About the competition

EY NextGen Women

What is the EY NextGen Women program?

The EY NextGen Women program is a global campus competition designed to build a pipeline of exceptional, graduate & post-graduate level female talent into Strategy & Transactions (SaT). After the selection process, shortlisted candidates will participate in country-level competitions to showcase their skills. The winner from each country will then proceed to the global final, where they will participate in individual and group challenges. During the finals, organizers will announce the global competition winners.

How does the competition work?

The competition consists of two rounds: a country-level competition followed by a global-level competition. Participants at the country level compete to earn the title of the winner, who will represent their country in the global finals while also selecting a runner-up.

The global finals will be hosted by global SaT and will feature participation from business leaders, EY partners, clients, and our people. Prizes will be awarded at both the country and global levels.

FAQ'S

Frequently asked questions

Who can enter the competition?

This program is for students pursuing graduation or post-graduation degrees, who possess no prior work experience, and with a keen interest in business and its application in a SaT career. Eligible fields of study include management, finance, economics, commerce, statistics, mathematics, and related areas. Only Indian citizens residing in the country are eligible to participate. Additionally, only students currently enrolled full-time and expected to graduate in 2024 or 2025 are eligible to apply.

Why is it Strategy and Transactions only and not cross service line?

It's a global SaT initiative, and the purpose of the competition is to increase the number of women in SaT specifically. Currently, the program is not across the service lines. You can visit EY India career page for more information on opportunities across our service lines.

How is this program different to EY Corporate Finance Woman of the Year?

The EY Corporate Finance Woman of the Year program has been refreshed to reflect the nature of our business and is now known as the EY NextGen Women program. The refreshed EY NextGen Women competition will give candidates necessary experience and increased insights for a successful career in SaT.
