAR*	Oman*	United Kingdom
India	Pakistan	United States
Indonesia	Palestinian Authority	Vietnam
Iran

* These treaties cover international air transport only.

Sri Lanka is also a party to the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SARC) multilateral treaty.

In general, these treaties provide for the elimination of double taxation of income when Sri Lankan income tax and income tax of a foreign treaty country is due on the same income.

If remuneration is received by a resident of a foreign state for employment exercised in Sri Lanka, the remuneration is taxable only in the foreign state if, in general, all of the following conditions are satisfied:

- The recipient is in Sri Lanka for a period not exceeding 183 days in the relevant fiscal year.
- The remuneration is paid by a nonresident employer.
- The remuneration is not borne by a permanent establishment or a fixed base maintained by the employer in Sri Lanka.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are taxable on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxable only on income derived from certain Suriname sources. Nonresidents are generally subject to personal income tax from their first day in Suriname. A resident individual who receives income, wherever earned, from former or current employment is, in principle, subject to income tax in Suriname.

Residence is determined based on the applicable facts and circumstances, such as an individual's domicile (the availability of a permanent home), physical presence and location of an individual's vital personal and economic interests.

Income subject to tax. The following are the principal types of income taxed in Suriname:
- Employment income
- Self-employment and business income
- Income from immovable property (rental income)
- Income from movable assets (interest and dividend income)
- Income from periodic allowances, provided that the allowances are dependent on life

Employment income. Taxable employment income consists of employment income, including directors' fees and supervisory directors' fees, less itemized and standard deductions and allowances (see Deductions), pension premiums and social security contributions (old-age insurance contributions), whether paid or withheld.

Directors' fees and supervisory directors' fees are treated in the same manner as ordinary employment income and are taxed with the income listed above at the rates set forth in Rates. Directors' fees and supervisory directors' fees and paid by Suriname resident companies are, in principle, subject to withholding for wage tax and for social security insurance contributions with respect to Suriname resident individuals.

Nonresident individuals receiving income from current or former employment carried on in Suriname are subject to income tax in Suriname.

Nonresident individuals employed by Suriname public entities or funds established by such entities are subject to tax on income in Suriname even if the employment is carried on outside Suriname. In principle, wage tax is withheld from individuals' earnings.

Nonresident individuals receiving income as managing directors or supervisory directors of companies established in Suriname are subject to income tax in Suriname.

Self-employment and business income. Residents are subject to tax on their worldwide self-employment and business income.

Nonresidents are taxed on income derived from a business, provided that the income can be allocated to a permanent establishment in Suriname. A permanent representative is regarded as a permanent establishment for Suriname income tax purposes.

Annual profits derived from a business must be calculated in accordance with sound business practices that are applied consistently. Taxable income is determined by subtracting the deductions and personal allowances specified in Deductions from annual profits.

Profits attributable to a permanent establishment in Suriname are calculated in the same manner as profits of resident taxpayers.

Income from periodic allowances. In principle, resident individuals are subject to tax on their worldwide periodic allowances received, including old-age pensions, alimony payments and disability allowances, provided that the allowances are payable for the individual's lifetime. Under certain conditions an exemption may apply.

In principle, nonresident individuals are subject to income tax on income derived from periodic allowances received from Suriname public entities or funds established by such entities.

Income from immovable property. Income derived from immovable property is subject to Suriname income tax. Income derived from a person's residence is not taxed as income from immovable property. Various costs related to immovable property can be deducted from taxable income, such as interest paid on mortgage loans for the acquisition or the restoration of immovable property.

Nonresident individuals are taxed on rental income derived from immovable property located in Suriname or from the rights to such property.

Income from movable assets. Dividend and interest income derived from domestic and foreign sources, less deductions, are generally subject to income tax.

Nonresident individuals are taxed on interest income derived from debt obligations if the principal amount of the obligation is secured by mortgaged immovable property located in Suriname. Nonresident individuals are also taxed on income derived from participations in general or limited partnerships with their place of management in Suriname.

In principle, a 25% dividend withholding tax is imposed on dividends distributed by resident companies.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains are generally exempt from tax, and capital losses are nondeductible. However, in the following circumstances, residents may be subject to income tax on capital gains.

Type of income	Rate (%)
Capital gains realized on the disposal of business assets and on the disposal of other assets if qualified as income from independently performed activities	Up to 48
Capital gains on the repurchase of shares by the company in excess of the average paid-up capital	Up to 48
Capital gains on the liquidation of a business	Up to 48*

* In principle, the tax rate is up to 48%, but on request a tax rate of 25% is applied. The highest income bracket is taxed at a rate of 48% during the period of 1 February 2021 up to and including 31 December 2021. However, this rate should be discontinued as of 1 January 2022. As of 1 January 2022, the highest rate should be 38% again. However, the Suriname government announced that the amounts of the income tax brackets and the related rates will possibly be revised as of 1 January 2022.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Residents may claim the following personal deductions:

- Mortgage interest paid that is related to the taxpayer's dwelling (limited to interest payments on a maximum debt of SRD125,000).
- Exterior paintwork expenses related to the taxpayer's dwelling (limited to once in three years).
- Under certain conditions, pension, annuity and other periodic allowance payments.
- Life-insurance premiums that entitle taxpayers to annuity, pension or other periodic allowance payments (up to a maximum of 10% of income).
- Alimony payments if they meet the threshold amount.
- Medical expenses, educational expenses and support for up to second-degree relatives if they meet certain threshold amounts.
- Under certain conditions, an amount up to SRD8,000 for a disabled child.
- Acquisition costs (also available to nonresidents) for taxpayers deriving employment income. The deduction is limited to 4% of the wage, with a maximum of SRD1,200, if specified expenses are paid under certain conditions.

Business deductions. In general, business expenses are fully deductible if the expenses are incurred in accordance with sound business practices. However, the deduction of certain expenses is limited.

Personal tax credits. A personal tax credit of SRD9,000 on an annual basis (that is, SRD750 per month) may be subtracted by a taxpayer from income tax due. This amount of SRD9,000 was introduced on 1 May 2020 and was applicable until 31 October 2020. However, it is now extended until the introduction of a new value-added tax system (which is expected 1 July 2022).

Rates. Resident and nonresident individuals are subject to income tax at the same progressive rates. The following are the individual income tax rates and tax brackets.

Taxable amount
Exceeding SRD	Not exceeding SRD	Tax rate %
0	2,646.00	0
2,646.00	14,002.80	8
14,002.80	21,919.80	18
21,919.80	32,839.80	28
32,839.80	150,000	38
150,000	—	48

The highest tax bracket has been introduced as a temporary solidarity charge valid up to and including 31 December 2021.

Tax charge on special payments. Extra tax brackets have been introduced as a solidarity charge on irregular one-off payments related to employment. The following are the tax brackets.

Taxable amount
Exceeding SRD	Not exceeding SRD	Tax rate %
0	11,356.80	5
11,356.80	19,273.80	15
19,273.80	30,193.80	30
30,193.80	147,354.00	35
147,354.00	—	45

The highest tax bracket has been introduced as a temporary solidarity charge valid up to and including 31 December 2021.

Relief for losses. Losses in a financial year may be carried forward for seven years. No carryback is available. Losses incurred by businesses during their first three years of business may be carried forward indefinitely.

B. Wealth tax

In principle, resident individuals in Suriname are subject to a wealth tax on the net value of their assets. Nonresident individuals are subject to wealth tax only on the following:
- Immovable property owned in Suriname or the rights to such property
- Debt obligations owned if the principal amount of the obligation is secured by mortgaged immovable property located in Suriname
- Entitlement, other than as a shareholder, to the assets of a Suriname permanent establishment, provided that the individual is subject to Suriname income tax

Specific exemptions apply for certain assets. In addition, special rules may apply to married resident individuals.

The wealth tax rate is 3% on the net value in excess of SRD100,000, or SRD120,000 for married resident individuals.

Residence is determined based on the applicable facts and circumstances, such as an individual's domicile (the availability of a permanent home), physical presence and the location of an individual's vital personal and economic interests.

C. Social security, basic illness insurance law and pension law

Social security. In principle, resident individuals must pay social security contributions, which are contributions for the old-age insurance. Some residents are exempt from paying social security contributions.

The annual old-age insurance contribution is 4% of employment income.

Basic illness insurance law and pension law. The basic illness insurance law and the pension law apply to resident individuals. The basic illness insurance law, which took effect on 9 October 2014, aims to sufficiently insure every Suriname resident against costs of illness. The pension law, which took effect on 9 December 2014, aims to provide every Suriname resident with a pension.

The principal obligations of employers under these laws consist of providing sufficient insurance coverage against the costs of illness, arranging for participation in a pension scheme and paying at least 50% of the insurance premiums and the pension premiums.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The standard tax year is the calendar year. However, on request and under certain conditions, a business may use a different financial accounting year as its tax year.

Because the wage tax is a pre-levy to the income tax, employers must file wage withholding tax returns on a monthly basis. In principle, Suriname wage tax returns must be submitted for monthly periods. Because the Suriname wage tax is a pre-levy on the Suriname income tax, residents and nonresidents remain liable for Suriname income tax if the wage tax is not withheld correctly. The wage tax returns must be filed and the wage tax due must be paid by the seventh business day of the month following the end of the reporting period. For most nonresident employees, wage withholding tax is a final tax.

If the fiscal year is the calendar year, resident taxpayers must file a preliminary tax return by 15 April of the current fiscal year. Otherwise, they must file this return within two and one-half months after the beginning of the current fiscal year. The return must show taxable income that is at least equal to the taxable income shown on the most recently filed final tax return. In principle, the tax due on this preliminary income tax return must be paid in four equal installments, which are due on 15 April, 15 July, 15 October and 31 December. An extension of time to file the return and pay the tax is not granted. On request of the taxpayer, the Tax Inspector may consent to the reporting of a lower taxable income than the taxable income shown on the most recently filed final tax return.

Nonresident taxpayers must only file a final income tax return.

The final income tax return must be filed within four months after the end of the fiscal year or after the individual is no longer subject to tax. Any difference between the tax due based on the preliminary return and the tax due based on the final return must be settled at the time of the filing of the final return.

Social security payments. Social security contributions (old-age insurance contributions) are withheld by the employer and are declared in the wage tax returns. Otherwise, they are due when the final individual income tax return is filed.

Basic illness insurance law and pension law. Employers must withhold the employees' shares of the premiums required under the basic illness insurance and pension laws from wages and remit these withholdings.

Wealth tax returns. For married individuals, in principle, one wealth tax return is required to be filed. Under certain circumstances, two returns may be filed. The Suriname Tax Inspector provides the form for a wealth tax return. The form must be filed within 20 days after receipt of the form. If, based on the applicable law, a taxpayer is required to file a wealth tax return, but does not receive a form, the taxpayer must file a wealth tax return by 15 February or within two months after establishment in Suriname.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Suriname has entered into tax treaties with Indonesia and the Netherlands. These treaties contain provisions to avoid double taxation between Suriname and the other countries regarding taxes on income.

If no treaty applies, the Suriname Tax Inspector may be contacted for possible application of an exemption to avoid double taxation.

F. Residency and working permits

In general, foreign individuals who wish to reside and work in Suriname need residency and working permits. The conditions for obtaining such permits depend on the nationality of the individual.

G. COVID-19 measures

COVID-19 measures are discussed below.

Filing and payment dates for the 2021 and 2022 preliminary tax returns. For both corporations and individuals, the due date for filing the preliminary tax return for 2021 is extended from 15 April 2021 to 15 June 2021. Following an additional announcement from the tax authorities, a grace period applies until 15 August 2021. Accordingly, no fines or interest are imposed until 15 August 2021. For the filing of the preliminary tax return for 2022, the ultimate filing should remain as statutory determined (that is, 15 April 2022).

Payments. As mentioned in Section D, any amount due and payable on filing of the preliminary tax return for 2021 can be paid in four equal installments on 15 April, 15 July, 15 October and 31 December 2021. The timing of the quarterly payments remains in force except for the revised payment dates of the first and second installments, which is extended from 15 April and 15 July 2021 to 15 August 2021. Accordingly, no fines or interest are imposed until 15 August 2021. For the preliminary tax return for 2022, the ultimate payment date should remain as statutory determined with an ultimate payment date for the first installment of 15 April 2022.

Filing and payment dates for the 2020 and 2021 final tax returns. For corporations, the ultimate filing date of the 2020 final corporate income tax return is extended from 30 June 2021 to 30 August 2021 following an additional announcement from the tax authorities. Any corporate income tax due on this return should be paid by 31 August 2021. For individuals, the ultimate filing date of the 2020 final personal income tax return is extended from 30 April to 30 June 2021. Following an additional announcement from the tax authorities, a grace period applies until 31 August 2021. Accordingly, no fines or interest are imposed until 31 August 2021

In addition, taxpayers who are experiencing cash flow challenges because of the COVID-19 pandemic can submit a substantiated request to the Tax Collector of Direct Taxes to qualify for a deferred payment arrangement. This measure seems to apply to all taxes falling under the authority of the Tax Collector of Direct Taxes (that is, corporate income tax, personal income tax, wage tax, dividend withholding tax, old age premiums and turnover tax). The extent of the cash flow problems required in order to benefit from a deferred payment arrangement is not specified or defined.

Wage tax. As mentioned in Section D, wage tax returns should be filed, and any wage tax due should be paid by the seventh business day of the month following the end of the reporting period. Furthermore, the personal tax credit was increased from SRD125 to SRD750 per month for a maximum of six months starting from May 2020. However, it is now extended until the introduction of a new value-added tax system (expected 1 July 2022). As such, the personal tax credit of SRD9,000 on an annual basis (that is, SRD750 per month) is applied for the period of 1 February 2020 until the introduction of the value-added tax system, which is expected to occur on 1 July 2022.

Devaluation compensation allowance. The government of Suriname increased the devaluation compensation allowance from SRD100 to SRD800 as of 1 September 2021. This is a tax-free allowance. The net allowance to a maximum of SRD 800 can be applied if the salary is increased in September 2021 or going forward. If a salary increase was made in 2021 before 1 September 2021, this allowance can equally be applied with explicit approval from the Suriname tax authorities. If the salary increase exceeds SRD700 (difference between SRD100 and SRD800) the excess is considered taxable wage.

A. Income tax

Who is liable

Territoriality. Residents are subject to Swedish taxes on their worldwide income. Nonresident individuals are taxed on salary earned from work performed in Sweden, on certain pensions and on other income sourced in Sweden.

Definition of resident. Individuals who are present in Sweden for six months or more and regularly stay overnight are generally considered resident for tax purposes.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Income from employment includes wage and salary income, directors' fees, pensions, fringe benefits and most allowances. Special valuation rules apply to housing and car benefits. Education allowances provided by employers to their employees' children are taxable for income tax and social security purposes unless they are exempt under the foreign key personnel rules (see below).

The granting of cost allowances is a taxable benefit but, under certain circumstances, a standard amount may be deducted for increased cost of living if the employee is temporarily working in Sweden.

Other benefits received by residents from employment abroad (except for employment on Swedish ships or on Swedish, Danish or Norwegian airplanes) may be exempt if either of the following conditions applies:

- The employment abroad lasts for at least six months, and the income is taxed in the country of employment.
- The employment abroad lasts for 12 months or longer in one country and no tax has been paid under the legislation or administrative practice of that country.

An additional condition for both of the above alternatives is that visits to Sweden are restricted to an average of 6 days per month of the assignment period (for example, 42 days for 7 months), up to a maximum of 72 days during an employment year.

Employment income is taxed on a cash basis when the income is available to the employee. As a result, taxation occurs when the income becomes available and not when it is actually received or earned.

Salary income and other comparable benefits received by a nonresident for employment or received as commission for activities performed in Sweden from an entity other than the Swedish state or a Swedish municipality is exempt from tax if all of the following conditions apply:

- The recipient has been in Sweden for less than 183 days during a 12-month period.
- The remuneration is paid by, or on behalf of, an employer not having a residence in Sweden.
- The remuneration is not borne by a permanent establishment of the employer in Sweden.

However, the 183-day rule does not apply if the employee's work can be seen as the hiring of labor to a Swedish company (that is, to a Swedish economic employer). Hiring of labor means that an individual is directly or indirectly made available by a foreign employer to perform work in a company's business in Sweden and the work is performed as an integrated part of that company's activities and, entirely or partly, under the Swedish company's control and management. In these situations, taxation could arise in Sweden.

Several factors are considered when assessing whether the work can be regarded as hiring of labor, such as the following:

- Which entity benefits from the work performed by the employee?
- Which entity instructs the employee?
- Which entity bears the cost?

In situations in which the work is regarded as hiring of labor, the 183-day rule does not apply to provide an exemption from Swedish taxation for Swedish workdays under 183 days. However, Swedish taxation may still be exempt to some extent as the economic employer concept only applies for nonresidents working in Sweden for a period exceeding 15 consecutive workdays or a total of 45 workdays during a calendar year. Therefore, any work performed in Sweden under these thresholds is still exempt from taxation, provided that the remaining criteria of the 183-day rule are met.

Foreign key personnel, who are experts and scientists with knowledge and skills that are scarce in Sweden, may benefit from an expatriate tax regime. Expatriates may take advantage of the tax regime only if their applications are approved. The regime applies to individuals whose periods of assignment will not exceed five years, and tax relief may be granted for only the first three years. An individual who has resided in Sweden at any time during the five years preceding the calendar year when the assignment starts is not entitled to tax relief under this regime. Furthermore, tax relief may be granted only if the individual's remuneration is paid by a Swedish company, branch or permanent establishment. The tax regime exempts the following remuneration from Swedish income tax and social security contributions:

- Twenty-five percent of gross salary and benefits
- Moving expenses to and from Sweden
- Travel expenses (two return tickets to the home country for the individual and family members annually)
- Children's school fees

To qualify for the expatriate tax regime, an individual must either receive monthly remuneration of a minimum of SEK95,201 (including monthly benefits) per month for the 2021 calendar year or qualify as an expert. In addition, an application must be filed with the Expert Tax Board (Forskarskattenämnden) in Stockholm within three months after the beginning date of the assignment.

Investment income. Dividend income from listed Swedish and foreign shares, net interest income and income from rental activities are taxed as income from capital at a flat 30% rate. However, if such income is earned in connection with the operation of a business, it is taxed at the rates applicable to business income. Royalties are in general taxed as business income.

Nonresidents are not subject to tax on interest received from Swedish bank accounts or on capital gains derived on sales of property, other than real estate and certain shares and securities described below. Unless a relevant tax treaty stipulates otherwise, dividends paid by a Swedish company to a nonresident are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 30%.

Nonresidents are subject to tax on income and capital gains derived from real estate located in Sweden. The effective tax rate on such gains is 22% of the capital gain.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employment income of residents is considered business income and is taxed at the same rates applicable to employment income (see Rates). Taxable business income is computed under the rules of sound accounting practices. Accounting profit and taxable income are the same, in principle, but the tax law prescribes several adjustments to arrive at taxable income.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are considered employment income. Regardless of where the services are performed, directors' fees and similar remuneration paid to nonresident members or deputy members of Swedish boards or similar bodies are treated as salary income and are subject to a 25% final withholding tax, with no deductions allowed.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Taxable income derived from a stock option incentive plan is generally taxed at the time the option is exercised. If double taxation occurs, the individual may be entitled to a foreign tax credit or tax exemption, depending on the applicable tax treaty or whether the individual is a citizen of a country within the European Union (EU). The value of the benefit is the spread credited to the employee on the date of exercise. The taxable benefit is treated as ordinary employment income. The benefit is also subject to social security contributions.

Income tax must be withheld by the employer by the time the benefit is received by the employee. The tax must be deducted from the employee's normal salary and forwarded to the tax authorities as normal withholding on salary. However, tax withholding is limited to cash payments in the month in which the taxable event occurs.

According to Swedish Supreme Administrative Court decisions in 2015 and 2018, stock option income can be tax-exempt if an individual earns the income outside Sweden while being a tax nonresident of Sweden but exercises the option while being a tax resident of Sweden. These decisions primarily apply to EU citizens.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains are treated as investment income. Gains on listed shares are taxed at a rate of 30%. The rate is 25% for gains on unlisted shares. In addition, certain specific rules apply to companies if 50% of the voting capital is controlled by four or fewer shareholders. Residents are subject to tax on capital gains on both Swedish and foreign shares. Nonresidents are taxed on capital gains on Swedish shares and foreign shares if they were tax resident in Sweden at any time during the 10 calendar years immediately preceding the year in which the transaction occurred. However, taxation of capital gains derived from the sale of non-Swedish shares is limited to shares purchased during the period in which the individual was tax resident in Sweden. Tax treaties often shorten the 10-year period.

Residents are subject to tax on 22/30 of the capital gains on disposals of private homes located in Sweden or abroad. Consequently, gains derived from the sale of a primary residence are taxed at a rate of 22% (22/30 x 30%). A substantial portion of capital losses, which varies depending on the asset generating the loss, may primarily be deducted against capital gains and investment income and then also may generate a tax credit with respect to tax payable on employment income.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. The principal deductions allowed are interest expense, expenses for travel between home and work and for business, and alimony payments.

Interest expenses may be deducted from investment income. If the expenses exceed investment income, 30% of the expenses up to SEK100,000 may be credited against taxes payable. For expenses exceeding SEK100,000, the percentage of the tax credit is reduced to 21%.

Under certain conditions, travel costs between home and work that exceed SEK11,000 are deductible. The amount deductible if using a private automobile is SEK1.85 for each kilometer traveled. An employee is also entitled to a deduction of SEK1.85 for each kilometer traveled in a private automobile to carry out the employer's business.

Alimony paid to a former spouse is deductible, subject to certain limitations.

Mandatory individual social security charges in other EU/ European Economic Area (EEA) member states and Switzerland can be deductible in Sweden.

Personal deductions. A basic deduction is allowed for both local and state tax purposes. For 2021, the amount of the basic local and state deduction ranges from SEK14,000 to SEK36,700. However, this does not imply that all income in excess of SEK14,000 is taxed because no tax is payable if total income does not exceed SEK20,100 (for 2021). Accordingly, up to this level of income, the personal deduction does not apply. Beyond an income level of SEK20,100, the personal deduction supersedes the exemption rule. The personal deduction is subject to proration if individuals are part-year residents.

Business deductions. For expenses to be deductible, they must be included in the financial accounts. In principle, all expenses incurred to obtain, secure and maintain business income are deductible. Exceptions are made for certain items, including penalties, fines, objects of art, expensive entertainment, and wine and liquor.

Social security taxes for self-employed individuals, as described in Section C, are deductible in the same year they accrue at the rates of 25% for active business income and 20% for passive business income. Lower rates can apply for young employees.

Rates. For 2021, employment income is subject to both national income tax and local income tax, at the rates set forth below.

Employment income over SEK537,200 (before the personal deduction) is subject to national tax at a flat rate of 20% (in addition to the local tax).

Local taxes are levied on employment income at rates ranging from 29% to 36%.

Nonresidents who perform work in Sweden are taxed at a flat rate of 25%, and no deductions are allowed. This tax is imposed as a final withholding tax. A special application form needs to be filed annually with the Swedish tax agency in order to get a decision for the nonresident taxation. Nonresident entertainers and artists are subject to reduced tax at a flat rate of 15%.

Credits. A tax credit applies to income from employment or self-employment. This tax credit is calculated on the basis of the eligible income. The amount of the tax credit depends on the amount of income, the amount of tax and the number of months the individual has been resident in Sweden in the tax year.

Employee social security contributions described in Section C are paid by the employer and are not included in taxable income for the employee.

A tax credit is granted for expenses with respect to so-called household or housekeeping services. Such services include cleaning, childcare in the home, cooking, laundry and garden maintenance as well as personal care and assistance to handicapped or elderly members of the household. The tax credit is granted against tax payable and calculated as 50% of actual costs up to an annual maximum limit of SEK75,000. As a result, the maximum annual tax credit is SEK75,000 per individual.

The above tax credit is also available for certain maintenance and repair costs on the taxpayer's home or summer house if the taxpayer owns his or her home or summer house. The credit is granted only for labor costs and the costs must be substantiated by invoices. The home or summer house must be located within the EU/EEA. The tax credit is granted against tax payable and calculated as 30% of actual labor costs. The maximum annual tax credit is SEK50,000.

The aforementioned credits combined cannot exceed SEK75,000 per year.

Relief for losses. Losses resulting from business activities or earned income may be carried forward indefinitely and offset against the same categories of income in future years.

B. Other taxes

Net wealth tax. The net wealth tax was abolished, effective from 1 January 2007.

Inheritance and gift taxes. The inheritance and gift taxes were abolished, effective from December 2004.

Real estate fee. The real estate fee for privately owned properties equals 1% of the assessed value. However, the highest amount of the real estate fee is capped at SEK8,524 for each house. The owner of the real estate should pay the real estate fee. The owner or the owner as of 1 January the applicable year should pay the fee for the whole calendar year.

This fee also applies to nonresidents owning real estate in Sweden.

For business properties, other rates may apply.

C. Social security

Employers. Social security taxes are levied on salaries, wages and the assessed value of benefits in kind and are paid primarily by the employer (however, see Employees). Payments are made to several programs, including general sickness insurance, basic old-age pension insurance and supplementary pension insurance. Contributions to these various programs are assessed and administered by a single authority. For 2021, the total rate for most employers is 31.42%. In addition, the rate is 10.21% for individuals born between 1938 and 1955 (both years inclusive). The rate is 0% for individuals born in 1937 or earlier. For individuals born between 1998 and 2002, social security taxes are paid at a rate of 19.73% on monthly remuneration up to SEK25,000. However, this reduced social security tax for individuals born between 1998 and 2002 is temporary and is effective from June 2021 until March 2023. Further, for individuals born between 2003 and 2005, social security taxes are paid at a rate of 10.21% on monthly remuneration up to SEK25,000. The ordinary rate applies for the excess.

Employees. Social security is not payable by the employee. Although the employee pays a minor portion of social security (pension insurance contribution) through the tax return, this amount is normally fully creditable against the tax paid.

Certain expatriates may apply to qualify for an exemption of certain remuneration from Swedish social security contributions (see Section A).

The employee social security contributions described above are credited against income taxes in the year paid. For details, see Section A.

Self-employed individuals. Self-employed individuals are subject to social security taxes on their net taxable profit. For 2021, the nominal social security rate is 28.97% for income from a business actively conducted by an individual. In addition, the rate is 10.21% for individuals born between 1938 and 1955 (both years inclusive). The rate is 0% for individuals born in 1937 or earlier who carry on business activity. For passive business income, the rate is 24.26%, regardless of the age of the individual.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Sweden has entered into totalization agreements with various jurisdictions, including EU/EEA countries. Some of the totalization agreements apply only to certain parts of the social security taxes. The following is a list of the totalization agreement jurisdictions.

A totalization agreement with Japan is signed but not yet in force. Totalization agreement negotiations are currently underway with Brazil and China Mainland.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Tax is assessed on taxable income for each fiscal year, which is generally the calendar year. Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income.

Annual tax returns must generally be filed by 2 May of the year following the year in which the income is earned. Extensions to file returns may be obtained.

Tax on salaries, wages and other remuneration, including benefits in kind, is withheld by employers. Individuals who are self-employed or who have business income as well as other non-employment income may register as self-employed taxpayers. Preliminary tax is then computed according to a preliminary tax return. The preliminary tax is payable monthly, beginning in February of the fiscal year and ending in January of the following year.

Any difference between the final tax due and the preliminary tax paid is either refunded immediately or must be paid by 90 days after the date of the final tax assessment.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Double tax relief is provided by allowing taxpayers to credit foreign taxes paid or to deduct foreign taxes paid as an expense. If a credit is elected, a five-year carryforward is available. The credit is limited to the lesser of foreign taxes actually paid or the Swedish tax payable on all foreign-source income.

Sweden has entered into double tax treaties with many countries. Most of the treaties follow the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) model. In general, the treaties provide that a credit may be taken for foreign taxes paid in the other treaty country to the extent of Swedish taxes imposed on the same income. However, under Sweden's unilateral tax credit system, a credit may also be taken against Swedish tax imposed on other foreign-source income.

Sweden has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

F. Entry visas

Permission to enter Sweden is granted to foreign nationals who wish to visit or stay in the country for up 90 days within a 180-day period if they have valid passports and if they prove they have sufficient means to support themselves while in Sweden and to pay for their journeys home. Citizens of certain jurisdictions outside of the EU may be required to apply for visas before traveling to Sweden. Applications for entry visas are made through the Swedish embassy or consulate in the country of residence. Citizens from certain countries can obtain permission to enter Sweden on arrival. For a list of visa-required nationals, please refer to the Swedish Ministry of Foreign Affairs website.

G. Work permits and self-employment

In December 2008, the Swedish parliament enacted legislation revising the rules regarding work permits. The intention was to facilitate the hiring by Swedish employers of non-EU/EEA citizens with special skills. The legislation transferred the responsibility for determining the availability of the needed skills from the Labour Boards and the Migration Agency to the individual employers.

Citizens of EU/EEA member countries and Switzerland are treated in accordance with EU rules and do not need work permits to work in Sweden. Sweden also has an agreement with the other Nordic countries (Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway) that allows citizens of these countries to live and work in Sweden without residence or work permits.

Foreign nationals from other countries who wish to work in Sweden must obtain work permits before entering Sweden. An application for a work permit must be accompanied by an offer of employment form issued by the Swedish employer or "end user" (the company for which the individual performs work in Sweden if not the legal employer) in Sweden. In situations in which the foreign (non-EU/EEA or Swiss) national is a new local hire (by the formal employer), the position must be posted on the EU job exchange (EURES) network before a job offer is issued to the foreign national.

The terms of the offer of employment must comply with current collective bargaining agreements concerning wages, mandatory insurance and other benefits or, if no collective agreements exist, with market practice for the specific industry. An opinion must be obtained from the relevant union body as part of the application process.

The Swedish work permit regulation stipulates that no foreign citizen should be granted a work permit in Sweden unless their terms of employment are at least on par with Swedish collective agreements or the practice within the occupation or line of business. The terms of employment include salary level and insurance coverage. The requirement to offer terms of employment that are at least on par with Swedish collective agreements or that are customary in the occupation or industry applies regardless of whether the employer has a collective agreement.

The type of insurances that must cover employees include the following:
- Health insurance
- Life insurance
- Occupational injury
- Pension insurance

Certain exemptions exist with respect to the requirement to apply for a work permit, such as for employees who enter Sweden for the purpose of undertaking internal training for up to three months with the Swedish entity of an international group of companies. Such exemptions are outlined in Chapter 5 of the Aliens Ordinance.

EY Sweden has a certification agreement that enables streamlined processing of work permit applications. For a company certified with the Swedish Migration Agency through EY Sweden, the processing time to receive a work and residency permit is 10 days for first-time applications and up to 20 days for extension applications (provided that the applications are deemed simple and complete by the Migration Agency). Applications filed outside of certification can instead carry a processing time of up to 12 months.

Work permits are granted for a maximum period of two years and can be extended for an additional two years. After 48 months of work in Sweden, a permanent residence permit can be applied for.

H. Residence permits

Non-EU/EEA/Nordic foreign nationals who wish to stay in Sweden for longer than three months must have residence permits. These must be obtained before entering Sweden. Individuals normally apply for residence permits in an application for a work permit, and the permits are granted simultaneously. Residence permits are granted for a maximum period of two years when applied for in an application for a work permit. A renewal application must be submitted before the expiration of the initial residence permit. An individual who has held a work permit in Sweden for a total of four years may submit a permanent residency application.

To be granted a permanent residence permit, the employment needs to fulfill the work permit requirements (offered terms of employment must be at least on par with those set by Swedish collective agreements or with those that are customary within the occupation or industry). However, the individual also needs to have sufficient ties to the Swedish labor market. If the individual has spent more than one year outside of Sweden during the previous four years, he or she would be deemed to have insufficient ties to Sweden. As a result, the permanent residence permit would not be granted, and the individual would have to leave Sweden. If the individual has spent less than one year outside of Sweden but more than four months, they would not be deemed eligible for permanent residence but could be granted a temporary extension of their work and residence permit in order to qualify for permanent residence at a later date.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Accompanying spouses or other accompanying children below the age of 21 of expatriates can be included in the primary applicant's residency application.

Children of expatriates do not need student visas to attend schools in Sweden.

Marital property regime. The default marital property regime in Sweden is community property. All property owned by the spouses is regarded as community property, regardless of whether it is acquired prior to marriage or after marriage by gift or inheritance. If a gift or inheritance is received on the condition that it is deemed to be private property, however, the gift or inheritance is not regarded as community property.

Couples may elect out of the regime before or during the marriage by signing a marriage settlement, which should be registered with the civil court.

The community property regime applies to couples resident in Sweden at the time of the wedding. If a couple with foreign citizenship becomes resident in Sweden after the wedding, the regime applies after two years of residency in Sweden. The couple may elect out of the regime by signing a settlement.

Driver's permits. EU citizens and citizens of Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway may use home country driver's licenses for unlimited periods of time in Sweden.

Citizens of other countries may use their driver's licenses for up to 12 months if these are issued in English, French or German, or if they are accompanied by a translation into one of these languages or into Danish, Norwegian or Swedish. A driver's license without a photograph is valid only if accompanied by an identity document with a photograph. Residents of Sweden for longer than one year must obtain Swedish driver's licenses. A driver's license issued in Japan, Switzerland or the United Kingdom may be exchanged for a Swedish driver's license if the holder is resident in Sweden or if he or she passes a standard medical test. Otherwise, to obtain a Swedish driver's license, an individual must complete a physical exam and written and driving tests. In addition, drivers must take lessons in driving on slippery roads.

J. Obligation to report postings and new hires

Posted worker reporting. Foreign employers must report postings and specify a contact person to be registered in Sweden. The Swedish Work Environment Authority maintains the register. Reporting should be made as of the first day, effective from 30 July 2020.

A posted employee is a person who has been sent by his or her employer to another country to work for a limited time period. If a person has been sent to Sweden, he or she is covered by certain provisions in Swedish laws and collective agreements during the period of employment. This covers all posted workers regardless of nationality or citizenship.

New foreign employee reporting. All new third-country (non-EU/EEA) hires, regardless of whether they are locally employed or assigned to Sweden, must be reported to the Swedish Tax Agency by no later than the 12th day of the month following the individual's first day of work in Sweden.

A. Income tax

Tax system in summary. Switzerland's complex tax structure has been shaped by the country's three levels of government, which are federal, cantonal and municipal. The following two distinct taxes are levied:

- Federal taxes
- Cantonal and municipal taxes

Swiss federal tax law is uniform throughout Switzerland, but each of the 26 cantons has a separate law for cantonal taxes. Municipal taxes are levied as a multiple of cantonal taxes. Because tax laws and tax rates vary widely among cantons and among municipalities, the choice of residence is an important element of tax planning.

No average tax rates can be calculated because of the multilayered tax system. Taxes are calculated based on specific figures for specific cantons and municipalities. The maximum overall rate of federal income tax is 11.5%. The various cantonal and municipal taxes are also levied at progressive rates, with a maximum combined cantonal and municipal rate of approximately 36%. In addition, cantonal and municipal net wealth taxes are levied.

The federal Supreme Court and tax administration have developed rules for allocating tax liability among the cantons to avoid double taxation.

Federal taxable income. Individuals establishing tax residence in Switzerland are assessed for federal income tax purposes on a current-year basis.

Special rules apply for the first year a taxpayer is subject to Swiss tax. In addition, the basis of assessment may be altered if certain extraordinary events substantially change an individual's financial situation (for example, change of business or profession, or divorce or legal separation).

In general, taxable income for federal tax purposes consists of all types of income earned by a resident individual, including the following:
- Remuneration from an employer (base salary, bonus, stock options, home leave, and payment of rent, taxes, school fees and utilities)
- Self-employment or business income
- Pension payments and compensation for loss of work or health
- Income from private investments (including interest and dividends)
- Income from real estate

Although income derived from either a fixed place of business or a permanent establishment located abroad, as well as income derived from real estate located abroad, are exempt from taxation, this income must be properly recorded on a Swiss tax return for the determination of the tax rate (exemption with progression).

Cantonal and community taxable income. At the cantonal level, tax is also assessed on a current-year basis. Taxable income for cantonal and community tax purposes is calculated in basically the same way as taxable income for federal taxes.

Who is liable. An individual who is tax resident in Switzerland is subject to federal, cantonal and municipal taxes on worldwide income, except income derived from real estate located abroad and income from either a fixed place of business or a permanent establishment located abroad. Individuals are subject to Swiss income tax and net wealth tax (see Section B) from their first day of residency until they officially leave the country.

Nonresidents are subject to tax on income from the following Swiss sources:
- Interest in Swiss real estate
- Interest in a Swiss partnership or sole proprietorship
- Trade or business attributable to a Swiss permanent establishment or fixed place of business
- Professional practice in Switzerland
- Trade and agency of real estate located in Switzerland
- Services performed in Switzerland (with exceptions)
- Interest income derived from a mortgage secured by Swiss real estate
- Services rendered as a director or officer of a Swiss corporation (with exceptions)
- Payments by Swiss pension funds

Individuals are considered resident in Switzerland if they take up legal residence in Switzerland or if they intend to stay there for a certain period (usually longer than one month), as well as if they work in Switzerland for a period exceeding 30 days.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. In general, all compensation provided by an employer is considered employment income and is included in the employee's overall taxable income. However, if properly documented, certain reimbursements for necessary business-related expenses are not subject to tax.

Both residents and nonresidents who remain in Switzerland for employment purposes are subject to tax on employment income. Resident Swiss nationals or C permit holders are not subject to withholding tax (they do file an ordinary tax return), and most nonresidents are subject to withholding tax on employment income. Foreign residents who are not C permit holders must file a tax return if their gross employment income equals or exceeds CHF120,000 (on an annual basis), or if they have income (for example, private income) not subject to withholding taxes, have taxable wealth or have Swiss real estate.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employment and business income is included in overall taxable income. A partnership is not taxed as a separate entity; rather, the respective shares of partnership profit are included in the taxable income of each partner. All necessary expenses incurred in operating a business or profession are tax-deductible. Self-employed individuals may carry forward business losses if these losses cannot be offset against other taxable income. No carrybacks are allowed for self-employed individuals.

Directors' fees. For residents, directors' fees received from a Swiss company are included in the taxpayer's overall taxable income. Directors' fees remitted from a foreign country are generally included in a resident's overall taxable income, unless an applicable double tax treaty provides otherwise. For nonresidents, directors' fees received from a Swiss company are subject to withholding tax (at a rate of 25% in the Cantons of Geneva and Zurich) and social security contributions (unless the terms of an applicable totalization agreement specify otherwise).

Investment income. A withholding tax of 35% is levied on dividends; on interest from publicly offered bonds, from debentures and from other instruments of indebtedness issued by Swiss residents; and on bank interest (in excess of CHF200 per year), but not on normal loans. For Swiss residents, withholding tax is fully recoverable. For nonresidents, withholding tax is a final tax, unless the terms of an applicable double tax treaty specify otherwise.

Dividends received are taxed as ordinary income. However, if the recipient of a dividend owns at least 10% of the share capital of the payer company, only 70% of the dividend is taxable for the purpose of the federal income tax. Some cantons have adopted similar rules.

Rental income and royalties, as well as licensing, management and technical assistance fees, are not subject to withholding tax. With certain exceptions, they are included in taxable income and are taxed by the federal government, cantons and municipalities.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Under federal law, equity-based compensation schemes are taxed at vesting (restricted stock units), at exercise (stock options that are not tradable or restricted) or at grant (tradable and unrestricted stock options, and free shares). The cantons also apply these rules.

In addition, the equity gain is allocated to Switzerland based on the number of workdays performed in Switzerland during the vesting period.

Income derived from equity is taxed together with other income at ordinary tax rates. In addition, social taxes are levied on equity income.

The subsequent sale of the shares triggers no further tax consequences because private capital gains are exempt from tax in Switzerland.

Capital gains and losses. Private capital gains derived from sales of movable assets are not taxed at the federal level or at the cantonal level. Capital gains derived from sales of immovable assets located in Switzerland are subject to a separate tax in all cantons.

For federal tax purposes, a gain or loss from a sale or exchange of business assets is treated as ordinary income or an expense item. For cantonal tax purposes, the treatment is the same, except that some cantons levy a separate tax on gains from sales or exchanges of immovable assets.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Necessary expenses incurred in connection with employment income, maintenance and operating costs of real estate, any kind of debt interest, contributions to qualified pension plans, Swiss or foreign compulsory social security premiums, and other specific items are deductible from taxable income. For some expenses, tax-deductible amounts are standardized (insurance premiums, education costs and lunch expenses). These rules apply for federal as well as cantonal and municipal taxes. However, other items may be treated differently among the cantons.

For expatriates (as defined), an annual deduction of CHF18,000 is allowed, which is intended to cover an expatriate's housing and other expenses related to being an expatriate. Expenses in excess of CHF18,000 may be deductible if they can be proven. Other typical expenses of an expatriate, including moving expenses, may also be deductible.

Personal deductions and allowances. No specific personal deductions and allowances are granted to individual taxpayers, except some minor standardized deductions granted in most cantons (for example, deductions for children).

Business deductions. Nonresidents may deduct necessary expenses incurred in operating a business or profession and in the maintenance and operation of rental property.

Lump-sum taxation. Resident aliens who were resident or domiciled abroad for the past 10 years may qualify for a special tax concession called lump-sum taxation if they do not engage in any employment or carry on a business in Switzerland. Activities outside Switzerland are not taken into consideration. The lump-sum tax is imposed on income imputed from the living expenses of taxpayers and their families (for example, by a multiple of rental value). The amount of lump-sum tax may not be less than the tax that would be payable on the sum of the following items:
- Income from Swiss real property
- Income from Swiss investments
- Income from any other property located in Switzerland

- Income from Swiss-source patents, copyrights and similar property rights
- Pensions or annuities paid from Swiss sources
- Foreign income, if treaty exemption is claimed

Several cantons allow a nonworking resident to elect lump-sum taxation instead of regular income tax.

In certain cantons, lump-sum taxation is granted for only a limited number of years. In many cantons, eligibility for lump-sum taxation and the method of calculating the tax payable are negotiated individually with the tax authorities rather than statutorily determined.

Rates. The maximum overall federal tax rate is 11.5%.

Cantonal tax rates vary considerably from one canton to another, although all rates are progressive. The tax rate consists of a base rate multiplied by a coefficient, which may change from year to year. The municipal tax rate is usually a percentage of the cantonal rate. Therefore, the overall rate varies within a canton, depending on the municipality where a taxpayer resides. In most cantons, a church tax is also levied as a percentage of the cantonal rate for taxpayers who are members of an official Swiss church community. Maximum cantonal and municipal tax rates range from approximately 12% to 36%.

B. Other taxes

Net wealth tax. No net wealth tax is imposed at the federal level. All cantons and municipalities levy net wealth tax on worldwide assets, except for real estate, a fixed place of business, or a permanent establishment located abroad. Tax rates are reasonably low and vary widely, depending on the canton and municipality where the taxpayer resides.

Inheritance and gift taxes

Cantonal taxes. No inheritance or gift taxes are imposed at the federal level. However, all cantons levy separate inheritance and gift taxes. Rates vary widely depending on the canton where the deceased or donor is domiciled.

In most cantons, resident foreigners are subject to inheritance tax and gift tax on worldwide assets, except for real estate located abroad. Nonresidents are subject to inheritance tax and to gift tax on real estate located in Switzerland only.

Treaties. To prevent double taxation, Switzerland has entered into inheritance tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Austria
Denmark
Finland
Germany
Israel (only with Basel Stadt canton; declaration of reciprocity)
Liechtenstein (only with limited Swiss cantons' declaration of reciprocity)
Netherlands
Sweden
United Kingdom
United States

C. Social security

Swiss retirement benefits are derived from the following sources:
- The mandatory social security system (old-age and survivors' insurance). Pensions are based on premiums paid and on the number of years worked. Benefits generally satisfy minimum living requirements.
- Company pension plans. Pension plans must be segregated from the company. These benefit plans complement the benefits of the Swiss social security program and are compulsory for employees subject to the old-age and survivors' insurance.
- Individual savings.

Employees. The Swiss social security contribution rate is 10.6% of total salary, with no ceiling; the employer and employee each pay 5.3%. The employee's share is withheld monthly by the employer. In addition, contributions at a rate of 2.2% on annual salary up to CHF148,200, and 1% on annual salary exceeding CHF148,200, must be made to the unemployment insurance fund. This cost is also divided equally between the employer and employee.

In general, employees who pay into the Swiss social security system must contribute to a pension plan. The employer must make contributions of at least 50% of the total contribution.

Contributions to both schemes are fully tax-deductible. Furthermore, contributions to special types of individual savings schemes are tax-deductible, up to a certain amount.

Self-employed individuals. Self-employed individuals must make social security contributions at a maximum rate of 10% of their income from their business or profession. The 10% rate also applies to partnership profits. Self-employed persons are not required to be members of a pension plan.

Nonresidents. Nonresidents who carry on a business activity within Switzerland (including serving on the board of a Swiss company) are subject to Swiss social security contributions on income derived from that activity, unless a social security treaty provides otherwise.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Switzerland has entered into totalization agreements, which usually apply for a period of two years but may extend to five years, with the following jurisdictions.

Australia
Austria
Belgium
Bosnia and Herzegovina
Brazil
Bulgaria
Canada
Chile

Switzerland has also signed a totalization agreement with Tunisia, which is under a ratification process. Negotiations are in progress with Albania and Peru. For the United Kingdom, a new agreement is under approval for a provisional application.

Under the totalization agreements, if certain conditions are met, exemption from the Swiss social security system is available for a certain period if employees continue to contribute to their home country social security systems.

Under an agreement between Switzerland and the European Union (EU), Switzerland has applied European Regulation 883/2004 since 1 April 2012 (European Regulation 1408/71 before that date), which overrules the bilateral totalization agreements listed above with respect to Swiss and EU nationals.

Effective from 1 January 2016, EU Regulation 883/2004 applies to moves of European Free Trade Association (EFTA) nationals between Switzerland and EFTA countries (EU Regulation 1408/71 previously applied). A transition period of 10 years applies to ongoing situations.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Federal taxes are due 31 March of each year. Tax filing and payment procedures vary widely from canton to canton and depend on individual circumstances.

Married persons are taxed jointly, not separately, on all types of income.

In general, Swiss tax resident individuals have the obligation to file an annual tax return declaring their worldwide income and worldwide assets, including properties outside Switzerland. In all cantons, directors' fees and payments by Swiss pension funds are subject to special withholding provisions (covering cantonal and municipal, as well as federal, income taxes).

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Income is allocated in accordance with rules developed by the Federal Supreme Court on inter-cantonal tax allocation, unless an applicable double tax treaty provides otherwise. In addition, certain cantonal rules may influence international income allocation. However, treaty law always overrules Swiss domestic law.

According to Swiss domestic law and treaty regulations, foreign-source income is excluded from taxable income if it is derived from a permanent establishment located in a foreign country (as defined by treaty law or, in the absence of an applicable double tax treaty, by Swiss domestic law). Also excluded is income derived from real estate located abroad. In addition, certain types of income, including directors' fees, special pensions and partnership profits, may be exempt in Switzerland under an applicable treaty.

In general, all other foreign-source income is taxable in Switzerland. In the absence of a treaty, foreign-source income on movable assets (for example, dividends on foreign shares) may be taxed net of any foreign income taxes or withholding taxes imposed on such income by the source country, depending on the circumstances.

Most of Switzerland's income tax treaties follow the draft model of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD). Switzerland generally applies the exemption-with-progression method rather than the tax-credit method for qualified foreign-source income. However, a limited tax credit is granted, for remaining net foreign withholding taxes imposed on dividends, interest and royalties from the treaty jurisdictions listed below. The credit may not exceed Swiss tax due on the relevant income.

Switzerland has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

On 12 February 2018, Switzerland signed a double tax treaty with Saudi Arabia, which entered into force on 1 April 2021 and will be applicable from 1 January 2022. On 5 March 2018, Switzerland signed a double tax treaty with Brazil, which entered into force on 16 March 2021 and will be applicable from 1 January 2022. On 23 November 2019, Switzerland signed a double tax treaty with Bahrain, which is not yet in force. On 29 July 2021, Switzerland signed a double tax treaty with Ethiopia, which is not yet in effect.

Special tax agreement for cross-borders due to COVID-19 pandemic. The tax treaties concluded between Switzerland, France, Germany and Italy provide for specific tax regimes for workers residing and working in the border area. To simplify their administrative procedures, most of these schemes allow the exclusive taxation of their wages in the state of residence.

In the exceptional health context of the COVID-19 pandemic and taking into account the recommendations and instructions of the public authorities, Switzerland and its neighbor countries agreed until 31 December 2021 that the days during which frontier workers are required to remain at home during this crisis should not trigger a change in their taxation. Consequently, these days will not affect the eligibility of cross-border workers for the specific tax regime.

F. General visa requirements for entry into Switzerland

Since 12 December 2008, Switzerland is an associated member state of the Schengen agreement and accordingly part of the Schengen area. The Schengen regulations apply to the entry and a stay of up to three months within a six-month period that is not subject to authorization. For individuals who are required to hold a visa, Switzerland issues Schengen visas for a stay up to 90 days within a 180-day period that are in principle valid for the whole Schengen area.

Foreign nationals require a valid and accepted travel document to enter Switzerland. In addition, a visa is required in certain cases.

Foreign visitors who have entered Switzerland in compliance with the relevant regulations and are not taking up any form of employment (or if the gainful activity performed in Switzerland does not exceed eight days per calendar year) are not required to have a residence permit if the duration of their stay does not exceed three months within a six-month period. Their stay must not exceed a total of 90 days per 180-day period. For the purpose of the computation of this 90-day period, it is in principle necessary to consider all stays in each Schengen state. Individuals requiring a visa must observe the duration of stay specified in their visa.

G. Work permits and work authorizations

General principles. Any foreigner who wants to perform a gainful (productive) activity in Switzerland must, in principle, be in possession of an authorization. Any activity (self-employed or employed status) that normally procures a gain is a gainful activity, even if the activity is performed for free or if the remuneration consists only of coverage of basic expenses.

Switzerland has the following dual system for the admission of foreign workers:

- The provisions of the Agreement on the Free Movement of Persons (AFMP) and its directives for European Economic Area (EEA) citizens locally employed in Switzerland
- The provisions of the Foreign Nationals and Integration Act (FNIA) and its provisions for non-EEA citizens and EEA citizens seconded to Switzerland

EEA citizens. EEA citizens under local (Swiss) employment contracts benefit from the AFMP and, accordingly, are entitled to obtain a work permit. They may perform a gainful activity in Switzerland as soon as they have registered in Switzerland. In the case of EEA citizens seconded to Switzerland, their employer needs to file a formal work permit application with the authorities because they fall under the Swiss FNIA. Further requirements (quotas and minimum salary requirements) also apply to them (see below). They may only start working after having received the respective approvals from the Swiss immigration authorities.

As of 1 June 2019, the Swiss Federal Council has granted the full unrestricted free movement rights to Bulgarian and Romanian nationals and therefore abolished the quotas that were in force until May 2019. On 1 January 2017, the AFMP was extended to Croatia. Since then, special transitory measures with quotas and restrictions regarding the access to the labor market (priority clause for local workers as well as control of salary and work conditions) apply to Croatian nationals. These transitory measures will be in force until 31 December 2021, but they may be extended until 31 December 2023.

United Kingdom citizens. On 31 January 2020 the United Kingdom withdrew from the EU. In the withdrawal agreement between the EU and the United Kingdom, a transitional phase lasting until 31 December 2020 has been agreed on. From 1 January 2021, the AFMP between Switzerland and the EU no longer applies to the United Kingdom. From this date, UK nationals are no longer EU/EFTA nationals but are considered third-country nationals.

Switzerland and the United Kingdom signed an agreement on acquired citizen rights in 2019. The agreement is intended to protect the residence (and other) rights of Swiss and UK citizens acquired under the AFMP (until 31 December 2020). As a result of this agreement, these rights are preserved after Brexit and are in principle valid for an indefinite time.

UK nationals wanting to move to Switzerland after 31 December 2020 are not covered by the agreement on acquired citizens' rights. At the moment, no additional bilateral agreement to cover this scenario has been concluded between Switzerland and the United Kingdom. For now, UK nationals moving to Switzerland after 31 December 2020 must meet the terms of the FNIA because they are considered third-country nationals. They are subject to quotas in such a case.

Non-EEA citizens. Switzerland's immigration policy for foreign nationals is selective and restrictive in the sense that only a limited number of executives, specialists and other qualified employees are admitted to work in Switzerland. The following significant criteria apply:

- Non-EEA citizens may be permitted to work only if it is proven, by way of a labor market search, that no suitable domestic employees or EEA citizens can be found for the job. Certain exceptions apply with respect to seconded foreign employees and international transfers of specialists and executives within a group of companies.
- Quotas limiting the number of work permits also apply (except for L-4-month/120-day work permits).
- Non-EEA citizens may be admitted to work only if the salary and employment conditions customary for the location, profession and sector are met.

Exceptions

Eight-day rule. In principle, citizens from non-EEA countries, as well as EEA nationals seconded to Switzerland, may work up to eight days in a calendar year in Switzerland without a work permit if the project in Switzerland is planned for a maximum duration of eight days (depending on the nationality, visa requirements may apply). However, depending on the location of the assigning company (EEA- or non-EEA-based company), the approach of the authorities related to the computation of the eight days varies. For employees of non-EEA-based companies, the eight days are counted per person. The eight days for EEA-based companies are cumulatively counted per entity and all employees.

For certain sectors, an online announcement or work permit application must be filed by the first day of activity. This rule applies to the following sectors:

- Construction, civil engineering and sub-trade or construction supply work
- Hotel and restaurant business
- Industrial or domestic cleaning
- Surveillance and security
- Travel and security
- Sex industry

Every gainful activity exceeding the eight days referred to above requires a work permit, an authorization or the filing of the appropriate announcement.

Business meetings. Business meetings may be attended without a work permit in Switzerland. However, only a very limited number of activities are considered to be a business meeting. According to the authorities' practice, the following are considered the attending of a business meeting:

- Attending conferences as a listener
- Attending initial/introduction meetings with clients (no productive contribution to an existing project)
- Attending coordination/synchronization meetings
- Attending project coordination meetings
- Receiving training (not as a presenter; no training on the job)
- Attending contract negotiating meetings (without proposal or acquisition work)
- Signing of contracts

However, to be on the safe side, individuals should apply for a work permit. Because there is no legal definition of a business meeting, the authorities decide at their own discretion whether an activity is considered a business meeting or a gainful activity for which a work authorization is required.

Citizens of most non-EU countries also need a visa to enter Switzerland even if they “only” attend a business meeting.

Online announcement. An online announcement applies to employees of EEA-based companies as well as EEA citizens working in Switzerland for less than 90 days.

Employers that are located within the EEA and that second EEA nationals (or foreign nationals included in the EEA labor market for at least 12 months) for less than 90 working days per calendar year must perform an online announcement to comply with Swiss immigration requirements. The 90-day quota is allocated per each foreign legal entity, employee and year. The online announcement must be processed eight days before the first working day in Switzerland. The online announcement confirmation represents the work authorization.

The same principle applies if Swiss companies want to employ EEA citizens for less than 90 days per calendar year in Switzerland. In such a case, the 90-day quota is allocated per employee and year.

Once the 90 days are exceeded, a work permit must be applied for.

Quotas. Swiss law imposes a quota system that limits the number of available permits for third-country nationals, Croatian nationals and EEA nationals who are seconded to Switzerland for more than four months.

Change of employer, change of activity or change of canton. No authorization is required for locally employed EEA citizens to change employers. The same principle applies to foreign nationals holding a long-term B permit except in some circumstances. However, authorization is required for the following non-EEA nationals to change employers:
- Individuals who receive work permits for specific time-limited activities
- Individuals holding a short-term L permit (see Section H)

Locally employed EEA nationals holding long-term B permits can freely change from a dependent activity to an independent activity.

EEA and non-EEA citizens can in principle move their residence to another canton (a new permit will be issued by the new canton of residence). However, some non-EEA citizens are required to request a specific authorization from the cantonal authorities to be allowed to move their residence to another canton.

H. COVID-19

As a result of the global spread of COVID-19, Switzerland has implemented entry restrictions for foreign nationals coming from specific countries (“high-risk” countries) who do not meet certain entry criteria. Schengen and EU countries, as well as a few non-Schengen/EU countries, are not viewed as high-risk countries anymore (meaning that the normal entry requirements apply to citizens coming to Switzerland from these countries).

For all other third-country citizens traveling directly from a high-risk country, it is only possible to enter Switzerland if at least one of the following conditions is met:
• The traveler is Swiss citizen.
• The traveler holds a travel document (for example, a passport or identity card) and one of the following:
  — A Swiss residence permit (L/B/C/Ci permit)
  — A cross-border permit (G permit)
  — A D visa issued by Switzerland
  — A C visa issued by Switzerland after 16 March 2020 in a valid exceptional case or in order to work on a short-term contract
  — Assurance of a residence permit
  — Confirmation of notification for the cross-border provision of services up to 90 days in any calendar year (for example, UK nationals)
• The traveler has rights of free movement. If a visa is required, a valid Schengen C visa, a valid D visa or a valid Schengen residence permit is sufficient.
• The traveler is in a situation of special necessity (see below). The border control authority will assess the necessity of the situation.
• The traveler has been vaccinated with a recognized vaccine. In this case, entry to Switzerland with a valid Schengen visa issued by any Schengen-state before 16 March 2020 is possible.
• The traveler is under 18 and traveling with an adult who has been fully vaccinated (parents, siblings, grandparents or other caregivers).
• The traveler is transferring in or traveling through Switzerland.

Travelers must be able to prove that they meet the abovementioned requirements.

The following are examples of special necessity:
• Entry by foreign nationals from third countries who are providing a cross-border service, for up to eight days in any calendar year or who are working temporarily in Switzerland for a foreign employer from a third country, provided that their personal presence is essential
• Entry because a close family member in Switzerland has died or is dying
• Entry to continue essential medical treatment that began in Switzerland or abroad
• Entry to care for close family members in a medical emergency
• Entry to visit immediate family members (that is, husband or wife, registered partner and minor children) who are living in Switzerland
• Entry to visit a partner to whom one is not married or with whom one is in a registered partnership and with whom one does not have children

Persons who require an entry visa must apply for one at the Swiss foreign representation for their place of residence, explaining why they are a case of special necessity. For persons who do not require a visa, the border control officers at the Schengen external border (that is, at the airport) decide whether the requirements of necessity have been met. Credible proof (for example, marriage certificate, certificate of residence or business documents) must be provided when an exception is claimed on the grounds of special necessity or public interest. Work permit applications (for short- and long-term stays) for all nationalities are generally accepted. Work permits are accepted based on the respective applicable laws (AFMP or FNIA).

Entry form. Before entering Switzerland, a special entry form must be completed. Everyone entering Switzerland must present the completed form (accessible via https://swissplf.admin.ch/formular). Some exemptions apply (for example, for cross-border commuters or transit).

Vaccination/recovery status. For people who are not fully vaccinated or unable to prove that they have recovered from COVID-19 in the last six months, test requirements apply in addition to the requirement to fill out an entry form. These people will be asked to provide proof of a negative PCR test or rapid antigen test twice:

On entry, a PCR test (not older than 72 hours) or rapid antigen test (not older than 48 hours) at the departure location is required.

Four to seven days after arrival, another PCR test or rapid antigen test in Switzerland is required. The result of this test must be reported to the cantonal authorities in the form of a COVID-19 test certificate.

I. Type of permits

Online announcement. Strictly speaking, the online announcement is not a permit, but still required if EEA citizens/non-EEA citizens employed by an EEA-based entity work in Switzerland for less than 90 days. This also applies for EEA-citizens employed by a Swiss entity for less than 90 days per calendar year. For more information, please see Online announcement under Exceptions in Section G.

Short-term work permits (L permits). Short-term work permits (L permits) are 4-month/120-day permits, which do not fall under the Swiss quota system described above. Foreign nationals may take up short-term employment for a maximum of 4 consecutive months, or 120 days, spread throughout a 12-month period.

Typically, 4-month/120-day permits are granted to executives or specialists who are needed either once or periodically in Switzerland to perform time-limited tasks. However, Swiss law does not allow a system of rotating employees every 4 months or 120 days (for example, one employee comes for 120 days and is replaced by another, who is then replaced by another).

The second category of L permits is granted for a period between four months and one year and permits are generally issued for project-related stays or short-term assignments. Such permits are subject to quotas. After one year, the L permit may be extended for another year (24 months maximum in total).

The permit lapses if the permit holder gives notice of departure from Switzerland to the municipality's local registration office, forfeits his or her residence, or lives abroad for more than three months.

Long-term work permits (B permits). Long-term work permits (B permits) are granted if an employment/assignment contract for an undetermined duration or for a duration greater than 24 months exists. B permits typically have a validity of five years for all EEA nationals and of one year for non-EEA nationals. The B permits are renewable until obtaining the C permit (see below). In the case of seconded EEA or non-EEA nationals, the B permits are subject to quotas and are usually granted for one year and can be renewed annually.

The permit lapses if the permit holder gives notice of departure from Switzerland to the municipality's local registration office, forfeits his or her residence, or lives abroad for more than six months.

Permanent residence permits (C permits). Permanent residence permits (C permits) are available in Switzerland to all foreign nationals who have lived in the country for a time period that varies depending on citizenship and bilateral treaties (five years of residence are required for citizens of most European countries and 10 years for most non-EU citizens). In general, foreign nationals need to be able to prove a certain degree of proficiency in the official language spoken at their place of residence (French, German or Italian) to be eligible for a C permit. Only certain EU nationals do not need to meet any language requirement; they are eligible for the residence permit C after five years of living in Switzerland.

C permit holders may engage in any legal activity in Switzerland. They may change their employment or profession without approval.

C permits are granted for an unlimited duration, but the permit card must be renewed every five years. The permit lapses if the permit holder gives notice of departure from Switzerland to the municipality's local registration office, forfeits his or her residence, or lives abroad for more than six months. For stays abroad for up to four years, the permit may be maintained if an application is filed in due time.

Cross-border commuter work permits (G permits). Cross-border commuter work permits (G permits) are granted to EU citizens who reside in an EU country while working in Switzerland under a local employment contract. Non-EU citizens who also reside in an EU country while working under a local employment contract in Switzerland can also benefit from a G permit, provided that certain conditions are met (they must reside near the Swiss border in an EU country and their place of work must also lie within a border region in Switzerland).

G permits are valid for five years. However, in the case of a change of employer, a new G permit will be issued.

The G permit lapses if the permit holder stops his or her employment relationship with the Swiss employer.

J. Family reunion

Family reunion under the AFMP. Family members of EU/EFTA nationals holding a B or L permit (valid for 364 days) are granted an EU/EFTA permit allowing them to join the principal applicant and reside in Switzerland, regardless of their nationality (even if they are third-country nationals). The following are family members according to the AFMP:

- Spouses
- Children or grandchildren who are under 21 years of age or who financially depend on the applicant
- Parent(s) and grandparent(s), if they financially depend on the applicant

The spouse and children of an EEA citizen admitted in Switzerland for the purpose of family reunion are entitled to perform gainful activities in Switzerland regardless of their nationality.

Family reunion under the FNIA. The spouse of the principal beneficiary of an L or a B permit and unmarried children who are under 18 years may be admitted to Switzerland for family reunion. Family members of L permit holders may not undertake employment unless they have been granted permission to do so. The family reunion must be made within five years. For children over 12 years, the family grouping must be made within 12 months. Since 1 January 2019, family members of third-country nationals holding a B or C permit need to prove sufficient language skills (at least A1 oral level of the language spoken at the place of residence).

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Resident and nonresident individuals are subject to consolidated (personal) income tax on income earned from Taiwan sources. Taiwan-source income includes all employment income derived from services performed in Taiwan, regardless of where the compensation is paid.

Individuals are considered residents of Taiwan if they are domiciled and reside in Taiwan or, if not domiciled, if they have resided in Taiwan for at least 183 days in a tax year. If an expatriate enters and departs Taiwan several times within a calendar year, the resident days are accumulated.

Income subject to tax. Individuals in Taiwan are subject to Taiwan consolidated income tax. However, the amount of income subject to tax and the applicable rates depend on the length of stay as well as on the individual's residence status.

An individual's consolidated gross income is the total of the following categories of Taiwan-source income:

- Business profits, including dividends, profits distributed by cooperatives and partnerships, profits from a sole proprietorship and profits from sporadic business transactions
- Income from a professional practice
- Salaries, wages, allowances, stipends, annuities, cash awards, bonuses, pensions, subsidies and premiums paid by an employer for group life insurance policies that offer payment on maturity, but not including the voluntary pension contribution and the voluntary annuity insurance premiums based on the Labor Pension Act, which are up to 6% of the individual's monthly wage or salary

- Interest income
- Rental income and royalties
- Self-employment income from farming, fishing, animal husbandry, forestry and mining
- Gains from sales of rights and properties other than land
- Cash or payments in kind received as winnings in competitions or lotteries
- Retirement pay, severance pay, non-insurance old-age pension payments and insurance payments made under annuity insurance based on the Labor Pension Act received by the individual
- Other income

Taxable income of residents is computed by deducting from consolidated income certain allowable exemptions and deductions (see Exemptions and deductions). The income of a taxpayer's dependents is also included in the taxpayer's taxable income.

Employment income. In general, a nonresident staying in Taiwan for no longer than 90 days during a calendar year is not subject to Taiwan income tax on salary received from an offshore employer, provided the payment is not charged back to any Taiwan entity; otherwise, the income is subject to an 18% withholding tax on salary received from a resident employer.

Nonresidents are subject to Taiwan income tax on Taiwan-source employment income, regardless of where the income is paid, at a fixed rate of 18% on salary income.

For foreigners with foreign employers who stay in Taiwan less than 300 days in a calendar year, salary not borne by a Taiwan entity may be allocated based on the number of days present in Taiwan to determine the amount taxable in Taiwan.

The following benefits are exempt from consolidated income tax for all expatriates:
- Traveling expenses paid for expatriates on home leaves
- Rental payments for a house leased by the employer for expatriates
- Durable furniture purchased by a Taiwan-registered entity

Individuals who qualify as "Foreign Professionals" (see Foreign Professionals) are also exempt from consolidated income tax on the following assignment-related benefits:
- Moving expenses paid for expatriates and their families when they report for duty and at the time of repatriation
- Water, electricity, gas, telephone and cleaning services for expatriates' houses leased by Taiwan entities
- Automobiles leased by employers for expatriates

Investment income. Dividend and interest income are subject to consolidated income tax and are taxed together with other income at the rates set forth in Rates. However, interest income from postal savings accounts is excluded from gross income. In addition, the following types of interest income are subject to withholding tax and are not included in gross income:
- Interest income from short-term commercial paper is subject to a 10% withholding tax for residents and 15% for nonresidents.
- Interest income from beneficiary securities or asset-based securities issued according to the Financial Asset Securitization Act and the Real Estate Securitization Act is subject to a 10% withholding tax for residents and 15% for nonresidents.

- Interest income from public debts, corporate bonds or financial bonds is subject to a 10% withholding tax for residents and 15% for nonresidents.

The rate of withholding tax on other interest for nonresidents is 20%. For dividends, the rate of withholding tax is 0% for residents and 21% for nonresidents.

Rental income and royalties are included in taxable income. For rental income, the rate of withholding tax is 10% for residents and 20% for nonresidents. For royalties, the rate of withholding tax is 10% for residents and 20% for nonresidents.

Other income. The taxable amount of a lump-sum severance payment received in 2021 is calculated in accordance with the following rules:
- If the total amount received in one lump sum is less than TWD180,000 multiplied by the number of service years at the time of separation, the entire amount is tax-exempt.
- If the total amount received in one lump sum is more than TWD180,000 multiplied by the number of service years at the time of separation, half of the excess over TWD180,000 but less than TWD362,000 multiplied by the number of service years at the time of separation is taxable income.
- The excess over TWD362,000 multiplied by the number of service years at the time of separation is taxable income.
- If the individual spent only certain years rendering service in Taiwan among the total service years with an employer, the severance payment may be allocated based on the ratio of the number of years in Taiwan to the total service years in order to arrive at the amount subject to tax in Taiwan.

For severance payments received in installments, the taxable income amount is the total of all payments received in 2021 in excess of the TWD781,000 annual deduction.

The exemption amount for the severance payment may be adjusted if the accumulated consumer price index has increased by at least 3% over the last adjustment.

Income tax paid by an employer on behalf of its expatriates should be treated as the expatriates' salary income if the employment contract or other related document states that such tax payments constitute part of the expatriate's compensation package. If the income tax paid by an employer does not constitute part of the expatriate's compensation package, it is considered a gift to the expatriate and is treated as the expatriate's other income.

Foreign Professionals. The decree "Preferential Tax Treatment for Foreign Professionals" provides for the preferential taxability of certain assignment benefits paid in accordance with an assignment agreement for a foreign national who qualifies as a "Foreign Professional."

To qualify as a "Foreign Professional" and accordingly enjoy certain preferential tax treatment for assignment-related benefits, an individual must satisfy the following conditions:

- He or she must be physically present in Taiwan for 183 days or more during a calendar year.
- He or she must not hold dual nationality of Taiwan and another jurisdiction.
- His or her annual taxable salary income must exceed TWD1,200,000.
- The individual must have obtained a working permit from the authority in Taiwan in accordance with Article 46 of the Employment Service Act.

Foreign special professionals. Effective from 8 February 2018, the Act for Recruitment and Employment of Foreign Professionals (the Act) provides a tax incentive for individuals who have obtained the foreign special professional work permit or Employment Gold Card and are approved for residing in Taiwan as a result of employment for the first time (see Section H).

If a foreign special professional meets both of the following requirements, 50% of the annual salary income in excess of TWD3 million is exempt from Taiwan income tax and non-Taiwan source income is excluded from the calculation of the individual Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT; see Alternative Minimum Tax):

- The individual physically resides in Taiwan for at least 183 days during the tax year.
- The individual receives Taiwan taxable salary income in excess of TWD3 million during the tax year.

The above tax incentive applies for three tax years. If a foreign special professional does not meet both requirements for three consecutive tax years, the tax benefit can be sequentially deferred to a tax year in which both requirements are met. However, the tax benefit must be claimed within a five-year period from the first tax year in which the requirements are first met.

Under the June 2021 amendment of the Act, starting from the first tax year that the foreign special professional meets both requirements, the above tax incentive can be applied for five consecutive years. However, if the foreign special professional does not meet both requirements in any one of the tax years during the five-year span, the tax incentive for that particular year is forfeited and cannot be deferred. At the time of writing, the effective date of the amendment had not yet been determined.

Taxation of share-based compensation. Based on tax decrees issued by the Ministry of Finance, on the exercise of a stock option, the difference between the fair market value of the shares at exercise and the exercise price (that is, the option spread) is taxed as other income.

Taiwan employers have a reporting requirement, but not a withholding requirement, with respect to the option spread. Taiwan employers must issue non-withholding statements to employees who exercise stock options.

For foreign employees who are sent to Taiwan for assignment, the option spread can be prorated based on the ratio of the number of days the employee is physically present in Taiwan during the period from the date of grant through the date of vesting to the total days in such period. However, based on the tax authority's current practice, for Taiwan employees on assignment to foreign jurisdictions if the individuals remain as employees of the Taiwan entity (that is, the Taiwan entity continues the enrollment of National Health Insurance and Labor Insurance for the relevant employees), the proration of stock option income may not be allowed.

The Ministry of Finance also issued decrees indicating that the income (discount) derived from employee stock purchase plans, income derived from stock appreciation rights granted by foreign companies, and restricted stock issued by Taiwanese companies should be treated as other income.

For other types of equity income, no specific Taiwan income tax laws or regulations addressing Taiwan taxation currently exist.

Under Article 19-1 of the Statute for Industrial Innovation, effective from 1 January 2016 to 31 December 2029, employees who receive share-based compensation issued by Taiwanese companies may choose to defer taxation on the compensation until the date on which the shares are transferred. The amount deferred is based on the fair market value of the shares received and is limited to TWD5 million per year. If the employee continues to hold the shares and work for the same employer for two years, the taxable income is based on the fair market value on the date the shares were received or on the date the shares were transferred, whichever is lower.

Capital gains and losses

Gains from securities transactions. Effective from 1 January 2016, income tax on capital gains derived from securities transactions is suspended and losses on such transactions are not deductible.

A securities transaction tax is imposed on proceeds from sales of shares at a rate of 0.3%.

Income tax on income derived from transactions in futures is suspended, and losses on such transactions are not deductible.

Gain from sales of real properties. Effective from 1 January 2016, capital gains from sales of real properties are subject to different tax schemes, depending on the property acquisition date and the length of the holding period.

For real properties acquired before 2014 or acquired on or after 2 January 2014 and held for more than two years, gains from the sale of houses and apartments are taxed together with other income at the rates described in Rates.

For real properties acquired on or after 1 January 2016, the new capital gain tax scheme applies. For resident taxpayers, the final tax rate on the capital gains ranges from 15% to 45%, depending on the length of holding period. For a resident taxpayer who sold his or her home used for the purpose of self-dwelling for more than six years, the capital gains up to TWD4 million are exempt from tax, and the portion exceeding TWD4 million is subject to a 10% tax rate. For nonresident taxpayers, the tax rate is 35% for property held for more than two years and 45% for property held for not more than two years.

Gain from sales of other properties. Capital gains from sales of other properties are taxed together with other income at the rates described in Rates.

Losses. Losses from disposals of properties are deductible only to the extent of gains from the disposals of properties in the same tax year. Net losses may be carried forward for three years.

Exemptions and deductions. A nonresident taxpayer is not entitled to personal exemptions or deductions. Income tax is computed on gross income. The exemptions and deductions described below apply to residents only.

A resident may deduct the personal exemption, and either the standard deduction or itemized deductions, whichever is higher, as well as special deductions, from consolidated gross income to arrive at taxable income.

Personal exemptions. For 2021, a taxpayer is entitled to personal exemptions of TWD88,000 each for the taxpayer, his or her spouse, and each dependent. If the taxpayer, or if married, either the taxpayer or taxpayer's spouse, is more than 70 years of age, the exemption amount is increased to TWD132,000 per person. The exemption amount is also increased to TWD132,000 for a lineal ascendant dependent who is older than 70 years of age.

The personal exemption amount may be adjusted if the accumulated consumer price index has risen at least 3% over the last adjustment.

Itemized deductions. The following itemized deductions are available:

- The following contributions and donations:
  - — Up to 20% of gross consolidated income for a taxpayer, his or her spouse, and qualified dependents if given to officially registered educational, cultural, public welfare or charitable organizations
  - — Up to 100% of gross consolidated income for a taxpayer, his or her spouse, and qualified dependents if given for national defense or troop support or if contributed directly to government agencies
  - — Up to 20% of gross consolidated income for a taxpayer, his or her spouse, and qualified dependents, if given to political parties, political associations and persons planning to participate in a campaign and subject to limitation provided by the Political Donations Act
- Insurance premiums, up to TWD24,000 per person per year (except for the National Health Insurance, which is 100% deductible), for life insurance, medical insurance, labor insurance, national pension, and government employee insurance for a taxpayer, his or her spouse, and lineal dependents.
- Unreimbursed medical and maternity expenses incurred by a taxpayer, his or her spouse, and dependents living with the taxpayer, provided the expenses are incurred in the following recognized institutions:
  - — Government hospitals.
  - — Hospitals that have entered into contracts with the government under the national health insurance program.

- Hospitals maintaining complete and accurate accounting records recognized by the Ministry of Finance. Expenses incurred outside of Taiwan may be allowed as deductions only if such expenses are incurred in a foreign public hospital, university hospital, or private foundation hospital. Claims for deductions of expenses incurred in foreign hospitals must be supported by evidence of the officially registered status of the hospitals.

- Uncompensated casualty losses (uninsured portion of losses caused by a natural disaster of force majeure). To claim this deduction, the loss must be appraised by an investigator appointed by the tax authorities within 30 days after the disaster occurred.
- Rental expenses paid by the taxpayer, taxpayer's spouse and/or lineal dependents for housing located in Taiwan, up to TWD120,000 per household. To qualify for the deduction, the property must be used for residential purposes and not for business purposes. However, the deduction will be disallowed for taxpayers who claim interest payments on loans to purchase owner-occupied dwellings. Taxpayers must provide supporting documents.
- Mortgage interest paid on loans from financial institutions for the purchase of an owner-occupied dwelling (limited to one), up to TWD300,000, after subtracting the special deduction for savings and investments claimed for the same tax year. The dwelling must be a principal residence located in Taiwan.

Standard deduction. For 2021, a taxpayer may claim a standard deduction instead of the itemized deductions listed above. The standard deduction is TWD120,000 for a single taxpayer and TWD240,000 for a married taxpayer filing jointly.

The standard deduction amount may be adjusted if the accumulated consumer price index has increased by at least 3% over the last adjustment.

Special deductions. The following special deductions are available:

- Special deduction for salary or wages: The lesser of either total salaries and wages earned or TWD200,000 is deductible by each salary and wage earner included in the same return. Effective from 1 January 2019, each salary and wage earner may choose to deduct the following expenses from salary income if the sum of the deductible expenses exceeds the TWD200,000 special deduction for salary or wages:
  - Expenses incurred for purchasing, leasing, cleaning or maintenance of clothes or costumes that are specifically for professional use
  - Expenses incurred for attending courses or training that are specifically work-related
  - Expenses incurred for purchasing books, journals or tools that are specifically work-related

  The deductible amount for each type of the above expenses is limited to 3% of the individual's annual salary and wage income.
- Special deduction for savings and investments: Up to TWD270,000 for each family unit is deductible for income realized from a savings trust fund and for interest income realized on deposits with financial institutions, excluding interest income from postal savings accounts (which is not taxable), from short-term commercial paper (which is subject to a final 10% withholding tax) and from beneficiary securities or asset-based securities issued according to the Financial Asset Securitization Act and the Real Estate Securitization Act (which is subject to a final 10% withholding tax).

- Special deduction for individuals with disabilities: Up to TWD200,000 is deductible for an individual meeting the definition of a person with disabilities or diagnosed as having mental illness under the Mental Health Law.
- Special deduction for losses from property transactions: Losses derived from disposals of property are deductible to the extent of gains derived from disposals of property in the same tax year. Any remaining losses may be carried forward for three years.
- Special deduction for tuition fees paid for post-secondary education: Up to TWD25,000 of tuition fees paid for each dependent child less any reimbursement received for post-secondary education is deductible.
- Special deduction for preschool children: TWD120,000 for each dependent child who is five years of age or younger.
- Special deduction for long-term care: TWD120,000 for each individual, including the taxpayer, spouse and dependents, who is deemed disabled by the Ministry of Health and Welfare.

The deduction for preschool children and the deduction for long-term care are not allowed if the taxpayer meets one of the following conditions:

- The taxpayer's annual net taxable income after subtracting the deduction is subject to a progressive tax rate of 20% or higher tax rates.
- The taxpayer elects to separately apply the flat 28% tax rate on dividend income (see Rates).
- The taxpayer's minimum income under the Alternative Minimum Tax Law exceeds the TWD6,700,000 deduction (see Alternative Minimum Tax).

The amounts of the special deductions for salary or wages and for persons with disabilities may be adjusted if the accumulated consumer price index has increased by at least 3% over the last adjustment.

Basic living expenses. Under the Taxpayer Rights Protection Act, which took effect on 28 December 2017, the expenses that taxpayers pay for maintaining their basic living in accordance with human dignity for themselves and their dependents is not taxed.

Effective from the 2017 tax year, the basic living expense is calculated in accordance with the amount announced by the Ministry of Finance multiplied by the number of persons consisting of the taxpayer, spouse and dependents. If the sum of personal exemptions and deductions is less than the basic living expenses, the taxpayer may deduct the difference from the gross consolidated income. When comparing the sum of exemptions and deductions with basic living expenses, the special deduction for salary or wages and the special deduction for loses from property transactions should be excluded.

The Ministry of Finance should announce the amount of basic living expenses before the end of December each year. For the 2020 tax year, the basic living expense was TWD182,000 per person.

Rates. The progressive consolidated income tax rates for residents for 2021 are set forth in the following table.

Taxable income TWD	Tax rate %	Tax due TWD	Cumulative tax due TWD
First 540,000	5	27,000	27,000
Next 670,000	12	80,400	107,400
Next 1,210,000	20	242,000	349,400
Next 2,110,000	30	633,000	982,400
Above 4,530,000	40	—	—

The income tax rate brackets may be adjusted if the accumulated consumer price index has risen at least 3% over the previous rate adjustment.

Effective from 1 January 2018, taxpayers can choose to calculate the tax liability for dividends by the more beneficial of the following methods:
- Combine dividend income with gross consolidated income and apply progressive tax rates as set forth in Rates. The total tax payable can be offset by a tax credit at 8.5% of the dividend income with a limitation of TWD80,000 per year.
- Separately apply a flat tax rate of 28% on the dividend income.

The flat tax rate for nonresident individuals varies according to the type of income. The following are the flat tax rates:
- Salary income and severance and retirement payments: 18%
- Interest income other than those specifically identified in the tax regulation (see Investment income): 20%
- Dividends: 21%
- Commissions, rentals, royalties, gains from winnings in competitions or lotteries, income from independent professional practice and other income: 20%

Alternative Minimum Tax. The AMT Law applies to both profit-seeking enterprises and individuals.

Under the AMT Law, for residents, the following items are added back to net income as calculated under the general income tax system to determine minimum income (MI) subject to AMT:
- Foreign-source income, if such income for each filing household unit exceeds TWD1 million in a tax year
- Insurance payments from life insurance policies or annuities contracted on or after 1 January 2006 in which the beneficiary and the purchaser are not the same person (TWD33,300,000 exemption may be claimed)
- Capital gains derived from transactions of the following securities:
  - — Shares issued by companies not listed on the stock exchange or traded on over-the-counter markets
  - — Beneficiary certificates of privately placed securities investment trust funds

- Deductions claimed for noncash charitable contributions
- Other items published by the Ministry of Finance

The AMT rate for individuals is 20%. A TWD6,700,000 deduction may be claimed from the minimum income (MI) by each filing household unit to arrive at the minimum taxable income (MTI) subject to AMT.

Under the AMT scheme, individual taxpayers calculate both the tax due under the general income tax rules and the AMT rules, and pay the higher of the two amounts. If foreign-source income has been included in the calculation of the AMT, any foreign tax paid on these amounts may be offset against AMT.

Relief for losses. Except for losses derived from the disposal of properties described in Capital gains and losses, no loss may be carried forward or back.

B. Other taxes

Estate tax. Estate tax is imposed on the estate of a decedent who was a national of Taiwan or who owned property (including movable property, immovable property, and all other rights and interests of monetary value) in Taiwan. If the decedent was a Taiwan national regularly domiciled in Taiwan, tax is levied on all property, wherever located. If the decedent was a foreign national or Taiwan national regularly domiciled outside Taiwan, tax is levied only on property located in Taiwan.

The basis for estate tax is the prevailing value of property at the time of death, less legal exclusions, exemptions and other deductions. Land and buildings are valued at an officially assessed value determined by the relevant government agencies.

In general, an exemption of TWD12 million is allowed for each decedent. The following are other allowable deductions from total taxable property (the first five items are not applicable for foreign nationals and Taiwan nationals regularly domiciled outside Taiwan):

- TWD4,930,000 for the decedent's surviving spouse
- TWD1,230,000 for each of the decedent's surviving parents, TWD500,000 for each dependent grandparent, dependent brothers and sisters, and lineal descendants, as well as an additional TWD500,000 for each year that each lineal descendant and dependent brother and sister is younger than 20 years of age
- An additional TWD6,180,000 for each qualified handicapped or mentally disturbed heir
- The value of agricultural land and the products on the land if the heirs continue to farm the land for at least five years after the death of the decedent
- 80%, 60%, 40% or 20% of the value of any estate property that was inherited by the decedent within 6, 7, 8 or 9 years before his or her death, respectively
- Taxes and penalties owed, and debts incurred, by the decedent before his or her death
- TWD1,230,000 for funeral expenses
- Direct and necessary expenses to execute the decedent's will and administer the estate

Certain property is not subject to estate tax. The following exclusions are among the more common:
• Proceeds from life insurance policies with designated beneficiaries
• Furniture, household equipment and other daily necessities, up to TWD890,000
• Patents and literary or artistic works created by the decedent
• Donations to government agencies and enterprises and to privately incorporated educational, cultural, social welfare, charitable and religious organizations
• Tools used in the decedent's profession, up to TWD500,000
• Property inherited by the decedent within five years before death that was subject to tax
• Land reserved for public facilities

Net taxable estate TWD	Tax rate %	Tax due TWD	Cumulative tax due TWD
First 50,000,000	10	5,000,000	5,000,000
Next 50,000,000	15	7,500,000	12,500,000
Above 100,000,000	20	—	—

The following items may be adjusted if the accumulated consumer price index has increased by at least 10% over the last adjustment:
• Exemptions
• Estate tax rate brackets
• Exclusion amount of furniture, household equipment and other daily necessities, and tools used in the decedent's profession
• Deductions for the surviving spouse, lineal descendants, parents, siblings, and grandparents of the decedent, standard deduction for funeral expenses, and special deductions for handicapped heirs

The executor of an estate, or the heir in the absence of an executor, must file an estate tax return with the local tax bureau generally within six months after the death of the deceased. An extension of three months for the filing may be applied for up front. Payment of tax is due within two months after receipt of a tax assessment notice, and a two-month extension can be applied for if necessary. If the tax due exceeds TWD300,000, a taxpayer may, subject to prior approval, pay it in 18 installments at intervals of no longer than two months or pay the tax in kind. A taxpayer who is not satisfied with an assessment may seek relief through administrative and judicial reviews.

Gift tax. Gift tax is imposed on gifts made by a donor who is a national of Taiwan or who owns property (including movable property, immovable property, and all other rights and interests of monetary value) in Taiwan. If the donor is a Taiwan national regularly domiciled in Taiwan, the tax is levied on any donated property, wherever located. If the donor is a foreign national or Taiwan national regularly domiciled outside Taiwan, tax is levied only on donated property located in Taiwan.

Gifts are valued based on the prevailing value at the time of donation. Land and buildings are valued at officially assessed values determined by government agencies.

An annual exemption of TWD2,200,000 per donor is allowed for taxable gifts. The following items are excluded from total taxable gifts:

- Donations to government agencies and enterprises and to educational, cultural, religious, public welfare and charitable organizations
- Transfers between spouses
- Marriage gifts of up to TWD1 million given by each parent
- Agricultural land given to the donor's heir, if the heir continuously uses the land for farming for at least five years after the transfer

Net taxable gift TWD	Tax rate %	Tax due TWD	Cumulative tax due TWD
First 25,000,000	10	2,500,000	2,500,000
Next 25,000,000	15	3,750,000	6,250,000

The annual exemption amount and gift tax rate brackets may be adjusted if the accumulated consumer price index has increased by at least 10% over the last adjustment.

A donor must file a gift tax return with the local tax bureau within 30 days after making a gift if the aggregate amount of total gifts during the calendar year, including the current gift, exceeds the TWD2,200,000 annual exemption. The local tax bureau must complete the tax assessment within two months after it receives the return. Payment is due within two months after the receipt of a tax assessment notice, and a two-month extension can be applied for if necessary. If the tax due exceeds TWD300,000, a taxpayer may, subject to prior approval, pay the tax in 18 installments at intervals of no more than two months or pay the tax in kind. A taxpayer who is not satisfied with an assessment may seek relief through administrative and judicial reviews.

C. Social security

No social security taxes are levied in Taiwan. However, nominal labor insurance premiums and national health insurance premiums are imposed at the following rates on each person employed by a Taiwan business entity.

Contributions	Rate (%)
Labor insurance scheme, on monthly salary of up to TWD45,800; paid by
Employer	8.05
Employee	2.3
National health insurance scheme, on monthly salary of up to TWD182,000; paid by
Employer	4.9011
Employee	1.551

In addition to the above regular premiums, a supplementary premium for national health insurance at a rate of 2.11% is payable by the employer and employee if the conditions described below are met.

An employer must pay the supplementary premium for the excess portion if the total monthly salary expenses exceed the monthly insurance salary for all employees.

An employee must pay the supplementary premium for the excess portion if his or her total bonus or incentive payments in a calendar year exceed four times his or her monthly insurance salary.

Income derived from part-time jobs is subject to the supplementary premium if a single payment exceeds the minimum wage publicized by the central labor competent authority.

The following income not derived from employment is subject to the supplementary premium if a single payment is TWD20,000 or more, with cap of TWD10 million:
- Professional income from the performance of services rendered by the practitioner of a profession
- Dividend income
- Interest income
- Rental income

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Taiwan is the calendar year. A taxpayer must file an annual income tax return between 1 May and 31 May following the close of the tax year. No extensions are allowed.

Married couples must file joint tax returns except for the first year of marriage and the year of divorce, when they may choose to file as single or as married. If filing jointly, spouses may choose to separately compute tax on their salary income or their total taxable income, whichever is more beneficial.

The following are the tax filing procedures for aliens, depending on the length of their residence in Taiwan:
- In general, a nonresident staying in Taiwan for 90 days or less is only subject to withholding tax on income received from a Taiwan entity and, accordingly, does not need to file an income tax return. For these individuals, income tax payable is withheld directly by the payer at the time of payment at various tax rates depending on the respective income classification (see Rates). However, capital gains derived from property transactions and other income that is not subject to withholding tax must be declared and any tax due must be paid on the filing of the tax return.
- An individual present in Taiwan for longer than 90 days must file an annual income tax return.

Taxpayers must submit supporting documents issued by their nonresident employers stating the amount of foreign-paid compensation. The documents must be certified by the tax office that has jurisdiction over the employer or by a certified public accountant.

For taxpayers who file returns after 31 May following the end of the tax year, interest is charged on the net amount of tax payable at a specified interest rate set annually by Taiwan tax authorities.

If an item of income is omitted or if the return is improperly filed, the tax authorities may assess a penalty of up to two times the amount of the additional tax due. If the taxpayer fails to file a tax return, the tax authorities may assess a penalty of up to three times the tax payable.

E. Tax treaties

Taiwan has entered into comprehensive tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Australia	India	Paraguay
Austria	Indonesia	Poland
Belgium	Israel	Senegal
Canada	Italy	Singapore
Czech Republic	Japan	Slovak Republic
Denmark	Kiribati	South Africa
Eswatini	Luxembourg	Sweden
France	Malaysia	Switzerland
Gambia	Netherlands	Thailand
Germany	New Zealand	United Kingdom
Hungary	North Macedonia	Vietnam

F. Entry visas

Foreign passport holders must have valid visas when they enter Taiwan. However, to meet special needs, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs may grant exemptions from visa requirements to foreign nationals of certain jurisdictions (visa-exempt entry) or allow certain foreign nationals to apply for an eVisa, travel authorization certificate and/or landing visa if certain conditions are met. In addition, other than diplomatic and courtesy visas, two categories of visas, which are the visitor visa and the resident visa, are available for foreign nationals to enter the territory of Taiwan.

Visitor visas are issued to those who wish to visit Taiwan for short time periods (for example, for working less than six months, sightseeing, conducting business and other purposes).

Foreign nationals accepting employment in Taiwan must obtain the appropriate visas to enter Taiwan and the necessary employment authorization (work permits) to work in Taiwan. In addition, individuals looking for jobs in Taiwan may apply for an employment-seeking visa.

The Workforce Development Agency issues employment authorizations. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Taiwan and consulates abroad issue the appropriate visas based on employment authorizations. The National Immigration Agency supervises entry, departure and residence of foreign nationals working in Taiwan.

G. Resident visas

In general, resident visas are issued to foreign nationals who obtain employment authorizations issued by the Workforce Development Agency that are valid for longer than six months.

Foreign nationals entering Taiwan with resident visas must report to the National Immigration Agency to secure their residency and apply for Alien Resident Certificates (ARCs) within 15 days counting from the next day after their arrival. The ARC bears the foreign national's personal information, reason for residence, residential address in Taiwan and the expiration date of the ARC.

Expatriates holding ARCs should report any changes of information on the ARCs to the National Immigration Agency within 15 days after the change occurs.

H. Work permits and self-employment

Work permit for foreign professionals. Foreign nationals who intend to work in Taiwan must apply for employment authorizations (work permits). An expatriate's entry, residence and departure are governed by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the National Immigration Agency.

An application for employment authorization must be filed by the employer in accordance with the Measures for Regulations on the Permission and Administration of the Employment of Foreign Workers (Employment Rules).

The Employment Rules apply to foreign nationals who wish to work in Taiwan. For most professional foreign expatriates, the three types of job categories are described below.

Type A. The Type A category includes specialized or technical workers.

To qualify as a specialized or technical worker, foreign employees must possess one of the following qualifications:
- A PhD or master's degree in a related field.
- A bachelor's degree in a related field with more than two years of work experience in a related field.
- Proof of employment in a related field for more than five years, and during this period, the completion of related training and the receipt of awards or recommendations from employers. Foreign employees must satisfy all three of these requirements.
- Employment with a multinational enterprise for more than one year and an assignment to work in Taiwan from the multinational enterprise.

An employer must satisfy one of the following conditions to hire foreign specialized or technical workers in the manufacturing industry or the wholesale business:
- Sales volume of TWD10 million for the preceding year or an average of TWD10 million for the preceding three years
- Total import and export volume of USD1 million for the preceding year or an average of USD1 million for the preceding three years
- Total import and export commission revenue of USD400,000 for the preceding year or an average of USD400,000 for the preceding three years
- Company that has been incorporated for less than one year and has paid-in capital of TWD5 million
- Foreign branch that has been established for less than one year and has registered working capital of TWD5 million
- Foreign representative office that has been approved by the government authorities and has been operating in Taiwan
- Research and development center or business operational headquarters that has been approved by the government authorities

Type B. The Type B category includes branch managers for Taiwan branches of foreign companies, representatives for Taiwan representative offices of foreign companies and general managers of companies approved for foreign investment under either the Statute for Investment by Overseas Chinese or the Statute for Investment by Foreign Nationals.

To qualify as a branch manager, representative or general manager of a foreign-investment approved company, an employee must be registered with the government authorities and shown on the company registration card. An employer must satisfy one of the following conditions to hire these foreign nationals:

- Sales volume of TWD3 million for the preceding year or an average of TWD3 million for the previous three years
- Total import and export volume of USD500,000 for the preceding year or an average of USD500,000 for the preceding three years
- Total import and export commission revenue of USD200,000 for the preceding year or an average of USD200,000 for the preceding three years
- Company has been incorporated for less than one year and has paid-in capital of TWD500,000
- Foreign branch has been established for less than one year and has registered working capital of TWD500,000
- Foreign representative office has been approved by the government authorities and has been operating in Taiwan
- Foreign representative office has been approved by the government authorities and has been established for less than one year, in which case no such performance records are needed

For Type A and Type B jobs, employment authorization is based on the employment contract, with a maximum length of three years. Employment extensions can be granted. The wages for foreign employees who undertake these job assignments may not be lower than the amount recorded in the latest survey.

Type G. The Type G category includes contracting foreigners appointed by a foreign legal person to engage in works in order to perform contracts of construction, sale, technical cooperation and other necessities.

If a foreign corporation performing a contract needs to assign an expatriate to Taiwan to fulfill contractual obligations, the expatriate can apply for a work permit. Normally, the duration of such work permit may not exceed one year, but it is possible to apply for a renewal. The entry visa held by such foreign employee is deemed to be a work permit for up to 30 days. The work permit for the foreign employee must be applied for within 30 days following the employee's arrival in Taiwan if the employee wishes to work for more than 30 days. To qualify to file a work permit application for contracting foreigners, the company must be the Taiwanese branch of the contracted foreign entity (agent authorized by a foreign legal person) or the contracted local entity in Taiwan. If neither is applicable, the contracted foreign entity may authorize a representative agency to file the work permit application on behalf of the company.

Foreign nationals may not be self-employed in Taiwan.

Work permit for foreign special professionals. Effective from 8 February 2018, the Act for Recruitment and Employment of Foreign Professionals introduced a work permit for foreign special professionals with a maximum validity period of five years. To qualify for the foreign special professionals work permit, foreign employees must satisfy the qualification for a Type A or Type B work permit, have earned an average monthly salary of at least TWD160,000 and have experience working in the designated field of industry. Depending on the field of industry, qualifications other than the income threshold may be considered.

Employment Gold Card. Foreign professionals who satisfy the requirements to obtain a work permit for foreign special professionals may also meet the qualification to apply for an Employment Gold Card. This is a four-in-one personal employment pass combining work permit, resident visa, ARC and re-entry permit. The application may be filed by a foreign special professional who is not already employed by a local employer.

I. China Mainland nationals

China Mainland nationals must apply for a Taiwan entry permit in advance to enter Taiwan. The purpose of the entry and the planned activities must be approved by the competent authority. The two main categories of entry permits are Business and Professional. In most cases, the applicants fall into the Business category. Under the Business category, the following are the three commonly used entry purposes:
- Business meetings
- Training (to be trained)
- Intracompany transfer

J. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Resident visas are granted to the dependents of either a Taiwan citizen or an expatriate who obtains an ARC (see Section G). Copies of the marriage certificate and birth certificates, which are legalized by the Taiwan consulate located in the issuing jurisdiction must be provided to obtain resident visas for the spouse and children, respectively. Health certificates or immunization records may be required for dependents' resident visa applications, depending on the local Taiwan consulate's policy. The spouse and children may apply for their resident visas and ARCs together with the expatriate.

For dependents over six years old, the ARC application must be accompanied by a health certificate issued within the preceding three months. For dependents six years old or younger, the immunization record must be provided with the ARC application. However, if both the dependents and expatriate are eligible for visa-exempt entry into Taiwan, the health certificate and immunization record are not required.

A working spouse does not automatically receive work authorization. If the spouse wishes to file for a work permit, he or she must do so independently. Effective from 28 July 2017, spouses of foreign professionals who hold a dependent ARC are eligible to apply for a Type A or Type B work permit to provide part-time services. The validity period of the spouse work permit may not exceed the validity period of the foreign professional's work permit. The spouse must meet the same conditions described in Section G for the corresponding types of work permits. The hourly wages for spouses who undertake these job assignments may not be lower than TWD200, and the employer is not subject to meeting the criteria regarding the entity's financial background with respect to the employer's qualification for employment work authorizations.

Dependents of China Mainland nationals who also hold a China Mainland passport are subject to the same Taiwan entry permit application requirement (see Section I) if they want to join the expatriate in Taiwan.

Marital property regime. All married individuals in Taiwan are subject to a statutory property regime, unless the parties agree otherwise in writing and register the agreement in court before or during the marriage. The statutory property regime applies to all heterosexual and homosexual couples married in Taiwan.

Under the statutory property regime, the property of the husband and the wife is divided into property acquired before marriage and the property acquired during marriage.

If it cannot be determined whether property was acquired before marriage or during the marriage, it is presumed that the property was acquired during the marriage. If it cannot be determined whether the property is owned by the husband or the wife, it is presumed that the property is owned by the husband and the wife jointly.

The remains of fruits gained during the marriage from the property acquired by the husband or the wife before marriage is deemed to be property acquired during the marriage.

If the husband and the wife enter into a contract regarding the holding of matrimonial property and subsequently adopt the statutory regime, the property held before the adoption is deemed to be property acquired before marriage.

Under the statutory regime, on the termination of the marriage relationship, the balance of the property acquired by the husband or the wife in marriage, after deduction of debts incurred during the marriage, if any, is equally distributed to the husband and the wife, except for property acquired as a result of a succession or a gift or property acquired as a solatium (compensation for an injury or loss).

Forced heirship. Taiwan's succession law provides for forced heirship rules. The law guarantees certain heirs a portion of the decedent's estate.

The compulsory portion for an heir is determined in accordance with the following rules:
- For a lineal descendant by blood, the compulsory portion is one-half of his or her entitled portion.
- For a parent, the compulsory portion is one-half of his or her entitled portion.
- For a spouse, the compulsory portion is one-half of his or her entitled portion.
- For a brother or a sister, the compulsory portion is one-third of his or her entitled portion.
- For a grandparent, the compulsory portion is one-third of his or her entitled portion.

For purposes of the above rules, the entitled portion is the portion that the spouse and heirs in the same priority should receive, which is determined according to the following rules:

- If the spouse inherits concurrently with lineal descendants by blood, the decedent's estate is equally divided among each party.
- If the spouse inherits concurrently with the parents of the decedent or the brothers and/or sisters of the decedent, the spouse is entitled to one-half of the inheritance.
- If the spouse inherits concurrently with the grandparents of the decedent, the spouse is entitled to two-thirds of the inheritance.
- If there is no lineal descendant by blood, parents, or brothers or sisters of the decedent, the spouse is entitled to the entirety of the inheritance.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may not drive legally in Taiwan with their home jurisdiction driver's licenses. However, expatriates may drive legally with valid international driver's licenses after applying for international driver's license permits in Taiwan.

Foreign nationals with valid international driver's licenses from reciprocating jurisdictions may drive legally in Taiwan for 30 days without applying for international driver's license permits. However, if the stay in Taiwan is more than 30 days, foreign nationals must apply for international driver's license permits.

Based on driver's license reciprocity with the expatriate's home jurisdiction, an expatriate who possesses an ARC (see Section G) with a validity period of more than six months may apply for a Taiwan license after taking a physical examination if his or her home jurisdiction license is valid and has been legalized by the Taiwan consulate in the issuing jurisdiction. However, exceptions may apply for each state or jurisdiction. For expatriates without a home jurisdiction license to take the written and driving tests, to obtain a Taiwan driver's license, he or she must first undergo a physical examination and then apply for a learner license and maintain it for at least three months.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are subject to income tax on worldwide income. Nonresidents are subject to tax on Tanzania-source income only. A resident person is also subject to income tax if such resident person is an agent of a nonresident person or a beneficial owner through whom such nonresident person receives any income, whether directly or indirectly, from business or investment that accrues or is deemed to accrue in Tanzania.

An agent of a nonresident person or of a beneficial owner includes a person in Tanzania who meets any of the following conditions:
- He or she is employed by or on behalf of a nonresident person or a beneficial owner.
- He or she has a business connection with a nonresident person or a beneficial owner.
- He or she is in receipt of any income, whether directly or indirectly, from or through a nonresident person or a beneficial owner.
- He or she is a trustee of a nonresident person, and includes any other person who, whether a resident or nonresident, has acquired by means of a transfer a capital asset located in Tanzania.

Individuals are considered residents if they meet any of the following conditions:
- They are present for 183 days or more in the year of income.
- They are present for an average of 122 days or more in the year of income and in each of the two preceding years of income.
- They have a permanent home in Tanzania and are present for any length of time during the year of income.
- They are employees or officials of the government of Tanzania and are posted abroad during the year of income.

Foreigners (non-citizens) are taxed on their worldwide income after they have been residents for a total of two years during their lifetime.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable employment income includes any compensation for employment received in cash, plus the value of employer-provided benefits. For employees, employer-provided housing is valued at 15% of gross salary less the amount of rent paid. Annual directors' fees payable to directors, other than full-time service directors, are included in employment income. A full-time service director is a person in a managerial position who serves full time at a corporation.

Nonresidents are taxed on employment income that is sourced in Tanzania at a rate of 15%.

The value of other benefits is also included in employees' income. These benefits include the payment of utility expenses, tuition expenses and the services of a watchman or gardener. An education allowance provided by employers to their expatriates' or local employees' children under 18 years of age is taxable income. Taxable benefits are included in taxable employment income.

The following benefits are specifically exempt from tax:
- The traveling costs for passage of the taxpayer, spouse and up to four children, if the individual is domiciled more than 20 miles from his or her place of employment and performs services for the employer only
- Cafeteria services on the business premises that are available on a nondiscriminatory basis
- Contributions to approved pension funds and provident funds
- The value of medical services granted on a nondiscriminatory basis to a full-time employee or a director providing full-time services, the spouse and four children
- Benefit for use of motor vehicle if the employer does not claim any deduction or relief with respect to the vehicle

Directors' fees. Directors' fees paid to directors other than full-time service directors (see Employment income) are subject to tax at a rate of 15% for residents and nonresidents. Directors who are not full-time service directors are members of the board of directors of a company.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employment and business income is taxed at a rate of 30%.

Investment income. The following nonresident withholding taxes apply.

Income	Rate (%)
Dividends	5/10 (a)
Interest	10 (b)
Royalties	15
Rent	10 (c)
Premiums and similar consideration	10/15 (d)
Pension or retirement annuities	10/15 (d)

(a) The 5% rate applies to shares quoted on the Dar es Salaam Stock Exchange.
(b) Interest derived by a person from government bonds of not less than three years issued and listed on the Dar es Salaam Stock Exchange from 1 July 2021 is exempt from income tax.
(c) The 10% rate applies to both residents and nonresidents.
(d) The 10% rate applies to residents, and the 15% rate applies to nonresidents.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Currently, Tanzania does not have a tax regime for stock options. It is suggested that professional advice be obtained regarding the taxation of stock options.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from the sale of real property by individuals not engaged in business are subject to tax at a rate of 10% for residents and 20% for nonresidents. Gains from the sale of shares and securities listed on the Dar es Salaam Stock Exchange are exempt if the shareholding (alone or together with associates) is less than 25%.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. For expenses to be deductible from employment income, an employee must generally establish that the expenses were incurred wholly and exclusively in the production of income. This is a narrower standard than that required for deductible expenses for self-employed persons (see Business deductions).

Business deductions. Expenses directly related to accrued business income, including the cost of goods sold and sales and administrative expenses, are allowed as deductions.

Rates. Tax is levied on monthly income at the rates shown in the following table.

Monthly taxable income		Tax on lower amount	Rate on excess
Exceeding TZS	Not exceeding TZS	TZS	%
0	270,000	0	0
270,000	520,000	0	8
520,000	760,000	20,000	20
760,000	1,000,000	68,000	25
1,000,000	—	128,000	30

Presumptive income tax may apply to income received by individuals from businesses generating annual gross turnover of up to TZS100 million. The assessments are based on annual turnover and vary depending on whether the taxpayer maintains complete or incomplete records for the business. The following are the amounts of these assessments.

Complete records

Annual turnover		Amount of tax
Exceeding TZS	Not exceeding TZS	TZS
0	4,000,000	0

11,000,000	14,000,000	230,000 + 3% of the turnover in excess of 11,000,000
14,000,000	100,000,000	450,000 + 3.5% of the turnover in excess of 14,000,000

Incomplete records

Annual turnover		Amount
Exceeding TZS	Not exceeding TZS	of tax TZS
0	4,000,000	0
4,000,000	7,000,000	100,000
7,000,000	11,000,000	250,000
11,000,000	14,000,000	450,000
14,000,000	100,000,000	Not applicable

Nonresidents. Nonresident individuals are subject to tax on total (business, investment and employment) income derived in Tanzania at a rate of 30% (previously 20%). However, for nonresident individuals who derive only employment income in Tanzania, the employment income is taxed at a rate of 15%.

B. Other taxes

Estate and gift taxes. Tanzania does not impose estate or gift tax.

Skills Development Levy. The Skills Development Levy (SDL) is payable by employers who have 10 or more employees. The SDL rate is 4%. It is imposed on gross emoluments, excluding benefits in kind.

C. Social security

Tanzania does not have a comprehensive social security system. However, the following pension funds are available:
- The National Social Security Fund (NSSF) for employees in the private sector.
- The Public Service Social Security Fund (PSSSF) for employees in the public sector and employees who were in other previous funds (Parastatal Pension Fund [PPF], Government Employees Pension Fund [GEPF] and Local Authorities Pension Fund [LAPF], which were repealed by the PSSSF Act, 2018). The PSSSF Act is effective from February 2018.

For NSSF, the employee and employer each contribute 10% of monthly gross emoluments, provided that the employee joins the fund before reaching 40 years of age. A refund of contributions made may be claimed in full when the employee ceases to contribute to the fund. In exceptional cases, membership in the fund may continue after the employee reaches 50 years of age, but in all cases, membership ceases at 60 years of age.

For PSSSF, employees contribute 5% of basic salary, and the employer contributes 15%.

No ceiling applies to the amount of salaries subject to social security contributions in Tanzania.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The statutory tax year for individuals is the calendar year.

Tax is withheld from employees under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system within seven days after the end of each calendar month. Employers must file returns specifying taxes withheld within seven days after the end of the month to which the tax relates. All employees are required to obtain a Tax Identification Number.

Individuals who do not have employment income from a resident employer (that is, not under the PAYE system) but have income or profit earned either from investment or business (consultancy) are required to pay and file provisional tax every last working day of March, June, September and December. In addition, a final return is due six months after the end of the respective financial year.

E. Tax treaties

Tanzania has entered into double tax treaties with the following countries.

Canada	India	South Africa
Denmark	Italy	Sweden
Finland	Norway	Zambia

F. Entry visas and passes

Foreign nationals must have visas to enter Tanzania, unless they are nationals of countries whose citizens are exempted from the visa requirement. These countries include most British Commonwealth countries, South Africa and member countries of the East African Community, which includes Kenya, Rwanda and Uganda.

A detailed list of the countries whose citizens are exempted from the visa requirement for entry into Tanzania is provided under the third schedule to the Immigration (Visa) Regulations 2016.

At the point of entry into Tanzania, visitors with valid passports may receive visas for social or tourist purposes.

Foreigners intending to visit Tanzania to attend meetings or establish business contacts must first obtain business visas. These visas are issued for various reasons, such as making feasibility studies, establishing professional and business contacts, and making arrangements for investment. The validity period can vary from 3 months to 12 months (for a multiple-entry visa).

Visas and passes, including the business visa and business pass, are issued to foreigners who enter Tanzania and engage in lawful activities, such as business activities, trade activities, professional activities, special assignments or temporary assignments. They are valid for a maximum of 90 days.

To receive a visitor's visa and pass, a foreign national must have a valid passport and a return ticket for exiting Tanzania and must prove that he or she has adequate financial means for the period of the visit.

G. Work and residence permits and self-employment

Foreign nationals wishing to be employed in Tanzania must obtain both a work permit and a residence permit. Work permits enable foreign nationals to work in Tanzania. The residence permits allow foreign nationals to live in Tanzania for specific purposes, including employment. The permits are issued initially for a period of up to two years and are renewable after two years up to a maximum period of 60 months. In exceptional cases, an extension can be granted beyond this period if the company proves it has an investment of great value to Tanzania. The foreign assignee must apply for the work permit and residence permit separately before entering Tanzania, with the application for work permit being the basis for the residence permit. Work permit and residence permit applications must be accompanied by a succession plan for training a local to fill the position of the foreign national once the foreign national ceases to be employed in Tanzania.

The following is a listing of the classes of work permits.

Class	Type of permit	Permit fee (USD)
A	Investor and self-employed	1,000
B	Non-citizens engaged in prescribed professions	500
C	Non-citizens engaged in other professions	1,000
D	Non-citizens engaged in registered religious and charitable activities	500
E	Issued to refugees	Free

In addition, a USD50 fee for a Work Permit Register inspection is imposed.

The following is a listing of the classes of residence permits.

Class	Type of permit	Permit fee (USD)
A	Self-employed investors and small-scale business	2,050 to 3,050*
B	Foreign employees	2,050
C	Students, researchers, retired persons, missionaries, persons engaged in winding up their affairs and receiving medical treatment, and certain other persons	100 to 500*

* The fee depends on the sector of the economy in which the applicant is involved.

Investor permits. Class A work permits accompanied by residence permits are available to foreign investors. Applicants for Class A work permits must be foreign nationals intending to enter or remain in Tanzania to engage and invest in any of the following:

- A trade, business or profession
- Agriculture or animal husbandry
- Mineral prospecting
- Manufacturing

The applicant's investment in Tanzania must be at least USD500,000. The applicant must have a strong financial background.

Employment permits. Class B work permits accompanied by a residence permit are available to foreign nationals engaged in prescribed professions, which include medical and health care professionals, experts in oil and gas, and university lecturers in science and mathematics.

Class C work permits accompanied by a residence permits are available to foreign nationals with specific offers of employment in Tanzania. The applicant must be a member of a profession recognized by Tanzania, and the government must be satisfied that the applicant possesses the necessary qualifications and skills and that his or her employment will benefit the country.

Offers of employment may be made by the following entities:
- Specific employers
- The Tanzanian government

Employers must apply for Class C work permits and residence permits for their foreign employees while the employees are outside Tanzania.

The Class D work permit is available to foreigners employed or engaged in registered religious or charitable organizations. The last category is Class E, which applies to refugees in Tanzania. Applications for Class E work permits are processed by the director of refugee services who submits them to the Labour Commissioner, together with the director's recommendations.

Steps for obtaining work permits. To obtain work permits, the employer must file for review and approval a completed application pack with the Labour Commissioner at the Ministry of Labour, the Tanzania Investment Center (if the business is registered with the Tanzania Investment Center) or the Zanzibar Investment Promotion Authority. After the application is approved, the Ministry of Labour issues a work permit and recommendation letter, which is forwarded to the Commissioner-General of Immigration Services. Applications for work permits are initiated and completed through the online system.

Steps for obtaining residence permit. To obtain a residence permit, after obtaining a work permit from the Ministry of Labour, a foreign national must file for review and approval a completed application pack with the Commissioner-General of Immigration. After the application is approved and payment of the government fee is made, the immigration office issues a residence permit. Applications are completed online and, once approved, an applicant is notified regarding the collection of the permit. The Immigration Department has issued a public notice providing that, effective from 31 July 2019, it will stop accepting manual applications.

A company that has its business registered with the Tanzania Investment Centre is granted a Certificate of Incentives, which entitles it to an automatic immigrant quota of up to five persons during the company's startup period.

Self-employment. Foreign nationals wishing to engage in self-employed activities in Tanzania must first obtain Class A residence permits. This permit entitles the holder to investment protection and enables him or her to take advantage of financial, economic and other incentives, which are offered under the Tanzania Investment Act. Self-employed professionals, including doctors, lawyers, accountants, architects and engineers, must be licensed by the relevant professional bodies in Tanzania before they can be issued residence permits.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Holders of valid work and residence permits may be accompanied by their spouses and children 18 years of age or younger. Any dependent wishing to take up employment in Tanzania must apply for both work and residence permits as prescribed above before commencement of employment.

Marital property regime. The marital property regime in Tanzania is one of community property. The regime is mandatory, and couples may not elect out without losing the privileges or interests arising from the joint marital property. The regime applies to all types of property interests arising during the marriage. A spouse's separate property must be clearly identified when the spouse first becomes subject to the regime. The proceeds of separate property always remain separate, unless the couple elects otherwise.

The regime applies to married heterosexual couples who solemnize their marriages in Tanzania and also to foreigners who establish marital domicile in Tanzania. Domicile is established by purposefully making Tanzania the couple's principal or sole permanent home. Tanzania law does not allow same-sex marriages.

In general, community property claims do not survive a permanent move to a non-community property country. Tanzania enforces community property claims brought between couples from non-community property countries who have established a new marital domicile in Tanzania.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals with international driver's licenses or driver's licenses issued in a British Commonwealth country may drive in Tanzania for a maximum period of three months, after which they must obtain a valid Tanzanian driving license. An applicant must take a driving test, including a written and physical examination.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. All resident and nonresident individuals earning income from sources in Thailand are subject to personal income tax (PIT). A Thai resident is also subject to PIT on self-employment and business income from sources overseas if the income is remitted to Thailand.

Individuals are considered resident if they reside in Thailand for a period or periods aggregating 180 days or more during a calendar year. Income earned overseas by Thai residents is also subject to PIT if it is remitted to Thailand in the year it is earned.

Income subject to tax. Taxable income consists of assessable income, less deductible expenses and allowances.

The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. All benefits derived from employment are assessable, unless expressly exempt by law. Examples of assessable benefits are wages, salaries, per diem allowances, bonuses, bounties, gratuities, directors' fees, pensions, house rental allowances, the monetary value of rent-free accommodation provided by an employer, and income tax paid and borne by an employer on behalf of an employee.

Tax-exempt benefits include medical expenses as well as travel expenses incurred wholly and exclusively by an employee in carrying out his or her duties. In addition, group medical insurance premiums paid by the employer to an insurance company operating in Thailand on behalf of its employees are tax-exempt benefits if the duration of the group insurance policy does not exceed one year. Income received from a provident fund by an employee at the termination of his or her employment as a result of retirement, disability or death is also exempt from income tax, subject to certain conditions.

Self-employment and business income. Taxable self-employment and business income consists of assessable income less deductible expenses and allowances. Generally, all types of income are assessable unless expressly exempt by law.

Investment income. Interest, dividends and other investment income are subject to PIT at the rates set forth in Rates.

A tax credit is granted for dividend income received by an individual domiciled in Thailand from locally incorporated companies. The credit is calculated according to the following formula:

$$\text{Tax credit} = \frac{t}{100 - t} \times \text{dividends received}$$

For the purposes of the above formula, t equals the rate of corporate income tax applicable to the distributing company.

Capital gains. Gains derived from sales of shares are generally subject to PIT. However, gains derived from sales of securities listed on the Stock Exchange of Thailand are exempt from tax.

Gains derived from sales of real property are subject to PIT. A standard allowance is deductible, depending on the number of years of ownership. This tax also applies to gains derived from sales of real property used in a trade or business.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Employees are subject to tax on the benefit derived from shares provided either for free or at a favorable price by the employer. The taxable benefit is the difference between the price paid by the employee, if any, and the fair market value of the shares.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. A standard allowance of 50% of assessable income, up to THB100,000, is allowed as a deductible expense against income from employment.

To arrive at net assessable income, the following allowances are permitted as deductions.

Benefit	Amount
Personal allowance	THB60,000
Spouse allowance	THB60,000
Child allowance	THB30,000 per child (THB60,000 for second child born from 2018 onward)
Parental support allowance	THB30,000 per parent (conditions apply)
Life insurance allowance	Up to THB100,000 (conditions apply)
Health insurance premiums	Up to THB25,000 (aggregate amount of life and health insurance premiums cannot exceed THB100,000)

Super Saving Fund (SSF)	Up to THB200,000 (investment cannot exceed 30% of assessable income; investment period from 2020 to 2024)
Interest allowance (housing loans)	Up to THB100,000 (conditions apply)
Donations allowance	Up to 10% of net assessable income

Education and sport donation allowance	Two times actual payment but not over 10% of assessable income after deductions of other allowances
Pension insurance	Up to THB200,000 (contribution cannot exceed 15% of assessable income; combined sum of RMF allowance, SSF allowance, PF allowance and pension insurance may not exceed THB500,000; conditions apply)

Business deductions. Certain expenses are fully or partially deductible, depending on the type of income. For some expenses, standard deductions are provided. The following table provides the rates of deduction for certain types of income.

Type of income	Rate of deduction
Employment and service income	50%, up to THB100,000
Income from copyrights	50%, up to THB100,000
Income from goodwill or other rights	50%, up to THB100,000
Dividends and interest	None
Rental income	Either 10% to 30%, or actual amount of expenses

Rates. Personal income tax is levied on an individual's net assessable income at the following progressive rates.

Net assessable income Exceeding THB	Not exceeding THB	Tax rate %
0	150,000	0
150,000	300,000	5
300,000	500,000	10
500,000	750,000	15
750,000	1,000,000	20
1,000,000	2,000,000	25
2,000,000	5,000,000	30
5,000,000	—	35

B. Other taxes

Net worth tax. PIT normally is levied on assessable income earned during a calendar year. However, the tax authorities may reassess income tax based on net worth if the amount of a taxpayer's income is believed to be understated. In practice, this power is rarely exercised.

Inheritance and gift taxes. Under the Inheritance Tax Act, which took effect on 1 February 2016, inheritances received are taxable only on the accumulated value in excess of THB100 million per benefactor, at a rate of 5% in the case of descendants or parents or 10% in all other cases. The tax filing must be completed within 150 days from the date of receipt or penalties and surcharges are applied.

In general, gifts are taxed at a flat rate of 5%. However, gifts received from a legitimate parent, child or spouse (up to THB20 million per tax year) or in a ceremony or on occasions in accordance with custom and tradition (up to THB10 million per tax year) are exempt from tax.

C. Social security

The social security contribution rate is 5% on a capped remuneration of THB15,000 per month. As a result, the contribution is capped at THB750 per month and THB9,000 per year.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

PIT payable by employees is withheld by employers. Some self-employed individuals, including certain professionals and those engaged in the rental of property, must make an interim income tax payment by September.

All individuals who earn income in Thailand during a calendar year must file personal income tax returns with the Revenue Department by the end of the following March. Self-assessed income tax must be paid on the filing date.

Married persons are taxed jointly or separately, at the taxpayers' election, on employment income and jointly on all other types of income.

E. Tax treaties

Thailand has entered into double tax treaties with the jurisdictions listed below. The method of eliminating double tax varies by treaty.

Armenia	India	Romania
Australia	Indonesia	Russian Federation
Austria	Ireland	Seychelles
Bahrain	Israel	Singapore
Bangladesh	Italy	Slovenia
Belarus	Japan	South Africa
Belgium	Korea (South)	Spain
Bulgaria	Kuwait	Sri Lanka
Canada	Laos	Sweden
Chile	Luxembourg	Switzerland
China Mainland	Malaysia	Taiwan
Cyprus	Mauritius	Tajikistan
Czech Republic	Myanmar	Turkey
Denmark	Nepal	Ukraine
Estonia	Netherlands	United Arab Emirates
Finland	New Zealand	United Kingdom
France	Norway	United States
Germany	Oman	Uzbekistan
Hong Kong	Pakistan	Vietnam
Hungary	Philippines
	Poland

F. Entry visas

The government of Thailand through its embassies or consulates overseas can issue many types of visas. However, the three principal types of visas requested by foreigners from Thai embassies and consulates are tourist visas, non-immigrant visas and transit visas.

Tourist visas are granted for the purpose of tourism only and are normally valid for 60 days. Non-immigrant (business type or Non-B) visas are required for foreign nationals who wish to work or conduct business in Thailand. The holder of a non-immigrant visa is granted a stay of 90 days. The visa may be extended, subject to meeting certain conditions, with permission from the Immigration Bureau.

G. Work permits

Foreign nationals who wish to work in Thailand must obtain work permits from the Employment Department. To be eligible for a work permit, a foreign national must enter Thailand on a Non-Immigration Category "B" (Non-B) Visa.

The granting of a work permit is discretionary, based on such criteria as the nature of the work, the knowledge and skills of the applicant, the capital of the employer, and the proportion of Thai national employees to foreign national employees. The consideration process and criteria for companies with Board of Investment (BOI) privileges are different, and an expedited process is available.

After all required documents are received, the time for processing a work permit can range from approximately a few days up to two weeks, at the discretion of the authority. Applicants may not begin working in Thailand while their work permit applications and other papers are being processed.

Non-BOI companies seeking to extend a visa must show evidence of payroll withholding and Thai Social Security Fund contributions of the foreign national.

To change employers after an applicant receives a work permit, the applicant must cancel the existing work permit before filing a new application reflecting a change of employer.

Work permits are usually granted for one year. An application for renewal is required if the holder wishes to continue working in Thailand.

A foreigner caught working without a valid work permit is subject to a fine or imprisonment or both. The employer in Thailand is also subject to a fine of up to THB100,000 per person.

H. Short-Term Business Travelers

All foreigners entering Thailand for work or business activities are required to apply for a Non-B visa at a Thai embassy abroad. Certain types of activities undertaken in Thailand may require a separate work permit, or an Urgent Work Permit (UWP) if the duration of work is less than 15 days. The Ministry of Labor provides guidance on the specific types of activity that require a UWP, and travelers should seek professional consultation prior to travel.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The working spouse of a work permit holder does not automatically receive a work permit; an application must be filed independently, and a change of visa type is required.

Marital property regime. Thailand does not have a community property or similar marital property regime.

Forced heirship. No forced heirship rules apply in Thailand.

Driver's permits. Although Thailand has no driver's license reciprocity agreements with other countries, a foreign national may drive legally in Thailand with an international driver's license.

Obtaining a Thai driver's license requires taking a written examination and a driving test and undergoing a physical examination.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals ordinarily resident in Trinidad and Tobago are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Individuals not ordinarily resident in Trinidad and Tobago are taxable on income accruing in or derived from Trinidad and Tobago and on foreign income remitted to or received in Trinidad and Tobago.

Individuals are considered resident in Trinidad and Tobago if they are physically present in Trinidad and Tobago for a period of more than six months in the income year. The concept of ordinary residence is expanded under common law jurisprudence and examines various factors that determine the individual's habitual place of abode.

Income subject to tax. Taxable income is the aggregate of worldwide income from all specified sources after allowing for appropriate deductions and exemptions.

Employment income. Taxable income includes the value of employer-provided benefits, including accommodation, transportation and tax equalization.

Self-employment and business income. Taxable income consists of the aggregate amount of income from all sources, including self-employment and business income, after allowing the appropriate deductions.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees and amounts paid by a company for expenses to any of its directors are subject to tax.

Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income. No community property or other similar marital property regime applies.

Investment income. Dividends received from a resident company (other than preferred dividends) are exempt from tax. Interest received by resident individuals on bank deposits and certificates of deposit held at financial institutions in Trinidad and Tobago and interest on bonds and similar instruments that are issued in Trinidad and Tobago are exempt from tax. Rental income and royalties are taxed as ordinary income.

For nonresidents, a final withholding tax is levied at source at a rate of 15% on interest, royalties and management fees. A final withholding tax is imposed at a rate of 5% on dividends paid to a parent company. For other dividends paid to nonresidents, the final withholding tax rate is 10%. These withholding tax rates may be modified or eliminated under the provisions of a tax treaty (see Section E).

Capital gains. Long-term capital gains are not subject to tax.

Any gain realized on the disposition of certain assets within 12 months after acquisition is taxable as ordinary income. Persons domiciled in Trinidad and Tobago are taxed on gains derived from sales of capital assets acquired and disposed of within a 12-month period.

The following assets are exempt from tax:
- Currency acquired for personal expenditure abroad by the taxpayer or his or her family or dependents
- Sums obtained as compensation or damages for any wrong or injury suffered by an individual in his or her personal life or profession or vocation

The following gains are exempt from tax:
- Gains accruing on the disposal of any security in Trinidad and Tobago
- Gains accruing on the disposal of personal automobiles, household goods or owner-occupied houses if these assets are disposed of for TTD5,000 or less
- Gains that are specifically exempt from tax under the law

The following deductions are allowed:
- The cost (money or money's worth) of an asset, together with other expenses incidental to acquisition
- Any expenditure incurred wholly and exclusively for enhancing the value of an asset (maintenance expenses are not allowable expenses)
- Costs incurred wholly and exclusively in disposing of an asset, including legal fees and agent's fees

Taxation of employer-provided stock options and profit-sharing schemes. No specific provisions in Trinidad and Tobago regulate the taxation of employer-provided stock options. Therefore, the tax treatment is based on general principles and case law.

Ordinarily, an option is taxed on its market value at the time of grant if the option gives the employee an irrevocable right to acquire shares. An option is not taxed at the time it is exercised. In general, any gains derived from the subsequent sale of the shares acquired under the option are exempt from tax. If a vesting period must elapse before the employee obtains an irrevocable right to acquire shares, the taxing date is the date of vesting.

Specific provisions apply to profit-sharing schemes approved by the Board of Inland Revenue. An employer that establishes an employee share ownership plan (ESOP) must contribute at least 25% of the annual bonus distribution to the plan's trustee for the purchase of company shares. When shares are granted to employees, the shares have already been purchased on behalf of the employees. Contributions by the employer to the plan are not considered income to the employee and are not taxable. Distributions received by an employee from the shares held in trust are not subject to tax. If the shares are transferred to an employee under either of two specified conditions, the market value of all the shares transferred is deemed to be income accruing to the beneficial owner of the shares on the date of transfer and is included in the income of the individual for that income year. The following are the specified conditions:

- The employee is still employed by the employer, and the shares are transferred after five years from the date of allocation of the shares.
- The employee ceases to be employed by the employer for a reason other than retirement or death, and the shares are transferred after the employment ends.

Traveling expenses wholly, exclusively and necessarily incurred by an employee in the performance of his or her duties with respect to his or her employment is deductible for tax purposes to the extent that the expenses have not been reimbursed by the employer.

Business deductions. The following expenses incurred wholly and exclusively in the production of income are deductible:

- Wear-and-tear allowance: A tax depreciation allowance is available for assets used in a business. The rates range from 10% to 40%, depending on the class of the asset.
- Bad debts: Bad debts incurred that are proved to the satisfaction of the Board of Inland Revenue to have become unrecoverable during the income year are deductible.

- Interest paid: Interest paid on loans or overdrafts is an allowable expense.
- Balancing charge and allowance: Effective from 1 January 2006, all assets are included in the various classes contained in the Seventh Schedule of the Income Tax Act. A balancing charge arises only if the disposal results in a credit balance on the entire pool of assets.

  - — Rental of equipment, plant and machinery.
  - — Rental of buildings (must substantiate certain details).
  - — Rental of motor vehicles.
- Business entertainment: Only 75% of business meals and entertainment expenses may be deducted.
- Promotional expense allowance: This allowance provides for a deduction equal to 150% of the expenditure incurred with respect to the creation or expansion of foreign markets except those markets within the Caribbean Community and Common Market (CARICOM). Effective from 1 January 2020, first-time exports by companies to the CARICOM region are entitled to the promotional allowance. However, this amendment does not apply to exports by individuals.
- Childcare or homework facility: The actual expenditure incurred in setting up a childcare or homework facility for dependents of employees is deductible up to a maximum of TTD500,000 per facility but not exceeding in aggregate TTD3 million.

Rates. For 2021, income tax is imposed at the following rates.

Chargeable income
Exceeding TTD	Not exceeding TTD	Tax rate TTD
0	1,000,000	25
1,000,000	—	30

Credits. Most tax credits have been replaced by the deductible personal allowance of TTD84,000 (see Allowances and deductible expenses).

Relief for losses. Business losses carried forward may be written off to the full extent of taxable business profits in the same tax year. The unrelieved balance may be carried forward indefinitely. No loss carrybacks are allowed.

B. Other taxes

Estate and gift taxes. No inheritance or estate tax is levied on a deceased person's estate, and no tax is levied on gifts.

Lottery winnings tax. A lottery winnings tax is imposed at a rate of 10% on all prize money exceeding TTD1,000 from lotteries organized by the National Lotteries Control Board.

Business levy. Sole traders and self-employed persons engaged in a trade or business are subject to a business levy on gross sales or receipts (other than emolument income) at a rate of 0.6%. This levy applies only if gross sales or receipts exceed TTD360,000 for the income year. Any income tax paid may be credited against the individual's business levy liability if the business levy liability is higher. An exemption applies for the first three years of the business.

C. Social security

Trinidad and Tobago has no social security program. A national insurance program provides pension, sickness and maternity benefits. The employers' weekly required contributions for 2021 range from TTD23.80 for employees earning less than TTD1,472.99 per month to TTD276.20 for employees earning TTD13,600 or more per month. The employees' weekly required contributions range from TTD11.90 to TTD138.10.

Employees under 16 years of age, unpaid apprentices and persons 60 years of age and older, as well as these individuals' employers, are exempt from the national insurance contribution requirement.

The following health surcharge tax is levied on every employed person who makes, or is required to make, contributions under the National Insurance Act and on individuals, other than employed persons, who are required to file income tax returns.

Income		Weekly contribution
Weekly TTD	Monthly TTD	TTD
0 to 109	0 to 469.99	4.80
Over 109	Over 469.99	8.25

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Trinidad and Tobago is the calendar year. Married persons are taxed separately, not jointly, on all types of income. In general, every person in receipt of income must file an income tax return by 30 April of the year following the tax year. However, taxpayers whose sole income is from employment are not required to file tax returns, unless specifically requested by the Board of Inland Revenue. Every person receiving income from any trade, business, profession or vocation must file an income tax return for the year of income, even if the business operated at a loss. Penalties of TTD100 are imposed on late returns for every six months or part thereof past the due date.

Employers must deduct tax from employees under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system.

Every person in receipt of income other than employment income must pay tax in four equal installments on or before 31 March, 30 June, 30 September and 31 December in each income year. Each installment should equal one-quarter of the tax on chargeable income for the preceding year. The balance of tax due, if any, must be paid no later than 30 April of the following year. Late payment of a quarterly installment results in an interest charge at a rate of 20% a year.

If the current year's tax liability exceeds the previous year's tax liability, total quarterly payments for the current year must equal at least the previous year's liability plus 80% of the current year's tax increase. If this requirement is not met, interest is charged at a rate of 20% a year on the underpayment.

Nonresidents must file tax returns for any year in which they derive income from Trinidad and Tobago sources. To file returns, nonresidents follow the administrative rules that apply to residents.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Unilateral relief. A credit is available to residents for foreign taxes paid on foreign-source income. The credit may not exceed Trinidad and Tobago tax payable on the underlying foreign-source income.

A nonresident who proves to the satisfaction of the Board of Inland Revenue that he or she has paid, or is liable for, Caribbean Commonwealth income tax (see below) on Trinidad and Tobago income is entitled to double tax relief on foreign-source income at a rate determined under the following rules:
- If the appropriate Caribbean Commonwealth tax rate does not exceed the tax rate in Trinidad and Tobago, relief is given at one-half of the Caribbean Commonwealth rate of tax.
- If the appropriate Caribbean Commonwealth tax rate exceeds the Trinidad and Tobago rate, relief is given in the amount by which the Trinidad and Tobago rate exceeds one-half of the Caribbean Commonwealth tax rate.

Relief under double tax treaties. Trinidad and Tobago has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Brazil	India	Sweden
Canada	Italy	Switzerland
China Mainland	Luxembourg	United Kingdom
Denmark	Norway	United States
France	Spain	Venezuela
Germany

In addition, the treaty with the CARICOM states (Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Belize, Dominica, Grenada, Guyana, Jamaica, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Lucia and St. Vincent) provides reduced rates of withholding tax.

F. Entry visas

Only Trinidad and Tobago nationals and residents have the right to enter the country freely. Nonresidents are subject to varying entry requirements, depending on whether a temporary visa or resident status is required. General entry visas are not required for nationals of countries that are members of the following:
- CARICOM
- European Union (EU)
- British Commonwealth

Certain exceptions apply to the European Union and the British Commonwealth.

Obtaining a visa for entry into Trinidad and Tobago does not ensure that entry will be permitted. The immigration officer makes the final decision on whether to allow entry. Under the Immigration Act of 1969, an officer may allow entry to the following classes of persons:
- Diplomatic or consular officers of any country, representatives of the United Nations or any of its agencies, and officials from international organizations in which Trinidad and Tobago participates, who are entering the country to carry out official duties or to pass through in transit

- Tourists and visitors
- Persons passing through the country to another country
- Clergy, priests or members of religious orders entering to carry out religious duties
- Students entering to attend a university or college authorized by statute to confer degrees, or an educational or training establishment recognized by either the Permanent Secretary of the Ministry of National Security or the Chief Immigration Officer
- Members of crews entering Trinidad and Tobago for shore leave or some other legitimate and temporary purpose
- Persons entering to engage in a legitimate profession, trade or occupation

At the point of entry, the immigration officer issues a landing certificate, which states the terms and the permitted period of stay. The officer may require the person entering to furnish security in the form of a deposit or a bond to cover the cost of repatriation and other incidental expenses.

G. Work permits and self-employment

Trinidad and Tobago has a well-educated labor force with an adequate supply of skilled workers. Therefore, the government requires offering employment opportunities first to Trinidad and Tobago nationals and residents before nonresidents. The Ministry of National Security requires specific and detailed information before granting foreign nationals work permits. In practice, however, in highly technological industries, most foreign investors prefer to rely on expatriate personnel at the senior management level.

Traveling salespeople must obtain valid work permits and Traveling Salesman Licenses to enter Trinidad and Tobago. The licenses allow salespeople to engage in sales and set the conditions for their stays.

Broadly, individuals offered business offices or employment in Trinidad and Tobago who are not residents of countries that belong to the CARICOM, EU or the British Commonwealth must obtain both entry visas and work permits.

A foreign national interested in establishing a business in Trinidad and Tobago must apply for a work permit. Foreign subsidiaries and branches may be headed by foreign nationals.

Foreign nationals intending to work in Trinidad and Tobago for less than 30 days do not require work permits. This is a one-off exemption granted on the first entry. The one-off exemption is not intended for individuals who intend to exercise employment in Trinidad and Tobago for greater than 30 days within a 12-month period. If persons are required to work for a period exceeding 30 days, the employers of such persons must apply to the Permanent Secretary at the Ministry of National Security for work permits. The employer must include a statement indicating the steps taken to recruit a citizen or resident of Trinidad and Tobago for the position in question.

The Ministry of National Security usually requires employers to advertise locally to secure the services of a Trinidad and Tobago national. The employer must document the results by presenting the advertisements and responses to the Ministry of National Security together with the foreign national's work permit application.

The Trinidad and Tobago work permit process has now moved to a paperless system. All applications are submitted to the Ministry of National Security via a new online system through "TTBiZLink." Access to the site is permitted only after a ttconnect ID is obtained. All required documents, including the completed application form, must be uploaded into the system. Other required documents include a digital passport photo (with required specifications), curriculum vitae and proof of qualifications, the biography page of the current passport, a police certificate covering the preceding five years and two written character references (one must be from the last employer). Copies of the documents may be provided but the originals of the police certificate and certified translations must be retained. The application must be submitted with a nonrefundable application fee of TTD600.

The Work Permit Advisory Committee reviews applications through the new online system and may seek advice from competent sources in Trinidad and Tobago about the requirements for the position and whether a qualified national is available to fill the position. If the committee is satisfied that all the requirements are met, approval is granted subject to the payment of TTD450 for each month the work permit is issued. The committee meets every two weeks to review applications; in most circumstances, approval is granted within 8 to 10 weeks from the date of submission of the application. Copies of work permits issued are forwarded to the International Tax Unit of the Board of Inland Revenue.

The approval form and the work permit state the name of the nonresident employee and the position for which he or she is employed, and specify certain conditions. In many cases, the conditions relate to the repatriation of the nonresident employee at the end of the approved period and to training a national employee as an understudy.

By order, the Minister of National Security may exempt nonresidents from the requirement to have a visa and work permit. In addition, the following facilitation policies apply:

- Reciprocal agreement: Under the Visa Abolition Agreement, nationals of Brazil, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Ireland, Italy, Norway, Singapore, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States are not required to obtain visas to enter Trinidad and Tobago. Entry visas are required for persons in possession of valid work permits.
- Short-term work visits: Persons intending to work in Trinidad and Tobago for less than 30 days do not need work permits.
- Free Zone operations: Under the Free Zones Act, workers employed by approved enterprises engaged in free zone operations are exempt from the payment of fees with respect to the grant of the work permit.

- CARICOM nationals: CARICOM nationals seeking to exercise rights conferred by the Immigration (Caribbean Community Skills Nationals) Act or the Caribbean Community (Movement of Factors) Act are exempt from the requirement to obtain a work permit.

H. Residence permits

The Ministry of National Security may grant permanent resident status to any of the following persons:

- A person who has ceased to be a citizen of Trinidad and Tobago
- A spouse, parent or grandparent of either a citizen or a resident
- A person who, by reason of education, employment, training, skills or other qualifications, has established, or is likely to establish, a successful profession, trade, self-operating business or agricultural enterprise in Trinidad and Tobago and who has sufficient means of support while in the country

A person who has been a continuous resident of Trinidad and Tobago must apply for resident status to the Permanent Secretary of the Ministry of National Security and must present the circumstances of his or her particular case. In determining the suitability of an applicant, the Ministry of National Security must receive proof that the applicant entered the country legally, be satisfied that the person is not categorized within a prohibited class, and receive a good character certificate for the applicant from the police in Trinidad and Tobago. If an application for resident status is refused, the applicant may reapply one year after the date of receipt of the refusal.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Any family member of a working expatriate wishing to work in Trinidad and Tobago must obtain his or her own work permit. The children of a working expatriate need student visas to attend schools in Trinidad and Tobago.

Marital property regime. No community property or other similar marital property regime applies in Trinidad and Tobago.

Driver's permits. Foreign nationals may drive legally in Trinidad and Tobago with their home country driver's licenses for 90 days after their date of arrival. A driver must keep a valid passport and license in his or her possession at all times. If the foreign national's period of stay is more than 90 days, he or she is required to apply for a Trinidad and Tobago driver's license.

To obtain a local Trinidad and Tobago driver's license, a foreign national must take an eye test, a written examination and a practical driving examination.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. All resident individuals in Tunisia must pay income tax on all benefits or income received (worldwide income and benefits). Nonresident individuals are taxed on Tunisian-source income. They are subject to a final withholding tax of 15% (or 25% for residents of tax havens) on such income except for salaries, which are taxed according to the scale set forth in Rates, or at a flat tax rate of 20% if employees stay in Tunisia less than six months.

Subject to the provisions of double tax treaties, individuals are considered tax residents if they meet any of the following conditions:

- They maintain their principal home in Tunisia.
- They are present in Tunisia for at least 183 days during the year.
- They are civil servants or state officials performing their duties or assignments in a foreign country, and they are not subject to personal tax on their global income in the foreign country.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable employment income includes total compensation after deducting the employee's social contributions and personal deductions and allowances.

Self-employment and business income. Self-employed individuals are divided into three categories for tax purposes, depending on the nature of their activities. They may be taxed on income from commercial and industrial activities, on income from professional activities or on income from agricultural and fishing activities.

Under the 2019 Finance Act, a new flat tax regime is instituted for the profits of smallholders who are individuals meeting the following conditions:

- They have an unstable income.
- They engage in activities of small businesses, craftsmen and itinerant traders.
- They have no premises required for the exercise of their activity.
- They undertake their activity on 1 January 2019 without filing the declaration of existence provided by Article 56 of the Personal and Corporate Income Tax Code.
- On or after 1 January 2019, they file spontaneously the declaration of existence with the tax authorities that have the legal power to control the taxpayer or that are territorially competent to cover the taxpayer.

The personal income tax due, over a period of three years, is TND200 per year for the persons in activity in communal areas and TND100 per year for those engaging in their activities in other areas.

Investment income. Dividends in Tunisia are subject to a final withholding tax of 10% (or 25% for individuals who are residents of tax havens). Individuals who receive an annual total dividend of less than TND10,000 can deduct the withholding tax on dividends. Interest payments are subject to a final withholding tax of 20% (or 25% for individuals who are residents of tax havens).

Revenues derived from betting games of chance and lottery. Classified as other/miscellaneous revenues, revenues derived from betting games of chance and lottery are subject to personal income tax through a discharging withholding tax at a rate of 25% when the revenues are received in cash.

Income derived from mutual betting games on horse racing and sports prediction contests organized by public establishments, as defined by the regulation in force, are exempt from personal income tax.

Exempt income. Certain types of income are exempt from tax, such as the following:

- Salaries, wages and allowances paid by foreign states to staff seconded to the Tunisian government under the framework of technical cooperation
- Interest paid with respect to home purchase savings plans
- Interest on deposits and securities in foreign currency or convertible dinars
- Revenue from the rental of agricultural land reserved for field crops that are the subject of leases concluded for a minimum period of three years
- Sums paid for the execution of insurance contracts

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from shares are taxable at a rate of 10%, with an annual deduction of TND10,000. For nonresident persons, capital gains derived from the sale of shares are subject to withholding tax of 10%, which cannot exceed 2.5% of the disposal price of the shares.

Some exemptions apply to capital gains derived from the sale of shares, such as the following:
- Shares listed on the Tunis Stock Exchange if their assignment or retrocession takes place after the expiration of the year following that of their subscription or acquisition
- Shares of open-ended investment companies and the units of equity investment mutual funds
- Shares contributed to the capital of the parent company or the holding company, subject to the commitment of the parent company or the holding company to bring its shares to the Tunis Stock Exchange by the end of the year following that of the exemption

Capital gains derived from the sale of buildings and land are subject to tax at a rate of 15% if the asset retention period is five years or less or 10% if the retention period is more than five years. Capital gains derived from the sale of buildings and land are subject to withholding tax of 2.5%.

Some exemptions apply to capital gains derived from the sale of buildings, such as the following:
- The transfer of ownership made to a spouse, ascendant or descendant
- The first transfer of ownership of building and land used for residential purposes, with a total area not exceeding 1,000 square meters, including all annexes, built or not built

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Under the common regime, options are taxed at the time of exercise on the difference between the exercise price and the fair market value of the stock. The benefit is subject to both income tax and social security contributions.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. The following expenses are deductible:
- Employees may deduct the required amounts withheld by the employer for mandatory contributions to annuities, pensions, retirement funds and social security schemes.
- Individuals may deduct professional expenses equal to 10% of the balance of income, with a threshold of TND2,000 for income realized from 1 January 2017 after the deduction of mandatory contributions to annuities, pensions, retirement funds or social security schemes.
- Tax residents of Tunisia benefiting from foreign-source pensions, annuities or retirement funds may deduct 25% of such items from taxable income if they do not repatriate the income. This rate is increased to 80% for pensions, annuities or retirement funds repatriated into Tunisia.

Personal deductions and allowances. The following personal deductions are granted:
- Mandatory arrears and annuities paid free of charge
- Premiums from certain life insurance and capitalization policies of up to TND100,000 per year with minimum tax applicable
- Sums deposited in "savings accounts in shares" ("comptes épargne en actions") of up to TND100,000 per year with minimum tax applicable

- Interest received by the taxpayer for special savings accounts, limited to an annual amount of TND5,000
- TND300 for heads of families, in addition to TND100 for the first child, TND100 for the second, TND100 for the third, TND100 for the fourth, TND1,200 for disabled children and TND1,000 for children pursuing their studies at a university without any scholarship, plus 5% of net income per dependent parent, up to a combined maximum of TND450
- Principal and interest paid on university loans
- Interest and fees paid on loans for the acquisition or construction of a single housing if the cost of acquisition or construction does not exceed TND200,000. This does not apply to persons who already own a home on the date of acquisition or construction.
- Contributions paid to social security funds by independent self-employed individuals

Rates. The following are the income tax rates for income realized on or after 1 January 2017.

Taxable income		Tax	Effective rate on
Exceeding TND	Not exceeding TND	rate %	higher amount %
0	5,000	0	0
5,000	20,000	26	19.50
20,000	30,000	28	22.33
30,000	50,000	32	26.20
50,000	—	35	—

Employees working in Tunisia for less than six continuous or non-continuous months in a calendar year can be taxed at a flat rate of 20% on their gross salaries from Tunisian sources.

Some expatriates engaged in oil and gas activities, in mining activities, or in activities with offshore banks or with companies wholly engaged in exports can benefit from flat-rate taxation of 20% on gross salaries even if their work period exceeds six months and if they satisfy the conditions needed to obtain approval from the competent authorities.

Social Contribution of Solidarity. Beginning with 2018, individuals whose income is subject to personal income tax according to the progressive rate scale are subject to an additional Social Contribution of Solidarity.

The Social Contribution of Solidarity equals the difference between the following:
- The personal income tax determined based on the personal income tax progressive scale, increasing by one point the tax rates applicable to the income levels provided by the progressive scale
- The personal income tax determined based on the personal income tax progressive scale, without adding the one point to the tax rates

Starting from 2020, employees and pensioners whose net annual income does not exceed TND5,000 after deduction of allowances for family status and expenses are exempted from the Social Contribution of Solidarity. This exemption covers the income of 2020 and subsequent years.

Restitution shall not be made of the amounts of the contribution paid before 1 January 2020.

Temporary and exceptional contribution for 2020. Under Article 1 of Decree-Law No. 2020-5, a temporary and exceptional contribution for 2020 applies to individuals of Tunisian nationality who are employees and pensioners.

The temporary and exceptional contribution is fixed as the one day wage, salary or pension.

Article 2 of Decree-Law No. 2020-5 provides that this contribution shall not apply to the following:
- Employees and pensioners with a maximum net annual income of TND5,000 calculated after deducting 10% for employees, capped to TND2,000 annually, 25% for pensioners, as well as family status and family duties charges provided for in Article 40 of the Personal and Corporate Income Tax Code
- Employees of private sector companies covered by the provisions introduced on 14 April 2020, providing exceptional and temporary social measures (or actions) in order to support these companies and protect their employees affected by the impact of the total containment measures preventing the spread of COVID-19

Suspension of the provisions relating to the termination of the contract due to force majeure. Article 1 of Legislative Decree No. 2020-2 suspends the application of the provisions of Subparagraph C of the third paragraph of Article 14 of the Labor Code relating to the impediment of execution resulting from a fortuitous event or force majeure occurring before or during the execution of a contract. As a result, from 14 April 2020 until the date of the end of the confinement, the employer can no longer terminate the employment contract unilaterally by invoking the fortuitous event or force majeure resulting from confinement or spread of COVID-19.

In addition, Article 2 of Legislative Decree No. 2020-2 suspended the application of the provisions of Article 21-12 of the Labor Code with regard to dismissal or unemployment occurring without the prior notice of the regional commission of dismissal control.

In other words, any dismissal or layoff that occurs without prior notice of the regional commission or the regional commission of dismissal control is considered abusive, and the employer has no grounds for invoking force majeure to avoid this qualification.

Nothing has been changed with respect to other cases at the end of the employment contract provided for in Article 14 of the Labor Code. In other words, even after the enactment of Decree No. 2020-2, a long-term employment fixed term contract or indefinite period contract may end in the event of the following:
- Agreement of the parties
- The desire of one of the parties following a serious fault committed by the other party
- The worker's death
- A resolution pronounced by the judge during a case

Tax incentive. A tax incentive that provides an exemption from personal income tax over a period of four years starting from the effective beginning of the activity is available to new enterprises of self-employed individuals who obtain a certificate of the deposit of the declaration of investment during 2018, 2019 or 2020.

The right to the exemption is not available to new enterprises of self-employed individuals engaged in the financial sector, the energy sector except for renewable energies, mining, real estate development, on-site consumption, trade and telecommunication operation.

The tax incentive is granted to new enterprises of self-employed individuals if they fulfill the following conditions provided in Article 13 of the 2019 Finance Act:

- The enterprise keeps regular accounting books that comply with the enterprises' accounting legislation in force.
- The enterprise must start its effective activity within two years from the date of the declaration of investment.

B. Estate and gift taxes

Sales of real property are subject to a proportional registration duty at a rate of 5%.

Inheritance tax is imposed on 2.5% of the inheritance value. Heirs or legatees must file and register a declaration of inherited property within one year following the decedent's death.

Gifts must be recorded within 60 days after the date of the gift.

The following are the rates of tax on gifts and inheritances:
- 2.5% between ascendants and descendants and between spouses. Donations of goods between ascendants and descendants and between spouses, including donations of bare ownership and usufruct rights with respect to real property are registered at a fixed fee of TND25 per donation.
- 5% between brothers and sisters.
- 25% between uncles or aunts, nephews and nieces, great uncles and great aunts, and little nephews (sons of the brother's [or sister's] son or daughter) or little nieces (daughters of the brother's [or sister's] son or daughter), and between cousins.
- 35% between relatives beyond the fourth degree and between non-relatives.

In addition to the registration duties mentioned above, a fee for real estate conservation is due at a rate of 1% (except for donations of goods between ascendants and descendants and between spouses).

An additional 3% registration fee is due for the absence of the property's origin. This fee is imposed if the references to the registration of the previous transfer are not included in the deed.

C. Social security

Employees pay social security contributions on their salaries at a rate of 9.18%. The total rate for contributions paid by the employer is 16.57%. No ceiling applies to the amount of wages subject to social security contributions. In addition, employers must pay a work accident contribution. The rate varies from 0.4% to 4.2%, depending on the nature of the activities.

There are some exemptions available for foreign assignees, under which the employee and the employer do not pay social security contributions in Tunisia:

If the assignment is coming from a country that signed a totalization agreement with Tunisia, the assignee must obtain a certificate of coverage (to be renewed according to the totalization agreement). If the days' threshold specified by the totalization agreement is exceeded, the employee will need to be registered under the local regime.

Regardless of whether there is a totalization agreement, personnel of foreign who were nonresident prior to their employment or assignment in Tunisia are entitled to opt for a social security regime other than the local mandatory regime if they are assigned to companies within the following special legal frameworks:
- Petroleum companies
- Offshore business parks
- International trading companies
- Financial and banking organizations

Foreign assignees may elect to be excluded from the Tunisian social security system if there is a social security treaty between their original country and Tunisia.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

For individuals with a habitual residence in Tunisia, income tax is due on 1 January of each year on all benefits or income realized over the previous year.

The deadline for filing the tax return is 25 February for individuals realizing income on shares and 5 December for employees or individuals benefiting from pensions or life annuities.

The general taxation method is the withholding of tax by employers. Employers must calculate the income tax and deduct it from the monthly gross salary.

Some exceptions exist for expatriates whose salaries are paid abroad. Such employees pay tax through self-withholding and make a filing each month.

Tax withheld by employers and tax self-withheld by employees are deducted from the annual tax due.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Tunisia has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Austria	Jordan	Senegal
Belgium	Korea (South)	Serbia
Burkina Faso	Kuwait	South Africa
Cameroon	Lebanon	Spain
Canada	Luxembourg	Sudan
China Mainland	Mali	Sweden
Czech Republic	Malta	Switzerland
Denmark	Mauritius	Syria
Egypt	Netherlands	Turkey

Ethiopia
France
Germany
Greece
Hungary
Indonesia
Iran
Italy
Norway
Oman
Pakistan
Poland
Portugal
Qatar
Romania
Saudi Arabia
Union of the Arab Maghreb
United Arab Emirates
United Kingdom
United States
Vietnam
Yemen

These treaties generally stipulate that wages and compensation are taxed in the state where the activity is performed. Dividends and interest are taxed differently, depending on whether the source is Tunisian or foreign.

F. Entry visas

Tunisia issues the following documents to foreign nationals:

- Entry visas for stays of less than three months
- Work permits
- Residence permits, which often require applicants to first possess work permits

The requirements for entering, working and residing in the country depend on the nationality of the foreign national. Nationals of European Union (EU) countries, Canada and the United States are not required to obtain entry visas to visit Tunisia. Nationals of France and the Union of the Arab Maghreb (Union du Maghreb Arabe, or UMA) may enjoy certain special work and residence privileges.

Foreign nationals must obtain entry visas from Tunisian embassies or consulates for stays of less than three months.

G. Residence permits

Foreign nationals intending to stay in Tunisia for longer than three months must apply to the Ministry of the Interior for residence permits (cartes de séjour). Residence permits are usually granted to foreign nationals who obtain work permits (see Section H). A residence permit is valid for one year and may be renewed after an employee secures a renewed work permit.

H. Work permits and self-employment

Foreign nationals wishing to work in Tunisia must obtain work permits before beginning employment. The Ministry of Training and Employment requires specific documentation before permitting a foreign national to work in Tunisia. The ministry ensures that all employment opportunities are made available to Tunisian citizens before offering employment to foreign workers.

A foreign national wishing to practice a salaried professional activity in Tunisia must apply for work permit through his or her local employer. The employee must also provide a résumé and any diplomas and transcripts certifying his or her qualifications. The ministry requires a certificate attesting that a local Tunisian with similar qualifications was not available.

Work permits issued by the ministry have specific expiration dates. The work permit period may not exceed one year. To renew the work permit, the employer must again seek approval from the ministry by justifying the need to hire a foreign worker.

Tunisian employers are prohibited from recruiting foreign employees whose employment was not authorized by the Ministry of Training and Employment and have not obtained residence permits. An employer is also prohibited from recruiting a foreign worker whose employment contract with a prior employer has not yet expired. Employers must notify the ministry of the departure of every foreign worker from their company.

Simplified procedure. The following foreign nationals are exempt from obtaining employment contract approval:

- Under Article 258 of the Labor Code foreigners who have the status of Manager, Co-Manager or proxy director in the case of limited liability companies or Chief Executive or the Chairman of the Board of the company in the case of public limited companies.
- Under Article 6 of the new Investment Law, supervisory and monitoring staff of foreign nationals, up to 30% of the total number of the company's qualified employees, until the end of the third year following the date of the legal incorporation of the enterprise or until the end of the three-year period starting from the date of the company's entry into effective production. This limit is reduced to 10% starting from the fourth year, counted from the relevant date (date of incorporation or entry into effective production). In all cases, the enterprise is allowed to recruit up to four foreign qualified employees.

The following are considered qualified employees:

- Supervisory and monitoring staff of foreign nationals in the fields of prospecting, research and exploration subject of the Article 107 of the Mining Code
- Supervisory and monitoring staff of foreign nationals in the fields of prospecting and research subject of the Article 124 of the Hydrocarbon Code
- Foreign qualified employees practicing in associations and nonprofit nongovernmental organizations
- Technical cooperators assigned in projects or programs financed by foreign states or organizations in collaboration with Tunisia
- Moroccan nationals

In all of the exempted cases described above, employers must report recruitment of foreign nationals to the Ministry of Training and Employment. As a result, the work permit is in the form of "Attestation of non-submission of the employment contract to the visa of the Ministry in charge of the employment." The ministry delivers an exemption certificate for each notification. This certificate has no validity term. It should be renewed only for the purpose of residence card renewal.

French citizens. French citizens who have resided in Tunisia for at least three years following the date of the Tunisia/France Residence and Work Treaty (17 March 1988) may automatically obtain residence and work permits valid for 10 years. The work permits allow French citizens to perform any kind of salaried work in Tunisia. French citizens who have been married to Tunisian citizens for one year are also eligible for residence permits and work permits valid for 10 years. French spouses and minor children of holders of 10-year residence and work permits may benefit from the same advantages.

Termination of residence. Any individual who intends to transfer his or her residency outside of Tunisia should apply before his or her departure for a tax clearance from the tax authorities. He or she should then apply for a change-of-residency certificate.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The spouse and dependent children of a foreign national may accompany the worker to Tunisia. However, they are generally not permitted to work in Tunisia unless they qualify independently for work permits (see Section H for exceptions).

Driver's permits. A foreign national may drive legally in Tunisia with a home country driver's license for three months.

Tunisia does not have driver's license reciprocity with other countries.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals who are resident in Turkey (full liability taxpayers) are subject to tax on their worldwide income. Non-residents (limited liability taxpayers) are taxed only on earnings and revenues derived in Turkey.

Residents include individuals with legal permanent residence in Turkey and those who reside in Turkey for more than six months during one calendar year. Temporary absence does not interrupt the continuity of residence in Turkey.

The civil law defines residency as an "intention to settle down permanently." The law does not specify any objective criteria for the determination of residency. However, factors, such as purchasing an apartment in Turkey, closing business operations abroad or having vital social and economic interests in Turkey, may be considered in determining Turkish residency.

An exception to the six-month rule described above applies to expatriates such as businesspersons, scientists, experts, employees of governments or journalists who come to Turkey to perform temporary and predefined work as well as those who have arrived for the purpose of education, medical treatment, rest and travel. Such persons are considered to be nonresidents even if they stay in Turkey longer than six months in a calendar year.

In general, if an individual is a nonresident of Turkey under these rules, the individual is also a nonresident for purposes of the application of Turkey's tax treaties. This may affect the taxation of non-Turkish income in the source country.

Income subject to tax. Turkey has a unitary tax system under which income derived from different sources is aggregated and tax due is computed on the total aggregate income. Under the unitary system, withholding taxes are considered advance payments of tax and are credited against the tax due in the annual return. Income derived in Turkey by residents and nonresidents are allocated to the following categories:
• Commercial income
• Agricultural income

• Employment income (remuneration)
• Self-employment earnings
• Revenues from immovable properties (including royalties)
• Income from capital investments (dividends and interest)
• Other earnings and gains (capital gains)

The above categories of income and the rules for determining the sources of such income are described below.

Commercial income. Income derived from every kind of commercial and industrial operation through a place of business in Turkey, or through a permanent representative in Turkey, is considered to be income derived in Turkey.

Agricultural income. Income arising from agricultural operations carried out in Turkey is considered to be derived in Turkey.

Employment income. Salary and wages are defined as money and goods given as compensation to employees in connection with a specific place of business as well as benefits provided to them that can be represented in terms of money. No distinction is made between salary and wages in Turkey. Wages include amounts paid as cash, indemnities, allowances, overtime, advances, subscriptions, premiums, bonuses, expense accruals or percentages of profits of enterprises that are not partnerships. Certain payments made by employers on behalf of employees, such as payment for rent and utilities are grossed up and taxed as salary and wage income.

Wage income is considered to be derived in Turkey by nonresident individuals if either of the following conditions is satisfied:
• The employment service is performed in Turkey.
• The services are evaluated in Turkey. Services are considered to be evaluated in Turkey if the payment for the services is made in Turkey or if the payment for the services is made abroad and the amount of the payment is transferred to the account of or deducted from the profit of a Turkish resident entity.

An employment service is considered to have been evaluated in Turkey if the salaries are booked as a cost or expense by a Turkish entity.

Individuals in Turkey who work for liaison offices and are compensated in foreign currency are not taxed on their salaries if all of the following conditions are met:
• The nonresident entity pays the salaries out of earnings derived abroad.
• The salary payments are not charged as expenses against profits taxable in Turkey.
• The amount of compensation is brought into Turkey as foreign currency.

Self-employment earnings. Self-employment earnings include services rendered by a person who satisfies the following conditions:
• He or she works on behalf of himself or herself in his or her name.
• He or she uses his or her own professional knowledge.
• He or she works without being dependent on an employer.

If benefits are derived from self-employment activities performed in Turkey or if the self-employment activities are evaluated in Turkey, the income derived from such activities is considered to be income derived in Turkey and is accordingly taxable to nonresidents.

Recipients of services provided by resident and nonresident self-employed individuals must withhold a 20% tax from the amounts paid to the individuals and remit the withholding tax to the tax offices on behalf of the individuals. If the service provider is a nonresident, provisions of an applicable double tax treaty need to be taken into account.

Revenues from immovable properties. Revenues derived from the rental of immovable properties and rights by their owners, by their holders, by those holding easement and usufruct rights or by their tenants are taxable in Turkey if the immovable property is located in Turkey or if such properties and rights are used or evaluated in Turkey.

Rental income derived by resident and nonresident individuals from immovable assets and royalties for patents and rights are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 20%. For nonresidents, this withholding tax may be eliminated or reduced under applicable double tax treaties.

Capital investment income. The following types of income are included in investment income:
- Dividends from all types of share certificates
- Earnings arising from participation shares
- Profits distributed to the chairman and members of the board of directors of companies
- Interest income derived from bonds and bills
- All interest income (time deposits, repurchase [REPO] agreements and others)

Resident and nonresident individuals are subject to withholding tax on dividends and interest. A 15% withholding tax is imposed on dividends. The general rate of withholding tax on interest from deposit accounts in Turkish lira is 15%. The withholding tax rates for interest on term accounts varies, and different tax rates are applicable.

Other earnings and gains. The following types of income are included in other earnings and gains:
- Earnings arising from the sale of securities, rights, copyrights and patents
- Earnings arising from the disposal of land, immovable properties and ships within five years after the acquisition of the assets
- Earnings arising from the transfer of rights of partnership shares
- Earnings arising from the disposal of a whole operation whose activities were halted or from the disposal of part of such operation
- Incidental earnings

Capital gains. Capital gains are normally considered to be ordinary income. However, capital gains derived from transfers of shares are exempt from income tax in certain cases. The rules applicable to capital gains derived from the transfer of shares acquired on or after 1 January 2006 are summarized below.

Under a Council of Ministers' Decree, the withholding tax rate is reduced to 0% for capital gains derived by resident and nonresident individuals from the sale of shares traded at the ISE. This is the final taxation.

Capital gains derived from the disposal of the shares without the intermediation of a bank or an intermediary institution (that is, capital gains derived by resident and nonresident individuals from the sale of shares not traded on the ISE) are subject to tax at the general progressive income rates (see Rates) and reported in the annual income tax return. However, if the shares are issued by Turkish resident companies and held for more than two years, the gain is not subject to income tax.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. No specific rules in Turkey govern the tax treatment of employer-provided stock options. Under the general tax provisions, options are taxable as employment income at the time of exercise. The time of taxation may vary depending on the stock option plan. In addition, under certain circumstances, stock options are subject to stamp tax at a rate of 0.759% and may be subject to social security contributions (see Section C).

Deductions. In determining taxable income, expenses allowable under the income tax law are deducted from gross revenue.

Individuals who render independent professional services or who carry out commercial activities may deduct ordinary business-related expenses from taxable income, including salaries, rental payments, fees and the cost of utilities. Depreciation on fixed assets is also allowed. Penalties are not deductible.

The employee portions of social security contributions and unemployment insurance premiums are deductible from gross employment income.

Premiums paid by the employee for himself or herself, his or her spouse or children with respect to personal insurance policies covering life, death, accident, illness, disablement, unemployment, maternity, birth and education are deductible if the following conditions are satisfied:

- The insurance policy is concluded with an insurance company that is located in Turkey and whose headquarters is in Turkey.
- The amount of the monthly premium or membership fee may not exceed 15% of the salary earned in that month.
- The annual total of the monthly premiums and membership fees that are paid must not exceed the annual legal minimum wage determined by the law (gross TRY3,577 per month, effective from January 2021).

Lighting, heating, water, elevator, administration, insurance, interest, tax, depreciation, and maintenance expenses paid by an individual who earns rental income can be deducted from taxable rental income.

Rates. In principle, individual income and gains calculated on a cumulative basis are subject to income tax at progressive tax rates which vary between 15% and 40% and are calculated on a cumulative basis. The following are the 2021 brackets and relevant income tax rates.

Taxable income TRY	Tax rate %	Tax due TRY	Cumulative tax due TRY
First 24,000	15	3,600	3,600
Next 29,000	20	5,800	9,400
Next 137,000	27	36,990	46,390
Next 460,000	35	161,000	207,390

Remuneration paid by local employers is also subject to a 0.759% stamp duty.

Credits. The minimum living allowance may be claimed as a credit against the tax on employment income. The minimum living allowance applicable for each month of employment may not exceed 50% of the monthly gross amount of the legal minimum wage that is effective at the beginning of the calendar year in which the wage is earned. The percentage is 10% for a spouse who is unemployed and does not earn income, 7.5% for the first two children and 10% for the third child. The tax credit is calculated by multiplying the total minimum living allowance amount by 15%. However, the credit cannot exceed the total tax calculated on the employment income, and no refund is granted in the event of an excess amount.

The minimum living allowance does not apply to nonresident individuals who derive employment income in Turkey.

Relief for losses. Self-employed individuals engaged in a business or individuals who carry out commercial activities may carry forward business losses for five years. No loss carrybacks are allowed.

B. Other taxes

Inheritance and gift tax. For 2021, beneficiaries of inheritances and gift recipients are subject to inheritance and gift tax at rates ranging from 1% to 30%. The tax is paid over three years in two equal installments, in May and November. For 2021, inheritances amounting up to TRY334,534 and gifts amounting up to TRY7,703 are exempt from tax. The following are the tax rates.

Tax base		Inheritance	Gift
Exceeding TRY	Not exceeding TRY	tax rate %	tax rate %
0	380,000	1	10
380,000	1,280,000	3	15
1,280,000	3,180,000	5	20
3,180,000	6,780,000	7	25
6,780,000	—	10	30

Turkish citizens are subject to inheritance and gift tax on worldwide assets received. Resident foreigners are subject to inheritance and gift tax on worldwide assets received from Turkish citizens and on assets located in Turkey received from resident foreigners or nonresidents. Nonresident foreigners are subject to inheritance and gift tax on assets located in Turkey only.

Motor vehicle tax. The persons in whose names motor vehicles are registered may pay motor vehicle tax for each year in two equal installments in January and July. The amount of tax is determined separately for each group of vehicles by taking into consideration the age and engine capacity of the vehicles.

Real estate tax. Buildings and land in Turkey are subject to real estate tax. The taxpayer is the owner of the building or land, the owner of any usufruct over the building or land, or if neither of these exist, any person that uses the building or land as its owner. A partial exemption of 25% of the tax value is granted for buildings or apartments used as residences. This partial exemption applies for five years from the year following the year of the completion of construction.

The tax base for the real estate tax is the tax value of the building or land. The tax value is the value recorded at the Land Registry. The rate of building tax is generally 0.2%, but this rate is reduced to 0.1% for buildings used as residences. The rate of land tax is 0.1%, and the rate of parceled land tax is 0.3%. These rates are increased by 100% within the frontiers of a metropolitan municipality and contiguous regions as defined by law.

A declaration is submitted to the municipality where the building or land is located if a modification is made that might lead to a change in the tax value. Taxes are paid annually in two equal installments, the first at any time during the period from March through May and the second in November.

Luxury housing tax. Starting from 2020, luxury housing tax is collected from residential properties located in Turkey with a value of TRY5,227,000 (for 2021, the amount is updated annually) and higher. Value is determined by using the real estate tax base identified by the municipalities. The following are the tax brackets per value of the properties for the 2021 tax year:
• TRY5,227,000 to TRY7,841,000: applicable tax rate is 0.3%
• TRY7,841,001 to TRY10,455,000: applicable tax rate is 0.6%
• Exceeding TRY10,455,001: applicable tax rate is 1%

C. Social security

The Turkish social security system was previously based on three institutions each regulated by its own law. These institutions were the Social Security Institution (for private sector employees), the Pension Fund (for public sector employees) and the Bag-Kur (for self-employed people). Effective from 1 October 2008, the Social Security and General Health Insurance Law No. 5510 unified the prior three social security regimes.

Under the law, all employees of Turkish private entities are subject to a national social insurance system that covers work-related accidents and illness, general social security, disability and death. The law also provides retirement benefits.

Employers and employees pay monthly contributions at varying percentages calculated on gross salary, subject to upper and lower limits stated in the law. For the period of 1 January 2021 through 31 December 2021, the upper limit for monthly salary subject to social security contributions is TRY26,831.40, and the lower limit for monthly salary subject to social security contributions is TRY3.577,50. Employees pay contributions at a rate of 14%. Employers pay contributions at a rate of 20.5%. Five percent of the employers' contribution can be reimbursed by the Republic of Turkey Prime Ministry Undersecretariat of Treasury if certain conditions are fulfilled by the employer. The rates of unemployment insurance premiums are 1% for employees and 2% for employers.

Employees who are subject to social security contributions in their home country may not be subject to social security contributions in Turkey if they prove their social security status by submitting legal documents obtained from the relevant foreign social security institution.

To provide relief from double social security premiums and to assure benefit coverage, Turkey has entered into bilateral totalization agreements, the terms of which may differ from agreement to agreement, with the following jurisdictions.

Albania	Germany	Northern Cyprus (Turkish Republic of)
Austria	Hungary	Norway
Azerbaijan	Italy	Quebec
Belgium	Korea (South)	Romania
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Kyrgyzstan	Serbia
Canada	Libya	Slovak Republic
Croatia	Luxembourg	Sweden
Czech Republic	Moldova	Switzerland
Denmark	Mongolia	Tunisia
France	Montenegro	United Kingdom
Georgia	Netherlands
	North Macedonia

Turkey is also a party to the European Social Security Agreement. Article 15-1/a of the agreement contains the following provision:

> "Workers employed by a corporation which has a normal employer in one of the contracting states, who are sent to another contracting state for a specific piece of work for the corporation, are subject to the legislation of the state where they were originally employed, provided that the estimated period of employment in that state does not exceed 12 months and that such workers are not sent to replace workers whose periods of employment have ended.
> In cases where the work takes longer than 12 months for unforeseen reasons, the employment law of the country of origin will continue to apply until the end of the work, subject to the agreement of the authorities in the country where the work is being carried out."

D. Filing and payment procedures

Tax is imposed on a calendar-year basis in Turkey.

Employers must withhold income tax from salaries and wages paid to employees. All withholding taxes must be declared monthly by the 26th day of the month following the month of payment (in cash or by accrual) and paid by the filing deadline.

A taxpayer who derives commercial or self-employment income must file and pay advance income tax quarterly. The advance tax amount equals 15% of net income. The advance payments must be made by the 17th day of the second month following the end of the quarterly tax period. Advance tax paid is deducted from the income tax payable in the final tax return.

Annual income tax returns must be submitted to the tax authorities between 1 March and 31 March of the following year. The balance of tax due must be paid in two equal installments in March and July.

Nonresidents are generally not required to file income tax returns if they have only earnings subject to withholding tax. Nonresident individuals or Turkish citizens who reside in Turkey with the intention of staying or nonresident individuals who derive income not subject to withholding tax must file annual income tax returns for other sources of earnings, including commercial income. If nonresident individuals having such earnings leave Turkey, they must file an "occasional" tax return 15 days before their departure.

Nonresident individuals who are not required to file an annual income tax return must file a special tax return for certain gains listed in the Income Tax Code. The special tax return must be filed within 15 days following the date on which the gains are derived. For gains related to self-employment earnings, the special tax return must be filed within 15 days after the ending of the self-employment activities.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Tax resident individuals may claim a credit for taxes paid abroad on income derived outside Turkey and subject to tax in Turkey. This credit can be applied against the tax payable in Turkey. A foreign tax credit is not available to nonresidents.

The tax amount allowed as a foreign tax credit for a resident is limited to the amount of tax to be paid in Turkey for the same amount of income. Accordingly, if the tax rate applied in the other country is greater than the tax rate applicable in Turkey the difference cannot be considered in calculating the foreign tax credit. The portion of the income tax corresponding to the earnings derived in foreign countries is calculated based on the ratio of such income to worldwide income.

To claim the foreign tax credit, both of the following conditions must be satisfied:

- The tax paid in the foreign country must be a personal tax levied on the basis of income.
- The payment of the tax in a foreign country must be substantiated with documents obtained from competent authorities and attested to by the local Turkish embassy or consulate, or if these institutions do not exist, by similar representatives of Turkey in that country.

F. Entry visas

Nonresident foreign nationals, who are not exempt from the visa requirements of Turkey under reciprocal agreements, must obtain a visa from the Turkish embassy or the Consulate General in their country before their travel. Exemptions apply for a stay of limited duration (that is, 30 days, 60 days or 90 days, depending on the country of nationality). However, the duration of the stay in Turkey with a business visa cannot exceed 90 days within the 180-day period starting from the date of the first entrance into Turkey. In addition, foreign nationals from a limited group of countries, who are subject to the visa requirement, may obtain an e-visa from the online portal of the Turkish government for a stay of limited duration (that is, 30 days, 60 days or 90 days, depending on the country of nationality).

G. Work permits and resident permits

The Turkish Parliament adopted the Law on International Labor Force (the Law) numbered 6735 on 28 July 2016, and the Law was published in the Official Gazette on 13 August 2016. However, the implementation regulation of the Law has not been issued yet. In this regard, the Regulation Concerning Work Permits of Expatriates numbered 4817 is still in force. Under the Law, nonresident expatriates must obtain a work permit to be eligible for employment in Turkey. The work permit also serves as a residence permit. Work permits are issued by the Ministry of Labor and Social Security. The initial application for the work permit is filed from abroad with the local Turkish embassy or the Consulate General.

The work permit process consists of three main steps. The expatriate must first apply for a work visa at the Turkish Consulate General in the country of his or her citizenship or legal residence to initiate the process.

As of 5 January 2016, applications for all types of visas must be made first online at www.visa.gov.tr. This must be followed by the submission of the original documents to the Consulate General at the time of the appointment.

The second step is to apply for the work permit through the online system. Following the work visa application at the Turkish consulate, the work permit application must be submitted within 10 days. Work permit applications are accepted by the Ministry of Labor and Social Security only through the online system. Accordingly, the Turkish host company must have a registered electronic mail account and an electronic signature. The Turkish host company must be registered as an employer to file applications.

The expatriate must then revisit the Turkish consulate to get the work visa stamped into his or her passport and enter into Turkey with his or her work visa within 90 days following the approval of the work permit application by the Ministry of Labor and Social Security. All preconditions and required documents are available during the application process.

Under the Law, work permits are granted for definite or indefinite period of time, and independent work permits are granted for a definite period of time.

Definite-term work permit. A work permit for a maximum of one year shall be issued in the first application for the foreigner. Such work permit does not exceed the term of the foreigner's employment or service agreement to work at a specific workplace owned by a legal entity or a real person, or a public institution or establishment, or other workplaces owned by the same in the same business sector. In the case of an extension request, the foreigner shall be granted a maximum of two years' extension at the first extension application for the same employer, and for further applications, a maximum of three years' extension shall be granted.

In addition, the host company is required to submit a letter of undertaking related to COVID-19 for the foreigner to the Ministry of Labor and Social Security. This letter indicates that the company will fully comply with the decisions, recommendations and advice, and occupational health and safety measures regarding protection against COVID-19 in the workplace announced by the Ministry of Labor and Social Security, Ministry of Health and the Coronavirus Scientific Committee, within the scope of the foreign personnel work permit applications submitted to the Ministry of Labor and Social Security. The host company is also required to undertake to comply wholly and completely with the following measures during the travel and transportation of the foreign personnel who has been granted a work permit:

- Ensuring personal precautions are taken while maintaining the necessary social distance from the beginning of the trip to Turkey
- Confirming the necessary health checks are conducted by the Ministry of Health prior to the departure of the personnel from the aircraft and not allowing personnel to debark from the aircraft who have symptoms of the disease
- Verifying that personnel are wearing masks and gloves from the plane to the accommodations

- Ensuring the transfer from the airport to the accommodations with vehicles arranging and maintaining social distance
- Confirming the 14 days of isolation in single rooms, and monitoring and follow-up by the Ministry of Health

Indefinite-term work permit. Foreigners with a long-term residence permit or a legal work permit with a minimum term of eight years may apply for an indefinite-term work permit. However, fulfilling the application criteria does not automatically entitle the foreigner to be granted an indefinite work permit.

Independent work permit. Under the Law, the following persons are required to obtain an independent work permit in order to work in Turkey:
- Statutory managers of limited liability companies who are also shareholders of the relevant company
- Board of directors' members of joint stock companies who are also shareholders of the relevant company
- Commandite shareholders of partnerships in commendam, the capital of which is divided into shares

Foreigners in a learned profession may be granted an independent work permit if they qualify under specific conditions set forth in other legislation.

By virtue of the Law, another type of work permit called the Turquoise Card is initiated. The Turquoise Card is designed to bring into Turkey a qualified foreign labor force who will make investments supporting the development of Turkey, and provide contributions to scientific and technological development. The Turquoise Card Regulation was announced in the Official Gazette numbered 30007 and dated 14 March 2017. The Turquoise Card may be granted to foreigners who have the following characteristics:
- Are evaluated to be highly qualified labor given their education, salary, professional knowledge and experience, contribution in science and technology, and similar qualifications
- Are evaluated to be highly qualified investors given their investment or export level, size of the employment they will provide, contribution in scientific and technological development, and similar qualifications
- Contribute in scientific and technological development or are scientists or researchers who conduct studies that are considered to be strategic on the international level in terms of the country's interest in the fields of science, industry and technology
- Are successful on the international level in cultural, artistic or sportive activities
- Contribute in the international recognition or promotion of Turkey or the Turkish culture and carry out international activities in relation to national interests of Turkey

The Turquoise Card will be given for a transition period of three years. The General Directorate assigns a specialist to monitor the activities and commitments of the Turquoise Card holder within the transition period in 12-month periods. The transition period registration on the Turquoise Card that is not canceled within the transition period shall be removed if the request to remove the transition period registration is approved and the Turquoise Card becomes indefinite.

A Turquoise Card holder's Relative Card is issued for the Turquoise Card holder's relatives upon application. This card replaces a residency permit within the validity period of the Turquoise Card.

A Turquoise Card holder shall benefit from the rights granted by the indefinite work permit. The following conditions apply:
- Turquoise Card holders are exempt from military duty obligations in Turkey.
- Turquoise Card holders cannot benefit from the right to elect and be elected and assigned in public positions.
- Acquired rights regarding social security are reserved and are subject to the provisions in related legislation when using these rights.
- Transactions of these people in relation to residency, travel, work, investment, commercial activity, inheritance, acquiring and renouncing from movable and immovable, and others are carried out by the related organizations or institutions in accordance with the legislations that apply to Turkish citizens.

Provided that the provisions of the social security agreements in which Turkey is a party are reserved, Turquoise Card holders and employers who employ foreigners are obliged to fulfill their obligations arising from social security legislation in due time.

Foreigners whose qualifications are sufficient for work permit exemptions may work in Turkey by obtaining a work permit exemption. Work permit exemption applications shall be submitted directly to the Ministry of Labor and Social Security in Turkey, and to the consulates of the countries in which the foreigner is a citizen or legally resides to be forwarded to the Ministry of Labor and Social Security by the consulate. Board of directors' members of joint stock companies who do not reside in Turkey; shareholders of other companies who do not hold managerial positions; and cross-border service providers whose services in Turkey do not exceed 90 days in a 180-day period are subject to work permit exemption.

For the first application for the work permit, unless otherwise provided in bilateral or multilateral agreements to which Turkey is a party, the work permit is valid for at most one year to work in a certain workplace or enterprise in a certain job. After the duration of one year, the duration of the working permit may be extended up to two years, on the condition of working in the same workplace or enterprise in the same job. At the end of the duration of three years, the duration of the work permit may be extended up to three years, on the condition of working in the same profession and at the disposal of a desired employer. The work permit extension processes must be realized at most 60 days before the expiration date of the valid work permit.

The family of the expatriate may obtain a residence permit for the duration of the expatriate's employment. Dependents cannot file their applications jointly with the expatriate. Once the work permit process is finalized and the dependents enter into Turkey, the residence permit application process can be initiated by completing an online residence permit application form and booking an appointment with the competent immigration authority. The online system generates the date and time for the appointments; a particular date or time cannot be requested.

For each residence permit application, the original copies of the birth certificate of children, the marriage certificate and the criminal record of the work permit holder is either certified with an apostille by the authorities from which it is obtained or if the state from which the document is obtained is not a party to the Apostille Convention, approved by the relevant state's authorities (approval by the consulate and by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs or competent Turkish authorities authorized therefor).

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. After a foreign national obtains a work permit, the spouse and children may apply for their own residence permits.

The working spouse of a foreign national must apply for a separate work permit. This work permit is granted on the condition that the spouse resided with the foreigner legally and uninterruptedly for at least five years. The duration may be shortened or even eliminated under certain conditions.

Once the work permit application process is finalized and the dependents enter Turkey, the residence permit application process can be initiated by completing an online residence permit application form and booking an appointment with the immigration authority. The foreign national and his or her dependents are usually required to attend the appointment at the immigration authority in person.

Marital property regime. The Turkish Civil Code considers the marital property regime to be the statutory regime for management of marital property. The ordinary marital property regime is participation in the jointly acquired property. Spouses can opt out of the regime by mutual agreement, which must be executed in writing and notarized.

Forced heirship. Turkish succession law provides for forced heirship. If a decedent leaves descendants and a surviving spouse, the spouse is entitled to one-quarter of the entire intestate share. Other legal portions range from one-quarter to three-quarters of the forced heir's intestate share.

Driver's permits. As per the "Regulation to amend the Road Traffic Regulation," announced in the Official Gazette, dated 17 April 2015 and numbered 29329, foreigners can use their driver's licenses in Turkey for six months from the date of their first entrance into Turkey. If they want to drive in Turkey for more than six months, they must change their driver's licenses to Turkish driver's licenses.

An announcement on the Traffic Registry Directorate website provides details regarding the changing of a foreign driver's license to a Turkish driver's license.

Before preparing the required documentation, the foreigner must visit the Traffic Registry Directorate with the original and a translated, notarized copy of his or her driver's license in order to confirm whether his or her driver's license can be changed.

The following is the required documentation:

- Original of the driver's license and notarized or consulate-approved translation copy
- Original and the photocopy of identification or passport (for foreigners, original and copy of residence permit)
- Two hard-copy photographs
- In accordance with the class of the driving license, a health certificate (from the private or official health authorities within the province; must be valid for two years)
- Blood type approval document
- Fee receipt according to the class of the driving license (paid to banks and tax offices; the card fee is TRY225)

Because of the possible changes to the tax law, readers should obtain updated information before engaging in transactions.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents are subject to tax on worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxable on Ugandan-source income only.

Individuals are considered resident in Uganda for tax purposes if they meet at least one of the following conditions:
• They maintain a permanent home in Uganda.
• They are present for 183 or more days in the tax year. The tax year runs from 1 July to 30 June.
• They are present for an average of 122 days in the tax year and the two preceding tax years.
• They are employees or officials of the government of Uganda posted abroad during the tax year.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Employment income includes wages, salaries, vacation pay, sick pay, payment in lieu of vacation, directors' fees, commissions, bonuses, gratuities, and entertainment or other allowances received for employment. Employment income also includes most benefits in kind, including employer-provided car, housing and stock options. Travel allowances are taxable if they are deemed to be excessive.

Education cash allowances provided by the employer to all of the employer's local and expatriate staff are taxable for income tax purposes and social taxes. However, the allowances are not subject to social taxes if the employer pays directly the school fees to the school or college, or reimburses the actual fees paid by the employee.

A nonresident is subject to income tax on employment earnings if his or her employer is resident in Uganda or has a permanent establishment in Uganda. Income derived from services performed outside Uganda by a short-term resident is exempt from tax. A short-term resident is a resident individual who is not a citizen of Uganda and is present in Uganda for a period not exceeding two years.

A resident individual who earns foreign-source employment income is exempt from tax on that income if the individual has paid foreign income tax with respect to that income.

If the employee is receiving a motor-vehicle benefit from his or her employer, the motor vehicle is depreciated at an annual reducing-balance rate of 35% when computing the motor-vehicle benefit.

Self-employment and business income. Business income includes the following:
- Trading profits
- Gains from disposals of business assets, shares of profits or partnership interests
- Professional and management fees
- Insurance compensation and legal damages for loss of profits

Investment income. Dividends received by residents and nonresidents are subject to final withholding tax at a rate of 15%. For resident persons, royalties are aggregated with other income and are taxed at the rates set forth in Rates. Income received by residents from the rental of immovable property is taxed separately at a rate of 30% on net income. Net income for individuals is gross rent derived less allowable deductions. Effective from 1 July 2021, 75% of rental income is taken as allowable expenses and losses incurred by a person in the production of income, subject to verification by Uganda Revenue. In addition, interest expense incurred by an individual on a mortgage from a financial institution to acquire or construct premises that generate rental income is also an allowable deduction. A final withholding tax is levied on interest income received by residents at a rate of 15%.

Nonresidents are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 15% on investment income, income from the rental of real property, management fees, royalties, consultancy fees and any payments for services performed in Uganda. The withholding tax rate may vary if Uganda has entered into a double tax treaty with the country in which the nonresident is based. For a list of Uganda's double tax treaties, see Section E.

Capital gains. Capital gains derived from the disposal of business assets are subject to tax at a rate of 30%.

Deductions

Personal deductions. No personal deductions are allowed.

Business deductions. Expenses are deductible to the extent they are incurred in the production of income. Identified bad debts incurred in the production of taxable income are also deductible.

Plant and machinery qualify for an annual capital allowance deduction. Eligible plant and machinery placed into service for the first time outside the radius of fifty kilometers from the boundaries of Kampala also qualify for an initial allowance of 50%. The amount of the initial allowance is subtracted from the depreciable cost of an asset. The balance is subject to a depreciation (wear-and-tear) allowance at the applicable rate.

Capital allowances for industrial buildings and certain commercial buildings are permitted on a straight-line basis over 20 years. In addition, industrial buildings qualify for an initial allowance of 20% if their construction began on or after 1 July 2000. The initial allowance was repealed in 2014 but was reintroduced by the 2017 Income Tax Amendment, effective from 1 July 2017. Plant and machinery are eligible for a wear-and-tear allowance using the declining-balance method at rates ranging from 20% to 40%.

Effective from 1 July 2021, the following is the reclassification of depreciable assets.

Class	Assets	Declining-balance depreciation rate (%)
1	Computers and data handling	40
2	Plant and machinery used in farming, manufacturing and mining	30
3	Automobiles; buses, minibuses, goods vehicles, construction and earth moving equipment, specialized trucks, tractors, trailers and trailer-mounted containers, rail cars, locomotives and equipment, vessels, barges, tugs, and similar water transportation equipment, aircraft, specialized public utility plant, equipment, and machinery, office furniture, fixtures and equipment, and any depreciable asset not included in another class	20

Capital allowances for wear and tear of an asset are deferred to the next year of income if the asset qualifies for an initial allowance.

Similarly, there is also deferral of a deduction for the depreciation of an industrial building to the next year of income if the building qualifies for an initial allowance.

Effective from 1 July 2021, allowable expenses and losses under rental income are capped at 75% of rental income for purposes of determining rental income for individuals. However, the expenses and losses relating to the 75% allowable deduction are subject to verification by the Uganda Revenue Authority. In addition, mortgage interest is also an allowable deduction if the loan obligation was incurred in generating rental income.

Rates. The resident individual tax rates are set forth in the following table. These rates apply to employment income and taxable business income.

Annual taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding	Not exceeding	amount	excess
UGX	UGX	UGX	%
0	2,820,000	0	0
2,820,000	4,020,000	0	10
4,020,000	4,920,000	120,000	20
4,920,000	120,000,000	300,000	30
120,000,000	—	34,824,000	40

For nonresidents, taxable income, including investment income, is taxed at the rates in the following table.

Annual taxable income		Tax on lower	Rate on
Exceeding	Not exceeding	amount	excess
UGX	UGX	UGX	%
0	4,020,000	0	10
4,020,000	4,920,000	402,000	20
4,920,000	120,000,000	582,000	30
120,000,000	—	35,106,000	40

The amount of tax payable is reduced by tax withheld.

Income derived by resident individuals from the rental of real property is taxed at a rate of 30%, effective from 1 July 2021.

Withholding tax. The Income Tax Act Cap 340 specifies persons who are required to withhold tax as well as those on whom the tax should be imposed, depending on the nature of transaction. This tax is deducted at source by a withholding agent on making the payment to another person.

A withholding tax agent is the person who makes the payment and is required to withhold tax; the recipient of the payment is the payee.

If a taxpayer is designated by the minister to withhold tax, and the payer pays an amount or amounts in aggregate exceeding UGX1 million for a supply of goods and services, the payer withholds tax at a rate of 6% on local payments. If a taxpayer is not a designated withholding tax agent, the payer withholds tax only on payments made with respect to professional services and management fees. For international payments, tax is withheld at a rate of 15%. However, for countries that have double tax treaties with Uganda, the rate at which tax is withheld varies per country.

Relief for losses. Losses may be carried forward to be offset against future profits. In general, losses may not be carried back. However, with respect to long-term contracts, a loss in the final year of the contract can be carried backward to offset reported tax profits of previous years.

A long-term contract is a contract for manufacturing, installation, or construction or for the performance of services related to such activities, if not completed within the year of income in which work under the contract commenced, excluding a contract estimated to be completed within six months of the date on which work under the contract commenced.

B. Other taxes

Value-added tax. Uganda imposes value-added tax (VAT) on the sale or import of taxable goods and services. Supplies of services or goods may be exempt, zero rated (subject to a VAT rate of 0%) or standard rated. The standard VAT rate is 18% on the gross amount paid. Exempt goods or services are neither zero rated nor subject to the rate of 18%. They include supplies of livestock, unprocessed foods, financial services and other items listed in the second schedule of the VAT Act. Zero-rated goods or services include exports, international transport, and drugs and medicines manufactured in Uganda.

The VAT payable on a taxable supply made to a government ministry, department or agency by a contractor executing an aid-funded project is deemed to have been paid by that ministry, department or agency if the supply is solely and exclusively for the use of the aid-funded project. A credit for input tax is allowed if a person is dealing in standard and zero-rated goods.

The Electronic Fiscal Receipting and Invoicing System (EFRIS) to handle e-invoicing and e-receipting is mandatory, effective from 1 January 2021. All VAT-registered taxpayers are required to configure this system into their businesses depending on the preferred channel. Taxpayers are not able to claim a deduction (income tax) or credit (VAT) for purchase expenses if these transactions are not supported by e-invoices or e-receipts.

Section 28 of the VAT Act was amended to limit the time period for applying for an input tax credit to six months from the date of the invoice.

Import duty. Uganda charges import duty on goods at the time of importation except for exempt imports. A traveler is allowed duty-free imports of up to USD500.

Effective from 1 February 2005, the East African Community Customs Union (EACCU) consisting of Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda, became operational. In 2008, Burundi and Rwanda were admitted to the EACCU. The EACCU provides for the duty-free movement of goods among member states and a common external tariff (CET) on goods from third countries. The CET is generally imposed at a rate of 0% to 25% on goods imported from third countries into Uganda. However, sensitive products are subject to a duty rate exceeding 25%. Eligible goods from Common Market of East and Southern Africa (COMESA) and Southern African Development Community (SADC) countries continued to attract preferential treatment for 2009 and 2010. The import duty rate on goods imported into Uganda from Kenya was progressively reduced by two percentage points per year, from an initial 10% in 2005 to 0% in 2010. The EACCU also provides various tax incentives for producers of goods for export.

Excise duty. Uganda charges excise duty on certain items, including spirits, beer, soft drinks, cigarettes and mobile phone airtime. EFRIS also applies to excise duty.

Other taxes. Estate and gift tax is not levied in Uganda. Net worth tax is not levied in Uganda.

C. Social security

The National Social Security Fund (NSSF) is a statutory savings program to provide employees with retirement benefits.

Employees contribute 5% of their total monetary remuneration, and employers contribute an amount equal to 10% of each employee's total monetary remuneration.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Tax is withheld from employees under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system.

The tax year runs from 1 July to 30 June. Individuals must file quarterly provisional returns. A penalty is imposed for the failure to file provisional returns.

Individuals must file their final tax returns within six months after the end of the accounting year. An assessment is made based on the return, with a credit given for taxes withheld at source and for provisional taxes paid.

Nonresidents who trade in Uganda through permanent establishments are subject to the same filing requirements as residents.

Interest and a penalty are imposed for unpaid tax. Any penalties or interest paid cannot exceed the principal amount of the tax outstanding.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Residents may deduct foreign taxes paid from Ugandan income tax payable on foreign-source income. Uganda has entered into double tax treaties with the following countries.

Denmark	Mauritius	South Africa
India	Netherlands	United Kingdom
Italy	Norway	Zambia

Certain treaties are in the final discussion phase including treaties with Belgium, China, the East African Community (EAC) Egypt, Seychelles, Sudan and the United Arab Emirates.

F. Temporary permits

All foreign visitors must obtain valid entry visas to enter Uganda, with the exception of nationals of member countries of the COMESA or the EAC, and nationals of the following countries.

Angola	Gambia	St. Vincent and the Grenadines
Antigua	Ghana	Sierra Leone
Bahamas	Grenada	Singapore
Barbados	Jamaica	Solomon Islands
Belize	Lesotho	Tonga
Cyprus	Malta	Vanuatu
Fiji

Dependents' passes are issued to family members and relatives of foreign nationals with valid permits. These passes are linked to the principal's permit and are canceled on expiration or cancellation of the principal's permit.

Students' passes are issued to foreign students who wish to study in Uganda. All EAC nationals studying or seeking to study in Uganda must obtain student passes from designated immigration offices. These passes are issued at no cost.

Special passes are issued to foreign nationals wishing to work in Uganda on a short-term assignment (three to five months). A special pass is valid for three months and may be extended once.

Visitors' passes are issued on entry into Uganda. They are valid for three months and may be extended for up to six months.

Transit passes are normally valid for seven days.

Prohibited immigrant passes are issued to foreign nationals who, under normal circumstances, would not be granted visas. They are granted only in special cases and are valid for seven days.

When applying for passes, applicants must have valid passports or equivalent travel documents. No quota system exists for immigration purposes in Uganda.

G. Work permits and self-employment

Only special passes and work permits allow foreign nationals to undertake employment in Uganda.

Temporary work permits, called special passes, are valid for three months and may be extended for up to a maximum of five months.

A work permit or entry permit is issued for up to three years and may be renewed every three years. Work permits are divided into seven classes (Classes A through G), which are summarized below.

Class A permits are issued to foreign diplomats, United Nations staff and foreigners recruited to work in Uganda government service. They require the submission of the following documents:
- Copies of passport (bio-data page)

- Tax identification number (TIN) of the company
- Completed entry/work permit form

Class C work permits are issued to investors prospecting for, or mining, minerals and require the documents listed below:

Class D work permits pertain to general business or the retail trade. In addition to the documents listed for Class B permits, excluding the analysis of viability, the application for a Class D work permit requires bank statements.

Class E permits are issued to manufacturers. In addition to the documents required to obtain Class B permits, excluding the analysis of viability, applicants for Class E permits must produce an investment license.

Class F permits, which are issued to practicing professionals (for example, lawyers and accountants), require the submission of the following:

- Qualifications and references or résumés
- Copy of the passport (bio-data page)
- Copy of a recent passport-size photograph
- Clearance letter from Interpol or home country
- Registration certificate with relevant professional body in Uganda
- Cover letter from the organization
- Copy of nonrefundable prepayment receipt or a copy of identification from nationals of Burundi, Kenya and Rwanda

Class G has two sub-classifications of work permits, which are Class G1 and Class G2. They are issued to employees. Applicants for Class G1 permits (missionaries, volunteers and workers for nongovernmental organizations [NGOs]) are required to produce the following documents:

- Certified copy of qualifications

- Cover letter from the organization
- Clearance letter from Interpol or home country
- Income tax clearance for the organization
- Copy of nonrefundable prepayment receipt

The flow of the immigration process is adjusted, effective from 1 July 2016. The following is the flow of the process:
- The company must register and obtain an organization code so that all assignees apply under the company's account (the requirements for obtaining an organization code include filling out the Imm001 form and then attaching the company documentation under each class on a CD, which is shared with the immigration department).
- After the company obtains an organization code, the applicant must fill out the permit application form online.
- The applicant is then prompted to upload the required documents as per the type of permit.
- The application is then submitted, and follow-ups can be made based on the application identification number, passport number and date of birth.
- An approval letter is sent by email or downloaded through the Uganda electronic visa/permit website. This letter establishes that the applicant is eligible for the approved visa or permit, but it does not establish that the application is definitely approved.
- The final approval is issued at the selected point of entry (in the case of a visa) or at the immigration office headquarters where the visa or permit sticker is printed and pasted on the passport.

Payment of the government fees is due after approval has been received.

After all documents are received, it takes from three to four weeks to process a work permit. All passes (special passes, dependent passes and student passes) usually take one to two weeks to be approved.

As a result of the introduction of the organization code, nonresidents seeking permits are not required to present company documentation (for example, articles and memorandum of association), because they are applying for a permit under an organization's account that was issued an organization code on presentation of the necessary documentation mentioned above.

Foreign nationals may change employers after they have obtained work permits. However, they must apply for new work permits under their new employers.

An investment license, issued by the Uganda Investment Authority, is required for all foreign business operations in Uganda. Investment incentives, including tax holidays, are available to businesses that satisfy certain conditions and bring specific amounts of capital into Uganda.

H. Residence permits

Certificates of residence allow foreign nationals to work and live in Uganda. The duration for the certificates can be 5 years, 10 years or a lifetime.

Foreign nationals seeking certificates of residence must have resided in Uganda for at least 10 consecutive years, be married to a Ugandan or be a former citizen of Uganda.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. Dependents of expatriates with work permits may obtain long-term entry permits called dependents' passes. The length of validity of these passes depends on the duration of the expatriate's work permit. However, the duration of the passes is granted at the discretion of the Commissioner General.

Working spouses of work permit holders do not automatically receive the same type of pass or permit as the principal permit holder. Applications must be filed independently.

Driver's permits. Uganda has driver's license reciprocity with British Commonwealth countries only. Foreign nationals from a British Commonwealth country may drive legally in Uganda with their home country driver's licenses for three months. Thereafter, the foreign national can apply to the Uganda Revenue Authority for a Conversion Permit, which allows the national to obtain a Ugandan driver's permit with classes equivalent to those in his or her home country permit.

To obtain a local driver's license in Uganda, an applicant must obtain a provisional driver's license after paying a general fee. This enables the applicant to go to a driving school and to perform a driving test, after which he or she is issued a driving permit. No written or physical examination is required. However, a medical examination is now required before an applicant can take a driving test.

At the time of writing, a major tax reform was in progress in Ukraine. Because of this potential tax reform, readers should obtain updated information before engaging in transactions.

The exchange rate on 6 July 2021 was UAH27.2904 = USD1.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Residents of Ukraine are subject to tax on worldwide income. Individuals who are not tax residents in Ukraine are taxed on their Ukrainian-source income, which includes, among others, the following:
- Income derived from work or services performed in Ukraine
- Income and gains from the disposal of real estate in Ukraine
- Rent from property located in Ukraine
- Dividends paid on shares of Ukrainian companies

An individual is considered to be a tax resident of Ukraine if he or she has a place of abode in Ukraine. If a person has a domicile both in Ukraine and in another country, he or she is considered Ukrainian tax resident if he or she has a permanent place of abode in Ukraine. If he or she has a permanent place of residence in both countries, he or she is considered Ukrainian tax resident if he or she has a center of vital interests (for example, resident relatives) in Ukraine. If a country where the person has a center of his or her vital interests cannot be determined or if a person does not have a permanent place of residence in any country, he or she is considered Ukrainian tax resident if he or she is present in Ukraine for 183 days or more during a tax year (including the day of arrival and the day of departure). For this purpose, the days of presence in Ukraine need not be consecutive.

If it is impossible to determine residency status based on the above, the person is considered to be Ukrainian tax resident if he or she is a citizen of Ukraine.

Notwithstanding the above, the law allows an individual to claim tax residency in Ukraine based on an acknowledgment that Ukraine is his or her main residence or on registration as a self-employed person in Ukraine.

However, in practice, since January 2010, the most important criterion from the perspective of the tax authorities in Ukraine is physical presence (183 days) during a calendar year in Ukraine, which must be confirmed by documents.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. The taxable employment income of residents consists of all compensation received in cash or in kind, whether the income is received in Ukraine or abroad.

The taxable income of an individual also includes allowances paid because of residence in Ukraine (hardship and cost of living allowances) and compensation received for children's education, meals and holiday travel for the taxpayer's family to the family's home country.

Certain benefits provided by a Ukrainian employer to employees and compensation for such benefits (for example, accommodation or corporate cars) may be exempt from tax under the tax code of Ukraine if the following conditions are satisfied:
- The benefits are provided with respect to the performance of labor.
- The benefits are stipulated in the law, an applicable employment agreement or a collective bargaining agreement.
- The benefits are provided within the limits prescribed in the employment agreement, the collective bargaining agreement or the law. Because the law does not currently impose any such limits, the employment agreement or collective bargaining agreement must specify the limits.
- The employer owns the property provided to the employee.

Individuals are exempt from tax on the following types of employment income:
- Unified social tax payable by a Ukrainian employer on top of an employee's salary
- Amounts paid by employers to Ukrainian educational institutions to cover educational costs for the training of their employees with respect to the business activities of the employer, subject to certain limitations
- Amounts paid by employers to cover medical assistance to employees, subject to certain limitations
- Company contributions made under non-state pension contracts for the employees' benefit, subject to certain limitations

Passive income. Passive income in the form of royalties and capital gains, as well as interest income received by individuals from deposits in Ukrainian banks, is subject to tax at a rate of 18%.

Dividends received by individuals from resident companies are taxed at a rate of 5%, while dividends received by individuals from nonresident companies, collective-investment institutions and economic agents that are not payers of corporate profit tax are taxed at a rate of 9%.

Self-employment and business income. Taxable self-employment and business income consists of gross income (receipts in cash or in kind), less appropriately documented expenses incurred in generating that income.

Exempt income. In addition to the exempt items mentioned above, individuals are exempt from personal income tax on the following types of income:

- Tax refunds as well as payments from state social security and pension funds
- Insurance proceeds, except for long-term life (long-life insurance contracts are those that have a duration of five years or more and that provide for an insurance payment as a lump sum or annuity if certain conditions are satisfied) and non-state pension insurance (subject to certain limitations)
- Income received from entrepreneurial activities by an individual who pays tax under the simplified system of taxation

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. Ukrainian law contains no specific rules for the taxation of stock option plans. Consequently, taxation of such options is based on general principles. Because of the broad definition of income, a risk of taxation of an option at the moment of grant exists. The position of the Ukrainian tax authorities on this matter is unclear, but it appears that this risk is remote. As a result, options are likely to be taxed at the moment of exercise.

The difference between the option exercise price and the fair market value of the shares on the date of exercise is considered to be taxable income to the employee. This income is subject to tax at a rate of 18%.

On the sale of the shares in Ukraine, the employee derives a taxable capital gain, which is equal to the difference between the sale price and the purchase price. Income from the sale of shares is taxed in the same manner and at the same rate as the employee's other compensation income. The capital gain is not taxable if it falls within the capital gains exemption described in Capital gains. In addition, if shares are received as a gift or inheritance, the taxable amount on sale is decreased by the amount of personal income tax and state duty (the current maximum rate of the state duty is 1%).

Certain limits on the transfer of funds abroad (including the purchase of the underlying shares) apply to Ukrainian currency control residents. Currently, the annual limit is EUR200,000. Currency control residents are defined as individuals (citizens of Ukraine, foreigners and stateless persons) who permanently reside in Ukraine, including individuals temporarily staying outside Ukraine.

Income from alienation of movable and immovable property. Income derived from sales of property is subject to tax at the rates described in Rates, but certain exemptions and special rules apply.

Income derived from sale of a car, motorcycle or motor bicycle in Ukraine is exempt from tax if only one such sale is performed in a reporting year.

Income derived from the sale of immovable property (for example, residency house, apartment or single room) in Ukraine, with the simultaneous sale of a land plot on which the property is located, if any, or from the sale of a land plot (subject to certain limitations) is exempt from tax if a seller has owned the respective immovable property for more than three years and if only one such sale is performed in a reporting year.

Capital gains. A capital gain is usually calculated as the difference between proceeds derived by a taxpayer from investment assets and expenses incurred in connection with the acquisition of such property.

Capital gains derived from the alienation of investment assets, such as securities and other corporate rights, are included in taxable income to the extent that the annual gains exceed the amount of UAH3,180. If the alienation of the investment assets results in a loss, such loss can be deducted against gains derived from the alienation of investment assets during the tax year, subject to certain limitations. Such loss can be carried forward to future years without limitation.

An individual who receives income from the alienation of investment assets must record the results of the transactions separately from other income and expenses and report such results in the annual tax return. However, if the individual performs transactions regarding investment assets with the involvement of a securities broker in accordance with an agreement with the broker, the broker may be considered a tax agent of the individual.

Deductions. Taxable salary income received from a Ukrainian employer may be reduced by the social tax benefit, which varies from one half to two subsistence minimums for the employee as of 1 January of the reporting year (currently, the subsistence minimum in Ukraine equals UAH2,379), depending on the status of the individual (categories include single parents, parents of handicapped children, widowers, certain war veterans, disabled persons, Chernobyl victims and others).

A Ukrainian tax resident who has a Tax Identification Code may apply for a tax discount by deducting from salary income the sum of certain amounts paid to Ukrainian residents during the tax year. The following amounts may be included in the tax discount:
- Payments for the education of the individual and his or her immediate family members, subject to certain restrictions
- Payments for medical assistance provided to an individual and his or her immediate family members, subject to certain restrictions (this measure will take effect in the year following the year when the Law of Ukraine on Mandatory Medical Insurance enters into effect)
- A portion of interest paid by an individual with respect to a mortgage
- Cost of charitable gifts made by a taxpayer in an amount of up to 4% of his or her annual taxable income
- Long-term life insurance premiums and contributions paid by the taxpayer for himself or herself or his or her immediate family (subject to certain limitations) to the respective Ukrainian resident entities (insurance companies)
- Private pension insurance contributions made by the taxpayer for himself or herself or his or her immediate family (with certain restrictions) to the respective Ukrainian resident entities (non-state pension funds and banking establishments)

- Payments for artificial insemination, with certain restrictions
- Payments for state services related to the adoption of a child
- Payments for equipment that allows a taxpayer's vehicle to use biofuel
- Expenses incurred on the building or purchase of accommodation that is classified as affordable
- Expenses incurred on the renting of housing by an internally displaced person

The total amount of the tax discount may not exceed the total amount of taxable salary income received by an individual during the tax year. In addition, any amount of the tax discount that is not used as a result of this restriction may not be carried back or forward.

To claim the tax discount, a taxpayer must file his or her tax return by the end of the tax year following the reporting year. All relevant expenses incurred must be properly documented with receipts and bills. Based on the tax return, the tax authorities allow the tax discount and refund any excess tax paid not later than 60 days after receipt of the tax return.

Rates. Flat income tax rates of 0%, 5%, 9% and 18% are imposed on individuals in Ukraine. The rates vary according to the type of income.

Income derived from the alienation of real estate is taxed at a rate of 0%, 5% or 18% depending on the following:
- Duration of ownership of such property
- The frequency of alienations
- Type of property
- Tax residence status

In general, an 18% tax rate applies to most types of income of resident and nonresident individuals (employment and non-employment), except for the types of income described below.

An 18% tax rate applies to royalties, investment income and interest income received by resident and nonresident individuals in Ukraine. A 9% tax rate applies to dividends received by individuals from nonresident companies, collective-investment institutions and economic agents that are not payers of corporate profit tax. A 5% tax rate applies to dividends received from resident companies.

Gifts and inheritances received are treated as income and are subject to personal income tax at rates of 0%, 5% or 18%. The applicable rate for inheritances depends on the residency status of the testator and inheritor and on the degree of relation between the testator and inheritor. The applicable rate for gifts depends on the giver (that is, if a giver is a legal entity or an individual registered as a private entrepreneur, the applicable rate is 18%; if a giver is a private individual who is not an entrepreneur, the rate depends on the residency status of the giver or recipient and on the degree of relation between the giver and recipient).

A tax rate of 18% applies to prizes and gains derived from non-statutory lotteries.

The law provides a special procedure for the payment of Ukrainian-source income by a nonresident individual or company to a nonresident individual. Under such procedure, the income must be paid through an account specially opened by the recipient nonresident individual at a Ukrainian bank, which acts as a tax agent of the individual.

Income received in foreign currency is converted into Ukrainian currency at the exchange rate established by the National Bank of Ukraine on the date of accrual (receipt). The converted amount is then subject to tax at the same rates as income in Ukrainian currency. The exchange rate on 6 July 2021 was UAH27.2904 = USD1.

Military levy. Effective from 3 August 2014, a military levy of 1.5% is imposed on Ukrainian wages and similar compensation, as well as on lottery and gambling prizes. This levy was expected to be in effect until 1 January 2015. However, it is further extended for an indefinite term. In addition, the base for the levy is extended to any personal income (including foreign income) to which income tax applies.

Relief for losses. Loss carryforwards and carrybacks are not allowed, except for operations with investment assets.

B. Property tax

Property space that exceeds 60 square meters for an apartment, 120 square meters for a house or 180 square meters for various types of residential property, including all of its parts (in the case of simultaneous ownership of apartments and residential houses) is subject to property tax. Property tax may be established at a rate of up to 1.5% of a minimum salary (UAH90) per square meter of space. The local authorities establish the property tax rates, depending on the location.

If the taxpayer owns residential real estate and if the total area exceeds 300 square meters (for an apartment) and/or 500 square meters (for a house), the amount of real estate tax is increased by UAH25,000 annually for each such real estate object.

C. Social security

Locally paid salaries are subject to the unified social tax, borne by the employer at a flat rate of 22%. The base for the contributions is capped by the maximum monthly base (15 minimum salaries), which was UAH90,000 as of 1 January 2021.

The unified social tax is not payable on salaries paid from outside Ukraine by nonresident employers to their employees.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The tax year in Ukraine is the calendar year.

For most individuals, tax is payable through withholding at source of payment by a tax agent. The tax is withheld by the tax agents, which are entities that withhold and pay personal income tax on behalf of and at the expense of individual taxpayers in Ukraine. Ukrainian entities, including enterprises with foreign investment, must withhold income tax from the salaries of their employees.

The following individuals, among others, must file annual tax returns:

- Individuals who derive income that is taxable in Ukraine if a tax agent did not withhold income tax from such income
- Foreign individuals who obtained Ukrainian residence status in the reporting year

An individual may voluntarily file a tax return even if this is not required by law. An individual may want to voluntarily file a tax return to claim a tax refund or a tax discount.

An individual must file the annual income tax return before 1 May of the year following the reporting year. However, to claim a tax discount, an individual may file a tax return by 31 December of the year following the reporting year. Under the tax law, the deadline for the settlement of tax liability is 1 August of the year following the reporting year.

Tax residents who intend to leave Ukraine for permanent residence must file a departure tax return no later than two months before departure. After the liability is settled, the tax authorities issue a tax certificate, which must be presented by the individual to the Ukrainian Immigration Services when leaving Ukraine.

In Ukraine, for delinquent filing, the tax authorities may impose an administrative fine and financial sanctions of up to UAH476.

In addition, the tax authorities are monitoring the timing of tax payments very closely. The tax authorities impose late payment penalties of 0.03% of the tax due for each day of delay starting with the 91st day of non-payment. They also impose an additional fine of 5% of the tax due. This fine is increased to 10% if the payment delay exceeds 30 days.

Self-employed individuals and private entrepreneurs are subject to special tax filing and payment requirements, which differ from the above.

F. Temporary visas

Entry visas may be obtained from Ukrainian embassies or consular offices before arrival in Ukraine. Ukraine issues transit, short-term (for up to 90 days of stay in Ukraine in a 180-day period) and long-term (for those foreigners who submit the documents for work or living in Ukraine) visas.

Individuals may travel to Ukraine without visas if they are citizens of Albania, Andorra, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Bahrain, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Dominica, Ecuador, European Union (EU) member states, the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (SAR), Iceland, Israel, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Korea (South), Kuwait, Liechtenstein, Marshall Islands, Monaco, Mongolia, Montenegro, New Zealand, North Macedonia, Norway, Oman, Panama, Paraguay, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, St. Kitts and Nevis, San Marino, Serbia, Switzerland, Tajikistan, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates, the United States, the United Kingdom, Uruguay or Vatican City, and if the duration of the stay does not exceed 90 days in a 180-day period, with certain exceptions (up to 30 days in a 60-day period for citizens of Serbia; up to 30 days for citizens of Brunei Darussalam; up to 14 days for citizens of the Hong Kong SAR). Visitors from other jurisdictions need to obtain entry visas.

In a limited number of cases, foreign citizens can obtain visas on arrival, which are described below, at border check points at Boryspil and Odesa international airports.

The first type of visa referred to above is a single-entry short-term (C type) visa, which is valid for 15 days and is available to the following.

- Applicants who enter Ukraine for a diplomatic or official purpose on invitation of Ukraine's state authorities
- Applicants who enter Ukraine to render assistance in eliminating the aftermath of an emergency or accident in Ukraine
- Applicants who enter Ukraine for urgent medical treatment or participation in the burial of a close relative in Ukraine
- Pilots and other aircraft crew members carrying out international flights (based upon a pilot's license or a Flight Crew Member Certificate issued in line with the Convention on International Civil Aviation)

The second type of visa referred to above is a single-entry transit (B type) visa, which is valid for up to five days to crew members of foreign vessels staying in Ukraine's ports (based upon an extract from the shipboard list).

Starting from 1 January 2019, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs introduced an extended range of Ukraine's electronic visa (e-Visa) categories of travel to Ukraine for the purposes of business, private, tourism, medical treatment, cultural/scientific/educational/sport activities and foreign mass media staff visits. E-Visas may be issued to foreigners holding passports of the following specified jurisdictions.

Bahamas
Barbados
Belize
Bhutan
Bolivia
Cambodia
China Mainland
Costa Rica
Dominican Republic
El Salvador
Fiji
Grenada
Guatemala
Haiti
Honduras
India
Indonesia
Jamaica

E-Visas are issued as single-entry visas, which are valid for up to 30 days.

Citizens of the majority of member countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) do not need visas to enter Ukraine, with certain exceptions.

G. Work permits

To work in Ukraine (either based on a direct employment agreement or being assigned based on an agreement between a Ukrainian and a foreign legal entity), a foreign national must have a work permit. No comprehensive quota system exists in Ukraine with respect to the issuance of residence and work permits to most foreign nationals. Obtaining a work permit is a rather burdensome and time-consuming procedure.

The State Employment Center of the Ministry of Social Policy issues work permits, which are valid for a period of six months to three years and may be extended an unlimited number of times.

The local hosting entity of a foreign national must apply for a work permit with the local employment center and submit the following documents:

- An application
- Copies of passport pages bearing personal data
- One color matte photograph of 3.5 cm by 4.5 cm
- Copy of the draft employment agreement between the Ukrainian legal entity and the foreign national or the draft agreement between the Ukrainian and foreign entities

All documents issued in foreign countries and in foreign languages must be legalized, apostilled or notarized, depending on the country of issuance, before their translation into Ukrainian.

In addition, the procedure for obtaining a work permit varies depending on the category of the employee. The rules make a clear distinction between the lists of documents needed to obtain work permits for direct employees, secondees and intracorporate transferees (a specific category of secondees).

No special treatment is given to EU nationals. The application procedure is the same for all foreign nationals. The work permit application process may take up to two months.

A foreign national's work permit becomes invalid if the individual changes employers.

A work permit is a basis for issuing a Long-term Visa D (a special type of entry visa, which may be obtained for the purpose of engaging in employment in Ukraine). This type of visa is a multi-entry visa (which is issued for a purpose of obtaining a temporary residence permit in Ukraine; a foreign individual is allowed to stay in Ukraine up to 90 days for obtaining his or her temporary residence permit).

Self-employment. No law prohibits foreign nationals from establishing or managing businesses in Ukraine. However, restrictions on foreign investment are imposed in certain industry sectors, including defense. Business activities of foreign nationals must comply with either domestic law or international treaties entered into by Ukraine.

H. Residence visas/permits

Foreign citizens' passports are registered at the point of entry into Ukraine. Individuals can legally stay in Ukraine for a period of 90 days during a 180-day period or for the term of validity of the respective visa that is the basis for entry into Ukraine, unless otherwise provided under a relevant international agreement. A foreign citizen who remains in Ukraine longer than the valid registration period must apply for extension of the period of stay with the immigration service of Ukraine if sufficient grounds exist for such extension (for example, treatment, pregnancy or childbirth, caring for a sick family member, registration of heritage, applying for an immigration permit or Ukrainian citizenship, performance of the duties of a foreign correspondent or representative of the foreign mass media).

If a foreign citizen's employer has obtained a work permit for the individual, a temporary residence permit must be obtained from the Ukrainian immigration authorities in order for the foreign citizen to have a right to stay in Ukraine for the period of the work permit's validity (usually up to one year) and to travel freely to and from the country. An individual can begin the procedure for obtaining a temporary residence permit only if he or she obtains a D-type visa at a consular office outside Ukraine, with exceptions for certain CIS countries. Citizens of certain CIS countries (Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Georgia, Moldova, the Russian Federation and Uzbekistan) do not need to apply for the D-type visas and may obtain the temporary residence permits right after their work permits are obtained. Citizens of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Turkmenistan should apply for the D-type visas outside Ukraine.

A foreign citizen must submit the following documents with the Ukrainian immigration authorities:
- Application for a temporary residence permit
- Obligation from the employer (a document stating that in case of termination of the employment relationship with the foreign employee, the company has the obligation and takes responsibility for informing the Ukrainian immigration authorities of that fact)
- Notarized translation of the first page of the foreign citizen's passport
- Foreign citizen's original passport
- Foreign citizen's Ukrainian work permit
- Medical insurance certificate
- Receipt confirming payment of the statutory fee

The temporary residence permit application process may take up to 15 working days.

On obtaining a temporary residence permit, a foreign citizen should be registered at his or her place of residence in Ukraine.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The working spouse of a work permit holder does not automatically receive a work permit. An application must be filed independently. The spouse and children are allowed to stay in Ukraine under the family reunion grounds and accordingly obtain their own temporary residence permits (separately for spouse and for each child notwithstanding the age). Like the holder of the work permit, the D-type visa should be first obtained at a consular office outside Ukraine.

Marital property regime. A joint ownership regime applies to legally married couples in Ukraine. The regime is mandatory and applies to property acquired during marriage. Property owned by an individual before marriage, as well as property obtained during marriage by gift or inheritance, remains separate property. Separate property must be clearly identified when the couple first becomes subject to the joint ownership regime.

Although the law is silent on the marital domicile, Ukraine acknowledges marriages contracted in foreign countries. Consequently, the joint ownership rules are applied to couples married outside Ukraine who divorce under Ukrainian law.

Forced heirship. Under Ukrainian law, specified proportions of testamentary property are transferred to minor or disabled children or to a disabled spouse or parent, regardless of the contents of a will.

Driver's permits. If a foreign individual obtains a permanent residence permit, his or her driving license is valid only for the period of 60 days from the moment of issuance of the permanent residence permit. To obtain a local Ukraine driver's license, an applicant must pass a written examination, a medical test and a practical driving test.

A. Income tax

No personal taxation currently exists in the United Arab Emirates (UAE).

Laws covering corporate tax exist in all the individual emirates but, in practice, taxes are enforced only on the following entities:
- Foreign oil and gas producing companies (oil/hydrocarbon companies with actual production in the Emirates) at rates set forth in their government concession agreements (which are confidential)
- Branches of foreign banks at rates fixed by decree or in agreements with the Rulers of the Emirates where the banks operate

On 31 January 2022, the Ministry of Finance of the UAE confirmed that the UAE will introduce federal corporate tax (CT) for financial years starting on or after 1 June 2023.

The CT law has not yet been issued, but the Ministry of Finance has publicly communicated key elements of CT policy and design through a Frequently Asked Questions document.

CT will apply to all persons (individual and corporate) carrying out business activities under a commercial business license in the UAE.

The CT rates will be 0% for taxable income up to AED375,000, 9% for taxable income above AED375,000, and a "different tax rate" for large multinationals that meet specific criteria.

B. Other taxes

No capital gains tax is imposed in the UAE. Capital gains are taxed as part of regular business profits. The UAE does not impose net worth tax or estate and gift tax. Value-added tax at a rate of 5% was introduced in the UAE, effective from January 2018.

C. Social security

The UAE does not impose social security taxes on foreign nationals. UAE-national employees and nationals from the other Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) countries contribute to retirement and pension funds in accordance with specific regulations.

D. End-of-service benefits

In February 2022, a new Labor Law came into force in the UAE, introducing several changes, including updates on end-of-service benefits.

National employees are entitled to end-of-service benefits in accordance with the legislation regulating pensions and social securities.

End-of-service benefits for foreign employees is calculated in accordance with the rules discussed below.

A foreign employee who has completed a year or more of continuous service is entitled, at the end of his or her service, the following benefits calculated according to the basic wage:
- A wage of 21 days for each year of the first five years of service
- A wage of 30 days for each year exceeding such period

A foreign employee shall be entitled to a benefit for parts of the year in proportion to the period spent at work, provided that he or she completed one year of continuous service.

Unpaid days of absence from work are to be included in the calculation of the service term.

The end-of-service benefits are calculated according to the last basic wage of the employee.

The end-of-service benefits for foreign workers cannot exceed two years' wages.

The employer shall pay to the employee, within 14 days from the end date of the contract term, his or her wages and all other entitlements.

If the employee owes any money to the employer, the employer may deduct the amount from the employee's gratuity.

E. Wages Protection System

The UAE Ministry of Human Resources and Emiratisation requires all registered employers to use the Wages Protection System (WPS) for the transferring of wages to employees.

The WPS is an electronic salary transfer system that allows institutions to pay workers' wages through authorized banks, bureaux de change (currency exchanges) and financial institutions in the UAE. The UAE Central Bank regularly issues an updated list of financial institutions that are authorized to offer wage payment services through WPS agents. WPS enables the Ministry of Human Resources and Emiratisation to create and maintain a database of wage payments in the private sector.

In practice, this requirement is not enforced in all Free Zones in the UAE.

F. Temporary permits

All foreign nationals wishing to visit the UAE on business must have a valid visa status to enter the UAE, with the exception of nationals of GCC countries. Foreign nationals may enter the UAE for business purposes under a company-sponsored visit visa or free visa on arrival. In addition, transit visas of up to 96 hours are possible.

Passport holders from certain jurisdictions (see list below) do not need to apply for a visa in advance. On entry, they receive a free visa on arrival enabling them to stay in the UAE for an allowable period. The only documentation required for such individuals is their passport, which must have validity of six months.

A paid 14-day visa on arrival can be granted to Indian nationals who hold a visa status issued by the European Union (EU), the United Kingdom or the United States. The EU, UK or US visa must be valid for a minimum of six months at the time of arrival in the UAE.

Citizens of the following jurisdictions are granted a single-entry, 30-day free visa on arrival.

Andorra
Australia
Brunei Darussalam
Canada
China Mainland
Hong Kong SAR
Ireland
Japan
Kazakhstan
Macau SAR
Malaysia
Mauritius
Monaco
New Zealand
Russian Federation
San Marino
Singapore
Ukraine
United Kingdom
United States
Vatican City

Citizens of the following jurisdictions are granted a multiple-entry, 90-day free visa on arrival, which is valid for six months from the date of issuance, for a stay of a total of 90 days.

Argentina
Austria
Bahamas
Barbados
Belgium
Brazil
Bulgaria
Chile
Colombia
Costa Rica
Croatia
Cyprus
Czech Republic
Denmark
El Salvador
Estonia
Finland
France

Nauru
Netherlands
Norway
Peru
Poland
Portugal
Romania
Russian Federation
St. Vincent and the Grenadines
Serbia
Seychelles
Slovak Republic
Slovenia
Solomon Islands
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
Uruguay

Individuals holding Mexican passports are eligible for a multiple-entry 180-day visit visa, which is valid for 6 months from the date of issuance and for a stay of 180 days in total.

Business activities allowed under company-sponsored visit visas or free visas on arrival are generally restricted to training, conferences, meetings, seminars and similar activities. The above list may change slightly from time to time, and it is therefore suggested that applicability of the free visa on arrival be confirmed with the local UAE representation or chosen airline prior to travel. In addition, certain Free Zones require a temporary access pass to be provided by the host entity to the business visitor in addition to the company-sponsored visit visa or free visa on arrival. Some Free Zones allow limited work activities with such a temporary access pass, while in others it is used as a gate pass to the premises of the Free Zone.

G. Work and residence permits and self-employment

Companies wishing to sponsor foreign national employees must apply for employment residence permits for the individuals, unless they are eligible for a non-sponsored labor or Free Zone identification card. Companies must be eligible to sponsor foreign nationals and have available quota. For companies located in Mainland jurisdictions, the applications go through the Ministry of Human Resources and Emiratisation and the General Directorate of Residency and Foreigners Affairs (GDRFA). For companies located in Free Zone jurisdictions, the applications go through the Free Zone authority and the GDRFA.

The application by the sponsoring company must include, among others, the following documents:

- A copy of the prospective employee's passport
- Passport photos of the prospective employee
- A legalized university diploma (for professional roles)

The overall process for a UAE employment residence permit should take four to six weeks. In Free Zone and Mainland jurisdictions, work can begin when the employment residence permit is stamped within the employee's passport.

If a company wants to hire a GCC national or a woman who is sponsored under her husband's or father's sponsorship, it can seek a non-sponsored labor identification card for the individual. This is an alternative way for an individual to become authorized to perform work-related activities, without the need of sponsoring the individual's UAE employment residence permit. As of recently in the UAE Mainland jurisdictions, this option is also available to non-GCC male employees.

Individuals who want to pursue self-employment, establish a business, invest in property or set up a foreign subsidiary in the UAE should seek analysis and advice on a case-by-case basis.

H. Family members

Residence permits are granted to dependents of foreign nationals who have residence permits sponsored by a UAE company and who satisfy certain income and status conditions. The foreign national is considered the sponsor.

Dependents of a holder of a residence permit do not automatically receive a residence permit. The sponsor must file an application independently.

On 23 June 2016, the United Kingdom (UK) voted in a referendum to leave the European Union (EU). The UK/EU Withdrawal Agreement (WA) (and equivalents with the European Economic Area [EEA] and Switzerland) protected or grandfathered certain rights of citizens (and other persons covered) built up before 31 December 2020 beyond that date. In the absence of a new deal, various social security provisions enjoyed between the UK and the EU/EEA and Switzerland would disappear for many individuals who entered into a cross-border activity between the UK and the EU/EEA and Switzerland from 1 January 2021.

On 24 December 2020, the UK and EU reached a Trade and Cooperation Agreement (TCA) covering various issues, including trade rules, fishing rights, legal provisions and, importantly, various elements of social security coordination. These provisions were finally signed off in April 2021 and will remain in force for at least 15 years unless renegotiated in the interim.

In the new TCA, there are clear parallels with the old social security regulations in certain areas, but the agreement is not as all-encompassing as the old regulations. For example, certain provisions on coverage for longer-term assignments of more than 24 months are not carried forward, but state old-age pension totalization provisions are carried forward.

The UK leaving the EU will still significantly change the social security landscape for certain mobile workers (and their families), both UK residents working within the EU and EU residents working in the UK, if the activity begins on or after 1 January 2021. This could lead to increased social security costs and compliance obligations for employers, together with implications for employees in relation to accessing and entitlement to public health care and benefits. Please see Section C for further information.

From a personal tax perspective, the exit should have little impact on the operation of the UK personal tax and withholding regime on employment income because currently the interactions between the different EU states' personal income tax regimes are governed by international tax treaties with the individual countries, and these treaties continue to be in force.

What we do know is that grandfathering of pre-2020 social security rights will still continue into 2021 by virtue of the WA and potentially beyond that, as long as that activity continues without interruption. At present there is not total clarity across the EU/EEA and Switzerland as to how the WA will be applied, but HMRC (in its publications) appears to want to apply the WA quite widely and wherever possible will consider its application.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. The taxation of individuals in the UK is determined by residence and domicile status. The UK applies a comprehensive statutory residence test (SRT) to determine whether an individual is resident in the UK. The SRT has rules that determine whether someone is one of the following:

- Conclusively UK nonresident
- Conclusively UK resident
- Subject to the "sufficient ties" tests to determine their UK residence status

Residents. Tax residents are liable to UK tax on their worldwide income. However, individuals who are regarded as not domiciled in the UK (see Domicile) may not be liable to UK tax on offshore income and capital gains if the funds are not remitted to the UK (this is known as the "remittance basis").

Individuals wanting to be taxed on the remittance basis must, in most cases, make a claim each year. For further details regarding the remittance basis, see Remittance basis.

Nonresidents. Nonresidents are subject to tax on their UK-source income, such as compensation attributable to UK workdays and certain UK-source investment income. Under the SRT, an individual who has been nonresident for UK tax purposes throughout the preceding three UK tax years is generally regarded as conclusively nonresident if he or she spends no more than 45 days in the UK in any UK tax year. Other tests may also apply under which a taxpayer is regarded as conclusively nonresident, the most common of which is the test applying to an individual who meets the conditions for "full-time work abroad" (FTWA) during the tax year. This term has a statutory definition under the SRT and is very different from the previous practice.

UK residence. Employees leaving the UK most commonly cease to be UK tax resident by virtue of FTWA. FTWA, as defined under SRT, requires individuals to work for a minimum of 35 hours per week under one or more contracts of employment and/or self-employment (the methodology for calculating the hours per week is set out in the legislation) for the relevant tax year. It also places a limit on the number of days (maximum of 90 per UK tax year) and workdays (maximum of 30 per UK tax year) that an individual may spend in the UK and still be regarded as FTWA for the tax year concerned. It is also possible to be conclusively nonresident by spending no more than a de minimis number of days in the UK in a tax year (15 days if the individual has been resident in any of the previous 3 tax years and 45 days if he or she has been nonresident throughout that period). Separate automatic nonresidence rules may apply if the taxpayer dies in the tax year.

An individual coming to the UK is likely to be regarded as conclusively UK resident if he or she does not meet any conditions to be regarded as conclusively UK nonresident (see above) and satisfies any of the following conditions:
• He or she spends at least 183 days in the UK in the UK tax year.
• He or she works sufficient hours (at least 35 hours per week on average) in the UK, assessed over a 365-day period, with more than 75% of his or her workdays being UK workdays (full-time working in the UK, or FTWUK).
• He or she has his or her only home or all his or her homes in the UK, for a period of at least 91 consecutive days, and at least 30 days of the 91-day period fall in the UK tax year concerned.
• He or she meets the sufficient ties test.

Particular rules apply to individuals who have relevant jobs in international transport, such as air crew. These rules exclude them from the FTWA and FTWUK tests.

For an individual who is neither conclusively resident, nor conclusively nonresident, a sufficient ties test applies under the SRT. The sufficient ties test looks at the number of connection factors (ties) that the individual has with the UK and the number of days spent in the UK. Five possible ties can apply to determine the extent of the individual's connection to the UK; the more ties that an individual has, the fewer days he or she may spend in the UK in a tax year without becoming UK tax resident. The following are the five possible ties that an individual may have:
• He or she has a UK substantive employment (at least 40 UK workdays, as defined).
• He or she has UK accommodation (as defined).
• He or she has more than 90 days present in the UK in either of the preceding two UK tax years.
• He or she has UK-resident family (spouse, civil partner or minor children).
• He or she has been UK tax resident in any one or more of the three preceding UK tax years and has not spent more days in any single country than he or she has spent in the UK.

After the number of ties is determined, this is compared with the number of days of presence in the UK. For example, under the sufficient ties test, an individual who has not been tax resident in the UK in any one of the preceding three tax years does not become a UK resident in the following circumstances:

- He or she is present up to 120 days in the UK and has no more than two ties.
- He or she is present up to 90 days in the UK and has no more than three ties.

Complex statutory definitions apply in all cases. For example, a day is usually counted as a day of presence if the individual is in the UK at midnight, but an additional anti-avoidance rule can also apply if the individual has three UK ties, has been UK tax resident during any of the preceding three UK tax years and has more than 30 days in the UK when he or she is in the UK during the day but absent at midnight (see Days present in the UK). A UK workday is defined as a day on which more than three hours of work is undertaken in the UK and includes both training and traveling undertaken in the performance of employment duties.

Overseas workday relief. For UK tax residents who are non-domiciled, overseas workday relief may be available on their employment income when they first become resident if they have been nonresident for UK tax purposes throughout the preceding three UK tax years, if the remittance basis is claimed and if the remuneration related to those overseas workdays is both paid and retained offshore (for further details, see Remittance basis). If overseas workday relief applies, the income relating to the overseas workdays is excluded from UK taxation so long as it is not brought to the UK.

Overseas workday relief is likely to apply to the UK tax year in which the individual first becomes UK tax resident and to the two subsequent UK tax years. The law does not prevent an individual from being entitled to overseas workday relief on several different assignments to the UK. However, unless he or she is nonresident in the UK for at least three full UK tax years between assignments, the period over which relief may be claimed is likely to be restricted.

Split-year position. In principle, residence is determined for a tax year as a whole, but under the SRT a taxpayer who is UK tax resident may be eligible for split-year treatment in certain circumstances. If the conditions are met, non-UK income and gains of the overseas part of the UK tax year concerned are generally not subject to UK tax. An individual arriving in the UK who would otherwise be UK tax resident all year may qualify for split-year treatment in any of the following five circumstances:

- The individual starts to have his or her only home in the UK.
- He or she starts to work full time in the UK.
- He or she returns from working full time abroad, having been UK tax resident in one or more of the four tax years immediately preceding the previous UK tax year.
- He or she is an accompanying spouse or civil partner of someone who is returning from working full time abroad, as described above.
- He or she starts to have a home in the UK and did not previously have a UK home.

If more than one of the above circumstances applies, an ordering rule typically applies the test that minimizes the overseas part of the tax year and begins taxation as a UK resident from the earliest possible date.

In addition, in any of the following three sets of circumstances, someone leaving the UK may qualify for split-year treatment:
• The individual leaves the UK for FTWA.
• He or she is an accompanying spouse of someone who is leaving the UK for FTWA.
• He or she is leaving the UK permanently and will not have a home in the UK after departure.

If more than one of the above circumstances applies, the date of the beginning of the overseas part of the tax year is determined in the following order of priority:
• FTWA
• Accompanying spouse rule
• Test based on ceasing to have a UK home

Individuals may also need to look at their residence position for the previous and subsequent tax years as part of the split-year conditions. Consequently, professional advice should be obtained if relevant.

Domicile. Under English law, an individual's domicile is the country considered to be his or her permanent home, even though he or she may be currently resident in another country. It may be a domicile of origin, choice or dependency. Under English law, every person is born with a domicile of origin, which is normally that of his or her father. A domicile of origin has great tenacity. Consequently, individuals who were never domiciled in the UK and who work there for limited periods normally have no difficulty in proving that they are not domiciled in the UK.

Effective from 6 April 2017, individuals who are non-UK domiciled are deemed to have a UK domicile for income tax purposes if they have been resident in the UK for at least 15 out of the 20 tax years immediately preceding the current tax year. In addition, if an individual with a UK domicile of origin had acquired a non-UK domicile of choice, it was possible for him or her to maintain that non-UK domicile of choice in the event that he or she returned to the UK for a limited period. Effective from 6 April 2017, such individuals are deemed to be domiciled in the UK from the date on which they return. If such individuals returned to the UK before 6 April 2017, they are deemed domiciled in the UK from that date.

Domicile status affects how an individual's offshore income and/or capital gains are taxed. A non-UK-domiciled individual can have his or her offshore income and/or offshore capital gains taxed on either of the following bases:
• Remittance basis
• Arising basis

An individual who is taxable on the arising basis is subject to UK tax on his or her worldwide income and capital gains, regardless of where they arise. For further details regarding the remittance basis, see Remittance basis.

Days present in the UK. Any day on which the individual is present in the UK at midnight is considered a full day of presence in the UK for residence purposes. Days in transit may be excluded from the count if the individual does not perform any activities in the UK that are unrelated to the transit. In some cases, up to 60 days that were spent in the UK as a result of exceptional circumstances that were not anticipated and were outside the taxpayer's control may be disregarded in calculating total days of presence.

An anti-avoidance rule applies to taxpayers who have three or more ties under the SRT and who were UK tax resident in at least one of the preceding three UK tax years. If an individual spends more than 30 days in the UK on which the individual is not also present in the UK at midnight, each subsequent day spent in the UK (above 30) for which the taxpayer is absent at midnight is counted as a day of UK presence for all of the day-count tests applied under the SRT. However, this anti-avoidance rule does not apply to individuals who meet the criteria for FTWA (see above).

Remittance basis. Non-UK domiciled but UK resident individuals can claim the remittance basis of taxation. An individual who is taxed on the remittance basis can potentially keep certain of his or her foreign income and gains outside the scope of UK tax by having them paid offshore and not subsequently remitting them to or enjoying them in the UK. "Remittance" is widely defined to include direct and indirect remittances, and professional advice should be taken as necessary to determine when the remittance basis may be claimed.

The default position is that nearly all residents are subject to UK tax on worldwide income and gains (known as the "arising basis"). Individuals who qualify and wish to be taxed on the remittance basis must normally claim to be taxed on this basis. Individuals who claim the remittance basis lose the tax-free personal tax allowance for income tax (in any event, this allowance is subject to phaseout for individuals with income in excess of GBP100,000 in the tax year; see Personal allowance) and also lose the annual exemption for capital gains tax (CGT) for that tax year. In addition, individuals who have been resident in at least seven of the preceding nine UK tax years must pay an additional remittance basis charge (RBC) of GBP30,000 for each year for which the claim to be taxed on the remittance basis is made. The charge is increased to GBP60,000 for individuals who have been resident in the UK in at least 12 of the preceding 14 UK tax years. Individuals resident in the UK in at least 15 of the preceding 20 UK tax years are no longer able to access the remittance basis.

However, the remittance basis currently applies without a formal claim if non-domiciled residents satisfy the following de minimis conditions:
- Their total unremitted offshore income and gains in the UK tax year amount to less than GBP2,000 (if a taxpayer is eligible for split-year treatment, this limit applies to the UK-resident part of the tax year only, so that any unremitted offshore income and gains for the overseas part of the tax year are ignored; only income and gains related to the UK part of the split tax year count toward the GBP2,000 limit).
- They have not made any remittances of "relevant income or gains" to the UK, have been resident in the UK in no more than six out of the preceding nine UK tax years (or they are under 18 throughout the tax year), and their only UK-source income is investment income that has been taxed at source of no more than GBP100.

"Relevant income or gains" are the individual's foreign income and gains for that tax year as well as foreign income and gains for every previous tax year to which the remittance basis applied.

If the remittance basis applies without a formal claim, the individual does not lose the tax-free personal tax allowance for income tax (assuming his or her gross income is below the phaseout level; see Personal allowance) or the annual exemption for CGT for that tax year.

Income and gains that may be taxed on the remittance basis include the following:

- Earnings paid outside the UK and attributable to workdays outside the UK if the individuals are eligible to claim overseas workday relief (see Overseas workday relief)
- Earnings from a separate employment with a non-UK-resident employer if the duties are performed wholly outside the UK (however, under an anti-avoidance law, remuneration from many such contracts are typically taxed on the arising basis instead)
- Most common forms of investment income arising from assets or funds based outside the UK
- Capital gains arising from the disposal of assets located outside the UK

Organizing bank accounts. If the remittance basis applies, special rules identify the source of funds remitted to the UK in a specific order from a so-called "mixed fund." A "mixed fund" is a fund that contains monies from different sources, such as employment income, investment income, capital gains and "clean capital," or income or gains of more than one UK tax year. If monies are remitted to the UK, the following order applies in determining what has been brought to the UK:

- Employment income that has already been taxed in the UK
- General foreign earnings (for example, earnings relating to overseas workdays) that have not been subject to foreign taxes
- Specific foreign employment income (such as income derived from certain share incentives) that has not been subject to foreign taxes
- Foreign-investment income that has not been subject to foreign tax
- Foreign chargeable gains that have not been subject to foreign tax
- Employment income that has been subject to foreign tax
- Foreign-investment income that has been subject to foreign tax
- Foreign chargeable gains that have been subject to foreign tax
- Income or capital (including income or capital already taxed in the UK) not contained in the above categories, including underlying capital, such as preresidence earnings, investment income and capital gains

If possible, offshore accounts containing segregated funds (for example a separate account to hold proceeds from the disposal of assets chargeable to CGT) should be organized to avoid the complications of the mixed fund rules.

A taxpayer can nominate a particular offshore account that meets certain conditions to be a "qualifying mixed fund account," which simplifies the calculation of overseas workday relief. To qualify, the types of income that the account may contain are restricted. Although the account may be held in joint names, only one of the account holders may contribute to it. Accounts that do not contain current year employment income that is a mixture of UK-source earnings and earnings that are eligible for overseas workday relief are not eligible for nomination. A taxpayer may have only one nominated bank account at one time and details of that nominated account must be provided to HMRC.

For most bank accounts, an analysis of what has been brought to the UK with each remittance must be made on a transaction-by-transaction basis. For nominated bank accounts only, the analysis may be undertaken at the end of the UK tax year on the basis of cumulative figures for the year if all of the necessary conditions are met.

As a result of the complexities of the remittance basis and the mixed fund rules, and the potential interaction with double tax treaties, professional advice should be sought from the outset.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. An employee is prima facie taxed on all remuneration and benefits from employment received during a tax year. The UK tax year ends on 5 April. An employee is taxable not only on basic salary but also on most perquisites or benefits in kind, including company cars, meals, accommodation, tuition for dependent children, medical insurance premiums and imputed interest on loans below market rates. Employer-paid education expenses for employees and life insurance premiums may be taxable in certain circumstances. Education allowances provided by employers to their expatriate and local employees' children are chargeable to income tax and social security. However, contributions by an employer to a UK-registered pension scheme are normally not taxed if prescribed limits are not exceeded (see Pensions).

All salaries, fees and benefits in kind earned by directors are taxable as employment income. Individuals who are resident are taxed on their worldwide employment income. However, non-UK-domiciled individuals may be taxed on the remittance basis if they elect to be taxed on the remittance basis or if the remittance basis applies without a claim (see Remittance basis). As a result, remuneration for duties performed outside the UK, such as income relating to overseas workdays, may potentially escape UK tax altogether if it is paid offshore and not subsequently remitted to or enjoyed in the UK. However, as explained above, overseas workday relief is only normally available for the UK tax year in which tax residence is established and the two subsequent UK tax years. Earnings derived by non-UK-domiciled individuals from UK duties are taxable in the UK regardless of whether the arising or remittance basis applies.

Remuneration from certain specific employment contracts for non-domiciled individuals with non-UK employers under which no duties of the employment are performed in the UK may also be taxable on the remittance basis, but following the reform of the related law, effective from 6 April 2014, additional conditions must be met, which means that income from such contracts is much more likely to be taxable as it arises.

Individuals who are resident are taxed on their employment income for the year. However, some individuals may qualify for “split-year” treatment under which the employment income relating to periods before and after their UK employment and assignment can be excluded from UK taxation if certain conditions are met (see Split-year position).

Individuals who are nonresident in the UK are taxed on their earnings from UK employment duties only.

If employment income that is earned during a period of UK residence is paid when the individual is nonresident, the employment income remains taxable as though the individual is resident. It is the resident status of the employee when the individual earns the income that determines the taxability of the earnings and not the residence status of the employee at the time of payment unless HMRC has specifically agreed to the use of an alternative “cash basis” for tax-equalized employees.

If all of the conditions are satisfied, a double tax treaty may grant an exemption to exclude certain types of employment income from UK taxation for employees who are resident in another contracting state for the purpose of the treaty (see Section E).

Tax is normally deducted from employment income at source under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system (see Section D).

Self-employment income. Self-employment income includes income from a trade, profession or vocation. Whether a person is considered to be employed or self-employed is determined by the individual’s particular circumstances and as a matter of fact.

Tax is charged on the profits or gains of trades, professions and vocations carried out wholly or partly in the UK by UK residents. A nonresident individual is charged on any business exercised in the UK, or on the part of the trade carried on in the UK if the trade is carried on partly in the UK and partly overseas. A business carried out wholly overseas by a UK-resident individual is regarded as foreign income and, consequently, may be taxed on the remittance basis if the individual is eligible and claims the remittance basis.

For tax purposes, profits are usually determined in accordance with normal accounting principles, but adjustments may be necessary.

A self-assessment system applies, which means that self-employed individuals are generally taxed on the business profits earned during an accounting period ending in the current tax year.

From 6 April 2017, a GBP1,000 trading allowance is available. If the allowance covers all the trading income before expenses, the income is not taxable and not reportable. If this is not the case, the individual has the option of deducting his or her expenses or using the allowance. The allowance cannot be claimed by partnerships and cannot be claimed if rent-a-room relief is claimed.

Investment income. For tax years up to and including the 2015-16 tax year (ended 5 April 2016), income from most investments in the UK was received after tax was withheld or paid at source wholly or in part. Effective from 6 April 2016, a new regime applies.

For UK dividends, the tax credit regime that previously applied has also been abolished, effective from 6 April 2016. Instead, taxpayers are potentially entitled to a dividend allowance of up to GBP2,000 (GBP5,000 before 1 April 2017), so that up to the first GBP2,000 of dividend income received in the tax year is effectively taxed at 0%. For dividends in excess of the allowance, the following rates apply:
• 7.5% for basic rate taxpayers
• 32.5% for higher rate taxpayers
• 38.1% for additional rate taxpayers

Although the first GBP2,000 of dividend income is tax-free, it is still taken into account in determining the taxpayer's marginal tax rate and any entitlement to the personal savings allowance, as explained below.

Effective from 6 April 2016, a new personal savings allowance applies for other investment income such as bank interest.

UK banks and building societies are no longer required to deduct basic rate tax at source from any interest income paid by them. The personal savings allowance is set at GBP1,000 for basic rate taxpayers and GBP500 for higher rate taxpayers. It is not a deduction from taxable income, but it is effectively an amount of savings income that may be taxed at 0%. Additional rate taxpayers (individuals with taxable income in excess of GBP150,000) are not entitled to a savings allowance.

Investment income in excess of the savings allowance is subject to income tax at the taxpayer's marginal tax rate. See Rates for further details.

Any income from UK leased property is taxed as income at the applicable marginal rate of the taxpayer (see Rates). Leasing agents for nonresident landlords should withhold the basic tax rate of 20%, unless HMRC issues a direction to them authorizing gross payment to the landlord. Income tax on property income is charged on the net profit from rentals after deduction of qualifying expenses, such as repairs and maintenance but not depreciation, which is not a qualifying expense for UK tax purposes. Mortgage interest paid in prior years was a fully deductible expense, but this deduction is being phased out over three UK tax years, starting from 6 April 2017, so that from 6 April 2020, it is no longer deductible. An alternative deduction that will be limited to a maximum of basic rate tax relief on the disallowed mortgage interest will apply instead.

The net profit is calculated in accordance with UK rules even if the rental income arises from foreign leased property and is taxed on the remittance basis. A deduction may be claimed instead for actual expenditure on replacement of furniture and fittings used in a property income business.

A GBP1,000 property allowance is available. If the allowance covers all the property income before expenses, the income is not taxable and not reportable. If this is not the case, the individual has the choice of deducting his or her expenses or the allowance.

UK domiciled and resident individuals are usually liable to UK tax on their worldwide investment income.

Nonresident individuals are liable to UK tax on their investment income from UK sources only, regardless of their domicile status.

Individuals who are not domiciled but are resident in the UK are also usually liable to UK tax on investment income from UK sources. However, they may claim to have their investment income from any non-UK-source income taxed on the remittance basis so that they are taxed on their investment income from any non-UK sources only to the extent that it is remitted to or enjoyed in the UK.

If all the conditions are satisfied, a double tax treaty may grant an exemption to exclude certain types of investment income from UK taxation for individuals who are resident in the other contracting state for purposes of the treaty (see Section E).

Stock options and share-based incentive schemes. Detailed, complicated legislation applies to the taxation of share incentives provided to employees by their employers. The legislation applies to "securities," which includes, but is not limited to, shares in the employer company. The application depends on the specific plan rules. As a result, professional advice should be taken on the tax and legal implications in any particular case. The following discussion is for general guidance only.

The UK introduced reforms of the law that governs the taxation of certain equity-based compensation for internationally mobile employees, which took effect on 6 April 2015. This new regime applies to all chargeable events, including awards vesting or being exercised, occurring on or after 6 April 2015 and generally seeks to tax the proportion of any award attributable to periods of UK tax residence, together with any amounts attributable to UK work during periods of nonresidence. The regime described below applies to all awards if the taxable event occurs on or after 6 April 2015, regardless of the original date of grant.

Unapproved employee share option schemes and restricted stock units. Unapproved employee share options are not taxed on grant, but when the chargeable event occurs. This is usually when the option is exercised but may include other events, such as the settlement in cash of the option by the employer, rather than the exercise of the option to acquire shares.

Any rights to acquire securities are now likely to be taxed as employment-related securities options on exercise of the option or, for other rights to acquire, such as restricted stock units, when the employee becomes entitled to the award. The UK taxable proportion of the award is calculated by allocating the award to the UK tax years over which it was earned and apportioning the income by tax year between UK and non-UK elements. Any parts that are not attributable either to periods of UK residence or to UK workdays are excluded from UK tax. If employees are entitled to overseas workday relief, they may also be eligible for a form of overseas workday relief with respect to their overseas workdays during UK-resident periods. It may also be possible to rely on a double tax treaty to limit the UK's right to tax amounts attributable to non-UK duties if the employee is treaty nonresident in the UK at the time of the chargeable event.

The employer must withhold income tax on chargeable events, such as exercise, if the underlying securities are considered to be Readily Convertible Assets for UK tax purposes, via the PAYE system.

The social security position is more complex. However, if relevant and for employees who are within the scope of UK social security, it is possible for employers to enter into agreements with their employees to pass on the secondary (or employer's) social security liability to the employee. Under the agreement, the employee pays any employer-owed social security contributions due on the exercise of the option; the employee may then deduct the contributions paid when calculating the amount of the gain liable to UK income tax.

If awards of shares are made, rather than share options, the value of the shares awarded to an employee is usually subject to income tax and social security contributions (if applicable) on the date of the award. The position may be more complex if shares are restricted, such as being at risk of forfeiture. If shares are at risk of forfeiture, the liability is usually deferred until the restrictions lift, assuming this happens within five years of the grant. Employers and employees can instead jointly make elections so that the taxes on the award are charged up front on the value ignoring the restrictions. This is an extremely complex area, and professional advice should be obtained in all cases.

For the purpose of any treaty apportionment, share-option income is typically sourced from grant to vesting, assuming that the individual remains in employment with a group company throughout this period. By exception, the UK continues to apply a grant-to-exercise sourcing period for gains under its treaties with Japan and the United States.

In all the above cases, the law is complex, and professional advice should be obtained. An apprenticeship levy is also potentially payable. See Apprentice levy in Section B.

Tax-advantaged employee share schemes. The UK currently has several employee share schemes that can have tax-advantaged status. Income from tax-advantaged schemes that is realized in an approved manner is usually not subject to income tax or to National Insurance contributions. Tax-advantaged plans include, among others, the Company Share Option Plan (CSOP), the Save As You Earn (SAYE) Share Option Scheme, the Share Incentive Plan (SIP; formerly the All Employee Share Ownership Plan) and the Enterprise Management Incentives (EMI). Each plan has different characteristics and is consequently relevant to particular employer and employee circumstances. The advantage of these schemes over unapproved schemes is that they generally put shares into the hands of employees free of income tax and National Insurance. A disadvantage is that the value of awards that may be made to employees is limited.

CGT on employee share schemes. CGT may be due if the shares acquired from employee share schemes are sold and if the employee is within scope of CGT at the time (broadly, if he or she is resident or only temporarily nonresident). In general, the underlying shares acquired from tax-advantaged schemes are still subject to capital gains tax when they are sold. However, shares in a Share Incentive Plan subject to a minimum holding period may be exempt from UK CGT on disposal.

For shares acquired from the exercise of options, the base cost of the shares sold for UK capital gains tax purposes is increased by the amount of any income that was subject to UK income tax at exercise. More complex base cost rules apply if employees hold shares acquired by them on different dates at different prices.

The employer does not have any withholding obligation with respect to CGT.

Annual filing. Any plans under which awards of securities are made to employees should be registered with HMRC by the relevant employer. Annual reports must also be filed by 6 July following the end of the relevant UK tax year (for example, by 6 July 2021 for the 2020-21 tax year) to report all reportable events: in the UK tax year, including, but not limited to, the acquisition of shares or the exercise of share options. It is noteworthy that nil returns must be filed if awards remain outstanding, but no reportable events occur in the year. Plans must be deregistered once completed.

Pensions. In terms of UK tax treatment, pension schemes may broadly be divided into the following three groups:
- UK registered pension plans and international equivalents
- Unapproved (for UK-tax) pension schemes
- Wholly unfunded schemes

UK-registered plans. No limit is imposed on the absolute amount that may be contributed to UK-registered pension schemes, but an annual allowance charge applies to restrict the tax relief available if the contributions or increase in accrual in the pension input period (PIP) ending in a tax year exceeds the permitted annual allowance. For UK-registered schemes, it was possible for tax years up to and including the 2015-16 tax year for the PIP to end on a chosen date, nominated by the pension scheme administrator (or in the case of money purchase arrangements only, either the pension scheme administrator or the individual scheme member). For the 2016-17 tax year (beginning 6 April 2016) and future years, all PIPs are aligned with the UK tax year. To align PIPs with tax years, a transitional rule applied for the 2015-16 tax year, which for annual allowance purposes only, split the tax year into two separate periods before and after 8 July 2015.

Pension inputs are determined for a defined contribution scheme by adding together any employer and employee contributions and, for a defined benefit scheme, by multiplying the inflation-adjusted increase in the accrued annual pension value over the course of the PIP (which from 6 April 2016 is the tax year) by a factor of 16 (plus the increase in any separate lump-sum entitlement) to arrive at the value by which the fund is deemed to have increased over that period. The total of the pension inputs to all relevant pension schemes for a particular individual is measured against his or her annual allowance for the relevant tax year, and any excess is subject to an annual allowance charge at his or her marginal income tax rate.

Effective from 6 April 2011, the annual allowance was limited to GBP50,000. However, this was decreased to GBP40,000, effective from 6 April 2014. For the purposes of the 2015-16 tax year transitional rule, the annual allowance was GBP80,000 for pension inputs falling into the pre-8 July 2015 period and, to the extent that the full GBP80,000 was not used, a maximum of GBP40,000 could be carried forward and used in the post-8 July 2015 period. Effective from 6 April 2016, a further restriction applies so that for most persons with UK taxable income and pension inputs (as adjusted) of at least GBP150,000 (this was increased to GBP240,000 from 6 April 2020), the annual allowance is reduced by GBP1 for every GBP2 over the income limit, subject to a minimum allowance of GBP10,000 (this was reduced to GBP4,000 from 6 April 2020). Therefore, the minimum annual allowance is currently EUR4,000. Any unused annual allowances from the preceding three UK tax years may be carried forward to offset any excess pension inputs in the current tax year.

An overall limit is imposed on the maximum amount that may be saved tax efficiently over a lifetime, known as the lifetime allowance. For the 2011–12 tax year, this was set at GBP1,800,000. However, it was reduced to GBP1,500,000, effective from 6 April 2012, and was reduced further to GBP1,250,000, effective from 6 April 2014. Effective from 6 April 2016, it is further reduced to GBP1 million. Since the 2018-19 tax year, the standard lifetime allowance has been increased annually from GBP1 million in line with UK inflation. It was GBP1,030,000 for the 2018-19 tax year, GBP1,055,000 for the 2019-20 tax year and GBP1,073,100 for the 2020-21 tax year (and has since remained at that level). In the UK Budget 2021, the government announced that the current standard lifetime allowance limit of EUR1,073,100 will be frozen until April 2026 without any inflationary increases. The level of pension saving is tested against the individual's available lifetime allowance if a benefit crystallization event occurs, such as the individual beginning to draw a pension, and a lifetime allowance charge is levied if the lifetime allowance is exceeded. Some individuals may have a lifetime allowance higher than the standard lifetime allowance.

International equivalents. Non-UK schemes that the UK law regards as being like a UK scheme are subject to a similar regime to the one described above, but with slightly different rules. For example, for non-UK schemes, by law, the PIP has always been the UK tax year. The following four types of schemes may fall within this group:

- Schemes for which Migrant Member Relief (MMR) has been claimed.
- Schemes for which transitional corresponding acceptance (TCR) has been claimed.
- Schemes for which tax relief on contributions has been claimed under an appropriate double tax treaty.
- Overseas pension schemes (as defined) with employer contributions that are not taxable on the employee because the scheme provides only death and retirement benefits. In very broad terms, an overseas pension scheme is usually one that is subject to a system of regulation and tax recognition in the country in which it is established and that is open to local residents in that country.

For schemes for which relief is available under MMR, TCR or a double tax treaty, employer contributions are also usually deductible for corporation tax purposes. However, for the employee personally, tax relief for total pension inputs are subject to the annual allowance and lifetime allowance limits described above. In addition, if after leaving the UK and not having been nonresident for a period of 10 complete UK tax years (or 5 complete UK tax years in the case of funds for which UK relief was claimed before 6 April 2017), an individual who has had UK tax relief takes benefits from his or her pension scheme in a form that would not be permitted for a UK-registered pension scheme (including taking any form of loan or making a transfer to another non-UK scheme that is not a qualifying scheme for UK tax purposes); a 55% unauthorized payment charge applies to an amount up to the amount of the total UK tax-relieved funds in the scheme.

Other pension schemes. Other schemes that are not UK-registered schemes and that are not schemes to which any of the reliefs for international equivalents are available are typically subject to tax under the UK's "disguised remuneration" regime, unless they can be shown to be wholly unfunded. This usually means that if any contributions made to such a scheme are with respect to, or otherwise earmarked for, an employee, the employee must be taxed on the contributions through PAYE at the time of contribution. For a funded defined benefit scheme, the employee is taxed on the value of the accrued benefit (unless the scheme provides only death and retirement benefits), but normally this tax charge is not subject to PAYE withholding.

Wholly unfunded schemes. Wholly unfunded schemes are usually outside the disguised remuneration rules but there are certain anti-avoidance provisions that could apply depending on the specifics of the scheme. It is noteworthy that an extended definition of funding for this purpose is provided. Under this definition, if, for example, the employer provides an asset as security for the scheme or if the employer makes any form of promise or undertaking to provide funding to a third party in the future, this is subject to UK tax, with PAYE withholding, in the same way as if the scheme was funded immediately.

Benefits paid from pension schemes for which an employee has had contributions or has accrued entitlement during a period when he or she was a UK resident or was performing duties in the UK is likely to be subject to UK tax, often with a corresponding PAYE withholding obligation for the employer or UK host employer. These UK tax charges might be blocked by the pensions article of a double tax treaty in some cases, but this does not automatically remove the employer's PAYE withholding obligation unless the pension scheme member obtains clearance in advance from the UK tax authorities.

The law with respect to pension schemes in the UK is extremely complex. As a result, specific advice should be obtained in all cases.

Capital gains tax. An individual who is resident and domiciled or deemed to be domiciled in the UK is taxed on gains arising on disposals of assets located anywhere in the world. However, an individual who is resident but not domiciled in the UK and who elects to be taxed on the remittance basis for that year is taxed on disposals of overseas assets only if the proceeds are remitted to the UK (see Remittance basis in Section A). In this case, the gain element of the sale proceeds is regarded as being remitted ahead of the capital. All individuals who are subject to UK capital gains tax (CGT) are entitled to an annual CGT exemption, but this is lost if the remittance basis is claimed.

From 6 April 2020, when a UK resident disposes of UK land and a CGT liability arises, a return should be made and the CGT tax paid within 30 days after completion of the disposal.

An individual who is nonresident is not normally subject to UK CGT (however, see Years of departure and arrival, and temporary nonresidence rule and Disposal of UK residential property by nonresidents).

Years of departure and arrival, and temporary nonresidence rule. Effective from 6 April 2013, individuals who leave the UK during the year, who are considered resident before departure and who qualify for split-year treatment under the SRT are not normally chargeable to CGT on gains realized in the nonresident part of the tax year. However, individuals who, on departure, had been resident in the UK for four out of seven of the preceding UK tax years remain subject to "temporary nonresidence" rules if their period of absence from the UK does not last for at least five years.

If the temporary nonresidence rules apply, gains arising on the disposal of assets owned before the period of temporary nonresidence that are sold during the period of temporary nonresidence are subject to CGT in the UK tax year in which the taxpayer returns to the UK and resumes tax residence (year of arrival). Gains on the disposal of assets acquired in a period of nonresidence and sold while the individual is still nonresident are not subject to UK CGT. Likewise, individuals who arrive in the UK during the year, who are considered resident, who are eligible for split-year treatment and who are not subject to temporary nonresidence rules are normally taxed only on gains realized after the date on which they are treated as becoming UK tax resident under the split-year provisions.

Taxpayers who left the UK before 6 April 2013 but who return to the UK before a period of five complete UK tax years elapses are subject to the temporary nonresidence regime as it applied before the SRT on their return to the UK. They should obtain specific advice regarding this law, as necessary.

Reliefs. Various reliefs are available for CGT. The most common relief is main residence relief, which exempts all or part of a gain that arises on a property that an individual has used as his only or main home, if certain conditions are met.

Business Asset Disposal Relief is a relief available to taxpayers who sell or give away their businesses. This relief aims to reduce the rate of CGT on qualifying disposals to 10%. Gains are eligible for Business Asset Disposal Relief up to a maximum lifetime limit, which is currently GBP1 million.

Many other reliefs are available, including rollover relief for disposals of certain business assets.

Foreign currency. Foreign currency is generally a chargeable asset for CGT purposes unless it is acquired for specific personal use outside the UK. However, currency gains on cash balances held in a non-sterling bank account are also specifically excluded from CGT by law, effective from the 2012-13 tax year, if such funds are retained for personal use only.

Annual exempt amount. The annual exempt amount for the 2021-22 tax year is GBP12,300. This exemption is forfeited if a claim for the remittance basis is made for the tax year.

Rates. For gains realized on all disposals other than those realized on residential property disposals made during the 2021-22 tax year, a 10% rate applies to chargeable gains that fall within the individual's basic rate band limit, after taking into account income as calculated for income tax purposes (see Rates below). Chargeable gains in excess of the basic rate band are charged at a rate of 20%. For gains on residential property and earned interest, the applicable rates are 18% for basic rate taxpayers and 28% for higher and additional rate taxpayers.

Capital losses. Capital losses can be automatically deducted from capital gains in the same year. Any allowable unused capital losses may be carried forward indefinitely to relieve future gains. Losses realized by non-domiciled taxpayers who have claimed the remittance basis are not normally regarded as capital losses except in the circumstances discussed below.

Effective from 6 April 2008, for individuals who elect to be taxed on the remittance basis, capital losses from the disposal of assets not located in the UK cannot be offset against chargeable gains in the UK, unless they make an election. The election potentially allows individuals to claim relief for capital losses on the disposal of any assets not located in the UK. However, the election would require them to track and possibly disclose the details of their worldwide capital transactions to HMRC. Any losses from the disposal of assets located in the UK are first offset against any unremitted foreign gains in preference to any UK gains, thereby increasing the amount of UK CGT payable. As a result, this election might not be beneficial if an individual has significant UK gains and losses.

The election must be made with respect to the first tax year in which individuals are claiming the remittance basis of taxation after 6 April 2008 (the election can be made up to four years after the end of the tax year the remittance basis is first claimed), regardless of whether they have any capital losses arising in that year. The election is irrevocable after it is made.

Disposal of UK property by nonresidents. Effective from April 2015, the UK government introduced nonresident Capital Gains Tax (NRCGT) to bring nonresidents into the charge of CGT on gains made on the disposal of UK residential property.

From April 2019, the UK government has widened the scope of NRCGT to bring nonresidents into the charge of UK CGT on gains made on the direct or indirect disposal of UK immovable property.

Direct disposals. From April 2019, direct disposals of UK land and buildings are subject to UK CGT, regardless of the type of the property or the residence of the disposing individual.

For nonresidential property, the property is rebased to market value at 6 April 2019, meaning that only the change in value from that date onward will be subject to UK tax. Nonresidents also have the option to use original cost rather than the April 2019 value if this results in a more favorable outcome. Sales of residential property do not benefit from a rebasing in April 2019; however, a further election is available to calculate the taxable gain on a proportionate basis.

Indirect disposals. In addition, indirect disposals of UK land are subject to UK CGT if the disposal is of an entity that is considered "property rich" and if the nonresident owner holds or has held at least a 25% interest in that entity at some point within the two years prior to the sale of the entity. For all indirect disposals of "property rich" entities, the value of shares is rebased to the April 2019 market value.

For these purposes, an entity is considered "property rich" if, at the time of disposal, 75% or more of the value of the entity being disposed of is directly or indirectly derived from UK land. The 75% test is based on the market value of the underlying assets held by the entity at the time of its disposal.

The rules only bring nonresidents into the scope of UK tax if they hold or have held an interest of 25% or greater in the "property rich entity." The holdings of connected parties or parties "acting together" need to be considered in determining whether the 25% test is met. Disposals with an appropriate connection to a collective investment vehicle (potentially including limited partnerships, unit trusts and UK real estate investment trusts) do not benefit from the 25% ownership test such that even a disposal of a small percentage holding would fall within the rules.

Generally, taxing rights on disposal are allocated to the UK. However, certain double tax treaties include an exemption for disposals of listed shares.

Compliance. Individuals will need to file an NRCGT return and settle any tax due within 30 days after the disposal. Penalties for late filing and late payment apply. Professional advice should be taken as necessary.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Under general rules, a deduction in determining taxable earnings is allowed for any amount if it is incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of the duties of the employment. The rule relating to what is regarded as "necessary" in the performance of the duties of employment is very tightly drawn.

Special rules relate to various items, including, but not limited to, travel and subsistence, relocation and overseas medical costs. The following are the common types of deductions and exemptions:
- Travel and subsistence costs incurred when an employee works at a temporary workplace (that is, a workplace where an employee expects to work for no longer than 24 months and such period does not form all or nearly all the employment period)
- The cost of employee and family return trips home (subject to certain limitations with respect to the duration of claim and family trips; a non-UK-domiciled individual who performs employment duties in the UK is eligible to claim home-leave expenses with respect to his or her family for qualifying journeys that are completed within five years of the date of his or her arrival in the UK)
- Qualifying relocation expenses of up to GBP8,000
- Work-related training (for employees only)
- Professional subscriptions
- Business mileage allowance for using an employee's private car to travel in the performance of employment duties
- Overseas medical costs (for UK employees on foreign assignment)

Certain conditions may need to be satisfied before the above expenses can be claimed as deductions. As a result, professional advice should be sought before making these claims.

Personal allowance. UK-resident taxpayers are normally entitled to an annual tax-free personal allowance. The amount is GBP12,570 for the 2021-22 tax year. Each individual has his or her own personal allowance. In addition, if an individual is tax resident for only part of the UK tax year, he or she will nevertheless receive his or her full annual tax-free personal allowance. However, effective from 6 April 2010, the personal allowance is reduced by GBP1 for every GBP2 of "adjusted net income" over GBP100,000. Consequently, individuals with "adjusted net income" of GBP125,140 or more do not receive any personal allowance for the 2021-22 tax year.

In addition, as mentioned in Remittance basis, an individual who claims the remittance basis loses his or her personal allowance unless the remittance basis applies without a claim. In this circumstance, the personal allowance may, in some cases, be reinstated as a result of the specific provisions of a double tax treaty (see Section E), but typically remains subject to the phaseout because of income levels. Not all treaties contain the necessary provisions. Consequently, professional advice should be sought if an individual is considering this option.

Nonresident individuals are generally entitled to a UK personal allowance (subject to the same income phaseout) if they satisfy either of the following conditions:
- They are nationals of the UK or a member country of the EEA.
- They are entitled to the allowance under specific double tax treaty provisions that cover personal allowances.

People born before 6 April 1948 may be entitled to a larger personal allowance.

Married couples also qualify for the married couple's allowance if one or both of the spouses were born before 6 April 1935. The maximum amount of this allowance is GBP9,075, depending on the taxpayers' age and income. This relief may be taken only at a rate of 10%. In some circumstances, married couples who pay tax at no more than the basic rate may also be able to transfer the unused personal allowance to their spouse or civil partner.

Relief for alimony and maintenance payments may be available if an individual or his or her ex-spouse was born before 6 April 1935 and if certain other conditions are met.

Business deductions. Expenses incurred for a trade, profession or vocation are generally only available as deductions in determining taxable profit or allowable loss if they are incurred wholly and exclusively for the purpose of the trade, profession or vocation. In addition, certain types of expenses are not allowed as deductions. These include the following:
- Entertainment and gifts (except for certain inexpensive gifts bearing conspicuous advertising)
- Depreciation, other than capital allowances
- Nonbusiness expenses or the private-use proportion of expenses
- Costs of a capital nature
- Profits or capital withdrawn from the business

Although deductions for depreciation and expenditure of a capital nature are not allowed, deductions in the form of capital allowances (tax depreciation) may be available.

The 2018-2019 tax year was the first year that the Scottish Parliament used its powers to impose different rates and thresholds from the rest of the UK.

From 6 April 2019, the Welsh Assembly can set part of the income tax rate. The current rates for Welsh taxpayers are the same as the UK excluding Scotland rates shown above.

Relief for losses. The most common types of losses are trading losses, property losses and capital losses.

Trading losses. Trading losses may be offset against a taxpayer's total taxable income. The taxpayer may choose to offset the loss in the year in which the loss is incurred and/or in the preceding year. If the current year loss cannot be fully offset against the current or preceding year trading income, the balance can be used to offset capital gains for that year (after the current year capital loss has been used). For married couples, losses may be offset only against the income of the spouse incurring the loss. Special rules provide for the carryback of losses incurred in early trading years. In addition, a taxpayer may carry forward unused trading losses to offset future income from the same trade. Special rules apply at the cessation of an individual's trade or business.

Property losses. If an individual has more than one rental property, all profits and losses from properties that are leased commercially in the tax year are pooled together to give an overall profit or loss for the year. Special rules can apply to properties leased at less than a commercial rent and to furnished holiday leases. Typically, other property losses can be carried forward and offset against property income from a UK property business in future tax years. A property loss may not be carried back to a previous tax year.

Capital losses. For details regarding capital losses, see Capital gains tax.

B. Other taxes

Taxes on property

Real estate transfer taxes. The UK levies various real estate transfer taxes on transactions involving the acquisition of any estate, interest, right or power in or over land in the UK and certain partnerships that hold UK real estate. The real estate transfer taxes cover the following:

- Real estate situated in England and Northern Ireland is subject to stamp duty land tax (SDLT).
- Real estate situated in Scotland is subject to land and building transaction tax (LBTT), which is effective from 1 April 2015 (prior to this date, SDLT applied).
- Real estate situated in Wales is subject to land transaction tax (LTT), which is effective from 1 April 2018 (prior to this date, SDLT applied).

Although these taxes are similar, differences exist, most notably to the rates and bands. In all cases, the tax rate depends on whether the property is residential (suitable for residential or in the process of being constructed or adapted for residential property) with higher rates applying to such property. The rates are up to 15% for residential property (the rate depends on where the property is situated and the profile of the buyer).

From April 2021, an additional 2% rate will apply to SDLT if the buyer is regarded as a "foreign buyer."

For nonresidential property, the rates are up to 6% (the rate depends on where the property is situated).

The purchaser is liable to the real estate transfer taxes.

Real estate transfer taxes apply at the applicable rates based on the value-added tax (VAT)-inclusive consideration given. In certain cases, the taxes are levied based on the market value of the real estate interest acquired. In the case of grant of a lease, real estate transfer taxes also apply at the applicable rates on the net present value of the rent payable under the lease.

Annual tax on enveloped dwellings. Since 1 April 2013, an annual tax on enveloped dwellings (ATED) applies to non-natural persons holding UK residential property (if an individual does not own the residential property directly, but owns it, for example, through a company, this tax may apply).

There was an initial valuation date of 1 April 2012, which applied to properties valued at more than GBP2 million owned on or before this date. The regime was extended several times and its current form is that effective from 1 April 2016, properties valued at more than GBP500,000 as of 1 April 2012 (or on purchase if later) are in scope of the ATED.

There are fixed revaluation dates whereby property (including property acquired after 1 April 2012) must be revalued every five years from 1 April 2012. A subsequent revaluation occurred on 1 April 2017 and is used effective from the ATED year beginning on 1 April 2018. Accordingly, for the ATED period beginning in April 2019, properties valued at more than GBP500,000 as of 1 April 2017 (or on purchase if later) are in scope of the ATED.

The following are the chargeable amounts of ATED for 1 April 2021 through 31 March 2022.

Property value	Annual charge (GBP)
More than GBP500,000 but not more than GBP1 million	3,700
More than GBP1 million but not more than GBP2 million	7,500
More than GBP2 million but not more than GBP5 million	25,300
More than GBP5 million but not more than GBP10 million	59,100
More than GBP10 million but not more than GBP20 million	118,600
More than GBP20 million	237,400

Prior to 6 April 2019, non-natural persons within the charge of the ATED were also liable to an ATED-related CGT charge at a rate of 28% in relation to certain disposals of a UK property with a value of more than GBP500,000 at a gain (also, see Capital gains tax in Section A). From 6 April 2019, ATED-related CGT has been abolished and disposals of UK residential property are brought within the nonresident CGT and corporation tax regime.

Certain reliefs and exemptions from ATED are available (for example, to bona fide property rental businesses, property developers and property traders).

Inheritance and gift tax. Inheritance tax (IHT) may be levied on the estate of a deceased person who was domiciled or deemed domiciled in the UK or who was not domiciled in the UK, but owned assets situated there. An individual who does not have a UK domicile for IHT purposes is taxed only on UK-situated assets and, from 6 April 2017, "UK residential property interests" held via certain non-UK trusts, companies and partnerships. For these purposes, a "UK residential property interest" is widely defined and includes certain loans and collateral provided with respect to UK residential property.

A UK domicile is acquired at birth when the individual's father (if the child's parents are married at birth) has a UK domicile. An individual may change this by severing all ties with the UK and acquiring a "domicile of choice" elsewhere. Similarly, an individual domiciled outside the UK may acquire a UK domicile of choice by forming an intent to remain in the UK permanently or indefinitely. For IHT purposes, UK domicile is extended to apply to non-domiciled individuals who were resident in the UK for 15 of the past 20 tax years with effect from 6 April 2017 (previously, 17 out of the last 20 years for the period up to 6 April 2017).

Other recent changes include that an individual born in the UK with a UK domicile of origin at birth, who later acquires a non-UK domicile of choice, is treated as being UK domiciled for IHT purposes when the individual resumes UK residence (if the individual has been UK resident for at least one of the two preceding tax years).

In addition, there is a "run-off period" during which deemed domicile status for UK IHT purposes endures for a non-UK resident. This applies if deemed domicile status has been acquired under the 15-out-of-20-years rule. Once deemed domiciled, the individual will need to spend at least four UK tax years outside the UK before losing his or her deemed tax domicile status for UK IHT.

The inheritance tax rate is 40% for the estate on death. If a will contains a charitable legacy leaving at least 10% of an individual's estate to charity, this reduces the inheritance tax rate applied to that estate by 10%. This means that the effective tax rate is reduced to 36%. A nil rate band of GBP325,000 applies for 2021-22. Any unused allowance of a spouse or civil partner may be transferred to the second deceased's estate proportionally, provided the second death occurs after 9 October 2007.

Effective from 6 April 2017, a new main residence transferable nil-rate band applies if a "main residence" is passed on to a direct descendant. Broadly, this means a child or grandchild and includes adopted children, foster children and stepchildren. It does not include nieces and nephews. The definition of main residence is very similar to the definition currently applicable to principal private residence relief for CGT. A property that was never a residence of the deceased such as a buy-to-lease property will not qualify. The allowance was initially set at GBP100,000 in 2017-18, increasing to GBP125,000 in 2018-19, GBP150,000 in 2019-20 and to GBP175,000 in 2020-21. The allowance for 2021-22 remains at EUR175,000. A tapered withdrawal of the additional nil-rate band is provided for estates with a net value of more than GBP2 million. The withdrawal rate is GBP1 for every GBP2 over this threshold.

IHT is also levied on gifts made by the deceased within seven years before death and on certain other lifetime gifts.

Exemptions and deductions are available for inter vivos gifts and for estate transfers at death. Gifts between spouses are exempt, but if the transferor is domiciled in the UK and if the transferee is not domiciled there, the spousal exemption is limited to the same amount as the prevailing nil rate band, which is currently GBP325,000 (GBP55,000 before 6 April 2013). Non-UK-domiciled individuals with UK-domiciled spouses may make an election to be treated as having a UK domicile for IHT purposes in order to obtain the full spouse exemption. Inter vivos transfers over the nil rate band into all types of family trusts are subject to IHT at 20%, subject to certain limited exemptions. Taper relief provisions to reduce the IHT payable on gifts made within seven years before death are shown in the following table.

Years between gift and death		Percentage of relief on
Exceeding	Not exceeding	IHT due
3	4	20
4	5	40
5	6	60
6	7	80

Business Relief and Agricultural Relief are available at either 100% or 50% on the transfers of certain assets if various conditions are satisfied.

To prevent double taxation, the UK has entered into IHT or estate tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

France	Netherlands	Sweden
India	Pakistan	Switzerland
Ireland	South Africa	United States
Italy

Unilateral relief may also be available.

Apprenticeship levy. The apprenticeship levy, effective from 6 April 2017, is a charge on UK employers to fund apprenticeships. It potentially affects all employers across all industry sectors, regardless of whether apprentices are employed. The levy is charged at a rate of 0.5% of an employer's "pay bill," which is defined as earnings subject to Class 1 secondary National Insurance contributions (UK employer social security contributions on cash and deemed cash payments, but not on benefits in kind; also, see Section C). All employers receive an annual allowance of GBP15,000 to offset against their levy, meaning that only those employers with a pay bill in excess of GBP3 million per tax year actually have to pay the levy. Groups of connected companies are considered one employer for the purposes of calculating the levy and have only one allowance to cover all of the group companies' payrolls.

Employers need to calculate, report and pay the levy on a monthly basis via the normal payroll process alongside the normal PAYE (see Section D) and National Insurance contribution remittances. The levy, which is an employer charge, cannot be deducted from the earnings of an employee.

C. Social security

Contributions. In general, National Insurance contributions are payable on the earnings of individuals who work in the UK. Special arrangements apply to individuals working temporarily in or outside of the UK. Under certain conditions, an employee is exempt from contributions for the first 52 weeks of employment in the UK.

The contribution for an employed individual is made in two parts — a primary contribution from the employee and a secondary contribution from the employer.

For 2021-22, the employee contribution is payable at a rate of 12% on weekly earnings between GBP184 and GBP967 and at a rate of 2% on weekly earnings in excess of GBP967.

An employer contributes at a rate of 13.8% on an employee's earnings above GBP170 per week, with no ceiling.

Except under certain circumstances related to the exercise of a share option or the award of restricted securities, the employer is not entitled to reimbursement for any secondary contributions made, but these contributions are an allowable expense for purposes of determining the employer's income tax or corporation tax. Contributions are collected under the PAYE system (see Section D).

Since 6 April 2015, employers no longer pay employers' National Insurance contributions on weekly earnings up to the upper earnings limit (GBP967 for 2021-22) for employees under the age of 21. From 6 April 2016, this exemption from employer National Insurance contributions also applies to apprentices under the age of 25. Employers' contributions are payable at a rate of 13.8% on weekly earnings above GBP967.

Employers must also pay National Insurance contributions on the provision of taxable benefits in kind (for example, employer-provided cars or housing). Class 1A contributions are also payable at 13.8% on the cash equivalent of the benefit provided.

Different rules apply to self-employed individuals. For 2021-22, a weekly contribution of GBP3.05 is due if annual profits are expected to exceed GBP6,515. In addition, a self-employed individual must make a profit-related contribution on business profits or gains, which is collected together with income tax. The 2021-22 profit-related contribution rates are 9% on annual profits ranging from GBP9,569 to GBP50,270 and 2% on annual profits in excess of GBP50,270.

Nonresident self-employed individuals are not subject to profit-related contributions.

The 2021-22 National Insurance contribution rates for employed individuals are set forth in the following tables.

Employee's contributions

Total weekly earnings From GBP	To GBP	Contribution rate %
0	184.00	0
184.01	967.00	12
967.01	—	2

Employer's contributions

From GBP	To GBP	Contribution rate %
0	170.00	0
170.01	—	13.8*

* Employer National Insurance contributions are only payable on earnings above GBP967 for employees under the age of 21 and apprentices under the age of 25.

Totalization agreements. From 1 January 2021, contribution liability for employees and self-employed individuals moving to or from the UK varies, depending on whether the individual is covered by the old EC social security legislation by virtue of the UK/EU WA (and equivalent Citizens Rights Agreement [CRA]/ Separation Agreement [SA] with Switzerland and the EEA countries), the new social security legislation in the UK/EU TCA or a reciprocal agreement, or whether the assignment is to or from a country with which the UK has not entered into a social security agreement.

Each of these categories is discussed below.

EC social security legislation. EU social security legislation (EEC Council Regulation No. 883/2004) is effective from 1 May 2010 until 31 December 2020 and beyond for certain individuals covered by the WA, CRA or SA. This legislation applies to all inter-EU moves for EU nationals. This legislation covers moves to Switzerland, effective from 1 April 2012, and moves to Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway, effective from 1 June 2012. However, the UK did not extend the application of EEC Council Regulation No. 883/2004 to non-EU nationals. The previous EU legislation (EEC Council Regulation No. 1408/71) continues to apply to non-EU nationals if grandfathering under the WA is in point (although the new TCA will apply to such individuals).

Under the old EU legislation, a covered worker normally pays social security contributions in a single member country, usually the country where his or her employment duties are performed, even though he or she may not live there.

Under an exception to this rule, a worker seconded to work in the UK from another member state normally remained subject to social security contributions in his or her home country if the assignment was for 12 months or less (if Regulation 1408/71 applied) or 24 months or less (if Regulation 883/2004 applied). Individuals may remain in their home country scheme for significantly longer periods if they are deemed to work partly in more than one member state (multistate workers), or if they are considered special cases by virtue of specific skills or knowledge.

Cessation of UK membership in the EU (Brexit). Effective from 1 January 2021, the UK and the EU only (see information regarding the EEA and Switzerland below) are subject to new rules under the UK/EU TCA. As under the old rules, a covered worker normally pays social security contributions in a single member country only, and this is usually the country where his or her employment duties are performed, even though he or she may not live there.

Under the new rules, exceptions to that principle still apply but are somewhat diluted in comparison to the old rules.

A worker seconded to work in the UK from an EU member state will only remain subject to social security contributions in his or her home country if the assignment is for 24 months or less and if the home state has opted in to the new "detached worker" provisions.

It is noteworthy that as of April 2021, every EU member state is opted in to the new "detached worker" rules in the TCA.

Individuals may no longer remain in their home country social security scheme for periods expected to exceed 24 months at the outset or for periods that are extended beyond 24 months.

The only exception to this is for workers who work partly in more than one EU member state (multistate workers) for which the old rules are mainly carried forward.

These new rules do not apply to the EEA countries, which are Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway, or Switzerland. In the interim, moves between the UK and Iceland and Norway are covered by the old bilateral agreements that the UK has with these countries, Liechtenstein will be treated as a non-agreement country and Switzerland is subject to the old UK/Switzerland bilateral agreement.

These agreements generally have "detached" worker provisions, but not all are as generous as the old EU rules. In the case of Norway and Switzerland, no multistate provision exists. This is expected to cause some issues in the interim period.

It is expected that, as a result of signing the TCA, the UK's old bilateral agreements with the EU states (other than with the Republic of Ireland; see below) will continue to be dormant other than where specifically provided for within the new TCA (or old EU regulations where the WA or equivalent applies).

In addition, the UK had already arranged a new agreement with the Republic of Ireland, which broadly replicates the terms of the old EU social security regulations and which will take effect if the new TCA provisions are not as beneficial as those rules or grandfathering under the WA is not in point.

It will be interesting to see how the TCA may be replicated with the EEA/Switzerland once the negotiations are complete and then how those separate agreements interact for individuals crossing multiple borders. A new agreement has since been reached with Switzerland. This is subject to formal parliamentary ratification but effective from 1 November 2021. This replicates much of the UK-EU TCA but may still result in issues for UK nationals who work in the UK, Switzerland and any other EU member state simultaneously. It appears that this completely revokes the old UK-Swiss bilateral agreement from 1968, so there are no transitional provisions from old to new and revised certification may be required for anyone currently subject to the 1968 agreement.

WA impact. As mentioned above, the UK and the EU entered into a legally binding Brexit WA (equivalents with EEA and Switzerland) to protect the rights of citizens currently working or residing in an EU member state or in an EEA country or Switzerland as of 31 December 2020.

Given the more limited nature of the TCA in terms of geographical coverage and periods of home country coverage that will now be available, it is imperative that businesses assess the applicability of the WA in terms of any post-1 January 2021 cross-border activities that include the UK, as the WA and equivalents may provide access to a more beneficial social security position.

Reciprocal agreements. The UK has reciprocal social security agreements with several non-EEA countries, although the terms of the agreements vary. Therefore, to determine an individual's liability or benefit entitlement, it is important to consult each agreement relating to the individual's home/host country.

To prevent double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, the UK has entered into reciprocal agreements with the following jurisdictions.

Barbados	Israel	Philippines
Bermuda	Jamaica	Switzerland
Canada	Japan	Turkey
Chile	Jersey	United States
Guernsey	Korea (South)	Yugoslavia*
Isle of Man	Mauritius

* The UK honors the Yugoslavia treaty with respect to Bosnia and Herzegovina, Montenegro, North Macedonia and Serbia. The EC social security rules have applied to Slovenia since 1 May 2004 and to Croatia since 1 July 2013.

In the interim, the old agreements with Iceland and Norway also apply in certain scenarios when cross-border activity with the UK commences on or after 1 January 2021 until new agreements (an EEA-wide agreement) are reached.

Without reciprocal agreement. If no reciprocal agreement exists between the home country of an individual and the UK, the individual is subject to both the domestic law of his or her home country and the domestic law of the UK. For these individuals who come to work temporarily in the UK, exemption from payment of certain contributions for the first 52 weeks of their stay is common. The exemption depends on both the employee and the employer meeting various requirements.

For individuals leaving the UK to work overseas who remain employed by a UK company, there is generally a continuing liability to mandatory Class 1 (employee and employer) National Insurance contributions for a period of 52 weeks from the date of departure from the UK.

Other considerations may be appropriate if directors or "office holders" attend UK board meetings or otherwise undertake UK duties, if rotational workers from the UK are concerned or if individuals break or do not break UK tax residency.

Special rules can also apply to mariners, air crews and those who work in oil and gas exploration on the UK continental shelf.

UK National Insurance contributions compliance and reporting. If an individual or employer remains or becomes liable for UK Class 1 (employee and employer) National Insurance contributions, this is normally assessed on worldwide earnings (income) from the employment(s) concerned and must be reported in UK payroll each pay period under the UK's Real Time Information (RTI) process. Also, see Advance payment of taxes regarding PAYE in Section D.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

General. The tax year for individuals in the UK runs from 6 April to 5 April of the following year.

Whether compensation is subject to UK tax and how it is taxed depend on the employee's residence status at the time the compensation is earned. Taxable compensation is actually taxed in the year of receipt. Earnings, including bonuses and commissions earned in one year but not paid until a subsequent tax year, are taxed when received. For example, if an individual receives a salary of GBP30,000 during the year ending 5 April 2022, and earns a bonus of GBP20,000 for that tax year that is not paid until December 2022, the salary is subject to tax in 2021-22, but the bonus, earned in the same period as the salary, is subject to tax in 2022-23, when it is received. The term "receipt" is broadly defined for this purpose and includes payment as well as entitlement to payment. The payment does not have to be made to the employee; for example, a payment of an employee's earnings to an employee's family remains taxable.

Married persons are taxed as separate individuals. Spouses are responsible for their own tax returns, are assessed on their own income and gains, and are given tax relief for their own allowable deductions and allowances. Individuals are entitled to their own tax-band rates and capital gains tax exemptions.

Income from jointly held assets is divided equally between spouses and taxed accordingly. However, if a husband and wife are beneficially entitled to unequal shares of an investment in certain property and to the resulting income, or if either spouse is beneficially entitled to the capital or income to the exclusion of the other, a declaration may be made to HMRC to ensure that the income is assessed according to its beneficial interest.

Advance payment of taxes. Income tax and social security contributions on cash earnings are normally collected under the Pay-As-You-Earn (PAYE) system. All employers must use the PAYE system to deduct tax and social security contributions from wages or salaries.

Although expense reimbursements and many noncash benefits are not normally subject to PAYE withholding, they must be reported to HMRC by employers after the end of the tax year and by employees on their tax returns. HMRC may also take them into account in determining the employee's PAYE tax code, which in turn adjusts the amount of tax to be deducted from the employee's cash pay. Alternatively, employers may agree with HMRC that most benefits in kind may be subject to payroll withholding rather than reported separately after the end of the tax year.

Tax returns. The UK has a self-assessment tax system. Under the self-assessment system, individuals who receive a notice to file a tax return from HMRC may choose to have HMRC calculate and assess their tax liability or to calculate and assess the tax due themselves. Individuals who choose to have HMRC calculate and assess tax must complete and submit their tax returns by 31 October following the end of the tax year. Individuals who choose to calculate and assess tax themselves must complete and submit tax returns by 31 October following the end of the tax year if they want to file paper returns. Returns can be filed electronically, together with a calculation of the tax due, up to 31 January following the end of the tax year.

If tax is due as calculated on the return, it must be paid by 31 January following the end of the tax year. Provisional on account payments of tax on income not subject to withholding are usually payable in two installments, on 31 January in the tax year and on the following 31 July.

Each installment must equal 50% of the previous year's income tax liability not withheld at source.

Interest is automatically charged on tax not paid by the due dates. A 5% penalty is also imposed if the tax is not paid within 30 days after the final payment date. A further penalty of 5% is imposed if the tax is not paid within six months following the final payment date. An additional penalty of 5% is imposed if the tax is still not paid within 12 months following the final payment date.

A fixed penalty of GBP100 is imposed if a return is not filed by the applicable deadline (that is, 31 October or 31 January) even if no tax is due. If the return is three months late, HMRC may seek to impose daily penalties of GBP10 a day for a period of up to 90 days (GBP900 per return). A further fixed penalty of the higher of GBP300 or 5% of the tax due is imposed if the return is six months late. An additional penalty, which can be up to 200% of the tax due, is imposed if the return is 12 months late and if facts are deliberately concealed. Penalties also apply to incorrect returns.

Individuals who are not subject to tax withheld at source and who do not receive a notice to file a tax return must inform HMRC by 5 October following the end of the tax year if they are likely to have a UK tax liability for the tax year concerned. Individuals with simpler tax affairs may receive an assessment of their tax liability from HMRC, which negates the requirement to file a tax return. This would not normally apply to non-UK domiciled individuals and individuals working in more than one country.

Capital gains tax. Capital gains are generally reported on the self-assessment tax return, and any CGT due must be included with the final payment of tax for the year. An exception is that disposals of UK land should be reported and any tax paid within 30 days after disposal. An additional reporting requirement, the NRCGT return, also applies with respect to disposals of UK residential property by nonresidents up to 5 April 2020 (see Disposal of UK residential property by nonresidents in Capital gains tax in Section A). From 6 April 2020, however, individuals need to report and pay nonresident Capital Gains Tax using the Capital Gains Tax on UK property service.

Inheritance tax. Inheritance tax is usually payable by the deceased's personal representative when probate (confirmation of the estate) is obtained. Some liabilities, however, must be paid by trustees of settled property and by recipients of lifetime gifts.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

If income is doubly taxed in two or more jurisdictions, relief for double taxation is typically available through a foreign tax credit or exemption. In the absence of a treaty with the country imposing the foreign tax, unilateral relief may be claimed under UK domestic law. However, to claim relief, it is essential that the income be regarded as foreign source under UK law and arise from sources in the jurisdiction imposing the tax. The taxpayer also usually needs to be resident in the UK unless he or she has an ongoing liability for UK taxes as a nonresident (for example, because he or she is a Crown employee).

The relief usually takes the form of a foreign tax credit if an individual is resident in the UK for the purpose of a double tax treaty. In this case, any foreign taxes paid on doubly taxed income arising from sources in the other jurisdiction can be taken as credit against the UK tax liability on the same source of income. The credit that can be claimed is limited to the lesser of the foreign taxes paid or the amount of equivalent UK tax on the doubly taxed income.

If an individual is resident in the UK and treaty-resident in a jurisdiction with which the UK has entered into a double tax treaty, a claim may be made in the UK to exempt from UK tax the income that would otherwise be taxed in both jurisdictions if the treaty contains the relevant articles.

The UK has entered into double tax treaties covering taxes on income and capital gains with the following jurisdictions.

F. Entering the UK

Brexit. The UK left the EU on 31 January 2020. The transition period ended at 11:00 p.m. on 31 December 2020. Freedom of movement ended on 31 December 2020. The rights of EU nationals who were residing in the UK on or before 31 December 2020 will remain the same subject to applying for status under the EU Settlement Scheme.

EU Settlement Scheme. EU nationals residing in the UK on or before 31 December 2020 can apply to the EU Settlement Scheme to continue living in the UK after 30 June 2021 (the deadline for applications under the Scheme). The application will confer either settled or pre-settled status. Non-EU national family members of EU nationals can also apply under the Scheme. Individuals who did not apply under the Scheme prior to the deadline have until 31 December 2021 to make a late application with an explanation of why the deadline was missed.

Settled status. EU nationals who started living in the UK by 31 December 2020 and who have lived in the UK for a continuous five-year period (known as "continuous residence") will be granted settled status. This status will allow individuals to remain in the UK indefinitely and apply for British citizenship if eligible. The status will be lost if individuals spend more than five consecutive years outside the UK.

Pre-settled status. EU nationals who started living in the UK by 31 December 2020 but who have not yet lived in the UK for a continuous five-year period will be granted pre-settled status. This status will be issued for a five-year period. After spending five years continuously in the UK, the individual can apply for settled status. Pre-settled status will be lost if individuals spend more than two consecutive years outside the UK.

New immigration system from 1 January 2021. In February 2020, the UK government published a paper outlining its plans for the new immigration system, which took effect on 1 January 2021 after freedom of movement ended. The new immigration system transforms the way in which all migrants come to the UK to work, study, visit or join their family.

The new system is a points-based system, which prioritizes highly skilled workers. Existing mechanisms and thresholds were amended to take into account the broader scope of the system, which applies to both EU nationals (except Irish citizens) and non-EU nationals.

General principles. In general, to enter the UK, you must have a valid travel document (in most cases, a passport).

Regardless of the duration or purpose of their visit, nationals of certain countries must obtain entry clearance (a visa) before traveling to the UK. Individuals from the relevant countries are known as "visa nationals."

In contrast, "non-visa nationals" are not required to obtain entry clearance if traveling to the UK as visitors or business visitors (performing certain permissible activities) for a period not exceeding six months.

If the purpose of the visit is for employment or study, all non-British/Irish nationals must obtain appropriate entry clearance (a visa) before traveling to the UK.

Entry clearance applications must be made to a British Embassy, Consulate General or High Commission (collectively known as British diplomatic posts) through one of the UK's Commercial Partners' offices in the individual's home country or country of legal residence.

Applications for entry clearance may be refused if the applicant has breached UK immigration rules during the preceding 10 years. Providing misleading or false information when applying for entry clearance or leave to enter may result in an individual being barred from entering the UK for up to 10 years.

A British diplomatic post approving entry clearance for longer than six months may stipulate that the individual must register with the police within seven days of arriving in the UK. Nationals of EEA or Commonwealth counties are not required to register with the police.

UK authorities may impose financial penalties on airlines and shipping companies that bring unauthorized passengers to the UK. This legislation was introduced to reduce the number of persons who are turned away at the port of entry because they do not have the necessary visa.

The UK government has introduced an Immigration Health Surcharge (separate from the visa fee). The surcharge is payable by non-EEA migrants coming to the UK for more than six months. The surcharge is currently set at GBP624 per year for the main applicant and each dependent who is 18 or older, and GBP470 per year for children younger than 18, students, dependents of students and Youth Mobility Scheme Visa applicants. Since 1 January 2021, EU nationals applying under the new immigration system (see New immigration system from 1 January 2021) are also required to pay the surcharge.

Visitors. Individuals coming to the UK as tourists or business visitors are normally granted admission for a period of six months. The rules regarding business visitors are complex and should be considered on a case-by-case basis. In general, business visitors are prohibited from working while in the UK or receiving a salary in the UK. However, they are allowed to attend meetings, transact business and negotiate contracts with UK companies. It is advisable that an individual planning to come to the UK as a business visitor carry a letter from his or her employer stating the purpose and duration of the visit.

The UK government has identified specific categories of individuals who are permitted to perform paid activities in the UK. They are allowed to perform "work" for which they can receive payment, but only for a period of up to one month. These categories are visiting academic examiners, lecturers, pilot examiners and advocates/lawyers, and activities related to the arts or entertainment. Academic visitors who are experts in their field can extend their stay in the UK to a total of 12 months.

Visa nationals coming to the UK must obtain entry clearance before traveling to the UK. Although non-visa nationals coming to the UK as visitors for up to six months do not require entry clearance, they must restrict their activities to those prescribed and permitted under the business visitor rules.

G. Entry for the purposes of employment, self-employment, studying, government-exchange program and other purposes

Under the Immigration Act of 1971 and the British Nationality Act of 1981, certain individuals have right of abode, which in most cases entitles the bearer to live and work in the UK without restriction. These acts preclude the necessity for entry clearance for certain qualified individuals. Individuals who do not have right of abode and who wish to live and work in the UK must apply for the appropriate immigration document and/or entry clearance (visa). Whether a combination of these items is required depends on the individual's circumstances.

EEA and Swiss nationals. The EEA consists of the following countries.

Austria	Germany	Malta
Belgium	Greece	Netherlands
Bulgaria	Hungary	Norway
Croatia	Iceland	Poland
Cyprus	Ireland	Portugal
Czech Republic	Italy	Romania
Denmark	Latvia	Slovak Republic
Estonia	Liechtenstein	Slovenia
Finland	Lithuania	Spain
France	Luxembourg	Sweden

Freedom of movement between the UK and the EU ended at 11:00 p.m. on 31 December 2020.

Nationals of EEA countries who entered the UK before this date are required to register under the EU Settlement Scheme to continue to live and work in the UK after 30 June 2021 (see EU Settlement Scheme in Section F). Non-EEA dependents who wish to join an EEA family member in the UK should obtain an EU Settlement Scheme Family Permit (if the family relationship started and the family member was living in the UK by 31 December 2020) from a British diplomatic post before traveling to the UK. The permit is usually valid for six months.

Nationals of EEA countries entering the UK from 1 January 2021 will need to apply under the new immigration system (See New immigration system from 1 January 2021 in Section F).

The governments of the UK and Ireland have committed to ensure that there will be no changes to the rights enjoyed by Irish nationals in the UK and UK nationals in Ireland. Irish citizens continue to have a right to live and work in the UK without restriction.

Individuals without the right of abode. In general, all non-British/Irish nationals, and persons without settled status or a right of abode who wish to come to the UK for the purpose of employment must obtain the requisite entry clearance for that purpose before traveling to the UK.

The UK's Points Based System (PBS) is a points-scoring system under which applicants are awarded points to reflect earnings, experience and the demand for skills in certain sectors. Illegal working legislation has increased the penalties for employers who breach the requirements. These measures are aimed at strengthening the government's ability to control immigration more effectively.

Tier 1. Tier 1 has several subcategories:

The Tier 1 (Global Talent) category is intended for individuals who are internationally recognized in their field as either a recognized leader or an emerging leader in their field. The Global Talent route replaced the Tier 1 (Exceptional Talent) route, which was closed for new applicants from 20 February 2020. Every initial application must be endorsed by a "designated competent body" before a visa application can be made.

The Tier 1 (Investor) category applies to individuals who intend to make a large investment in the UK. Such individuals need access to a minimum of GBP2 million that is disposable and held in a regulated financial institution and must have a UK bank account for investment purposes. Accelerated routes to settlement are available to individuals who can invest GBP5 million in three years or GBP10 million in two years.

The Tier 1 (Start-up) and Tier 1 (Innovator) categories were opened on 29 March 2019. Applications under these categories require an endorsement by an approved body, which will assess whether an individual's business idea is new and viable and has potential for growth. The Tier 1 (Start-up) category is available for those looking to set up a business in the UK and permits a stay for up to two years without the option of extension. The Tier 1 (Innovator) category is available for those wishing to set up and invest at least GBP50,000 of funds into a business and initially permits an stay for three years with the option to extend for further three-year periods with the potential to apply for settlement after five years. Business organizations with a history of supporting UK entrepreneurs may be eligible to apply to become endorsing bodies.

The Tier 1 (Entrepreneur) category was closed to applications to enter the scheme on 28 March 2019. However, the category, which applies to individuals who intend to invest in the UK by setting up or taking over the running of a UK business, is still open to those eligible to extend their visa.

Other visa categories. The Skilled Worker Visa category applies to skilled workers with a licensed sponsor that has offered them a job in the UK. A key feature is that employers must obtain a sponsor license in order to sponsor non-EEA nationals coming to the UK. Sponsors are required to estimate their use of Certificates of Sponsorship (CoS) in different categories on an annual basis. They are also subject to reporting and compliance requirements to maintain their status as licensed sponsors.

Applications can be submitted from within the UK if permissible (for example, extensions' applications for existing Tier 2 migrants, students, individuals seeking to change employment, and those switching from applicable immigration categories to Skilled Worker Visas) or from outside the UK. The skill level for the job is set at RQF Level 3 (equivalent to A-Level) or above. Except for nationals from a handful of majority-English-speaking countries, individuals who wish to work in the UK as a Skilled Worker must provide specified documents to show that they have a good knowledge of English of at least Level B1 on the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages (CEFR) scale. The minimum salary requirement for roles in this category is currently GBP25,600 or the occupation code minimum (whichever is higher) per year for experienced workers and GBP20,480 for new entrants. Salaries must also meet the minimum set out in the relevant Standard Occupation Classification (SOC) Code published by UK Visas and Immigration. There is also a maintenance requirement to be met if the individual's sponsor does not certify the maintenance associated with the individual's application.

The initial Skilled Worker Visa is granted for up to five years. The rules allow unlimited extensions of up to five years at a time.

Once a migrant has spent a continuous period of five years in the UK as a Skilled Worker, he or she is eligible to apply for indefinite leave to remain provided that he or she meets the requirements at the time of application.

The Intra Company Transfer (ICT) visa category has two subcategories, which are the Intra Company Transfer and the Intra Company Graduate Trainee.

The Intra Company Transfer subcategory applies to overseas employees of multinational companies who are being transferred to a UK-based branch of the organization. These employees must have normally worked abroad with the company for at least 12 months unless their salary is at least GBP73,900, in which case this requirement is waived. Individuals who enter the UK under this category must fill roles at RQF Level 3 (graduate level or above). The minimum annual salary threshold for this category is GBP41,500. Individuals must also receive at least the minimum salary specified in the relevant SOC Code for their particular occupation. Individuals are not required to demonstrate English-language ability for the ICT category. Individuals earning GBP73,900 and above can stay in the UK for up to 9 years in any 10-year period. Those earning less can stay for up to 5 years in any 6-year period.

The Intra Company Graduate Trainee subcategory applies to recent graduate employees of multinational companies with at least three months of overseas' service who are being transferred to the UK-based branch of the organization as part of a structured graduate training program for no more than 12 months. Only 20 graduate trainee visas may be issued per sponsor per financial year. Graduate Trainees must be paid a minimum salary of GBP23,000 per year, or the minimum salary threshold as specified in the relevant SOC Code, whichever is higher.

UK employers are required to pay an Immigration Skills Charge (ISC) for employing Skilled Worker and Intra Company Transfer migrants with some exceptions. The exact amount depends on the size of the organization and how long the worker will be employed. For large sponsors, this amount is GBP1,000 per person per year.

The Minister of Religion Visa category applies to individuals coming to the UK as religious workers for religious organizations. Individuals coming to the UK under this category are required to meet the English language requirement at CEFR Level B2.

The Sportsperson Visa category applies to elite sportspersons and qualified coaches who are internationally established at the highest level and will make a significant contribution to the development of their sport. Individuals coming to the UK under this category are required to meet the English language requirement at CEFR Level A1 in speaking and listening.

The Student Visa category covers individuals wishing to study in the UK. Such individuals must be sponsored by a licensed educational institution in the UK and meet the English language and maintenance requirements.

Temporary Worker Visa routes covers the following temporary workers:

- Individuals coming to the UK to work or perform as sportspersons, entertainers or creative artists
- Individuals coming to the UK to do voluntary work for charity
- Individuals coming to the UK to work temporarily as religious workers
- Individuals coming to the UK through Government Approved Exchange Programs for the purposes of internships or work experience
- Individuals coming to the UK under a contract to do work that is covered under international law

This visa route also covers young people (aged from 18 years to 30 years) from participating jurisdictions who would like to experience life in the UK under the Youth Mobility Scheme for up to two years. Each jurisdiction has an annual allocation of places under the Youth Mobility Scheme. The following is the current list of jurisdictions:

- Australia
- Canada
- Japan
- Hong Kong
- Korea (South)
- Monaco
- New Zealand
- San Marino
- Taiwan

The Frontier Worker Permit allows EEA nationals to work in the UK but live in another country. This category is appropriate for individuals who began working in the UK by 31 December 2020 and must usually have worked in the UK at least once every 12 months since they started working in the UK.

The British National Overseas Visa allows those residing in Hong Kong who are British Nationals (Overseas) to come to the UK to live, work and study. Such individuals must be over the age of 18 and meet a maintenance requirement.

Permit-free employment categories. Individuals who fall into certain categories do not need permission to work in the UK but must obtain prior entry clearance from a British diplomatic post before entering the UK. These include the following:

- UK Ancestry: Commonwealth nationals with a British-born grandparent or right of abode
- Representatives of an Overseas Business: Representatives of a business that does not have a branch, subsidiary or other representation in the UK, including representatives of foreign newspapers, broadcasters or news agencies on a long-term assignment to the UK
- Individuals coming to the UK as representatives of foreign governments or as employees of the United Nations or other international organizations

Further details regarding the first two categories are provided below.

UK Ancestry Visa. A Commonwealth citizen with a British-born parent or grandparent may be given permission to live and work in the UK for five years. At the end of this period, the individual may be eligible to apply for Indefinite Leave to Remain (ILR; see Section H) in the UK.

Representatives of an Overseas Business Visa. The purpose of the visa category for Representatives of an Overseas Business is for a business to introduce its products into the UK market by bringing senior-level overseas employees to the UK to set up operations.

To obtain entry clearance as a representative, an individual must prove that he or she will be a representative of a particular overseas company in the UK. He or she must also demonstrate that a need exists for his or her presence in the UK and that it is his or her intention to establish a subsidiary or branch of the foreign company after entering the UK.

A representative must remain under the direct control of the overseas company. Initially, entry clearance is usually granted for up to three years. After this period, the individual can apply for an extension if certain criteria are met. Indefinite Leave to Remain (ILR; see Section H) is also possible after five years, subject to meeting further eligibility criteria.

H. Indefinite Leave to Remain

If an individual has been living and working in the UK continuously for five years with valid leave in a relevant immigration category, he or she and his or her dependents may be eligible to apply for Indefinite Leave to Remain (ILR).

An individual who has obtained leave as the partner of a British citizen or person settled in the UK must reside in the UK continuously for five years before he or she qualifies for ILR.

ILR status removes the time and employment restrictions that were imposed when an individual first entered the UK. This means that the individual may be able to settle permanently in the UK and take up any employment. The individual is free from immigration restrictions.

An individual can retain his or her ILR status during a period of absence if he or she is not away from the UK for a continuous period of more than 24 months and if he or she retains close ties with the UK during his or her absences; that is, when the individual returns to the UK, he or she is returning to reside, not to visit.

I. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The dependent family members admitted to the UK under most categories are admitted for the same period as the main applicant and are eligible to take up employment. Subject to some restrictions, dependents generally include the permit holder's spouse, unmarried or civil partner and children under than 18 years of age. However, dependents must obtain entry clearance before accompanying the principal applicant to the UK.

The spouse or civil partner and dependents (including children under 21 years of age, parents and grandparents) of an EEA national or a Swiss national living in the UK by 31 December 2020, regardless of whether they are EEA or Swiss nationals themselves, and who are applying for an EEA Family Permit or EU Settlement Scheme Permit are also granted entry rights, including the right to work for an initial period of six months. On entry into the UK, they may apply under the EU Settlement Scheme (see EU Settlement Scheme in Section F).

The UK immigration rules contain provisions to accommodate non-EEA family members of British citizens. However, such applications should be assessed on a case-by-case basis. Individuals are typically issued entry clearance for a period of 33 months with the option to extend this status from within the UK and make an application for ILR on the completion of 5 years' continuous lawful residence in the UK.

Driver's permits. Most foreign nationals may drive legally in the UK with their home jurisdiction driver's licenses for 12 months. After 12 months, foreign nationals must either exchange their license for a UK license or apply for a provisional driving license and then pass the theory and practical driving tests to continue driving in the UK.

J. Other matters

British citizenship. In certain circumstances, an individual may be eligible to apply to naturalize as a British citizen after a continuous period of five years' residence in the UK, the last 12 months of which must have been as a holder of ILR. In most cases, an individual should be eligible for naturalization after a continuous period of residence of six years in the UK (five years to obtain ILR and one further year free of immigration conditions).

An individual married to a British citizen may be able to apply to naturalize as a British citizen if he or she has continuously resided in the UK for three years and is a holder of ILR at the time the application is made. In practice, because the partner of a British citizen can now only obtain ILR after five years, it still takes five years to qualify for naturalization in most circumstances. The UK allows dual nationality. However, not all countries allow dual nationality. Consequently, this should be confirmed before making an application.

Identity cards for non-EEA nationals. The government has introduced identity cards (Biometric Residence Permits, or BRP cards) for foreign nationals in the UK. BRP cards replace the stickers or vignettes in passports. Identity cards have now been introduced for all migrant worker categories, applications for ILR and applications for leave as an unmarried partner, same-sex partner or spouse. Individuals granted entry clearance now receive a vignette in their passport valid for 30 days and are required to collect their BRP cards from a participating post office in the UK on arrival.

Tuberculosis testing. Individuals resident in certain countries who are coming to the UK for more than six months are required to have a tuberculosis (TB) test.

An individual is given a chest X-ray to test for TB. If the result of the X-ray is not clear, the individual may also be asked to give a sputum sample (phlegm coughed up from the lungs).

If the test shows that the individual does not have TB, he or she is given a certificate that is valid for six months. This certificate must be included with the UK visa application.

A TB test is not required for the following individuals:
- Diplomats accredited to the UK
- Residents of the UK who are returning within two years of leaving
- Holders of certificates of entitlement (right of abode in the UK) for more than six months who are applying for another visa within six months of leaving their country of residence

All children must see a clinician who decides if they need a chest X-ray. Children under 11 will not normally have a chest X-ray. A parent must take his or her child to an approved clinic and complete a health questionnaire. If the clinician decides the child does not have TB, the clinician gives a certificate to the parent. This certificate must be included with the child's UK visa application.

A. Income tax

Who is liable

Territoriality. US citizens and resident aliens are subject to tax on their worldwide income, regardless of source. US citizens and resident aliens may exclude, however, up to USD108,700 (for 2021) of their foreign-earned income plus certain housing expenses if they meet specified qualifying tests and if they file US tax returns to claim the exclusion.

A nonresident alien is subject to US tax on income that is effectively connected with a US trade or business and on US-source fixed or determinable, annual or periodic gains, profits and income (generally investment income, including dividends, royalties and rental income). US-source investment income is taxed on a gross basis at a flat rate of 30%. Income effectively connected with a US trade or business is taxed after subtracting related deductions at the graduated rates listed in Rates. Portfolio interest and, generally, capital gains from the sale of stock in a US company are exempt from the 30% tax. Moreover, an election to tax rental income on a net basis is available. However, gains from sales of US real property interests are usually considered to be effectively connected income, and special complex rules apply.

Definition of resident. Residence for income tax purposes generally has no bearing on an individual's immigration status. Generally, foreign nationals may be considered resident aliens if they are lawful permanent residents ("green card" holders; see Section G) or if their physical presence in the United States meets the substantial presence test. Under the substantial presence test, a foreign national is deemed to be a US resident if the individual fulfills both of the following conditions:
- The individual is present in the United States for at least 31 days during the current year.
- The individual is considered to have been present in the United States for at least 183 days during a consecutive three-year test period that includes the current year, using a formula weighted with the following percentages:

Current year	100.00%
First preceding year	33.33%
Second preceding year	16.67%

For example, 122 days of presence during each of the three consecutive years causes a foreign national to be considered a US resident under the substantial presence test.

Among several exceptions to the substantial presence test are the following:
- Days present as a qualified student, teacher or trainee, or if a medical condition prevented departure, are not counted.
- An individual might claim to be a nonresident of the United States by virtue of having a closer connection (such as a tax home) to a foreign country.
- Bilateral income tax treaties may override domestic US tax rules for dual residents.

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) has issued regulations that require individuals to file statements with the IRS setting forth the facts that prove their claims for these exceptions.

In certain circumstances, it may be beneficial for an individual to be considered a resident of the United States for income tax purposes. An individual may make what is known as a first-year election to be treated as a resident in the year of arrival if certain conditions are met.

Income subject to tax. In general, gross income must be segregated into the following three separate baskets:
- Earned income, which is generally salary and earnings from active trades or businesses
- Portfolio income, which is generally investment income, including interest, dividends, certain royalties and gains from the disposition of investment property
- Passive income, which is generally income from traditional tax-shelter investments including real estate

Examples of items that are not included in taxable income are gifts, unrealized appreciation in the value of property, interest received on municipal bonds, certain amounts received (for example, death benefits paid) under US qualified life insurance contracts, certain employer-paid education costs, employer-paid retirement planning services, and qualified distributions from Roth individual retirement accounts (IRAs) or education savings accounts.

Employment income. In addition to cash payments, taxable salary generally includes all employer-paid items, except medical insurance premiums, pension contributions to a US qualified plan and, for qualifying individuals on short-term assignments of one year or less, meals and temporary housing expenses.

Education allowances provided by employers to their employees' children are taxable for income and social security tax purposes.

In general, a nonresident alien who performs personal services as an employee in the United States at any time during the tax year is considered to be engaged in a US trade or business. An exception to this rule applies to a nonresident alien performing services in the United States if all of the following conditions apply:
- The services are performed for a foreign employer.
- The employee is present no more than 90 days during the tax year.
- Compensation for the services does not exceed USD3,000.

These conditions are similar to those contained in many income tax treaties, although the treaties often expand the time limit to 183 days and increase or eliminate the maximum dollar amount of compensation.

If an employee does not fall under the above statutory exception or under a treaty exception, all US-source compensation received in that year is considered effectively connected income (not just the amount exceeding the USD3,000 limitation or the dollar limitation under a treaty). This income includes wages, bonuses and reimbursements for certain living expenses paid to, or on behalf of, the employee.

Compensation is considered to be from a US source if it is paid for services performed in the United States. The place where the income is paid or received is irrelevant in determining its source. If income is paid for services performed partly in the United States and partly in a foreign country, and if the amount of income attributable to services performed in the United States cannot be accurately determined, the US portion is determined on a work-day ratio basis. Fringe benefits that meet certain requirements are sourced to the person's principal place of work. These benefits include moving expenses, housing, primary and secondary education for dependents and local transportation.

Effectively connected income retains its character even if received before or after a US trade or business ceases operations. Consequently, wages for services performed in the United States, but received during a year in which a nonresident alien reports no US workdays, are taxed at the graduated rates instead of the flat 30% rate.

States often follow the federal tax treatment in determining if a nonresident alien's income is subject to state taxation; however, certain states tax income of a nonresident regardless of federal tax treatment or treaty relief.

Self-employment income. In general, a nonresident alien who performs independent personal services in the United States at any time during the tax year is considered to be engaged in a US trade or business.

Although subject to tax at the graduated rates, compensation paid to a nonresident alien for performing independent personal services in the United States is subject to a 30% withholding tax. A nonresident alien must file a US tax return to claim a refund or to pay any additional tax due. If compensation is exempt from US tax under an income tax treaty, a nonresident alien may request exemption from withholding by preparing Form 8233, Exemption from Withholding on Compensation for Independent Personal Services of a Nonresident Alien Individual, and then giving it to the withholding agent (payer). In addition, many US income tax treaties contain separate provisions affecting the taxation of independent personal services income.

Investment income. Dividends, interest income and capital gains are considered portfolio income and are generally taxed at the ordinary rates (however, see Capital gains and losses, and Dividends). Certain types of interest income, including interest on certain state and local government obligations, are exempt from federal tax, but may be subject to alternative minimum tax (AMT; see Rates).

Net income from the rental of real property and from royalties is aggregated with other income and taxed at the rates set forth in Rates. Foreign rental properties considered to be qualified business units have an additional filing requirement of Form 8858 from 2018 onward.

Directors' fees. In general, directors' fees are considered to be earnings from self-employment (see Self-employment income).

Deferred compensation and participation in foreign pension plans. The United States has very complex rules regarding the taxation of deferred compensation. If a plan of deferral does not meet the requirements of the law, significant penalties and interest may be charged. Complex rules apply to the taxation related to participation in a non-US retirement plan. In many cases, continued participation in the home country plan may result in income that is taxable in the United States. Certain income tax treaties attempt to address this issue.

Income from certain foreign corporations. Under a complex set of rules, US citizens and residents with ownership interests in "controlled foreign corporations" may be subject to US tax on certain categories of income, even if the income has not been distributed to them as a dividend. Beginning in 2018, the categories of income subject to current taxation are expanded. Individuals who were subject to these rules in 2017 were required to calculate a "transition tax" when filing their 2017 tax returns. The transition tax affected certain taxpayers in 2018 with fiscal year-ends. Taxpayers may have elected to pay the transition tax in eight annual installments.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options

Qualified stock option plans. Under incentive stock option (ISO) rules, options provided to employees under qualified stock option plans are not subject to tax at the time the option is granted nor at the time the employee exercises the option and buys the stock. However, at the time of exercise, the difference between the exercise price and the fair market value of the stock at the date of exercise is considered a tax preference item for AMT purposes (see Rates). Tax is levied at capital gains tax rates when the employee sells the stock (see Capital gains and losses). The employee's basis in the stock is the amount paid for the stock at the time the option is exercised. Consequently, the employee recognizes a capital gain or loss in the amount of the difference between the sale price and the grant price. For purposes of determining whether the capital gain is long-term or short-term, the holding period begins on the date after the option is exercised, not on the date the option is granted. Stock purchased under an ISO may not be sold within two years from the grant date and within one year from the exercise date. If the stock is sold before the expiration of the required holding period, any gain on the sale is treated as ordinary income.

Non-qualified stock option plans. A stock option provided to an employee under a non-qualified plan is taxed when it is granted if the option has a readily ascertainable fair market value at that time. An option that is not actively traded on an established market has a readily ascertainable fair market value only if all of the following conditions are met:

- The option is transferable.
- The option is exercisable immediately and in full when it is granted.
- No conditions or restrictions are placed on the option that would have a significant effect on its fair market value.
- The fair market value of the option privilege must be readily ascertainable.

The above conditions are seldom satisfied. Consequently, most non-qualified options that are not traded on an established market do not have a readily ascertainable fair market value and are not taxable at the date of grant.

The exercise of a non-qualified stock option triggers a taxable event. An employee recognizes ordinary income in the amount of the value of the stock purchased, less any amount paid for the stock or the option. When the stock is sold, the difference between the sale price and the fair market value of the stock at the date of exercise, if any, is taxed as a capital gain.

Capital gains and losses. Net capital gain income is taxed at ordinary rates, except that the maximum rate for long-term gains is limited to the following:

- 0% for married individuals filing jointly, with a maximum taxable income of USD80,800 (USD40,400 for single individuals)
- 15% for married individuals filing jointly, with a maximum taxable income of USD501,600 (USD445,850 for single individuals)
- 20% for married individuals filing jointly, with taxable income of more than USD501,600 (USD445,850 for single individuals)

Net capital gain is equal to the difference between net long-term capital gains over net short-term capital losses. Long-term refers to assets held longer than 12 months. Short-term capital gains are taxed as ordinary income at the rates set forth in Rates.

Investors who hold "qualified small business stock" may be entitled to exclude from income part or all of the gain realized on disposition of the stock.

Once every two years, US taxpayers, including resident aliens, may exclude up to USD250,000 (USD500,000 for married taxpayers filing jointly) of gain derived from the sale of a principal residence. To be eligible for the exclusion, the taxpayer must generally have owned the residence and used it as a principal residence for at least two of the five years immediately preceding the sale. However, if a taxpayer moves due to a change in place of employment, for health reasons or as a result of unforeseen circumstances, a fraction of the maximum exclusion amount is allowed in determining whether any taxable gain must be reported. The numerator of the fraction is generally the length of time the home is used as a principal residence, and the denominator is two years. The repayment of a foreign currency mortgage obligation may result in a taxable exchange-rate gain, regardless of any economic gain or loss on the sale of the principal residence. In certain cases, part of the gain on the sale of a principal residence may not be eligible for exclusion. To the extent the taxpayer has "non-qualified use" of the property, that portion of the gain (determined on a time basis over the total holding period of the property) is not eligible for exclusion from income. A complex set of rules applies to determine whether a particular use of the property, such as renting out the property or leaving it vacant, is considered a "non-qualified use."

Capital losses are fully deductible against capital gains. However, net capital losses are deductible against other income only up to an annual limit of USD3,000. Unused capital losses may be carried forward indefinitely. Losses attributable to personal assets (for example, a personal residence or an automobile) are not deductible.

Dividends. Dividends received by individuals from domestic corporations and "qualified foreign corporations" are taxed at the same special rates as those applicable to net capital gains, for both the regular tax and the alternative minimum tax. See Capital gains and losses for the tax rates.

To qualify for the 15% (or 0% or 20%) tax rate, the shareholder must hold a share of stock for more than 60 days during the 120-day period beginning 60 days before the ex-dividend date. Other dividends are taxed at ordinary rates.

Deductions

Deductible expenses. Certain types of deductions, including amounts related to producing gross income, are subtracted to arrive at adjusted gross income. Alimony payments to a former spouse and contributions to health savings accounts are among the most commonly claimed deductions in this category. See new rules below for post-2018 divorce agreements. Alimony (but not child support) must meet certain criteria, and must be included in the recipient's gross income, to be deductible by the payer. Child support payments are neither deductible by the payer nor includible in the income of the recipient. A tax of 30% generally must be withheld (and remitted to the IRS) from alimony paid by a US citizen or resident to a nonresident-alien former spouse. Certain US income tax treaties may reduce the 30% withholding tax rate (see Section E).

For divorce agreements executed after 31 December 2018 (or modified after that date to reflect the new tax rules), alimony payments are not deductible, and alimony received is not taxable.

Complex rules determine eligibility for other deductions from gross income. For example, depending on the taxpayer's income level, interest of up to USD2,500 on qualified educational loans, and individual retirement account (IRA) contributions of up to USD6,000 (USD7,000 if age 50 or older at the end of 2021) may be deducted.

After adjusted gross income is determined, a citizen or resident alien is entitled to claim the greater of itemized deductions or a standard deduction. The amount of the standard deduction varies, depending on the taxpayer's filing status. For 2021, the standard deduction is USD25,100 for married individuals filing a joint return, USD18,800 for a head of household, USD12,550 for a single (not married) individual and USD12,550 for a married taxpayer filing a separate return.

Itemized deductions include the following items:

- Unreimbursed medical expenses to the extent that they exceed 7.5% of adjusted gross income
- Income, general sales and property taxes of US states and localities, but limited to USD10,000 in total
- Foreign income taxes paid if a foreign tax credit is not elected
- Certain interest expenses, generally home mortgage interest and investment interest expenses, with new limitations with respect to home mortgage interest
- Casualty losses to the extent they are attributable to specified natural disasters
- Gambling losses to the extent of gambling winnings
- Charitable contributions made to qualified US charities

A nonresident alien may not use the standard deduction instead of actual itemized deductions. Also, the types of itemized deductions a nonresident alien may claim are limited to charitable contributions made to qualified US charities, and state and local taxes imposed on effectively connected income (limited to USD10,000). A nonresident alien may not claim an itemized deduction for medical expenses, taxes (other than state and local income taxes) or most interest expenses.

Business deductions. Self-employed individuals are entitled to the same deductions as employees, which after the 2017 Tax Cuts and Jobs Act are very limited. However, they may also deduct directly related ordinary and necessary business expenses. Special rules may apply to limit business deductions if a taxpayer's business activity does not result in a profit for three of five years. In this situation, the activity may be classified as a hobby, and the expenses are deductible only if they qualify as itemized deductions. Self-employed individuals may establish, and may deduct contributions paid to, their own retirement plans, subject to special limitations.

Beginning in 2018, taxpayers may be entitled to deduct up to 20% of their "qualified business income," when calculating taxable income. This 20% deduction is calculated under a complex set of rules. There are many limitations to this deduction, including whether the taxpayer operates a qualified business and whether the individual's taxable income is below the overall limit of USD164,900 (USD329,800 for married filing joint return). In general, qualified business income does not include income from performing services as an employee.

Rates. The applicable US tax rates depend on whether an individual is married or not and, if married, whether an individual elects to file a joint return with his or her spouse. Certain individuals also qualify to file as heads of households.

Unmarried nonresident aliens are taxed under the rates for single individuals. Married nonresidents whose spouses are also nonresidents are generally taxed under the rates for married persons filing separately.

The tax brackets and rates for 2021 are set forth in the tables below. The income brackets in these tables are indexed annually for inflation. The following are the tables.

Over USD523,600	USD157,804.25 plus 37% of the excess over USD523,600

The above rates are used to compute an individual's regular federal tax liability. In addition, higher income taxpayers (income over USD250,000 for married filing jointly and USD200,000 for single) are subject to a 3.8% tax on their "net investment income." The definition of "net investment income" is broad and essentially includes all income other than income from a trade or business. Compensation from personal services is generally excluded from this tax.

The United States also imposes alternative minimum tax (AMT) at a rate of 26% on alternative minimum taxable income, up to USD199,900, for all filers except USD99,950 for married filing separately and at a rate of 28% on alternative minimum taxable income exceeding USD199,900 for all filers except USD99,950 for married filing separately (long-term capital gains and qualified dividends are generally taxed at lower rates of 15% or 20%; see Capital gains and losses and Dividends).The primary purpose of AMT is to prevent individuals with substantial income from using preferential tax deductions (such as accelerated depreciation), exclusions (such as certain tax-exempt income) and credits to substantially reduce or to eliminate their tax liability. It is an alternative tax because, after an individual computes both the regular tax and AMT liabilities, the greater of the two amounts constitutes the final liability.

Some states, cities and municipalities also levy income tax. City or municipal income tax rates are generally 1% or lower. However, the top 2021 rate for residents of New York City is 3.876%. State income tax rates generally range from 0% to 12%. Therefore, an individual's total income tax liability depends on the state and the municipality where the individual resides or works. For a list of maximum state and certain local tax rates, see Appendix 1.

Credits. Tax credits directly reduce income tax liability rather than taxable income and therefore provide a dollar-for-dollar benefit. Most credits are limited, depending on the taxpayer's income level. Credits include a maximum USD14,440 credit for qualified adoption expenses, a USD2,000 child tax credit for dependents under 17 years of age (and who have a social security number), a USD500 credit for certain other dependents, and two alternative higher education credits, with maximums of USD2,000 and USD2,500, respectively. For 2021, the child tax credit is increased to USD3,600 for children 5 and under and USD3,000 for children age 6 to 17 if the income threshold is met.

Relief for losses. In general, passive losses, including those generated from limited-partnership investments or rental real estate, may be offset only against income generated from passive activities.

Limited relief may be available for real estate rental losses. For example, an individual who actively participates in rental activity may use up to USD25,000 of losses to offset other types of income. The USD25,000 offset is phased out for taxpayers with adjusted gross income of between USD100,000 and USD150,000, and special rules apply to married individuals filing separate tax returns.

Disallowed losses may be carried forward indefinitely and used to offset net passive income in future years. Any remaining loss may be used in full when a taxpayer sells the investment in a transaction that is recognized for tax purposes.

B. Other taxes

Net worth tax. No federal tax is levied on an individual's net worth. However, some states and municipalities impose a tax on an individual's net worth.

Estate and gift tax. US estate and gift taxes are imposed at graduated rates ranging from 18% to 40% on the value of property transferred by reason of death or gift. In general, citizens and residents are entitled to a unified exemption of USD10 million (indexed for inflation; USD11,700,000 for 2021) on these taxes. No exemption is available to non-US citizens or residents for gift tax purposes, and an exemption of only USD60,000 is available to non-US citizens or residents for estate tax purposes. A third transfer tax, known as the generation-skipping transfer (GST) tax, operates under a complex set of rules.

In general, transfers between spouses who are US citizens, or from a non-US citizen to a US citizen spouse, are not subject to estate or gift taxes. However, transfers from a US citizen to a non-US citizen spouse may be subject to estate or gift tax.

Like US income tax rules, US estate and gift tax rules differ, depending on whether a foreign national is considered to be a resident or nonresident alien. However, the distinction between residents and nonresidents differs from that under US income tax rules. For estate and gift tax purposes, a nonresident is a foreign national who is not a US citizen and whose domicile is outside the United States at the date of death or gift. A person's domicile is defined generally as the place the individual regards as his or her permanent home—that is, the place where he or she is living with no present intention of leaving.

Application of US estate and gift tax rules may be modified if a nonresident alien is a resident of a country that has entered into an estate and gift tax treaty with the United States. The United States currently has estate and/or gift tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Australia	France	Japan
Austria	Germany	Netherlands
Canada	Greece	South Africa
Denmark	Ireland	Switzerland
Finland	Italy	United Kingdom

Gift tax. US citizens and resident aliens are subject to gift tax on transfers of all property, tangible and intangible, regardless of the location of the property. Tax is imposed on the fair market value of property on the date of the gift, at graduated rates determined by the individual's cumulative lifetime transfers.

Each year, a donor is entitled to exclude from taxable income gifts of present interests valued at up to USD15,000 (for 2021) for each recipient. A husband and wife may elect to treat gifts made by one spouse as being made one-half by each spouse if both spouses are US citizens or residents. This gift-splitting election on joint gifts increases the annual exclusion to USD30,000 (for 2021) for each recipient. Gifts in excess of the annual exclusion are subject to taxes ranging from 18% to 40%. However, a credit may be used to offset this liability.

A US citizen or resident is exempt from gift tax on annual transfers (other than gifts of future interests in property) of up to USD159,000 for 2021) to a non-US citizen spouse.

Foreign nationals who are not domiciled in the United States must generally pay gift tax on transfers of real property and tangible personal property located in the United States. Intangible property, including stocks and bonds, is generally exempt. The gift tax rates for nonresidents are the same as those for citizens and residents. These nonresidents are allowed to give up to USD15,000 (for 2021) annually to each recipient with no gift tax consequences, but they may not split gifts with their spouses.

US citizens or resident aliens (as defined for income tax purposes) are required to report gifts or bequests from foreign corporations or partnerships in excess of USD16,649 (for 2021), in aggregate, but they are generally not subject to tax. However, the IRS has not required gifts from nonresident aliens or foreign estates to be reported unless the aggregate gifts exceed USD100,000. Substantial penalties may be imposed for failure to report such gifts or bequests.

Estate tax. The estate of a US citizen or resident includes all property, tangible and intangible, regardless of location.

Property transferred at death from a US citizen to a non-US citizen spouse is generally not excluded from the decedent's gross estate, unless the property is placed in a qualified domestic trust or the surviving spouse becomes a US citizen before the estate tax return is due. To be considered a qualified domestic trust, a trust must satisfy the following conditions:
- At least one trustee of the trust must be a US citizen or a domestic corporation, and no distribution (other than a distribution of income) from the trust may be made unless the US trustee has the right to withhold the US tax on that distribution.
- The trust must meet the requirements prescribed by Treasury Department regulations.
- The executor must make an irrevocable election to be treated as a qualified domestic trust on the estate tax return.

Estate tax is levied on the property in the trust if any of the following events occurs:
- The trust ceases at any time to meet the above requirements.
- The corpus is distributed prior to the surviving spouse's death, except in cases of hardship.
- The surviving spouse dies.

For US tax purposes, the estate of a nonresident includes only property deemed to be located in the United States. This generally includes tangible, intangible and real property located within the United States at the time of death. For this purpose, shares of US domestic corporations, US property owned through certain trusts and certain debt obligations of US residents are considered to be property located in the United States. In addition, in some instances, US property held by a partnership or limited liability company may be considered to be property located in the United States, but the law in this area is unclear. The estate tax rates are the same as those for citizens and residents. An estate tax return must be filed if the value of a nonresident alien's gross estate exceeds USD60,000.

Expatriation tax. Before 17 June 2008, the United States did not have an exit tax. However, former US citizens and former long-term permanent residents were subject to reporting requirements and potentially to US income tax under a complex set of rules generally in effect for 10 years following expatriation.

Effective from 17 June 2008, certain individuals known as "covered expatriates" are immediately taxed on the net unrealized gain in their property exceeding USD600,000 (indexed for inflation; USD744,000 for 2021) as if they sold the property for fair market value the day before expatriating or terminating their US residency. In general, "covered expatriates" are US citizens, or long-term residents ("green card" holders [see Section G] for any part of 8 tax years during the preceding 15 years) who either have a five-year average income tax liability exceeding USD124,000 (indexed for inflation; USD172,000 for 2021) or a net worth of USD2 million or more, or who have not complied with their US tax filing obligations for the preceding five years. This treatment applies to most types of property interests held by individuals.

The above rules also affect the taxation of certain deferred compensation items (including foreign and US pension plans, deferred compensation plans, and equity-based compensation plans), interests in and distributions from non-grantor trusts and certain tax-deferred accounts, such as so-called 529 plans, Coverdell education savings accounts and health-savings accounts. In many cases, the present value of the interest in the deferred compensation items and other tax-deferred accounts is subject to immediate taxation, but taxpayers can elect to defer the tax on pension and deferred compensation plans that have US payers until distributions are actually made. The USD600,000 (USD744,000 for 2021) threshold discussed above does not apply to deferred compensation items, non-grantor trusts or tax-deferred accounts.

At the election of the taxpayer, subject to approval of the IRS, payment of the exit tax may be deferred if adequate security is provided. Such deferral is irrevocable, carries an interest charge and requires the taxpayer to waive any treaty rights with respect to the taxation of the property.

US citizens or residents receiving gifts or bequests of more than USD10,000 (indexed for inflation; USD15,000 for 2021) from covered expatriates are taxed at the highest gift or estate tax rate currently in effect (40% in 2021). Under the general US rules of gift taxation, tax is assessed on the donor. However, the rule described above imposes tax on the US citizens or residents receiving the gifts. This rule does not have a time limit. The tax on gifts or bequests from a covered expatriate to a US citizen or resident may be assessed at any time such a gift or bequest is received after the expatriation of the covered expatriate.

C. Social security taxes

Social security tax. Under the Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA), social security tax is imposed on wages or salaries received by individual employees to fund retirement benefits paid by the federal government. The following two taxes are imposed under FICA:

- Old-age, survivors and disability insurance (OASDI)
- Hospital insurance (Medicare)

For 2021, the OASDI tax is imposed on the first USD142,800 at a rate of 6.2% on the employee and 6.2% on the employer. Medicare tax is imposed, without limit, at a rate of 1.45% on the employee and 1.45% on the employer. In addition, higher income employees (but not their employers) pay an extra 0.9% Medicare tax. The income threshold varies by tax return filing status. Married couples filing jointly pay the extra tax on their combined wages in excess of USD250,000, single taxpayers and heads of households on wages exceeding USD200,000, and married taxpayers filing separately on wages exceeding USD125,000. Self-employment income (see below) is added to the amount of wages when determining the threshold.

FICA tax is imposed on compensation for services performed in the United States, regardless of the citizenship or residence of the employee or employer. Consequently, absent an exception, non-resident alien employees who perform services in the United States are subject to FICA tax, even though they may be exempt from US income tax under a statutory rule or an income tax treaty. Certain categories of individuals are exempt from FICA tax, including foreign government employees, exchange visitors in the United States under J visas, foreign students holding F, M or Q visas, and individuals covered under social security totalization agreements between the United States and other countries. These agreements allow qualifying individuals to continue paying into the social security system of their home countries, usually for a period of five years.

Totalization agreements are currently in effect with the following jurisdictions.

Australia	Germany	Norway
Austria	Greece	Poland
Belgium	Hungary	Portugal
Brazil	Iceland	Slovak Republic
Canada	Ireland	Slovenia
Chile	Italy	Spain
Czech Republic	Japan	Sweden
Denmark	Korea (South)	Switzerland
Finland	Luxembourg	United Kingdom
France	Netherlands	Uruguay

An agreement with Mexico has been signed, but it is not yet in force.

Self-employment tax. Self-employment tax is imposed under the Self-Employment Contributions Act (SECA) on self-employment income, net of business expenses, that is derived by US citizens and resident aliens. The following two taxes are imposed under SECA:
• Old-age, survivors and disability insurance (OASDI)
• Hospital insurance (Medicare)

For 2021, the OASDI tax is imposed on the first USD142,800 of the net earnings of a self-employed individual at a rate of 12.4%. Medicare tax is imposed, without limit, at a rate of 2.9%. In addition, higher income individuals pay an extra 0.9% Medicare tax. The income threshold varies by tax return filing status. Married couples filing jointly pay the extra tax on their combined self-employment income in excess of USD250,000, single taxpayers and heads of households on self-employment income exceeding USD200,000, and married taxpayers filing separately on self-employment income exceeding USD125,000. Wage income (see above) is added to the amount of self-employment income when determining the threshold.

Self-employed individuals must pay the entire tax (unlike an employee who pays half the tax while the employer pays the other half of the tax) but may deduct 50% (not including the extra 0.9% Medicare tax) as a trade or business expense on their federal income tax return. No tax is payable if net earnings for the year are less than USD400. If a taxpayer has both wages subject to FICA tax and income subject to SECA tax, the wage base subject to FICA tax is used to reduce the income base subject to SECA tax. SECA tax is computed on the individual's US income tax return. Nonresident aliens are not subject to SECA tax unless they are required to pay the tax under a totalization agreement (see Social security tax).

Federal unemployment tax. Federal unemployment tax (FUTA) is imposed on employers' wage payments to employees. FUTA is imposed on income from services performed within the United States, regardless of the citizenship or residency of the employer or employee. It is also imposed on wages for services performed outside the United States for a US employer by US citizens. The 2021 tax rate is 6% on the first USD7,000 of wages of each employee. Most states also have unemployment taxes that are creditable against FUTA tax when paid. Self-employed individuals are not subject to FUTA tax.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

The US system of tax administration is based on the principle of self-assessment. US taxpayers must file tax returns annually with the IRS and with the state and local tax authorities under whose jurisdiction they live if those governments impose income or net worth taxes.

On the federal return, taxpayers must report income and deductions and must compute the tax due. Taxes are generally collected by employer withholding on wages and salaries and by individual payment of estimated taxes on income not subject to withholding. Normally, tax due in excess of amounts withheld and payments of estimated tax must be paid with the return when filed. The taxpayer may also claim a refund of an overpayment of tax on the annual return. Substantial penalties and interest are usually imposed on a taxpayer if a return is not filed on time or if tax payments, including estimated payments, are not made by the applicable due dates.

Tax returns may be selected for an audit at later dates by the IRS or state auditors. Failure to provide adequate support for amounts claimed as deductions on the return may result in the disallowance of deductions and in a greater tax liability, on which interest and/or penalties are levied from the original due date. In general, taxpayers must maintain supporting documentation for at least three years after a return is filed.

US citizens and resident aliens file Form 1040, US Individual Income Tax Return. The due date for calendar-year taxpayers is normally 15 April. Extensions to file tax returns may be obtained by filing a request with the IRS. However, an extension to file a return is not an extension to pay tax. To prevent interest and penalties from being charged on unpaid tax, a calendar-year taxpayer should pay any tax due by 15 April.

Nonresident aliens with reportable US gross income must generally file Form 1040NR, US Nonresident Alien Income Tax Return. This return is required even if a taxpayer has effectively connected income but no taxable income or if income is exempt under a tax treaty. Nonresident aliens are not required to file Form 1040NR if they are not engaged in a US trade or business during the tax year and if any tax liability on US-source investment (portfolio) income is satisfied by the 30% (or lower treaty rate) withholding tax.

If required, Form 1040NR is due on 15 April for nonresident aliens who earn wages subject to withholding; otherwise, the due date is normally 15 June. Extensions to file the return (but not to pay tax due) may be obtained by filing a request with the IRS.

An employer (US or foreign) is responsible for withholding US income and social security taxes from nonresident alien employees.

For years in which a foreign national is both a resident alien and a nonresident alien, two returns are generally prepared, attached to each other, and filed simultaneously. One return reports income and deductions for the resident period, and the other reports income and deductions for the nonresident period. The income from the nonresident period that is effectively connected with the taxpayer's US trade or business is combined with all income from the resident period for computation of the tax on income subject to graduated tax rates. The includible income and deductions are different for both portions of a dual-status year. For a cash-basis taxpayer, income is taxable when received. Therefore, foreign-source income earned while a taxpayer was a nonresident alien is taxable if it is received while the individual is a resident alien. Conversely, non-effectively connected foreign source income earned while a taxpayer was a resident alien is not taxed if it is received when the taxpayer is a nonresident alien. As a result, to avoid US tax on wages or a bonus for services performed outside of the United States, a foreign national transferring to the United States generally should receive the amount before arriving in this country.

Two elections are available to married aliens that enable them to file one tax return and qualify for the lower married filing joint return tax rates. The first election may be made by an individual who, at the close of the year, was a nonresident alien married to a US citizen or resident. The second election is available to an individual who, at the beginning of the year, was a nonresident alien and who, at the close of the year, was a resident alien married to a US citizen or resident. Under these elections, both spouses must make the election to be entitled to file the joint return. Under both elections, the nonresident alien spouse or part-year resident spouse is treated as a US resident for the entire year.

In addition to the income tax return filing requirements discussed above, the United States has information reporting rules, which affect certain US residents and citizens, and certain nonresidents. The rules cover interests and signature authority in foreign bank and other financial accounts and assets, including foreign pension plans, foreign corporations, foreign trusts and foreign partnerships. The reporting rules are extremely complex, and penalties (both civil and criminal) for failure to comply with the reporting requirements can be significant.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

A foreign tax credit is the principal instrument used by US individuals to avoid being taxed twice on foreign-source income—once by a foreign government and again by the United States. In general, the foreign tax credit permits a taxpayer to reduce US tax by the amount of income tax paid to a foreign government, subject to certain limitations.

The foreign tax credit is generally limited to the lesser of actual foreign taxes paid or accrued and US tax payable on foreign-source income. Separate limitations must be calculated for two principal categories of income. These categories are passive category income and general category income, which includes earnings from personal services. Under the separate limitation rules, foreign taxes paid on a particular category of income are available for credit against US tax imposed on foreign-source taxable income only in that category. A foreign tax credit is allowed against AMT liability (see Section A). Unused credits may be carried back 1 year and carried forward 10 years. There are additional categories of income that are less common, including income resourced under a treaty and foreign branch income.

Special rules apply to nonresident aliens who are residents of countries that have income tax treaties with the United States. For example, a treaty may reduce or eliminate the 30% tax rate applicable to dividends, interest and royalties. Treaties may also limit or eliminate the taxation of visitors who work in the United States on short-term assignments or may provide exemption from tax for teachers, professors, trainees, students and apprentices.

Even if a treaty provides for exemption from, or a reduction of, the 30% tax, this does not mean that the reduced rate applies automatically. Nonresident aliens must first claim their treaty benefits. For example, income tax withholding applies unless nonresident alien employees file statements with their employers (foreign or US) stating why they qualify for exemption from US tax under an income tax treaty clause. Similarly, foreign students, teachers and researchers must each complete Form 8233 and file it with their US institution or employer. Treaty benefits for other types of income, including royalties or interest, are obtained by filing the appropriate W-8 form.

If applicable, the withholding agent must notify the nonresident alien of the gross amounts paid and taxes withheld by 15 March of the following year. This is done on Form 1042-S, Foreign Person's US-Source Income Subject to Withholding. This form, when attached to the nonresident alien's US income tax return (Form 1040NR), provides proof of amounts withheld to the IRS.

The United States has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Australia	Indonesia	Portugal
Austria	Ireland	Romania

F. Nonimmigrant visas

In general, foreign nationals who wish to be admitted to the United States generally must first obtain authorization, and in many instances, must obtain visas from a US consulate or embassy. The activities to be performed in the United States determine the type of visa or authorization that individuals need to enter the United States. Visas are endorsed in passports and indicate that evidence of a legally sufficient purpose for admission was presented to a US consular official.

US immigration laws clearly distinguish between foreign nationals seeking temporary admission (nonimmigrants) and those intending to remain in the United States permanently (immigrants).

At US ports of entry, foreign nationals are inspected or questioned by Customs and Border Protection (CBP) officials to determine their eligibility to enter the United States and the duration of their initial periods of stay. Nearly all nationals admitted to the United States for temporary periods receive instructions to access an electronic Form I-94 online (https://i94.cbp.dhs.gov/I94/#/recent-search). The I-94 record indicates both the individual's status in the United States and the last date on which the individual may remain in the United States. The online portal also allows individuals to check their travel history from and to the United States, as captured by US authorities.

Different nonimmigrant visas authorize a variety of activities in the United States, including visiting, studying and working. The categories are identified by combinations of letters and numbers that authorize the particular visas, for example, B-1 visitors for business or the work authorized L-1 intracompany transferee.

Every nonimmigrant category permits a maximum length of stay and a range of permissible activities. The most commonly used categories of nonimmigrant visas are described in detail below.

Nonimmigrant visas allow visa holders to be admitted to the United States for a temporary period ranging from a few days to several years, depending on the visa category. In general, holders of nonimmigrant visas must intend to remain in the United States for a temporary period, not exceeding the validity of their I-94 document. Without this intent, and with notable exceptions, the applicant may be considered to be an intending immigrant, and must apply for an immigrant visa (see Section G).

With some notable exceptions, while a nonimmigrant is in the United States, he or she may apply to change to another nonimmigrant category or to extend the length of the authorized stay. However, most nonimmigrant visa categories have maximum stay limitations. Some categories of nonimmigrants may also become eligible for permanent residence or "green card" status (see Section G).

Business- and work-related nonimmigrant visas. A business that requires the immediate services of a particular employee ordinarily brings the employee to the United States first in a nonimmigrant category. If the employee wishes to remain in the United States on a permanent basis, the immigrant application process may begin while the employee is in the United States.

Several business-related nonimmigrant visa categories are described below.

Visitor for business—B-1. B-1 status is issued to people temporarily visiting the United States to engage in business on behalf of foreign employers. B-1 holders may not be employed by or receive salary from US employers, but, among other activities, they may negotiate contracts, sell company products, develop business leads and attend conferences and business meetings on behalf of their foreign employers. A temporary business visitor may accept reimbursement for incidental expenses such as travel expenses. A B-1 visitor must retain unrelinquished domicile in the foreign country to where he or she intends to return at the conclusion of his or her temporary US stay.

In general, business visitors with B-1 visas may enter the United States for periods of up to six months. However, B-1 status can be granted for a shorter period, often not exceeding 30 days, unless the business visitor can justify a longer period of admission. Applications for an extension beyond the initial entry period can be sought from the United States Citizenship and Immigration Service (USCIS).

The B-2 visa category is available for individuals who are traveling to the United States for tourism purposes, and not for business.

An individual may receive a combined B-1/B-2 multiple-entry visa from a US consulate. This allows the visa holder to enter the United States in either B-1 business visitor status or B-2 tourist status, depending on the purposes of his or her travel on a particular trip.

The B-1 visa category is heavily scrutinized because of its misuse in the past. Prior to commencement of travel, business visitors must determine the purpose and duration of the trip, their nationality and the nature of the activities that they will engage in to ensure that the activities are permissible under "business travel." It is the individual's activities in the United States (as opposed to any tax classifications or period of stay) that determine whether the travel may be appropriately designated as "business." As of 29 November 2016, nationals of China Mainland holding a 10-year B1/B2, B1 or B2 (visitor) visa are required to complete an Electronic Visa Update System (EVUS) enrollment to be admitted into the United States. Travelers who are subject to EVUS requirements but do not have valid enrollments will not be able to obtain a boarding pass or enter through a land port of entry. For more information, visit https://www.cbp.gov/contact.

Visa Waiver Program. The Visa Waiver Program (VWP) allows nationals of the following jurisdictions to visit the United States for business, as generally described above, or pleasure for up to 90 days without first obtaining B visas from US consular posts overseas.

The above list is updated occasionally; readers should check the Department of State website (https://travel.state.gov/content/travel/en/us-visas/tourism-visit/visa-waiver-program.html) for the current list before traveling.

All VWP travelers are required to obtain a travel authorization through the Department of Homeland Security's Electronic System for Travel Authorization (ESTA) before traveling to the United States. ESTA is an automated system used to determine the eligibility of visitors to travel to the United States under the VWP. ESTA is accessible online at https://esta.cbp.dhs.gov/esta/ for citizens of VWP countries.

Travelers are encouraged to apply as soon as travel is planned, and it is strongly suggested that they apply no later than 72 hours before travel to the United States. An approved ESTA travel authorization is valid for multiple entries into the United States and is generally valid, unless revoked, for up to two years or until the traveler's passport expires, whichever comes first. ESTA is not a guarantee of admission to the United States at a port of entry. ESTA approval only authorizes a traveler to board a carrier for travel to the United States under the VWP. Readers should review the US Department of State website for the most up-to-date information about ESTA.

Visa waiver status is strictly limited; an extension of stay or a change in status is not authorized. However, in an emergency situation, a local USCIS office may grant a 30-day extension. Business necessity is not generally considered an emergency situation for these purposes. In addition, visa waiver applicants who are found to be not admissible to the United States may be expeditiously removed without trial, or right to confer with counsel. At a minimum, machine-readable passports are required to take advantage of the VWP. Nationals of the Czech Republic, Estonia, Greece, Hungary, Korea (South), Latvia, Lithuania, Malta and the Slovak Republic require passports with an integrated chip containing the information from the data page. Citizens of Taiwan require passports with an integrated chip containing information from the passport data page and a national identification number. Please consult the US Department of State's website (https://travel.state.gov/content/travel/en/us-visas/tourism-visit/visa-waiver-program.html) for current passport requirements.

Under the Visa Waiver Program Improvement and Terrorist Travel Prevention Act of 2015, travelers in the following categories are no longer eligible to travel or be admitted to the United States under the VWP:

- Nationals of VWP countries who have traveled to or been present in Iran, Iraq, Sudan or Syria on or after 1 March 2011 (with limited exceptions for travel for diplomatic or military purposes in the service of a VWP country)
- Nationals of VWP countries who are also nationals of Iran, Iraq, Sudan or Syria

These individuals are still able to apply for a visa using the regular appointment process at a US embassy or consulate. For those who require a US visa for urgent business, medical or humanitarian travel to the United States, US embassies and consulates stand ready to handle applications on an expedited basis.

On 31 January 2020, in response to the COVID-19 pandemic, President Trump announced the suspension of the entry of and issuance of visas to immigrants or nonimmigrants who were physically present in China Mainland during the 14-day period before their entry or attempted entry into the United States. The list of jurisdictions was expanded to include Brazil, Iran, Ireland, the United Kingdom and the Schengen Area (Austria, Belgium, the Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, the Slovak Republic, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland).

On 25 January 2021, President Biden signed a proclamation continuing the suspension of entry of certain travelers who were physically present in the 14-day period before their entry or attempted entry into the United States and expanding restrictions to include travelers from South Africa.

Exceptions to the travel restrictions include the following:

- United States citizens and lawful permanent residents, and their spouse and/or minor children
- Parents of United States citizens and lawful permanent residents who are unmarried and under the age of 21
- Siblings of United States citizens and lawful permanent residents (provided both are unmarried and under the age of 21)
- Foreign diplomats traveling to the United States on A or G visas
- Air and sea crew traveling to the United States on C, D, or C1/D visas.

For the full list of exceptions, see the proclamations at https://www.whitehouse.gov/briefing-room/presidential-actions/2021/01/25/proclamation-on-the-suspension-of-entry-as-immigrants-and-non-immigrants-of-certain-additional-persons-who-pose-a-risk-of-transmitting-coronavirus-disease/.

On 27 May 2021, the Secretary of State made a national interest determination regarding categories of travelers eligible for exceptions related to the spread of COVID-19. Travelers subject to these proclamations due to their presence in Brazil, China Mainland, India, Iran, Ireland, South Africa, the United Kingdom and the Schengen area may nonetheless qualify for a national interest exception (NIE) if they meet one or more of the following criteria:

- Travelers seeking to provide vital support or executive direction for critical infrastructure
- Those traveling to provide vital support or executive direction for significant economic activity in the United States
- Journalists
- Students and certain academics covered by exchange visitor programs
- Immigrants
- Fiancés

The Department of State also continues to grant NIEs for qualified travelers seeking to enter the United States for purposes related to humanitarian travel, public health response and national security. These travelers and any others who believe their travel to be in the United States' national interest should also review the website of the nearest US embassy or consulate for instruction on how to contact them.

Specialty occupations—H-1B. The H-1B category covers foreign nationals employed in specialty occupations that require a theoretical and practical application of highly specialized knowledge, as well as a bachelor's degree or the equivalent in the field.

Before applying for an H-1B visa, an employer must file a Labor Condition Application (LCA) with the Department of Labor (DOL) and certify that, among other things, the foreign national will be paid at least the prevailing wage for the proffered position. On 15 March 2019, the DOL issued policy guidance regarding LCA posting requirements. A prospective employer must also provide notice of filing the application by posting a hard copy notice, electronic notification or, when applicable, notification to the company's bargaining representative. If posting by hard copy notice, the employer must post notice of filing the application in two conspicuous locations at the employment site for at least 10 consecutive business days.

If the employer meets the requirements, the holder of the H-1B status is entitled to a maximum six-year stay in the United States. In specified circumstances, extensions beyond the six-year limit may be available. Each year, only 65,000 H-1Bs are made available. In addition, regulations allow a further 20,000 H-1Bs to be issued to persons having a master's or higher degree from qualifying US post-secondary institutions. Readers should consult with the USCIS to confirm that the H-1B cap has not been changed by Congress or has not been reached for the current fiscal year. Beginning in April 2020, the USCIS implemented an H-1B Cap Registration Lottery Selection Process whereby employers were permitted to register the biographical and educational information for candidates they intended to sponsor in filing an H-1B petition. The USCIS received nearly 275,000 registrations between 1 March and 20 March 2020 for the 2021 fiscal year, of which 46%, or 126,500, hold advanced degrees from US institutions. The USCIS uses a computer-generated random selection process (lottery) to select the necessary amount of registrations to meet the numerical limits. If the USCIS does not receive sufficient H-1B petitions through the registration process, the department will hold additional lotteries.

Special, less onerous procedures and a specific quota apply to, and are set aside for, citizens of Chile and Singapore, stemming from free-trade agreements between those countries and the United States.

On 19 November 2018, a new ETA Form 9035, Labor Condition Application (LCA), was implemented by the DOL. The new LCA form requests that the employer disclose the following:

- Estimated number of workers that will perform work at the intended place of employment
- Whether the worker subject to the LCA will be placed with a secondary employer at the place of employment
- If the worker is placed with a secondary employer, the legal business name of the secondary employer

These revisions were made to improve transparency about the number of H-1B workers being sent to worksites, the locations at which H-1B workers will be placed and the entities with which H-1B workers will be placed.

Spouses and children of H-1B visa holders are eligible for H-4 status. Historically, such dependents were not authorized to work in the United States. However, beginning 26 May 2015, certain H-4 spouses may apply for employment authorization. H-4 spouses are eligible for employment authorization if the H-1B employee is the beneficiary of an approved I-140 employment-based petition (the I-140 is an employer-sponsored "green card" [see Section G] petition that is filed with USCIS) or has been granted H-1B status beyond the six-year H-1B maximum based on a Program Electronic Review Management (PERM) labor certification (see Section G) or an I-140 filed at least 365 days before requesting an extension of status beyond the six-year H-1B maximum.

Specialty occupations—Trainees—H-3. H-3 status may be issued to foreign nationals to enter the United States for up to two years to receive training and to develop skills that will be used in their careers abroad.

Trainees must participate in structured training programs at US companies. The programs must incorporate theoretical and practical instruction, and may not consist solely of on-the-job training. The training must be unavailable in the foreign national's home country, and the skills acquired must apply to work outside the United States.

For short-term training assignments (typically up to three months), an H-3 visa may not be required (for someone who falls under the VWP or who does not require a US visa), because in some instances the US immigration authorities recognize the "B-1 in lieu of an H-3" visa, which allows individuals to apply at a consulate (or in the case of the VWP, at the port of entry) for admission for the purpose of short-term training.

Spouses and unmarried children of H-3 visa holders are eligible for H-4 status, but are not permitted to work in the United States.

Treaty traders and treaty investors—E-1 and E-2. Foreign nationals who are citizens of countries that have treaties of friendship, commerce and navigation with the United States (see list below) may be admitted to the United States to invest in businesses or to engage in international trade under two categories of treaty-based visas, called E visas. The most common application process for these visas requires submission of documentation and attendance at an interview at a US consulate abroad.

The E-1 treaty trader category permits foreign nationals to enter the United States to engage in substantial trade in goods, services or technology with treaty countries. The US enterprise for which the foreign national works must be majority-owned by treaty-country nationals (either companies or individuals). An E-1 treaty trader must be employed in a supervisory or executive capacity or in a capacity that requires skills essential to the company.

The E-2 treaty investor category enables investors who are nationals of treaty countries and who invest substantial amounts of money in active US businesses to remain in the country to develop, direct and oversee the businesses. Managers, executives or employees with essential skills from treaty countries are also admissible on E-2 visas.

For E visa purposes, the nationality of an enterprise is determined by the nationality of the entity owning at least 50% of the enterprise.

Spouses and unmarried children under 21 years of age, regardless of nationality, may receive derivative E visas to accompany the principal visa holder. Spouses of E visa holders may apply for employment authorization following his or her entry into the United States. This document allows them to be employed with any employer in the United States.

Agreements between the United States and the following jurisdictions authorize treaty trader (E-1) and/or treaty investor (E-2) classifications for nationals of these jurisdictions (for a current list of treaty jurisdictions, please consult with the Department of State).

E-3 for Australians. The E-3 is a visa category available to nationals of Australia (E-3D visas are available to their children and spouses), limited to 10,500 per fiscal year. The E-3 status allows nationals of Australia to be admitted into the United States to work temporarily in a "specialty occupation" for an initial period of 24 months. The application for an initial E-3 visa can be made directly to a US consular mission abroad and requires a Labor Condition Application. The requirements for qualification for the new E-3 visa are very similar to the requirements for the H-1B category. After arrival in the United States, the spouse of an E-3 visa holder may apply directly to the USCIS for employment authorization in the United States. The spouse does not need to be a national of Australia to be eligible for employment authorization.

Intracompany transferees—L-1. The L-1 visa allows foreign companies with affiliated operations in the United States to transfer needed personnel to their US facilities. L-1 visas may be issued to foreign nationals who are employed abroad in executive or managerial positions, or who hold positions involving specialized knowledge in the company's procedures, processes, services and/or products.

On 15 November 2018, the USCIS issued a Policy Memorandum (PM) clarifying the requirement that the qualifying organization must have employed the principal L-1 beneficiary at the related foreign entity abroad for at least one continuous year during the three years preceding the time of petition filing. The PM explains the following:

- The L-1 beneficiary must be physically outside of the United States during the required one continuous year of employment.
- The petitioner and the beneficiary must meet all requirements, including the one year of foreign employment, at the time the petitioner files the initial L-1 petition.

Specifically, the PM states that while a qualifying foreign entity employs a beneficiary abroad, brief trips to the United States for business or pleasure in B-1 or B-2 status tolls the one continuous year of employment abroad. If the beneficiary made brief trips to the United States that year for a total of 60 days, the beneficiary would need to accrue at least an additional 60 days of qualifying employment to meet the one-year foreign employment requirement.

On arrival in the United States, the beneficiary must assume an executive, managerial or specialized knowledge position with the US affiliate, parent, subsidiary or branch office.

Managers and executives may be issued and retain L-1A status for up to seven years; L-1B specialized-knowledge personnel may remain in the United States in that status for up to five years.

For startup operations, L-1 visas are granted initially for a one-year "new office" period. For visa extensions, startup companies must prove at the end of the year that they are "doing business" in the United States and have made progress toward becoming viable operating entities that need the services of managers, executives or personnel with specialized knowledge. If, at the end of the first year, the startup company is unable to prove that this progress has been made, it may be possible for the individual to receive an extension of an additional year to continue to grow the business.

L-1B specialized knowledge visa holders may not work primarily at a worksite other than that of the petitioning employer if either of the following conditions will apply:

- The work to be carried out will be controlled by a different employer.
- The off-site arrangement will provide labor for hire, rather than service related to the specialized knowledge of the petitioning employer.

The L-2 category is set aside for immediate family members (spouse and child) of the L-1 beneficiary. An L-1 visa holder's spouse who holds L-2 status may apply for employment authorization following his or her entry into the United States. This document allows them to be employed with any employer in the United States.

Over the past several years, USCIS service centers have shown a clear trend toward higher scrutiny of L-1 petitions, resulting in greatly increased rates for requests for additional evidence and denials. This increased scrutiny has been applied across the board with L-1 petitions, but has been most evident for petitions involving startup companies and for personnel possessing specialized knowledge.

Starting in December 2018, CBP officers at preclearance offices and land ports of entry began refusing to adjudicate extension/ renewal blanket and individual L-1 petitions for readmission for Canadian citizens.

North American Trade Agreement Professionals—TN. Canadian and Mexican citizens are eligible to apply for TN status in the United States pursuant to the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) of 1993 between Canada, Mexico, and the United States. TN status provides a Canadian or Mexican foreign national with temporary authorization to work for a US employer at a professional level. The professional must be coming to the United States to engage in one of the professions expressly enumerated in Appendix 1603.D.1 of the NAFTA and have the appropriate degree and/or experience to perform the duties of the profession. In addition, the work must be pre-arranged to be performed for a US entity.

TN status may be granted for up to a three-year increment. No maximum limit is imposed on the amount of time that a foreign national may apply for and obtain TN status if the foreign national can demonstrate an intention to depart the United States before the end of the authorized period of stay. Spouses and children of a foreign national with TN status may qualify for derivative or "TD" status in the United States. TD status allows a spouse or child to attend school but not to work.

Canadians may apply for admission to the United States by presenting the TN application materials in person at designated air or land ports of entry. Before traveling to the port of entry, Canadians have the option of applying for pre-approval by submitting a petition to the USCIS. Mexican nationals must apply for a TN visa at the US consulate. As part of the consular application process, Mexican citizens may present a Form I-797 (petition approval notice) from the USCIS; alternatively, Mexican citizens may submit the TN supporting documents directly to the US consulate for adjudication. Mexicans may then present the visa at the port of entry to be admitted to the United States with TN status. If a Mexican or Canadian TN applicant is already in the United States, it is generally possible to apply with the USCIS for change of status or extension of status.

On 1 October 2018, President Trump announced an agreement with Canada and Mexico to replace the existing NAFTA with a new agreement called the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA), which went into effect on 1 July 2020. However, the countries retained existing NAFTA language on TN visas.

Extraordinary ability—O-1. The O-1 visa category is for persons of extraordinary ability in the sciences, arts, education, business or athletics. Separate tests for demonstrating extraordinary ability exist for the following categories of individuals:

- Foreign nationals in the motion picture and television industries
- Other foreign nationals

Most foreign nationals must prove their claim of extraordinary ability by providing evidence of sustained national or international acclaim. They may enter the United States only to work in their fields, and US immigration authorities must determine that their entry substantially benefits the United States. O-1 petitions are submitted to the USCIS for adjudication, and in some instances must be accompanied by proof of consultation with appropriate US labor unions (particularly those representing individuals in the arts, entertainment or athletics).

The O-3 category is set aside for spouses and minor children of O visa holders. No employment authorization is available to holders of O-3 category visas.

Performing artists and athletes—P. The P visa category is reserved for certain performing artists and athletes. This visa status contains the following subcategories:

- P-1: internationally recognized entertainers and athletes. The P-1A classification is for persons who are coming to the United States in order to perform at a specific athletic competition as one of the following:
  - An internationally recognized athlete
  - Part of an internationally recognized group or team
  - A professional athlete
  - An athlete or coach, who is part of a team or franchise located in the United States and a member of a foreign league or association

  The P-1B classification is for individuals coming to the United States to perform as a member of an internationally recognized entertainment group. The P-1S classification is for "Essential Support Personnel" who are an integral part of the performance of a P-1 nonimmigrant, and who perform support services that cannot be readily performed by a US worker. Initial approvals for P-1S petitioners are limited to the period of time necessary to complete the event, not to exceed one year, regardless of the initial authorized stay approved for the related P-1A nonimmigrant.
- P-2: reciprocal exchange artists and entertainers who will perform under a reciprocal exchange program between an organization in the United States and an organization in another country. The P-2S classification is available for "Essential Support Personnel" who support the P-2 artist or entertainer.
- P-3: culturally unique artists and entertainers coming temporarily to perform, teach or coach as artists or entertainers, individually or as part of a group. The P-3S classification is available for "Essential Support Personnel" who support the P-3 artist or entertainer.
- P-4: family members of P-1 to P-3 visa holders.

Employment visas as part of a course of study. Several nonimmigrant visa categories, which are outlined below, apply specifically to business trainees, researchers and students.

Exchange visitors—J-1. Visas for exchange visitors (J-1 visas) enable certain sponsoring institutions with exchange programs to bring students, researchers, business and industrial trainees, and others to the United States to participate in training programs administered by the Department of State's Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs and the Office of Exchange Coordination and Designation. The following J-1 categories, each having their own specific rules, exist:

- Post-secondary students
- Secondary students
- Short-term scholars
- Summer work travel applicants
- Interns
- Trainees
- Teachers
- Professors and research scholars
- Alien physicians
- Au pairs
- Other categories

Subject to the Department of State's approval, a company may establish its own training program or work with an organization already recognized for sponsoring training programs. A trainee may be engaged in any productive employment that provides knowledge of specific firm practices in the United States or of US business procedures in general. J-1 trainees are typically authorized to remain in the United States for up to 18 months, but the validity period for the other J-1 categories listed above may differ. Some program participants are required to return to their home country for two years before they become eligible to re-enter the United States.

J-1 regulations focus on the distinction between work (that is, gainful employment) and legitimate training. Prospective J-1 training sponsors must submit detailed descriptions of their training programs and of their goals and objectives.

Derivative J-2 visas may be issued to a spouse or unmarried child under age 21, and J-2 spouses may apply for employment authorization, which allows them to be employed with any US employer.

Academic students—F. Students enrolled in academic institutions may be allowed to work on campus during their studies and during school vacations. Students also may be authorized to engage in practical training at a US employer during their studies or for one year after graduation. Students seeking post-graduation practical training must obtain school approval and employment authorization documents from the USCIS before they begin working. Some F-1 holders may obtain a 17-month extension (up to 29 months total) to their work authorization if they have completed a degree in science, technology, engineering or mathematics and if they have accepted employment with employers enrolled in the USCIS's E-Verify electronic employment verification program. Students should consult with their Designated School Officials and/or the USCIS before requesting an extension of their work authorization.

Non-academic students—M. Students who have completed a course of non-academic education may engage in practical training for up to six months, depending on the length of the educational program.

G. Immigrant visas

Permanent resident or immigrant visas, which are commonly referred to as "green cards," are issued to those intending to reside permanently in the United States. Immigrant visa holders may live and work in the United States with few restrictions. After a period of physical presence and continuous residence of either three or five years (depending on the basis on which the individual obtained the green card), immigrant visa holders may, but are not required to, apply for US citizenship.

Nine preference categories of immigrant visas are available to foreign nationals. Four categories are based on family relationships, and five are based on US employment (see details below).

Immigrant visas based on family relations or US employment are subject to the visa being available. The Department of State publishes current immigrant visa availability information in a monthly Visa Bulletin. The Visa Bulletin indicates when statutorily limited visas are available to prospective immigrants based on their individual priority date. The priority date is generally the date when the applicant's relative or employer properly filed the immigrant visa petition on the applicant's behalf with the USCIS. If a labor certification is required to be filed with the applicant's immigrant visa petition, the priority date is when the labor certification application was accepted for processing by the DOL. Availability of an immigrant visa means that eligible applicants are able to take one of the final steps in the process of becoming US permanent residents. Availability of the visas change from month to month and generally are more restrictive for nationals of China Mainland, India, Mexico and the Philippines.

Immigrant visas may also be obtained in accordance with the diversity immigration visa program (visa lottery). Under this program, 50,000 diversity visas are available annually to nationals of many, but not all, foreign countries. Such individuals may qualify for diversity visas if they have completed at least a high school education or its equivalent, or if they have worked at least two years in occupations that require two or more years of training or experience. Each diversity visa applicant may file only one application per year; multiple applications void all previous applications. Foreign nationals are chosen at random and are eligible to receive diversity visas only in the fiscal year in which they are selected. In most cases, persons qualify on the basis of the jurisdiction in which the applicant was born. However, a person may be able to qualify in two other ways. Under the first alternative, if a person was born in a jurisdiction whose natives are ineligible but his or her spouse was born in a jurisdiction whose natives are eligible, such person can claim the spouse's jurisdiction of birth, provided both the applicant and spouse are issued visas and enter the United States simultaneously. Under the second alternative, if a person was born in a jurisdiction whose natives are ineligible, but neither of his or her parents was born there or resided there at the time of his or her birth, such person may claim nativity in one of the parents' jurisdiction of birth, provided the natives of such jurisdiction qualify to apply for the program.

Potential applicants should check the availability of diversity visas with respect to their nationality before applying. For additional information, see https://travel.state.gov/content/visas/en/immigrate/diversity-visa/entry.html. Currently, natives of the following jurisdictions are not eligible to apply under the visa lottery.

- Bangladesh
- Brazil
- Canada
- China Mainland (including Hong Kong)
- Colombia
- Dominican Republic
- El Salvador
- Haiti
- Honduras
- India
- Jamaica
- Korea (South)
- Mexico
- Nigeria
- Pakistan
- Peru
- Philippines
- United Kingdom (except Northern Ireland) and its dependent territories*
- Vietnam

* The United Kingdom includes the following dependent areas:
- Anguilla
- Bermuda
- British Virgin Islands
- Cayman Islands
- Falkland Islands
- Gibraltar
- Montserrat
- Pitcairn
- St. Helena
- Turks and Caicos Islands

Natives born in the Gaza Strip are chargeable to Egypt for the visa lottery for 2022 and should use Egypt as their jurisdiction of birth.

Persons born Macau and Taiwan are eligible. Please consult with the US Department of State for a current list and lottery instructions.

Categories of employment-based immigrant visas. The five categories of immigrant visas described below may allow foreign nationals to immigrate to the United States on an employment-related basis.

First preference—priority workers. Foreign nationals who fall into one of the following categories are classified as priority workers; no labor certification (see Steps for obtaining employment-based immigrant visas) is required for these workers:
- Foreign nationals with extraordinary ability in the sciences, arts, education, business or athletics who satisfy the following conditions:
  - They have received sustained national or international acclaim or awards of excellence.
  - Their achievements are recognized through extensive documentation, such as evidence of original contributions of major significance in the field.
  - They intend to work in their area of ability.

  No offer of employment is required.
- Professors and researchers who have received international recognition as outstanding in a specific field who satisfy the following conditions:
  - They have at least three years' experience in teaching or research in their field.
  - They have been offered tenure or tenure-track teaching or research positions.
  - They have made original scientific or scholarly research contributions in the field.

- Multinational executives and managers who have been employed in executive or managerial capacities with their sponsoring employers abroad for at least one year in the three years preceding their admission into the United States and who intend to continue to work for those US employers, subsidiaries or affiliates in an executive or managerial capacity.

Second preference—professionals holding advanced degrees and aliens of exceptional ability. Foreign nationals holding advanced degrees (or the equivalent) and aliens of exceptional ability may be issued immigrant visas. Labor certifications are required for these individuals. Individuals whose US job positions require these certifications and who fulfill the following conditions may qualify:

- They have earned an advanced degree: master's degree or bachelor's degree plus five years' progressively more responsible experience in the field.
- They have "exceptional ability" in the sciences, arts or business. "Exceptional ability" means "a degree of expertise significantly above that ordinarily encountered in the sciences, arts or business."

Foreign nationals may also petition for a National Interest Waiver (NIW) through the second preference category, in which they request a waiver of the labor certification requirement. To qualify, an individual must demonstrate exceptional ability and that his or her permanent employment in the United States would greatly benefit the national interest. The foreign national must meet specified criteria demonstrating experience and excellence in his or her field and the anticipated contribution to the United States.

Third preference—skilled workers, professionals holding a US baccalaureate degree and other workers. Individuals in certain categories may be issued immigrant visas on job-related bases. Labor certifications are required for these individuals. The following are the categories:

- Skilled workers, not temporary or seasonal, with a minimum of two years' training or experience
- Professionals with baccalaureate degrees (does not include three-year baccalaureate programs)
- Other workers, including unskilled laborers, who are neither temporary nor seasonal

Fourth preference—special immigrants. Foreign nationals classified as special immigrants (including religious workers, certain medical doctors who have continuously practiced medicine in the United States since 1978 and long-time US government workers abroad), may be issued immigrant visas on job-related bases. These individuals do not require labor certifications.

Fifth preference—immigrant investors. Foreign nationals investing at least USD1 million in a US commercial enterprise that preserves or provides full-time employment for at least 10 US workers may be issued immigrant visas. Investment of as little as USD500,000 in targeted employment areas may qualify an investor for this status. Although no offer of employment or labor certification is required, strictly passive investments do not qualify. Approximately 10,000 visas are allocated to this category each year. The immigrant visa quota mechanisms include protections to ensure that immigrants from all countries have an opportunity to utilize the category.

Steps for obtaining employment-based immigrant visas. To obtain permanent residence under an employment-based immigrant visa is a two or three-step process. The following are the steps:

- A labor certification application (for second and third preference categories only)
- An immigrant visa petition
- An application for permanent residence status

Labor certification. Obtaining a labor certification approval is very complex, and it is highly advisable to seek legal counsel.

For certain employment-based immigrant visa categories, labor certification is the first step in the process of immigrating to the United States. The employer submits an application to the DOL to certify that an adequate test of the labor market for qualified and available US workers has been undertaken and that the immigrant's employment will not adversely affect wages or working conditions in the United States. Labor certifications are issued in accordance with regulations for the permanent employment of aliens in the United States under the Program Electronic Review Management (PERM) process.

To obtain labor certification, an employer must make good faith efforts to recruit US workers for the position by following detailed and specified recruitment procedures.

A labor certification is not issued if the labor market test results in a US worker applicant who is qualified and available for the position, even if the foreign national is more qualified than the US worker applicant.

The employer must also offer a salary that is equal to or greater than the prevailing wage paid to workers with comparable job duties in the region that the position is being offered.

Schedule A: Pre-certified occupations. For certain positions requiring labor certification, the labor market test is not required. The DOL has established certain pre-certified positions and acknowledges that hiring foreign nationals for these jobs does not adversely affect US workers or wages. These jobs, referred to as Schedule A positions, currently include the following two major groups of occupations:

- Group 1: Physical therapists and professional nurses
- Group 2: Aliens of exceptional ability in the performing arts, sciences and arts, including college and university teachers, who are outstanding in their fields

Multinational executives and managers: Exempt labor certification. Foreign nationals applying for lawful permanent resident status under the employment-based, first preference, multinational manager or executive category do not require a labor certification.

Immigrant visa petition. After the labor certification petition is approved (if required), the second step to obtain an immigrant visa, and ultimately permanent residence, is filing an immigrant visa petition. The prospective employer must petition the USCIS to classify the foreign national under a recognized employment-based preference classification. The employer must prove that the foreign national is qualified for the position and that the employer has the ability to pay the offered wage.

Application for permanent residence status. A foreign national wishing to obtain permanent residence status must apply either for an immigrant visa or for adjustment of status as a lawful permanent resident within a preference classification. Applications for adjustment of status to lawful permanent residence may be filed after the immigrant visa petition is approved or, under certain circumstances, may be filed concurrently with the immigrant visa petition. The principal foreign national and his or her spouse and unmarried children younger than 21 years of age must each file separate applications.

Alternatively, immigrant visas are issued overseas at US embassies and consulates in the immigrants' home countries. Applicants not physically present in the United States must ordinarily remain outside the country during the immigrant visa processing periods. In most cases, foreign nationals who have entered with visas may apply for permanent residence in the United States by filing an application for adjustment of status (see Adjustment of status in the United States).

Processing overseas at a US consulate. The USCIS immigrant visa petition approval is forwarded to the National Visa Center, which collects biographic information, as well as certificates of birth, marriage and divorce. Foreign nationals must also submit police certificates from all places where they have resided for longer than six months since the age of 16. After the National Visa Center has collected the required information and documents, the application is transmitted to the US consulate handling immigrant visas in the country where the foreign national resides. The consulate then provides instructions for a medical examination and in-person interview.

Adjustment of status in the United States. Foreign nationals who have maintained lawful nonimmigrant status in the United States may be allowed to apply for permanent residence through an adjustment of status application. If a foreign national violates his or her nonimmigrant status, he or she may still be eligible to file for an adjustment of status in the United States under certain circumstances; however, that determination is made on an individual basis.

After filing an adjustment of status application, an applicant ordinarily remains in the United States. In many cases, departing without prior USCIS permission cancels the application. Consequently, the applicant should apply to the USCIS for an advance parole. Advance parole grants permission to re-enter the United States and prevents the USCIS from concluding that an adjustment of status application has been abandoned. An exception also exists for travel in H or L status under certain circumstances. Advance parole applications should be filed well in advance of the intended travel date.

Applicants for adjustment of status (including family members) may apply for and obtain an Employment Authorization Document permitting them to be employed by any employer pending the finalization of the adjustment application.

Categories of family-based immigrant visas. Under existing rules, many but not all family relationships may qualify an individual for lawful permanent residence status. Qualifying relationships allow the sponsorship of family members, including immediate relatives, such as the following:

- Spouses of US citizens
- Minor unmarried children under age 21 of US citizens
- Parents of US citizens who are at least age 21
- In limited circumstances, spouses of deceased US citizens

In addition, family preference categories allow for the submission of an immigrant petition on behalf of certain groups. However, these groups have historically experienced severe backlogs as a result of annual demand exceeding annual quotas. The following are the groups:

- Unmarried sons or daughters of US citizens
- Spouses or minor children of foreign nationals lawfully admitted for permanent residence
- Unmarried sons or daughters of foreign nationals lawfully admitted for permanent residence
- Married sons or daughters of US citizens
- Brothers or sisters of US citizens who are at least age 21

Loss of permanent residence status. Foreign nationals may lose their US permanent residence status in several ways. The most common means is through abandonment, either by intent or by an act deemed to indicate intent to abandon residence, such as continuous absence from the United States over a long period of time or failure to file US federal income tax returns as a resident of the United States. Permanent residents may also lose their status if they commit a prohibited act, including conviction for certain crimes. Permanent residence may also be rescinded if an application is found to have been fraudulent.

Absence of less than six months from the United States by a permanent resident usually does not constitute abandonment if the foreign national returns to an unrelinquished US domicile. However, an absence of one year or longer generally does constitute abandonment, unless the individual has a re-entry permit. Consequently, permanent residents who remain outside the United States for longer than six months should consider obtaining re-entry permits. A re-entry permit may allow an otherwise eligible individual to reenter the United States after up to two years of continuous absence.

Obtaining a re-entry permit requires a statement that the foreign national intends to leave the United States only temporarily. The application for a re-entry permit may be denied if the permanent resident has been living overseas with only occasional visits to the United States, if he or she expresses no intent to return to a US residence within a fixed period of time, or if he or she has no ties to the United states, such as real or personal US property.

H. Family and personal considerations

Family members. The spouse and minor children of a nonimmigrant visa holder may accompany the nonimmigrant to the United States for the duration of the principal foreign national's visa. Specific nonimmigrant visas are issued to accompanying family members (see Section F). Under many derivative visa categories, spouses and children of the primary visa holder may attend school during the family's stay in the United States without a separate student visa. Spouses of L, E and some H-1B visa holders may apply for permission to work in the United States, and spouses of J visa holders are usually granted work authorization in case of economic necessity. Spouses of holders of other types of visas and dependent children seeking to work must qualify independently for a working visa. Same-sex spouses are eligible for dependent status and benefits if the marriage is legally recognized in the jurisdiction in which the marriage occurred. In addition, unmarried partners who are not otherwise eligible for derivative visas as a principal applicant's spouse (for example, unmarried cohabiting partners and domestic partnerships) may be eligible for extended B-2 visitor for pleasure visas, which allows them to accompany a nonimmigrant to the United States.

The spouse and children of potential immigrants may file accompanying applications for permanent resident status. They are issued permanent residence simultaneously if the principal foreign-national immigrant is granted permanent residence and if they are not individually ineligible to receive immigrant visas.

Change of address after entering the United States. All non-US citizens remaining in the country for 30 days or more must report any change in address within 10 days after the change by filing Form AR-11 with the USCIS. The AR-11 form can be filed online.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. The US Virgin Islands income tax system mirrors the US income tax system. The applicable law is the US IRC, with "US Virgin Islands" substituted for all references to the "United States." For a description of the income taxation of individuals who are bona fide residents of the US Virgin Islands, refer to the chapter in this book on the United States and substitute "US Virgin Islands" for each reference to the "United States."

Bona fide residents of the US Virgin Islands are taxed on their worldwide income. The US Virgin Islands tax liability of other US citizens or residents with US Virgin Islands-source income is based on the ratio of their adjusted gross income derived from US Virgin Islands sources to their adjusted gross income worldwide.

An individual is considered to be a bona fide resident of the US Virgin Islands if he or she satisfies all of the following conditions:

- He or she is present for at least 183 days during the year in the US Virgin Islands. This determination is made under the applicable rules under the substantial presence test.
- He or she does not have a tax home outside the US Virgin Islands during the tax year.
- He or she does not have a closer connection to the United States or a foreign country than to the US Virgin Islands.

Individuals who are not US citizens or bona fide residents of either the United States or the US Virgin Islands must pay taxes on US Virgin Islands-source income and on income effectively connected with a US Virgin Islands trade or business. For US Virgin Islands tax purposes, rules similar to the rules for determining whether income is income from sources within the United States or is effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States apply for purposes of determining whether income is from sources within the US Virgin Islands. However, any income treated as income from sources within the United States or as effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States may not be treated as income from sources within the US Virgin Islands or as effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the US Virgin Islands.

Under IRC Section 937 and Treasury Regulation Section 1.937-1(h), effective from 2001, an individual with worldwide gross income of more than USD75,000 must file Form 8898 for the tax year in which he or she becomes or ceases to be a bona fide resident of one of the US Virgin Islands, among other US possessions.

For married individuals, the USD75,000 filing threshold applies to each spouse separately.

Income subject to tax. Income tax provisions in the US Virgin Islands governing the computation of taxable income, including employment and business income, directors' fees, investment income, income from certain foreign corporations and capital gains, as well as the availability of deductible expenses and personal deductions and allowances, are the same as those in the United States. The taxation of employer-provided stock options in the US Virgin Islands is the same as in the United States.

The rules for the taxation of nonresidents are the same as the US rules for nonresidents of the United States, except that the withholding tax rate is 10% instead of 30%. Generally, it has been indicated in certain publications of the USVI Government that the 10% withholding tax should not apply to payments to US residents because they are not considered foreign for USVI purposes.

Rates. The income tax rates are the same as those in the United States.

B. Estate and gift taxes

US federal estate and gift taxes. The US federal estate tax applies in the US Virgin Islands and is administered by the US Internal Revenue Service (IRS). Federal estate tax returns are filed with the IRS in the United States. Federal estate tax is payable by all US Virgin Islands estates with a value that exceeds total exemptions granted by the US IRC. Persons who are US citizens because they are born or naturalized in the US Virgin Islands and who are US Virgin Islands residents at the time of their death are treated as nonresidents, not as citizens of the United States, for federal estate tax purposes. These US Virgin Islands residents are subject to US estate tax on the part of their gross estate that is situated in the United States at the time of their death.

US citizens residing in the US Virgin Islands who make gifts exceeding the annual exclusion (generally USD15,000 for each recipient in 2021) must file a federal gift tax return with the IRS. A limited exemption may apply to gifts of US Virgin Islands assets made by persons naturalized or born in the US Virgin Islands.

US Virgin Islands inheritance and gift tax. The rates of US Virgin Islands inheritance and gift taxes vary, depending on the relationship of the beneficiary or donee to the deceased or donor. The rates range from 2.5% to 7.5%. The exemptions included in the law are so broad, however, that these taxes usually apply only to inheritances received in the US Virgin Islands from persons who neither reside in the US Virgin Islands nor own property in the US Virgin Islands, and to gifts of US Virgin Islands property made by persons who do not reside in the US Virgin Islands.

C. Social security

US social security (FICA) and self-employment taxes are imposed in the US Virgin Islands. Payments are remitted to the US mainland rather than to the Virgin Islands Bureau of Internal Revenue.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

In general, the tax year for individuals in the US Virgin Islands is the calendar year. The US Virgin Islands system of tax administration is based on the principle of self-assessment. In general, taxpayers must file returns with the Virgin Islands Bureau of Internal Revenue or the IRS, depending on their residence status and the source of their income. Taxes are generally collected by employer withholding on wages and salaries and by individual payment of estimated taxes on income not subject to withholding. Normally, tax due in excess of amounts withheld and payments of estimated tax must be paid with the return when filed. Taxpayers may claim refunds of overpayments of tax on annual returns. Substantial penalties and interest are usually imposed on taxpayers if returns are not filed on time or if tax payments, including estimated payments, are late.

Tax returns may be selected for audit at a later date by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Failure to adequately support amounts claimed as deductions on a return may result in the disallowance of deductions and in a greater tax liability, on which interest and penalties are levied from the original due date. In general, taxpayers must maintain supporting documentation for at least three years after a return is filed.

US Virgin Islands resident. A bona fide resident of the US Virgin Islands (see Section A) must file a US annual return (Form 1040) with the Virgin Islands Bureau of Internal Revenue. The return is due on or before the fifteenth day of the fourth month following the close of the tax year. A US Virgin Islands resident with income from sources outside the US Virgin Islands must also complete and attach Form 1040 INFO to their tax return to report such income to the US Virgin Islands Bureau of Internal Revenue. A person who is a bona fide resident of the US Virgin Islands on the last day of the year is not required to file a tax return with the IRS if the taxpayer reports and pays tax on income from all sources to the US Virgin Islands and identifies the sources of the income on the return.

US citizen or resident alien. A US citizen or resident alien who is not a bona fide resident of the US Virgin Islands and who has income from sources in the US Virgin Islands or income effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the US Virgin Islands, must file identical returns with the United States and the US Virgin Islands. The amount of tax that must be paid to the US Virgin Islands is computed using Form 8689. The tax is calculated by multiplying the total tax on the US return (after certain adjustments) by a decimal, which is computed by dividing the adjusted gross income from the US Virgin Islands by worldwide adjusted gross income. Tax due is paid to the US Virgin Islands.

Individuals not US citizens, US Virgin Island residents or US residents. Individuals who are not US citizens or residents of the United States or US Virgin Islands must file Form 1040 NR with the US Virgin Islands and pay taxes to the US Virgin Islands on Virgin Islands-source income.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

A foreign tax credit is available to US Virgin Islands residents. It is computed using the rules under the US IRC.

Double tax treaties entered into by the United States are inapplicable in the US Virgin Islands. The US Virgin Islands may not enter into separate tax treaties with foreign governments.

The IRS and the Virgin Islands Bureau of Internal Revenue have established a mutual agreement procedure to resolve inconsistent treatment of tax items. Requests for assistance under this procedure should be addressed to the Tax Treaty Division of the IRS.

The exchange rate of the Uruguayan peso against the US dollar is approximately UYU44 = USD1.

A. Income tax

Under the personal income tax law, effective from 1 July 2007, individuals are subject to income tax in Uruguay.

Resident individuals are subject to tax on their Uruguayan-source income. They are also subject to tax on certain foreign-source income, such as capital gains and work income, if certain conditions are met. Income subject to the tax is divided into the categories of capital gains (Category I) and labor income (Category II).

The basic rate of personal income tax on capital gains is 12%.

Tax on labor income applies to income derived from dependent or independent work. A specified amount of income is not subject to tax. The tax is imposed at progressive rates ranging from 10% to 36%.

Income from pension funds is subject to the Tax of Assistance to Social Security. This tax is similar to the personal income tax.

Nonresident individuals are subject to income tax on their Uruguayan-source income at a rate of 12%. They are also subject to tax on their income from technical services performed abroad if certain conditions are met.

In addition, a 4% (2% for the seller and 2% for the buyer) transfer tax is imposed on sales of real estate.

B. Other taxes

Net worth tax. In general, individuals owning assets in Uruguay must pay tax on their net worth at year-end at progressive rates ranging from 0.1% to 0.4% (for 2021). However, for nonresident individuals who are not subject to nonresidents' income tax, the rates vary from 0.7% to 1.5%. A tax-free allowance of UYU4,937,000 (for 2020; the amount for 2021 is to be determined) may be deducted.

Inheritance and gift taxes. Transfers of real estate by gift or inheritance are subject to the 4% transfer tax, except for inheritances from direct line of consanguinity, which is subject to a 3% transfer tax.

C. Social security

Contributions. Self-employed individuals pay social security taxes on notional amounts of income rather than on actual earnings, except for professional self-employed individuals to whom a different regime applies. The amounts are established by law.

Contributions are paid by employers and employees at the rates set forth in the following table.

Type	Employer %	Employee %	Self-employed %
Pension fund	7.5 (a)	15 (a)	Variable (c)
Medical care	5	3 to 8	3 to 8
Work Reconversion Fund (b)	0.1	0.1	—
Labor Credits Guarantee Fund (b)	0.025	—	—

(a) This rate applies to the portion of income that does not exceed approximately UYU202,693 (monthly).
(b) These are taxes on salaries and are paid to the social security body (Banco de Previsión Social, or BPS).
(c) Self-employment contributions are calculated by deducting 30% of the total amounts invoiced. Pension fund contributions vary according to category.

Totalization agreements. To provide relief from double social security taxes and to assure benefit coverage, Uruguay has entered into totalization agreements, which usually apply for a maximum period of one year, with the following jurisdictions.

Argentina	El Salvador	Paraguay
Austria	France	Peru
Belgium	Germany	Portugal
Bolivia	Greece	Romania (c)
Brazil	Israel	Russian Federation (d)
Canada	Italy	Spain
Chile	Korea (South) (d)	Switzerland
Colombia	Luxembourg	United States
Costa Rica (a)	Netherlands	Venezuela (b)

(a) This treaty has not yet been approved by Costa Rica.
(b) This treaty is in force, but some dispositions were not regulated.
(c) This agreement was recently ratified by the Uruguayan parliament, but it is not yet in force.
(d) This agreement was signed but has not yet been ratified by the parliaments.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Married persons have the option to be taxed jointly or separately for purposes of the personal income tax Category II and the net worth tax.

If the period is less than 180 days, a provisional identity sheet of the identity card should be requested.

An applicant may work in Uruguay while his or her work permit application and other papers are being processed.

No limitations are imposed on foreign nationals wishing to start businesses or head subsidiaries in Uruguay.

H. Permanent residence visas

Permanent visas are issued to foreign nationals who intend to establish permanent residence in Uruguay.

However, there is a process for certain types of driver's licenses by which a foreign national may revalidate his or her home country's driver's license in Uruguay. The driver's license must be legalized and translated into Spanish when appropriate.

Uruguay has driver's license reciprocity agreements with Italy and Spain.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Individuals are subject to tax in Uzbekistan based on their tax residency status. A resident is defined as an individual who is physically present in Uzbekistan for 183 days or more in any period up to 12 months beginning or ending in a calendar year for which tax residency is determined. Individuals who are physically present in Uzbekistan for less than 183 days, but more than in any other state in a calendar year, are also considered residents of Uzbekistan. Accordingly, individuals not meeting these tests are considered to be nonresidents. Residents are taxed on their worldwide income. Nonresidents are taxed only on their Uzbek-source income.

Income subject to tax. In general, all income and benefits-in-kind are taxable in Uzbekistan, unless they are specifically exempt. Types of income that are specifically exempt from tax include, among others, alimony and state pension income.

The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Employment income includes all cash and noncash remuneration, allowances and benefits arising from employment.

Self-employment and business income. In general, self-employment and business income is included in an individual's gross income and taxed at the general individual income tax rates (see Rates). However, the following special tax rules apply to private entrepreneurs:

- Individual income tax in a fixed amount. Private entrepreneurs with annual turnover of less than UZS100 million (approximately USD9,441) are entitled to either pay individual income tax on the basis of an annual individual income tax declaration (at the general rate of 12%) or pay individual income tax in a fixed amount, which varies from UZS50,000 to UZS750,000 per month (approximately USD4.72 to USD70.80), depending on the activities of the private entrepreneur and the location of the activities.

- Revenue tax. Private entrepreneurs with an annual turnover of over UZS100 million but less than UZS1 billion (approximately USD9,441 to USD94,419) are subject to a revenue tax at the standard rate of 4%. Private entrepreneurs with annual turnover over UZS100 million but less than UZS1 billion (approximately USD9,441 to USD94,419) are entitled to switch to the generally established taxation regime on a voluntary basis.
- General established taxation regime. Private entrepreneurs with annual turnover of more than UZS1 billion (approximately USD94,419) are subject to the generally established tax regime (paying corporate income tax, value-added tax and other taxes) applicable to legal entities.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees are generally included in gross income and are subject to individual income tax at the general individual income tax rates (see Rates).

Investment income. Dividends and interest income received from Uzbek companies are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 5% for tax resident individuals and 10% for tax nonresident individuals. Royalties and other investment income are generally taxable at the general individual income tax rates (see Rates). However, interest income of individuals received from certificates of deposits, bank deposits and government securities is exempt from tax.

Taxation of employer-provided stock options. The Uzbek law does not provide any specific measures regarding the taxation of stock options.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains are normally subject to tax at the general individual income tax rates (see Rates). Capital gains derived from the sale of private nonbusiness property are generally exempt from tax. A capital gain derived from the sale of residential premises is exempt from tax if the premises belonged to the individual for more than 36 calendar months preceding the sale. Capital losses are not deductible.

Deductions. No significant tax deductions are allowed for individuals (except for private entrepreneurs who apply individual income tax on the basis of an annual individual income tax declaration and who are allowed to apply for deduction of business expenses that are confirmed with documents).

Rates. The general Uzbek individual income tax for residents is levied at a flat rate of 12%, while a flat rate of 20% applies to nonresidents. Different rates apply to investment income as described in Investment income above.

Relief for losses. Losses may not be carried forward or back by individuals.

B. Other taxes

Wealth tax and net worth tax. Uzbekistan does not impose a wealth tax or net worth tax.

Property tax. Property tax is imposed on buildings, apartments and other immovable property of individuals. The rates for residential property vary from 0.23% to 0.4% of the cadastral value of the property. For property used for entrepreneurial purposes or leasing for business, a tax rate of 2% applies.

Inheritance, estate and gift taxes. Inheritances and gifts received from other individuals are generally not taxable (except for immovable property, motor vehicles, securities and shares received from individuals who are not close relatives). Gifts from an employer valued above 2.11 times the minimum wage (approximately USD149) per year are taxable at the general individual income tax rates (see Rates).

Land tax. An individual granted permanent possession of a land plot may be subject to land tax at a fixed rate, depending on the location of the land. For example, in the city of Tashkent, the rates vary from UZS471.8 to UZS1,193.6 (approximately USD0.04 to USD0.11) per square meter, depending on the location of the land plot.

C. Social security

Employers must make mandatory monthly contributions to individual accumulative pension accounts of citizens at a rate of 0.1% of salaries of employees, and the amounts of such contributions are subtracted from accrued individual income tax. Employers are subject to a social tax on the gross payroll of employees at a rate of 12% (while a 25% rate is applicable for state organizations).

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

An annual tax declaration must be completed and filed by 1 April of the year following the reporting year. Payment of any additional tax liability must be made by 1 June of the year following the reporting year. An individual leaving Uzbekistan must file a final departure tax declaration one month before departure, and the resulting tax liability must be paid within 15 days after filing the departure tax return.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Tax resident individuals pay tax on their worldwide income. Residents are subject to tax if their annual worldwide gross income exceeds 1,500 tax units or if their annual worldwide net income exceeds 1,000 tax units. For the 2021 tax year, the value of a tax unit is VES0.02. For the 2020 tax year, the value of a tax unit was VES0.01. The bolivar to tax unit ratio can be modified at least one time in a year by the tax administration, subject to the approval of the National Assembly. Nonresident individuals are taxed on Venezuelan-source income, regardless of where the payment was made.

Individuals are considered resident for tax purposes if they are physically present in Venezuela for more than 183 days in the current or immediately preceding calendar year. An individual who has acquired a tax residency in a jurisdiction with which Venezuela has a valid double tax treaty is protected under the independent or dependent personal services clause.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Taxable net employment income consists of all compensation or profit, regular or accidental, resulting from the provision of personal services under a dependence relationship, regardless of the character of the wages.

Severance indemnities received by employees or their beneficiaries and travel-expense reimbursements related to rendering personal services are excluded from total income.

Tax nonresidents are taxed using a flat rate of 34%, which is applicable to the total amount of their income, received from Venezuelan sources during the tax year.

Self-employment and business income. The taxable income for self-employed individuals is determined in accordance with the rules described in Employment income and by following the tax nonresident guidelines, if they are relevant.

Annual gross income in excess of 1,500 tax units or net taxable income in excess of 1,000 tax units must be formally declared before the local tax authorities. To determine net taxable income, individuals must deduct all costs and expenses that were essential to produce the self-employment income and/or business income.

Tax nonresident individuals are subject to a final tax rate of 34% on income derived from Venezuelan sources.

Directors' fees. Directors' fees relating to activities performed in Venezuela and received from resident companies are taxed as employment income at the rates described in Rates.

In addition, an individual is subject to social security contributions on directors' fees. The contribution is based on a percentage of monthly salary earned. For further details, see Rates.

Investment income. Interest received by resident and nonresident individuals from savings instruments issued by Venezuelan banks and other financial institutions are tax-exempt. Other interest is aggregated with other income and taxed at the rates described in Rates.

Tax nonresident individuals are subject to a final withholding tax at a rate of 34% on royalties derived from Venezuela.

Effective from January 2001, dividends paid by Venezuelan companies are subject to withholding tax at a rate of 34% to the extent that income before taxes exceeds net taxable income for tax years beginning on or after the effective date. "Income before taxes" is defined as financial income before tax reconciliation, and "net taxable income" is income subject to tax after tax reconciliation. Recipients are subject to tax at the same rate on dividends from non-Venezuelan companies, less any foreign taxes paid.

Capital gains. Capital gains are taxed with other income according to the Tariff No. 1 rates described in Rates.

Deductions

Personal deductions and personal tax credit. Only tax resident individuals are allowed to deduct the following items:

- Mortgage interest payments for a principal dwelling, limited to an amount equivalent to 1,000 tax units, rent payments for a principal dwelling, limited to an amount equal to 800 tax units.
- Payments to educational institutions in Venezuela for taxpayers and their children under 25 years of age. The age limit does not apply to expenses incurred on the education of handicapped children and adults under the tutelage of the taxpayer.
- Premiums for surgery, hospitalization and maternity insurance paid in Venezuela to domiciled companies (no limit).
- Medical, dental and hospitalization expenses incurred in Venezuela for the taxpayer, spouse and ascendants or descendants (no limit).

Taxpayers must keep the documentation (receipts and vouchers) supporting the deductions mentioned above in case of a tax audit, and the payments related to the deductions must be made in Venezuela.

Tax residents may opt for a standardized deduction equal to 774 tax units, instead of all of the itemized deductions mentioned above. No supporting documentation is required for the standardized deduction.

Deductible expenses incurred in Venezuela may offset only Venezuelan-source gross income. Foreign-source deductible expenses may offset only foreign-source income. The supporting documents for the tax return must contain the taxpayer's tax information number.

Resident individuals receive an additional annual personal rebate of 10 tax units. They are also entitled to a family rebate of 10 tax units for each family member who lives in Venezuela (spouse, ascendants and descendants who have not attained the legal age required by Venezuelan law, unless they are handicapped and unable to work or are studying and are less than 25 years old).

Tax nonresidents may not opt for any of the deductions listed above, as stated on the local master tax code.

Business deductions. Individuals may deduct all expenses necessary to produce self-employment and business income.

Rates. Resident individuals are subject to the progressive tax rates of Tariff No. 1, which are applied to taxable income expressed in tax units (see Who is liable). The following are the applicable rates.

Taxable income
Exceeding Tax units	Not exceeding Tax units	Rate %
0	1,000	6
1,000	1,500	9
1,500	2,000	12
2,000	2,500	16
2,500	3,000	20
3,000	4,000	24
4,000	6,000	29
6,000	—	34

Relief for losses. Business losses of a self-employed person may be carried forward for three years but cannot exceed 25% of the income in each tax year. Loss carrybacks are not allowed.

B. Other taxes

Inheritance and gift taxes. Resident nationals, resident foreigners and nonresidents are subject to inheritance and gift taxes only on assets located in Venezuela. Inheritance tax is levied at the following rates, which vary depending on the relationship of the beneficiary to the deceased or donor.

Beneficiary	Rate (%)
Spouse, ascendants and descendants	1 to 25
Siblings, nephews and nieces	2.5 to 40
Other relatives	6 to 50
Unrelated persons	10 to 55

Equity Tax. Under the Equity Tax Law, which entered into force on 3 July 2019, the Equity Tax applies to the net worth of taxpayers qualified as Special Taxpayers and is determined on an annual basis on the value of the net worth determined on 30 September each year. The tax is levied on the net assets of Special Taxpayers who exceed 150,000,000 tax units. The tax rate is between a minimum of 0.25% and a maximum of 1.5%; however, it may be modified by the National Executive. The National Executive may establish progressive rates according to the patrimonial value. The applicable tax rate determined from the entry into force of the Equity Tax Law, which is a Constitutional Law, is 0.25%.

A person is considered a Special Taxpayer once the National Integrated Service for the Administration of Customs Duties and Taxes (Servicio Nacional Integrado de Administración Aduanera y Tributaria, or SENIAT) is notified, and the following conditions are met:

- The taxpayer exceeds 7,500 tax units of gross annual income as shown in its annual income tax return or, in any of the last six months, the taxpayer shows an amount of sales or provision of services exceeding 625 tax units in the taxpayer's value-added tax return.
- Once a taxpayer exceeds the amount of gross income, it is necessary for the SENIAT to establish through an administrative ruling that the taxpayer is qualified as a Special Taxpayer.
- The SENIAT must issue a formal notification to the Special Taxpayer in person or by physical or electronic means.

Also, once a Special Taxpayer has been qualified as such, the taxpayer will have to comply with this tax indefinitely, and no special treatment will apply to tax nonresidents.

C. Social security

The social security system provides the following benefits:

- Medical assistance for the worker and the worker's spouse, parents and children
- Indemnities for temporary disability and death
- Pensions for disability, old age and dependent survivors

Employers and employees are required to make social security contributions in accordance with the following table.

Type of contribution	Amount of contribution %

Employer	9/10/11
Employee	4
Unemployment insurance regime contributions on monthly salary of each employee, up to a ceiling of five minimum salaries; paid by

Social security treaties. Venezuela has entered into social security treaties with Chile, Ecuador, Greece, Italy, Portugal, Spain and Uruguay.

Under the above treaties, nationals of the treaty countries who are working in Venezuela or Venezuelans who are working in the treaty countries may rely on the treaties to avoid double social taxation for the time period stated in the treaties. However, according to the Social Security Institute, the only treaty that is in effect for Certificates of Coverage is the Spain treaty.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

For individuals, the tax year in Venezuela is the calendar year. Tax returns must be filed by 31 March of the following tax year on the official website of the tax authorities. The tax liability indicated on the return may be paid in three portions. The first is due when the return is filed, the second one within 20 days after filing the return and the third one within 40 days after the return is filed.

Married persons are taxed either jointly or separately, at the taxpayers' election, on all types of income.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

Income is separated into two baskets, one for foreign-source income and expenses and another for domestic-source income and expenses. Foreign taxes paid on the foreign-source income may offset the Venezuelan tax on that income only. However, losses in the Venezuelan-source basket may be offset against foreign-source income.

Venezuela has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Austria
Barbados
Belarus
Belgium
Brazil

F. Temporary visas

Venezuela issues tourist visas. Foreign nationals with tourist visas may not work as employees or engage in business in Venezuela. Business visas allow individuals to conduct commercial affairs or to provide technical assistance.

G. Work visas and permits

Under the Immigration Law, foreign citizens who intend to render services in Venezuela for more than 90 days must obtain a labor permit (authorization) and a labor visa (Working Transient Visa; known as "TR-L"). The company that intends to employ the foreign citizen requests the labor permit. If a foreign citizen will not be in Venezuela for more than 90 days, neither a labor permit nor a labor visa is required.

To obtain a TR-L, the foreign citizen must have a passport that had been issued by the respective authority at least 6 months before the request for the TR-L, as well as an employment contract with a Venezuelan entity. The visa has a term of one year and may be renewed for an additional term of one year. The holder of the TR-L may make multiple entries into Venezuela or may stay in Venezuela for the entire period of the visa.

To obtain a labor visa and work permit, the company must file an application with the Office of Migration and the Ministry of Labor, which will issue the labor visa and the labor permit respectively, within 15 business days following the request. In practice, the period for the issuance of the visa may be extended for an additional 15 days.

Work visa. To obtain a work visa, the following documents must be submitted to the Office of Migration (Dirección de Extranjería):

- Proof of payments by the employer to the National Socialist Training Institute (Instituto Nacional de Capacitación y Educación Socialista, or INCES)
- Proof of last three payments by the employer to the social security system
- Health certificate apostilled
- Criminal records apostilled
- Authorization letter
- Justification letter (providing reasons for requesting labor visa)
- Entry request form, issued by the Administrative Service Office for Identification, Immigration and Foreign Purposes (Servicio Administrativo de Identificación, Migración y Extranjeria, or SAIME)
- Four front pictures, with a white background, sized 4 cm x 3 cm
- Copy of the entire passport with more than six months of validity and more than six pages (copy must be in color)

- Labor solvency
- Copy of registration with Encounter Center for Education and Work (Centro de Encuentro para la Educación y el Trabajo)
- Power of attorney of the representative person of the company to the person who will issue the application
- Copy of legal documents and identification of the company representative or the person who will sign the visa application of the employee
- Employment declaration form and hours worked (this form is issued by the Ministry of Labor)
- Justification letter (providing reasons for requesting labor permit)
- Format of job offer issued by Ministry of Labor (original and two copies)
- Information filed with the Labor Inspector Office (Inspectoría del Trabajo), including a copy of the Tax Identification Number of the contracting company, company name, number of employees and workers, and authorization letter

The authorities may require additional documents that they consider to be necessary for this process.

In addition, in the event that an expatriate would like to enter Venezuela with his or her family group, he or she must apply for a Family Transit Visa (TR-F) for each family member, which will have the same validity and benefits as the Working Transit Visa (TR-L).

The applicant must, in addition to the requirements mentioned above, submit the following documents of his or her family group:
- Marriage certificate apostilled (procurement no more than six months)
- Birth certificate apostilled (procurement no more than six months)
- Passport for each family member with more than six months of validity and more than six pages (copy must be in color)

A. Income tax

Who is liable. Under the Personal Income Tax (PIT) Law, taxpayers are resident and nonresident individuals who have income that is subject to tax.

The following individuals are considered to be residents for tax purposes:

- Persons residing in Vietnam for an aggregate of 183 days or more in a calendar year or in a continuous 12-month period, beginning on the first date of arrival. In calculating the number of days, the arrival and departure dates are counted as one day in total.
- Persons having a permanent residence in Vietnam, including a registered residence that is recorded on the Permanent or Temporary Resident Cards of foreigners or a house lease that has a total term of 183 days or more. The total term of a lease equals the sum of the lease terms for different leased locations in a tax year, including hotels, motels, working places and offices.

If an individual has a permanent residence as mentioned above, but stays in Vietnam for less than 183 days in a tax year and can prove that he or she is a tax resident of another country, he or she is treated as a Vietnam tax nonresident in that tax year. The document required to prove tax residency of a foreign country is the original tax residency certificate issued by the foreign tax authority. If a foreign country that signed a double tax treaty with Vietnam does not issue the tax residency certificate for its tax resident, the expatriate employee may use the passport with the day in and day out of Vietnam to prove the resident days in Vietnam.

An individual who does not meet the conditions to be a tax resident of Vietnam is considered a Vietnam tax nonresident.

Tax year. The Vietnamese tax year is the calendar year. However, if an individual stays in Vietnam for less than 183 days in the calendar year of arrival but more than 182 days in the first 12 consecutive months, the first tax year is the 12-month period from the date of arrival. Subsequently, the tax year is calendar year.

For tax resident individuals who are citizens of countries having double tax treaties with Vietnam, their tax obligation is calculated from the month in which they arrive in Vietnam. An expatriate employee is only required to file the tax return to report the taxable income in Vietnam until the terminated date of assignment. This is determined based on the letter of confirmation from the employer for the last working day in Vietnam.

Income subject to tax. Residents are taxed on their worldwide income, while nonresidents are taxed on their Vietnam-source income.

Under the PIT Law, the following 10 types of income are subject to tax:
- Income from business
- Income from employment
- Income from capital investment
- Income from capital transfers
- Income from transfers of real property
- Income from royalties
- Income from franchising
- Income from winnings or prizes
- Income from the receipt of inheritances
- Income from the receipt of gifts

The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Income from employment. Employment income includes all cash remuneration and benefits in kind (for example, salaries, wages, bonuses, allowances, premiums, directors' fees and remuneration, housing benefits [with a tax concession; see next paragraph], income tax and benefits paid by the employer, and other payments for employment services rendered). Progressive tax rates ranging from 5% to 35% apply to both Vietnamese and expatriate residents (see Tax rates), while a flat rate of 20% applies to nonresidents. Income received in foreign currency is converted to Vietnamese dong when calculating taxable income. If the income is remitted to an individual's bank account in Vietnam, the actual buying exchange rates of the bank where the individual's income is received must be used. If the individual's bank account is maintained outside Vietnam, the buying exchange rate of the Joint Stock Commercial Bank for Foreign Trade of Vietnam (Vietcombank) on the payment date must be used.

Rental payments, including utilities and related services, made by an employer on behalf of an employee are taxable based on the lower of the amount actually paid and 15% of total taxable income (excluding taxable housing, utilities and service fees). A housing benefit is considered to be net income if the company pays the tax and accordingly a tax-on-tax calculation is required. The full amount of utilities paid separately with the rental are subject to tax.

Hypothetical tax and the housing norm are deductible before grossing up the net-of-tax income to the gross-of-tax income.

Life insurance is taxed at the time of payout. If the insurance is bought from an insurance company that is established and operated under Vietnamese law, the insurance company is responsible for withholding 10% on the relevant accumulated premium contributed by the employers from 1 July 2013 at the maturity date of the contract. If the employer buys life insurance for its employees from an insurance company that is not established in Vietnam but allowed to sell in Vietnam, the employer must withhold tax of 10% of the premium before paying the net income to its employees.

The following are the principal categories of employment income that are exempt from tax:

- One-off allowance for relocation to Vietnam for an expatriate employee and from Vietnam to overseas for a Vietnamese national based on a labor contract or an assignment letter. The exemption also extends to a Vietnamese individual residing overseas on a long-term basis and returning to Vietnam to work.
- School fees paid by the employer from kindergarten to high school education for the children of expatriate employees working in Vietnam and Vietnamese nationals working overseas.
- Home leave round-trip air tickets for expatriate employees and Vietnamese nationals working overseas once a year.
- Payment for housing, electricity, water supply and associated services (if any) for housing built by the employer to provide for employees at industrial parks or for housing built by the employer in an economic zone, a disadvantaged area or an extremely disadvantaged area, to provide for its employees.
- Certain benefits in kind provided on a collective basis if the beneficiaries of such benefits cannot be determined (for example, membership fees, entertainment and health care).
- Mid-shift meals arranged directly by the employer or paid in cash to employees up to the amount stipulated in the labor regulations.
- Stationery, per diem for business trips and telephone expenses per the company's policies.
- Uniforms within the limits of the prevailing regulations.
- Cost of training for the improvement of the professional skills of employees as per the policy of the company.
- Rotation cost (for example, airfare, expenses related to use of helicopters to transport rotators from the mainland to a rig offshore and vice versa and hotel costs incurred during the days waiting for the flight to a rig offshore) for expatriate employees working in Vietnam in a number of specific industries, such as petroleum and mining.

- Retrenchment, redundancy and unemployment allowances, in accordance with the guidelines stipulated in the Labor Code.
- Financial support from an employer's after-tax fund for an employee and his or her family members with respect to cures or medical treatment for fatal diseases.
- Cost of transportation for employees from home to work and vice versa in accordance with the company policy.
- The voluntary and non-accumulated insurance premiums paid by the employer (for example, health insurance and accident insurance, including voluntary insurance bought from an insurance company that is not established and operating under the Vietnamese law). The exemption does not apply to insurance schemes under which the participants are entitled to receive accumulated premiums at the maturity date of the insurance contract.
- Funeral and wedding support provided by employers to their employees and their employee's family under the company policy. The exemption is limited to the amount prescribed in the corporate income tax regulations.
- Work permit-related expenses provided by employers for expatriate employees to allow them to legally work in Vietnam.

Income from business. Business income is income derived from production and business activities, including agriculture, forestry, salt production, aquaculture and fishing, as well as income from independent practice in the fields that are licensed or certificated as prescribed.

Tax residents and nonresidents, including individuals and groups of individuals and households who engage in production and trading activities with respect to goods and services in all fields as stipulated by laws, are subject to tax on business income (including value-added tax [VAT] if applicable and PIT). An exception applies to individuals with total annual revenue equal to or less than VND100 million.

Income from business activities is subject to a flat tax rate, which varies by sector and type of services (see Tax rates).

Various methods for tax calculation, declaration and remittance exist for individuals having business income including the payment of tax on a deemed basis, payment of tax on ad hoc transactions and payment of tax for individuals having income from asset leasing, as well as for individuals deriving income as insurance agents, lottery agents or multilevel sales agents.

The amount of tax payable is determined using the following calculations:
- VAT payable = VAT taxable income x VAT rate
- PIT payable = PIT taxable income x PIT rate

For purposes of the above calculations, the following rules apply:
- Taxable income equals the gross revenue from sales, commissions and services rendered in the production and trading of goods and services in the relevant tax period.
- The tax year is the calendar year.
- Tax rates applied on revenue vary depending on the business sectors (see Tax rates).

An individual engaged in business who hires 10 employees or more is required to set up a corporation in accordance with the Enterprise Law, prepare documentation and invoices in accordance with the Vietnamese accounting regulations, and pay corporate income tax.

Income from capital investment. Income from capital investment includes the following:
- Interest on loans granted to organizations, enterprises, business households in accordance with loan agreements, except for interest paid by banks and credit institutions
- Dividends
- Profits from other forms of capital contributions, including capital contributions in the form of commodities, reputation, land-use rights and inventions, except for income after payment of corporate income tax of private companies and single-member limited liability companies under the ownership of individuals
- Interest on bonds, treasury bills and other valuable instruments, except for bonds issued by the Vietnamese government

Income from capital investment paid to tax resident and tax nonresident individuals is taxed at a rate of 5%.

Income from capital transfers. Income from capital transfers includes the following:
- Gains derived by individuals from the transfer of capital contributions in limited liability companies, partnerships and shareholding companies. The assessable income from transferring contributed capital equals the transfer price minus the purchase price of the transferred capital and reasonable expenses related to the generation of the income from the transfer of capital. A 20% tax rate is applied to the gains of tax resident individuals and 0.1% tax is applied to the sales proceeds of tax nonresident individuals.
- Income from securities transfers, including income from transferring shares, stock options, bonds, treasury bills, fund certificates and other securities according to the regulations of the Law on Securities, and income from transferring shares of persons in joint stock companies according to the Law on Enterprises.

Income from the transfer of real property. Income from the transfer of real property includes the following:
- Income received from the transfer of land-use rights, residential houses and other assets attached to land
- Transfer of ownership or rights to the use of residential houses, lease rights to land or water surfaces and other rights to real property

Assessable income from real property transfers is the price agreed in the transfer contract at the time of transfer. A tax rate of 2% is applied to the transfer price.

Income from royalties. Income from royalties is income derived from the assignment or transfer of the right to use intellectual property rights or objects including literary, artistic and scientific works, copyrights, inventions, industrial designs, trademarks, technical know-how and similar items. Assessable income equals the amount of the royalties in excess of VND10 million, according to the transfer contract, regardless of the number of payments the taxpayer receives.

Income from franchising. Income from franchising is income derived by an individual from a franchising contract under which the franchisor authorizes the franchisee to purchase and sell goods or provide services in accordance with conditions imposed by the franchisor. Assessable income equals the amount of the franchise fee in excess of VND10 million based on the contract, regardless of the number of payments the taxpayer receives.

Income from winnings or prizes. Income from winnings or prizes is income derived from winnings in cash or in kind in excess of VND10 million from lotteries, betting, promotional prizes and similar items. Assessable income equals the amount of the prize in excess of VND10 million, determined on a transaction basis.

Income from the receipt of inheritances or gifts. Income from the receipt of inheritances or gifts is income in excess of VND10 million derived by an individual under a testament or law from the receipt of inherited or gifted assets, including securities, contributed capital, real property and other assets that are required to be registered. The amount of assessable income is determined when the procedures are completed for the transfer of ownership or the transfer of the right to use the asset or when the taxpayer receives the gift.

Tax exemptions. Certain types of income are exempt from tax, including the following:
- Income from the transfer of real property by inheritance or gifts between husband and wife, parents and children including adoptive parents and adopted children, parents-in-law and children-in-law and grandparents and grandchildren, and between siblings
- Income from the transfer of a residential house or right to use residential land and assets attached to land by an individual who has one sole residential house and/or land-use right in Vietnam, subject to certain conditions
- Interest on money deposited at banks or credit institutions, interest from life insurance policies and interest from government bonds
- Income in foreign currency received from Vietnamese residing overseas
- Overtime premium amount over the normal wage or salary that is paid in accordance with the Labor Code
- Pensions paid by the Social Insurance Fund under the Law on Social Insurance, and monthly pensions from voluntary pension funds
- Scholarships
- Compensation payments from life and non-life insurance contracts, compensation for labor accidents and other state compensation payments
- Income received from charitable funds or from foreign-aid sources for charitable or humanitarian purposes
- Income from winning prizes in casinos

Tax reduction. Foreign experts working for official development assistance projects or with respect to programs or plans of non-governmental organizations in Vietnam are exempt from tax if they meet certain conditions. They must submit an application for exemption as required by law.

Taxation of employer-provided shares. Shares provided to employees are taxable as employment income and taxed at the time of transfer or sale. The taxable income equals the value of the shares recorded in the employer's accounting books. Income from the transfer of the awarded shares is also subject to capital gains tax (see Income from capital transfers).

Tax deductions. The deductions described below are available to tax residents who have employment income.

Personal and dependent relief. Personal relief of VND11 million per month is automatically granted to resident individuals who derive employment income. Dependent relief of VND4,400,000 is granted for each eligible dependent. No limit is imposed on the number of dependents. However, an eligible dependent must meet certain conditions with respect to income, age and his or her relationship with the taxpayer. A registration dossier for qualified dependents is also required to be submitted to the tax authorities.

Mandatory contributions. Mandatory social, health and unemployment insurance contributions, including mandatory contributions by expatriates to overseas schemes in the home country, with the same nature as the compulsory insurance schemes in Vietnam, are deductible from employment income for PIT purposes.

Contributions to charity. Certain contributions to registered charitable, humanitarian or study promotion funds are deductible.

Contributions to voluntary retirement funds. Contributions to voluntary pension funds, which are established in accordance with the Ministry of Finance's guidance, are deductible from taxable income. However, the deduction is capped at VND1 million per month for both employer and employee contributions.

Contribution to the disaster prevention fund. The contribution to the disaster prevention fund established in accordance with Decree 94/2014/ND-CP is deductible. This is a compulsory employee contribution to the government's disaster prevention fund. The contribution equals one day of salary per year (based on the regional minimum salary).

Foreign tax credit. Tax paid on foreign-sourced income in other countries may be claimed as a credit against the tax liability in Vietnam. However, the amount of the credit may not exceed the amount payable in accordance with the Vietnamese tax scale that is assessed and allocated to the part of the income arising overseas. To claim the foreign tax credit, an application and required supporting documents must be filed with the tax authorities together with the year-end finalization dossier.

Tax rates

Employment income. The table below presents the progressive tax rates on employment income of resident individuals. To calculate the tax due by using the table, multiply the taxable income by the tax rate and then subtract the bracket adjustment. The following is the table.

B. Social security

The following are the statutory contribution rates for employers and employees with respect to social security, health insurance and unemployment insurance from 1 June 2017.

	Social insurance %	Health insurance %	Unemployment insurance %
Employer	17.5	3	1
Employee	8	1.5	1
Total	25.5	4.5	2

Companies operating in industries with a high risk of occupational diseases and accidents are entitled to a lower contribution rate of 0.3% to the social insurance fund for occupational diseases and accidents instead of the normal rate of 0.5% if certain conditions are met.

The social and health insurance contribution is calculated based on the salary or wage, allowance and additional payments stated in the labor contract. However, it does not exceed 20 times the common minimum salary provided by the government. Effective from 1 July 2019, the capped salary for the social and health insurance contribution is VND29,800,000 (VND1,490,000 x 20). The common minimum salary may change from year to year according to the government's decision.

The unemployment insurance contribution is only required for Vietnamese employees and calculated based on the salary or wage, allowance and additional payments stated in the labor contract. However, it does not exceed 20 times the regional minimum salary, which currently ranges from VND3,070,000 to VND4,420,000 and varies for each city and province. These ranges apply from 1 January 2020.

Social insurance and health insurance apply to both Vietnamese and expatriate employees working in Vietnam. From 1 December 2018, social insurance applies for foreigners who sign labor contracts with Vietnamese entities with a term of 12 months or more and having a work permit or practice license or certificate. From 1 December 2018 until 1 January 2022, short-term schemes (sickness, maternity, occupational diseases and accident) will take effect first. From 1 January 2022 onward, the above short-term schemes and long-term schemes (retirement and death) will take effect in full.

Companies also have an obligation to contribute to the trade union fund at 2% of the base salary subject to the social insurance contribution for employees who are required to make social insurance contributions.

C. Tax filing and payment procedures

Organizations and individuals must withhold income tax from income paid to resident and nonresident individuals with respect to income from employment, capital investments, capital transfers (including transfers of securities), royalties, franchising, and winnings and prizes.

Declaration and payment of tax on employment income by income payers must be made on a monthly basis by the 20th day of the following month. If the income payer is eligible to declare VAT on a quarterly basis or the operating form of the income payer has no revenue from goods or services, declaration and payment of tax on employment income can be made on a quarterly basis. The amounts paid throughout the year are reconciled with the total tax liability at the year-end. An annual tax return of the income payers must be submitted and any additional tax must be paid by the last day of the third month following of the end of the calendar year.

Individuals receiving a salary from overseas are required to file tax returns on a quarterly basis by the last day of the first month of the following quarter. An individual year-end finalization of income tax is also required, and any amounts due must be paid by the last day of the fourth month following the end of the calendar year.

Finalization is required if any of the following circumstances exist:

- The tax payable exceeds by more than VND50,000 the tax withheld or paid.
- The individual is eligible for a tax refund.
- The individual is a resident foreigner who terminates a Vietnam assignment.

An individual deriving income from the transfer of real property must declare tax and file a tax return together with the documents relating to transfer of ownership or right to use the real property. The tax must be paid in accordance with the tax notice.

An individual deriving income from the transfer of capital must declare tax when he or she performs procedures for the transfer of the capital. The tax must be paid in accordance with the tax notice issued by the tax authorities.

An individual deriving income from inheritances or gifts must declare tax each time the income arises. The tax declaration must be submitted when the procedures for the transfer of ownership or rights to the use of the inherited or donated assets are conducted.

For resident individuals deriving income arising from overseas, employment income is declared on a quarterly basis and an annual basis. Other types of income (capital investment, capital transfer, transfer of real property, royalties, franchising, winnings, inheritances and gifts) must be declared within 10 days after the date the income arises or is received.

A Vietnamese company that signs a contract with the foreign contractor who assigns its expatriate employees to work in Vietnam to perform the service is required to notify the Vietnamese tax authorities of the list of these expatriates (including name, nationality, working period, job title and estimated income) within seven days before they arrive to work in Vietnam.

E. Entry visas

The sections below provide only the general standard business immigration requirements for a foreigner to work in Vietnam. Various requirements and practices are not described in this book. Professional advice should be obtained on a case-by-case basis.

All foreigners must have a passport or passport substitute papers that are valid for at least six months and a visa granted by the competent Vietnamese agencies, except for citizens of countries that have visa exemptions included in bilateral consular agreements with Vietnam (Association of Southeast Asian Nations [ASEAN] member countries and Kyrgyzstan) or unilateral agreements with Vietnam (Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Japan, Korea [South], Italy, Norway, the Russian Federation, Sweden and the United Kingdom).

To legally enter Vietnam, foreigners must apply for a visa corresponding to the entry purpose and provide supporting documents. After the visa is granted, the foreigner is responsible for acting in accordance with the registered purpose of entry, and this purpose should not be changed during the stay in Vietnam.

Foreigners entering Vietnam to work must submit the work permits or work permit exemption certificates in the visa application dossiers. Consequently, work permits or work permit exemption certificates must be obtained before the labor visa application dossiers are filed.

The validity of each visa type differs and corresponds to the supporting documents in the visa application. For example, the maximum duration of a labor visa is 24 months, the maximum duration of an investor visa is 5 years, and the maximum duration of a business visa is 12 months.

The current processing time is five working days from the date of filing.

F. Work permits

A work permit is required for a foreign national to legally work in Vietnam, except for cases of work permit exemptions. This document is granted only to a foreign national who is sponsored by an entity in Vietnam.

A foreigner who enters Vietnam to work for intervals of up to 30 days and no more than 3 times per calendar year as a manager, executive director, specialist or technician is not required to obtain a work permit.

Procedure and standard timeline. The sponsoring entity in Vietnam must submit the demand for using foreign nationals working in Vietnam to the relevant government's body at least 30 days before recruiting or transferring the foreign nationals to work in Vietnam. Within 15 days after receiving the demand, the local DOLISA responds to the sponsoring entity in writing regarding the acceptance or refusal of the demand. This letter is considered to be a pre-approval for using foreign employees in Vietnam. This pre-approval letter is one of the compulsory documents for application dossiers for work permit issuances, work permit reissuances and work permit exemptions.

A work permit application must be filed with the local DOLISA at least 15 business days before the expected commencement date for the employee. The current processing time at the local authority is five business days.

Required documents in work permit application dossiers that are issued in foreign countries must be legalized in the country of issuance to be recognized in Vietnam. Depending on the diplomatic relations between Vietnam and the country of issuance, the steps required to legalize the documents may vary. Consequently, the total processing time for work permit applications may take one to three months or more.

A work permit can be granted with a maximum validity period of two years and can be extended one time for an additional two-year period. Foreign nationals who wish to remain in Vietnam for more than four years must apply for a new work permit after completing four years in Vietnam.

Qualification requirements. A foreign national who wants to work in Vietnam must meet the required qualifications for a pre-approval position. The following are the three main categories of positions that foreign nationals may apply for a work permit in Vietnam and the related qualification requirements:

- Management experience is required for managers, executives or higher positions according to the definition in the Law on Enterprise.
- At least three years of relevant professional experience and a bachelor, engineering or equivalent or higher degree are required for specialists. Alternatively, the specialist must have five years of overseas working experience and have a practitioner certificate related to the position applied for in Vietnam.
- A minimum one-year training certificate and three years of relevant experience is required for technicians. Alternatively, the technician is required to have at least five years of experience corresponding to the job position to which he or she will be appointed in Vietnam.

In addition to the above qualifications, foreign nationals will generally fall into one of two major categories: intra-company transfer and local hires. An intra-company transfer must have worked for his or her home employer for at least 12 consecutive months prior to the work permit application. The local hire must sign a local employment contract with the sponsoring entity in Vietnam. Both intra-company transfers and local hires must submit documentation proving that they meet the necessary criteria.

Work permit exemptions. Under the current Labor Code and the decree on work permits, 20 cases of work permit exemptions exist. The following are typical examples of individuals who are exempt from the requirement to obtain a work permit in Vietnam:

- A foreigner who enters Vietnam to work for up to 30 days and no more than 3 times per calendar year
- A foreigner who is a contributing member or owner of a limited liability company whose individual capital contribution is at least VND3 million
- A foreigner who is a member of the board of directors of a joint stock company whose individual capital contribution is at least VND3 million
- A foreigner who is married to a Vietnamese citizen and residing in Vietnam
- A foreigner who is an intracompany transferee of corporations operating within 11 service industries listed under Vietnam's World Trade Organization commitments

In general, to satisfy the work permit exemption, at least 10 business days before the date the foreign national is supposed to begin work, the sponsoring entity must submit the work permit exemption application to the respective local authority for the place where the foreign national will work regularly.

The local DOLISA issues a written certificate to the employer within five working days after the date on which a sufficient application is received. A written response and explanation are provided if the work permit exemption application is rejected.

G. Temporary residence card

The temporary residence card serves as a multiple-entry visa with a minimum term of one year. The maximum term of the temporary residence card is subject to the term of the work permit, the work permit exemption certificate, the validity of the business license and the applicant's passport.

A temporary residence card is granted to a foreigner who has a valid work permit or work permit exemption certificate with duration of over one year and his or her legal spouse and children under 18 years old. Documents proving the relationships between the principal applicant and the dependents must be legalized and translated into Vietnamese for the temporary residence card application.

This card can only be granted after the applicant has entered Vietnam using the correct visa. The current processing time at the local authority is five business days from the date of the filing of the application.

Effective from 24 June 2019, the Zimbabwe dollar was declared the sole legal tender for transacting in Zimbabwe. This was relaxed on 29 March 2020 to allow for payment of goods and services priced in Zimbabwe dollars to be made in foreign currency using free funds, at the exchange rate prevailing on the date of payment. However, effective from 24 July 2020, a seller of goods and services is permitted to display, quote or offer the price of such goods and services in Zimbabwean and/or foreign currency at the ruling exchange rate.

A. Income tax

Who is liable. All individuals are subject to income tax on income that is accrued or received by or in favor of a person or deemed to have accrued or received by or in favor of a person from a true or deemed Zimbabwean source in a year of assessment. Compensation for services that are rendered in Zimbabwe is deemed to be derived from a Zimbabwean source, regardless of where the payment is made or where the payer resides.

The terms "resident" and "ordinarily resident" are not defined in the tax law. Residential status depends on the facts and circumstances indicating a degree of presence. For example, a person living and working temporarily in Zimbabwe is considered resident but not ordinarily resident, while a transient visitor is considered neither ordinarily resident nor resident.

Income subject to tax. The taxation of various types of income is described below.

Employment income. Tax is levied on all forms of employee remuneration, including salary, wages and allowances whether in cash or in kind.

All allowances paid by an employer or on an employer's behalf behalf to an employee are taxable. These include, among others, school fees and allowances, free or subsidized accommodation, gifts to employees, holiday allowances, use of company motor vehicles (deemed benefit from the use of company vehicles), free or subsidized shares and free food.

The following are the annual deemed benefits on the use of an employer's vehicle by an employee.

Engine capacity	ZWL	USD
Up to 1,500 cc	54,000	675
1,501 cc to 2,000	72,000	900
2,001 cc to 3,000	108,000	1 350
3,001 cc and above	144,000	9,800

Nonresidents are also taxed on their employment income in Zimbabwe at the rates shown in Employee tax rates.

Partners are not employees and, therefore, are not subject to employee tax. They are individually taxed on their share of partnership profits at a rate of 24% plus the 3% AIDS levy.

Executive directors' fees. Executive directors' fees are taxed together with other employment income.

Self-employment and business income. Income tax is levied on total income received by or accrued to or in favor of any person or income deemed to have been received by or accrued to or in favor of a person from a Zimbabwean or deemed Zimbabwean source. This excludes amounts proved by the taxpayer to be capital in nature. Certain types of income are exempt from tax. These are covered in the Third Schedule to the Income Tax Act.

Income from sources other than employment is subject to tax at a rate of 24% plus the 3% AIDS levy. The combined tax rate is 24.72%.

Nonresident persons with business income are taxed at 24.72%.

Investment income. The following are the tax rates for dividends.
- Zimbabwe Stock Exchange listed securities: 10%
- Victoria Falls Stock Exchange listed securities: 5%
- Unlisted shares: 15%

Dividends received from another country are taxed at a special rate of 20% on the gross amount. The AIDS levy is not chargeable. The amount of withholding tax paid in the payer jurisdiction can be claimed as a credit. The credit is limited to the tax payable in Zimbabwe.

Interest paid on deposits with local building societies, banks and other financial institutions are exempt from income tax. However, it is subject to a final withholding tax of 15%.

Interest on fixed-term deposits for at least 90 days or 1 year, is taxed at 5% or 0%, respectively.

Interest deemed to be from a Zimbabwean source is taxed as business income at a rate of 24.72% of taxable income. Credits are granted on foreign tax withheld on interest income.

Employer-provided stock options. A taxable benefit arises on an option provided to purchase stocks below market value. The benefit arises on the date the option is exercised.

For options granted before and exercised after 1 February 2009, the taxable amount is the market value of the shares at the date the option is exercised. The benefit is subject to the Pay-As-You Earn (PAYE) system at a rate of 5% plus the 3% AIDS levy.

For options granted after 1 February 2009, the value of the benefit is the market value of the shares on the date the option is exercised, less the price paid by the employee. The benefit is subject to the PAYE system at the normal rates set forth in Employee tax rates.

The disposal of shares by the employee has no employee tax effect. Their taxation is covered under the rules discussed in Capital gains and losses.

Capital gains and losses. Capital gains tax (CGT) is charged on the disposal of specified assets, which are marketable securities, immovable property and right or title to property transfer for which registration is required, whether tangible or intangible.

For specified assets acquired or constructed on or after 22 February 2019, the tax is charged on the capital gains.

The CGT rate is 20%.

The following is the formula for calculating capital gains:

$$SP – [(C + (C+CPI)n) + (Im + (Im * CPI)n)]$$

The following are the description of the items contained in the above formula:
- "SP" is the selling price.
- "C" is the purchase or construction cost.
- "Im" is improvements made on fixed property.
- "CPI" is the Consumer Price Index.
- "n" is the number of years from date of purchase, construction or improvement.

Assets acquired or constructed before 22 February 2019 are subject to 5% CGT on the gross selling price.

The tax is paid in foreign currency unless the taxpayer proves that proceeds were received in ZWL.

Securities listed on the Victoria Falls Stock Exchange securities are exempt from CGT.

Zimbabwe Stock Exchange securities are exempt from CGT if the 1% CGT withholding tax has been withheld.

The disposal of specified assets is also subject to capital gains withholding tax at the following rates:
- 15% of the selling price of immovable property acquired on or after 22 February 2019
- 5% of the gross capital amount for immovable property acquired before 22 February 2019
- 1% of selling price for listed securities
- 5% of selling price for unlisted securities

The tax is withheld by a depository and paid to the Zimbabwe Revenue Authority (ZIMRA) on or before the third business day following the transaction. A depository is any intermediary handling the transaction and includes the purchaser.

A penalty of 100% and interest of 10% per year will be charged on late or underpaid CGT.

Capital losses may be carried forward indefinitely.

Individuals aged 55 and older are exempt from CGT on the sale of their principal private residence and on the first ZWL140,000 of total proceeds received during the year from the sale of listed and unlisted marketable securities.

Rollover relief is also available for the sale and replacement of a principal private residence and compensation received for damage or destruction of a specified asset.

Withholding tax. Registered taxpayers and government and statutory bodies must withhold 10% from any payments made to a person who has not furnished a valid tax clearance certificate. The tax is not withheld on payments for goods and services not exceeding ZWL80,000 annually. The tax withheld must be remitted to the Commissioner General on the 10th day of the following month. The person withholding the tax must issue a withholding tax certificate in favor of the payee. The amounts withheld are credited against the payee's annual tax.

Non-executive directors are subject to 20% withholding tax on gross fees paid to them. This is a final tax.

Freelance insurance agents, insurance brokers and property negotiators are subject to 20% withholding tax. They are required to submit annual returns on 30 April of the following year. The 20% tax is credited against annual tax.

Nonresident artists or entertainers performing in Zimbabwe are subject to withholding tax of 15%.

The payment of fees for technical, managerial, administrative and consulting services; royalties; and remittances to nonresident persons is subject to 15% withholding tax. The rate may be reduced if there is a double tax treaty. A withholding tax certificate must be issued in favor of the nonresident person so that they can claim a tax credit in their residence state.

Exemptions. The following are exemptions from employment income:

- Annual aggregate amount not exceeding ZWL25,000 or USD320 on the payment of a bonus or a performance-related award. Effective from 1 November 2021, the exempt portion of the bonus is increased to ZWL100,000 or USD700.
- Fifty percent of the amount waived with respect to tuition and boarding fees and levies payable by a member of the staff of a school, up to a maximum of three children.
- The greater of the first ZWL50,000 or USD3,200 of severance pay and 1/3 of severance pay, up to a maximum of ZWL240,000 or USD15,100, respectively. A retrospective amendment, which is effective from 1 January 2021, increases the ZWL-exempt portion to the greater of ZWL400,000 or 1/3 of the retrenchment package, up to a maximum of ZWL2 million. The USD figures remain the same.
- The greater of the first ZWL800,000 or one third, up to a maximum of ZWL3,600,000, of the amount of any untaxed pension commutation or annuity payable on cessation of employment due to retrenchment, to an employee below the age of 55 years before the beginning of the year of assessment.

- Proceeds received or accrued on the sale or redemption of any shares, units or other interest of the employee by a trust that accrues to an employee participating in an approved employee share ownership trust.
- Medical expenses (including related travel), invalid appliances and the cost of approved medical aid society contributions paid by an employer for an employee, his or her spouse, minor children and dependents.
- Rewards paid by the Commissioner General for information leading to the recovery of tax revenue.
- Allowances for accommodation and transport and grants of quarters or housing for staff of district hospitals or rural clinics owned, operated or sponsored by a religious body or a rural district council.
- Risk allowances payable to frontline public sector health personnel involved in combating the COVID-19 pandemic, for a period of 12 months beginning on 1 April 2020 and ending on 31 March 2021.

The following are exemptions for taxpayers aged 55 and above:
- The first ZWL240,000 of interest on deposits with financial institutions.
- Income from treasury bills and discounted instruments traded by financial institutions, if the terms sheet specifies that their income will be tax-free. However, this income is subject to a final withholding tax of 15% at the time of disposal or maturity of the instrument.
- The first ZWL120,000 of rental income.
- Pension paid from a pension fund or the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The taxpayer must have attained the age of 55 years before the commencement of the year of assessment concerned.

Deductions

Employee deductible expenses. Pension contributions not exceeding ZWL240,000 per employee per year are tax deductible. This ceiling applies with respect to both pension and retirement fund contributions.

Business deductions. Capital allowances are deductible on fixed assets and/or software used during a tax year at 25% of cost over four years. Wear-and-tear allowances may be claimed on commercial buildings at a 2.5% rate on cost over 40 years. A taxable recoupment arises on the disposal of assets for which allowances were previously claimed. The recoupment is limited to capital allowances that were claimed.

Credits. The following tax credits are deductible from basic income tax payable:

Type of credit	Amount
Taxpayers over 55 years of age	ZWL72,000 per year
Blind or disabled person	ZWL72,000 per year
Medical expenses, cost of invalid appliances and contributions to medical aid societies	50% of amount paid

Calculation of employee tax. The following steps must be followed to calculate employee tax when income is in the same currency:

- Step I: Calculate the income tax on the taxable income according to the tax rate structure set out in Employee tax rates.
- Step II: Calculate the tax credit entitlement discussed in Credits.
- Step III: Deduct the amount in Step II from the amount in Step I to determine the income tax payable.
- Step IV: Calculate 3% AIDS levy and add it to the amount computed in Step III to determine the total amount payable.

The following steps must be followed to calculate employee tax on income in both local and foreign currency:

- Step 1: Convert the ZWL amounts to USD amounts using the auction rate prevailing on the processing date.
- Step 2: Add amount converted in Step 1 to USD income.
- Step 3: Calculate taxable income [gross income – (exempt income + allowable deductions)].
- Step 4: Calculate the tax on the result from Step 3 according to the tax rate structure set out in Employee tax rates.
- Step 5: Calculate the available tax credits (convert ZWL values to USD using the prevailing auction rate).
- Step 6: Subtract the amount in Step 5 from the amount in Step 4 to determine the tax payable.
- Step 7: Calculate 3% AIDS levy on the amount calculated in Step 6.
- Step 8: Add the results of Step 6 and Step 7.
- Step 9: Allocate the tax determined in Step 8 to ZWL and USD using the income basis.
- Step 10: Convert the tax portion relating to ZWL earnings, as allocated in Step 9, back to ZWL using the exchange rate on the processing date.

Employee tax rates. The tax rates below apply to annual taxable employment income for the year ending 31 December 2021.

The following are the ZWL rates.

Taxable income
Exceeding ZWL	Not exceeding ZWL	Tax rate %

720,000	1,440,000	30
1,440,000	3,000,000	35
3,000,000	—	40

The following are the USD rates.

Taxable income
Exceeding USD	Not exceeding USD	Tax rate %
0	840	0
840	3,600	20
3,600	12,000	25
12,000	24,000	30
24,000	36,000	35
36,000	—	40

A 3% AIDS levy is imposed on the cumulative tax due.

Relief for losses. Assessed losses on income from trade and investment can be carried forward for up to six years. Assessed losses from mining operations can be carried forward indefinitely. However, an assessed loss from one mining location is not deductible from income other mining locations. Losses from trade and investment activities are not deductible against employment income.

B. Other taxes

Estate and gift taxes. Estate tax is levied on the estates of all deceased persons with assets located in Zimbabwe or with foreign assets arising from Zimbabwean sources. The family home and a family vehicle are not included in the dutiable value of the estate. The first ZWL50,000 of the dutiable value is tax free. The rate of the estate tax on the balance of the dutiable value is 5%.

Zimbabwe does not levy gift tax. However, the market value of a donation of marketable securities or real property is subject to capital gains tax (see Section A).

Presumptive tax. Presumptive tax is imposed on the following:
- Informal traders
- Cross-border traders
- Hairdressers
- Operators of commercial waterborne vessels and fishing rigs, taxicabs, omnibuses, specified goods' vehicles, driving schools, licensed and unlicensed bottle stores and restaurants
- Cottage industry operators (cottage industries are trades or industries involved in furniture making and upholstery or metal fabrication and other industries prescribed in statutory instruments)
- Self-employed professionals (architects, engineers, legal practitioners, health practitioners and real estate agents)

Presumptive tax is charged if one of the above persons did not submit his or her annual return for the previous year. The presumptive tax may be claimed against final tax on assessment.

C. Social security

For 1 June 2020 to 31 May 2021 payrolls, 4.5% of the first ZWL5,000 was withheld from the employee's pensionable earnings by employers and paid to the National Social Security Authority (NSSA) monthly, together with an equal amount contributed by the employer. Effective from June 2021, the NSSA ceiling for insurable earnings changed from USD5,000 to 75% of the Total Consumption Poverty Line (TCPL) of five persons for the previous month. The rate at which the contribution is computed remains the same at 4.5% of the insurable earnings.

D. Tax filing and payment procedures

Employers withhold tax under the Pay as you Earn or the Final Deduction System. The Final Deduction System (FDS) applies to employees who worked for an employer for the full fiscal year of 1 January to 31 December. The employer must collect the correct tax by the end of the year. The FDS provides for refund or recovery of tax excesses or shortfall, respectively. The employee is not required to file an annual return unless he or she received taxable income from another source. The employer submits an annual employee tax reconciliation on 30 January of the following year. The late submission of the return attracts a civil penalty of ZWL30 per day up to a maximum of 91 days.

The employer must issue employee tax certificates to each employee. During the year, the employer calculates and withholds employee tax, which is paid to the tax office on the 10th day of following month.

Under the PAYE system, the employer calculates tax on a month-by-month basis without reference to tax paid in the previous month. This applies to employees who worked for less than the full year or have other sources of income. The employer issues an employee certificate (Form P6) to the employee. The employee must submit a tax return (ITF1) to the ZIMRA on 30 April of the following year

Nonresidents are generally subject to the same filing requirements as those applicable to residents but are usually allowed 90 days to file returns. Employees leaving the country must file a date of departure return. Those returning or assuming new roles in Zimbabwe must file their annual returns unless they worked from 1 January to the end of the year.

Quarterly payment dates for trade and investment income. The following are the quarterly payment dates and the respective cumulative tax percentages of the estimated annual tax payable for provisional tax payments that must be made during the tax year:

- 10% by 25 March
- 35% by 25 June
- 65% by 25 September
- 100% by 20 December

Submission of the annual income tax self-assessment return (ITF 12C) for trade and investment income. The return must be submitted by 30 April of the year following the end of the year of assessment (that is, 31 December). However, the Commissioner General may in certain instances provide an extension for the submission of the ITF 12C to a date later than 30 April. Any outstanding tax should also be paid by the time of submission of the ITF 12C.

Other. Married persons are taxed separately on all types of income.

E. Double tax relief and tax treaties

A credit is available for foreign taxes paid, limited to Zimbabwe taxes payable on the underlying foreign-source income.

Zimbabwe has entered into double tax treaties with the following jurisdictions.

Botswana	France	Netherlands
Bulgaria	Germany	Norway
Canada	Iran*	Poland
China Mainland	Kuwait*	South Africa

Congo (Democratic Republic of)*	Malaysia	Sweden
	Mauritius	United Arab Emirates
	Namibia*	United Kingdom

* This treaty has not yet entered into force.

F. Temporary entry permits

Entry visas are required for all foreign nationals. The government of Zimbabwe issues single- and multiple-entry visas. Certain categories of visitors (specified by the immigration authorities) are automatically granted entry at the port of entry. Others are required to obtain visas before reaching the port of entry.

Visitors' entry certificates. Visitors' entry certificates are valid for up to six months and may be obtained on entry. This type of permit does not allow the holder to engage in any work, occupation or activity for gain, unless prior authority is given.

Student and scholars' permits. A student permit may be issued for the purpose of attending any educational institution other than a school. This type of permit is valid for one year from the date of issue and may be extended for additional periods.

A scholar's permit authorizes a foreign national to attend any school approved by the Chief Immigration Officer. This type of permit remains valid for a period of one school term from the date of issue and may be extended for further study. The permit remains valid automatically if the scholar remains at the same school for which the scholar's permit is issued.

The holder of a student or a scholar's permit may not engage in any gainful occupation except during school holidays.

Business visitors' permits. Visitors to Zimbabwe on business must enter under business visitors' permits. This type of permit is valid for 30 days and cannot be extended.

G. Work permits

Any person who wishes to engage in an occupation (including work for gain or in the interests of any business undertaking) in Zimbabwe must obtain a valid temporary employment permit (TEP). TEP holders must train Zimbabweans to develop the skills for which the foreign nationals were admitted. Applications for temporary residence permits (see Section H) must be submitted in conjunction with TEP applications.

A TEP may be issued for a maximum period of three years and may be extended for a maximum period of five years if approved by the Chief Immigration Officer.

A TEP is subject to the following conditions:
- The permit holder may not engage in any occupation other than the occupation specified.
- If the permit is issued on application by a particular employer, the holder may not take up employment with any other employer.
- The holder and all the persons authorized to enter with him or her must leave Zimbabwe on or before the expiration of the period stated in the permit.

To apply for a TEP and temporary residence permit, the following documentation must be submitted to the Department of Immigration Control:

- Duly completed and signed TEP and temporary residence permit application forms. The forms can be downloaded from the Department of Immigration of Zimbabwe official website.
- Offer of employment to the prospective employee. This offer letter should indicate the salary and conditions of service.
- Because it is government policy to give Zimbabweans precedence over foreign workers, the employer must justify the employment of an expatriate rather than a Zimbabwean resident. Documentary evidence, in English, of qualifications and experience in the proposed occupation in the form of certified copies of educational qualifications such as degrees, diplomas, certificates and testimonials must be provided.
- A detailed curriculum vitae of the applicant in English.
- Certified copy of a valid passport.
- Two recently taken passport-size photos of applicant (all certified as true likeness of the applicant).
- Certified copy of birth and/or marriage certificate (if applicable).
- Police clearance letter.

All applicants for TEPs are referred by the Department of Immigration to the Ministry of Public Service, Labour and Social Welfare for approval.

After submission of the application to the Department of Immigration Control, the applicant should receive a letter confirming that the documents are in order and are being processed. Delays of one month or more may be expected in processing applications, depending on the volume of work in the ministries concerned. Prospective employees must remain outside Zimbabwe while applications are being considered.

On approval of the permit, the prospective employee is sent a letter confirming the application for a TEP, which must be presented to the appropriate offices of the Department of Immigration Control at least 14 days after entering the country to obtain the permit. The employee must present the following documents together with the approval letter:

- Passport
- Valid radiological certificate of freedom from active pulmonary tuberculosis

All TEP applicants must submit the following items together with the permit application:

- Two full-face photographs of the applicant, the spouse and each child younger than 18 years of age, if the spouse and children are accompanying the applicant or joining him or her later
- A certified copy of the birth certificate of the applicant and, if applicable, of the spouse and children
- One certified copy of the marriage certificate, if married
- Proof of adequate financial means by the guarantor or fully completed close relative guarantee form
- Proof of residence of the guarantor

The application fee is USD500 for the applicant and USD300 per dependent if any.

H. Residence permits

Permission to reside in the country permanently is very difficult to obtain. A residence permit for an indefinite period may be issued to any individual who meets any of the following conditions:

- He or she is a dependent of a resident who will support the person (dependents may be any close relatives).
- He or she possesses substantial financial means and will invest in a business venture in Zimbabwe. A fee of USD1,000 is payable on application plus USD500 per dependent.
- He or she holds a TEP and has been resident in Zimbabwe for a continuous period of at least five years. The application fee is USD500.

I. Personal and family considerations

Family members. An applicant's spouse and children younger than 18 years of age may be included under a TEP, but a separate work permit must be obtained for a working spouse.

Children younger than 18 years of age may attend school in Zimbabwe if they are included under a parent's TEP.

Marital property regime. The default marital property regime in Zimbabwe is a separate property system. However, couples may elect into a community property regime. Zimbabwe enforces community property claims brought between spouses married outside Zimbabwe.

Driver's permits. Most foreign driver's licenses may be used in Zimbabwe for up to one year after the date of entry into Zimbabwe. After the expiration of this period, a Zimbabwean license must be obtained. The validity of the foreign license is extended to three years for expatriates entering Zimbabwe on government-to-government contracts.

If no driver's license reciprocity exists between Zimbabwe and the country that issued the foreign license, an international driver's license is necessary. An international driver's license is valid for two years after the date of entry into Zimbabwe.

To obtain a local Zimbabwean driver's license, an applicant must first obtain a provisional driver's license. The provisional license, which is valid for one year, entitles a person to drive a car with learner license plates if he or she is accompanied by a qualified driver. Possession of a foreign driver's license provides exemption from the requirement to drive with a qualified driver if the Zimbabwean provisional license is obtained within the first year of residence in Zimbabwe.

A competence test taken during the period of validity of the provisional license must be passed to obtain a driver's license.
