Welcome to the EY Entrepreneurial Winning Women™ Asia-Pacific 2019 conference and to Ho Chi Minh City, Vietnam. We are delighted to be hosting this event for EY Winning Women entrepreneurs in one of the fastest-growing economies in Asia-Pacific. Over 112 countries and territories are currently investing in Vietnam.¹ The country is home to 96.9 million people, 70 million of whom are in the workforce;² a strong manufacturing base; and an expanding service sector, supported by buoyant private consumption and record tourist arrivals.³ It’s an exciting place to consider doing business.
This year's conference asks everyone to consider, “How can you grow your network so it can grow your business?” The means to do this may be in this community. We dare you to be bold and ask for what you need and to gift something within your means to others. Operating in uncertainty is par for the course in the Transformative Age. How can you get ahead and understand what your future consumer looks like today? This question and the idea of unifying creativity with data analytics to build businesses of the future are key themes we will explore. Funding fit for purpose is also explored as evidence each year suggests that women entrepreneurs continue to find access to funding challenging.

The program is deliberately global. We aim to help you access business in new markets and expand your relationships outside your own domestic networks. It’s one of the reasons we host this conference in a new country each year. We have various activities lined up to connect you with the local market, including the women business leaders networking event and business matching meetings.

The speakers come from an array of experiences, skills, geographies and sectors. Each brings unique insights, perspectives and cultural nuances to the discussion. You will hear from impressive women leaders – such as Maxine Horne, who founded the telecommunications services company Vita Group in Australia and several Winning Women alumnae: Jocelyn Chng of JR Group Holdings from Singapore, Tammy Barton of MyBudget from Australia, and Christi Maherry of LAWtrust in South Africa – over the next two days.

Vietnam is well represented by both female and male business leaders at the conference. You will hear from Le Thi Ngoc Hai, the founder of Le Bao Minh Group, as she describes how she built international partnerships in the late ‘90s; Minh Phuong Dang of MP Logistics (the first Winning Woman from Vietnam); and Andy An Ho of VinaCapital who joins the panel on funding.

Congratulations to the Winning Women class of 2019, who are joining us for the first time. Twenty-one women entrepreneurs from across Asia-Pacific have been selected to join the Winning Women program this year. Together, they generated a combined revenue of more than US$1.8b in 2018, employing more than 12,000 people across the region.

We welcome back both the Winning Women alumni who generously contribute as speakers at this event and also to the broader community who enable connections between entrepreneurs, help opportunities become real, and who mentor and provide insights that help entrepreneurs develop.

We hope you will be inspired over the course of the conference and that you will make meaningful connections with women who share similar aspirations to globally scale and grow their companies.

She leads all EY Asia-Pacific Markets functions, including Business Development, Knowledge, and Learning and Development. Alice is a member of the Asia-Pacific Operating Executive and has 27 years of experience in international tax services, experienced in cross-border advisory.

Prior to her current role, Alice was the EY Asia-Pacific International Tax Services Leader from 2010 to 2018. In this role, she oversaw the global coordination and services of international tax services to clients. Alice is also the Global Client Service Partner at Ernst & Young (Asia-Pacific) Services Limited and EY Global Tax Account Leader on G360 account Lenovo, leading the EY teams across the globe on multiple worldwide projects since 2004, advising them on international business transactions. She also led many EY Global Tax strategy sessions for Lenovo, as well as for other clients.

Disruptive technologies and new business models are empowering consumers like never before. As a result, business strategies and assumptions that have shaped consumer-facing industries for decades are quickly becoming irrelevant. Companies need to transform to stay relevant to the emerging future consumer. The question is, how? A shift of focus from protecting what you have to creating what you need to become will be important. This session will help you imagine how future consumers might evolve and then rethink how you will serve this consumer.

Which consumer future are you designing for?

Day 1 — Monday, 8 April 10:30

Richard Taylor

Richard Taylor

EY Oceania Consumer Products & Retail Leader

Richard currently leads the Consumer Products & Retail (CPR) sector across EY Oceania, to which the EY member firms offer a broad range of services addressing a range of ever-evolving business challenges. From food manufacturing to fashion retail, he is responsible for exploring how the EY teams can help CPR industries explore new paths to growth, as a more crowded and competitive market develops. Prior to joining EY, Richard worked for GE in London. He has 15 years of experience working across the consumer products, retail, pharmaceutical and industrial sectors in the UK, Europe, Australia and New Zealand.

Working with some of the market’s largest retailers and food manufacturers, he has witnessed how leading businesses are setting new purposes and growing their organizations differently amid significant change and disruption. As many organizations find previously held assumptions to be outdated, he helps clients look to the future and back, rather than incrementally forward, when developing strategy. Most recently, Richard is working with many consumer products companies, helping them improve operational excellence, helping implement new technology solutions, and realign portfolios and operating models, all to help more investment in connecting with their consumers.

Richard proudly runs the Oceania Women’s Network (OWN) CPR – an Australia-wide networking series – focused on driving higher business growth, improved innovation, increased prosperity and stronger communities. OWN CPR is supported and guided by an advisory board of senior women from some of the world’s most recognized brands.
Maxine Horne’s drive from an early age set her up for success. Vita Group, the company she founded in 1995, operates across three categories with more than 130 points of presence, 1,700 team members and revenues of AUD685 million as of 30 June 2018. By the time Maxine started Fone Zone (Vita Group’s predecessor), she had spent 10 years in the telecommunications industry, gaining exposure to a rapidly evolving, highly competitive telecommunications industry across the United Kingdom and Australia. Maxine was well established to identify a niche opportunity for a customer segment with evolving buying behaviors. Fone Zone was born from the realization that there were no mobile phone retailers in shopping centers in Australia. Her company’s growth has been founded on a symbiotic people-first, customer-first philosophy. You don't get one without the other. Hear how Maxine has invested in exceptional customer service by creating an environment that gives her people purpose, mastery and autonomy.

Ryan Burke

EY Global Growth Markets Leader

Ryan is the EY Global Growth Markets leader and a member of the EY Global Services Practice Group. With more than 24 years of experience advising clients, ranging from startups to multibillion-dollar organizations, Ryan has worked with private equity (PE) firms leading transactions of all sizes. Ryan has worked with the Entrepreneurial Winning Women program since its inception in the US over a decade ago. He has worked directly and indirectly with many Winning Women entrepreneurs, helping them raise capital, provide liquidity and, in many instances, provide strategic support to their growth journey. Apart from this, Ryan supports some of the largest consumer products companies globally and works with leaders of middle-market businesses to help them achieve their growth aspirations. Ryan’s clients include multinational companies, such as Kimberly-Clark, Tyson Foods, Flowserv and Dean Foods, and fast-growing companies, such as Otterbox and Farmer Brothers Coffee. His PE clients include the global PE house Lone Star Funds, as well as middle-market firms, such as Kainos Capital, Halifax Group and Insight Equity.

Along with sector experience in retail and consumer products (particularly the food subsector), manufacturing, distribution, and technology, Ryan also has significant international experience involving acquisition targets in China, India, Brazil, Germany and the UK.

Ryan received a bachelor’s degree in Business and Accounting from the University of Oklahoma (OU). He is a member of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants and holds a Texas CPA license. Ryan also serves as a board member of the OU Price College of Business and OU Steed School of Accounting, and sits on the boards of the North Texas Reading Partners, DFW Private Equity Forum and the Dallas United Way’s Tocqueville Society. The group operates across three categories, with more than 130 points of presence, 1,700 team members and revenues of $685 million as of 30 June 2018.

Since founding Vita Group with one store in 1995, Maxine has guided the growth and evolution of the group. She leads the group leadership team and is responsible for the strategic and operational direction of the business, including the leadership of new revenue streams, such as the group’s noninvasive medical aesthetics channel.

How can you grow your network so it can grow your business?

Day 1 — Monday, 8 April 13:45

The first step is to know the Entrepreneurial Winning Women in your community. Help them help you. Let them know your business. And embrace gifting. Over the past few months, you have been invited via WhatsApp to tell the community about the issues you are grappling with in your business and ask for help in solving them, as well as gifting others seeking to solve their issues. Today, we look at gifting in action.

Martha Raupp

Particularly passionate about women entrepreneurs, she has been the Oceania program manager for the EY Entrepreneurial Winning Women™ Asia-Pacific program since its launch. Martha loves that her work leads back to her personal life, where she’s a mother of two girls and an active Girl Guide leader.
You know there is a lot of potential in big data, but how can you sort out what's relevant to you from all that white noise? Part of the answer lies in making sure the data analytics addresses the business problem you want to solve. And part of the answer is in applying creative thinking to produce deep insights. Scoped carefully, advanced analytics can turn vast amounts of data into detailed and predictive insights, enabling better decisions for future growth.

We asked leading entrepreneurs about what business problems (or opportunities) they are solving using data analytics in tandem with creative thinking. These can range from unlocking the value of customers and creating value in human resources, to creating an agile and responsive supply chain. The panelists will share their experiences, exploring the investments they are making in technology and people, the innovation mindset they need to adopt, the cultural impact to their organizations, and the transformation of their businesses for the customer today and in the future.

Margaret Manning OBE
Partner, Digital Advisory Services, EY Digital Pte Ltd.

Margaret has been associated with the creative digital agency space since 1996, when she cofounded the Reading Room, one of the UK’s largest digital agencies. After the sale of the UK business in October 2015, she led a management buy-in for an Asia-Pacific business, later rebranded as Adelphi Digital Consulting Group. Margaret joined the EY organization in 2018, strengthening the digital consultancy services across the Asia-Pacific Area. At the EY organization, Margaret focuses on creating a better digital experience for customers and staff, provided by the digital experience squads through strategy, design, build, enhancement and support services.

Her lifelong pursuit of online gaming, degree in psychology (experience in artificial intelligence) and management consultancy background have led to a special interest in online communications. Margaret continues to explore how this communication is fundamentally changing the way business works, an example being the increasing acceptance of agile business.

In June 2015, Margaret received the Order of the British Empire (OBE) for services provided to British exports to Singapore and the wider Asia-Pacific region. She remains committed to helping small and midsized enterprises from any region to expand both nationally and internationally.

Margaret serves as the vice-chair of the UK-ASEAN Business Council, and she has won numerous accolades, including the SBR Management Excellence Awards in 2015, the Stevie International Business Awards in 2013 and the Best CIO Awards in 2012. She was also a nominee at the EY Entrepreneur Of The Year 2009 UK event.

Women entrepreneurs may have bullish growth aspirations, but real growth needs capital. While almost one-third (30%) of female-led businesses targeted growth rates over 15% in 2018 (compared to just 5% of male peers), over half (52%) of women-led companies had no external funding at all, and nearly one in five (17%) women-led companies cited access to capital as a barrier to growth. Are women entrepreneurs less ready to ask for capital, or considering different financing options because they are concerned about losing control of their companies? Hear the different perspectives from those who have raised funds, invested in companies or advised companies on financing options – entrepreneurs, investors and EY professionals.

Vietnam: women business leaders’ networking event

Day 2 — Tuesday, 9 April | 18:00

The evening begins with an interesting panel discussion where you will hear from four women about their entrepreneurial journeys.

Following the panel is the opportunity to network with senior women from Vietnam's business community who are business leaders, government leaders and entrepreneurs.

Women entrepreneurs: stories to inspire

Each year the EY organization selects outstanding women entrepreneurs with high-growth businesses and the potential to scale globally to join the Winning Women program. These women invariably come from different starting points, countries, backgrounds and interests. Yet, there is a common thread: they start with a realization that there is a gap in the market not being met and find sustainable solutions to meet the demand. Today, four of those Winning Women entrepreneurs will share a glimpse into their business journeys, their perspectives on keeping the customer first and lessons learned along the way.

We have succeeded in securing a space for women in the hitherto male-dominated firefighting equipment industry. Going forward, we seek to sustain our organization as one where all engineers are rewarded well and everyone can maximize their potentials, regardless of gender.

Takako Kurosu
CEO
Yotsuba Maintenance Co., Ltd.
Japan

Takako is the CEO of Yotsuba Maintenance, a firefighting equipment-related services organization based in Japan. She began her entrepreneurial journey at the age of 38, with the mission to address the diversity gap – and provide a woman’s perspective – in the firefighting equipment sector.

Born in Tokyo, Takako began her career as a writer for a childcare magazine and manager of a childcare club when she was raising her two children. She then became engaged in nursing care, which included reading books to the patients at an eldercare facility. However, she left the job when she was diagnosed with chorditis.

Later, Takako got into inspecting firefighting equipment and obtained the Fire Defense Equipment Officers License – a national qualification for fire engineering in Japan. She then established Yotsuba Maintenance and succeeded in securing a space for women in the firefighting equipment industry, which was male-dominated until then. An inspiring example of women entrepreneurship, Takako continues to lead her organization as one where all engineers are rewarded well and everyone can maximize their potentials, regardless of gender.

Kanae Sakane
CEO
Asian Bridge Inc.
Japan

We are committed to helping Japanese companies sell their products without establishing their headquarters overseas. Though logistics networks are not yet perfect, they will evolve greatly in the coming years. And we’re ready to embrace this disruption to grow and expand our business.

Kanae is the CEO of Asian Bridge Inc., an e-commerce company based in Tokyo that seeks to deliver Japanese products across Asia through the power of the internet. Kanae helps her client organizations grow their business through logistics services that are low in cost – and risk.

Kanae was born in Taiwan and pursued her education in Japan. After getting her master’s degree from Waseda University in 2004, she joined the Recruit Group. In 2010, she left Recruit to pursue her childhood dream – to build the connection between Taiwan and Japan through fostering logistics – which has grown and become the Asian Bridge corporation today.

In 2015, Kanae initiated a one-stop service to support the e-commerce industry. And in 2017, she developed a cloud-based overseas sales system, BUMB, a cross-border e-commerce service designed to help Japanese companies sell their products without establishing their headquarters overseas. Kanae is of the view that though logistics networks are not yet perfect, they will evolve greatly in the coming years. By growing and expanding Asian Bridge, she hopes to introduce more Japanese products to people across Asia.

Shelena Serrano
Director and Operations Manager
Vekta Automation
Australia

Shelena started her stint with Vekta to support her husband’s endeavor; however, she quickly realized that she could have a positive influence on the business and participate as an active business partner in her own right by leveraging strengths from her teaching background.

As a woman with no engineering background in a male-dominated, technical industry, Shelena used to downplay her role in the success of Vekta. But this has changed today. Shelena has realized that to continue to be a successful business, Vekta cannot just rely on engineering and machines. It is also important that people work collaboratively. From the “bookkeeper-wife role,” Shelena has taken on a strategic development role in the business, pushing Vekta’s focus beyond the technicalities and engineering, and constantly addressing avenues for the business to improve and grow.

Outside of Vekta, Shelena has the pleasure of raising three children. She supports her local community by being part of the local school council and serving as vice-chairperson for Communicare, a West Australian not-for-profit organization.

Dr. Le Tran
CEO
NutiFood
Vietnam

Dr. Le started her entrepreneurial journey in 2000 as a founding shareholder of NutiFood. She took up role of the director in 2000, and became the chairwoman and CEO in 2002. The company’s original products include three main categories: nutritional feeding powder for children, pregnant and baby-feeding mothers; nutritional milk powder; and high-energy nutritional food. NutiFood grew substantially from 2000 to 2007.

To support the growth plan of NutiFood by expansion of its distribution network, Dr. Le called for new investment from other shareholders through a private placement and IPO transaction (non-listed public entity) in early 2008. She stepped down from the CEO position before the IPO to focus on other projects. However, NutiFood experienced a financial loss and crisis in 2008, and Dr. Le was invited by the board of directors to rejoin as the CEO and save the company. She fought hard to overcome losses and brought the company back on the growth trajectory, as before. In late 2008, a new chapter of NutiFood began with several restructuring exercises, management improvement and revised growth strategies. With the support of her husband and other trusted private lenders, she acquired more shares from shareholders for NutiFood.

In 2012, Dr. Le withdrew from the chair position — giving way to her husband — to focus more effectively on the CEO role for new product development and market growth. The company officially resumed as a private business in 2015 with two major shareholders — Dr. Le and her husband. Dr. Le is passionate about making innovative products for infants and children, and her long-term goal is to eradicate malnutrition from Vietnam. Currently, NutiFood is among the top three Vietnamese dairy companies, in terms of volume; having many cow farms, factories, nutrition and health advice centers; and distribution network. NutiFood’s network covers 64 provinces and cities across Vietnam, Cambodia, the Philippines, China and the US. The company plans to expand to Sweden and France in 2019-20. Forbes listed Dr. Le as one of Vietnam’s top 10 successful women in 2015 and Vietnam’s 50 most influential women in 2017.

> Our vision is to become a leading company in nutrition products, sustainably developed for consumers’ benefit.
